(Colossians: Chapter 2)

3:1 {If then ye were raised together with Christ} (\ei oun sun^gerth^te t^i Christ^i). Condition of the first class, assumed as true, like that in 2:20 and the other half of the picture of baptism in 2:12 and using the same form \sun^gerth^te as then which see for the verb \sunegeir^i. Associative instrumental case of \Christ^i. {The things that are above} (\ta an^i). "The upward things" (cf. Php 3:14), the treasure in heaven (Mt 6:20). Paul gives this ideal and goal in place of merely ascetic rules. {Seated on the right hand of God} (\en dexifi tou theou kath^menos). Not periphrastic verb, but additional statement. Christ is up there and at God's right hand. Cf. 2:3.

3:2 {Set your mind on} (\phroneite). "Keep on thinking about." It does matter what we think and we are responsible for our thoughts. {Not on the things that are upon the earth} (\m^ ta epi t^s g^s). Paul does not mean that we should never think the things upon the earth, but that these should not be our aim, our goal, our master. The Christian has to keep his feet upon the earth, but his head in the heavens. He must be heavenly-minded here on earth and so help to make earth like heaven.

3:3 {For ye died} (\apethanete gar). Definite event, aorist active indicative, died to sin (Ro 6:2). {Is hid} (\kekruptai). Perfect passive indicative of \krupt^i, old verb, to hide, remains concealed, locked "together with" (\sun) Christ, "in" (\en) God. No hellish burglar can break that combination.

3:4 {When Christ shall be manifested} (\hotan ho Christos phaner^th^i). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \phanero^i, "whenever Christ is manifested," a reference to the second coming of Christ as looked for and longed for, but wholly uncertain as to time. See this same verb used of the second coming in 1Jo 3:2. {Ye also together with him} (\kai humeis sun aut^i). That is the joy of this blessed hope. He repeats the verb about us \phaner^th^sesthe (future passive indicative) and adds \en doxⁱ (in glory). Not to respond to this high appeal is to be like Bunyan's man with the muck-rake.

3:5 {Mortify} (\nekr^{“sate}\). First aorist active imperative of \nekr[“]\, late verb, to put to death, to treat as dead. Latin Vulgate _mortifico_, but "mortify" is coming with us to mean putrify. Paul boldly applies the metaphor of death (2:20; 3:3) pictured in baptism (2:12) to the actual life of the Christian. He is not to go to the other Gnostic extreme of license on the plea that the soul is not affected by the deeds of the body. Paul's idea is that the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit (1Co 6:19). He mentions some of these "members upon the earth" like fornication (\porneian\), uncleanness (\akatharsian\), passion (\pathos\), evil desire (\epithumian kakⁿ\), covetousness (\pleonexian\) "the which is idolatry" (\h^{tis} estin eid^{“latria}\). See the longer list of the works of the flesh in Gal 5:19-21, though covetousness is not there named, but it is in Eph 4:19; 5:5.

3:6 {Cometh the wrath of God} (\erchetai h[^]org[^] tou theou\). Paul does not regard these sins of the flesh as matters of indifference, far otherwise. Many old MSS. do not have "upon the sons of disobedience," genuine words in Eph 5:6.

3:7 {Walked aforetime} (\periepat^{^sate pote}\). First aorist (constative) indicative referring to their previous pagan state. {When ye lived} (\hote ez^{^te}\). Imperfect active indicative of \za[“]\, to live, "ye used to live" (customary action). Sharp distinction in the tenses.

3:8 {But now} (\nuni de\). Emphatic form of \nun\ in decided contrast (to \pote\ in verse 7) in the resurrection life of 2:12; 3:1. {Put ye also away} (\apothesthe kai humeis\). Second aorist middle imperative of old verb \apotith^{^mi}\, to put away, lay aside like old clothes. This metaphor of clothing Paul now uses with several verbs (\apothesthe\ here, \apekdusamenoi\ in verse 9, \endusamenoi\ in verse 10, \endusasthe\ in verse 12). {All these} (\ta panta\). The whole bunch of filthy rags (anger \org^{^n}\, wrath \thumon\, malice \kakian\, railing \blasph^{^mian}\, shameful speaking \aischrologian\). See somewhat similar lists of vices in Col 3:5; Ga 5:20; Eph 4:29-31. These words have all been discussed except \aischrologian\, an old word for low and obscene speech which occurs here only in the N.T. It is made from \aischrologos\ (\aischros\ as in 1Co 11:6 and that from \aischos\, disgrace). Note also the addition of "out of your mouth" (\ek tou stomatos hum"n\). The word was used for both abusive and filthy talk and Lightfoot combines both ideas as often happens. Such language should never come out of the mouth of a Christian living the new life in Christ.

3:9 {Lie not to another} (\m^ pseudesthe eis all^lous\). Lying (\pseudos\) could have been included in the preceding list where it belongs in reality. But it is put more pointedly thus in the prohibition (\m^ and the present middle imperative). It means either "stop lying" or "do not have the habit of lying." {Seeing that ye have put off} (\apekdusamenoi\). First aorist middle participle (causal sense of the circumstantial participle) of the double compound verb \apekduomai\, for which see 2:15. The \apo\ has the perfective sense (wholly), "having stripped clean off." The same metaphor as \apothesthe\ in verse 8. {The old man} (\ton palaion anthr"pon\). Here Paul brings in another metaphor (mixes his metaphors as he often does), that of the old life of sin regarded as "the ancient man" of sin already crucified (Ro 6:6) and dropped now once and for all as a mode of life (aorist tense). See same figure in Eph 4:22. \Palaaios\ is ancient in contrast with \neos\ (young, new) as in Mt 9:17 or \kainos\ (fresh, unused) as in Mt 13:52. {With his doings} (\sun tais praxesin autou\). Practice must square with profession.

3:10 {And have put on} (\kai endusamenoi\). First aorist middle participle (in causal sense as before) of \endun"\", old and common verb (Latin _induo_, English endue) for putting on a garment. Used of putting on Christ (Ga 3:27; Ro 13:14). {The new man} (\ton neon\). "The new (young as opposed to old \palaion\) man" (though \anthr"pon\ is not here expressed, but understood from the preceding phrase). In Eph 4:24 Paul has \endusasthai ton kainon\ (fresh as opposed to worn out) \anthr"pon\. {Which is being renewed} (\ton anakainoumenon\). Present passive articular participle of \anakaino"\". Paul apparently coined this word on the analogy of \ananeomai\. \Anakainiz"\" already existed (Heb 6:6). Paul also uses \anakain"sis\ (Ro 12:2; Tit 3:5) found nowhere before him. By this word Paul adds the meaning of \kainos\ to that of \neos\ just before. It is a continual refreshment (\kainos\) of the new (\neos\, young) man in Christ Jesus. {Unto knowledge} (\eis epign"sin\). "Unto full (additional) knowledge," one of the keywords in this Epistle. {After the image} (\kat' eikona\). An allusion to Ge 1:26,28. The restoration of the image of God in us is gradual and progressive (2Co 3:18), but will be complete in the final result (Ro 8:29; 1Jo 3:2).

3:11 {Where} (\hopou\). In this "new man" in Christ. Cf. Ga 3:28. {There cannot be} (\ouk eni\). \Eni\ is the long (original) form of \en\ and \estin\ is to be understood. "There does not exist." This is the ideal which is still a long way ahead of modern Christians as the Great War proved. Race distinctions (Greek \Hell^n\ and Jew \Ioudaios\) disappear in Christ and in the new man in Christ. The Jews looked on all others as Greeks (Gentiles). Circumcision (\peritom^) and uncircumcision (\akrobustia\) put the Jewish picture with the cleavage made plainer (cf. Eph 2). The Greeks and Romans regarded all others as barbarians (\barbaroi\, Ro 1:14), users of outlandish jargon or gibberish, onomatopoeitic repetition (\bar-bar\). {A Scythian} (\Skuth^s\) was simply the climax of barbarity, _bar-baris barbariores_ (Bengel), used for any rough person like our "Goths and Vandals." {Bondman} (\doulos\, from \de^, to bind), {freeman} (\eleutheros\, from \erchomai\, to go). Class distinctions vanish in Christ. In the Christian churches were found slaves, freedmen, freemen, masters. Perhaps Paul has Philemon and Onesimus in mind. But labour and capital still furnish a problem for modern Christianity. {But Christ is all} (\alla panta Christos\). Demosthenes and Lucian use the neuter plural to describe persons as Paul does here of Christ. The plural \panta\ is more inclusive than the singular \pfn\ would be. {And in all} (\kai en pfsin\). Locative plural and neuter also. "Christ occupies the whole sphere of human life and permeates all its developments" (Lightfoot). Christ has obliterated the words barbarian, master, slave, all of them and has substituted the word \adelphos\ (brother).

3:12 {Put on therefore} (\endusasthe oun\). First aorist middle imperative of \endun^ (verse 10). He explains and applies (\oun\ therefore) the figure of "the new man" as "the new garment." {As God's elect} (\h^s eklektoi tou theou\). Same phrase in Ro 8:33; Tit 1:1. In the Gospels a distinction exists between \kl^tos\ and \eklektos\ (Mt 24:22,24,31), but no distinction appears in Paul's writings. Here further described as "holy and beloved" (\hagioi kai ^gap^menoi\). The items in the new clothing for the new man in Christ Paul now gives in contrast with what was put off (3:8). The garments include a heart of compassion (\splagchna oiktirmou\, the nobler _viscera_ as the seat of emotion as in Lu 1:78; Php 1:8), kindness (\chr^stot^ta\, as in Ga 5:22), humility (\tapeinophrosun^{\, in the good sense as in Php 2:3), meekness (\praut^ta\, in Ga 5:23 and in Eph 4:2 also with \tapeinophrosun^{), long-suffering (\makrothumian\, in Ga 5:22; Col 1:11; Jas 5:10).

3:13 {Forbearing one another} (\anechomenoi all^l^{\, n\). Present middle (direct) participle of \anech^{\ with the ablative case (\all^l^{\, n\), "holding yourselves back from one another." {Forgiving each other} (\charizomenoi heautois\). Present middle participle also of \charizomai\ with the dative case of the reflexive pronoun (\heautois\ instead of the reciprocal just before (\all^l^{\, n\). {If any man have} (\ean tis ech^i\). Third class condition (\ean\ and present active subjunctive of \ech^{). {Complaint} (\momph^{\, n\). Old word from \memphomai\, to blame. Only here in N.T. Note \pros\ here with \tina\ in the sense of against for comparison with \pros\ in 2:31. {Even as the Lord} (\kath^s kai ho Kurios\). Some MSS. read \Christos\ for \Kurios\). But Christ's forgiveness of us is here made the reason for our forgiveness of others. See Mt 6:12,14f. where our forgiveness of others is made by Jesus a prerequisite to our obtaining forgiveness from God.

3:14 {And above all these things} (\epi pfsin de toutois\). "And upon all these things." {Put on love} (\t^{\, n agap^{\, n\). See Lu 3:20. The verb has to be supplied (\endusasthe\ from verse 12 as the accusative case \agap^{\, n\ shows. {Which is} (\ho estin\). Neuter singular of the relative and not feminine like \agap^{\, n\ (the antecedent) nor masculine like \sundesmos\ in the predicate. However, there are similar examples of \ho estin\ in the sense of _quod est_ (_id est_), "that is," in Mr 14:42; 15:42, without agreement in gender and number. So also Eph 5:5 where \ho estin\ = "which thing." {The bond of perfectness} (\sundesmos t^s teleiot^{\, tos\). See 2:19 for \sundesmos\). Here it is apparently the girdle that holds the various garments together. The genitive (\teleiot^{\, tos\) is probably that of apposition with the girdle of love. In a succinct way Paul has here put the idea about love set forth so wonderfully in 1Co 13.

3:15 {The peace of Christ} (\h^{\, eir^{\, n^{\, tou Christou\). The peace that Christ gives (Joh 14:27). {Rule} (\brabeuet^{\, n\). Imperative active third singular of \brabeu“, to act as umpire (brabeus), old verb, here alone in N.T. See 1Co 7:15 for called in peace. {In one body} (en heni s“mati). With one Head (Christ) as in 1:18,24. {Be ye thankful} (eucharistoi ginesthe). "Keep on becoming thankful." Continuous obligation.

3:16 {The word of Christ} (ho logos tou Christou). This precise phrase only here, though "the word of the Lord" in 1Th 1:8; 4:15; 2Th 3:1. Elsewhere "the word of God." Paul is exalting Christ in this Epistle. \Christou\ can be either the subjective genitive (the word delivered by Christ) or the objective genitive (the word about Christ). See 1Jo 2:14. {Dwell} (enoikeit“). Present active imperative of \enoike“, to make one's home, to be at home. {In you} (en humin). Not "among you." {Richly} (plousi“s). Old adverb from \plousios\ (rich). See 1Ti 6:17. The following words explain \plousi“s\ {In all wisdom} (en pas^i sophifi). It is not clear whether this phrase goes with \plousi“s\ (richly) or with the participles following (didaskontes kai nouthetountes, see 1:28). Either punctuation makes good sense. The older Greek MSS. had no punctuation. There is an anacoluthon here. The participles may be used as imperatives as in Ro 12:11f.,16. {With psalms} (psalmois, the Psalms in the Old Testament originally with musical accompaniment), {hymns} (humnois, praises to God composed by the Christians like 1Ti 3:16), {spiritual songs} (“idais pneumatikais, general description of all whether with or without instrumental accompaniment). The same song can have all three words applied to it. {Singing with grace} (en chariti fidontes). In God's grace (2Co 1:12). The phrase can be taken with the preceding words. The verb \fid“ is an old one (Eph 5:19) for lyrical emotion in a devout soul. {In your hearts} (en tais kardiais hum“n). Without this there is no real worship "to God" (t“i the“i). How can a Jew or Unitarian in the choir lead in the worship of Christ as Saviour? Whether with instrument or with voice or with both it is all for naught if the adoration is not in the heart.

3:17 {Whatsoever ye do} (pfn hoti ean poi^te). Indefinite relative (everything whatever) with \ean\ and the present active subjunctive, a common idiom in such clauses. {Do all} (panta). The imperative \poieite\ has to be supplied from \poi^te\ in the relative clause. \Panta\ is repeated from \pfn\ (singular), but in the plural (all things). \Pfn\ is left as a nominative absolute as in Mt 10:32; Lu 12:10. This is a sort of Golden Rule for Christians "in the name of the Lord Jesus" (\en onomati Kuriou I'sou), in the spirit of the Lord Jesus (Eph 5:20). What follows (directions to the various groups) is in this same vein. Sociological problems have always existed. Paul puts his finger on the sore spot in each group with unerring skill like a true diagnostician.

3:18 {Wives} (\kai gunaikes). The article here distinguishes class from class and with the vocative case can be best rendered "Ye wives." So with each group. {Be in subjection to your husbands} (\hupotassesthe tois andrasin). "Own" (\idiois) is genuine in Eph 5:22, but not here. The verb \hupotassomai has a military air, common in the _Koin, _ for such obedience. Obedience in government is essential as the same word shows in Ro 13:1,5. {As is fitting in the Lord} (\h"s an^ken en Kuri"i). This is an idiomatic use of the imperfect indicative with verbs of propriety in present time (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 919). Wives have rights and privileges, but recognition of the husband's leadership is essential to a well-ordered home, only the assumption is that the husband has a head and a wise one.

3:19 {Love your wives} (\agapfte tas gunaikas). Present active imperative, "keep on loving." That is precisely the point. {Be not bitter} (\m^ pikrainesthe). Present middle imperative in prohibition: "Stop being bitter" or "do not have the habit of being bitter." This is the sin of husbands. \Pikrain" is an old verb from \pikros (bitter). In N.T. only here and Re 8:11; 10:9f. The bitter word rankles in the soul.

3:20 {Obey your parents} (\hupakouete tois goneusin). Old verb to listen under (as looking up), to hearken, to heed, to obey. {In all things} (\kata panta). This is the hard part for the child, not occasional obedience, but continual. Surely a Christian father or mother will not make unreasonable or unjust demands of the child. Nowhere does modern civilization show more weakness than just here. Waves of lawlessness sweep over the world because the child was not taught to obey. Again Paul argues that this is "in the Lord" (\en Kuri"i).

3:21 {Provoke not} (\m^ erethizete). Present imperative of old verb from \ereth", to excite. Only twice in N.T., here in bad sense, in good sense in 2Co 9:2 (to stimulate). Here it means to nag and as a habit (present tense). {That they be not discouraged} (\hina m^ athum“sin). Negative purpose (*\hina m^ *) with the present subjunctive (continued discouragement) of \athume“, old verb, but only here in N.T., from \athumos (dispirited, \a\ privative, \thumos\, spirit or courage). One does not have to read _Jane Eyre_ or _Oliver Twist_ to know something of the sorrows of childhood as is witnessed by runaway children and even child suicides.

3:22 {Your masters according to the flesh} (\tois kata sarka kuriois). "Lords" really, but these Christian slaves (\douloi) had Christ as lord, but even so they were to obey their lords in the flesh. {Not with eye-service} (\m^ en ophthalmoudouliais). Another Pauline word (here only and Eph 6:6), elsewhere only in Christian writers after Paul, an easy and expressive compound, service while the master's eye was on the slave and no longer. {Men-pleasers} (\anthr“pareskoi). Late compound only in LXX and Paul (here and Eph 6:6). {In singleness of heart} (\en haplot^ti kardias). So in Eph 6:5. Old and expressive word from \haplous (simple, without folds). See 2Co 11:3. {Fearing the Lord} (\phoboumenoi ton Kurion). Rather than the lords according to the flesh.

3:23 {Whatsoever ye do} (\ho ean poi^te). See same idiom in 3:17 except \ho instead of \pfn hoti. {Heartily} (\ek psuch^s). From the soul and not with mere eye service. In Eph 6:7 Paul adds \met' eunoias (with good will) in explanation of \ek psuch^s. {As unto the Lord} (\h“s t“i Kuri“i). Even when unto men. This is the highest test of worthwhile service. If it were only always true!

3:24 {Ye shall receive} (\apol^mpsesthe). Future middle indicative of \apolamban“, old verb, to get back (\apo), to recover. {The recompense} (\antapodosin). "The full recompense," old word, in LXX, but only here in N.T., but \antapodoma twice (Lu 14:12; Ro 11:9). Given back (\apo) in return (\anti). {Ye serve the Lord Christ} (\to Kuri“i Christ“i douleuete). As his slaves and gladly so. Perhaps better as imperatives, keep on serving.

3:25 {Shall receive again for the wrong that he hath done} (\komisetai ho ^dik^sen). It is not clear whether \ho adik“n (he that doeth wrong) is the master or the slave. It is true of either and Lightfoot interprets it of both, "shall receive back the wrong which he did." This is a general law of life and of God and it is fair and square. {There is no respect of persons} (\ouk estin pros“pol^mpsia). There is with men, but not with God. For this word patterned after the Hebrew see Ro 2:11; Eph 6:9; Jas

2:1 The next verse should be in this chapter also.

4:1 {That which is just and equal} (\to dikaion kai tⁿ isot^a). Paul changes from \to ison (like \to dikaion, neuter singular adjective with article for abstract idea) to the abstract substantive \isot^s, old word, in N.T. only here and 2Co 8:13f. If employers always did this, there would be no labour problem. {A Master in heaven} (\Kurion en ouranⁱ). A wholesome reminder to the effect that he keeps his eye on the conduct of masters of men here towards their employees.

4:2 {Continue steadfastly} (\proskartereite). See Mr 3:9; Ac 2:42,46 for this interesting word from \pros and \karteros (strong), common in the _Koin, _. {Watching} (\gr^gorountes). Present active participle of \gr^gore^a, late present made on perfect active stem \egr^gora with loss of \e-, found first in Aristotle.

4:3 {Withal} (\hama). At the same time. {That God may open} (\hina ho theos anoixⁱ). Common use of \hina and the subjunctive (aorist), the sub-final use so common in the N.T. as in the _Koin, _. {A door for the word} (\thuran tou logou). Objective genitive, a door for preaching. It is comforting to other preachers to see the greatest of all preachers here asking prayer that he may be set free again to preach. He uses this figure elsewhere, once of a great and open door with many adversaries in Ephesus (1Co 16:9), once of an open door that he could not enter in Troas (2Co 2:12). {The mystery of Christ} (\to must^rion tou Christou). The genitive of apposition, the mystery which is Christ (2:2), one that puts out of comparison the foolish "mysteries" of the Gnostics. {For which I am also in bonds} (\diⁱ ho kai dedemai). Perfect passive indicative of \de^a. Paul is always conscious of this limitation, this chain. At bottom he is a prisoner because of his preaching to the Gentiles.

4:4 {As I ought to speak} (\h^s dei me lal^{sai}). Wonderful as Paul's preaching was to his hearers and seems to us, he was never satisfied with it. What preacher can be?

4:5 {Toward them that are without} (\pros tous ex“\). A Pauline phrase for those outside the churches (1Th 5:12; 1Co 5:12f.). It takes wise walking to win them to Christ. {Redeeming the time} (\ton kairon exagorazomenoi\). We all have the same time. Paul goes into the open market and buys it up by using it rightly. See the same metaphor in Eph 5:16.

4:6 {Seasoned with salt} (\halati ^rtumenos\). The same verb \artu“\ (old verb from \air“\, to fit, to arrange) about salt in Mr 9:50; Lu 14:34. Nowhere else in the N.T. Not too much salt, not too little. Plutarch uses salt of speech, the wit which flavours speech (cf. Attic salt). Our word salacious is this same word degenerated into vulgarity. Grace and salt (wit, sense) make an ideal combination. Every teacher will sympathize with Paul's desire "that ye know how ye must answer each one" (\eidenai p“s dei humas heni ekast“i apokrimesthai\). Who does know?

4:7 {All my affairs} (\ta kat' eme panta\). "All the things relating to me." The accusative case the object of \gn“risei\. The same idiom in Ac 25:14; Php 1:2. {Tychicus} (\Tuchikos\). Mentioned also in Eph 6:21 as the bearer of that Epistle and with the same verb \gn“risei\ (future active of \gn“riz“) and with the same descriptive epithet as here (\ho agap^tos adelphos kai pistos diakonos en Kuri“i\, the beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord) except that here we have also \kai sundoulos\ (and fellow-servant). Abbott suggests that Paul adds \sundoulos\ because he had used it of Epaphras in 1:7. Perhaps \pistos\ goes with both substantives and means faithful to Paul as well as to Christ.

4:8 {I have sent} (\epempsa\). Epistolary aorist active indicative of \pemp“\ as in Eph 6:22. {That ye may know} (\hina gn“te\). Second aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \gin“sk“\, "that ye may come to know." This the correct text, not \gn“i\ (third singular). {Our estate} (\ta peri h^m“n\). "The things concerning us." {May comfort} (\parakales^i\). First aorist active subjunctive. Proper rendering here and not "may exhort."

4:9 {Together with Onesimus} (\sun On^sim“i\). Co-bearer of the letter with Tychicus and praised on a par with him, runaway slave though he is. {Who is one of you} (\hos estin ex hum“n\). Said not as a reproach to Colossae for having such a man, but as a privilege to the church in Colossae to give a proper welcome to this returning converted slave and to treat him as a brother as Paul argues to Philemon.

4:10 {Aristarchus} (\Aristarchos\). He was from Thessalonica and accompanied Paul to Jerusalem with the collection (Ac 19:29; 20:4) and started with Paul to Rome (Ac 27:2; Phm 1:24). Whether he has been with Paul all the time in Rome we do not know, but he is here now. {My fellow-prisoner} (\ho sunaichmal“tos mou\). One of Paul's compounds, found elsewhere only in Lucian. Paul uses it of Epaphras in Phm 1:23, but whether of actual voluntary imprisonment or of spiritual imprisonment like \sunstrati“tes\ (fellow-soldier) in Php 2:25; Phm 1:2 we do not know. Abbott argues for a literal imprisonment and it is possible that some of Paul's co-workers (\sun-ergoi\) voluntarily shared imprisonment with him by turns. {Mark} (\Markos\). Once rejected by Paul for his defection in the work (Ac 15:36-39), but now cordially commended because he had made good again. {The cousin of Barnabas} (\ho anepsios Barnabf\). It was used for "nephew" very late, clearly "cousin" here and common so in the papyri. This kinship explains the interest of Barnabas in Mark (Ac 12:25; 13:5; 15:36-39). {If he come unto you, receive him} (\ean elthⁱ pros humas dexasthe auton\). This third class conditional sentence (\ean\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \erchomai) gives the substance of the commands (\entolas\) about Mark already sent, how we do not know. But Paul's commendation of Mark is hearty and unreserved as he does later in 2Ti 4:11. The verb \dechomai\ is the usual one for hospitable reception (Mt 10:14; Joh 4:45) like \prosdechomai\ (Php 2:29) and \hupodechomai\ (Lu 10:38).

4:11 {Jesus which is called Justus} (\I^{sous} ho legomenos Ioustos\). Another illustration of the frequency of the name Jesus (Joshua). The surname Justus is the Latin _Justus_ for the Greek \Dikaios\ and the Hebrew _Zadok_ and very common as a surname among the Jews. The name appears for two others in the N.T. (Ac 1:23; 18:7). {Who are of the circumcision} (\hoi ontes ek peritom^{^s}\). Jewish Christians certainly, but not necessarily Judaizers like those so termed in Ac 11:3 (\hoi ek peritom^{^s}\. Cf. Ac 35:1,5). {These only} (\houtoi monoï\). "Of the circumcision" (Jews) he means. {A comfort unto me} (\moi par[^]goria\). Ethical dative of personal interest. \Par[^]goria\ is an old word (here only in N.T.) from \par[^]gore“\, to make an address) and means solace, relief. A medical term. Curiously enough our word paregoric comes from it (\par^gorikos).

4:12 {Epaphras who is one of you} (\Epaphrfs ho ex hum^“n). See 1:7 for previous mention of this brother who had brought Paul news from Colossae. {Always striving for you} (\pantote ag^“nizomenos huper h^m^“n). See 1:29 of Paul. {That ye may stand} (\hina stath^te). Final clause, first aorist passive subjunctive (according to Aleph B) rather than the usual second aorist active subjunctives (\st^te) of \hist^mi (according to A C D). {Fully assured} (\pepl^rophor^menoi). Perfect passive participle of \pl^rophore^“, late compound, for which see Lu 1:1; Ro 14:5.

4:13 {And for them in Hierapolis} (\kai t^“n en Hierfi Polei). The third of the three cities in the Lycus Valley which had not seen Paul's face (2:1). It was across the valley from Laodicea. Probably Epaphras had evangelized all three cities and all were in peril from the Gnostics.

4:14 {Luke, the beloved physician} (\Loukas ho iatros ho agap^tos). Mentioned also in Phm 1:24; 2Ti 4:11. The author of the Gospel and the Acts. Both Mark and Luke are with Paul at this time, possibly also with copies of their Gospels with them. The article here (repeated) may mean "my beloved physician." It would seem certain that Luke looked after Paul's health and that Paul loved him. Paul was Luke's hero, but it was not a one-sided affection. It is beautiful to see preacher and physician warm friends in the community. {Demas} (\D^mas). Just his name here (a contraction of Demetrius), but in 2Ti 4:10 he is mentioned as one who deserted Paul.

4:15 {Nymphas} (\Numphan). That is masculine, if \autou (his) is genuine (D E K L) after \kat' oikon, but \Numpha (feminine) if \aut^s (her) is read (B 67). Aleph A C P read \aut^“n (their), perhaps including \adelphous (brethren) and so locating this church (\ekkl^sia) in Laodicea. It was not till the third century that separate buildings were used for church worship. See Ro 16:5 for Prisca and Aquila. It is not possible to tell whether it is "her" or "his" house here.

4:16 {When this epistle hath been read among you} (\hotan anagn^sth^i par' humin h^ epistol^“). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan (\hote an) and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \anagin^sk^“. The epistle was read in public to the church

(Re 1:3). {Cause that} (\poi^ˆsate hina\). Same idiom in Joh 11:37; Re 13:15. Old Greek preferred \hop^ˆs\ for this idiom. See 1Th 5:27 for injunction for public reading of the Epistle. {That ye also read} (\kai humeis anagn^ˆte\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \anagin^ˆsk^ˆ\, to read. {And the epistle from Laodicea} (\kai t^ˆn ek Laodikias\). The most likely meaning is that the so-called Epistle to the Ephesians was a circular letter to various churches in the province of Asia, one copy going to Laodicea and to be passed on to Colossae as the Colossian letter was to be sent on to Laodicea. This was done usually by copying and keeping the original. See Eph 1:1 for further discussion of this matter.

4:17 {Take heed} (\blepe\). Keep an eye on. {Thou hast received in the Lord} (\parelabes en Kuri^ˆi\). Second aorist active indicative of \paralamban^ˆ\, the verb used by Paul of getting his message from the Lord (1Co 15:3). Clearly Archippus had a call "in the Lord" as every preacher should have. {That thou fulfil it} (\hina aut^ˆn pl^ˆrois\). Present active subjunctive of \pl^ˆro^ˆ\, "that thou keep on filling it full." It is a life-time job.

4:18 {Of me Paul with mine own hand} (\t^ˆi em^ˆi cheiri Paulou\). More precisely, "with the hand of me Paul." The genitive \Paulou\ is in apposition with the idea in the possessive pronoun \em^ˆi\, which is itself in the instrumental case agreeing with \cheiri\. So also 2Th 3:17; 1Co 16:21. {My bonds} (\mou t^ˆn desm^ˆn\). Genitive case with \mnemoneuete\ (remember). The chain (\en halusei\ Eph 6:20) clanked afresh as Paul took the pen to sign the salutation. He was not likely to forget it himself

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {Paul, and Silvanus, and Timothy} (\Paulos kai Silouanos kai Timotheos\). Nominative absolute as customary in letters. Paul associates with himself Silvanus (Silas of Acts, spelled Silbanos in D and the papyri), a Jew and Roman citizen, and Timothy, son of Jewish mother and Greek father, one of Paul's converts at Lystra on the first tour. They had both been with Paul at Thessalonica, though Timothy is not mentioned by Luke in Acts in Macedonia till Beroea (Ac 17:14f.). Timothy had joined Paul in Athens (1Th 3:1f.), had been sent back to Thessalonica, and with Silas had rejoined Paul in Corinth (1Th 3:5; Ac 18:5, 2Co 1:19). Silas is the elder and is mentioned first, but neither is in any sense the author of the Epistle any more than Sosthenes is co-author of I Corinthians or Timothy of II Corinthians, though Paul may sometimes have them in mind when he uses "we" in the Epistle. Paul does not here call himself "apostle" as in the later Epistles, perhaps because his position has not been so vigorously attacked as it was later. Ellicott sees in the absence of the word here a mark of the affectionate relations existing between Paul and the Thessalonians. {Unto the church of the Thessalonians} (tⁱ ekkl^{sifi} Thessalonike“n\). The dative case in address. Note absence of the article with \Thessalonike“n\ because a proper name and so definite without it. This is the common use of \ekkl^{sia}\ for a local body (church). The word originally meant "assembly" as in Ac 19:39, but it came to mean an organization for worship whether assembled or unassembled (cf. Ac 8:3). The only superscription in the oldest Greek manuscripts (Aleph B A) is \Pros Thessalonikeis A\ ({To the Thessalonians First}). But probably Paul wrote no superscription and certainly he would not write A to it before he had written II Thessalonians (B). His signature at the close was the proof of genuineness (2Th 3:17) against all spurious claimants (2Th 2:2). Unfortunately the brittle papyrus on which he wrote easily perished outside of the sand heaps and tombs of Egypt or the lava covered ruins of Herculaneum. What a treasure that autograph would be! {In God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ} (\en the“i patri kai kuri“i J^{sou} Christ“i\). This church is grounded in (\en\, with the locative case) and exists in the sphere and power of {God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ}.

No article in the Greek, for both \the“i patri\ and \kuri“i J^sou Christ“i\ are treated as proper names. In the very beginning of this first Epistle of Paul we meet his Christology. He at once uses the full title, "Lord Jesus Christ," with all the theological content of each word. The name "Jesus" (Saviour, Mt 1:21) he knew, as the "Jesus of history," the personal name of the Man of Galilee, whom he had once persecuted (Ac 9:5), but whom he at once, after his conversion, proclaimed to be "the Messiah," (\ho Christos\, Ac 9:22). This position Paul never changed. In the great sermon at Antioch in Pisidia which Luke has preserved (Ac 13:23) Paul proved that God fulfilled his promise to Israel by raising up "Jesus as Saviour" (\s“t^ra I^soun\). Now Paul follows the Christian custom by adding \Christos\ (verbal from \chri“\, to anoint) as a proper name to Jesus (Jesus Christ) as later he will often say "Christ Jesus" (Col 1:1). And he dares also to apply \kurios\ (Lord) to "Jesus Christ," the word appropriated by Claudius (_Dominus_, \Kurios\) and other emperors in the emperor-worship, and also common in the Septuagint for God as in Ps 32:1f. (quoted by Paul in Ro 4:8). Paul uses \Kurios\ of God (1Co 3:5) or of Jesus Christ as here. In fact, he more frequently applies it to Christ when not quoting the Old Testament as in Ro 4:8. And here he places "the Lord Jesus Christ" in the same category and on the same plane with "God the father." There will be growth in Paul's Christology and he will never attain all the knowledge of Christ for which he longs (Php 3:10-12), but it is patent that here in his first Epistle there is no "reduced Christ" for Paul. He took Jesus as "Lord" when he surrendered to Jesus on the Damascus Road: "And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said to me" (Ac 22:10). It is impossible to understand Paul without seeing clearly this first and final stand for the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul did not get this view of Jesus from current views of Mithra or of Isis or any other alien faith. The Risen Christ became at once for Paul the Lord of his life. {Grace to you and peace} (\charis humin kai eir^n^). These words, common in Paul's Epistles, bear "the stamp of Paul's experience" (Milligan). They are not commonplace salutations, but the old words "deepened and spiritualised" (Frame). The infinitive (\chairein\) so common in the papyri letters and seen in the New Testament also (Ac 15:23; 23:26; Jas 1:1) here gives place to \charis\, one of the great words of the New Testament (cf. Joh 1:16f.) and particularly of the Pauline Epistles. Perhaps no one word carries more meaning for Paul's messages than this word \charis\ (from \chair“\, rejoice) from which \charizomai\ comes. {Peace} (\eirrⁿ\) is more than the Hebrew _shal^m_ so common in salutations. One recalls the "peace" that Christ leaves to us (Joh 14:27) and the peace of God that passes all understanding (Php 4:7). This introduction is brief, but rich and gracious and pitches the letter at once on a high plane.

1:2 {We give thanks} (\eucharistoumen\). Late denominative verb \euchariste^a\ from \eucharistos\ (grateful) and that from \eu\, well and \charizomai\, to show oneself kind. See \charis\ in verse 1. "The plural implies that all three missionaries prayed together" (Moffatt). {Always} (\pantote\). Late word, rare in LXX. So with \euchariste^a\ in 2Th 1:3; 2:13; 1Co 1:4; Eph 5:20; Php 1:3. Moffatt takes it to mean "whenever Paul was at his prayers." Of course, he did not make audible prayer always, but he was always in the spirit of prayer, "a constant attitude" (Milligan), "in tune with the Infinite." {For you all} (\peri pantⁿ humⁿ\). Paul "encircled (\peri\, around) them all," including every one of them and the church as a whole. Distance lends enchantment to the memory of slight drawbacks. Paul is fond of this phrase "you all," particularly in Phil. (Php 1:3,7). {Making mention} (\mneian poioumenoi\). Paul uses this very idiom in Rom 1:9; Eph 1:16; Phm 1:4. Milligan cites a papyrus example of \mneian poioumenoi\ in prayer (B. Y. U. 652, 5). Did Paul have a prayer list of the Thessalonian disciples which he read over with Silas and Timothy? {In} here is \epi=\ "in the time of our prayers." "Each time that they are engaged in prayers the writers mention the names of the converts" (Frame).

1:3 {Remembering} (\mnⁿmoneuontes\). Present active participle of old verb from adjective \mnⁿmⁿ\ (mindful) and so to call to mind, to be mindful of, used either with the accusative as in 1Th 2:9 or the genitive as here. {Without ceasing} (\adialeipt^s\). Double compound adverb of the _Koin,_ (Polybius, Diodorus, Strabo, papyri) from the verbal adjective \a-dia-leiptos\ (\a\ privative and \dia-leip^a\, to leave off). In the N.T. alone by Paul and always connected with prayer. Milligan prefers to connect this adverb (amphibolous in position) with the preceding participle \poioumenoi\ rather than with \mnⁿmoneuontes\ as Revised Version and Westcott and Hort rightly do. {Your work of faith} (\humⁿ tou ergou t^s piste^s\). Note article with both \ergou\ and \piste^s\ (correlation of the article, both abstract substantives). \Ergou\ is genitive case the object of \mn^moneuontes\ as is common with verbs of emotion (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 508f.), though the accusative \kopon\ occurs in 1Th 2:9 according to common Greek idiom allowing either case. \Ergou\ is the general term for work or business, employment, task. Note two genitives with \ergou\. \Hum^“n\ is the usual possessive genitive, {your work}, while \t^s piste^“s\ is the descriptive genitive, marked by, characterized by, faith, "the activity that faith inspires" (Frame). It is interesting to note this sharp conjunction of these two words by Paul. We are justified by faith, but faith produces works (Ro 6-8) as the Baptist taught and as Jesus taught and as James does in Jas 2.

{Labour of love} (\tou kopou t^s agap^s\). Note article with both substantives. Here again \tou kopou\ is the genitive the object of \mn^moneuontes\ while \t^s agap^s\ is the descriptive genitive characterizing the "labour" or "toil" more exactly. \Kopos\ is from \kopt^“\, to cut, to lash, to beat the bread, to toil. In Re 14:13 the distinction is drawn between \kopou\ (toil) from which the saints rest and \erga\ (works, activities) which follow with them into heaven. So here it is the labour that love prompts, assuming gladly the toil. \Agap^ is one of the great words of the N.T. (Milligan) and no certain example has yet been found in the early papyri or the inscriptions. It occurs in the Septuagint in the higher sense as with the sensuous associations. The Epistle of Aristeeas calls love (\agap^\) God's gift and Philo uses \agap^ in describing love for God. "When Christianity first began to think and speak in Greek, it took up \agap^ and its group of terms more freely, investing them with the new glow with which the N.T. writings make us familiar, a content which is invariably religious" (Moffatt, _Love in the New Testament_, p. 40). The New Testament never uses the word \er^“s\ (lust).

{Patience of hope} (\t^s hupomon^s t^s elpidos\). Note the two articles again and the descriptive genitive \t^s elpidos\. It is patience marked by hope, "the endurance inspired by hope" (Frame), yes, and sustained by hope in spite of delays and set-backs. \Hupomon^ is an old word (\hupo, men^“\, to remain under), but it "has come like \agap^ to be closely associated with a distinctively Christian virtue" (Milligan). The same order as here (\ergou, kopos, hupomon^\) appears in Re 2:2 and Lightfoot considers it "an ascending scale as practical proofs of self-sacrifice." The church in Thessalonica was not old, but already they were called upon to exercise the sanctifying grace of hope (Denney). {In our Lord Jesus Christ} (\tou Kuriou h^m^“n I^sou Christou\). The objective genitive with \elpidos\ (hope) and so translated by "in" here (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 499f.). Jesus is the object of this hope, the hope of his second coming which is still open to us. Note "Lord Jesus Christ" as in verse 1. {Before our God and Father} (\emprosthen tou theou kai patros h^m^“n). The one article with both substantives precisely as in Ga 1:4, not "before God and our Father," both article and possessive genitive going with both substantives as in 2Pe 1:1,11; Tit 2:13 (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 785f.). The phrase is probably connected with \elpidos. \Emprosthen in the N.T. occurs only of place, but it is common in the papyri of time. The picture here is the day of judgment when all shall appear before God.

1:4 {Knowing} (\eidotes). Second perfect active participle of \oida (\eidon), a so-called causal participle=since we know, the third participle with the principal verb \eucharistoumen, the Greek being fond of the circumstantial participle and lengthening sentences thereby (Robertson, _Grammar_, P. 1128). {Beloved by God} (\^gap^menoi hupo [tou] theou). Perfect passive participle of \agapa^“, the verb so common in the N.T. for the highest kind of love. Paul is not content with the use of \adelphoi here (often in this Epistle as 2:1,14,17; 3:7; 4:1,10), but adds this affectionate phrase nowhere else in the N.T. in this form (cf. Jude 1:3) though in Sirach 45:1 and on the Rosetta Stone. But in 2Th 2:13 he quotes "beloved by the Lord" from De 33:12. The use of \adelphoi for members of the same brotherhood can be derived from the Jewish custom (Ac 2:29,37) and the habit of Jesus (Mt 12:48) and is amply illustrated in the papyri for burial clubs and other orders and guilds (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). {Your election} (\t^“n eklog^“n hum^“n). That is the election of you by God. It is an old word from \eklegomai used by Jesus of his choice of the twelve disciples (Joh 15:16) and by Paul of God's eternal selection (Eph 1:4). The word \eklog^“ is not in the LXX and only seven times in the N.T. and always of God's choice of men (Ac 9:15; 1Th 1:4; Ro 9:11; 11:5,7,58; 2Pe 1:10). The divine \eklog^“ was manifested in the Christian qualities of verse 3 (Moffatt).

1:5 {How that} (\hoti). It is not certain whether \hoti here means "because" (\quia) as in 2Th 3:7; 1Co 2:14; Ro 8:27 or declarative \hoti "how that," knowing the circumstances of your election (Lightfoot) or explanatory, as in Ac 16:3; 1Th 2:1; 1Co

16:15; 2Co 12:3f.; Ro 13:11. {Our gospel} (\to euaggelion h^m“n\). The gospel (see on Mt 4:23; Mr 1:1,15 for euaggelion) which we preach, Paul's phrase also in 2Th 2:14; 2Co 4:3; Ro 2:16; 16:25; 2Ti 2:8. Paul had a definite, clear-cut message of grace that he preached everywhere including Thessalonica. This message is to be interpreted in the light of Paul's own sermons in Acts and Epistles, not by reading backward into them the later perversions of Gnostics and sacramentarians. This very word was later applied to the books about Jesus, but Paul is not so using the term here or anywhere else. In its origin Paul's gospel is of God (1Th 2:2,8,9), in its substance it is Christ's (3:2; 2Th 1:8), and Paul is only the bearer of it (1Th 2:4,9; 2Th 2:14) as Milligan points out. Paul and his associates have been entrusted with this gospel (1Th 2:4) and preach it (Ga 2:2). Elsewhere Paul calls it God's gospel (2Co 11:7; Ro 1:1; 15:16) or Christs (1Co 9:12; 2Co 2:12; 9:13; 10:14; Ga 1:7; Ro 15:19; Php 1:27). In both instances it is the subjective genitive. {Came unto you} (\egenth^ eis humfs\). First aorist passive indicative of \ginomai\ in practically same sense as \egeneto\ (second aorist middle indicative as in the late Greek generally). So also \eis humfs\ like the _Koin,_ is little more than the dative \humin\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 594). {Not only--but also} (\ouk--monon, alla kai\). Sharp contrast, negatively and positively. The contrast between \logos\ (word) and \dunamis\ (power) is seen also in 1Co 2:4; 4:20. Paul does not refer to miracles by \dunamis\. {In the Holy Spirit and much assurance} (\en pneumatⁱ hagi“i kai pl^{rophorifi} pollⁱ\). Preposition \en\ repeated with \log“i, dunamei\, but only once here thus uniting closely {Holy Spirit} and {much assurance}. No article with either word. The word \pl^{rophorifi} is not found in ancient Greek or the LXX. It appears once in Clement of Rome and one broken papyrus example. For the verb \pl^{rophore}“\ see on Lu 1:1. The substantive in the N.T. only here and Col 2:2; Heb 6:11; 10:22. It means the full confidence which comes from the Holy Spirit. {Even as ye know} (\kath“s oidate\). Paul appeals to the Thessalonians themselves as witnesses to the character of his preaching and life among them. {What manner of men we showed ourselves toward you} (\hoioi egenth^men humin\). Literally, {What sort of men we became to you}. Qualitative relative \hoioi\ and dative \humin\ and first aorist passive indicative \egenth^men\, (not \metha\, we were). An exegetical comment with {for your sake} (\di' humfs\) added. It was all in their interest and for their advantage, however it may have seemed otherwise at the time.

1:6 {Imitators of us and of the Lord} (\mim^ˆtai h^ˆm“n kai tou kuriou\). \Mim^ˆt^ˆs\ (-t^ˆs\ expresses the agent) is from \mimeomai\, to imitate and that from \mimos\ (\mimic\, actor). Old word, more than "followers," in the N.T. only six times (1Th 1:6; 2:14; 1Co 4:16; 11:1; Eph 5:1; Heb 6:12). Again Paul uses \ginomai\, to become, not \eimi\, to be. It is a daring thing to expect people to "imitate" the preacher, but Paul adds "and of the Lord," for he only expected or desired "imitation" as he himself imitated the Lord Jesus, as he expressly says in 1Co 11:1. The peril of it all is that people so easily and so readily imitate the preacher when he does not imitate the Lord. The fact of the "election" of the Thessalonians was shown by the character of the message given them and by this sincere acceptance of it (Lightfoot). {Having received the word} (\dexamenoi ton logon\). First aorist middle participle of \dechomai\, probably simultaneous action (receiving), not antecedent. {In much affliction} (\en thlipsei poll^ˆi\). Late word, pressure. Tribulation (Latin _tribulum_) from \thlib“\, to press hard on. Christianity has glorified this word. It occurs in some Christian papyrus letters in this same sense. Runs all through the N.T. (2Th 1:4; Ro 5:3). Paul had his share of them (Col 1:24; 2Co 2:4) and so he understands how to sympathize with the Thessalonians (1Th 3:3f.). They suffered after Paul left Thessalonica (1Th 2:14). {With joy of the Holy Spirit} (\meta charas pneumatos hagiou\). The Holy Spirit gives the joy in the midst of the tribulations as Paul learned (Ro 5:3). "This paradox of experience" (Moffatt) shines along the pathway of martyrs and saints of Christ.

1:7 {So that ye became} (\h“ste genesthai humas\). Definite result expressed by \h“ste\ and the infinitive \genesthai\ (second aorist middle of \ginomai) as is common in the _Koin,_. {An ensample} (\tupon\). So B D, but Aleph A C have \tupous\ (plural). The singular looks at the church as a whole, the plural as individuals like \humfs\. \Tupos\ is an old word from \tupt“\, to strike, and so the mark of a blow, print as in John 20:25. Then the figure formed by the blow, image as in Ac 7:43. Then the mould or form (Ro 6:17; Ac 23:25). Then an example or pattern as in Ac 7:44, to be imitated as here, Php 3:17, etc. It was a great compliment for the church in Thessalonica to be already a model for believers in Macedonia and Achaia. Our word type for printers is this same word with one of its meanings.

Note separate article with both Macedonia (tⁱ Makedonifi) and Achaia (tⁱ Achaifi) treated as separate provinces as they were.

1:8 {From you hath sounded forth} (aph' humⁿ ex^{ch} tai). Perfect passive indicative of ex^{che}, late compound verb (ex, ^{chos}, ^{ch}, our echo) to sound out of a trumpet or of thunder, to reverberate like our echo. Nowhere else in the N.T. So "from you" as a sounding board or radio transmitting station (to use a modern figure). It marks forcibly "both the clear and the persuasive nature of the logos tou Kuriou" (Ellicott). This phrase, the word of the Lord, may be subjective with the Lord as its author or objective with the Lord as the object. It is both. It is a graphic picture with a pardonable touch of hyperbole (Moffatt) for Thessalonica was a great commercial and political centre for disseminating the news of salvation (on the Egnation Way). {But in every place} (all' en panti topⁱ). In contrast to Macedonia and Achaia. The sentence would naturally stop here, but Paul is dictating rapidly and earnestly and goes on. {Your faith to God-ward} (h^{pistis} humⁿ h^{pros} ton theon). Literally, {the faith of you that toward the God}. The repeated article makes clear that their faith is now directed toward the true God and not toward the idols from which they had turned (verse 10). {Is gone forth} (exel^{luthen}). Second perfect active indicative of old verb exerchomai, to go out, state of completion like ex^{ch} tai above. {So that we need not to speak anything} (h^{ste m^{chreian} echein h^{mfs} lalein ti}). H^{ste} with the infinitive for actual result as in verse 7. No vital distinction between lalein (originally to chatter as of birds) and legein, both being used in the _Koin,_ for speaking and preaching (in the N.T.).

1:9 {They themselves} (autoi). The men of Macedonia, voluntarily. {Report} (apaggellousin). Linear present active indicative, keep on reporting. {What manner of entering in} (hopoian eisodon). What sort of entrance, qualitative relative in an indirect question. {We had} (eschomen). Second aorist active (ingressive) indicative of the common verb ech^{ch}. {And how} (kai p^s). Here the interrogative adverb p^s in this part of the indirect question. This part about "them" (you) as the first part about Paul. The verb epistreph^{ch} is an old verb for turning and is common in the Acts for Gentiles turning to God, as here from idols, though not by Paul again in this sense. In Ga 4:9 Paul uses it for turning to the weak and beggarly elements of Judaism. {From idols} (\apo t'“n eidol“n). Old word from \eidos (figure) for image or likeness and then for the image of a heathen god (our _idol_). Common in the LXX in this sense. In Ac 14:15 Paul at Lystra urged the people {to turn from these vain things to the living God} (\apo tout“n t'“n matai“n epistrephein epi theon z“nta), using the same verb \epistrephein. Here also Paul has a like idea, {to serve a living and true God} (\douleuein the“i z“nti kai al^thin“i). No article, it is true, but should be translated "the living and true God" (cf. Ac 14:15). Not "dead" like the idols from which they turned, but alive and genuine (al^thin, not al^th^s).

1:10 {To wait for his Son from heaven} (\anamenein ton huion autou ek t'“n ouran“n). Present infinitive, like \douleuein, and so linear, to keep on waiting for. The hope of the second coming of Christ was real and powerful with Paul as it should be with us. It was subject to abuse then as now as Paul will have to show in this very letter. He alludes to this hope at the close of each chapter in this Epistle. {Whom he raised from the dead} (\hon ^geiren ek [t'“n] nekr“n). Paul gloried in the fact of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead of which fact he was himself a personal witness. This fact is the foundation stone for all his theology and it comes out in this first chapter. {Jesus which delivereth us from the wrath to come} (\I^soun ton ruomenon h^mfs ek t^s org^s t^s erchomen^s). It is the historic, crucified, risen, and ascended Jesus Christ, God's Son, who delivers from the coming wrath. He is our Saviour (Mt 1:21) true to his name Jesus. He is our Rescuer (Ro 11:26, \ho ruomenos, from Isa 59:20). It is eschatological language, this coming wrath of God for sin (1Th 2:16; Ro 3:5; 5:9; 9:22; 13:5). It was Paul's allusion to the day of judgment with Jesus as Judge whom God had raised from the dead that made the Athenians mock and leave him (Ac 17:31f.). But Paul did not change his belief or his preaching because of the conduct of the Athenians. He is certain that God's wrath in due time will punish sin. Surely this is a needed lesson for our day. It was coming then and it is coming now.

2:1 {For yourselves know} (\autoi gar oidate\). This explanatory \gar\ takes up in verses 1-12 the allusion in 1:9 about the "report" concerning the entrance (\eisodon\, way in, \eis, hodon\), {unto you} (\t^n pros humfs\). Note repeated article to sharpen the point. This proleptic accusative is common enough. It is expanded by the epexegetic use of the \hoti\ clause {that it hath not been found vain} (\hoti ou ken^ gegonen\). Literally, {that it has not become empty}. Second perfect active (completed state) of \ginomai\. Every pastor watches wistfully to see what will be the outcome of his work. Bengel says: _Non inanis, sed plena virtutis_. Cf. 1:5. \Kenos\ is hollow, empty, while \mataios\ is fruitless, ineffective. In 1Co 15:14,17 Paul speaks of \kenon to k^rugma\ ({empty the preaching}) and \mataia h^ pistis\ ({vain the faith}). One easily leads to the other.

2:2 {But having suffered before} (\alla propathontes\). Strong adversative \alla\, antithesis to \ken^. Appeal to his personal experiences in Thessalonica known to them ({as ye know}, \kath^s oidate\). Second aorist active participle of \propasch^, old compound verb, but here alone in the N.T. The force of \pro- (before) is carried over to the next verb. The participle may be regarded as temporal (Ellicott) or concessive (Moffatt). {And been shamefully entreated in Philippi} (\kai hubristhentes en Philippiis\). First aorist passive participle of \hubriz^, old verb, to treat insolently. "More than the bodily suffering it was the personal indignity that had been offered to him as a Roman citizen" (Milligan), for which account see Ac 16:16-40, an interesting example of how Acts and the Epistles throw light on each other. Luke tells how Paul resented the treatment accorded to him as a Roman citizen and here Paul shows that the memory still rankled in his bosom. {We waxed bold in our God} (\eparr^siasametha en t^i the^i h^m^n\). Ingressive first aorist middle of \parr^siazomai\, old deponent verb from \parr^sia\ (full story, \pan-, r^sia\). In his reply to Festus (Ac 26:26) Paul uses \parr^siazomenos la\, {being bold I speak}, while here he has {we waxed bold to speak} (\eparr^siasametha la^sai\). The insult in Philippi did not close Paul's mouth, but had precisely the opposite effect "in our God." It was not wild fanaticism, but determined courage and confidence in God that spurred Paul to still greater boldness in Thessalonica, {unto you} (\pros humfs), be the consequences what they might, {the gospel of God in much conflict}, (\to euaggelion tou theou en poll“i ag“ni). This figure of the athletic games (\ag“n) may refer to outward conflict like Php 1:30 or inward anxiety (Col 2:1). He had both in Thessalonica.

2:3 {Exhortation} (\parakl^sis). Persuasive discourse, calling to one's side, for admonition, encouragement, or comfort. {Not of error} (\ouk ek plan^s). This word is same as \plana“, to lead astray (2Ti 3:13) like Latin _errare_. Passive idea of {error} here rather than deceit. That is seen in {nor in guile} (\oude en dol“i) from \del“, to catch with bait. Paul is keenly sensitive against charges against the correctness of his message and the purity of his life. {Nor of uncleanness} (\oude ex akatharsias). "This disclaimer, startling as it may seem, was not unneeded amidst the impurities consecrated by the religions of the day" (Lightfoot). There was no necessary connection in the popular mind between religion and morals. The ecstatic initiations in some of the popular religions were grossly sensual.

2:4 {But even as we have been approved by God} (\alla kath“s dedokimasmetha hupo tou theou). Perfect passive indicative of \dokimaz“, old verb to put to the test, but here the tense for completed state means tested and proved and so approved by God. Paul here claims the call of God for his ministry and the seal of God's blessing on his work and also for that of Silas and Timothy. {To be entrusted with the gospel} (\pisteuth^nai to euaggelion). First aorist passive infinitive of \pisteu“, common verb for believing, from \pistis (faith), but here to entrust rather than to trust. The accusative of the thing is retained in the passive according to regular Greek idiom as in 1Co 9:17; Ga 2:7; Ro 3:2; 1Ti 1:11; Tit 1:3, though the active had the dative of the person. {So we speak} (\hout“s laloumen). Simple, yet confident claim of loyalty to God's call and message. Surely this should be the ambition of every preacher of the gospel of God. {Not as pleasing men} (\ouch h“s anthr“pois areskontes). Dative case with \aresk“ as in Ga 1:10. Few temptations assail the preacher more strongly than this one to please men, even if God is not pleased, though with the dim hope that God will after all condone or overlook. Nothing but experience will convince some preachers how fickle is popular favour and how often it is at the cost of failure to please God. And yet the preacher wishes to win men to Christ. It is all as subtle as it is deceptive. God tests our hearts (the very verb \dokimaz“\ used in the beginning of this verse) and he is the only one whose approval matters in the end of the day (1Co 4:5).

2:5 {Using words of flattery} (\en log“i kolakeias\). Literally, {in speech of flattery or fawning}. Old word, only here in N.T., from \kolaks\, a flatterer. An Epicurean, Philodemus, wrote a work \Peri Kolakeias\ (Concerning Flattery). Milligan (_Vocabulary_, etc.) speaks of "the selfish conduct of too many of the rhetoricians of the day," conduct extremely repugnant to Paul. The third time (verses 1,2,5) he appeals to their knowledge of his work in Thessalonica. Frame suggests "cajolery." {Nor a cloke of covetousness} (\oute prophasei pleonexias\). Pretext (\prophasis\ from \prophain“\, to show forth, or perhaps from \pro-ph^mi\, to speak forth). This is the charge of self-interest rather than the mere desire to please people. Pretext of greediness is Frame's translation. \Pleonexia\ is merely "having more" from \pleonekt^s\, one eager for more, and \pleonekte“\, to have more, then to over-reach, all old words, all with bad meaning as the result of the desire for more. In a preacher this sin is especially fatal. Paul feels so strongly his innocence of this charge that he calls God as witness as in 2Co 1:23; Ro 9:1; Php 1:8, a solemn oath for his own veracity.

2:6 {Nor seeking glory of men} (\oute z^tountes ex anthr“p“n doxan\). "Upon the repudiation of covetousness follows naturally the repudiation of worldly ambition" (Milligan). See Ac 20:19; 2Co 4:5; Eph 4:2. This third disclaimer is as strong as the other two. Paul and his associates had not tried to extract praise or glory out of (\ex\) men. {Neither from you nor from others} (\oute aph' hum“n oute aph' all“n\). He widens the negation to include those outside of the church circles and changes the preposition from \ex\ (out of) to \apo\ (from). {When we might have been burdensome, as apostles of Christ} (\dunamenoi en barei einai h“s Christou apostoloi\). Westcott and Hort put this clause in verse 7. Probably a concessive participle, {though being able to be in a position of weight} (either in matter of finance or of dignity, or a burden on your funds or "men of weight" as Moffatt suggests). Milligan suggests that Paul "plays here on the double sense of the phrase" like the Latin proverb: ῥonos propter onus. So he adds, including Silas and Timothy, {as Christ's apostles}, as missionaries clearly, whether in the technical sense or not (cf. Ac 14:4,14; 2Co 8:23; 11:13; Ro 16:7; Php 2:25; Re 2:2). They were entitled to pay as "Christ's apostles" (cf. 1Co 9; 2Co 11:7ff.), though they had not asked for it.

2:7 {But we were gentle in the midst of you} (ἡ ἑγενῆθημεν ἡμῶν ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν). Note ἑγενῆθημεν (became), not ἦμεθα (were). This rendering follows ἡμῶν instead of ὑμῶν (Aleph B D C Vulg. Boh.) which is clearly correct, though Dibelius, Moffatt, Ellicott, Weiss prefer ὑμῶν as making better sense. Dibelius terms ἡμῶν unmöglich (impossible), but surely that is too strong. Paul is fond of the word ἡμῶν (babes). Lightfoot admits that he here works the metaphor to the limit in his passion, but does not mar it as Ellicott holds. {As when a nurse cherishes her own children} (ὡς ἡ τροφὸς τὰ ἑαυτῆς τέκνα). This comparative clause with ὡς (Mr 4:26; Ga 6:10 without ἡμῶν or ὑμῶν) and the subjunctive (Robertson, Grammar, p. 968) has a sudden change of the metaphor, as is common with Paul (1Ti 5:24; 2Co 3:13ff.) from {babes} to {nurse} (τροφὸς), old word, here only in the N.T., from τρέφω, to nourish, τροφή, nourishment. It is really the mother-nurse "who suckles and nurses her own children" (Lightfoot), a use found in Sophocles, and a picture of Paul's tender affection for the Thessalonians. ἡμῶν is an old word to keep warm, to cherish with tender love, to foster. In N.T. only here and Eph 5:29.

2:8 {Even so, being affectionately desirous of you} (ὡς ὁ ἐμειρομένη ὑμῶν). Clearly the correct text rather than ἡμῶν from ἡμῶν, old verb to long for. But the verb ἡμῶν (Westcott and Hort om., smooth breathing) occurs nowhere else except MSS. in Job 3:21; Ps 62:2 (Symmachus) and the Lycaonian sepulchral inscription (4th cent. A.D.) about the sorrowing parents ἡμῶν περι παίδος, {greatly desiring their son} (Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary). Moulton suggests that it comes from a root σμερ, remember, and that ο is a derelict preposition like ο-duromai, ο-kell, "keanos". Wohlenberg (Zahn, Kommentar) calls the word "a term of endearment," "derived from the language of the nursery" (Milligan). {We were well pleased} (ἡ ὑδοκούμεν). Imperfect active of εὐδοκεῖν, common verb in later Greek and in N.T. (see on Mt 3:17), picturing Paul's idea of their attitude while in Thessalonica. Paul often has it with the infinitive as here. {To impart} (\metadounai). Second aorist active infinitive of \metadid“mi, old verb to share with (see on Lu 3:11). Possible zeugma with {souls} (\psuchas), though Lightfoot renders "lives." Paul and his associates held nothing back. {Because ye were become very dear to us} (\dioti agap^toi h^min egen^th^te). Note \dioti (double cause, \dia, hoti\, for that), use of \ginomai again for become, and dative \h^min with verbal \agap^toi, beloved and so dear. A beautiful picture of the growth of Paul's affection for them as should be true with every pastor.

2:9 {Travail} (\mochthon). Old word for difficult labour, harder than \kopos (toil). In the N.T. only here, 2Th 3:8; 2Co 11:27. Note accusative case here though genitive with \mn^moneu“ in 1:3. {Night and day} (\nuktos kai h^meras). Genitive case, both by day and by night, perhaps beginning before dawn and working after dark. So in 3:10. {That we might not burden any of you} (\pros to m^ epibar^sai tina hum“n). Use of \pros with the articular infinitive to express purpose (only four times by Paul). The verb \epibare“ is late, but in the papyri and inscriptions for laying a burden (\baros) on (\epi-) one. In N.T. only here and 2Th 3:8; 2Co 2:5. Paul boasted of his financial independence where he was misunderstood as in Thessalonica and Corinth (2Co 9-12), though he vindicated his right to remuneration. {We preached} (\ek^ruxamen). {We heralded} (from \k^rux\, herald) to you, common verb for preach.

2:10 {How holily and righteously and unblameably} (\h“s hosi“s kai dikai“s kai amempt“s). Paul calls the Thessalonians and God as witnesses (\martures) to his life toward you the believers (\humin tois pisteuousin) dative of personal interest. He employs three common adverbs that show how holily toward God and how righteously toward men so that they did not blame him and his associates in either respect. So there is a reason for each adverb. All this argues that Paul spent a considerable time in Thessalonica, more than the three sabbaths mentioned by Luke. The pastor ought to live so that his life will bear close inspection.

2:11 {As a father with his own children} (\h“s pat^r tekna heautou). Change from the figure of the mother-nurse in verse 7. There is ellipse of a principal verb with the participles \parakalountes, paramouthoumenoi, marturoumenoi. Lightfoot suggests \enouthetoumen\ (we admonished) or \egen^th^men\ (we became). The three participles give three phases of the minister's preaching (exhorting, encouraging or consoling, witnessing or testifying). They are all old verbs, but only the first (parakale“) is common in the N.T.

2:12 {To the end that} (\eis to\). Final use of \eis\ and the articular infinitive, common idiom in the papyri and Paul uses \eis\ to and the infinitive fifty times (see again in 3:2), some final, some sub-final, some result (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 989-91). {Walk worthily of God} (\peripatein axi“s tou theou\). Present infinitive (linear action), and genitive case with adverb \axi“s\ as in Col 1:10 (cf. Php 1:27; Eph 4:1), like a preposition. {Calleth} (\kalountos\). Present active participle, keeps on calling. Some MSS. have \kalesantos\, called. {Kingdom} (\basileian\) here is the future consummation because of glory (\doxan\) as in 2Th 1:5; 1Co 6:9; 15:50; Ga 5:21; 2Ti 4:1,18), but Paul uses it for the present kingdom of grace also as in 1Co 4:20; Ro 14:17; Col 1:13.

2:13 {And for this cause we also} (\kai dia touto kai h^meis\). Note \kai\ twice. We as well as you are grateful for the way the gospel was received in Thessalonica. {Without ceasing} (\adialeipt“s\). Late adverb for which see on 1:2 and for \eucharistoumen\ see on 1:2. {The word of the message} (\logon ako^s\). Literally, {the word of} hearing, as in Sir. 42:1 and Heb 4:2 \ho logos t^s ako^s\, the word marked by hearing (genitive case), the word which you heard. Here with \tou theou\ (of God) added as a second descriptive genitive which Paul expands and justifies. {Ye received it so} (\paralabontes\) and {accepted or welcomed it} (\edexasthe\) so, {not as the word of men} (\ou logou anthr“p“n\), {but as the word of God} (\alla logon theou\), {as it is in truth} (\kath“s al^th“s estin\). This last clause is literally, {as it truly is}. Paul had not a doubt that he was proclaiming God's message. Should any preacher preach his doubts if he has any? God's message can be found and Paul found it. {Worketh in you} (\energeitai en humin\). Perhaps middle voice of \energe“\ (en, ergon, work) late verb, not in ancient Greek or LXX, but in papyri and late writers (Polybius, etc.) and in N.T. only by Paul and James. If it is passive, as Milligan thinks, it means "is set in operation," as Polybius has it. The idea then is that the word of God is set in operation in you that believe.

2:14 {Imitators of the churches of God which are in Judea} (\mim^ˆtai t^ˆˆn ekkl^ˆsi^ˆˆn tou theou t^ˆˆn ous^ˆˆn en t^ˆi Ioudaifi). On \mim^ˆtai see on 1:5. "This passage, implying an affectionate admiration of the Jewish churches on the part of St. Paul, and thus entirely bearing out the impression produced by the narrative in the Acts, is entirely subversive of the theory maintained by some and based on a misconception of Ga 2, and by the fiction of the Pseudo-Clementines, of the feud existing between St. Paul and the Twelve" (Lightfoot). {In Christ Jesus} (\en Christ^ˆi I^ˆsou). It takes this to make a _Christian_ church of God. Note order here {Christ Jesus} as compared with {Jesus Christ} in 1:1,3. {Ye also--even as they} (\kai humeis--kai autoi). Note \kai twice (correlative use of \kai). {Countrymen} (\sumphulet^ˆˆn). Fellow-countrymen or tribesmen. Late word that refers primarily to Gentiles who no doubt joined the Jews in Thessalonica who instigated the attacks on Paul and Silas so that it "was taken up by the native population, without whose co-operation it would have been powerless" (Lightfoot). {Own} (\idi^ˆˆn) here has apparently a weakened force. Note \hupo here with the ablative both with \sumphulet^ˆˆn and \Ioudai^ˆˆn after the intransitive \epathete (suffered). The persecution of the Christians by the Jews in Judea was known everywhere.

2:15 {Who both killed the Lord Jesus and the prophets} (\t^ˆˆn kai ton Kurion apokteinant^ˆˆn I^ˆsoun kai tous proph^ˆtas). First aorist active participle of \apoktein^ˆ. Vivid justification of his praise of the churches in Judea. The Jews killed the prophets before the Lord Jesus who reminded them of their guilt (Mt 23:29). Paul, as Peter (Ac 2:23), lays the guilt of the death of Christ on the Jews. {And drove us out} (\kai h^ˆmfs ekdi^ˆˆxant^ˆˆn). An old verb to drive out or banish, to chase out as if a wild beast. Only here in N.T. It is Paul's vivid description of the scene told in Ac 17:5ff. when the rabbis and the hoodlums from the agora chased him out of Thessalonica by the help of the politarchs. {Please not God} (\The^ˆˆi m^ˆ areskont^ˆˆn). The rabbis and Jews thought that they were pleasing God by so doing as Paul did when he ravaged the young church in Jerusalem. But Paul knows better now. {And are contrary to all men} (\kai pasin anthr^ˆˆpois enanti^ˆˆn). Dative case with the adjective \enanti^ˆˆn (old and common word, face to face, opposite). It seems like a bitter word about Paul's countrymen whom he really loved (Ro 9:1-5; 10:1-6), but Paul knew only too well the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile as he shows in Eph 2 and which only the Cross of Christ can break down. Tacitus (Hist. V. 5) says that the Jews are adversus omnes alios hostile odium.

2:16 {Forbidding us} (k^hluontⁿ h^mfs). Explanatory participle of the idea in \enantiⁿ. They show their hostility to Paul at every turn. Right here in Corinth, where Paul is when he writes, they had already shown venomous hostility toward Paul as Luke makes plain (Ac 18:6ff.). They not simply oppose his work among the Jews, but also to the Gentiles (\ethnesi, nations outside of the Abrahamic covenant as they understood it). {That they may be saved} (\hina sthsin). Final use of \hina with first aorist passive subjunctive of \s^z old verb to save. It was the only hope of the Gentiles, Christ alone and not the mystery-religions offered any real hope. {To fill up their sins alway} (\eis to anapl^rsai autⁿ tas hamartias pantote). Another example of \eis to and the infinitive as in verse 12. It may either be God's conceived plan to allow the Jews to go on and fill up (\anapl^rsai, note \ana, fill up full, old verb) or it may be the natural result from the continual (\pantote) sins of the Jews. {Is come} (\ephthasen). First aorist (timeless aorist) active indicative of \phthan^a which no longer means to come before as in 1Th 4:15 where alone in the N.T. it retains the old idea of coming before. Some MSS. have the perfect active \ephthaken, prophetic perfect of realization already. Frame translates it: "But the wrath has come upon them at last." This is the most likely meaning of \eis telos. Paul vividly foresees and foretells the final outcome of this attitude of hate on the part of the Jews. \Tristis exitus, Bengel calls it. Paul speaks out of a sad experience.

2:17 {Being bereaved of you} (\aporphanisthentes aph' humⁿ). First aorist passive participle of the rare compound verb (\aporphaniz^a, in Aeschylus, but nowhere else in N.T.). Literally, {being orphaned from you} (\aph' humⁿ, ablative case). Paul changes the figure again (\trophos or mother nurse in verse 7, \n^pios or babe in verse 7, \pat^r or father in verse 11) to {orphan} (\orphanos). He refers to the period of separation from them, {for a short season} (\pros kairon h^aras) for a season of an hour. This idiom only here in N.T., but \pros kairon in Lu 8:13 and \pros h^aran in 2Co 7:8. But it has seemed long to Paul. Precisely how long he had been gone we do not know, some months at any rate. {In presence, not in heart} (\pros“p“i ou kardifi). Locative case. \Pros“pon, old word (\pros, ops, in front of the eye, face) for face, look, person. Literally, {in face or person}. His heart was with them, though they no longer saw his face. Heart, originally \kardia, is the inner man, the seat of the affections and purposes, not always in contrast with intellect (\nous). "Out of sight, not out of mind" (Rutherford). {Endeavoured the more exceedingly} (\perissoter“s espoudasamen). Ingressive aorist active indicative of \spoudaz“, old word to hasten (from \spoudˆ, speud“). {We became zealous}. Comparative adverb \perissoter“s from \perisson, more abundantly than before being orphaned from you. {Your face} (to pros“pon hum“n). Cf. his {face} above. {With great desire} (en pollˆi epithumifi). {In much longing} (\epithumia from \epi and \thumos, \epithume“, to run after, to yearn after, whether good or bad).

2:18 {Because} (\dioti). As in 2:8. {We would fain have come to you} (ˆthelˆsamen elthein pros humas). First aorist active indicative of \thel“. Literally, {we desired to come to you. I Paul} (\eg“ men Paulos). Clear example of literary plural ˆthelesamen with singular pronoun \eg“. Paul uses his own name elsewhere also as in 2Co 10:1; Ga 5:2; Col 1:23; Eph 3:1; Phm 1:19. {Once and again} (kai hapax kai dis). {Both once and twice} as in Php 4:16. Old idiom in Plato. {And Satan hindered us} (kai enekopsen hˆmas ho Satanas). Adversative use of \kai= but or and yet. First aorist active indicative of \enkopt“, late word to cut in, to hinder. Milligan quotes papyrus example of third century, B.C. Verb used to cut in a road, to make a road impassable. So Paul charges Satan with cutting in on his path. Used by Paul in Ac 24:4; Ga 5:7 and passive \enekoptomˆn in Ro 15:22; 1Pe 3:7. This hindrance may have been illness, opposition of the Jews in Corinth, what not.

2:19 {Crown of glorying} (\stephanos kauchˆse“s). When a king or conqueror came on a visit he was given a chaplet of glorying. Paul is answering the insinuation that he did not really wish to come. {At his coming} (en tˆi autou parousifi). This word \parousia is untechnical (just _presence_from \pareimi) in 2Th 2:9; 1Co 16:17; 2Co 7:6f.; 10:10; Php 1:26; 2:12. But here (also 1Th 3:13; 4:15; 5:23; 2Th 2:1,8; 1Co 15:23) we have the technical sense of the second coming of Christ. Deissmann (_Light from the Ancient East_, pp. 372ff.) notes that the word in the papyri is almost technical for the arrival of a king or ruler who expects to receive his "crown of coming." The Thessalonians, Paul says, will be his crown, glory, joy when Jesus comes.

3:1 {When we could no longer forbear} (\m^ˆketi stegontes\). \Steg“\ is old verb to cover from \steg^\", roof (Mr 2:4), to cover with silence, to conceal, to keep off, to endure as here and 1Co 9:12; 13:7. In the papyri in this sense (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). \M^ˆketi\ usual negative with participle in the _Koin,_ rather than \ouketi\. {We thought it good} (\^udok^ˆsamen\). Either literary plural as in 2:18 or Paul and Silas as more likely. If so, both Timothy and Silas came to Athens (Ac 17:15f.), but Timothy was sent ({we sent}, \epempsamen\, verse 2) right back to Thessalonica and later Paul sent Silas on to Beroea or Thessalonica (verse 5, {I sent}, \epempsa\). Then both Silas and Timothy came from Macedonia to Corinth (Ac 18:5). {Alone} (\monoi\). Including Silas. {God's minister} (\diakonon tou theou\). See on Mt 22:13 for this interesting word, here in general sense not technical sense of deacon. Some MSS. have {fellow-worker} (\sunergon\). Already {apostle} in 2:7 and now {brother, minister} (and possibly {fellow-worker}).

3:3 {That no man be moved} (\to m^ˆdena sainesthai\). Epexegetical articular infinitive in accusative case of general reference. \Sain“\ is old word to wag the tail, to flatter, beguile and this sense suits here (only N.T. example). The sense of "moved" or troubled or disheartened is from \siainesthai\ the reading of F G and found in the papyri. {We are appointed} (\keimetha\). Present middle, used here as passive of \tith^ˆmi\. We Christians are set {hereunto} (\eis touto\) to be beguiled by tribulations. We must resist.

3:4 {We told you beforehand} (\proelegomen humin\). Imperfect active, we used to tell you beforehand. Old verb, rare in N.T. (only in Paul). {That we are to suffer persecution} (\hoti mellomen thlibesthai\). \Mell“\ and present passive infinitive. Not mere prediction, but God's appointed will as it turned out in Thessalonica.

3:5 {That I might know} (\eis to gn^ˆnai\). Paul's common idiom (verse 2), \eis to\ and the infinitive of purpose (second aorist ingressive active of \gin“sk“\, come to know). {Lest by any means the tempter had tempted you} (\m^p“s epeirasen humfs ho peiraz“n\). Findlay takes this as a question with negative answer, but most likely negative final clause with \m^p“s\ about a past action with aorist indicative according to the classic idiom as in Ga 2:2 (\m^p“s--edramon\)) and Ga 4:11 after verb of fearing (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 988). It is a fear that the thing may turn out to be so about the past. {Should be} (\gen^tai\). Here the usual construction appears (aorist subjunctive with \m^p“s) about the future.

3:6 {Even now} (\arti\). Just now, Timothy having come (\elthontos Timotheou, genitive absolute). Why Silas is not named is not clear, unless he had come from Beroea or elsewhere in Macedonia. {Glad tidings of} (\euaggelisamenou\). First aorist middle participle of the verb for evangelizing (gospelizing). {Good remembrance} (\mneian\). Same word used by Paul 1:2. {Longing to see us} (\epipothountes h^mfs idein\). Old and strong verb, \epi-, directive, to long after. Mutual longing that pleased Paul ("we also you").

3:7 {Over you} (\eph' humin\). \Epi\ with the locative, the basis on which the "comfort" rests. {In} (\epi\). Locative case again with \epi-. {Distress} (\anagk^i\). {Physical necessity}, common sense in late Greek, choking (\agch“, angor), and {crushing} trouble (\thlipsis, thlib“\).

3:8 {If ye stand fast} (\ean humeis st^kete\). Condition of first class, \ean\ and present active indicative (correct text, not \st^k^te\ subj.) of \st^k“\, late form from perfect \hest^ka\ of \hist^mi\, to place.

3:9 {Render again unto God} (t“i the“i antapodounai\). Second aorist active infinitive of double compound verb \ant-apodid“mi\, to give back (\apo\ in return for (\anti\). Old verb rare in N.T., but again in 2Th 1:6. {For you} (\peri hum“n\). Around (concerning) you, while in verse 2 \hyper\ (over is used for "concerning your faith.") {For} (\epi\). Basis again as cause or ground for the joy. {Wherewith we joy} (\h^i chairomen\). Probably cognate accusative \h^n\ with \chairomen\ attracted to locative \charfi\ (Mt 2:10).

3:10 {Exceedingly} (\huperekperissou\). Double compound adverb, only in 1Th 3:10; 5:13 (some MSS. \-“s). Like piling Ossa on Pelion, \periss“s\, abundantly, \ek perissou\, out of bounds, \huperekperissou\, more than out of bounds (overflowing all bounds). {And perfect} (\kai katartisai\). First aorist active articular infinitive of purpose (\eis to idein--kai\) of \katartiz“\, to mend nets (Mt 4:21) or men (Ga 6:1) repair. Chiefly late. {That which is lacking in} (\ta huster^mata\). The shortcomings, the lacks or left-overs (Col 1:24). From \hustere“\ (\husteron\), to be late.

3:11 {Our God and Father himself} (\autos ho theos kai pat^r h^m“n\). Note one article with both substantives for one person. {And our Lord Jesus} (\kai ho Kurios h^m“n I^sous\). Separate article here with \I^sous\. In Tit 2:13; 2Pe 1:1 only one article (not two) treating "our God and Saviour Jesus Christ" as one just like "our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" in 2Pe 1:11; 2:20; 3:18. {Direct our way} (\kateuthunai t^n hodon h^m“n\). First aorist optative (acute accent on penult, not circumflex first aorist active infinitive) of \kateuthun“\, old verb to make straight path. Singular verb also, though both God and Christ mentioned as subject (unity in the Godhead). Apart from \m^genoito\ (may it not come to pass) the optative in a wish of the third person is found in N.T. only in 1Th 3:11,12; 5:23; 2Th 2:17; 3:5,16; Ro 15:5,13.

3:12 {The Lord} (\ho Kurios\). The Lord Jesus. Paul prays to Christ. {Make you to increase} (\humas pleonasai\). First aorist active optative (wish for future) of \pleonaz“\, late verb from \pleon\ (more), {to superabound}. {And abound} (\perisseusai\). First aorist active optative (wish for future) of \perisseu“\ from \perissos\, old verb, to be over (common in N.T.). It is hard to see much difference between the two verbs.

3:13 {To the end he may stablish} (\eis to st^rixai\). Another example of \eis\ and the articular infinitive of purpose. Same idiom in 3:2. From \st^riz“\, from \st^rigx\, a support. {Unblameable} (\amemptous\). Old compound adjective (\a\ privative and verbal of \memphomai\, to blame). Rare in N.T. Predicate position here. Second coming of Christ again.

4:1 {Finally} (\loipon\). Accusative of general reference of \loipos\, as for the rest. It does not mean actual conclusion, but merely a colloquial expression pointing towards the end (Milligan) as in 2Co 13:11; 2Ti 4:8. So \to loipon\ in 2Th 3:1; Php 3:1; 4:8. {We beseech} (\er“t“men\). Not "question" as in ancient Greek, but as often in N.T. (1Th 5:12; 2Th 2:1; Php 4:3) and also in papyri to make urgent request of one. {How ye ought} (\to p“s dei humfs\). Literally, explanatory articular indirect question (\to p“s\) after \parelab^te\ according to common classic idiom in Luke (Lu 1:62; 22:2,4,23,24) and Paul (Ro 8:26). {That ye abound} (\hina perisseu^te\). Loose construction of the \hina\ clause with present subjunctive after two subordinate clauses with \kath“s\ (as, even as) to be connected with "beseech and exhort." {More and more} (\mallon\). Simply {more}, but added to same idea in \perisseu^te\. See also verse 11.

4:2 {What charge} (\tinas paraggelias\). Plural, charges or precepts, command (Ac 16:24), prohibition (Ac 5:28), right living (1Ti 1:5). Military term in Xenophon and Polybius.

4:3 {Your sanctification} (\ho hagiasmos hum“n\). Found only in the Greek Bible and ecclesiastical writers from \hagiaz“\ and both to take the place of the old words \hagiz“, hagismos\ with their technical ideas of consecration to a god or goddess that did not include holiness in life. So Paul makes a sharp and pointed stand here for the Christian idea of sanctification as being "the will of God" (apposition) and as further explained by the epexegetic infinitive {that ye abstain from fornication} (\apechesthai humas apo t^s porneias\). Pagan religion did not demand sexual purity of its devotees, the gods and goddesses being grossly immoral. Priestesses were in the temples for the service of the men who came.

4:4 {That each one of you know how} (\eidenai hekaston hum“n\). Further epexegetic infinitive (second perfect active), learn how and so know how (learn the habit of purity). {To possess himself of his own vessel} (\to heautou skeuos ktasthai\). Present middle infinitive of \ktaomai\, to acquire, not \kekt^sthai\, to possess. But what does Paul mean by "his own vessel"? It can only mean his own body or his own wife. Objections are raised against either view, but perhaps he means that the man shall acquire his own wife "in sanctification and honour," words that elevate the wife and make it plain that Paul demands sexual purity on the part of men (married as well as unmarried). There is no double standard here. When the husband comes to the marriage bed, he should come as a chaste man to a chaste wife.

4:5 {Not in the passion of lust} (\m^en pathei epithumias\).

Plain picture of the wrong way for the husband to come to marriage. {That know not God} (\ta m^eidota ton theon\). Second perfect participle of \oida\. The heathen knew gods as licentious as they are themselves, but not God. One of the reasons for the revival of paganism in modern life is professedly this very thing that men wish to get rid of the inhibitions against licentiousness by God.

4:6 {That no man transgress} (\to m^huperbainein\). Old verb to go beyond. Final use of \to\ (accusative of general reference) and the infinitive (negative \m^), parallel to \apechesthai\ and \eidenai ktasthai\ above. {And wrong his brother} (\kai pleonektein ton adelphon autou\). To take more, to overreach, to take advantage of, to defraud. {In the matter} (\en t^i pragmati\). The delicacy of Paul makes him refrain from plainer terms and the context makes it clear enough as in 2Co 7:11 (\t^i pragmati\). {An avenger} (\ekdikos\). Regular term in the papyri for legal avenger. Modern men and women need to remember that God is the avenger for sexual wrongs both in this life and the next.

4:7 {Not for uncleanness, but in sanctification} (\epi akatharsifi all' en hagiasm^i\). Sharp contrast made still sharper by the two prepositions \epi\ (on the basis of) and \en\ (in the sphere of). God has "called" us all for a decent sex life consonant with his aims and purposes. It was necessary for Paul to place this lofty ideal before the Thessalonian Christians living in a pagan world. It is equally important now.

4:8 {Therefore} (\toigaroun\). This old triple compound particle (\toi, gar, oun\) is in the N.T. only here and Heb 12:1. Paul applies the logic of the case. {He that rejecteth} (\ho athet^n\). This late verb (Polybius and LXX) is from \a-thetos\

(\a\ privative and verbal of \tith^mi\, to proscribe a thing, to annul it.) {But God} (\alla ton theon\). Paul sees this clearly and modern atheists see it also. In order to justify their licentiousness they do not hesitate to set aside God.

4:9 {Concerning love of the brethren} (\peri t^s philadelphias\). Late word, love of brothers or sisters. In profane Greek (one papyrus example) and LXX the word means love of those actually kin by blood, but in the N.T. it is the kinship in the love of Christ as here. {Are taught by God} (\theodidaktoi este\). Only here and ecclesiastical writers. Passive verbal adjective in \-tos\ from \didask^ as if \theo-\ in ablative case like \didaktoi theou\ (Joh 6:45). {To love one another} (\eis to agapfin all^lous\). Another example of \eis to\ and the infinitive. Only those taught of God keep on loving one another, love neighbours and even enemies as Jesus taught (Mt 5:44). Note the use of \agapa^, not \phile^.

4:10 {Ye do it} (\poieite auto\). The \auto\ refers to \to agapfin all^lous\ (to love one another). Delicate praise.

4:11 {That ye study to be quiet} (\philotimeisthai h^suchazein\). First infinitive dependent on \parakaloumen\ (verse 10, we exhort you), the second on \philotimeisthai\ (old verb from \philotimos\, fond of honour, \philos, tim^). The notion of ambition appears in each of the three N.T. examples (1Th 4:11; 2Co 5:9; Ro 5:20), but it is ambition to do good, not evil. The word ambition is Latin (_ambitio_ from _ambo, ire_), to go on both sides to accomplish one's aims and often evil). A preacher devoid of ambition lacks power. There was a restless spirit in Thessalonica because of the misapprehension of the second coming. So Paul urges an ambition to be quiet or calm, to lead a quiet life, including silence (Ac 11:18). {To do your own business} (\prassein ta idia\). Present infinitive like the others, to have the habit of attending to their own affairs (\ta idia\). This restless meddlesomeness here condemned Paul alludes to again in 2Th 3:11 in plainer terms. It is amazing how much wisdom people have about other people's affairs and so little interest in their own. {To work with your own hands} (\ergazesthai tais chersin hum^n\). Instrumental case (\chersin\). Paul gave a new dignity to manual labour by precept and example. There were "pious" idlers in the church in Thessalonica who were promoting trouble. He had commanded them when with them.

4:12 {That ye may walk honestly} (\hina peripat^{te eusch^{mon}}s\). Present subjunctive (linear action). Old adverb from \eusch^m“n\ (\eu, sch^{ma}\, Latin _habitus_, graceful figure), becomingly, decently. In N.T. only here and Ro 13:13. This idea includes honest financial transactions, but a good deal more. People outside the churches have a right to watch the conduct of professing Christians in business, domestic life, social life, politics.

4:13 {We would not have} (\ou thelomen\). We do not wish. {You ignorant} (\humas agnoein\). Old word, not to know (\a\ privative, \gno-, root of gin“sk“\). No advantage in ignorance of itself. {Concerning them that fall asleep} (\peri tⁿ koim^{men}“n\). Present passive (or middle) participle (Aleph B) rather than the perfect passive \kekoim^{men}“n\ of many later MSS. From old \koima“, to put to sleep. Present tense gives idea of repetition, from time to time fall asleep. Greeks and Romans used this figure of sleep for death as Jesus does (Joh 11:11) and N.T. generally (cf. our word _cemetery_). Somehow the Thessalonians had a false notion about the dead in relation to the second coming. {Even as the rest which have no hope} (\kath“s hoi loipoi hoi m^{echontes elpida}\). This picture of the hopelessness of the pagan world about the future life is amply illustrated in ancient writings and particularly by inscriptions on tombs (Milligan). Some few pagans clung to this hope, but most had none.

4:14 {For if we believe} (\ei gar pisteuomen\). Condition of first class, assuming the death and resurrection of Jesus to be true. {In Jesus} (\dia tou I^{sou}\). Literally, through or by means of Jesus. It is amphibolous in position and can be taken either with \tous koim^{thentas}\ (that are fallen asleep in or through Jesus) like \hoi koim^{thentes en Christ}“i\ in 1Co 15:18 and probably correct or with \axei\ (through Jesus with God). {With him} (\sun autⁱ\). Together with Jesus. Jesus is the connecting link (\dia\ for those that sleep (\koim^{thentas}\ first aorist passive, but with middle sense) and their resurrection.

4:15 {By the word of the Lord} (\en logⁱ Kuriou\). We do not know to what word of the Lord Jesus Paul refers, probably Paul meaning only the point in the teaching of Christ rather than a quotation. He may be claiming a direct revelation on this important matter as about the Lord's Supper in 1Co 11:23. Jesus may have spoken on this subject though it has not been preserved to us (cf. Mr 9:1). {Ye that are alive} (\h^{meis} hoi z^{“ntes}\). Paul here includes himself, but this by no means shows that Paul knew that he would be alive at the Parousia of Christ. He was alive, not dead, when he wrote. {Shall in no wise precede} (\ou m^{phthas}“men\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \phthan“\, to come before, to anticipate. This strong negative with \ou m^{phthas}“men\ (double negative) and the subjunctive is the regular idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 929). Hence there was no ground for uneasiness about the dead in Christ.

4:16 {With a shout} (\en keleusmati\). Note this so-called instrumental use of \en\. Old word, here only in N.T., from \keleu“\, to order, command (military command). Christ will come as Conqueror. {With the voice of the archangel} (\en phⁿ“i archaggelou\). Further explanation of \keleusmati\ (command). The only archangel mentioned in N.T. is Michael in Jude 1:9. But note absence of article with both \phⁿ“i\ and \archaggelou\. The reference may be thus indefinite. {With the trump of God} (\en salpiggi theou\). Trumpet. See same figure in 1Co 15:52. {The dead in Christ shall rise first} (\hoi nekroi en Christⁱ anast^{sontai} pr^{“ton}\). {First} here refers plainly to the fact that, so far from the dead in Christ having no share in the Parousia, they will rise before those still alive are changed.

4:17 {Then} (\epeita\). The next step, not the identical time (\tote\), but immediately afterwards. {Together with them} (\hama sun autois\). Note both \hama\ (at the same time) and \sun\ (together with) with the associative instrumental case \autois\ (the risen saints). {Shall be caught up} (\harpag^{sometha}\). Second future passive indicative of \harpaz“\, old verb to seize, to carry off like Latin _rapio_. {To meet the Lord in the air} (\eis apant^{sin} tou Kuriou eis aera\). This special Greek idiom is common in the LXX like the Hebrew, but Polybius has it also and it occurs in the papyri (Moulton, _Proleg_, p. 14, n. 3). This rapture of the saints (both risen and changed) is a glorious climax to Paul's argument of consolation. {And so} (\kai hout^s\). This is the outcome, to be forever with the Lord, whether with a return to earth or with an immediate departure for heaven Paul does not say. To be with Christ is the chief hope of Paul's life (1Th 5:10; Php 1:23; Col 3:4; 2Co 5:8).

4:18 {With these words} (\en tois logois toutois\). In these words. They were a comfort to the Thessalonians as they still comfort the people of God.

5:1 {But concerning the times and the seasons} (\peri de tⁿ chronⁿ kai tⁿ kairⁿ\). See both words used also in Tit 1:2f. \Chronos\ is rather an extended period and \kairos\ a definite space of time.

5:2 {Know perfectly} (\akrib^s oidate\). Accurately know, not "the times and the seasons," but their own ignorance. {As a thief in the night} (\h^s klept^s en nukti\). As a thief at night, suddenly and unexpectedly. Reminiscence of the word of Jesus (Mt 24:43; Lu 12:39), used also in 2Pe 3:10; Re 3:3; 16:15. {Cometh} (\erchetai\). Prophetic or futuristic present tense.

5:3 {When they are saying} (\hotan leg^{sin}\). Present active subjunctive picturing these false prophets of {peace and safety} like Eze 13:10 (Peace, and there is no peace). \Asphaleia\ only in N.T. in Lu 1:4 (which see); Ac 5:23 and here. {Sudden destruction} (\aiphnidios olethros\). \Olethros\ old word from \ollumi\, to destroy. See also 2Th 1:9. \Aiphnidios\, old adjective akin to \aphnⁿ\ and in N.T. only here and Lu 21:34 where Westcott and Hort spell it \ephnidios\. {Cometh upon them} (\autois epistatai\). Unaspirated form instead of the usual \ephistatai\ (present middle indicative) from \ephist^{mi}\ perhaps due to confusion with \epistamai\. {As travail upon a woman with child} (\h^s sper hⁿ din tⁱ en gastri echousⁱ\). Earlier form \dis\ for birth-pang used also by Jesus (Mr 13:8; Mt 24:8). Technical phrase for pregnancy, {to the one who has it in belly} (cf. Mt 1:18 of Mary). {They shall in no wise escape} (\ou mⁿ ekphug^{sin}\). Strong negative like that in 4:15 \ou mⁿ\ (double negative) and the second aorist active subjunctive.

5:4 {As a thief} (\h^s klept^s\). As in verse 2, but A B Bohairic have \kleptas\ (thieves), turning the metaphor round.

5:5 {Sons of light} (\huioi ph^{tos}\), {sons of day} (\huioi h^{meras}\). Chiefly a translation Hebraism (Deissmann, Bible Studies, pp. 161ff.). Cf. words of Jesus in Lu 16:8 and Paul in Eph 5:9. He repeats the same idea in turning from "ye" to "we" and using \nuktos\ (night) and \skotous\ (darkness), predicate genitives.

5:6 {So then} (\ara oun). Two inferential particles, accordingly therefore, as in 2Th 2:15 and only in Paul in N.T. {Let us not sleep} (\m^katheud^men). Present active subjunctive (volitive), let us not go on sleeping. {Let us watch} (\gr^gor^men). Present active subj. (volitive) again, let us keep awake (late verb \gr^gore^ from perfect \egr^gora). {Be sober} (\n^ph^men). Present active subjunctive (volitive). Old verb not to be drunk. In N.T. only in figurative sense, to be calm, sober-minded. Also in verse 8 with the metaphor of drunkenness in contrast.

5:7 {They that be drunken are drunken in the night} (\hoi methuskomenoi nuktos methuousin). No need of "be" here, they that are drunken. No real difference in meaning between \methusk^ and \methu^, to be drunk, except that \methusk^ (inceptive verb in -sk^) means to get drunk. {Night} (\nuktos, genitive by night) is the favourite time for drunken revelries.

5:8 {Putting on the breastplate of faith and love} (\endusamenoi th^raka piste^s kai agap^s). First aorist (ingressive) middle participle of \endu^. The same figure of breastplate in Eph 6:14, only there "of righteousness." The idea of watchfulness brings the figure of a sentry on guard and armed to Paul's mind as in Ro 13:12 "the weapons of light." The word \th^rax (breastplate) is common in the LXX. {For a helmet, the hope of salvation} (\perikephalaian elpida s^t^rias). Same figure in Eph 6:17 and both like Isa 59:17. Late word meaning around (\peri) the head (\kephal^) and in Polybius, LXX, and in the papyri. \S^t^rias is objective genitive.

5:9 {But unto the obtaining of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ} (\alla eis peripoi^sin s^t^rias dia tou Kuriou h^m^n I^sou Christou). The difficult word here is \peripoi^sin which may be passive, God's possession as in 1Pe 2:9, or active, obtaining, as in 2Th 2:14. The latter is probably the idea here. We are to keep awake so as to fulfil God's purpose (\etheto, appointed, second aorist middle indicative of \tith^mi) in calling us. That is our hope of final victory (salvation in this sense).

5:10 {For us} (\peri h^m^n). {Around us}. So Westcott and Hort, but \huper (over, in behalf of) as in many MSS. These prepositions often interchanged in N.T. MSS. {Whether we wake or sleep} (\eite gr^gor“men eite katheud“men). Alternative condition of third class with present subjunctive, though \eante--eante more usual conjunction (Robertson, _Grammar_, P. 1017). Used here of life and death, not as metaphor. {That we should live together with him} (\hina hama sun aut“i z^s“men). First aorist active subjunctive constative aorist covering all life (now and hereafter) together with (\hama sun\ as in 5:17) Jesus.

5:11 {Build each other up} (\oikodomeite heis ton hena). Literally, build ye, one the one (\heis\ nominative in partitive apposition with unexpressed \humeis\ subject of \oikodomeite.) Then \ton hena the accusative in partitive apposition with the unexpressed \heautous or \all^lous. See the same idiom in 1Co 4:6 {one in behalf of the one}, \heis huper tou henos. Build is a favourite Pauline metaphor.

5:12 {Them that labour among you} (\tous kopi“ntas en humin). Old word for toil even if weary. {And are over you in the Lord} (\kai proistamenous hum“n en Kuri“i). Same article with this participle. Literally, those who stand in front of you, your leaders in the Lord, the presbyters or bishops and deacons. Get acquainted with them and follow them. {And admonish you} (\kai nouthetountas humas). Old verb from \nouthet^s and this from \nous (mind) and \tith^mi, to put. Putting sense into the heads of people. A thankless, but a necessary, task. The same article connects all three participles, different functions of the same leaders in the church.

5:13 {And to esteem them} (\kai h^geisthai). Get acquainted with them and esteem the leaders. The idlers in Thessalonica had evidently refused to follow their leaders in church activities. We need wise leadership today, but still more wise following. An army of captains and colonels never won a battle.

5:14 {Admonish the disorderly} (\noutheteite tous ataktous). Put sense into the unruly mob who break ranks (\a\ privative and \taktos\, verbal adjective of \tass“\, to keep military order). Recall the idlers from the market-place used against Paul (Ac 17:5). This is a challenging task for any leader. {Encourage the fainthearted} (\paramutheisthe tous oligopsuchous). Old verb to encourage or console as in Joh 11:31, though not so common in N.T. as \parakale“, the compound adjective (\oligos\, little or small, \psuch^, soul), small-souled, little-souled, late word in

LXX. The verb \oligopsuche“\ occurs in the papyri. Local conditions often cause some to lose heart and wish to drop out, be quitters. These must be held in line. {Support the weak} (antechesthe t“n asthen“n\). Middle voice with genitive of \antech“, old verb, in N.T. only in middle, to cling to, to hold on to (with genitive). The weak are those tempted to sin (immorality, for instance). {Be long-suffering toward all} (makrothumeite pros pantas\). These disorderly elements try the patience of the leaders. Hold out with them. What a wonderful ideal Paul here holds up for church leaders!

5:15 {See to it that no one render unto any one evil for evil} (horate m^tis kakon anti kakou apod“i\). Note \m^ with the aorist subjunctive (negative purpose) \apod“i\ from \apodid“mi\, to give back. Retaliation, condemned by Jesus (Mt 5:38-42) and by Paul in Ro 12:17, usually takes the form of "evil for evil," rather than "good for good" (kalon anti kalou\). Note idea of exchange in \anti\. {Follow after} (di“kete\). Keep up the chase (di“k“\) after the good.

5:18 {In everything give thanks} (en panti eucharisteite\). There is a silver lining to every cloud. God is with us whatever befalls us. It is God's will that we find joy in prayer in Christ Jesus in every condition of life.

5:19 {Quench not the spirit} (to pneuma m^ sbennute\). \M^ with the present imperative means to stop doing it or not to have the habit of doing it. It is a bold figure. Some of them were trying to put out the fire of the Holy Spirit, probably the special gifts of the Holy Spirit as verse 20 means. But even so the exercise of these special gifts (1Co 12-14; 2Co 12:2-4; Ro 12:6-9) was to be decently (eusch^mon“s\, 1Th 4:12) and in order (kata taxin\, 1Co 14:40) and for edification (pros oikodom^n\, 1Co 14:26). Today, as then, there are two extremes about spiritual gifts (cold indifference or wild excess). It is not hard to put out the fire of spiritual fervor and power.

5:20 {Despise not prophesyings} (proph^teias m^ exoutheneite\). Same construction, stop counting as nothing (exouthene“\, outhen=ouden\), late form in LXX. Plutarch has \exoudeniz“. Plural form \proph^teias\ (accusative). Word means {forth-telling} (pro-ph^mi\) rather than {fore-telling} and is the chief of the spiritual gifts (1Co 14) and evidently depreciated in Thessalonica as in Corinth later.

5:21 {Prove all things} (\panta [de] dokimazete\). Probably \de\ (but) is genuine. Even the gift of prophecy has to be tested (1Co 12:10; 14:29) to avoid error. Paul shows fine balance here. {Hold fast that which is good} (\to kalon katechete\). Keep on holding down the beautiful (noble, morally beautiful). Present imperative \kat-ech“\ (perfective use of \kata-\ here).

5:22 {Abstain from every form of evil} (\apo pantos eidous pon^rou apechesthe\). Present middle (direct) imperative of \ap-ech“\ (contrast with \kat-ech“) and preposition \apo\ repeated with ablative as in 1Th 4:3. Note use of \pon^rou\ here for evil without the article, common enough idiom. \Eidos\ (from \eidon) naturally means look or appearance as in Lu 3:23; 9:29; Joh 5:37; 2Co 5:7. But, if so taken, it is not semblance as opposed to reality (Milligan). The papyri give several examples of \eidos\ in the sense of class or kind and that idea suits best here. Evil had a way of showing itself even in the spiritual gifts including prophecy.

5:23 {The God of peace} (\ho theos t^s eir^ni^s\). The God characterized by peace in his nature, who gladly bestows it also. Common phrase (Milligan) at close of Paul's Epistles (2Co 13:11; Ro 15:33; 16:20; Php 4:9) and {the Lord of peace} in 2Th 3:6. {Sanctify you} (\hagiasai humfs\). First aorist active optative in a wish for the future. New verb in LXX and N.T. for the old \hagiz“\, to render or to declare holy (\hagios\), to consecrate, to separate from things profane. {Wholly} (\holoteleis\). Predicate adjective in plural (\holos\, whole, \telos\, end), not adverb \holotel“s\). Late word in Plutarch, Hexapla, and in inscription A.D. 67 (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). Here alone in N.T. Here it means the whole of each of you, every part of each of you, "through and through" (Luther), qualitatively rather than quantitatively. {Your spirit and soul and body} (\hum“n to pneuma kai h^ psuch^ kai to s“ma\). Not necessarily trichotomy as opposed to dichotomy as elsewhere in Paul's Epistles. Both believers and unbelievers have an inner man (soul \psuch^, mind \nous, heart \kardia, the inward man \ho es“anthr“pos\)) and the outer man (\s“ma, ho ex“anthr“pos\). But the believer has the Holy Spirit of God, the renewed spirit of man (1Co 2:11; Ro 8:9-11). {Be preserved entire} (\holokl^ron t^r^thei^). First aorist passive optative in wish for the future. Note singular verb and singular adjective (neuter) showing that Paul conceives of the man as "an undivided whole"

(Frame), prayer for the consecration of both body and soul (cf. 1Co 6). The adjective \holokl^{ron}\ is in predicate and is an old form and means complete in all its parts (\holos\, whole, \kl^{ros}\, lot or part). There is to be no deficiency in any part. \Teleios\ (from \telos\, end) means final perfection. {Without blame} (\amempt^s\). Old adverb (\a\ privative, \memptos\, verbal of \memphomai\, to blame) only in I Thess. in N.T. (2:10; 3:13; 5:23). Milligan notes it in certain sepulchral inscriptions discovered in Thessalonica. {At the coming} (\en tⁱ parousifi\). The Second Coming which was a sustaining hope to Paul as it should be to us and mentioned often in this Epistle (see on 2:19).

5:24 {Faithful} (\pistos\). God, he means, who calls and will carry through (Php 1:6).

5:25 {Pray for us} (\proseuchesthe [kai] peri h^mⁿ\). He has made his prayer for them. He adds this "human touch" (Frame) and pleads for the prayers of his converts (2Th 3:1; Col 4:2f.). Probably \kai\ also is genuine (B D).

5:26 {With a holy kiss} (\en phil^{mati} hagiⁱ\). With a kiss that is holy (Milligan) a token of friendship and brotherly love (1Co 16:20; 2Co 13:12; Ro 16:16). In 1Pe 5:14 it is "with a kiss of love." This was the customary salutation for rabbis.

5:27 {I adjure you by the Lord} (\enorkiz^{humas ton Kurion}\). Late compound for old \horkiz^a\ (Mr 5:7), to put one on oath, with two accusatives (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 483f.). Occurs in inscriptions. {That this epistle be read unto all the brethren} (\anagn^{sth^{nai} tⁿ epistolⁿ pasin tois adelphois}\). First aorist passive infinitive of \anagin^{sk}\ with accusative of general reference in an indirect command. Clearly Paul wrote for the church as a whole and wished the epistles read aloud at a public meeting. In this first epistle we see the importance that he attaches to his epistles.

5:28 {The grace} (\h^{charis}\). Paul prefers this noble word to the customary \err^sthe\ (Farewell, Be strong). See 2Th 3:18 for identical close save added \pantⁿ\ (all). A bit shorter form in 1Co 16:23; Ro 16:20 and still shorter in Col 4:18; 1Ti 6:21; Tit 3:15; 2Ti 4:22. The full Trinitarian benediction we find in 2Co 13:13.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {Paul, etc.} (\Paulos, etc.\). This address or superscription is identical with that in 1Th 1:1 save that our (\h^m^"n\) is added after {Father} (\patri\).

1:2 {From God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ} (\apo theou patros kai Kuriou I'sou Christou\). These words are not genuine in 1Th 1:1, but are here and they appear in all the other Pauline Epistles. Note absence of article both after \en\ and \apo\, though both God and Lord Jesus Christ are definite. In both cases Jesus Christ is put on a par with God, though not identical. See on 1Th 1:1 for discussion of words, but note difference between \en\, in the sphere of, by the power of, and \apo\, from, as the fountain head and source of grace and peace.

1:3 {We are bound} (\opheilomen\). Paul feels a sense of obligation to keep on giving thanks to God (\eucharistein t^i the^i, present infinitive with dative case) because of God's continued blessings on the Thessalonians. He uses the same idiom again in 2:13 and nowhere else in his thanksgivings. It is not necessity (\dei\) that Paul here notes, but a sense of personal obligation as in 1Jo 2:6 (Milligan). {Even as it is meet} (\kath^s axion estin\). \Opheilomen\ points to the divine, \axion\ to the human side of the obligation (Lightfoot), perhaps to cheer the fainthearted in a possible letter to him in reply to Paul's First Thessalonian epistle (Milligan). This adjective \axios\ is from \ag^\", to drag down the scales, and so weighty, worthy, worthwhile, old word and appropriate here. {For that your faith groweth exceedingly} (\hoti huperauxanei h^ pistis hum^"n\). Causal use of \hoti\ referring to the obligation stated in \opheilomen\. The verb \huperauxan^\" is one of Paul's frequent compounds in \huper\ (\hyper-bain^\", 1Th 4:6; \hyper-ek-tein^\", 2Co 10:14; \hyper-en-tugchan^\", Ro 8:26; \hyper-nika^\", Ro 8:37; \hyper-pleonaz^\", 1Ti 1:14) and occurs only here in N.T. and rare elsewhere (Galen, Dio Cass.). Figure of the tree of faith growing above (\hyper\) measure. Cf. parable of Jesus about faith-like a grain of mustard seed (Mt 13:31f.). {Aboundeth} (\pleonazei\). Same verb in 1Th 3:12, here a fulfilment of the prayer made there. Milligan finds _diffusive_ growth of love in this word because of "each one" (\henos hekastou). Frame finds in this fulfilment of the prayer of 1Th 3:12 one proof that II Thessalonians is later than I Thessalonians.

1:4 {So that} (\h“ste). Another example of \h“ste and the infinitive (\enkauchfsthai) for result as in 1Th 1:7 which see. {We ourselves} (\autous h^mas). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive, but not merely \h^mfs (or heautous), perhaps in contrast with \en humin (in you), as much as to say, "so that we ourselves, contrary to your expectations, are boasting" (Frame). \Enkauchaomai occurs here alone in N.T., but is found in the LXX and in _Aesop's Fables_, proof enough of its vernacular use. Paul was not above praising one church to other churches, to provoke them to good works. Here he is boasting of Thessalonica in Macedonia to the Corinthians as he did later to the Corinthians about the collection (2Co 8:1-15) after having first boasted to the Macedonians about the Corinthians (2Co 9:1-5). There were other churches in Achaia besides Corinth (2Co 1:1). {For} (\huper). Over, about, like \peri (1Th 1:2). {In all your persecutions} (\en pasin tois di“gmois hum“n). Their patience and faith had already attracted Paul's attention (1Th 1:3) and their tribulations \thlipsesin (1Th 1:6). Here Paul adds the more specific term \di“gmos, old word from \di“k“, to chase, to pursue, a word used by Paul of his treatment in Corinth (2Co 12:10). {Which ye endure} (\hais anechesthe). B here reads \enechesthe, to be entangled in, to be held in as in Ga 5:1, but \anechesthe is probably correct and the \hais is probably attracted to locative case of \thlipsesin from the ablative \h“n after \anechesthe, {from which ye hold yourselves back} (cf. Col 3:13).

1:5 {A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God} (\endeigma t^s dikaias krise“s tou theou). Old word from \endeiknumi, to point out, result reached (\-ma), a thing proved. It is either in the accusative of general reference in apposition with the preceding clause as in Ro 8:3; 12:1, or in the nominative absolute when \ho estin, if supplied, would explain it as in Php 1:28. This righteous judgment is future and final (verses 6-10). {To the end that you may be counted worthy} (\eis to kataxi“th^nai humas). Another example of \eis to for purpose with first aorist passive infinitive from \kataxio“, old verb, with accusative of general reference \humas and followed by the genitive \t^s basileias (kingdom of God). See 1Th 2:12 for {kingdom of God}. {For which ye also suffer} (hyper h^s kai paschete). Ye {also} as well as we and the present tense means that it is still going on.

1:6 {If so be that it is a righteous thing with God} (eiper dikaion para the“i”). Condition of first class, determined as fulfilled, assumed as true, but with eiper (if on the whole, provided that) as in Ro 8:9,17, and with no copula expressed. A righteous thing "with God" means by the side of God (para the“i”) and so from God's standpoint. This is as near to the idea of absolute right as it is possible to attain. Note the phrase in verse 5. {To recompense affliction to them that afflict you} (antapodounai tois thlibousin h^mfs thlipsin). Second aorist active infinitive of double compound ant-apodid“mi”, old verb, either in good sense as in 1Th 3:9 or in bad sense as here. Paul is certain of this principle, though he puts it conditionally.

1:7 {Rest with us} (anesin meth' h^m“n). Let up, release. Old word from ani“mi”, from troubles here (2Co 2:13; 7:5; 8:13), and hereafter as in this verse. Vivid word. They shared suffering with Paul (verse 5) and so they will share (meth') the {rest}. {At the revelation of the Lord Jesus} (en tⁱ apokalupsei tou Kuriou I^{sou}). Here the Parousia (1Th 2:19; 3:13; 5:23) is pictured as a {Revelation} (Un-veiling, apo-kalupsis) of the Messiah as in 1Co 1:7, 1Pe 1:7,13 (cf. Lu 17:30). At this Unveiling of the Messiah there will come the {recompense} (verse 6) to the persecutors and the {rest} from the persecutions. This Revelation will be {from heaven} (ap' ouranou) as to place and {with the angels of his power} (met' aggelⁿ duname^s autou) as the retinue and {in flaming fire} (en puri phlogos, in a fire of flame, fire characterized by flame). In Ac 7:30 the text is {flame of fire} where puros is genitive (like Isa 66:15) rather than phlogos as here (Ex 3:2).

1:8 {Rendering} (didontos). Genitive of present active participle of did“mi”, to give, agreeing with I^{sou}. {Vengeance} (ekdikⁿsin). Late word from ekdike“\, to vindicate, in Polybius and LXX. {To them that know not God} (tois m^e eidosin theon). Dative plural of perfect active participle eid“s”. Apparently chiefly Gentiles in mind (1Th 4:3; Ga 4:8; Ro 1:28; Eph 2:12), though Jews are also guilty of wilful ignorance of God (Ro 2:14). {And to them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus} (\kai tois m^ hupakouousin t^i euaggeli^i tou kuriou h^m^ n I^sou\). Repetition of the article looks like another class and so Jews (Ro 10:16). Both Jews as instigators and Gentiles as officials (\politarchs\) were involved in the persecution in Thessalonica (Ac 17:5-9; 2Th 1:6). Note the use of "gospel" here as in Mr 1:15 "believe in the gospel."

1:9 {Who} (\hoitines\). Qualitative use, such as. Vanishing in papyri though surviving in Paul (1Co 3:17; Ro 1:25; Ga 4:26; Php 4:3). {Shall suffer punishment} (\dik^ n tisousin\). Future active of old verb \tin^, to pay penalty (\dik^ n, right, justice), here only in N.T., but \apotin^ once also to repay Phm 1:19. In the papyri \dik^ is used for a case or process in law. This is the regular phrase in classic writers for paying the penalty. {Eternal destruction} (\olethron ai^ nion\). Accusative case in apposition with \dik^ n\ (penalty). This phrase does not appear elsewhere in the N.T., but is in IV Macc. 10:15 \ton ai^ nion tou turannou olethron\ the eternal destruction of the tyrant (Antiochus Epiphanes). Destruction (cf. 1Th 5:3) does not mean here annihilation, but, as Paul proceeds to show, separation {from the face of the Lord} (\apo pros^ pou tou kuriou\ and from the {glory of his might} (\kai apo t^s dox^s t^s ischuos autou\), an eternity of woe such as befell Antiochus Epiphanes. \Ai^ nios\ in itself only means age-long and papyri and inscriptions give it in the weakened sense of a Caesar's life (Milligan), but Paul means by age-long {the coming age} in contrast with {this age}, as {eternal} as the New Testament knows how to make it. See on ^Mt 25:46 for use of \ai^ nios\ both with \z^ n\, life, and \kolasin\, punishment.

1:10 {When he shall come} (\hotan elth^ i\). Second aorist active subjunctive with \hotan\, future and indefinite temporal clause (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 971ff.) coincident with \en t^i apokalupsei\ in verse 7. {To be glorified} (\endoxasth^ nai\). First aorist passive infinitive (purpose) of \endoxaz^, late verb, in N.T. only here and verse 12, in LXX and papyri. {In his saints} (\en tois hagiois autou\). The sphere in which Christ will find his glory at the Revelation. {And to be marvelled at} (\kai thaumasth^ nai\). First aorist passive infinitive (purpose), common verb \thaumaz^\. {That believed} (\tois pisteusasini\). Why aorist active participle instead of present active \pisteuousin\ (that believe)? Frame thinks that Paul thus reassures those who believed his message when there (1Th 1:6ff.; 2:13f.). The parenthetical clause, though difficult, falls in with this idea: {Because our testimony unto you was believed} (\hoti episteuth^ to marturion h^m^'n eph' humas). Moffatt calls it an anti-climax. {On that day} (\en t^i h^merfi ekein^i). The day of Christ's coming (2Ti 1:12,18; 4:8).

1:11 {To which end} (\eis ho). So Col 1:29. Probably purpose with reference to the contents of verses 5-10. We have had the Thanksgiving (verses 3-10) in a long, complicated, but rich period or sentence. Now he makes a brief Prayer (verses 11-12) that God will fulfil all their hopes and endeavours. Paul and his colleagues can still pray for them though no longer with them (Moffatt). {That} (\hina). Common after \proseuchomai (Col 4:3; Eph 1:17; Php 1:9) when the content of the prayer blends with the purpose (purport and purpose). {Count you worthy} (\humas axi^'s^i). Causative verb (aorist active subjunctive) like \kataxio^' in verse 5 with genitive. {Of your calling} (\t^s kl^se^'s). \Kl^sis can apply to the beginning as in 1Co 1:26; Ro 11:29, but it can also apply to the final issue as in Php 3:14; Heb 3:1. Both ideas may be here. It is God's calling of the Thessalonians. {And fulfil every desire of goodness} (\kai pl^r^'s^i pasan eudokian agath^sun^s). "Whom he counts worthy he first makes worthy" (Lillie). Yes, in purpose, but the wonder and the glory of it all is that God begins to count us worthy in Christ before the process is completed in Christ (Ro 8:29f.). But God will see it through and so Paul prays to God. \Eudokia (cf. Lu 2:14) is more than mere desire, rather good pleasure, God's purpose of goodness, not in ancient Greek, only in LXX and N.T. \Agath^sun^' like a dozen other words in \-sun^' occurs only in late Greek. This word occurs only in LXX, N.T., writings based on them. It is made from \agathos, good, akin to \agamai, to admire. May the Thessalonians find delight in goodness, a worthy and pertinent prayer. {Work of faith} (\ergon piste^'s). The same phrase in 1Th 1:3. Paul prays for rich fruition of what he had seen in the beginning. Work marked by faith, springs from faith, sustained by faith. {With power} (\en dunamei). In power. Connect with \pl^r^'s^i (fulfil), God's power (Ro 1:29; Col 1:4) in Christ (1Co 1:24) through the Holy Spirit (1Th 1:5).

1:12 {That} (\hop^'s). Rare with Paul compared with \hina (1Co 1:29; 2Co 8:14). Perhaps here for variety (dependent on \hina\ clause in verse 11). {The name} (\to onoma). The Old Testament

(LXX) uses \onoma\ embodying the revealed character of Jehovah. So here the {Name} of our Lord Jesus means the Messiahship and Lordship of Jesus. The common Greek idiom of \onoma\ for title or dignity as in the papyri (Milligan) is not quite this idiom. The papyri also give examples of \onoma\ for person as in O.T. and Ac 1:15 (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 196ff.). {In you, and ye in him} (\en humin, kai humeis en aut“i\). This reciprocal glorying is Pauline, but it is also like Christ's figure of the vine and the branches in Joh 15:1-11. {According to the grace} (\kata t^n charin\). Not merely standard, but also aim (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 609). {Of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ} (\tou theou h^m“n kai kuriou I^sou Christou\). Here strict syntax requires, since there is only one article with \theou\ and \kuriou\ that one person be meant, Jesus Christ, as is certainly true in Tit 2:13; 2Pe 1:1 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p.786). This otherwise conclusive syntactical argument, admitted by Schmiedel, is weakened a bit by the fact that \Kurios\ is often employed as a proper name without the article, a thing not true of \s“t^r\ in Tit 2:13; 2Pe 1:1. So in Eph 5:5 \en t^i basilei^{fi} tou Christou kai theou\ the natural meaning is {in the Kingdom of Christ and God} regarded as one, but here again \theos\, like \Kurios\, often occurs as a proper name without the article. So it has to be admitted that here Paul may mean "according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ," though he may also mean "according to the grace of our God and Lord, Jesus Christ."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {Touching the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\huper t's parousias tou Kuriou (h^m^"n) I'sou Christou). For \er^t^"men, to beseech, see on 1Th 4:1; 4:12. \Huper originally meant over, in behalf of, instead of, but here it is used like \peri, around, concerning as in 1:4; 1Th 3:2; 5:10, common in the papyri (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 632). For the distinction between \Parousia, Epiphaneia (Epiphany), and \Apokalupsis (Revelation) as applied to the Second Coming of Christ see Milligan on _Thessalonian Epistles_, pp. 145-151, in the light of the papyri. \Parousia lays emphasis on the {presence} of the Lord with his people, \epiphaneia on his {manifestation} of the power and love of God, \apokalupsis on the {revelation} of God's purpose and plan in the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus. {And our gathering together unto him} (\kai h^m^"n episunag^g^s ep' auton). A late word found only in II Macc. 2:7; 2Th 2:1; Heb 10:25 till Deissmann (_Light from the Ancient East_, p. 103) found it on a stele in the island of Syme, off Caria, meaning "collection." Paul is referring to the rapture, mentioned in 1Th 4:15-17, and the being forever with the Lord thereafter. Cf. also Mt 24:31; Mr 13:27.

2:2 {To the end that} (\eis to). One of Paul's favourite idioms for purpose, \eis to and the infinitive. {Ye be not quickly shaken} (\m^tache^s saleuth^nai humas). First aorist passive infinitive of \saleu^", old verb to agitate, to cause to totter like a reed (Mt 11:7), the earth (Heb 12:26). Usual negative \m^" and accusative of general reference \humas with the infinitive. {From your mind} (\apo tou noos). Ablative case of nous, mind, reason, sober sense, "from your witte" (Wyclif), to "keep their heads." {Nor yet be troubled} (\m^de throeisthai). Old verb \throe^", to cry aloud (from \throos\, clamour, tumult), to be in a state of nervous excitement (present passive infinitive, as if it were going on), "a continued state of agitation following the definite shock received (\saleuth^nai)" (Milligan). {Either by spirit} (\m^te dia pneumatos). By ecstatic utterance (1Th 5:10). The nervous fear that the coming was to be at once prohibited by \m^de Paul divides into three sources by \m^te, m^te, m^te. No individual claim to divine revelation (the gift of prophecy) can justify the statement. {Or by word} (\m^te dia logou\). Oral statement of a conversation with Paul (Lightfoot) to this effect {as from us}. An easy way to set aside Paul's first Epistle by report of a private remark from Paul. {Or by epistle as from us} (\m^te di' epistol^s h^s di' h^m^"n\). In 1Th 4:13-5:3 Paul had plainly said that Jesus would come as a thief in the night and had shown that the dead would not be left out in the rapture. But evidently some one claimed to have a private epistle from Paul which supported the view that Jesus was coming at once, {as that the day of the Lord is now present} (\h^s hoti enest^ken h^ h^mera tou kuriou\). Perfect active indicative of \enist^mi\, old verb, to place in, but intransitive in this tense to stand in or at or near. So "is imminent" (Lightfoot). The verb is common in the papyri. In 1Co 3:22; Ro 8:38 we have a contrast between \ta enest^ta\, the things present, and \ta mellonta\, the things future (to come). The use of \h^s hoti\ may be disparaging here, though that is not true in 2Co 5:19. In the _Koin_, it comes in the vernacular to mean simply "that" (Moulton, _Proleg_, p. 212), but that hardly seems the case in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1033). Here it means "to wit that," though "as that" or "as if" does not miss it much. Certainly it flatly denies that by conversation or by letter he had stated that the second coming was immediately at hand. "It is this misleading assertion that accounts both for the increased discouragement of the faint-hearted to encourage whom Paul writes 1:3-2:17, and for the increased meddlesomeness of the idle brethren to warn whom Paul writes 3:1-18" (Frame). It is enough to give one pause to note Paul's indignation over this use of his name by one of the over-zealous advocates of the view that Christ was coming at once. It is true that Paul was still alive, but, if such a "pious fraud" was so common and easily condoned as some today argue, it is difficult to explain Paul's evident anger. Moreover, Paul's words should make us hesitate to affirm that Paul definitely proclaimed the early return of Jesus. He hoped for it undoubtedly, but he did not specifically proclaim it as so many today assert and accuse him of misleading the early Christians with a false presentation.

2:3 {Let no man beguile you in any wise} (\m^tis humas exapat^s^i kata m^dena tropon\). First aorist active subjunctive of \exapata^" (old verb to deceive, strengthened form of simple verb \apata^") with double negative (\m^tis, m^dena\) in accord with regular Greek idiom as in 1Co 16:11 rather than the aorist imperative which does occur sometimes in the third person as in Mr 13:15 (m̂ katabat). Paul broadens the warning to go beyond conversation and letter. He includes "tricks" of any kind. It is amazing how gullible some of the saints are when a new deceiver pulls off some stunts in religion. {For it will not be} (hoti). There is an ellipse here of \ouk estai (or gen̂setai) to be supplied after \hoti. Westcott and Hort make an anacoluthon at the end of verse 4. The meaning is clear. \Hoti is causal, because, but the verb is understood. The second coming not only is not "imminent," but will not take place before certain important things take place, a definite rebuff to the false enthusiasts of verse 2. {Except the falling away come first} (ean m̂ eltĥi ĥ apostasia pr̂ton). Negative condition of the third class, undetermined with prospect of determination and the aorist subjunctive. \Apostasia is the late form of \apostasis and is our word apostasy. Plutarch uses it of political revolt and it occurs in I Macc. 2:15 about Antiochus Epiphanes who was enforcing the apostasy from Judaism to Hellenism. In Jos 22:22 it occurs for rebellion against the Lord. It seems clear that the word here means a religious revolt and the use of the definite article (ĥ) seems to mean that Paul had spoken to the Thessalonians about it. The only other New Testament use of the word is in Ac 21:21 where it means apostasy from Moses. It is not clear whether Paul means revolt of the Jews from God, of Gentiles from God, of Christians from God, or of the apostasy that includes all classes within and without the body of Christians. But it is to be {first} (pr̂ton) before Christ comes again. Note this adverb when only two events are compared (cf. Ac 1:1). {And the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition} (kai apokaluptĥi ho anthr̂pos t̂s anomias, ho huios t̂s ap̂leias). First aorist passive subjunctive after ean m̂ and same condition as with \eltĥi. The use of this verb \apokalupt̂, like \apokalupsin of the second coming in 1:7, seems to note the superhuman character (Milligan) of the event and the same verb is repeated in verses 6,8. The implication is that {the man of sin} is hidden somewhere who will be suddenly manifested just as false apostles pose as angels of light (2Co 11:13ff.), whether the crowning event of the apostasy or another name for the same event. Lightfoot notes the parallel between the man of sin, of whom sin is the special characteristic (genitive case, a Hebraism for the lawless one in verse 8) and Christ. Both Christ and the adversary of Christ are revealed, there is mystery about each, both make divine claims (verse 4). He seems to be the Antichrist of 1Jo 2:18. The terrible phrase, the son of perdition, is applied to Judas in Joh 17:12 (like Judas doomed to perdition), but here to the lawless one (\ho anomos, verse 8), who is not Satan, but some one definite person who is doing the work of Satan. Note the definite article each time.

2:4 {He that opposeth and exalteth himself} (\ho antikeimenos kai huperairomenos). Like John's Antichrist this one opposes (\anti-) Christ and exalts himself (direct middle of \huperair, old verb to lift oneself up {above} others, only here and 2Co 12:7 in N.T.), but not Satan, but an agent of Satan. This participial clause is in apposition with the two preceding phrases, the man of sin, the son of perdition. Note 1Co 8:5 about one called God and Ac 17:23 for \sebasma (from \sebazomai), object of worship, late word, in N.T. only in these two passages. {So that he sitteth in the temple of God} (\h“ste auton eis ton naon tou theou kathisai). Another example of the infinitive with \h“ste for result. Caius Caligula had made a desperate attempt to have his statue set up for worship in the Temple in Jerusalem. This incident may lie behind Paul's language here. {Setting himself forth as God} (\apodeiknunta heauton hoti estin theos). Present active participle (\mi\ form) of \apodeiknumi, agreeing in case with \auton, {showing himself that he is God}. Caligula claimed to be God. Moffatt doubts if Paul is identifying this deception with the imperial cultus at this stage. Lightfoot thinks that the deification of the Roman emperor supplied Paul's language here. Wetstein notes a coin of Julius with \theos on one side and \Thessalonike“n on the other. In 1Jo 2:18 we are told of "many antichrists" some of whom had already come. Hence it is not clear that Paul has in mind only one individual or even individuals at all rather than evil principles, for in verse 6 he speaks of \to katechon (that which restraineth) while in verse 7 it is \ho katech“n (the one that restraineth). Frame argues for a combination of Belial and Antichrist as the explanation of Paul's language. But the whole subject is left by Paul in such a vague form that we can hardly hope to clear it up. It is possible that his own preaching while with them gave his readers a clue that we do not possess.

2:5 {When I was yet with you} (\eti “n pros humas). The present participle takes the time of the verb \elegon (imperfect active), {I used to tell you these things}. So Paul recalls their memory of his words and leaves us without the clue to his idea. We know that one of the charges against him was that Jesus was another king, a rival to Caesar (Ac 17:7). That leads one to wonder how far Paul went when there in contrasting the kingdom of the world of which Rome was ruler and the kingdom of God of which Christ is king. Frame notes Paul's abrupt question here "with an unfinished sentence behind him" (verses 3f.), even "with a trace of impatience."

2:6 {That which restraineth} (\to katechon\). {And now you know} (\kai nun oidate\), says Paul in this cryptic apocalyptic passage. Unfortunately we do not know what Paul means by {that which restrains} (holds back, \katechon\), neuter here and masculine in verse 7 \ho katechōn\, "This impersonal principle or power is capable also of manifesting itself under a personal form" (Milligan). "He is Satan's messiah, an infernal caricature of the true Messiah" (Moffatt). Warfield (Expositor, III, iv, pp. 30ff.) suggested that the man of lawlessness is the imperial line with its rage for deification and that the Jewish state was the restraining power. But God overrules all human history and his ultimate purpose is wrought out. {To the end that} (\eis to\). Another example of \eis to\ and the infinitive for purpose. {In his own season} (\en t' i autou kair' i\). Note \autou\ (his), not \heautou\ (his own), {revealed in his time}, in the time set him by God.

2:7 {For the mystery of lawlessness doth already work} (\to gar must' rion d' energeitai t's anomias\). See 1Th 2:13 for \energeitai\, The genitive \t's anomias\ (lawlessness) describes \to must' rion\ (note emphatic position of both). This mystery (\must' rion\ secret, from \must's\, an initiate, \mue' , to wink or blink) means here the secret purpose of lawlessness already at work, the only instance of this usage in the N.T. where it is used of the kingdom of God (Mt 13:11), of God (1Co 2:1) and God's will (Eph 1:9), of Christ (Eph 3:4), of the gospel (Eph 6:9), of faith (1Ti 3:9), of godliness (1Ti 3:16), of the seven stars (Re 1:20), of the woman (Re 17:7). But this secret will be "revealed" and then we shall understand clearly what Paul's meaning is here. {Until he be taken out of the way} (\he' s ek mesou gen' tai\). Usual construction with \he' s\ for the future (aorist middle subjunctive, \gen' tai\). Note absence of \an\ as often in N.T. and the \Koin,\. Paul uses \he' s\ only here and 1Co 4:5. When the obstacle is removed then the mystery of lawlessness will be revealed in plain outline.

2:8 {And then} (\kai tote\). Emphatic note of time, {then} when the restraining one (\ho katechⁿ\) is taken out of the way, then \the lawless one\ (\ho anomos\), the man of sin, the man of perdition, will be revealed. {Whom the Lord [Jesus] shall slay} (\hon ho kurios [I^{sous}] anelei\). Whether Jesus is genuine or not, he is meant by Lord. \Anelei\ is a late future from \anaire^a\, in place of \anair^esei\. Paul uses Isa 11:4 (combining {by the word of his mouth} with {in breath through lips}) to picture the triumph of Christ over this adversary. It is a powerful picture how the mere breath of the Lord will destroy this arch-enemy (Milligan). {And bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming} (\kai katarg^esei tⁱ epiphaneifi t^s parousias autou\). This verb \katarge^a\ (\kata, argos\) to render useless, rare in ancient Greek, appears 25 times in Paul and has a variety of renderings. In the papyri it has a weakened sense of hinder. It will be a grand fiasco, this advent of the man of sin. Paul here uses both \epiphaneia\ (\epiphany\, elsewhere in N.T. in the Pastorals, familiar to the Greek mind for a visit of a god) and \parousia\ (more familiar to the Jewish mind, but common in the papyri) of the second coming of Christ. "The apparition of Jesus heralds his doom" (Moffatt). The mere appearance of Christ destroys the adversary (Vincent).

2:9 {Whose coming is} (\hou estin h^e parousia\). Refers to \hon\ in verse 8. The Antichrist has his \parousia\ also. Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, pp. 374, 378) notes an inscription at Epidaurus in which "Asclepius manifested his \Parousia\." Antiochus Epiphanes is called _the manifest god_ (III Macc. 5:35). So the two Epiphanies coincide. {Lying wonders} (\terasin pseudous\). "In wonders of a lie." Note here the three words for the miracles of Christ (Heb 2:4), power (\dunamis\), signs (\s^emeia\), wonders (\terata\), but all according to the working of Satan (\kata energeian tou Satana\, the energy of Satan) just as Jesus had foretold (Mt 24:24), wonders that would almost lead astray the very elect.

2:10 {With all deceit of unrighteousness} (\en pasⁱ apatⁱ adikias\). This pastmaster of trickery will have at his command all the energy and skill of Satan to mislead and deceive. How many illustrations lie along the pathway of Christian history. {For them that are perishing} (\tois apollumenois\). Dative case of personal interest. Note this very phrase in 2Co 2:15; 4:3.

Present middle participle of \appollumi\, to destroy, the dreadful process goes on. {Because} (\anth' hon\). In return for which things (\anti\ and the genitive of the relative pronoun). Same idiom in Lu 1:20; 12:3; 19:44; Ac 12:23 and very common in the LXX. {The love of the truth} (t^n agap^n t^s al^theias\). That is the gospel in contrast with _lying_ and _deceit_. {That they might be saved} (\eis to s^th^nai autous\). First aorist passive infinitive of \s^z^ with \eis to\, again, epexegetic purpose of {the truth} if they had heeded it.

2:11 {And for this reason God sendeth them} (\kai dia touto pempei autois ho theos\). Futuristic (prophetic) present of the time when the lawless one is revealed. Here is the definite judicial act of God (Milligan) who gives the wicked over to the evil which they have deliberately chosen (Ro 1:24,26,28). {A working of error} (\energeian plan^s\). Terrible result of wilful rejection of the truth of God. {That they should believe a lie} (\eis to pisteusai autous t^i pseudei\). Note \eis to\ again and \t^i pseudei\ (the lie, the falsehood already described), a contemplated result. Note Ro 1:25 "who changed the truth of God into the lie."

2:12 {That they all might be judged} (\hina krith^sin pantes\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \krin^ with \hina\, to sift, to judge, with \hina\, Ultimate purpose, almost result, of the preceding obstinate resistance to the truth and "the judicial infatuation which overtakes them" (Lightfoot), now final punishment. Condemnation is involved in the fatal choice made. These victims of the man of sin did not believe the truth and found pleasure in unrighteousness.

2:13 See 1:3 for same beginning. {Beloved of the Lord} (\gap^menoi hupo kuriou\). Perfect passive participle of \agapa^ with \hupo\ and the ablative as in 1Th 1:4, only here \kuriou\ instead of \theou\, the Lord Jesus rather than God the Father. {Because that God chose you} (\hoti heilato humas ho theos\). First aorist middle indicative of \haire^, to take, old verb, but uncompound only in N.T. here, Php 1:22; Heb 11:25, and here only in sense of {choose}, that being usually \exaireomai\ or \prooriz^\. {From the beginning} (\ap' arch^s\). Probably the correct text (Aleph D L) and not \aparch^n\ (first fruits, B G P), though here alone in Paul's writings and a hard reading, the eternal choice or purpose of God (1Co 2:7; Eph 1:4; 2Ti 1:9), while \aparch^n\ is a favourite idea with Paul (1Co 15:20,23; 16:15; Ro 8:23; 11:16; 16:5). {Unto salvation} (\eis s“t^rian\). The ultimate goal, final salvation. {In sanctification of the Spirit} (\en hagiasm“i pneumatos\). Subjective genitive \pneumatos\, sanctification wrought by the Holy Spirit. {And belief of the truth} (\kai pistei al^theias\). Objective genitive \al^theias\, belief in the truth.

2:14 {Whereunto} (\eis ho\). The goal, that is the final salvation (\s“t^ria\). Through our gospel (\dia tou euaggeliou h^m“n\). God called the Thessalonians through Paul's preaching as he calls men now through the heralds of the Cross as God {chose} (cf. 1Th 2:12; 5:24). {To the obtaining} (\eis peripoi^sin\). Probably correct translation rather than possession. See on 1Th 5:9, there {of salvation}, here {of glory} (the _shekinah_, glory of Jesus).

2:15 {So then} (\ara oun\). Accordingly then. The illative \ara\ is supported (Ellicott) by the collective \oun\ as in 1Th 5:6; Ga 6:10, etc. Here is the practical conclusion from God's elective purpose in such a world crisis. {Stand fast} (\st^kete\). Present imperative active of the late present \st^ko\ from \hest^ka\ (perfect active of \hist^mi\). See on 1Th 3:8. {Hold the traditions} (\krateite tas paradoseis\). Present imperative of \krate“\, old verb, to have masterful grip on a thing, either with genitive (Mr 1:31) or usually the accusative as here. \Paradosis\ (tradition) is an old word for what is handed over to one. Dibelius thinks that Paul reveals his Jewish training in the use of this word (Ga 1:14), but the word is a perfectly legitimate one for teaching whether oral, {by word} (\dia logou\), or written, {by epistle of ours} (\di' epistol's h^m“n\). Paul draws here no distinction between oral tradition and written tradition as was done later. The worth of the tradition lies not in the form but in the source and the quality of the content. Paul in 1Co 11:23 says: "I received from the Lord what I also handed over (\pared“ka\) unto you." He praises them because ye "hold fast the traditions even as I delivered them unto you." The {tradition} may be merely that of men and so worthless and harmful in place of the word of God (Mr 7:8; Col 2:6-8). It all depends. It is easy to scoff at truth as mere tradition. But human progress in all fields is made by use of the old, found to be true, in connection with the new if found to be true. In Thessalonica the saints were already the victims of theological charlatans with their half-baked theories about the second coming of Christ and about social duties and relations.

{Which ye were taught} (\has edidachth^{te}). First aorist passive indicative of \didask^{te}, to teach, retaining the accusative of the thing in the passive as is common with this verb like _doce^{te}_ in Latin and teach in English.

2:16 {And God our Father} (\kai [ho] theos ho pat^r h^mⁿ). It is uncertain whether the first article \ho is genuine as it is absent in B D. Usually Paul has the Father before Christ except here, 2Co 13:13; Ga 1:1. {Which loved us} (\ho agap^{as} h^{mas}). This singular articular participle refers to \ho pat^r, "though it is difficult to see how St. Paul could otherwise have expressed his thought, if he had intended to refer to the Son, as well as to the Father. There is probably no instance in St. Paul of a plural adjective or verb, when the two Persons of the Godhead are mentioned" (Lightfoot). {Eternal comfort} (\parakl^{sin ai}^{nian}). Distinct feminine form of \ai^{nios} here instead of masculine as in Mt 25:46.

2:17 {Comfort and stablish} (\parakalesai kai st^{rixai}). First aorist active optative of wish for the future of two common verbs \parakale^{te} (see on 1Th 3:7; 4:18; 5:14) and \steriz^{te} (see on 1Th 3:2,13). God is the God of {comfort} (2Co 1:3-7) and strength (Ro 1:11; 16:25).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

3:1 {Finally} (\to loipon\). Accusative of general reference. Cf. \loipon\ 1Th 4:1. {Pray} (\proseuchesthe\). Present middle, keep on praying. Note \peri\ as in 1Th 5:25. {That the word of the Lord may run and be glorified} (\hina ho logos tou kuriou trechêi kai doxazêtai\). Usual construction of \hina\ after \proseuchomai\, sub-final use, content and purpose combined. Note present subjunctive with both verbs rather than aorist, may keep on running and being glorified, two verbs joined together nowhere else in the N.T. Paul probably derived this metaphor from the stadium as in 1Co 9:24ff.; Ga 2:2; Ro 9:16; Php 2:16; 2Ti 4:7. Lightfoot translates "may have a triumphant career." On the word of the Lord see on 1Th 1:8. Paul recognizes the close relation between himself and the readers. He needs their prayers and sympathy and he rejoices in their reception of the word of the Lord already, {even as also it is with you} (\kath'ês kai pros humas\). "As it does in your case" (Frame).

3:2 {And that we may be delivered} (\kai hina rusthêmen\). A second and more personal petition (Milligan). First aorist passive subjunctive of \ruomai\, old verb to rescue. Note change in tense from present to aorist (effective aorist). {From unreasonable and evil men} (\apo tôn atopôn kai ponêrôn anthrôpôn\). Ablative case with \apo\. Originally in the old Greek \atopos\ (\a\ privative and \topos\) is out of place, odd, unbecoming, perverse, outrageous, both of things and persons. \Ponêros\ is from \pone\, to work (\ponos\), looking on labour as an annoyance, bad, evil. Paul had a plague of such men in Corinth as he had in Thessalonica. {For all have not faith} (\ou gar pantôn hê pistis\). Copula \estin\ not expressed. \Pantôn\ is predicate possessive genitive, faith (article with abstract substantive) does not belong to all. Hence their evil conduct.

3:3 {But the Lord is faithful} (\pistos de estin ho kurios\). {But faithful is the Lord} (correct rendition), with a play (paronomasia) on \pistis\ by \pistos\ as in Ro 3:3 we have a word-play on \apistê\ and \apistia\. The Lord can be counted on, however perverse men may be. {From the evil one} (\apo tou ponêrou\). Apparently a reminiscence of the Lord's Prayer in Mt

6:13 \rusai h^mas apo tou pon^rou\. But here as there it is not certain whether \tou pon^rou\ is neuter (evil) like to \pon^ron\ in Ro 12:9 or masculine (the evil one). But we have \ho pon^ros\ (the evil one) in 1Jo 5:18 and \tou pon^rou\ is clearly masculine in Eph 6:16. If masculine here, as is probable, is it "the Evil One" (Ellicott) or merely the evil man like those mentioned in verse 2? Perhaps Paul has in mind the representative of Satan, the man of sin, pictured in 2:1-12, by the phrase here without trying to be too definite.

3:4 {And we have confidence} (\pepoithomen\). Second perfect indicative of \peith^, to persuade, intransitive in this tense, we are in a state of trust. {In the Lord touching you} (\en kuri^i eph' humas\). Note the two prepositions, \en\ in the sphere of the Lord (1Th 4:1) as the _ground_ of Paul's confident trust, \eph\ (\epi\)) with the accusative (towards you) where the dative could have been used (cf. 2Co 2:3). {Ye both do and will do} ([kai] poieite kai poi^sete\). Compliment and also appeal, present and future tenses of \poie^\. {The things which we command} (\ha paraggellomen\). Note of apostolic authority here, not advice or urging, but command.

3:5 {Direct} (\kateuthunai\). First aorist active optative of wish for the future as in 2:17; 1Th 5:23 from \kateuthun^, old verb, as in 1Th 3:11 (there {way}, here {hearts}) and Lu 1:79 of {feet} (\podas\). Perfective use of \kata\. Bold figure for making smooth and direct road. The Lord here is the Lord Jesus. {Into the love of God} (\eis t^n agap^n tou theou\). Either subjective or objective genitive makes sense and Lightfoot pleads for both, "not only as an objective attribute of deity, but as a ruling principle in our hearts," holding that it is "seldom possible to separate the one from the other." Most scholars take it here as subjective, the characteristic of God. {Into the patience of Christ} (\eis t^n hupomn^n tou Christou\). There is the same ambiguity here, though the subjective idea, the patience shown by Christ, is the one usually accepted rather than "the patient waiting for Christ" (objective genitive).

3:6 {Now we command you} (\paraggellomen de humin\). Paul puts into practice the confidence expressed on their obedience to his commands in verse 4. {In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ} (\en onomati tou kuriou I^sou Christou\). {Name} (\onoma\)) here for authority of Jesus Christ with which compare {through the Lord Jesus} (\dia tou kuriou I^sou\)) in 1Th 4:2. For a full discussion of the phrase see the monograph of W. Heitmüller, Im Namen Jesu. Paul wishes his readers to realize the responsibility on them for their obedience to his command. {That ye withdraw yourselves} (\stallesthai humas\). Present middle (direct) infinitive of \stell“, old verb to place, arrange, make compact or shorten as sails, to move oneself from or to withdraw oneself from (with \apo\ and the ablative). In 2Co 8:20 the middle voice (\stellomenoi\) means taking care. {From every brother that walketh disorderly} (\apo pantos adelphou atakt“s peripatountos\). He calls him "brother" still. The adverb \atakt“s\ is common in Plato and is here and verse 11 alone in the N.T., though the adjective \ataktos\, equally common in Plato we had in 1Th 5:14 which see. Military term, out of ranks. {And not after the tradition} (\kai m^ kata t^ n paradosin\). See on 2:15 for \paradosin\). {Which they received of us} (\h^ n parelabosan par h^ m^ n\). Westcott and Hort put this form of the verb (second aorist indicative third person plural of \paralamban“\, the \-osan\ form instead of \-on\, with slight support from the papyri, but in the LXX and the Boeotian dialect, Robertson, Grammar, pp. 335f.) in the margin with \parelabete\ (ye received) in the text. There are five different readings of the verb here, the others being \parelabon, parelabe, elabosan\.

3:7 {How ye ought to imitate us} (\p“s dei mimeisthai h^ mas\). Literally, how it is necessary to imitate us. The infinitive \mimeisthai\ is the old verb \mimeomai\ from \mimos\ (actor, mimic), but in N.T. only here (and verse 9), Heb 13:7; 3Jo 1:11. It is a daring thing to say, but Paul knew that he had to set the new Christians in the midst of Jews and Gentiles a model for their imitation (Php 3:17). {For we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you} (\hoti ouk^ takt^ samen en humin\). First aorist active indicative of old verb \atakte“, to be out of ranks of soldiers. Specific denial on Paul's part in contrast to verse 6,17.

3:8 {For nought} (\d“ rean\). Adverbial accusative, as a gift, gift-wise (\d“ rea\, gift, from \did“mi). Same claim made to the Corinthians (2Co 11:7), old word, in LXX, and papyri. He lodged with Jason, but did not receive his meals _gratis_, for he paid for them. Apparently he received no invitations to meals. Paul had to make his financial independence clear to avoid false charges which were made in spite of all his efforts. To eat bread is merely a Hebraism for eat (verse 10). See 1Th 2:9 for labour and travail, and night and day (\nuktos kai h^meras, genitive of time, by night and by day). See 1Th 2:9 for rest of the verse in precisely the same words.

3:9 {Not because we have not the right} (\ouch hoti ouk echomen exousian). Paul is sensitive on his {right} to receive adequate support (1Th 2:6; 1 Co 9:4 where he uses the same word \exousian\ in the long defence of this {right}, 1Co 9:1-27). So he here puts in this limitation to avoid misapprehension. He did allow churches to help him where he would not be misunderstood (2Co 11:7-11; Php 4:45f.). Paul uses \ouch hoti elsewhere to avoid misunderstanding (2Co 1:24; 3:5; Php 4:17). {But to make ourselves an ensample unto you} (\all' hina heautous tupon d' "men humin). Literally, {but that we might give ourselves a type to you}. Purpose with \hina and second aorist active subjunctive of \did"mi. On \tupon see on 1Th 1:7.

3:10 {This} (\touto). What he proceeds to give. {If any will not work, neither let him eat} (\hoti ei tis ou thelei ergazesthai m^de esthiet"). Recitative \hoti here not to be translated, like our modern quotation marks. Apparently a Jewish proverb based on Ge 3:19. Wetstein quotes several parallels. Moffatt gives this from Carlyle's _Chartism_: "He that will not work according to his faculty, let him perish according to his necessity." Deissmann (_Light from the Ancient East_, p. 314) sees Paul borrowing a piece of workshop morality. It was needed, as is plain. This is a condition of the first class (note negative \ou) with the negative imperative in the conclusion.

3:11 {For we hear} (\akouomen gar). Fresh news from Thessalonica evidently. For the present tense compare 1Co 11:18. The accusative and the participle is a regular idiom for indirect discourse with this verb (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1040-2). Three picturesque present participles, the first a general description, \peripatountas atakt"s, the other two specifying with a vivid word-play, {that work not at all, but are busy-bodies} (\m^den ergazomenous alla periergazomenous). Literally, {doing nothing but doing around}. Ellicott suggests, {doing no business but being busy bodies}. "The first persecution at Thessalonica had been fostered by a number of fanatical loungers (Ac 17:5)" (Moffatt). These theological dead-beats were too pious to work, but perfectly willing to eat at the hands of their neighbours while they piddled and frittered away the time in idleness.

3:12 {We command and exhort} (\paragellomen kai parakaloumen\). Paul asserts his authority as an apostle and pleads as a man and minister. {That with quietness they work, and eat their own bread} (\hina meta h[^]suchias ergazomenoi ton heaut[^]n arton esthi[^]sin\). Substance of the command and exhortation by \hina\ and the present subjunctive \esthi[^]sin\. Literally, {that working with quietness they keep on eating their own bread}. The precise opposite of their conduct in verse 11.

3:13 {But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing} (\humeis de, adelphoi, m[^] en kak[^]s te kalopoiontes\). Emphatic position of \humeis\ in contrast to these piddlers. \M[^]\ and the aorist subjunctive is a prohibition against beginning an act (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 851-4). It is a late verb and means to behave badly in, to be cowardly, to lose courage, to flag, to faint, (\en, kakos\) and outside of Lu 18:1 in the N.T. is only in Paul's Epistles (2Th 3:13; 2Co 4:1,16; Ga 6:9; Eph 3:13). It occurs in Polybius. The late verb \kalopoie[^]\, to do the fair (\kalos\) or honourable thing occurs nowhere else in the N.T., but is in the LXX and a late papyrus. Paul uses \to kalon poiein\ in 2Co 13:7; Ga 6:9; Ro 7:21 with the same idea. He has \agathopoie[^]\, to do good, in 1Ti 6:18.

3:14 {And if any one obeyeth not our word by this epistle} (\ei de tis ouch hupakouei t[^]i log[^]i h[^]m[^]n dia t[^]s epistol[^]s\). Paul sums up the issue bluntly with this ultimatum. Condition of the first class, with negative \ou\, assuming it to be true. {Note that man} (\touton s[^]meiousthe\). Late verb \s[^]meio[^]\, from \s[^]meion\, sign, mark, token. Put a tag on that man. Here only in N.T. "The verb is regularly used for the signature to a receipt or formal notice in the papyri and the ostraca of the Imperial period" (Moulton & Milligan's Vocabulary). How this is to be done (by letter or in public meeting) Paul does not say. {That ye have no company with him} (\m[^] sunanamignusthai aut[^]i\). The MSS. are divided between the present middle infinitive as above in a command like Ro 12:15; Php 3:16 or the present middle imperative \sunanamignusthe\ (-ai\ and -e\ often being pronounced alike in the Koin,). The infinitive can also be explained as an indirect command. This double compound verb is late, in LXX and Plutarch, in N.T. only here and 1Co 5:9,11. \Aut[^]i\ is in associative instrumental case. {To the end that he may be ashamed} (\hina entrap[^]i\). Purpose clause with \hina\.

Second aorist passive subjunctive of \entrep[^]\, to turn on, middle to turn on oneself or to put to shame, passive to be made ashamed. The idea is to have one's thoughts turned in on oneself.

3:15 {Not as an enemy} (m^h“s echthron). This is always the problem in such ostracism as discipline, however necessary it is at times. Few things in our churches are more difficult of wise execution than the discipline of erring members. The word \echthros is an adjective, hateful, from \echthos, hate. It can be passive, {hated}, as in Ro 11:28, but is usually active {hostile}, enemy, foe.

3:16 {The Lord of peace himself} (autos ho kurios t^s eirⁿ^n). See 1Th 5:23 for {the God of peace himself}. {Give you peace} (doi^h humin tⁿ eirⁿ^n). Second aorist active optative (_Koin,_) of \did“mi, not \d“^i (subjunctive). So also Ro 15:5; 2Ti 1:16,18. The Lord Jesus whose characteristic is peace, can alone give real peace to the heart and to the world. (Joh 14:27).

3:17 {Of me Paul with mine own hand} (tⁱ emⁱ cheiri Paulou). Instrumental case \cheiri. Note genitive \Paulou in apposition with possessive idea in the possessive pronoun \emⁱ. Paul had dictated the letter, but now wrote the salutation in his hand. {The token in every epistle} (s^hmeion en pasⁱ epistolⁱ). Mark (verse 14) and proof of the genuineness of each epistle, Paul's signature. Already there were spurious forgeries (2Th 2:2). Thus each church was enabled to know that Paul wrote the letter. If only the autograph copy could be found!

3:18 Salutation just like that in 1Th 5:28 with the addition of \pant“n (all).

1:1 {According to the commandment} (\kat' epitagⁿ\). A late _Koin,_ word (Polybius, Diodorus), but a Pauline word also in N.T. This very idiom ("by way of command") in 1Co 7:6; 2Co 8:8; Ro 16:26; 1Ti 1:1; Tit 1:3. Paul means to say that he is an apostle under orders. {Of God our Saviour} (\theou s^tros h^m"n\). Genitive case with \epitagⁿ\. In the LXX \s^tr\ (old word from \s^z"\ for agent in saving, applied to deities, princes, kings, etc.) occurs 20 times, all but two to God. The Romans called the emperor "Saviour God." In the N.T. the designation of God as Saviour is peculiar to Lu 1:47; Jude 1:25; 1Ti 1:3; 2:3; 4:10; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4. In the other Epistles Paul uses it of Christ (Php 3:20; Eph 5:23) as in 2Ti 1:10. In 2Pe 1:1 we have "our God and Saviour Jesus Christ" as in Tit 2:13. {Our hope} (\t^s elpidos h^m"n\). Like Col 1:27. More than the author and object of hope, "its very substance and foundation" (Ellicott).

1:2 {True} (\gn^{si}"i\). Legitimate, not spurious. Old word from \ginomai\, but Pauline only in N.T. (Php 4:3; 2Co 8:8; Tit 1:4). In Php 2:20 the adverb \gn^{si}"s\ occurs and of Timothy again. {Christ Jesus} (\Christou I^{sou}\). So twice already in verse 1 and as usual in the later Epistles (Col 1:1; Eph 1:1).

1:3 {As I exhorted} (\kath^s parekalesa\). There is an ellipse of the principal clause in verse 4 (so do I now) not being in the Greek. {To tarry} (\prosmeinai\). First aorist active infinitive of \prosmen"\, old verb, attributed by Luke to Paul in Ac 13:43. {That thou mightest charge} (\hina paraggeil^{is}\). Subfinal clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \paraggeil"\, old verb, to transmit a message along (\para\) from one to another. See 2Th 3:4,6,10. Lock considers this idiom here an elliptical imperative like Eph 4:29; 5:33. {Certain men} (\tisin\). Dative case. Expressly vague (no names as in 1:20), though Paul doubtless has certain persons in Ephesus in mind. {Not to teach a different doctrine} (\m^{heterodidaskalein}\). Earliest known use of this compound like \kakodidaskalein\ of Clement of Rome. Only other N.T.

example in 6:3. Eusebius has \heterodidaskalos\. Same idea in Ga 1:6; 2Co 11:4; Ro 16:17. Perhaps coined by Paul.

1:4 {To give heed} (\prosechein\). With \noun\ understood. Old and common idiom in N.T. especially in Luke and Acts (Ac 8:10ff.). Not in Paul's earlier Epistles. 1Ti 3:8; 4:1,13; Tit 1:14. {To fables} (\muthois\). Dative case of old word for speech, narrative, story, fiction, falsehood. In N.T. only 2Pe 1:16; 1Ti 1:4; 4:7; Tit 1:14; 2Ti 4:4. {Genealogies} (\genealogiais\). Dative of old word, in LXX, in N.T. only here and Tit 3:9. {Endless} (\aperantois\). Old verbal compound (from \a\ privative and \perain\, to go through), in LXX, only here in N.T. Excellent examples there for old words used only in the Pastorals because of the subject matter, describing the Gnostic emphasis on aeons. {Questionings} (\ekzētseis\). "Seekings out." Late and rare compound from \ekzēte\ (itself _Koin, _ word, Ro 3:11 from LXX and in papyri). Here only in N.T. Simplex \zētēsis\ in Ac 15:2; 1Ti 6:4; Tit 3:9; 2Ti 2:23. {A dispensation} (\oikonomian\). Pauline word (1Co 9:17; Col 1:25; Eph 1:9; 3:9; 1Ti 1:4), Lu 16:2-4 only other N.T. examples. {In faith} (\en pistei\). Pauline use of \pistis\.

1:5 {The end} (\to telos\). See Ro 6:21; 10:4 for \telos\ (the good aimed at, reached, result, end). {Love} (\agapē\). Not "questionings." Ro 13:9. "Three conditions for the growth of love" (Parry): "Out of a pure heart" (\ek katharas kardias\, O.T. conception), "and a good conscience" (\kai suneidēse's agathēs\, for which see Ro 2:25), "and faith unfeigned" (\kai piste's anupokritou\, late compound verbal in 2Co 6:6; Ro 12:9).

1:6 {Having swerved} (\astochēsantes\). First aorist active participle of \astochē\, compound _Koin, _ verb (Polybius, Plutarch) from \astochos\ (\a\ privative and \stochos\, a mark), "having missed the mark." In N.T. only here, 6:21; 2Ti 2:18. With the ablative case \h'ēn\ (which). {Have turned aside} (\exetrapēsan\). Second aorist passive indicative of \ektrepē\, old and common verb, to turn or twist out or aside. In medical sense in Heb 12:13. As metaphor in 1Ti 1:6; 6:20; 2Ti 4:4. {Vain talking} (\mataiologian\). Late word from \mataiologos\, only here in N.T., in the literary _Koin, _.

1:7 {Teachers of the law} (\nomodidaskaloi\). Compound only in N.T. (here, Lu 5:17; Ac 5:34) and ecclesiastical writers. {Though they understand} (\noountes\). Concessive participle of \noe“, old verb (Eph 3:4,20). {Neither what} (\m^{te} ha\). Relative \ha\ (which things). {Nor whereof} (\m^{te} peri tin“n\). Here the interrogative \tin“n\ used in sense of relative \h“n\.

It may be regarded as the use of an indirect question for variety (Parry). {They confidently affirm} (\diabebaiountai\). Present middle indicative of the common _Koin,_ compound, in N.T. only here and Tit 3:8.

Condition of third class with \ean\ and present middle subjunctive of \chraomai\ with instrumental case.

1:9 {Is not made for} (\ou keitai\). The use of \keitai\ for \tetheitai\ (perfect passive of tith^{mi}) is a common enough idiom. See the same point about law in Ga 18-23; Ro 13:13. For "knowing this" (\eid“s touto\ see Eph 5:5. {Unruly} (\anupotaktois\). Dative (like all these words) of the late verbal (\a\ privative and \hupotass“\). In N.T. only here, Tit 1:6,10; Heb 2:8. {Ungodly} (\asebesi\). See Ro 4:5; 5:6. {Sinners} (\hamart“lois\). See Ro 3:7. {Unholy} (\anosiois\). Common word (\a\ privative and \hosios\). In N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:2. {Profane} (\beb^{lois}\). Old word from \bain“, to go, and \b^{los}\, threshold. See Heb 12:16. {Murderers of fathers} (\patrol“iais\). Late form for common Attic \patral“iais\ (from pat^r\, father, and aloia“, to smite) only here in N.T. {Murderers of mothers} (\m^{trol}“iais\). Late form Attic \m^{tral}“iais\). Only here in N.T. {Manslayers} (\andraphonois\). Old compound (\an^r\, man, \phonos\, murder). Only here in N.T.

1:10 {For abusers of themselves with men} (\arsenokoitais\). Late compound for sodomites. In N.T. only here and 1Co 6:9.

{Men-stealers} (\andrapodistais\). Old word from \andrapodiz“\ (from an^r\, man, pous\, foot, to catch by the foot), to enslave. So enslavers, whether kidnappers (men-stealers) of free men or stealers of the slaves of other men. So slave-dealers. By the use of this word Paul deals a blow at the slave-trade (cf. Philemon). {Liars} (\pseustais\). Old word, see Ro 3:4. {False swearers} (\epiorkois\). Old word (\epi, orkos\, oath).

Perjurers. Only here in N.T. For similar lists, see 1Co 5:11; 6:9f.; Ga 5:19f.; Ro 1:28f.; 13:13; Col 3:5; Eph 5:5; 2Ti 3:2f.

{The sound doctrine} (\tⁱ hugiainousⁱ didaskalifi\). Dative case after \antikeitai\, for which verb see Ga 5:17 for the conflict between the Spirit and the flesh. "The healthful (\hugiain“, old word for being well, as Lu 5:31; 3Jo 1:2, in figurative sense in N.T. only in the Pastorals) teaching." See Tit 1:9; 2Ti 4:3.

1:11 {Of the blessed God} (tou makariou theou\). Applied to God only here and 6:15, but in Tit 2:13 \makarios\ occurs with \elpis\ (hope) of the "epiphany of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." {Which was committed to my trust} (ho episteuthⁿ eg\). "with which (\ho\ accusative retained with first aorist passive verb \episteuthⁿ\) I was entrusted."

1:12 {I thank} (charin ech\). "I have gratitude to." Common phrase (Lu 17:9), not elsewhere in Paul. {That enabled me} (tⁱ endunam^{santi} me\). First aorist active articular participle of \endunamo\ . Late verb, but regular Pauline idiom (Ro 4:20; Php 4:13; Eph 6:10; 1Ti 1:12; 2Ti 4:17). {Appointing me to his service} (themenos eis diakonian\). Second aorist middle participle. Pauline phrase and atmosphere (Ac 20:24; 1Co 3:5; 12:18,28; 2Co 3:6; 4:1; Col 1:23; Eph. 3:7; 1Ti 4:6; 2Ti 4:5,11).

1:13 {Before} (to proteron\). Accusative of general reference of the articular comparative, "as to the former-time," formerly, as in Ga 4:13. {Though I was} (onta\). Concessive participle agreeing with \me\ . {Blasphemer} (blasph^{mon}\). Old word either from \blax\ (stupid) and \ph^m\, speech, or from \blapt\, to injure. Rare in N.T. but Paul uses \blasph^{me}\, to blaspheme in Ro 2:24. {Persecutor} (di^{kt}s\). So far found only here. Probably made by Paul from \di^k\, which he knew well enough (Ac 22:4,7; 26:14f.; Ga 1:13,23; Php 3:6; 2Ti 3:12). {Injurious} (hubristⁿ\). Substantive, not adjective, "an insolent man." Old word from \hubriz\, in N.T. only here and Ro 1:30. {I obtained mercy} (elethn\). First aorist passive indicative of \elee\, old verb. See 2Co 4:1; Ro 11:30f. {Ignorantly} (agnoⁿ\). Present active participle of \agnoe\, "not knowing." Old verb (Ro 2:4). In a blindness of heart. {In unbelief} (en apistifi\). See Ro 11:20,25.

1:14 {Abounded exceedingly} (huperepleonasen\). Aorist active indicative of the late and rare (So 5:19 and in Herond.) compound \huperpleonaz\ (here alone in N.T.), in later ecclesiastical writers. The simplex \pleonaz\ Paul used in Ro 5:20; 6:1 and the kindred \hupereperisseusen\ used also with \h^{charis}\. Paul is fond of compounds with \huper\ . For "faith in Christ Jesus" see Ga 3:26, for "faith and love in Christ Jesus" as here, see 2Ti 1:13.

1:15 {Faithful is the saying} (\pistos ho logos\). Five times in the Pastorals (1Ti 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; Tit 3:8; 2Ti 2:11). It will pay to note carefully \pistis, pisteu“, pistos\. Same use of \pistos\ (trustworthy) applied to \logos\ in Tit 1:9; Re 21:5; 22:6. Here and probably in 2Ti 2:11 a definite saying seems to be referred to, possibly a quotation (\hoti\) of a current saying quite like the Johannine type of teaching. This very phrase (Christ coming into the world) occurs in Joh 9:37; 11:27; 16:28; 18:37. Paul, of course, had no access to the Johannine writings, but such "sayings" were current among the disciples. There is no formal quotation, but "the whole phrase implies a knowledge of Synoptic and Johannine language" (Lock) as in Lu 5:32; Joh 12:47. {Acceptation} (\apodoch^s\). Genitive case with \axios\ (worthy of). Late word (Polybius, Diod., Jos.) in N.T. only here and 4:9. {Chief} (\pr^tos\). Not \^n\ (I was), but \eimi\ (I am). "It is not easy to think of any one but St. Paul as penning these words" (White). In 1Co 15:9 he had called himself "the least of the apostles" (\elachistos t^“n apostol^“n\). In Eph 3:8 he refers to himself as "the less than the least of all saints" (\t^“i elachistoter^“i pant^“n hagi^“n\). On occasion Paul would defend himself as on a par with the twelve apostles (Ga 2:6-10) and superior to the Judaizers (2Co 11:5f.; 12:11). It is not mock humility here, but sincere appreciation of the sins of his life (cf. Ro 7:24) as a persecutor of the church of God (Ga 1:13), of men and even women (Ac 22:4f.; 26:11). He had sad memories of those days.

1:16 {In me as chief} (\en emoi pr^“t^“i\). Probably starts with the same sense of \pr^tos\ as in verse 15 (rank), but turns to order (first in line). Paul becomes the "specimen" sinner as an encouragement to all who come after him. {Might shew forth} (\endeix^tai\). First aorist middle subjunctive (purpose with \hina\) of \endeiknumi\, to point out, for which see Eph 2:7 (same form with \hina\). {Longsuffering} (\makrothumian\). Common Pauline word (2Co 6:6). {For an ensample} (\pros hupotup^“sin\). Late and rare word (in Galen, Sext. Emp., Diog. Laert., here only in N.T.) from late verb \hupotupo^“\ (in papyri) to outline. So substantive here is a sketch, rough outline. Paul is a sample of the kind of sinners that Jesus came to save. See \hupodeigma\ in 2Pe 2:6.

1:17 This noble doxology is a burst of gratitude for God's grace to Paul. For other doxologies see Ga 1:5; Ro 11:36; 16:27; Php 4:20; Eph 3:21; 1Ti 6:16. White suggests that Paul may have often used this doxology in his prayers. Lock suggests "a Jewish liturgical formula" (a needless suggestion in view of Paul's wealth of doxologies seen above). For God's creative activity (King of the ages) see 1Co 10:11; Eph 2:7; 3:9,11. {Incarnate} (\aphthart*“i*\). As an epithet of God also in Ro 1:23. {Invisible} (\aorat*“i*\). Epithet of God in Col 1:15. {The only God} (\mon*“i the“i*\). So Ro 16:27; Joh 5:44; 17:3. {For ever and ever} (\eis tous ai*“nas t“n ai“n“n*\). "Unto the ages of ages." Cf. Eph 3:21 "of the age of the ages."

1:18 {I commit} (\paratithemai\). Present middle indicative of old and common verb, to place beside (\para\) as food on table, in the middle to entrust (Lu 12:48) and used by Jesus as he was dying (Lu 23:46). Here it is a banking figure and repeated in 2Ti 2:2. {According to the prophecies which went before on thee} (\kata tas proagousas epi se proph*^teias*\). Intransitive use of \proag*“*\, to go before. When Timothy first comes before us (Ac 16:2) "he was testified to" (\emartureito\) by the brethren. He began his ministry rich in hopes, prayers, predictions. {That by them thou mayest war the good warfare} (\hina strateu*^i en autais t^n kal^n strateian*\). Cognate accusative (\strateian\, old word from \strateu“\, in N.T. only here and 2Co 4:4) with \strateu*^i*\ (second person singular middle present subjunctive of \strateu“\, old verb chiefly in Paul in N.T., 1Co 9:7; 2Co 10:3). As if in defensive armour.

1:19 {Holding faith and a good conscience} (\ech*“n pistin kai agath^n suneid^sin*\). Possibly as a shield (Eph 6:16) or at any rate possessing (Ro 2:20) faith as trust and a good conscience. A leader expects them of his followers and must show them himself. {Having thrust from them} (\ap*“samenoi*\). First aorist indirect middle participle of \ap*“the“*\, to push away from one. Old verb (see Ro 11:1f.). {Made shipwreck} (\enauag*^san*\). First aorist active indicative of \nauage*“*\, old verb from \nauagos\ (shipwrecked, \naus\, ship, \agnumi\, to break), to break a ship to pieces. In N.T. only here and 2Co 11:25. {Concerning the faith} (\peri t^n pistin\). Rather, "concerning their faith" (the article here used as a possessive pronoun, a common Greek idiom).

1:20 {Hymenaeus} (\Humenaios\). The same heretic reappears in 2Ti 2:17. He and Alexander are the chief "wreckers" of faith in Ephesus. {Alexander} (\Alexandros\). Probably the same as the one in 2Ti 4:14, but not the Jew of that name in Ac 19:33, unless he had become a Christian since then. {I delivered unto Satan} (\pared“ka t“i Satanfi\). See this very idiom (\paradounai t“i Satanfi\ in 1Co 5:5. It is a severe discipline of apostolic authority, apparently exclusion and more than mere abandonment (1Th 2:18; 1Co 5:11; 2Co 2:11), though it is an obscure matter. {That they might be taught not to blaspheme} (\hina paid euth“sin m^ blasph^mein\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \paideu“. For this use of this common late verb, see 1Co 11:32; 2Co 6:9.

2:1 {First of all} (\pr“ton pant“n\). Take with \parakal“\ . My first request (first in importance). {Intercessions} (\enteuxeis\). Late word (Polybius, Plutarch, etc.), only here in N.T. and 4:5, though the verb \entugchan“\ in Ro 8:27,34; 11:2,25. The other three words for prayer are common (Php 4:6). {For all men} (\huper pant“n anthr“p“n\). The scope of prayer is universal including all kinds of sinners (and saints).

2:2 {For kings} (\huper basile“n\). And this included Nero who had already set fire to Rome and laid it on the Christians whom he was also persecuting. {And all them that are in high place} (\kai pant“n t“n en huperoch“i ont“n\). \Huperoch“\ is old word (from \huperochos\ and this from \huper\ and \ech“), but in N.T. only here and 1Co 2:1. {That we may lead} (\hina diag“men\). Purpose clause with present active subjunctive of \diag“\, an old and common verb, but in N.T. only here and Tit 3:3. {Tranquil} (\^remon\). Late adjective from the old adverb \^rema\ (stilly, quietly). Here only in N.T. {Quiet} (\h^suchion\). Old adjective, once in LXX (Isa 66:2), in N.T. only here and 1Pe 3:4. {Life} (\bion\). Old word for course of life (not \z““). So Lu 8:14. {Gravity} (\semnot“ti\). Old word from \semnos\ (Php 4:8), in N.T. only here, 3:4; Tit 2:7.

2:3 {Acceptable} (\apodekton\). Late verbal adjective from \apodechomai\ . In inscriptions and papyri. In N.T. only here and 5:4.

2:4 {Willeth} (\thelei\). God's wish and will in so far as he can influence men. {That all men should be saved} (\pantas anthr“pous s“th^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \s“z““\ with accusative of general reference. See 1Co 10:33; 2Co 5:18f. {To the knowledge} (\eis epign“sin\). "The full knowledge" as in Col 1:6; Eph 4:13 (ten times in Paul). See 2Ti 3:7 for the whole phrase "full knowledge of the truth" (\al^theia\ 14 times in the Pastorals). Paul is anxious as in Colossians and Ephesians that the Gnostics may not lead the people astray. They need the full intellectual apprehension of Christianity.

2:5 {One God} (\heis theos). Regular Pauline argument for a universal gospel (Ga 3:20; Ro 3:30; Eph 4:6). {One mediator} (\heis mesit^s). Late word (Polybius, Philo) from \mesos (middle), a middle man. In N.T. only here, Ga 3:20; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24. {Between God and men} (\theou kai anthr^p^“n). Ablative case (though objective genitive may explain it) after \mesit^s (notion of separation) as in Ro 10:12; Heb 5:14. {Himself man} (\anthr^“pos). No "himself" (\autos) in the Greek.

2:6 {A ransom for all} (\antilutron huper pant^“n). "A reminiscence of the Lord's own saying" (Lock) in Mt 20:28 (Mr 10:45) where we have \lutron anti poll^“n. In the papyri \huper is the ordinary preposition for the notion of substitution where benefit is involved as in this passage. \Anti has more the idea of exchange and \antilutron huper combines both ideas. \Lutron is the common word for ransom for a slave or a prisoner. Paul may have coined \antilutron with the saying of Christ in mind (only one MS. of Ps 48:9 and Orph. _Litt_. 588). See Ga 1:4 "who gave himself for our sins." {The testimony} (\to marturion). Either the nominative absolute or the accusative absolute in apposition to the preceding clause like \to adunaton in Ro 8:3. {In its own times} (\kairois idiois). Locative case as in 6:15; Tit 1:3. See Ga 6:9 for "due season." There is no predicate or participle here, "the testimony in its due seasons" (plural).

2:7 {For which} (\eis ho). The testimony of Jesus in his self-surrender (verse 6). See \eis ho in 2Ti 1:11. {I was appointed} (\eteth^“n eg^“). First aorist passive indicative of \tith^mi. {Preacher and apostle} (\k^rux kai apostolos). In 2Ti 1:10 Paul adds \didaskalos (herald, apostle, teacher) as he does here with emphasis. In Col 1:23f. he has \diakonos (minister). He frequently uses \k^russ^“ of himself (1Co 1:23; 9:27; Ga 2:2; Ro 10:8f.). {I speak the truth, I lie not} (\al^theian leg^“, ou pseudomai). A Pauline touch (Ro 9:1). Cf. Ga 1:20; 2Co 11:31. Here alone he calls himself "a teacher of the Gentiles," elsewhere apostle (Ro 11:13), minister (Ro 15:16), prisoner (Eph 3:1).

2:8 {I desire} (\boulomai). So Php 1:12. {The men} (\tous andras). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive \proseuchesthai. The men in contrast to "women" (\gunaikas) in 9. It is public worship, of course, and "in every place" (\en panti top^“i) for public worship. Many modern Christians feel that there were special conditions in Ephesus as in Corinth which called for strict regulations on the women that do not always apply now. {Lifting up holy hands} (\epairontas hosious cheiras\). Standing to pray. Note also \hosious\ used as feminine (so in Plato) with \cheiras\ instead of \hosias\. The point here is that only men should lead in public prayer who can lift up "clean hands" (morally and spiritually clean). See Lu 24:50. Adverb \hosi"s\ in 1Th 2:10 and \hosiot^s\ in Eph 4:24. {Without wrath and disputing} (\ch"ris org^s kai dialogismou\). See Php 2:14.

2:9 {In like manner that women} (\hosaut"s gunaikas\). \Boulomai\ must be repeated from verse 8, involved in \hosaut"s\ (old adverb, as in Ro 8:26). Parry insists that \proseuchomenas\ (when they pray) must be supplied also. Grammatically that is possible (Lock), but it is hardly consonant with verses 11-15 (White). {Adorn themselves} (\kosmein heautas\). Present active infinitive after \boulomai\ understood. Old word from \kosmos\ (arrangement, ornament, order, world). See Lu 21:5; Tit 2:10. See 1Co 11:5ff. for Paul's discussion of women's dress in public worship. {In modest apparel} (\en katastol^i kosmi"i\). \Katastol^ is a late word (a letting down, katastell", of demeanour or dress, arrangement of dress). Only here in N.T. \Kosmios\ is old adjective from \kosmos\ and means well-arranged, becoming. W. H. have adverb in margin (\kosmi"s\). {With shamefastness} (\meta aidous\). Old word for shame, reverence, in N.T. only here and Heb 12:28. {Sobriety} (\s"phrosun^s\). Old word, in N.T. only here, verse 15, and Ac 26:15 (Paul also). {Not with braided hair} (\m^ en plegmasin\). Old word from \plek", to plait, to braid, for nets, baskets, here only in N.T. Cf. 1Pe 3:1 (\emplok^s\). {And gold} (\en chrusi"i\). Locative case with \en\ repeated. Some MSS. read \chrus"i\. Both used for gold ornaments. {Or pearls} (\^ margaritais\). See Mt 7:6 for this word. {Or costly raiment} (\^ himatism"i polutelei\). \Himatismos\ a common _Koin,_ word from \himatiz", to clothe. \Polutel^s\, old word from \polus\ and \telos\ (great price). See Mr 14:3.

2:10 {Becometh} (\prepei\). Old word for seemly. Paul wishes women to wear "becoming" clothes, but \theosebeian\ (godliness, from theoseb^s, Joh 9:31, theos, sebomai, worship) is part of the "style" desired. Only here in N.T. Good dress and good works combined.

2:11 {In quietness} (\en h^{suchifi}\). Old word from \h^{suchios}\. In N.T. only here, Ac 22:2; 2Th 3:12. {In all subjection} (\en pas^{i hupotagⁱ}\). Late word (Dion. Hal., papyri), in N.T. only here, 2Co 9:13; Ga 2:5. See 1Co 14:33-35.

2:12 {I permit not} (\ouk epitrep[“]\). Old word \epitrep[“]\, to permit, to allow (1Co 16:7). Paul speaks authoritatively. {To teach} (\didaskein\). In the public meeting clearly. And yet all modern Christians allow women to teach Sunday school classes. One feels somehow that something is not expressed here to make it all clear. {Nor to have dominion over a man} (\oude authentein andros\). The word \authente[“]\ is now cleared up by Kretschmer (_Glotta_, 1912, pp. 289ff.) and by Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_. See also Nageli, _Der Wortschatz des Apostels Paulus_ and Deissmann, _Light, etc._, pp. 88f. \Autodike[“]\ was the literary word for playing the master while \authente[“]\ was the vernacular term. It comes from \aut-hentes\, a self-doer, a master, autocrat. It occurs in the papyri (substantive \authent^s\, master, verb \authente[“]\, to domineer, adjective \authentikos\, authoritative, "authentic"). Modern Greek has \aphentes\ = Effendi = "Mr."

2:13 {Was first formed} (\pr^{“tos eplast^h}\). Note \pr^{“tos}\, not \pr^{“ton}\, first before Eve. First aorist passive indicative of \plass[“]\, old verb, in N.T. only here and Ro 9:20 (cf. Ge 2:7f.).

2:14 {Being beguiled} (\exapat^{theisa}\). First aorist passive participle of \exapate[“]\, old compound verb, in N.T. only by Paul (2Th 2:3; 1Co 3:18; 2Co 11:3; Ro 7:11; 16:18; 1Ti 2:14). Not certain that \ex-\ here means "completely deceived" in contrast to simplex (\ouk ^{patth}\) used of Adam, though possible. {Hath fallen} (\gegonen\). Second perfect indicative active, permanent state. See 1Co 11:7.

2:15 {Through the child-bearing} (\dia t^{s teknogonias}\). Late and rare word (in Aristotle). Here alone in N.T. From \teknogonos\ and this from \teknon\ and root \gen[“]\. This translation makes it refer to the birth of the Saviour as glorifying womanhood. That is true, but it is not clear that Paul does not have mostly in mind that child-bearing, not public teaching, is the peculiar function of woman with a glory and dignity all its own. "She will be saved" (\s^{“th^{setai}}\) in this function, not by means of it. {If they continue} (ean mein“sin”). Condition of third class, \ean\ with first aorist active subjunctive of \men“, to continue. Note change to plural from the singular (s“th^setai”).

3:1 {Faithful is the saying} (\pistos ho logos\). Here the phrase points to the preceding words (not like 1:15) and should close the preceding paragraph. {If a man seeketh} (\ei tis oregetai\). Condition of first class, assumed as true. Present middle indicative of \oreg“, old verb to reach out after something, governing the genitive. In N.T. only here, 6:10; Heb 11:16. {The office of a bishop} (\episkop^s\). Genitive case after \oregetai\. Late and rare word outside of LXX and N.T. (in a Lycaonian inscription). From \episkope“\ and means "over-seership" as in Ac 1:20.

3:2 {The bishop} (\ton episkopon\). The overseer. Old word, in LXX, and inscriptions and papyri. Deissmann (Bible Studies, pp. 230f.) has shown it is applied to communal officials in Rhodes. See Ac 20:28 for its use for the elders (presbyters) in verse 17. So also in Tit 1:5,7. See Php 1:1. The word does not in the N.T. have the monarchical sense found in Ignatius of a bishop over elders. {Without reproach} (\anepil^mpton\). Accusative case of general reference with \dei\ and \einai\. Old and common verbal (\a\ privative and \epilamban“, not to be taken hold of), irreproachable. In N.T. only here, 5:7; 6:14. {Of one wife} (\mias gunaikos\). One at a time, clearly. {Temperate} (\n^phalion\). Old adjective. In N.T. only here, verse 11; Tit 2:2. But see \n^ph“, to be sober in 1Th 5:6,8. {Soberminded} (\s^phrona\). Another old adjective (from \saos\ or \s^s\, sound, phr^n, mind) in N.T. only here, Tit 1:8; 2:2,5. {Orderly} (\kosmion\). See on ^2:9. Seemly, decent conduct. {Given to hospitality} (\philoxenon\). Old word (see \philoxenia\ in Ro 12:13), from \philos\ and \xenos\, in N.T. only here, Tit 1:8; 1Pe 4:9. {Apt to teach} (\didaktikon\). Late form for old \didaskalikos\, one qualified to teach. In Philo and N.T. only (1Ti 3:2; 2Ti 2:24).

3:3 {No brawler} (\m^paroinon\). Later word for the earlier \paroinios\, one who sits long at (beside, para\) his wine. In N.T. only here and Tit 1:3. {No striker} (\m^pl^kt^n\). Late word from \pl^ss“, to strike. In N.T. only here and Tit 1:3. {Gentle} (\epieik^). See on ^Php 4:5 for this interesting word.

{Not contentious} (\amachon\). Old word (from \a\ privative and \mach^\), not a fighter. In N.T. only here and Tit 3:2. {No lover of money} (\aphilarguron\). Late word (\a\ privative and compound \phil-arguros\ in inscriptions and papyri (Nageli; also Deissmann, _Light_, etc., pp. 85f.). In N.T. only here and Heb 13:5.

3:4 {Ruling} (\proistamenon\). Present middle participle of \proist^mi\, old word to place before and (intransitive as here) to stand before. See 1Th 5:12; Ro 12:8. {In subjection} (\en hupotag^i\). See verse 11.

3:5 {If a man knoweth not} (\ei tis ouk oiden\). Condition of first class, assumed as true. {How to rule} (\prost^nai\). Second aorist active infinitive of same verb \proist^mi\ and with \oiden\ means "know how to rule," not "know that he rules." {How} (\p^s\). Rhetorical question expecting negative answer. {Shall he take care of} (\epimel^setai\). Future middle of \epimeleomai\, old compound (\epi\, direction of care towards) verb, in LXX, in N.T. only here and Lu 10:34f. {The church of God} (\ekkl^sias theou\). Anarthrous as in verse 15, elsewhere with article (1Co 10:32; 15:9; 2Co 1:1; Ga 1:13). The local church described as belonging to God. No one in N.T. but Paul (Ac 20:28) so describes the church. This verse is a parenthesis in the characteristics of the bishop.

3:6 {Not a novice} (\m^ neophuton\). Our "neophyte." Vernacular word from Aristophanes on, in LXX, and in papyri in the original sense of "newly-planted" (\neos, phu^\). Only here in N.T. {Lest} (\hina m^\). "That not." {Being puffed up} (\tuph^theis\). First aorist passive participle of \tupho^\, old word (from \tuphos\, smoke, pride), to raise a smoke or mist (a smoke-screen of pride). In N.T. only here; 6:4; 2Ti 3:4. {He fall into} (\empes^i eis\). Second aorist active subjunctive with \hina m^\, negative purpose, of \empipt^^\, old verb, to fall into. Note both \en\ and \eis\ as in Mt 12:11; Lu 10:36. {The condemnation of the devil} (\krima tou diabolou\). See Ro 3:8 for \krima\. Best to take \tou diabolou\ as objective genitive, though subjective in verse 7, "the condemnation passed on or received by the devil" (not just "the slanderer," any slanderer).

3:7 {From them that are without} (\apo t^"n ex^then\). "From the outside (of the church) ones." Paul's care for the witness of outsiders is seen in 1Th 4:12; 1Co 10:32; Col 4:5. There are, of course, two sides to this matter. {Reproach} (\oneidismon\). Late word from \oneidiz“. See Ro 15:3. {The snare of the devil} (\pagida tou diabolou\). Here subjective genitive, snare set by the devil. \Pagis\, old word from \p^gnumi\, to make fast. So a snare for birds (Lu 21:35), any sudden trap (Ro 11:9), of sin (1Ti 6:9), of the devil (1Ti 3:7; 2Ti 2:26). Ancients used it of the snares of love. The devil sets special snares for preachers (conceit verse 6, money 6:9, women, ambition).

3:8 {Deacons} (\diakonous\). Accusative case of general reference like the preceding with \dei einai\ understood. Technical sense of the word here as in Php 1:1 which see (two classes of church officers, bishops or elders, deacons). {Grave} (\semnous\). See Php 4:8. Repeated in verse 11; Tit 2:2. {Not double-tongued} (\m^ dilogous\). Rare word (\dis, leg“) saying same thing twice. Xenophon has \diloge“ and \dilogia\. In Pollux, but LXX has \digl“ssos\ (double-tongued, Latin _bilinguis_). Only here in N.T. One placed between two persons and saying one thing to one, another to the other. Like Bunyan's Parson "Mr. Two-Tongues." {Not given to much wine} (\m^ oin“i poll“i prosechontas\). "Not holding the mind (\ton noun\ understood as usual with \prosech“, 1Ti 1:4) on much wine" (\oin“i\, dative case). That attitude leads to over-indulgence. {Not greedy of filthy lucre} (\m^ aischrokerdeis\). Old word from \aischros\ (Eph 5:12) and \kerdos\ (Php 1:21). "Making small gains in mean ways" (Parry). Not genuine in verse 3. In N.T. only here and Tit 1:7 (of bishops).

3:9 {The mystery of the faith} (\to must^rion t^s piste“s\). "The inner secret of the faith," the revelation given in Christ. See for \must^rion\ in Paul (2Th 2:7; 1Co 2:7; Ro 16:25; Col 1:26; Eph 3:9). {In a pure conscience} (\en katharfi suneid^sei\). See 1:19. "The casket in which the jewel is to be kept" (Lock).

3:10 {First be proved} (\dokimazesth“san pr“ton\). Present passive imperative third plural of \dokimaz“, old and common verb, to test as metals, etc. (1Th 2:4, and often in Paul). How the proposed deacons are to be "first" tested before approved Paul does not say. See Php 1:10 for the two senses (test, approve) of the word. {Let them serve as deacons} (\diakoneit“san\). Present active imperative of \diakone“\ (same root as \diakonos), common verb, to minister, here "to serve as deacons." Cf. \diakonein\ in Ac 6:2. See also verse 13. {If they be blameless} (\anegkl^toi ontes\). "Being blameless"

(conditional participle, \ontes\). See 1Co 1:8; Col 1:22 for \anegkl^tos\.

3:11 {Women} (\gunaikas\). Accusative with \dei einai\ understood (\hosaut^s\, likewise) as in verse 8. Apparently "women as deacons" (Ro 16:1 about Phoebe) and not women in general or just "wives of deacons." See Pliny (Ep. X. 97) _ministrae_. {Not slanderers} (\m^diabolous\). Original meaning of \diabolos\ (from \diaball^, Lu 16:1), the devil being the chief slanderer (Eph 6:11). "She-devils" in reality (Tit 2:3). "While men are more prone to be \dilogous\, double-tongued, women are more prone than men to be slanderers" (White). {Faithful in all things} (\pistas en pfsin\). Perhaps as almoners (Ellicott) the deaconesses had special temptations.

3:12 {Of one wife} (\mias gunaikos\). At a time as in verse 2. {Ruling well} (\proistamenoi kal^s\). As in 4.

3:13 {Gain to themselves} (\heautois peripoountai\). Present middle indicative of \peripoie^, old verb, to make besides (\peri\, around, over), to lay by. Reflexive (indirect) middle with reflexive pronoun (\heautois\) repeated as often happens in the _Koin_,. In N.T. only here, Lu 17:33; Ac 20:28 (Paul also, quoting Isa 43:21). {A good standing} (\bathmon kalon\). Late word from \bain^, in LXX for steps at a door (1Sa 5:5). In plural the steps of a stair. In the inscriptions it means a good foothold or standing. The ecclesiastical writers (Theodore) take it to be a higher grade or rank, but it is doubtful if Paul means that here. {Much boldness} (\poll^ n parr^sian\). A Pauline phrase (2Co 3:12; 7:4; Php 1:20). {In the faith which is in Christ Jesus} (\en pistei t^i en Christ^i I^sou\). Pauline phrase again (Ac 26:18; Ga 3:26; Col 1:4; Eph 1:15; 2Ti 1:13; 3:15).

3:14 {Shortly} (\en tachei\). Old idiom (locative case of \tachos\, quickness, speed). See Ro 16:20. A pseudonymous writer would hardly have put in this phrase. Paul's hopes were not to be realized, but he did not know that.

3:15 {But if I tarry long} (\ean de bradun^). Condition of third class with \ean\ and the present active subjunctive of \bradun^, old verb, to be slow (usually intransitive), from \bradus\ (slow, dull, Lu 24:25), in N.T. only here and 2Pe 3:9. {That thou mayest know} (\hina eid^is\). Final clause with \hina\ and second perfect active subjunctive of \oida\, to know. {How men ought}

(\p“s dei\). "How it is necessary for thee" (supply \se\ more naturally than \tina\, any one). Indirect question. {To behave themselves} (\anastrephesthai\). Present middle (direct) infinitive of \anastreph“\, old verb, to turn up and down. See 2Co 1:12; Eph 2:3. {In the house of God} (\en oik“i theou\). Probably here "household of God," that is "the family of God" rather than "the house (or temple) of God." Christians as yet had no separate houses of worship and \oikos\ commonly means "household." Christians are the \naos\ (sanctuary) of God (1Co 3:16f.; 2Co 6:16), and Paul calls them \oikeioi tou theou\ (Eph 2:19) "members of God's family." It is conduct as members of God's family (\oikos\) that Paul has in mind. {Which} (\h“tis\). "Which very house of God," agreeing (feminine) with the predicate word \ekkl“sia\ (church). {The church of the living God} (\ekkl“sia theou z“ntos\). Probably here the general church or kingdom as in Colossians and Ephesians, though the local church in verse 5. {The pillar and ground of the truth} (\stulos kai hedrai“ma t“s al“theias\). Paul changes the metaphor again as he often does. Those words are in apposition to \ekkl“sia\ and \oikos\. On \stulos\, old word for pillar, see Ga 2:9; Re 3:12 (only other N.T. examples). \Hedrai“ma\, late and rare word (from \hedraio“\, to make stable) occurs here first and only in ecclesiastical writers later. Probably it means stay or support rather than foundation or ground. See Co 1:23; 2Ti 2:19 for similar idea. See also Mt 16:18f.

3:16 {Without controversy} (\homologoumen“s\). Old adverb from the participle \homologoumenos\ from \homologe“\. Here only in N.T. "Confessedly." {Great} (\mega\). See Eph 5:32. "A great mystery." {The mystery of godliness} (\to t“s eusebeias must“rion\). See verse 9 "the mystery of the faith," and 2:2 for \eusebeia\. Here the phrase explains "a pillar and stay of the truth" (verse 15). See in particular Co 1:27. "The revealed secret of true religion, the mystery of Christianity, the Person of Christ" (Lock). {He who} (\hos\). The correct text, not \theos\ (God) the reading of the Textus Receptus (Syrian text) nor \ho\ (neuter relative, agreeing with \must“rion\) the reading of the Western documents. Westcott and Hort print this relative clause as a fragment of a Christian hymn (like Eph 5:14) in six strophes. That is probably correct. At any rate \hos\ (who) is correct and there is asyndeton (no connective) in the verbs. Christ, to whom \hos\ refers, is the mystery (Col 1:27; 2:2). {Was manifested} (\ephaner“th“\). First aorist passive indicative of \phanero“\, to manifest. Here used to describe the incarnation (\en sarki\)) of Christ (an answer also to the Docetic Gnostics). The verb is used by Paul elsewhere of the incarnation (Ro 16:26; Col 1:26) as well as of the second coming (Col 3:4). {Justified in the spirit} (\edikai“th^ en pneumatì\)). First aorist passive indicative of \dikaio“\, to declare righteous, to vindicate. Christ was vindicated in his own spirit (Heb 9:14) before men by overcoming death and rising from the dead (Ro 1:3f.). {Seen of angels} (\“phth^ aggelois\)). First aorist passive indicative of \hora“\, to see, with either the instrumental or the dative case of angels (\aggelois\)). The words were probably suggested by the appearance of Jesus (\“phth^, the usual form for the resurrection appearances of Christ) of the angels at the tomb and at the ascension of Christ. See Php 2:10; 1Pe 3:22 for the appearance of Jesus to the angels in heaven at the ascension. Some would take "angels" here to be "messengers" (the women). {Preached among the nations} (\ek^ruchth^ en ethnesin\)). First aorist passive indicative of \k^russ“\, to proclaim. The word \ethnos\ may mean "all creation" (Col 1:23) and not just Gentiles as distinct from Jews. Paul had done more of this heralding of Christ among the Gentiles than any one else. It was his glory (Eph 3:1,8). Cf. 2:7. {Believed on in the world} (\episteuth^ en kosm“i\)). First aorist indicative passive again of \pisteu“\, to believe (2Th 1:10). Cf. 1:15; 2Co 5:19. {Received up in glory} (\anel^mphth^ en dox^i\)). First aorist passive again (six verbs in the same voice and tense in succession, a rhythmic arrangement like a hymn). Cf. Ro 8:29f. This time the verb is \analamban“\, the verb used of the ascension (Ac 1:11,22, which see). In a wonderful way this stanza of a hymn presents the outline of the life of Christ.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

4:1 {Expressly} (\r^ht^s\). Late adverb, here alone in N.T., from verbal adjective \r^htos\ (from root re^h\). The reference is to the Holy Spirit, but whether to O.T. prophecy (Ac 1:16) or to some Christian utterance (2Th 2:2; 1Co 14:1ff.) we do not know. Parry recalls the words of Jesus in Mt 24:10,24. {In later times} (\en husterois kairois\). Old adjective (Mt 21:31) usually as adverb, \husteron\ (Mt 4:2). Relative time from the prediction, now coming true (a present danger). {Some shall fall away} (\apost^hontai tines\). Future middle of \aphist^hmi\, intransitive use, shall stand off from, to fall away, apostatize (2Co 12:8). {From the faith} (\t^s piste^hs\). Ablative case (separation). Not creed, but faith in God through Christ. {Giving heed} (\prosechontes\). Supply \ton noun\ (the mind) as in 3:8. {Seducing spirits} (\pneumasin planois\). Old adjective (\plan^h\, wandering), here active sense (deceiving). As substantive in 2Co 6:8. Probably some heathen or the worst of the Gnostics. {Doctrines of devils} (\didaskaliais daimoni^hn\). "Teachings of \daimons\." Definite explanation of the preceding. Cf. 1Co 10:20f.

4:2 {Through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies} (\en hupokrisei pseudolog^hn\). For \hupokrisis\, see Ga 2:13. \Pseudologos\ (\pseud^hs, leg^h\) _Koin,_ word from Aristophanes on. Here only in N.T. "A good classical word for liars on a large scale" (Parry). {Branded in their own conscience as with a hot iron} (\kekaust^hriasmen^hn t^hn idian suneid^hsin\). Accusative case \suneid^hsin\ retained with the perfect passive participle of \kaust^hriaz^h\, a rare verb only here and once in Strabo. Branded with the mark of Satan (2Ti 2:26) as Paul was with the marks of Christ (Ga 6:17). Agreeing in case with \pseudolog^hn\.

4:3 {Forbidding to marry} (\k^hluont^hn gamein\). Present active participle of common verb \k^hlu^h\, to hinder, genitive case agreeing with \pseudolog^hn\. See Col 2:16,21f., where Paul condemns the ascetic practices of the Gnostics. The Essenes, Therapeutae and other oriental sects forbade marriage. In 1Co 7 Paul does not condemn marriage. {To abstain from meats} (\apechesthai br^hmat^hn\). Infinitive dependent, not on \k“luont“n\, but on the positive idea \keleuont“n\ (implied, not expressed). Ablative case of \br“mat“n\ after \apechesthai\ (present direct middle, to hold oneself away from). See 1Co 8-10; Ro 14; 15 for disputes about "meats offered to idols" and Co 1:22f. for the Gnostic asceticism. {Which God created} (\ha ho theos ektisen\). First active indicative of \ktiz“\ (Co 1:16). Cf. 1Co 10:25. {To be received} (\eis metal^mpsin\). "For reception." Old word, only here in N.T. {By them that believe and know} (\tois pistois kai epegn“kosi\). Dative case, "for the believers and those who (one article unites closely) have known fully" (perfect active participle of \epigin“sk“\), a Pauline use of the word (Col 1:6).

4:4 {Creature} (\ktisma\). Late word from \ktiz“\, result of creating. See Ge 1:31; Mr 7:15; Ro 14:14 for the idea stated. {To be rejected} (\apobl^ton\). Old verbal adjective in passive sense from \apoball“\, to throw away, here only in N.T. {If it be received} (\lambanomenon\). "Being received." Present passive participle of \lamban“\, in conditional sense, "with thanksgiving."

4:5 {It is sanctified} (\hagiazetai\). Present passive indicative of \hagiaz“\, here "rendered holy" rather than "declared holy." Cf. verse 4. {Through the word of God and prayers} (\dia logou theou kai enteuxe“s\). See 2:1 for \enteuxis\. Paul seems to refer to Genesis 1. It is almost a hendiadys "by the use of Scripture in prayer."

4:6 {If thou put the brethren in mind of these things} (\tauta hupotithemenos tois adelphois\). Present middle participle of \hupotith^mi\, to place under, to suggest, old and common verb, here only in N.T., "suggesting these things to the brethren." {Thou shalt be a good minister of Christ Jesus} (\kalos es^i diakonos Christou I^sou\). This beautiful phrase covers one's whole service for Christ (3:1-7). {Nourished in} (\entrephomenos\). Present passive participle of \entreph“\, old verb, to nourish in, used by Plato of "nourished in the laws," here only in the N.T. {The words of the faith} (\tois logois t^s piste“s\). Locative case. The right diet for babes in Christ. The Bolsheviks in Russia are feeding the children on atheism to get rid of God. {Which thou hast followed} (\h^i par^kolouth^kas\). Perfect active indicative of \parakolouthe“\, old verb, to follow beside, of persons (often in old Greek) or of ideas and things (Lu 1:3; 1Ti 4:6; 2Ti 3:10). With associative instrumental case \hⁱ\ (which).

4:7 {Refuse} (\para^{it}ou\). Present middle imperative second person singular of \paraite“, old verb, to ask of one and then to beg off from one as in Lu 14:18f.; Ac 25:11; 1Ti 4:7; 5:11; Tit 3:10; 2Ti 2:23. {Profane} (\beb^ˈlous\). See 1:9. {Old wives' fables} (\gra^ˈdeis muthous\). On \muthos\, see 1:4. \Gra^ˈdeis\, late word (Strabo, Galen) from \graus\, old woman, and \eidos\ (look, appearance). Such as old women tell to children like the Gnostic aeons. {Exercise thyself} (\gumnaze seauton\). Present active imperative of \gumnaz“, originally to exercise naked (\gumnos\). Old and common verb, but in N.T. only here and Heb 5:14; 12:11.

4:8 {Bodily exercise} (\h^ˈs^ˈmatik^ˈ gumnasia\). \Gumnasia\ (from \gumnaz“, also a common old word, here only in N.T. So also \s^ˈmatik^ˈ\ (from \s^ˈma\, body) in N.T. only here and Lu 3:22. {Profitable} (\^ˈphe^ˈlimos\). Another old word (from \^ˈphele“, to help, to profit), in N.T. only here, Tit 3:8; 2Ti 3:16. {For a little} (\pros oligon\). "For little." Probably extent in contrast to \pros panta\ (for all things), though in Jas 4:14 it is time "for a little while." {Which now is} (\t^ˈs nun\). "The now life." {Of that which is to come} (\t^ˈs mellous^ˈs\). "Of the coming (future) life."

4:9 See 1:15 for these very words, but here the phrase points to the preceding words, not to the following as there.

4:10 {To this end} (\eis touto\). The godliness (\eusebeia\) of verse 8. See 2Co 6:10 as Paul's own commentary. {We labour} (\kopi^ˈmen\, Col 1:29) {and strive} (\kai ag^ˈnizometha\, Col 1:29). Both Pauline words. {Because we have set our hope} (\hoti elpikamen\). Perfect active indicative of \elpiz“ (\Ro 15:12). {Saviour of all men} (\s^ˈt^ˈr pant^ˈn anthr^ˈp^ˈn\). See 1:1 for \s^ˈt^ˈr\ applied to God as here. Not that all men "are saved" in the full sense, but God gives life (6:13) to all (Ac 17:28). {Specially of them that believe} (\malista pist^ˈn\). Making a distinction in the kinds of salvation meant. "While God is potentially Saviour of all, He is actually Saviour of the \pistoι" (White). So Jesus is termed "Saviour of the World" (Joh 4:42). Cf. Ga 6:10.

4:12 {Despise} (\kataphroneit^ˈ“\). Imperative active third singular of \kataphrone“, old verb, to think down on, to despise (Ro 2:4). {Thy youth} (\sou t^ˆs neot^ˆtos\). Genitive case of old word (from \neos\) as in Mr 10:20. {Be thou} (\ginou\). Present middle imperative of \ginomai\, "Keep on becoming thou." {An ensample} (\tupos\). Old word from \tupt^ˆ\, a type. Pauline use of the word (1Th 1:7; 2Th 3:9; Php 3:17; Tit 2:7). {To them that believe} (\t^ˆˆn pist^ˆn\). Objective genitive. {In word} (\en log^ˆi\). In conversation as well as in public speech. {In manner of life} (\en anastroph^ˆi\). "In bearing" (Ga 1:13; Eph 4:22). {In purity} (\en hagneifi\). Old word from \hagneu^ˆ\ (\hagnos\). Sinlessness of life. Used of a Nazirite (Nu 6:2,21). Only here and 5:2 in N.T.

4:13 {Till I come} (\he^ˆs erchomai\). "While I am coming" (present indicative with \he^ˆs\), not "till I come" (\he^ˆs elth^ˆ\). {Give heed} (\proseche\). Present active imperative, supply \ton noun\, "keep on putting thy mind on." {The reading} (\t^ˆi anagn^ˆsei\). Old word from \anagin^ˆsk^ˆ\. See 2Co 3:14. Probably in particular the public reading of the Scriptures (Ac 13:15), though surely private reading is not to be excluded. {To exhortation} (\t^ˆi parakl^ˆsei\), {to teaching} (\t^ˆi didaskalifi\). Two other public functions of the minister. Probably Paul does not mean for the exhortation to precede the instruction, but the reverse in actual public work. Exhortation needs teaching to rest it upon, a hint for preachers today.

4:14 {Neglect not} (\m^ˆ amelei\). Present active imperative in prohibition of \amele^ˆ\, old verb, rare in N.T. (Mt 22:5; 1Ti 4:14; Heb 2:3; 8:9). From \amel^ˆs\ (\a\ privative and \melei\, not to care). Use with genitive. {The gift that is in thee} (\tou en soi charismatos\). Late word of result from \charizomai\, in papyri (Preisigke), a regular Pauline word in N.T. (1Co 1:7; 2Co 1:11; Ro 1:11; etc.). Here it is God's gift to Timothy as in 2Ti 1:6. {By prophecy} (\dia proph^ˆteias\). Accompanied by prophecy (1:18), not bestowed by prophecy. {With the laying on of the hands of the presbytery} (\meta epithese^ˆs t^ˆˆn cheir^ˆn tou presbuteriou\). In Ac 13:2f., when Barnabas and Saul were formally set apart to the mission campaign (not then ordained as ministers, for they were already that), there was the call of the Spirit and the laying on of hands with prayer. Here again \meta\ does not express instrument or means, but merely accompaniment. In 2Ti 1:6 Paul speaks only of his own laying on of hands, but the rest of the presbytery no doubt did so at the same time and the reference is to this incident. There is no way to tell when and where it was done, whether at Lystra when Timothy joined Paul's party or at Ephesus just before Paul left Timothy there (1:3). \Epithesis\ (from epitith^{mi}, to lay upon) is an old word, in LXX, etc. In the N.T. we find it only here, 2Ti 1:16; Ac 8:18; Heb 6:2, but the verb \epitith^{mi}\ with \tas cheiras\ more frequently (Ac 6:6 of the deacons; 8:19; 13:3; 1Ti 5:22, etc.). \Presbuterion\ is a late word (ecclesiastical use also), first for the Jewish Sanhedrin (Lu 22:66; Ac 22:5), then (here only in N.T.) of Christian elders (common in Ignatius), though \presbuteros\ (elder) for preachers (bishops) is common (Ac 11:30; 15:2; 20:17, etc.).

4:15 {Be diligent in these things} (\tauta meleta\). Old verb from \melet^\ (care, practice), present active imperative, "keep on practising these things." In N.T. only here and Ac 4:25. {Give thyself wholly to them} (\en toutois isthi\). Present imperative second person singular of \eimi\, "keep on in these things." Note five uses of \en\ in verse 12 and three datives in verse 14. Plutarch (Pomp. 656 B) says Caesar was \en toutois\ ("in these things"). It is like our "up to his ears" in work (\in medias res\) and sticking to his task. {Thy progress} (\sou h[^] prokop^\). _Koin,_ word from \prokopt^\, to cut forward, to blaze the way, in N.T. only here and Php 1:12,25. Paul's concern (purpose, \hina\ and present subjunctive \i^\ of \eimi\)) is that Timothy's "progress" may be "manifest to all." It is inspiring to see a young preacher grow for then the church will grow with him.

4:16 {Take heed to thyself} (\epeche seautⁱ\). Present active imperative of old verb \epech^\, to hold upon (Php 2:1,16), but here \ton noun\ (the mind) must be supplied as in Ac 3:5 and as is common with \prosech^\. With dative case \seautⁱ\. "Keep on paying attention to thyself." Some young preachers are careless about their health and habits. Some are too finical. {And to the teaching} (\kai tⁱ didaskalifi\). This is important also. {Continue in these things} (\epimene autois\). Present active imperative of \epimen^\, old and common verb to stay by the side of a person or thing. See Ro 6:1; Col 1:23. "Stay by them," "stick to them," "see them through." "Stick to the business of framing your own life and your teaching on right lines" (Parry). {Thou shalt save} (\s^z\). Future active of \s^z^\, effective future, finally save. Cf. 1Co 9:27; Joh 10:9.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

5:1 {Rebuke not an elder} (\presbuter“i m^ epipl^x^is\). Dative case \presbuter“i\ used in the usual sense of an older man, not a minister (bishop as in 3:2) as is shown by "as a father." First aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive with negative \m^ (\i>prohibition against committing the act) of \epipl^ss“, to strike upon, old verb, but here only in N.T. and in figurative sense with words rather than with fists. Respect for age is what is here commanded, an item appropriate to the present time. {The younger men as brethren} (\ne“terous h“s adelphous\). Comparative adjective \ne“teros\ from \neos\ (young). No article, "younger men." Wise words for the young minister to know how to conduct himself with old men (reverence) and young men (fellowship, but not stooping to folly with them).

5:2 {The elder women as mothers} (\presbuteras h“s m^teras\). Anarthrous again, "older women as mothers." Respect and reverence once more. {The younger as sisters, in all purity} (\ne“teras h“s adelphas en pas^i hagnifi\). Anarthrous also and comparative form as in verse 1. See 4:12 for \hagnia\. No sort of behavior will so easily make or mar the young preacher as his conduct with young women.

5:3 {That are widows indeed} (\tas ont“s ch^ras\). For \ont“s\ (actually, really), see Lu 23:47; 1Co 14:25; and verse 5. For widows (\ch^ra\ see Mr 12:40,42; Ac 6:1; 1Co 7:8. Parry notes that in verses 3-8 Paul discusses widows who are in distress and 9-16 those who are in the employment of the local church for certain work. Evidently, as in Acts 6:1-6, so here in Ephesus there had arisen some trouble over the widows in the church. Both for individual cases of need and as a class Timothy is to show proper respect (\timf\, keep on honouring) the widows.

5:4 {Grandchildren} (\ekgonas\). Old word from \ekginomai\, here only in N.T. {Let them learn} (\manthanet“san\). The children and grandchildren of a widow. Present active imperative third person plural of \manthan“. "Let them keep on learning." {First} (\pr“ton\). Adverb, first before anything else. No "corban" business here. No acts of "piety" toward God will make up for impiety towards parents. {To shew piety} (\eusebein\). Present active infinitive with \manthanet“san\ and old verb, in N.T. only here and Ac 17:23. From \euseb^s\ (\eu, sebomai), pious, dutiful. {Their own family} (\ton idion oikon\). "Their own household." Filial piety is primary unless parents interfere with duty to Christ (Lu 14:26). {To requite} (\amoibas apodidonai\). Present active infinitive of \apodid“mi\, to give back, old and common verb (Ro 2:6), to keep on giving back. \Amoibas\ (from \ameibomai\, to requite like for like) is old and common word, but here only in N.T. {Their parents} (\tois progonois\). Dative case of old and common word \progonos\ (from \proginomai\, to come before), "ancestor." In N.T. only here and 2Ti 1:3. See 2:3 for "acceptable" (\apodekton\).

5:5 {Desolate} (\memon“men^). Perfect passive participle of \mono“\ (from \monos\), "left alone," old verb, here alone in N.T. Without husband, children, or other close kin. {Hath her hope set on God} (\^lpiken epi theon\). Perfect active indicative of \elpiz“\, "hath placed her hope (and keeps it) on God." Text doubtful whether God (\theon\) or Lord (\Kurion\). {Continues} (\prosmenei\). See on ^1:3. With dative case here. {Night and day} (\nuktos kai h^meras\). "By night and by day" (genitive, not accusative). Paul does not say that she should pray "all night and day."

5:6 {She that giveth herself to pleasure} (\h^ spatal“sa\). Present active participle of \splatala“\, late verb (Polybius) from \spatal^ (\riotous, luxurious living). In N.T. only here and Jas 5:5.

5:7 {That they may be without reproach} (\hina anepil^mptoi “sin\). See 3:2 for \anepil^mptos\. Final clause with \hina\ and present subjunctive.

5:8 {Provideth not for his own} (\t“n idi“n ou pronoei\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and present active (or middle \pronoeitai\) indicative of \pronoe“\, old verb, to think beforehand. Pauline word in N.T. only here, 2Co 8:21; Ro 12:7. With genitive case. {He hath denied the faith} (\t^n pistin ^rn^tai\). Perfect middle indicative of old verb \arneomai\. His act of impiety belies (Tit 1:16) his claim to the faith (Re 2:13). {Worse than an unbeliever} (\apistou cheir“n\). Ablative case of \apistou\ after the comparative \cheir“n\. Who makes no profession of piety.

5:9 {Let none be enrolled as a widow} (\ch^{ra} katalegesth^{ra}\). Present passive imperative of \kataleg^{ra}\, old verb, to set down in an official list, only here in N.T. "Let a widow be enrolled," the negative coming later, "having become of no less than sixty years" (\m^{el}atton etⁿ hex^konta gegonuia\). Second perfect active participle of \ginomai\. For the case of \etⁿ\, see Lu 2:42. This list of genuine widows (verses 3,5) apparently had some kind of church work to do (care for the sick, the orphans, etc.). {The wife of one man} (\henos andros gun^{ra}\). Widows on this list must not be married a second time. This interpretation is not so clear for 3:2,12; Tit 1:6.

5:10 {If she hath brought up children} (\ei eteknotroph^{ra}sen\). Condition of first class. Late and rare word (Aristotle, Epictetus), first aorist active indicative of \teknotrophe^{ra}\ (\teknotrophos\, from \teknon, treph^{ra}\), here only in N.T. Qualification for her work as leader. {If she hath used hospitality to strangers} (\ei exenodoch^{ra}sen\). First aorist again and same condition. Late form (Dio Cassius) of old verb \xenodoke^{ra}\ (Herodotus), to welcome strangers (\xenos dechomai\). Only here in N.T. Hospitality another qualification for such leadership (3:2). {If she hath washed the saints' feet} (\ei hagiⁿ podas enipsen\). Same condition and tense of \nipt^{ra}\ (old form niz^{ra}), common in N.T. (Joh 13:5). Proof of her hospitality, not of its being a church ordinance. {If she hath relieved the afflicted} (\ei thlibomenois ep^{ra}rkesen\). Same condition and tense of \eparke^{ra}\, to give sufficient aid, old word, in N.T. only here and verse 16. Experience that qualified her for eleemosynary work. {If she hath diligently followed} (\ei ep^{ra}kolouth^{ra}sen\). Same condition and tense of \epakolouth^{ra}\, old verb, to follow close upon (\epi\). So here, verse 24; 1Pe 2:21. In a word such a widow must show her qualifications for leadership as with bishops and deacons.

5:11 {But younger widows refuse} (\ne^{ra}teras de ch^{ra}ras paraitou\). Present middle imperative as in 4:7. "Beg off from." They lack experience as above and they have other ambitions. {When they have waxed wanton} (\hotan katastr^{ra}nias^{ra}sin\). First aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \katastr^{ra}nia^{ra}\, late compound (only here and Ignatius), to feel the impulse of sexual desire, but simplex \str^{ra}nia^{ra}\ (Re 18:7,9). Souter renders it here "exercise youthful vigour against Christ" (\tou Christou\, genitive case after kata in composition).

5:12 {Condemnation} (\krima\). See 3:6. {They have rejected} (\thet^san\). First aorist passive of \athete“, late verb (first in LXX and Polybius), to reject, set aside (from \athetos). See 1Th 4:8; Ga 2:21. {Their first faith} (\t^np r“t^npistin\). "Their first pledge" (promise, contract) to Christ. It is like breaking the marriage contract. Evidently one of the pledges on joining the order of widows was not to marry. Parry suggests a kind of ordination as with deacons and bishops (technical use of \krima and \pistis).

5:13 {And withal} (\hama de kai\). See Phm 1:22 for this very phrase, "and at the same time also." Such young enrolled widows have other perils also. {They learn to be idle} (\argai manthanousin\). There is no \einai\ (to be) in the Greek. This very idiom without \einai\ after \manthan“\ occurs in Plato and Dio Chrysostom, though unusual. \Argai\ (idle) is old adjective (\a\ privative and \ergon, without work). See Mt 20:3; Tit 1:12. {Going about} (\perierchomenai\). Present middle participle of \perierchomai\, old compound verb. See Ac 19:13 of strollers. {From house to house} (\tas oikias\). Literally "the houses," "wandering around the houses." Vivid picture of idle tattlers and gossipers. {But tattlers also} (\alla kai phluaroi\). Old word from \phlu“\ (to boil up, to throw up bubbles, like blowing soap bubbles). Only here in N.T. \Phluare“\ in 3Jo 1:10 only in N.T. {And busybodies} (\kai periergoi\). Old word (from \peri, ergon), busy about trifles to the neglect of important matters. In N.T. only here and Ac 19:19. See 2Th 3:11 for \periergazomai\. {Things which they ought not} (\ta m^deonta\). "The not necessary things," and, as a result, often harmful. See Tit 1:11 \ha m^dei\ (which things are not necessary).

5:14 {I desire} (\boulomai\). See 2:8. {The younger widows} (\ne“teras\). No article and no word for widows, though that is clearly the idea. \Ne“teras\ is accusative of general reference with \gamein\ (to marry) the object (present infinitive active) of \boulomai\. {Bear children} (\teknogonein\). A compound verb here only in N.T. and nowhere else save in Anthol. See \teknogonia\ in 2:15. {Rule the household} (\oikodespotein\). Late verb from \oikodespot^s\ (Mr 14:14), twice in the papyri, only here in N.T. Note that the wife is here put as ruler of the household, proper recognition of her influence, "new and improved position" (Liddon). {Occasion} (\aphorm^n\). Old word (\apo, horm^), a base to rush from, Pauline use in 2Co 5:12; 11:12; Ga 5:13. {To the adversary} (\tⁱ antikeimenⁱ). Dative case of the articular participle of \antikeimai, a Pauline idiom (Php 1:28). {Reviling} (\loidorias). Old word (from \loidore^a), in N.T. only here and 1Pe 3:9. Genitive case with \charin.

5:15 {Are turned aside} (\exetrap^{san}). Second aorist (effective) passive indicative of \ektrep^a. See 1:6. {After Satan} (\opis^a tou Satan^f). "Behind Satan." Late use of \opis^a (behind) as a preposition. Used by Jesus of disciples coming behind (after) him (Mt 16:24).

5:16 {That believeth} (\pist^a). "Believing woman." {Hath widows} (\echei ch^{ras}). The "any believing woman" is one of the household-rulers of verse 14. The "widows" here are the widows dependent on her and who are considered as candidates to be enrolled in the list. {Let her relieve them} (\eparkeit^a autais). For this verb (imperative present active) see verse 10. {Let not be burdened} (\m^a bareisth^a). Present passive imperative (in prohibition \m^a) of \bare^a, old verb (\baros, burden), Pauline word (2Co 1:8). {That are widows indeed} (\tais ont^as ch^{rais}). Dative case with \eparkesⁱ (first aorist active subjunctive with \hina, final clause). See verse 3 for this use of \ont^as with \ch^{rais} "the qualified and enrolled widows." Cf. verse 9.

5:17 {The elders that rule well} (\hoi kal^as proest^ates presbuteroi). See verse 1 for ordinary sense of \presbuteros for "older man." But here of position in same sense as \episkopos (3:2) as in Tit 1:5 = \episkopos in verse 7. Cf. Luke's use of \presbuteros (Ac 20:17) = Paul's \episkopous (Ac 20:28). \Proest^ates is second perfect active participle of \proist^{mi} (intransitive use) for which see 3:4. {Let be counted worthy} (\axiousth^asan). Present passive imperative of \axio^a, to deem worthy (2Th 1:11). With genitive case here. {Of double honour} (\dipl^s tim^s). Old and common contract adjective (\diploos, two-fold, in opposition to \haploos, single fold). But why "of double honour"? See 6:1 for "of all honour." White suggests "remuneration" rather than "honour" for \tim^s (a common use for price or pay). Liddon proposes "honorarium" (both honour and pay and so "double"). Wetstein gives numerous examples of soldiers receiving double pay for unusual services. Some suggest twice the pay given the enrolled widows. {Especially those who labour in word and teaching} (\malista hoi kopi“ntes en log“i kai didaskalifi\).

Either those who work hard or toil (usual meaning of \kopia“\, 2Ti 2:6) in preaching and teaching (most probable meaning. See verse 18) or those who teach and preach and not merely preside (a doubtful distinction in "elders" at this time). See Tit 1:8f. See both \kopia“\ and \proistamai\ used for same men (elders) in 1Th 5:12 and the use of \kopia“\ in 1Co 15:10; 16:16.

5:18 {Thou shalt not muzzle} (\ou phim“seis\). Prohibition by \ou\ and future (volitive) indicative of \phimo“\ (from \phimos\, muzzle), old word, quoted also in 1Co 9:9 as here from De 25:4, and for the same purpose, to show the preacher's right to pay for his work. See 1Co 9:9 for \alo“nta\ (when he treadeth out the corn). {The labourer is worthy of his hire} (\axios ho ergat^s tou misthou autou\). These words occur in precisely this form in Lu 10:7. It appears also in Mt 10:10 with \t^s troph^s\ (food) instead of \tou misthou\. In 1Co 9:14 Paul has the sense of it and says: "so also the Lord ordained," clearly meaning that Jesus had so said. It only remains to tell whether Paul here is quoting an unwritten saying of Jesus as he did in Ac 20:35 or even the Gospel of Luke or Q (the Logia of Jesus). There is no way to decide this question. If Luke wrote his Gospel before A.D. 62 as is quite possible and Acts by A.D. 63, he could refer to the Gospel. It is not clear whether Scripture is here meant to apply to this quotation from the Lord Jesus. For \ergat^s\ (labourer) see Php 3:2.

5:19 {Against an elder} (\kata presbuterou\). In the official sense of verses 17f. {Receive not} (\m^ paradechou\). Present middle imperative with \m^ (prohibition) of \paradechomai\, to receive, to entertain. Old verb. See Ac 22:18. {Accusation} (\kat^gorian\). Old word (from \kat^goros\). In N.T. only here, Tit 1:6; Joh 18:29 in critical text. {Except} (\ektos ei m^). For this double construction see 1Co 14:5; 15:2. {At the mouth of} (\epi\). Idiomatic use of \epi\ (upon the basis of) as in 2Co 13:1.

5:20 {Them that sin} (\tous hamartanontas\). The elders who continue to sin (present active participle). {In the sight of all} (\en“pion pant“n\). "In the eye of (\ho en opi “n\, the one who is in the eye of, then combined = \en“pion\ all" the elders (or even of the church). See next verse 21 and Ga 1:20.

Public rebuke when a clear case, not promiscuous gossip. {May be in fear} (\phobon ech“sin\). Present active subjunctive with \hina\ (final clause), "may keep on having fear" (of exposure). Possibly, "the rest of the elders."

5:21 {The elect angels} (\t“n eklekt“n aggel“n\). For this triad of God, Christ, angels, see Lu 9:26. "Elect" in the sense of the "holy" angels who kept their own principality (Jude 1:6) and who did not sin (2Pe 2:4). Paul shows his interest in angels in 1Co 4:9; 11:10. {Observe} (\phulax“is\). First aorist active subjunctive of \phulass“\, to guard, to keep (Ro 2:26). Subfinal use of \hina\. {Without prejudice} (\ch“ris prokrimatos\). Late and rare word (from \prokin“\, to judge beforehand), three times in the papyri, here only in N.T. "Without prejudgment." {By partiality} (\kata prosklisin\). Late word from \prosklin“\, to incline towards one (Ac 5:36), only here in N.T.

5:22 {Lay hands hastily} (\cheiras tache“s epitithe\). Present active imperative of \epitith“mi\ in the sense of approval (ordination) as in Ac 6:6; 13:3. But it is not clear whether it is the case of ministers just ordained as in 4:14 (\epithesis\), or of warning against hasty ordination of untried men, or the recognition and restoration of deposed ministers (verse 20) as suits the context. The prohibition suits either situation, or both. {Be partakers of other men's sins} (\koin“nei hamartiais allotriais\). Present active imperative of \koin“ne“\ (from \koin“nos\, partner) with \m^ in prohibition with associative instrumental case as in 2Jo 1:11; Ro 12:13. On \allotrios\ (belonging to another) see Ro 14:4. {Keep thyself pure} (\seauton hagnon t“rei\). "Keep on keeping thyself pure." Present active imperative of \t“re“\.

5:23 {Be no longer a drinker of water} (\m“keti hudropotei\). Present active imperative (prohibition) of \hudropote“\, old verb (from \hudropot“s\, water drinker, \hud“r, pin“\), here only in N.T. Not complete asceticism, but only the need of some wine urged in Timothy's peculiar physical condition (a sort of medical prescription for this case). {But use a little wine} (\alla ain“i olig“i chr“\). Present middle imperative of \chraomai\ with instrumental case. The emphasis is on \olig“i\ (a little). {For thy stomach's sake} (\dia ton stomachon\). Old word from \stoma\ (mouth). In Homer throat, opening of the stomach (Aristotle), stomach in Plutarch. Here only in N.T. Our word "stomach." {Thine often infirmities} (\tas puknas sou astheneias). \Puknos\ is old word, dense, frequent. In N.T. only here, Lu 5:33; Ac 24:26. \Astheneias\ = weaknesses, lack of strength (Ro 8:26). Timothy was clearly a semi-invalid.

5:24 {Evident} (\prod^loi). "Openly plain," "plain before all." Old word, in N.T. only here and Heb 7:24. {Going before unto judgment} (\proagousai eis krisin). See 1:18 for \proag“. The sins are so plain that they receive instant condemnation. {And some men also they follow after} (\tisin de kai epakolouthousin). Associative instrumental case \tisin\ with \epakolouthousin\ for which verb see verse 10, "dog their steps" (Parry) like 1Pe 2:21, not clearly manifest at first, but come out plainly at last. How true that is of secret sins.

5:25 {Such as are otherwise} (\ta all^s echonta). "Those (deeds, \erga) which have it otherwise." That is good deeds not clearly manifest. {Cannot be hid} (\krub^nai ou dunantai). Second aorist passive infinitive of \krupt“. There is comfort here for modest preachers and other believers whose good deeds are not known and not blazoned forth. They will come out in the end. See Mt 5:14-16.

6:1 {Under the yoke} (\hupo zugon). As slaves (\doulói, bondsmen). Perhaps under heathen masters (1Pe 2:18). For the slave problem, see also Phm 1; Col 3:22; Eph 6:5; Tit 2:9. See Mt 11:29 for Christ's "yoke" (\zugon, from \zeugnumi, to join). {Their own masters} (\tous idious despotas). That is always where the shoe pinches. Our "despot" is this very Greek word, the strict correlative of slave (\doulos), while \kurios has a wider outlook. Old word only here, Tit 2:9; 2Ti 2:21; 1Pe 2:18 for human masters. Applied to God in Lu 2:29; Ac 4:24,29 and to Christ in 2Pe 2:1. {The name of God} (\to onoma tou theou). See Ro 2:24. If the heathen could say that Christian slaves were not as dependable as non-Christian slaves. Negative purpose with \hina m^ and present passive subjunctive (\blasph^m^tai).

6:2 {Let not despise them} (\m^ kataphroneit^san). Negative imperative active third plural of \kataphrone^s, to think down on. See 4:12. He must not presume on the equality of Christian brotherhood not allowed by the state's laws. Some of these Christian slaves might be pastors of churches to which the master belonged. For the difficulty of the Christian master's position, see 1Co 7:22; Phm 1:16. {But rather} (\alla mallon). Render the Christian Master better service. {They that partake of the benefit} (\hoi t^s energias antilambanomenoi). For \euergerias (genitive case after participle) see Ac 4:9, only other N.T. example of this old word. Present middle participle of \antilamban^s, old verb, to take in turn, to lay fast hold of, in N.T. only here, Lu 1:54; Ac 20:35.

6:3 {Teacheth a different doctrine} (\heterodidaskalei). See 1:3 for this verb, present active indicative here in condition of first class. {Consenteth not} (\m^ proserchetai). Also condition of first class with \m^ instead of \ou. \Proserchomai (old verb, to come to, to approach, with dative) is common enough in N.T. (Heb 4:16; 7:25, etc.), but in the metaphorical sense of coming to one's ideas, assenting to, here only in N.T., but is so used in Philo and Irenaeus (Ellicott). {Sound words} (\hugiainousin logois). See 1:10 for \hugiain^s.

{The words of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\tois tou kuriou h^m“n I^{sou} Christou\). Either subjective genitive (the words from the Lord Jesus, a collection of his sayings in Lock's opinion like 5:18; Ac 20:35, at least in the Spirit of Jesus as Ac 16:7; 1Co 11:23) or objective genitive about Jesus like 2Ti 1:8; 1Co 1:18. {According to godliness} (\kata eusebeian\). Promoting (designed for) godliness as in Tit 1:1.

6:4 {He is puffed up} (\tetuph^h“tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \tupho^h“, for which see 3:6. {Knowing nothing} (\m^{den} epistamenos\). Present middle participle of \epistamai\. Ignorance is a frequent companion of conceit. {Doting} (\nos^h“n\). Present active participle of \nose^h“, to be sick, to be morbid over, old word, only here in N.T. {Disputes of words} (\logomachias\). Our "logomachy." From \logomache^h“\ (2Ti 2:14), and that from \logos\ and \machomai\, to fight over words, late and rare word, here only in N.T. See Plato (_Tim_. 1085 F) for "wars in words" (\machas en logois\). {Whereof} (\ex h^h“n\). "From which things." {Surmisings} (\huponoiai\). Old word from \huponoie^h“, to surmise, to suspect (Ac 25:18), only here in N.T. All these words are akin (envy, \phthonos\, strife, \eris\, railings or slanders, \blasph^miai\), all products of an ignorant and conceited mind.

6:5 {Wranglings} (\diaparatribai\). Late and rare (Clem. of Alex.) double compound (\dia\, mutual or thorough, \paratribai\, irritations or rubbings alongside). "Mutual irritations" (Field). {Corrupted in mind} (\diephtharmen^h“n ton noun\). Perfect passive participle of \diaphtheire^h“, to corrupt, genitive case agreeing with \anthr^h“p^h“n\ (of men) and retaining the accusative \ton noun\. {Bereft of the truth} (\apester^hmen^h“n t^hs al^htheias\). Perfect passive participle of \apostere^h“, old verb (1Co 6:8) with the ablative case after it (\al^htheias\). {A way of gain} (\porismon\). Late word from \poriz^h“, to provide, to gain. Only here in N.T. "Rich Christians." Predicate accusative with \einai\ (indirect assertion) in apposition with \eusebeian\, the accusative of general reference.

6:6 {With contentment} (\meta autarkeias\). Old word from \autark^hs\ (\autos, arke^h“) as in Php 4:11. In N.T. only here and 2Co 9:8. This attitude of mind is Paul's conception of "great gain."

6:7 {Brought into} (\eis^hnegkamen\, second aorist active stem with first aorist ending, common in the _Koin,_), {carry out} (\exenegkein), second aorist active infinitive). Note play on the prepositions \eis- and \ex-.

6:8 {Food} (\diatrophas). Plural, supports or nourishments (from \diatreph“, to support). Old word, here only in N.T. {Covering} (\skepasmata). Plural, "coverings." Late word from \skepaz“, to cover. Here only in N.T. {We shall be content} (\arkesth^sometha). First future passive of \arke“, to be content. Old word. See 2Co 12:9. This is the \autarkeia of verse 6. {There with} (\toutois). Associative instrumental case, "with these."

6:9 {Desire to be rich} (\boulomenoi ploutein). The will (\boulomai) to be rich at any cost and in haste (Pr 28:20). Some MSS. have "trust in riches" in Mr 10:24. Possibly Paul still has teachers and preachers in mind. {Fall into} (\empiptousin eis). See on 3:6 for \en -- eis and 3:7 for \pagida (snare). {Foolish} (\ano^tous). See Ga 3:1,3. {Hurtful} (\blaberas). Old adjective from \blapt“, to injure, here alone in N.T. {Drown} (\buthizousin). Late word (literary _Koin,_) from \buthos (bottom), to drag to the bottom. In N.T. only here and Lu 5:7 (of the boat). Drown in the lusts with the issue "in destruction and perdition" (\eis olethron kai ap^leian). Not annihilation, but eternal punishment. The combination only here, but for \olethros, see 1Th 5:3; 2Th 1:9; 1Co 5:5 and for \ap^leia, see 2Th 2:3; Php 3:19.

6:10 {The love of money} (\h^philarguria). Vulgate, _avaritia_. Common word (from \philarguros, 2Ti 3:12, and that from \philos, arguros), only here in N.T. Refers to verse 9 (\boulomenoi ploutein). {A root of all kinds of evil} (\riza pant^n t^ n kak^ n). A root (\riza). Old word, common in literal (Mt 3:10) and metaphorical sense (Ro 11:11-18). Field (_Ot. Norv_) argues for "the root" as the idea of this predicate without saying that it is the only root. Undoubtedly a proverb that Paul here quotes, attributed to Bion and to Democritus (\t^ n philargurian einai m^tropolin pant^ n t^ n kak^ n), where "metropolis" takes the place of "root." Surely men today need no proof of the fact that men and women will commit any sin or crime for money. {Reaching after} (\oregomenoi). Present middle participle of \oreg“ (see 3:1) with genitive \h^s (which). {Have been led astray} (\apeplan^th^san). and Mr 13:22. {Have pierced themselves through} (\heautous periepeiran\). First aorist active (with reflexive pronoun) of late compound \peripeir“, only here in N.T. Perfective use of \peri\ (around, completely to pierce). {With many sorrows} (\odunais pollais\). Instrumental case of \odun^ (consuming, eating grief). In N.T. only here and Ro 9:2.

6:11 {O man of God} (\“anthr“pe theou\). In N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:17, there general and here personal appeal to Timothy. Cf. Second (ingressive) aorist middle imperative of \epilamban“, "get a grip on." See same verb with genitive also in verse 19. {Thou wast called} (\ekl^th^s\). First aorist passive of \kale“ as in 1Co 1:9; Col 3:15. {The good confession} (\t^ n kal^ n homologian\). Cognate accusative with \h“molog^sas\ (first aorist active indicative of \homologe“, the public confession in baptism which many witnessed. See it also in verse 13 of Jesus).

6:13 {Who quickeneth all things} (\tou z“ogonountos ta panta\). Present active participle of \z“ogone“ (\z“ogonos\, from \z“os, gen“), late word to give life, to bring forth alive, in N.T. only here and Ac 7:19. See 1Sa 2:6. {Before Pontius Pilate} (\epi Pontiou Peilatou\). Not "in the time of," but "in the presence of." {Witnessed} (\martur^santos\). Note \marture“, not \homologe“ as in verse 12. Christ gave his evidence as a witness to the Kingdom of God. Evidently Paul knew some of the facts that appear in Joh 18.

6:14 {That thou keep} (\t^r^sai se\). First aorist active infinitive of \t^re“, with accusative of general reference (\se\ in indirect command after \paraggell“. {Without spot} (\aspilon\). Late adjective (\a\ privative, \spilos\, spot, Eph 5:27). In inscription and papyri. {Without reproach} (\anepil^mpton\). See 3:2; 5:7. {Until the appearing} (\mechri t^s epiphaneias\). "Until the epiphany" (the second epiphany or coming of Christ). Late word in inscriptions for important event like the epiphany of Caligula, in the papyri as a medical term. In 2Th 2:18 we have both \epiphaneia\ and \parousia\. See Tit 2:13; 2Ti 1:10; 4:1,8.

"The King of those who rule as kings." Oriental title. So with "Lord of lords." See Re 10:16.

6:16 {Who only hath immortality} (\ho monos ech^"n athanasian\). Domitian demanded that he be addressed as "_Dominus et Deus noster_." Emperor worship may be behind the use of \monos\ (alone) here. {Unapproachable} (\aprositon\). See Ps 104:2. Late compound verbal adjective (\a\ privative, \pros, ienai, to go). Here only in N.T. Literary _Koin,_ word. {Nor can see} (\oude idein dunatai\). See \aoraton\ in Col 1:15 and also Joh 1:18; Mt 11:27. The "amen" marks the close of the doxology as in 1:17.

6:19 {Laying up in store} (\apoth^saurizontas\). Late literary word (\apo\ and \th^sauriz“\), only here in N.T. Same paradox as in Mt 6:19f., "laying up in store" by giving it away. {Which is life indeed} (\t^s ont“s z“^s\). See 5:3 for \ont“s\). This life is merely the shadow of the eternal reality to come.

See substantive also in 2Ti 1:12,14. {Turning away from} (\ektrepomenos\). Present middle participle of \ektrep“\, for which see 1:6; 5:15. {Babblings} (\kenoph“nias\). [\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {According to the promise of the life which is in Christ Jesus} (\kat' epaggelian z' t's en Christ' i I'sou\). "With a view to the fulfilment of the promise." See Tit 1:1 for this same use of \kata\. For \kat' epaggelian\ see Ga 3:29. See 1Ti 4:8 for the phrase "promise of life." Here or there "life that in Christ Jesus" includes the present as well as the future.

1:2 {Beloved} (\agap' toi\). Instead of \gn' si' i\ (genuine) in 1Ti 1:2. He had already called Timothy \agap' ton\ (verbal adjective of \agapa'\) in 1Co 4:17, an incidental and strong proof that it is Paul who is writing here. This argument applies to each of the Pastorals for Paul is known by other sources (Acts and previous Pauline Epistles) to sustain precisely the affectionate relation toward Timothy and Titus shown in the Pastorals.

1:3 {I thank} (\charin ech'\). "I have gratitude." As in 1Ti 1:12. Robinson cites examples of this phrase from the papyri. It occurs also in Lu 17:9; Ac 2:47. \Charis\ in doxologies Paul uses (1Co 15:57; 2:14; 8:16; 9:15; Ro 6:17; 7:25). His usual idiom is \eucharist'\ (1Co 1:4; Ro 1:8; Phm 1:4; Php 1:3) or \eucharistoumen\ (1Th 1:2; Col 1:3) or \ou pauomai eucharist' n\ (Eph 1:16) or \eucharistein opheilomen\ (2Th 1:3). {Whom I serve from my forefathers} (\h' i latreu' apo progon' n\). The relative \h' i\ is the dative case with \latreu'\ (see Ro 1:9 for this verb), progressive present (I have been serving). For \progon' n\ (forefathers) see 1Ti 5:4. Paul claims a pious ancestry as in Ac 24:14; Ac 26:5; Ga 2:14; Php 3:4-7. {In a pure conscience} (\en katharfi suneid' sei\). See 1Ti 1:5; Ac 23:1. {Unceasing} (\adialeipton\). Late and rare compound, in N.T. only here and Ro 9:2 which see. The adverb \adialeipt' s\ is more frequent (in the papyri, literary Koin, 1Th 1:2; Ro 1:9). The adjective here is the predicate accusative, "how I hold the memory concerning thee unceasing." The use of \adialeipt' s\ (adverb) is a sort of epistolary formula (papyri, 1Th 1:2; 2:13; 5:17; Ro 1:9). {Remembrance} (\mneian\). Old word, in N.T. only Pauline (seven times, 1Th 1:2; Ro 1:9; Php 1:3).

1:4 {Night and day} (\nuktos kai h^meras\). Genitive of time, "by night and by day." As in 1Th 2:9; 3:10. {Longing} (\epipoth^n\). Present active participle of \epipothe^~, old word, eight times in Paul (1Th 3:6; Php 1:8, etc.). {Remembering thy tears} (\memn^menos sou t^~n dakru^~n\). Perfect middle participle of \mimn^sk^~, old and common verb with the genitive, only here in the Pastorals and elsewhere by Paul only in 1Co 11:2. Probably an allusion to the scene at Miletus (Ac 20:37). Cf. Ac 20:19. {That I may be filled with joy} (\hina charas pl^r^~th^~\). Final clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \pl^ro^~\ (with genitive case \charas), a verb common with Paul (Ro 8:4; 13:8).

1:5 {Having been reminded} (\hupomn^sin lab^~n\). "Having received (second aorist active participle of \lamban^~) a reminder" (old word from \hupomimn^sk^~, to remind, in N.T. only here and 1Pe 1:13). For the idiom see Ro 7:8,11. A reminder by another while \anamn^sis\ remembrance (1Co 11:24f.) is rather a recalling by oneself (Vincent). {Of the unfeigned faith} (\t^s anupokritou piste^~s\). Late compound for which see 2Co 6:6; Ro 12:9. {Dwelt} (\en^~ik^~sen\). First aorist active indicative of \enoike^~, old verb, in N.T. only in Paul (Ro 8:11; Col 3:16). {First} (\pr^~ton\). Adverb, not adjective (\pr^~t^~\). {In thy grandmother Lois} (\en t^~i mamm^~i L^~idi\). Old word, originally the infantile word for \m^~t^~r\ (mother), then extended by writers to grandmother as here. Common for grandmother in the papyri. Lois is the mother of Eunice, Timothy's mother, since Timothy's father was a Greek (Ac 16:1). Probably both grandmother and mother became Christians. {I am persuaded} (\pepeismai\). Perfect passive indicative of \peith^~, "I stand persuaded." In the Pastorals only here and verse 12, common in Paul's other writings (Ro 8:38, etc.).

1:6 {For the which cause} (\di' h^~n aitian\). "For which cause," stronger than \dio\. So in verse 12; Tit 1:13. Only example of \aitia\ by Paul save in Ac 28:20. {I put thee in remembrance} (\anamimn^sk^~\). Old compound to remind (1Co 4:17; 2Co 7:15). {That thou stir up} (\se anaz^~purein\). Present active infinitive of \anaz^~pure^~, old double compound (\ana\ and \z^~puron\, live coal, \z^~os\ and \pur\, then the bellows for kindling), to rekindle, to stir into flame, to keep blazing (continuous action, present time), only here in N.T. See 1Th 5:19 for the figure of fire concerning the Holy Spirit. See \anapt^~\ in Lu 12:49. {The gift of God} (\to charisma tou theou). See 1Ti 4:14. Here Paul says \mou\ (my), there he mentions the presbytery. Paul felt a deep personal interest in Timothy. See 1Co 7:7; Ro 6:23; 11:29 for the gift of God.

1:7 {A spirit of fearfulness} (\pneuma deilias). Here \pneuma\ is the \charisma\ of verse 6, the human spirit as endowed by the Holy Spirit (Ro 8:15). \Deilia\ is an old word (\deilos, deid) and always in a bad sense of cowardice, only here in N.T. {Of power} (\duname"s). One of Paul's characteristic words (Ro 1:16). {Of love} (\agap^s). One of the gifts of the Spirit (Ga 5:22). "Which drives out fear" (Lock) as in 1Jo 4:18. {Of discipline} (\s"phronismou). Late _Koin,_ word (from \s"phroniz", to control), self-control, here only in N.T. See 1Ti 2:9 for \s"phrosun^.

1:8 {Be not ashamed of} (\m^ epaischunth^is). First aorist (ingressive) passive subjunctive (in prohibition) of \epaischunomai\, old word, to be ashamed. Again in verse 16 without augment (\epaischunth^n), transitive use of the passive voice as often in the _Koin,_ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 818). See Ro 1:16; 6:21. "Do not become ashamed" (as he had not). {The testimony of our Lord} (\to marturion tou kuriou). For the old word \marturion\ see 1Co 1:6; 2:1. Paul probably has in mind the saying of Jesus preserved in Mr 8:38 (Lu 9:26). See also 2:12. {His prisoner} (\ton desmion autou). As in Php 1:12; Phm 1:1,9; Eph 3:1; 4:1 (the first Roman captivity). Paul is in his last captivity and refers to it again in verse 16; 2:9. {Suffer hardship with} (\sunkakopath^son). First aorist active imperative of the double compound \sunkakopathe"\, first known use and in N.T. only here and 2:3 (in eccles. writers). But \kakopathe"\, to suffer evil, is old verb (2:9; 4:5). Paul is fond of compounds of \sun\. Paul challenges Timothy by this verb which he apparently coins for the purpose to a joint (\sun) suffering with the Lord Jesus and Paul "for the gospel" (\t"i euaggeli"i\, dative case rather than associative instrumental "with"). {According to the power of God} (\kata dunamin theou). Given by God (2Co 6:7).

1:9 {Called us with a holy calling} (\kalesantos kl^sei hagifi). Probably dative, "to a holy calling." \Kl^sis\ here apparently not the invitation, but the consecrated service, "the upward calling" (Php 3:14). See 1Co 7:20; Eph 4:1,4 for the use of \kale"\ with \kl^sis\. Paul often uses \kale"\ of God's calling men (1Th 2:12; 1Co 1:9; Ga 1:6; Ro 8:20; 9:11). {Purpose} (\prothesin). See Ro 9:11; Eph 1:11 for \prothesin. {Which was given} (\t^{\wedge}n dotheisan). First aorist passive articular participle agreeing with \charis (grace), a thoroughly Pauline expression (1Co 3:10; Ro 12:3,6, etc.), only here in Pastoral Epistles. {Before times eternal} (\pro chron^{\wedge}n ai^{\wedge}ni^{\wedge}n). See Tit 1:2.

1:10 {But hath now been manifested} (\phaner^{\wedge}theisan de nun). First aorist passive participle of \phanero^{\wedge} agreeing with \charin. See Tit 1:3; Col 1:26; 3:4 for \phanero^{\wedge} and the contrast made. {By the appearing} (\dia t^{\wedge}s epiphaneias). Only here of the Incarnation (except the verb, Tit 2:11; 3:4), but for the second coming see Tit 2:13. {Who abolished death} (\katarg^{\wedge}santos men ton thanaton). First aorist active participle of \katarge^{\wedge}, the very phrase in 1Co 15:26; Heb 2:14. {Brought to light} (\ph^{\wedge}tisantos de). First aorist active participle of \ph^{\wedge}tiz^{\wedge}, literary _Koin,_ word for which see 1Co 4:5; Eph 1:18, to turn the light on. {Life and incorruption} (\z^{\wedge}^{\wedge}n kai aphtharsian). The opposite of \thanatos, "life and immortality" (unchangeable life).

1:11 {For which} (\eis ho). For the gospel. See 1Ti 2:7 for this verse.

1:12 {These things} (\tauta). His imprisonment in Rome. {Yet I am not ashamed} (\all' ouk epaischunomai). Plain reference to the exhortation to Timothy in verse 8. {Him whom I have believed} (\h^{\wedge}i pepisteuka). Dative case of the relative (\h^{\wedge}i) with the perfect active of \pisteu^{\wedge}, the antecedent to the relative not expressed. It is not an indirect question. Paul knows Jesus Christ whom he has trusted. {I am persuaded} (\pepeismai). See verse 5. {To guard} (\phulaxai). First aorist active infinitive of \phulass^{\wedge}, the very word used in 1Ti 6:20 with \parath^{\wedge}k^{\wedge}n as here, to guard against robbery or any loss. {That which I have committed unto him} (\t^{\wedge}n parath^{\wedge}k^{\wedge}n mou). Literally, "my deposit," as in a bank, the bank of heaven which no burglar can break (Mt 6:19f.). See this word also in verse 14. Some MSS. have the more common \parakatath^{\wedge}k^{\wedge} (a sort of double deposit, \para\, beside, down, \kata). {Against that day} (\eis ekein^{\wedge}n t^{\wedge}n h^{\wedge}meran). The day of Christ's second coming. See also 1:18; 4:8; 2Th 1:10, and often in the Gospels. Elsewhere, the day of the Lord (1Th 5:2; 2Th 2:2; 1Co 1:8; 2Co 1:14), the day of Christ or Jesus Christ (Php 1:6,10; 2:16), the day (1Th 5:4; 1Co 3:13; Ro 13:12), the day of redemption (Eph 4:20), the day of judgment (Ro 2:5,16).

1:13 {The pattern of sound words} (\hupotup“sin hugiainont“n log“n\). See 1Ti 1:16 for \hupotup“sin\ and 1Ti 1:10 for \hugiain“\. {Which} (\h“n\). Genitive plural with \^kousas\ (didst hear) or attracted to case of \log“n\ (\akou“\ is used either with the accusative or the genitive).

1:14 {That good thing which was committed unto thee} (\t^n kal^n parath^k^n\). Simply, "the good deposit." {Guard} (\phulaxon\). As in 1Ti 6:20. God has also made an investment in Timothy (cf. verse 12). Timothy must not let that fail. {Which dwelleth in us} (\tou enoikountos en h^min\). It is only through the Holy Spirit that Timothy or any of us can guard God's deposit with us.

1:15 {Are turned away from me} (\apestraph^san me\). Second aorist passive (still transitive here with me) of \apostreph“, for which verb see Tit 1:14. For the accusative with these passive deponents see Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 484. It is not known to what incident Paul refers, whether the refusal of the Christians in the Roman province of Asia to help Paul on his arrest (or in response to an appeal from Rome) or whether the Asian Christians in Rome deserted Paul in the first stage of the trial (4:16). Two of these Asian deserters are mentioned by name, perhaps for reasons known to Timothy. Nothing else is known of Phygelus and Hermogenes except this shameful item.

1:16 {Grant mercy} (\d“i^ eleos\). The phrase nowhere else in the N.T. Second aorist active optative of \did“mi\, the usual form being \doi^\. This is the usual construction in a wish about the future. {Unto the house of Onesiphorus} (\t“i On^siphorou oik“i\). The same phrase in 4:19. Apparently Onesiphorus is now dead as is implied by the wish in 1:18. {For he oft refreshed me} (\hoti pollakis me anepsuxen\). First aorist active indicative of \anapsuch“, old verb, to cool again, in LXX and _Koin_, often, here only in N.T., but \anapsuxis\ in Ac 3:20. In the first imprisonment or the second. If he lost his life for coming to see Paul, it was probably recently during this imprisonment. {Was not ashamed of my chain} (\halusin mou ouk epaischunth^\. Passive deponent again (first aorist indicative) with accusative as in 1:8. For \halusin\ (chain) see Eph 6:20. Note absence of augment in \epaischunth^\.

1:17 {When he was in Rome} (\genomenos en Romⁱ\). Second aorist middle participle of \ginomai\ (coming to Rome, happening in Rome). {He sought me diligently and found me} (\spoudai^s ez^tsen me kai heuren\). Effective aorists both of them (first of \z^{te}“, second of \heurisk“\). He did it at the risk of his own life apparently.

1:18 {Grant to him to and mercy} (\dⁱ autⁱ heurein eleos\). Second aorist active optative in wish for the future again as in verse 16. Find mercy from the Lord (Jesus) as he found me. {Thou knowest very well} (\beltion su gin^{skeis}\). Literally, "thou knowest better (than I)," for he did those things in Ephesus where thou art. Only N.T. example of \beltion\, in D text of Ac 10:28.

2:1 {Be strengthened} (\endunamou). Present passive imperative of \endunamo. See already 1Ti 1:12; Ro 4:20; Php 4:13; Eph 6:10. "Keep on being empowered," "keep in touch with the power." {In the grace that is in Christ Jesus} (\en t'i chariti t'i en Christ' i I'sou). Where the power is located. Christ is the dynamo for power only when and while we keep in touch with him.

2:2 {From me} (\par' emou). As in 1:13. Paul was Timothy's chief teacher of Christ. {Among many witnesses} (\dia poll' n martur' n). Plutarch has \dia in this sense and Field (_Ot. Norv._) suggests that it is a legal phrase "supported by many witnesses." Not mere spectators, but testifiers. See Paul's use of \dia 1Th 4:2; 2Co 2:4; Ro 2:27; 14:20. Paul in 1Co 15:1-8 gives many witnesses of the resurrection of Christ. {Commit thou} (\parathou). Second aorist middle imperative of \paratith' mi (1Ti 1:18) to deposit, same metaphor as \parath' k' in 1:12, 14. "Deposit thou." {Faithful} (\pistois). "Trustworthy," "reliable," as in 1Ti 1:12 of Paul himself. {Able} (\hikanoi). Capable, qualified, as in 1Co 15:9; 2Co 2:16; 3:5. {Others also} (\kai heterous). Not necessarily "different," but "others in addition." This is the way to pass on the torch of the light of the knowledge of God in Christ. Paul taught Timothy who will teach others who will teach still others, an endless chain of teacher-training and gospel propaganda.

2:3 {Suffer hardship with me} (\sunkakopath' son). See 1:8 for this verb. The old preacher challenges the young one to share hardship with him for Christ. {As a good soldier} (\hos kalos strati' t's). Paul does not hesitate to use this military metaphor (this word only here for a servant of Christ) with which he is so familiar. He had already used the metaphor in 1Co 9:7; 2Co 10:3f.; 1Ti 1:18. In Php 2:25 he called Epaphroditus "my fellow-soldier" (\sunstrati' t' n mou) as he did Archippus in Phm 1:2.

2:4 {No soldier on service} (\oudeis strateuomenos). "No one serving as a soldier." See 1Co 9:7 for this old verb and 2Co 10:3; 1Ti 1:18 for the metaphorical use. {Entangleth himself}

(\emph{pleketai}). Old compound, to inweave (see Mt 27:29 for \plek“), in N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:20. Present middle (direct) indicative. {In the affairs} (\tais pragmateiais). Old word (from \pragmateuomai, Lu 19:13), business, occupation, only here in N.T. {Of this life} (\tou biou). No "this" in the Greek, "of life" (course of life as in 1Ti 2:2, not existence \z“). {Him who enrolled him as a soldier} (\t“i stratolog^{santi}). Dative case after \aresⁱ (\i first aorist active subjunctive of \aresk“, to please, 1Th 2:4, purpose clause with \hina) of the articular first aorist active participle of \stratologe“, literary _Koin,_ word (\stratologos, from \stratos and \leg“, only here in N.T.

2:5 {If also a man contend in the games} (\ean de kai athlⁱtis). Condition of third class with present (linear) active subjunctive of \athle“, old and common verb (from \athlos, a contest), only this verse in N.T., but \sunathle“ in Php 1:27. Note sharp distinction between \athlⁱ (\i present subjunctive, engage in a contest in general) and \athl^sⁱ (\i first aorist active subjunctive, engage in a particular contest). Not "except he have contended," but simply "unless he contend" (in any given case) "lawfully" (\nomim“s). Old adverb, agreeably to the law, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 1:8. {Is not crowned} (\ou stephanoutai). Present passive indicative of \stephano“, old verb (from \stephanos, crown), in N.T. only here and Heb 2:7,9. One apodosis for two protases. The victor in the athletic contests was crowned with a garland.

2:6 {The husbandman that laboreth} (\ton kopi“nta ge“rgon). "The toiling tiller of the soil" (\ge“rgon, from \g^ and \erg“, worker of the earth). See \ge“rgion (\field) in 1Co 3:9 and also 1Co 9:7. {First} (\pr“ton). As is natural and right. {To partake} (\metalambanein). Old word as in Ac 2:46 to share in. Paul elsewhere uses \metech“ as in 1Co 9:12.

2:7 {Consider} (\noei). Present active imperative of \noe“, old verb, to put your mind (\nous) on. See Eph 3:4 and like command in 1Co 10:15. {Understanding} (\sunesin). "Comprehension" (from \suni^{mi}, to send together, to grasp). See Col 1:9; 2:2. This is a blessed promise that calls for application.

2:8 {Risen from the dead} (\eg^{germenon ek nekr“n}). Perfect passive participle of \egeir“, still risen as the perfect tense shows in 1Co 15:4,12-20. Predicate accusative. "Remember Jesus Christ as risen from the dead." This is the cardinal fact about Christ that proves his claim to be the Messiah, the Son of God. Christ is central for Paul here as in Php 2:5-11. {Of the seed of David} (\ek spermatos Daueid). The humanity of Christ as in Ro 1:3; Php 2:7f. {According to my gospel} (\kata to euaggelion mou). Paul's very phrase in Ro 2:16; 16:25. Not a written gospel, but my message. See also 1Co 15:1; 2Co 11:7; Ga 1:11; 2:2; 1Ti 1:11.

2:9 {Wherein} (\en h"i). In my gospel. {I suffer hardship} (\kakopath"i). "I suffer evil." Old compound (\kakon, pasch"i), elsewhere in N.T., 4:5; Jas 5:13. {Unto bonds} (\mechri desm"n). "Up to bonds." A common experience with Paul (2Co 11:23; Php 1:7,13,14; Col 4:18). {As a malefactor} (\h"s kakourgos), old compound (\kakon, erg"i, doer of evil), in N.T. only here and Lu 23:32ff. (of the robbers). One of the charges made against Paul. {Is not bound} (\ou dedetai). Perfect passive indicative of \de"i, to bind. Old verb. See 1Co 7:27,39; Ro 7:2. I am bound with a chain, but no fetters are on the word of God (Pauline phrase; 1Th 2:13; 1Co 14:36; 2Co 2:17; Php 1:14; Tit 2:5).

2:10 {For the elect's sake} (\dia tous eklektous). "Because of the elect." God's elect (Ro 8:33; Col 3:12; Tit 1:1) for whom Paul suffered so much (Col 1:6; 12:15; Php 2:17; Eph 3:1,13). {That they also may obtain} (\hina kai autoi tuch"sin). Purpose clause with second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \tugchan"i with genitive. "They as well as I," Paul means. {The salvation} (\t"s s"t"rias). The final salvation "with eternal glory" (\meta dox"i ai"niou). This phrase only here and 1Pe 5:10, but in 2Co 4:17 we have "eternal weight of glory."

2:11 {Faithful is the saying} (\pistos ho logos). The saying which follows here though it can refer to the preceding as in 1Ti 4:9. See 1Ti 1:15. It is possible that from here to the end of 13 we have the fragment of an early hymn. There are four conditions in these verses (11-13), all of the first class, assumed to be true. Parallels to the ideas here expressed are found in 2Th 1:5; 1Co 4:8; 2Co 7:3; Ro 6:3-8; Col 3:1-4. Note the compounds with \sun (\sunapethanomen, {we died with}, from \sunapothnesko\ as in 2Co 7:3; \sunz"somen, {we shall live with}, from \sunza"i\ as in 2Co 7:3; \sumbasileusomen, {we shall reign with}, from \sumbasileu"i\ as in 1Co 4:8). For \hupomenomen\ (we endure) see 1Co 13:7 and for \apistoumen\ (we are faithless) see Ro 3:3. The verb \arneomai\, to deny (\arn[^]sometha\, we shall deny, \arn[^]setai\, he will deny, \arn[^]sasthai\, deny, first aorist middle infinitive) is an old word, common in the Gospels in the sayings of Jesus (Mt 10:33; Lu 12:9), used of Peter (Mr 14:70), and is common in the Pastorals (1Ti 5:8; Tit 2:12; 2Ti 3:5). Here in verse 13 it has the notion of proving false to oneself, a thing that Christ "cannot" (\ou dunatai\) do.

2:14 {That they strive not about words} (\m[^] logomachein\). Word apparently coined by Paul from \logomachia\ (1Ti 6:4 which see), a back formation in that case. A mere war of words displeases Paul. (Tit 3:9). {Useful} (\chr[^]simon\). Late and rare word from \chraomai\, here only in N.T. {To the subverting} (\epi katastroph[^]i\). Old word (from \katastreph[^]“\, to turn down or over), here only in N.T. (except 2Pe 2:6 in some MSS., not in Westcott and Hort). "Because of the overthrow" (result \epi\, not aim), useless for this reason. Such war of words merely upsets the hearers.

2:15 {Give diligence} (\spoudason\). First aorist active imperative of \spoudaz[^]“, old word, as in 1Th 2:17; Ga 2:10. {To present} (\parast[^]sai\). First aorist active infinitive of \parist[^]mi\ as in Col 1:22,28. {Approved unto God} (\dokimon t[^]i the[^]i\). Dative case \the[^]i\ with \dokimon\, predicate accusative, old adjective (from \dechomai), for which see 1Co 11:19; 2Co 10:18. {A workman} (\ergat[^]n\). See 2Co 11:3; Php 3:2. {That needeth not to be ashamed} (\anepaischunton\). Late double compound verbal adjective (\a\ privative, \epaischun[^]“), in Josephus and here alone. {Handling aright} (\orthotomounta\). Present active participle of \orthotome[^]“, late and rare compound (\orthotomos\), cutting straight, \orthos\ and \temn[^]“, here only in N.T. It occurs in Pr 3:6; 11:5 for making straight paths (\hodous\) with which compare Heb 12:13 and "the Way" in Ac 9:2. Theodoret explains it to mean ploughing a straight furrow. Parry argues that the metaphor is the stone mason cutting the stones straight since \temn[^]“ and \orthos\ are so used. Since Paul was a tent-maker and knew how to cut straight the rough camel-hair cloth, why not let that be the metaphor? Certainly plenty of exegesis is crooked enough (crazy-quilt patterns) to call for careful cutting to set it straight.

2:16 {Shun} (\periistaso\). See Tit 3:9. {Babbings}

(\kenoph^ˆnias\). See 1Ti 6:20. {Will proceed} (\prokopsousin\). Future active of \prokopt^ˆ“, "will cut forward." See Ga 1:14; Ro 13:12. {Further in ungodliness} (\epi pleion asebeias\). "To more of ungodliness." See Ro 1:18; 1Ti 2:2.

2:17 {Will eat} (\nom^ˆn hexei\). "Will have (future active of \ech^ˆ\) pasturage or increase" (\nom^ˆ\, old word from \nem^ˆ\, to pasture, in N.T. only here and Joh 10:9). {As doth gangrene} (\h^ˆs gaggraina\). Late word (medical writers and Plutarch), only here in N.T. From \gra^ˆ“ or \grain^ˆ“, to gnaw, to eat, an eating, spreading disease. Hymenaeus is probably the one mentioned in 1Ti 1:20. Nothing is known of Philetus.

2:18 {Men who} (\hoitines\). "The very ones who." {Have erred} (\^ˆstoch^ˆsan\). "Missed the mark." First aorist active indicative of \astochē^ˆ“, for which see 1Ti 1:6; 6:21. {That the resurrection is past already} (\anastasin ^ˆd^ˆ gegonenai\). Second perfect active infinitive of \ginomai\ in indirect assertion after \legontes\ (saying) with the accusative of general reference (\anastasin\). {Overthrow} (\anatrepousin\). See Tit 1:11.

2:19 {Howbeit} (\mentoi\). Strong adversative, "however." {Firm} (\stereos\). Old adjective, solid, compact, in N.T. only here, 1Pe 5:9; Heb 5:12,14. See \stere^ˆma\ in Col 2:5. For \themelios\ see 1Co 3:11; Rom 15:20; 1Ti 6:19. Cf. \hedrai^ˆma\ in 1Ti 3:15. {Seal} (\sphragis\). See 1Co 9:2; Ro 4:11. {Knoweth} (\egn^ˆ“\). Timeless aorist active indicative of \gin^ˆsk^ˆ“. Quotation from Nu 16:5. {Let every one depart} (\apost^ˆt^ˆ pfs\). Paraphrase of Nu 16:27; Isa 26:13; 52:11; Jer 20:9. Second aorist active imperative of \aphist^ˆmi\ (intransitive use), "Let every one stand off from." Probably another echo of the rebellion of Korah.

2:20 {In a great house} (\en megal^ˆi oikifi\). Metaphor of a palace. He doubtless has the Kingdom of God in mind, but he works out the metaphor of a great house of the rich and mighty. {Vessels} (\skeu^ˆ\). Old word \skeuos\. See Ro 9:21 for the same double use as here. {Of gold} (\chrusf\). Old contracted adjective \chruseos\, only here by Paul. {Of silver} (\argurf\). Old contracted adjective \argureos\, in N.T. here, Ac 19:24; Re 9:20. {Of wood} (\xulina\). Old adjective, in N.T. only here and Re 9:20. {Of earth} (\ostrakina\). Late adjective, from \ostrakon\, baked clay, in LXX, in N.T. only here and 2Co 4:7.

2:21 {If a man purge himself} (ean tis ekkatharⁱ\). Paul drops the metaphor of the house and takes up the individual as one of the "vessels." Condition of third class with first aorist active subjunctive of \ekkathair^α\, old verb, to cleanse out, in LXX, in N.T. only here and 1Co 5:7. {From these} (apo tout^{αn}\). From the vessels for dishonour of verse 20. {Sanctified} (h^{giasmenon}\). Perfect passive participle of \hagiaz^α\, for which verb see 1Co 6:11. {Meet for the master's use} (euchr^{ston tⁱ despotaⁱ}\). Dative case \despotⁱ\ (for which word see 1Ti 6:1) with \euchr^{ston}\, neuter singular like \h^{giasmenon}\ agreeing with \skeuos\. Old verbal adjective (eu and \chraomai\, to use well), useful or usable for the master. In N.T. only here and 4:11. See \achr^{ston}\ in Phm 11. {Prepared} (h^{toimasmemon}\). Perfect passive participle of \hetoimaz^α\, in a state of readiness, old and common word, elsewhere by Paul only 1Co 2:9 (LXX).

2:22 {Youthful} (ne^{terikas}\). Literary _Koin_, word (Polybius, Josephus), only here in N.T. There are lusts peculiar to flaming youth. {Flee} (pheuge\). Present active imperative of \pheug^α\, old and common verb. In this sense see 1Co 6:18. {Follow after} (di^{ke}\). Present active imperative of \di^k\ as if in a chase for which sense see 1Th 5:15. Steady pursuit of these virtues like those in Ga 5:22. {Call on the Lord} (epikaloumenon ton kurion\). See 1Co 1:2; Ro 10:12-14.

2:23 {Ignorant} (apaidetous\). Old verbal, here only in N.T. (a \privative and \paideu^α\). Untrained, uneducated, "speculations of a half-educated mind" (Parry). {Refuse} (paraitou\). See 1Ti 4:7. {They gender strifes} (genn^{sin machas}\). Present active indicative of old and common verb \genna^α\ (Ro 9:11). "They beget battles." See 2:14.

2:24 {Must not strive} (ou dei machesthai\). Rather, "it is not necessary for him to fight" (in such verbal quibbles). The negative \ou\ goes with \dei\, not with the infinitive \machesthai\. {Gentle} (pion\). Old word (from \epos\, speech), affable, mild, in N.T. only here (and 1Th 2:7 in some MSS.; W. H. have \n^{pios}\). {Teachable} (didaktikon\). See 1Ti 3:2. {Forbearing} (anexikakon\). Late compound (from future of \anech^α\, \anex^α\, and \kakon\, putting up with evil). Here only in N.T.

2:25 {Correcting} (\paideuonta\). See Tit 2:12. "Schooling" (Parry). {Oppose themselves} (\antidiatithemenous\). Present middle (direct) participle of \antidiatith^mi\, late double compound (Diodorus, Philo) to place oneself in opposition, here only in N.T. {If peradventure God may give} (\m^pote d^i^ ho theos\). Here Westcott and Hort read the late form of the second aorist active optative of \did^mi\ for the usual \doi^ as they do in 1:18. But there it is a wish for the future and so regular, while here the optative with \m^pote\ in a sort of indirect question is used with a primary tense \dei\ (present) and parallel with an undoubted subjunctive \anan^ps^sin\, while in Lu 3:15 \m^pote eie\ is with a secondary tense. Examples of such an optative do occur in the papyri (Robertson, Grammar_, p. 989) so that we cannot go as far as Moulton does and say that we "must" read the subjunctive \d^i\ here (Prolegomena_, pp. 55, 193). {Repentance} (\metanoian\). "Change of mind" (2Co 7:10; Ro 2:4). {Unto the knowledge of the truth} (\eis epign^sin al^theias\). Paul's word "full knowledge" (Co 1:9).

2:26 {They may recover themselves} (\anan^ps^sin\). First aorist active subjunctive of \anan^ph^, late and rare word, to be sober again, only here in N.T., though \n^ph^ is in 1Th 5:6. {Out of the snare of the devil} (\ek t^s tou diabolou pagidos\). They have been caught while mentally intoxicated in the devil's snare (1Ti 3:7). See Ro 11:9 for \pagis\. {Taken captive} (\ez^gr^menoi\). Perfect passive participle of \z^gre^, old verb, to take alive (\z^os, agre^), in N.T. only here and Lu 5:10 (of Peter). "Taken captive alive." {By him unto his will} (\hup' autou eis to ekeinou thel^ma\). This difficult phrase is understood variously. One way is to take both \autou\ and \ekinou\, to refer to the devil. Another way is to take both of them to refer to God. Another way is to take \autou\ of the devil and \ekinou\, of God. This is probably best, "taken captive by the devil" "that they may come back to soberness to do the will of God." There are difficulties in either view.

3:1 {Know this} (\touto gin“ske\). See 1Co 11:3; Php 1:12. {In the last days} (\en eschatais h^merais\). See Jas 5:3; 1Ti 4:1. {Grievous} (\chalepoi\). Hard. See Eph 5:16. {Shall come} (\enst^sontai\). Future middle of \enist^mi\ (intransitive use), old verb, to stand on or be at hand, as in 2Th 2:2.

3:2 {Lovers of self} (\philautoi\). Old compound adjective (\philos, autos\), here only in N.T. {Lovers of money} (\philarguroi\). Old compound adjective, in N.T. only here and Lu 16:14. See 1Ti 6:10. {Boastful} (\alazones\). Old word for empty pretender, in N.T. only here and Ro 1:30. {Haughty} (\huper^phanoi\). Old word, in N.T. only here and Lu 6:35. {Unholy} (\anosioi\). See 1Ti 1:9. {Without natural affection} (\astorgoi\). See Ro 1:31.

3:3 {Implacable} (\aspondoi\). Truce-breakers. Old word, only here in N.T. though in MSS. in Ro 1:31 (from \a\ privative and \spond^, a libation).

{Slanderers} (\diaboloι\). See 1Ti 3:11; Tit 2:3. {Without self-control} (\akrateis\). Old word (\a\ privative and \kratos\), here only in N.T. {Fierce} (\an^meroi\). Old word (\a\ privative and \h^meros, tame), only here in N.T. {No lovers of good} (\aphilagathoi\). Found only here (\a\ privative and \philagathos, for which see Tit 1:8). 3:4 {Traitors} (\prodotai\). Old word (from \prodid“mi\), in N.T. only here, Lu 6:16; Ac 7:52. {Headstrong} (\propeteis\). Old word (from \pro\ and \pipt“\), falling forward, in N.T. only here and Ac 19:36. {Puffed up} (\tetuph“menoi\). Perfect passive participle of \tupho“\ . See 1Ti 3:6. {Lovers of pleasure} (\phil^donoi\). Literary _Koin,_ word (\philos, h^don^), only here in N.T. {Lovers of God} (\philotheoi\). Old word (\philos, theos), only here in N.T.

3:5 {A form of godliness} (\morph“sin eusebeias). For \morph“sin, see Ro 2:20. The outward shape without the reality. {Having denied} (\rn^menoi). Perfect middle participle of \arneomai (see 2:12f.). {Power} (\dunamin). See 1Co 4:20. See Ro 1:29-31 for similar description. {Turn away} (\apotrepou). Present middle (direct) imperative of \apotrep“, "turn thyself away from." Old verb, only here in N.T. See IV Macc. 1:33.

3:6 {That creep} (\hoi endunontes). Old and common verb (also \endu“) either to put on (1Th 5:8) or to enter (to slip in by insinuation, as here). See same idea in Jude 1:4 (\pareisedu^san), 2Pe 2:1 (\pareisaxousin), Ga 2:4 (\pareis^lthon and \pareisaktous). These stealthy "creepers" are pictured also in Tit 1:11. {Take captive} (\aichmal“tizontes). "Taking captive." Present active participle of \aichmal“tiz“, for which see 2Co 10:5; Ro 7:23. {Silly women} (\gunaikaria). Literally, "little women" (diminutive of \gun^), found in Diocles (comedian of 5 century B.C.) and in Epictetus. The word here is neuter (grammatical gender) plural. Used contemptuously here (only N.T. example). Ramsay suggests "society ladies." It is amazing how gullible some women are with religious charlatans who pose as exponents of "new thought." {Laden with sins} (\ses“reumena hamartiais). Perfect passive participle of \s“reu“, old word from Aristotle down (from \s“ros, a heap) to heap up. In N.T. only here and Ro 12:20. Associative instrumental case \hamartiais. {Divers} (\poikilais). Many coloured. See Tit 3:3. One has only to recall Schweinfurth, the false Messiah of forty odd years ago with his "heavenly harem" in Illinois and the recent infamous "House of David" in Michigan to understand how these Gnostic cults led women into licentiousness under the guise of religion or of liberty. The priestesses of Aphrodite and of Isis were illustrations ready to hand. \Agomena (present passive participle) means "continually led astray or from time to time."

3:7 {Never able to come to the knowledge of the truth} (\m^depote eis epign“sin al^theias elthein dunamena). Pathetic picture of these hypnotized women without intellectual power to cut through the fog of words and, though always learning scraps of things, they never come into the full knowledge (epign“sin) of the truth in Christ. And yet they even pride themselves on belonging to the intelligentsia!

3:8 {Like as} (\hon tropon). "In which manner." Adverbial accusative and incorporation of the antecedent \tropon into the relative clause. {Jannes and Jambres} (\Iann^s kai Iambr^s). Traditional names of the magicians who withstood Moses (_Targum of Jonathan_ on Ex 7:11). {Withstood} (\antest^san). Second aorist active (intransitive) of \anthist^mi, to stand against, "they stood against" (with dative \M^usei). Same word used of Elymas in Ac 13:8 and repeated here \anthistantai (present middle indicative). Paul here pictures the seducers of the \gunaikaria above. {Corrupted in mind} (\katephtharmenoi ton noun). Perfect passive participle of \kataphtheir^=, old compound, in N.T. only here in critical text. See 2Co 11:3; 1Ti 6:5 for \diaphtheir^=. The accusative \noun is retained in the passive. {Reprobate} (\adokimoi). See 1Co 9:27; Tit 1:16. They had renounced their trust (\pistin) in Christ.

3:9 {They shall proceed no further} (\ou prokopsousin epi pleion). Future active of \prokopt^=. See 2:16. {Folly} (\anoia). Old word (from \anoos, a privative and \nous), want of sense, here only in N.T. {Evident} (\ekd^los). Old word (\ek, d^los, outstanding), here only in N.T. {Theirs} (\ekein^="n). Of Jannes and Jambres (Ex 7:12).

3:10 {Didst follow} (\par^kolouth^sas). First aorist active indicative of \parakolouth^=, for which see 1Ti 4:6. Some MSS. have perfect active \par^kolouth^kas (thou hast followed). Nine associative-instrumental cases here after the verb ({teaching}, \didaskalifi, Ro 12:7; {conduct}, \ag^="g^i, old word here only in N.T.; {purpose}, \prothesei, Ro 8:28; {faith}, \pistei, 1Th 3:6; {longsuffering}, \makrothumifi, Col 1:11; {persecutions}, \di^="gmous, 2Th 1:4; {sufferings}, \path^masin, 2Co 1:6f.). The two last items belong to verse 11.

3:11 {What things befell me} (\hoia moi egeneto). Qualitative relative (\hoia) referring to actual experiences of Paul (\egeneto, second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai) more fully described in 2Co 11:30-33. The Acts of the Apostles tell of his experiences in Antioch in Pisidia (Ac 13:14,45,50), in Iconium (Ac 14:1-5), in Lystra (Ac 14:6-19). See also Ga 2:11. {What persecutions I endured} (\hoious di^="gmous hup^negka). Qualitative relative again with \di^="gmous. The verb is first aorist active indicative of \hupopher“, old verb, to bear under as in 1Co 10:13. {Delivered me} (\me erusato\). First aorist middle of \ruomai\, old verb, with \ek\ here as in 1Th 1:10. Used again of the Lord Jesus in 4:18.

3:12 {That would live godly} (\hoi thelontes z^in euseb“s\). "Those who desire (will, determine) to live godly." Paul does not regard his experience as peculiar, but only part of the price of loyal service to Christ. {Shall suffer persecution} (\di“chth^sontai\). Future passive of \di“k“, "shall be persecuted" (shall be hunted as wild beasts).

3:13 {Impostors} (\go^tes\). Old word from wailers (\goa“, to bewail), professional mourners, deceivers, jugglers. Here only in the N.T. Modern impostors know all the tricks of the trade. {Shall wax worse and worse} (\prokopsousin epi to cheiron\). "Shall cut forward to the worse stage." See 2:16 for \prokopt“. \Cheiron\ is comparative of \kakos\, "to the worse than now." {Deceiving and being deceived} (\plan“ntes kai plan“menoi\). Present active and present passive participles of \plana“. The tragedy of it all is that these seducers are able to deceive others as well as themselves.

3:14 {But abide thou} (\su de mene\). Emphatic contrast (\su de\), "But thou." Present active imperative of \men“, common verb, to remain. {In the things which} (\en hois\). The antecedent to \hois\ is not expressed ("in which things") and the relative is attracted from \ha\ accusative with \emathes\ (didst learn, second aorist active indicative of \manthan“) to the case of the unexpressed antecedent (locative with \en). {Hast been assured of} (\epist“th^s\). First aorist passive indicative of \pisto“, old verb (from \pistos\, faithful), to make reliable, only here in N.T. {Knowing from whom} (\eid“s para tin“n\). Second perfect active participle of \oida\. Note \tin“n\ (ablative case after \para\ in an indirect question). The list included the O.T. prophets, Paul, Eunice, Lois. There ought to be moral authority in such personages.

3:15 {From a babe} (\apo brephous\). Only here in the Pastorals. This teaching from the fifth year, covering the whole of Timothy's recollections. See Mr 9:21 \ek paidiothen\, from a child. {Thou has known} (\oidas\). Present active indicative, progressive perfect reaching from a babe till now. Would that Christian parents took like pains today. {The sacred writings}

(\hiera grammata\). "Sacred writings" or "Holy Scriptures." Here alone in N.T., though in Josephus (Proem to Ant. 3; Apion 1, etc.) and in Philo. The adjective \hieron\ occurs in 1Co 9:13 of the temple worship, and \gramma\ in contrast to \pneuma\ in 2Co 3:6f.; Ro 2:29 and in Joh 5:47 of Moses' writings, in Ac 28:21 of an epistle, in Ga 6:11 of letters (characters). In Ephesus there were \Ephesia grammata\ that were \beb^la\ (Ac 19:19), not \hiera\. {To make thee wise} (\se sophisai\). First aorist active infinitive of \sophiz^{\,}, old verb (from \sophos\), in N.T. only here, and 2Pe 1:16. {Which is in} (\t^s en\). Common idiom with the article, "the in." The use of the Scriptures was not magic, but of value when used "through faith that is in Christ Jesus."

3:16 {Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable} (\pfsa graph^ theopneustos kai "phelimos\). There are two matters of doubt in this clause. One is the absence of the article \h^ before \graph^, whether that makes it mean "every scripture" or "all scripture" as of necessity if present. Unfortunately, there are examples both ways with both \pfs\ and \graph^\. Twice we find \graph^ in the singular without the article and yet definite (1Pe 2:6; 2Pe 1:20). We have \pfs Isra^l\ (Ro 11:26) for all Israel (Robertson, Grammar, p. 772). So far as the grammatical usage goes, one can render here either "all scripture" or "every scripture." There is no copula (\estin\ in the Greek and so one has to insert it either before the \kai\ or after it. If before, as is more natural, then the meaning is: "All scripture (or every scripture) is inspired of God and profitable." In this form there is a definite assertion of inspiration. That can be true also of the second way, making "inspired of God" descriptive of "every scripture," and putting \estin\ (is) after \kai\: "All scripture (or every scripture), inspired of God, is also profitable." {Inspired of God} (\theopneustos\). "God-breathed." Late word (Plutarch) here only in N.T. Perhaps in contrast to the commandments of men in Tit 1:14. {Profitable} (\phelimos\). See 1Ti 4:8. See Ro 15:4. Four examples of \pros\ (facing, with a view to, for): \didaskalian\, teaching; \elegmon\, reproof, in LXX and here only in N.T.; \epanorth^sin\, correction, old word, from \epanorthos^{\,}, to set up straight in addition, here only in N.T., with which compare \epidiortho^{\,} in Tit 1:5; \paideian\, instruction, with which compare Eph 6:4.

3:17 {The man of God} (ho tou theou anthr^{os}). See 1Ti 6:11.

{May be complete} (hina i artios). Final clause with hina and present subjunctive of eimi. Artios is old word (from root ar^{os}, to fit), specially adapted, here only in N.T.

{Furnished completely} (ex^{rtismenos}). Perfect passive participle of exartiz^o, rare verb, to furnish (fit) fully (perfective use of ex), in N.T. only here and Ac 21:5. In Josephus. For katartiz^o, see Lu 6:40; 2Co 13:11.

4:1 {I charge thee} (\dⁱamarturomai\). Rather, "I testify." See 1Th 4:6. See 1Ti 5:21 for this verb and appeal to God and Christ. {Who shall judge} (\t^ou mellontos krinein\). "The one going or about to judge" (regular idiom with \mell^\). The quick and the dead (\z^ntas kai nekrous\). "Living and dead." See 1Th 4:16f. {And by his appearing} (\kai t^ⁿ epiphaneian\). Accusative of conjuration (verbs of swearing), after \diamarturomai\ as is \basileian\ (by his kingdom). See 1Th 5:27. For \epiphaneian\, see 1:10; Tit 2:13; 1Ti 6:14; 2Th 2:8.

4:2 {Preach the word} (\k^^ruxon ton logon\). First aorist active imperative of \k^^russ^\. For "the word" used absolutely, see 1Th 1:6; Ga 6:6. {Be instant in season, out of season} (\epist^^{thi} eukair^^s akair^^s\). Second aorist (ingressive) active imperative of \ephist^^{mi}\ (intransitive use), "take a stand," "stand upon it or up to it," "carry on," "stick to it." The Vulgate has "_insta_." The two adverbs are like a proverb or a play (pun) on the word \kairos\. There are all sorts of seasons (\kairoi\), some difficult (\chalepoi, 3:1), some easy (\eukair^ⁱ, 1Co 16:12). {Reprove} (\elegxon\). First aorist active imperative of \elegch^\. "Bring to proof." Eph 5:11. {Rebuke} (\epitim^^{son}\). First aorist active imperative of \epitima^\, to give honour (or blame) to, to chide. Common in the Gospels (Lu 17:3). {Exhort} (\parakaleson\). First aorist active imperative of \parakale^\, common Pauline word.

4:3 {A time when} (\kairos hote\). One of the \akair^^s\ (out of season) times. {Will not endure} (\ouk anexontai\). Future middle (direct) of \anech^\. "Will not hold themselves back from" (Col. 3:13). Having itching ears (\kn^thomenoi t^ⁿ ako^ⁿ\). Present middle (causative) participle of \kn^th^\, late and rare form of the Attic \kna^\, to scratch, to tickle, here only in N.T. "Getting the ears (the hearing, \t^ⁿ ako^ⁿ\) tickled." The Vulgate has \prurientes\. Cf. the Athenians (Ac 17:21). Clement of Alexandria tells of speakers tickling (\kn^thontes\) the ears of those who want to be tickled. This is the temptation of the merely "popular" preacher, to furnish the latest tickle.

4:4 {Will turn away their ears} (\t^{\wedge}n ako^{\wedge}n apostrepsousin). Future active of old verb \apostreph^{\wedge}“\ . See 1Co 12:17 for this use of \ako^{\wedge}“\ . The people stopped their ears and rushed at Stephen in Ac 7:57. {Will turn aside} (\ektrap^{\wedge}sontai). Second future passive of \ektrep^{\wedge}“\ . They prefer "myths" to "the truth" as some today turn away to "humanism," "bolshevism," "new thought" or any other fad that will give a new momentary thrill to their itching ears and morbid minds.

4:5 {But be thou sober} (\su de n^{\wedge}phe). Present active imperative of \n^{\wedge}ph^{\wedge}“\ , for which see 1Th 5:6,8. "Be sober in thy head." {Suffer hardship} (\kakopath^{\wedge}son). See 2:9. {Do the work of an evangelist} (\ergon poi^{\wedge}son euaggelistou). See 1Co 1:17; Eph 4:11 for \euaggelist^{\wedge}s , gospelizer. {Fulfil} (\pl^{\wedge}rophor^{\wedge}son). First aorist active imperative of \pl^{\wedge}rophore^{\wedge}“\ , for which see Col 4:12. In Col 4:17 Paul uses \pl^{\wedge}ro^{\wedge}“\ to Archippus about his ministry as he here employs \pl^{\wedge}rophore^{\wedge}“\ . Both verbs mean to fill full.

4:6 {I am already being offered} (\d^{\wedge} spendomai). Present (progressive) passive indicative of \spend^{\wedge}“\ , old verb, to pour out a libation or drink offering. In N.T. only here and Php 2:17. "What was then a possibility is now a certainty" (Parry). The sacrifice of Paul's life-blood has begun. {Of my departure} (\t^{\wedge}s analuse^{\wedge}s mou). Our very word "analysis." Old word from \analu^{\wedge}“\ , to loosen up or back, to unloose. Only here in N.T., though \analousai for death is used by Paul in Php 1:23 which see for the metaphor. {Is come} (\ephest^{\wedge}ken). Perfect active indicative of \ephist^{\wedge}mi (intransitive use). See 1Th 5:3; Lu 21:34. The hour has struck. The time has come.

4:7 {I have fought the good fight} (\ton kalon ag^{\wedge}na ^{\wedge}g^{\wedge}nismai). Perfect middle indicative of \ag^{\wedge}nizomai , a favourite figure with Paul (1Co 9:25; Col 1:29), with the cognate accusative \ag^{\wedge}na (Php 1:27,30, etc.). The "fight" is the athletic contest of his struggle for Christ. {I have finished the course} (\ton dromon teteleka). Perfect active indicative of \tele^{\wedge}“\ . He had used this metaphor also of himself to the elders at Ephesus (Ac 20:24). Then the "course" was ahead of him. Now it is behind him. {I have kept the faith} (\t^{\wedge}n pistin tet^{\wedge}r^{\wedge}ka). Perfect active indicative again of \t^{\wedge}re^{\wedge}“\ . Paul has not deserted. He has kept faith with Christ. For this phrase, see Re 14:12. Deissmann (Light, etc. , p. 309) gives inscriptions in Ephesus of a man who says: "I have kept faith" (tⁿ pistin et^rsa) and another of a man of whom it is said: "He fought three fights, and twice was crowned."

4:8 {Henceforth} (loipon). Accusative case, "for the rest."
{There is laid up for me} (apokeitai moi). Present passive of \apokeimai, old verb, to be laid away. See Col 1:5 for the hope laid away. Paul's "crown of righteousness" (ho t^s dikaiosun^s stephanos, genitive of apposition, the crown that consists in righteousness and is also the reward for righteousness, the victor's crown as in 1Co 9:25 which see) "is laid away" for him. {At that day} (en ekeinⁱ tⁱ h^{merfi}). That great and blessed day (1:12,18). {The righteous judge} (ho dikaios krit^s). "The just judge," the umpire who makes no mistakes who judges us all (2Co 5:10). {Shall give me} (apod^{sei moi}). Future active of \apodid^{mi}. "Will give back" as in Ro 2:6 and in full. {But also to all them that have loved his appearing} (alla pfsin tois ^{gap}kosin tⁿ epiphaneian autou). Dative case of the perfect active participle of \agapa^a, to love, who have loved and still love his second coming. \Epiphaneia here can as in 1:10 be interpreted of Christ's Incarnation.

4:9 {Shortly} (tache^s). In verse 21 he more definitely says "before winter." Apparently the trial might drag on through its various stages.

4:10 {Forsook me} (me egkateleipen). Imperfect (MSS. also have aorist, egkatelipen) active of the old double compound verb \egkataleip^a, for which see Ro 9:29. Clearly in contrast to verse 9 and in the sense of 1Ti 6:17, wilful desertion. Only mentioned elsewhere in Col 4:14. {Crescens} (Kr^{sk}s). No other mention of him. {Titus to Dalmatia} (Titos eis Dalmatian). Titus had been asked to rejoin Paul in Nicopolis where he was to winter, probably the winter previous to this one (Tit 3:12). He came and has been with Paul.

4:11 {Only Luke is with me} (Loukas estin monos met' emou). Luke is with Paul now in Rome as during the first Roman imprisonment (Phm 1:24; Col 4:14). {Take Mark} (Markon analabⁿ). Second aorist active participle of \analamban^a, old verb, to pick up, as in Eph 6:13,16. "Pick up Mark." {He is useful to me} (estin moi euchr^{stos}). See 2:21 for \euchr^{stos}. Paul had long ago changed his opinion of Mark (Col

4:10) because Mark had changed his conduct and had made good in his ministry. Now Paul longs to have the man that he once scornfully rejected (Ac 15:37ff.).

4:12 {Tychicus I sent to Ephesus} (\Tuchikon apestela eis Epheson\). Perhaps Paul had sent him on before he came to Rome. He may have been still on the way to Ephesus.

4:13 {The cloke} (\t^n phelon^n\). More common form \pheilon^\. By metathesis for \phainol^, Latin _paenula_, though which language transliterated the word into the other is not known. The meaning is also uncertain, though probably "cloke" as there are so many papyri examples in that sense (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). Milligan (N.T. _Documents_, p. 20) had previously urged "book wrap" as probable but he changed his mind and rightly so. {With Carpus} (\para Karp*“i*\). "Beside Carpus," at his house. Not mentioned elsewhere. Probably a visit to Troas after Paul's return from Crete. {The books} (\ta biblia\). Probably papyrus rolls. One can only guess what rolls the old preacher longs to have with him, probably copies of Old Testament books, possibly copies of his own letters, and other books used and loved. The old preacher can be happy with his books. {Especially the parchments} (\malista tas membranas\). Latin _membrana_. The dressed skins were first made at Pergamum and so termed "parchments." These in particular would likely be copies of Old Testament books, parchment being more expensive than papyrus, possibly even copies of Christ's sayings (Lu 1:1-4). We recall that in Ac 26:24 Festus referred to Paul's learning (\ta grammata\). He would not waste his time in prison.

4:14 {Alexander the coppersmith} (\Alexandros ho chalkeus\). Old word, only here in N.T., for metal-worker (copper, iron, gold, etc.). Possibly the one in 1:20, but not the one in Ac 19:33f. unless he afterwards became a Christian. {Did me much evil} (\moi kaka enedeixato\). Evidently he had some personal dislike towards Paul and possibly also he was a Gnostic. {Will render} (\apod*“sei*\). Future active of the same verb used in verse 8, but with a very different atmosphere.

4:15 {Be thou ware also} (\kai su phulassou\). Present middle (direct) imperative of \phulass^, "from whom keep thyself away." {Withstood} (\antest^\. Second aorist active indicative of \anthist^mi, "stood against my words." See 3:8; Ga 2:11.

4:16 {At my first defence} (\en t̃i pr“t̃i apologifi). Original sense of "apology" as in Php 1:7,16. Either the first stage in this trial or the previous trial and acquittal at the end of the first Roman imprisonment. Probably the first view is correct, though really there is no way to decide. {No one took my part} (\oudeis moi paregeneto). "No one came by my side" (second aorist middle indicative of \paraginomai). See 1Co 16:3. {But all forsook me} (\alla pantes me egkateleipon). Same verb and tense used of Demas above (verse 10), "But all were forsaking me" (one by one) or, if aorist \egkatelipon, "all at once left me." {May it not be laid to their account} (\m^ autois logisthei). First aorist passive optative in future wish with negative \m^. Common Pauline verb \logizomai (1Co 13:5; Ro 4:3,5).

4:17 {But the Lord stood by me} (\ho de kurios moi parest̃). Second aorist active of \parist̃mi (intransitive use), "took his stand by my side." See Ro 16:2. Clearly Jesus appeared to Paul now at this crisis and climax as he had done so many times before. {Strengthened me} (\enedunam“sen me). "Poured power into me." See Php 4:13. {That through me the message might be fully proclaimed} (\hina di' emou to k̃rugma pl̃rophor̃th̃i). Final clause with \hina and first aorist passive subjunctive of \pl̃rophore“ (see verse 5). Either to the rulers in Rome now or, if the first imprisonment, by his release and going to Spain. {And that all the Gentiles might hear} (\kai akous“sin panta ta ethñ). Continuation of the purpose with the aorist active subjunctive of \akou“. {I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion} (\erusth̃n ek stomatos leontos). First aorist passive indicative of \ruomai (1Th 1:10). A proverb, but not certain what the application is whether to Nero or to Satan (1Th 2:18) or to the lion in the arena where Paul could not be sent because a Roman citizen.

4:18 {Will deliver me} (\rusetai me). Future middle. Recall the Lord's Prayer. Paul is not afraid of death. He will find his triumph in death (Php 1:21f.). {Unto his heavenly kingdom} (\eis t̃n basileian autou t̃n epouranion). The future life of glory as in 1Co 15:24,50. He will save (\s“sei, effective future) me there finally and free from all evil. {To whom be the glory} (\h“i h̃ doxa). No verb in the Greek. Paul's final doxology, his Swan Song, to Christ as in Ro 9:5; 16:27.

4:19 {Prisca and Aquila} (\Priscan kai Akulan). Paul's friends now back in Ephesus, no longer in Rome (Rom 16:3). See 1:16 for the house of Onesiphorus.

4:20 {Erastus} (Erastos\). See Ac 19:22; Ro 16:23. {Trophimus} (Trophimon\). A native of Ephesus and with Paul in Jerusalem (Ac 20:4; 21:29). {At Miletus sick} (en Mil't'i asthenounta\). Present active participle of \asthene“, to be weak. Probably on Paul's return from Crete.

4:21 {Before winter} (pro cheim'nos\). Pathetic item if Paul was now in the Mamertine Dungeon in Rome with winter coming on and without his cloak for which he asked. How long he had been in prison this time we do not know. He may even have spent the previous winter or part of it here. Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia are all unknown otherwise. Irenaeus does speak of Linus. {The Lord be with thy Spirit} (ho kurios meta tou pneumatou sou\). Let us hope that Timothy and Mark reached Paul before winter, before the end came, with the cloak and with the books. Our hero, we may be sure, met the end nobly. He is already more than conqueror in Christ who is by his side and who will welcome him to heaven and give him his crown. Luke, Timothy, Mark will do all that mortal hands can do to cheer the heart of Paul with human comfort. He already had the comfort of Christ in full measure.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {According to the faith of God's elect} (\kata pistin eklektⁿ theou). Here \kata expresses the aim of Paul's apostleship, not the standard by which he was chosen as in Php 3:14; a classic idiom, repeated here with \epignⁿ sin, eusebeian, epitagⁿ, "with a view to" in each case. For "God's elect" see Ro 8:33; Col 3:12. {The knowledge} (\epignⁿ sin). "Full knowledge," one of Paul's favourite words. For the phrase see 1Ti 2:4. {Which is according to godliness} (\t^s kat' eusebeian). "The (truth) with a view to godliness." The combination of faith and full knowledge of the truth is to bring godliness on the basis of the hope of life eternal.

1:2 {God who cannot lie} (\ho apseud^s theos). "The non-lying God." Old adjective (\a\ privative and \pseud^s), here only in N.T. See 2Ti 2:13. In Polycarp's last prayer. {Promised} (\ep^ggeilato). First aorist middle indicative of \epaggellⁿ. Antithesis in \ephanerⁿ sen de\ (manifested) in verse 3 (first aorist active indicative of \phaneroⁿ). Same contrast in Ro 16:25; Col 1:26. {Before times eternal} (\pro chronⁿ aiⁿ nⁿ). Not to God's purpose before time began (Eph 1:4; 2Ti 1:9), but to definite promises (Ro 9:4) made in time (Lock). "Long ages ago." See Ro 16:25.

1:3 {In his own seasons} (\kairois idiois). Locative case. See 1Ti 2:6; 6:15. {In the message} (\en k^rrugmati). See 1Co 1:21; 2:4 for this word, the human proclamation (preaching) of God's word. {Wherewith I was intrusted} (\ho episteuthⁿ). Accusative relative \ho retained with the first aorist passive indicative of \pisteuⁿ as in 1Ti 1:11. See 1Ti 2:7. {Of God our Saviour} (\tou s^tros h^m nⁿ theou). In verse 4 he applies the words "\tou s^tros h^m nⁿ" to Christ. In 2:13 he applies both \theou and \s^tros to Christ.

1:4 {My true child} (\gn^si i teknⁱ). See 1Ti 1:2 for this adjective with Timothy. Titus is not mentioned in Acts, possibly because he is Luke's brother. But one can get a clear picture of him by turning to 2Co 2:13; 7:6-15; 8:6-24; 12:16-18; Ga 2:1-3; Tit 1:4f.; 3:12; 2Ti 4:10. He had succeeded in Corinth where Timothy had failed. Paul had left him in Crete as superintendent of the work there. Now he writes him from Nicopolis (Tit 3:12). {After a common faith} (\kata koinⁿ pistin\). Here \kata\ does mean standard, not aim, but it is a faith (\pistin\) common to a Gentile (a Greek) like Titus as well as to a Jew like Paul and so common to all races and classes (Jude 1:3). \Koinos\ does not here have the notion of unclean as in Ac 10:14; 11:8.

1:5 {For this cause} (\toutou charin\). In N.T. only here and Eph 3:1,14. Paul may be supplementing oral instruction as in Timothy's case and may even be replying to a letter from Titus (Zahn). {Left I thee in Crete} (\apeleipon se en Kr^ti\). This is the imperfect active of \apoleip^a\, though MSS. give the aorist active also (\apelipon\) and some read \kateleipon\ or \katelipon\). Both are common verbs, though Paul uses \kataleip^a\ only in 1Th 3:1 except two quotations (Ro 11:4; Eph 5:31) and \apoleip^a\ only here and 2Ti 4:13,20. Perhaps \apoleip^a\ suggests a more temporary stay than \kataleip^a\. Paul had apparently stopped in Crete on his return from Spain about A.D. 65. {That thou shouldest set in order} (\hina epidiorth^si\). Late and rare double compound (inscriptions, here only in N.T.), first aorist middle subjunctive (final clause with \hina) of \epidiortho^a\, to set straight (\ortho^a\) thoroughly (\dia\) in addition (\epi\), a clean job of it. {The things that were wanting} (\ta leiponta\). "The things that remain." See 3:13; Lu 18:22. Either things left undone or things that survive. In both senses the new pastor faces problems after the tornado has passed. Parry takes it "of present defects" in Cretan character. {And appoint} (\kai katast^sis\). Final clause still and first aorist active subjunctive of \kathist^{mi}\, the word used in Ac 6:13 about the deacons. The word does not preclude the choice by the churches (in every city, \kata polin\, distributive use of \kata). This is a chief point in the \epidiorth^sis\ (White). {Elders} (\presbuterous\). See 1Ti 3:2; 4:17. {As I gave thee charge} (\h^s eg^a soi dietaxamⁿ\). First aorist (constative) middle imperative of \diatass^a\, clear reference to previous personal details given to Titus on previous occasions.

1:6 {Blameless} (\anegl^tos\). In a condition of first class. Used in 1Ti 3:10 of deacons which see. {That believe} (\pista\). Added to what is in 1Ti 3:4. "Believing children." {Not accused of riot} (\mⁿ en kat^{gori}fi as^atias\). See 1Ti 5:19 for \kat^{goria}\ and Eph 5:18 for \as^atia\. "Not in accusation of profligacy." {Unruly} (\anupotakta\). See 1Ti 1:9. Public disorder, out of doors. See also verse 10.

1:7 {The bishop} (\ton episkopon\). Same office as "elder" in 1:5. "Elder is the title, oversight is the function" (B. Weiss). {As God's steward} (\h"s theou oikonomon\). See 1Co 4:1f. for Paul's idea of the bishop (elder) as God's steward (cf. 1Co 9:17; Col 1:25; Eph 3:2; 1Ti 1:4). {Not self-willed} (\m^ authad^). Old word (from autos, h^domai), self-pleasing, arrogant. In N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:10. {Not soon angry} (\orgilon\). Old adjective from \org^ (\anger). Here only in N.T. Vulgate, _iracundum_. For "brawler" and "striker" see 1Ti 3:2. {Not greedy of filthy lucre} (\aischrokerd^). "Not greedy of shameful gain." Used of deacons in 1Ti 3:8, \aphilarguron\ used of elders in 1Ti 3:3.

1:8 {A lover of good} (\philagathon\). Late double compound (\philos, agathos\). See Wisdom 7:22. Here only in N.T. Just (\dikaion\), holy (\hosion\) not in 1Ti 3. {Temperate} (\egkrat^). Old and common adjective (\en, kratos\, strength), having power over, controlling, here only in N.T. Picture of self-control.

1:9 {Holding to} (\antechomenon\). Present middle participle of \antech^, old verb, to hold back, in middle to hold oneself face to face with, to cling to, as in 1Th 5:14. {The faithful word} (\tou pistou logou\). See 1Ti 1:15; 6:3; Ro 16:17. Some would see a reference here to Christ as the Personal Logos. {That he may be able} (\hina dunatos ^i\). Final clause with present active subjunctive. Paul several times uses \dunatos eimi\ in the sense of \dunamai\, with infinitive as here (Ro 4:21; 11:23; 2Ti 1:12). {The gainsayers} (\tous antilegontas\). Present active participle of \antileg^, old word, to answer back, as in Ro 10:21. "The talkers back."

1:10 {Vain talkers} (\mataiologoi\). Late and rare compound, empty talkers, in Vett. Val. and here. See 1Ti 1:6 for \mataiologia\. {Deceivers} (\phrenapatai\). Late and rare compound, in papyri, eccl. writers, here alone in N.T. "Mind-deceivers." See Ga 6:3 for \phrenapatfin\. {Specially they of the circumcision} (\malista hoi ek t^s peritom^s\). Same phrase in Ac 11:2; Ga 2:12; Col 4:11. Jews are mentioned in Crete in Ac 2:11. Apparently Jewish Christians of the Pharisaic type tinged with Gnosticism.

1:11 {Whose mouths must be stopped} (\hous dei epistomizein\). Literally, "whom it is necessary to silence by stopping the mouth." Present active infinitive \epistomizein\, old and common verb (\epi\, \stoma\, mouth), here only in N.T. To stop the mouth either with bridle or muzzle or gag. {Overthrow} (\anatrepousin\). Old and common verb, to turn up, to overturn. In N.T. only here and 2Ti 2:18. In papyri to upset a family by perversion of one member. {Things which they ought not} (\ha m^ dei\). Note subjective negative \m^\ with indefinite relative and indicative mode. {For filthy lucre's sake} (\aischrou kerdous charin\). The Cretans are given a bad reputation for itinerating prophets for profit by Polybius, Livy, Plutarch. Paul's warnings in 1Ti 3:3,8; 6:5 reveal it as "a besetting temptation of the professional teacher" (Parry). See verse 7 above. Disgraceful gain, made in shameful ways.

1:12 {A prophet of their own} (\idios aut^ n proph^t^s\). "Their own prophet." Self-styled "prophet" (or poet), and so accepted by the Cretans and by Cicero and Apuleius, that is Epimenides who was born in Crete at Cnossos. It is a hexameter line and Callimachus quoted the first part of it in a Hymn to Zeus. It is said that Epimenides suggested to the Athenians the erection of statues to "unknown gods" (Ac 17:23). {Liars} (\pseustai\). See 1Ti 1:10 for the word. The Cretans had a bad reputation on this line, partly due to their claim to having the tomb of Zeus. {Evil beasts} (\kaka th^ria\). "Wicked wild beasts." Lock asks if the Minotaur was partly responsible. {Idle gluttons} (\gasteres argai\). "Idle bellies." Blunt and forceful. See Php 3:19 "whose god is the belly" (\h^ koilia\). Both words give the picture of the sensual gormandizer.

1:13 {Testimony} (\marturia\). Of the poet Epimenides. Paul endorses it from his recent knowledge. {Sharply} (\apotom^s\). Old adverb from \apotomos\ (from \apotemn^, to cut off), in N.T. only here and 2Co 13:10, "curtly," "abruptly." It is necessary to appear rude sometimes for safety, if the house is on fire and life is in danger. {That they may be sound} (\hina hugiain^sin\). Final clause with \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \hugiain^, for which verb see on 1Ti 1:10.

1:14 See 1Ti 1:4 for \prosech^ and \muthois\, only here we have _Jewish_ (\Ioudaikois\) added. Perhaps a reference to the oral traditions condemned by Christ in Mr 7:2-8. See also Col

2:22, apparently Pharisaic type of Gnostics. {Who turn away from the truth} (\apostrephomen“n\). Present middle (direct) participle of \apostreph“, "men turning themselves away from the truth" (accusative according to regular idiom). "The truth" (1Ti 4:3) is the gospel (Eph 4:21).

1:15 {To them that are defiled} (\tois memiammenois\). Perfect passive articular participle of \miain“, old verb, to dye with another colour, to stain, in N.T. only here, Jude 1:8; Heb 12:15. See \memiantai\ (perf. pass. indic.) in this verse. \Molun“\ (1Co 8:7) is to smear. {Unbelieving} (\apistois\). As in 1Co 7:12f.; 1Ti 5:8. The principle or proverb just quoted appears also in 1Co 6:12; 10:23; Ro 14:20. For the defilement of mind (\nous\) and conscience (\suneidˆsis\) in both Gentile and Jew by sin, see Ro 1:18-2:29.

1:16 {They profess} (\homologousin\). Present active indicative of \homologe“, common verb (\homou, leg“) as in Ro 10:10f. \Eidenai\ (know) is second perfect active infinitive of \oida\ in indirect assertion. {By their works} (\tois ergois\). Instrumental case. {They deny} (\arnountai\). Present middle of \arneomai\, old verb, common in the Gospels and the Pastoral Epistles (1Ti 5:8; Tit 2:12; 2Ti 2:12). {Abominable} (\bdeluktoi\). Verbal adjective from \bdelussomai\. Only in LXX and here. {Disobedient} (\apeitheis\). See Ro 1:30. {Reprobate} (\adokimoi\). See on 1Co 9:27; Ro 1:28.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {But speak thou} (\su de lalei\). In contrast to these Pharisaic Gnostics in Crete. {Befit} (\prepei\). Old verb to be becoming, seemly. See 1Ti 2:10; Eph 5:3. With dative case \didaskalifi\. {Sound} (\hugiainous^i\). Healthful as in 1:13; 2:2; 1Ti 1:10, common word in the Pastorals.

2:2 {Aged men} (\presbutas\). See Phm 1:9 for this word. For discussion of family life see also Co 3:18-4:1; Eph 5:22-6:9; 1Ti 5:1-6:2. For the adjectives here see 1Ti 3:2,8; for the substantives see 1Ti 6:11.

2:3 {Aged women} (\presbutidas\). Old word, feminine of \presbut^s\, only here in N.T. See \presbuteras\ in 1Ti 5:2. {Reverent} (\hieroprepeis\). Old word (\heiros, prepei\). Only here in N.T. Same idea in 1Ti 2:10. Like people engaged in sacred duties (Lock). {In demeanour} (\en katast^mati\). Late and rare word (inscriptions) from \kathist^mi\, deportment, only here in N.T. {Not slanderers} (\m^diabolous\). See 1Ti 3:11; 2Ti 3:3. {Nor enslaved to much wine} (\m^de oin^i poll^i dedoul^menas\). Perfect passive participle of \doulo^s\, with dative case \oin^i\). See 1Ti 3:8. "It is proved by experience that the reclamation of a woman drunkard is almost impossible" (White). But God can do the "impossible." {Teachers of that which is good} (\kalodidaskalous\). Compound word found here alone, _bona docentes_ (teaching good and beautiful things). A sorely needed mission.

2:4 {That they may train} (\hina s^phroniz^sin\). Purpose clause, \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \s^phroniz^s\, old verb (from \s^phr^s\, sound in mind, \saos, phr^s\, as in this verse), to make sane, to restore to one's senses, to discipline, only here in N.T. {To love their husbands} (\philandrous einai\). Predicate accusative with \einai\ of old adjective \philandros\ (\philos, an^r\, fond of one's husband), only here in N.T. \An^r\ means man, of course, as well as husband, but only husband here, not "fond of men" (other men than their own). {To love their children} (\philoteknous\). Another old compound, here only in N.T. This exhortation is still needed where some married women prefer poodle-dogs to children.

2:5 {Workers at home} (\oikourgous\). So the oldest MSS. (from \oikos, ergou\) instead of \oikourous\, keepers at home (from \koiso, ouros\, keeper). Rare word, found in Soranus, a medical writer, Field says. Cf. 1Ti 5:13. "Keepers at home" are usually "workers at home." {Kind} (\agathas\). See Ro 5:7. See Col 3:18; Eph 5:22 for the same use of \hupotassomai\, to be in subjection. Note \idiois\ (their own). See 1Ti 6:1 for the same negative purpose clause (\hina m^ blasphem^tai\).

2:6 {The younger men} (\tous ne^terous\). Just one item, besides "likewise" (\hosaut^s\ as in 3; 1Ti 2,9), "to be soberminded" (\s^phronein\, old verb as in Rom 12:3). It is possible to take "in all things" (\peri panta\) with \s^phronein\, though the editors take it with verse 7.

2:7 {Shewing thyself} (\seauton parechomenos\). Present middle (redundant middle) participle of \parech^ with the reflexive pronoun \seauton\ as if the active voice \parech^n\. The _Koin_ shows an increasing number of such constructions (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 811). See active in 1Ti 1:4. {An ensample} (\tupon\). For this word see 2Th 3:9; Php 3:17. {Uncorruptness} (\aphthorian\). Only example, from late adjective \aphthoros\ (\a\ privative and \phtheir^).

2:8 {Sound} (\hugi^, Attic usually \hugif\ in accusative singular), elsewhere in Pastorals participle \hugian^ (verse 1). {That cannot be condemned} (\akatagn^ston\). Only N.T. example (verbal, \a\ privative and \katagn^stos\) and in IV Macc. 4:47. Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 200) quotes it from an inscription and the adverb from a papyrus. {He that is of the contrary part} (\ho ex enantias\). "The one on the opposite side" (your opponent). Cf. verse 9; 1Ti 5:14. {May be ashamed} (\hina entrap^i\). Final clause with \hina\ and second aorist passive subjunctive of \entrep^, to turn, in middle and passive to turn one on himself and so be ashamed (to blush) as in 2Th 3:14; 1Co 4:14. This sense in the papyri. {Evil} (\phaulon\). Old word, easy (easy morals), worthless; bad, as in 2Co 5:10.

2:9 {Servants} (\doulous\). "Slaves." Supply "exhort" (\parakalei\). See 1Ti 6:1 for "masters" (\despotais\). {Well-pleasing} (\euairestous\). See on 2Co 5:9. {Not gainsaying} (\m^ antilegontas\). "Not answer back." See Ro

2:10 {Not purloining} (\m^ nosphizomenous). Present middle participle of \nosphiz^“, old verb (from \nosphi\, apart), in middle to set apart for oneself, to embezzle, in N.T. only here and Ac 5:2f. {Fidelity} (\pistin). See Ga 5:22; 1Ti 5:12 for \pistis in the sense of faithfulness. Nowhere else in the N.T. do we have \agath^ with \pistis as here, but an Oxyr. papyrus (iii. 494, 9) has this very phrase (\pfsan pistin endeiknumen^i). Westcott and Hort put \agap^n in the margin. See 3:2. {That they may adorn} (\hina kosm^sin). Final clause with \hina and present active subjunctive. See 1Ti 2:9 for \kosme^“. Paul shows slaves how they may "adorn" the teaching of God.

2:11 {Hath appeared} (\epephan^). "Did appear," the first Epiphany (the Incarnation). Second aorist passive indicative of \epiphain^“, old verb, in N.T. here, 3:4; Lu 1:79; Ac 27:20. {Bringing salvation} (\s^t^rios). Old adjective from \s^t^r (Saviour), here alone in N.T. except \to s^t^rion (salvation, "the saving act") in Lu 2:30; 3:6; Eph 6:17. {Instructing} (\paideuousa). See 1Ti 1:20. {Ungodliness} (\asebeian). See Ro 1:18. {Worldly lusts} (\tas kosmikas epithumias). Aristotle and Plutarch use \kosmikos (from \kosmos) about the universe as in Heb 9:1 about the earthly. Here it has alone in N.T. the sense of evil "in this present age" as with \kosmos in 1Jo 2:16. The three adverbs set off the opposite (soberly \s^phron^s\, righteously \dikai^s\, godly \euseb^s).

2:13 {Looking for} (\prosdechomenoi). Present middle participle of \prosdechomai, old verb, the one used of Simeon (Lu 2:25) and others (Lu 2:38) who were looking for the Messiah. {The blessed hope and appearing of the glory} (\t^n makarian elpida kai epiphaneian t^s dox^s). The word \epiphaneia (used by the Greeks of the appearance of the gods, from \epiphan^s, epiphain^“) occurs in 2Ti 1:10 of the Incarnation of Christ, the first Epiphany (like the verb \epephan^, Tit 2:11), but here of the second Epiphany of Christ or the second coming as in 1Ti 6:14; 2Ti 4:1,8. In 2Th 2:8 both \epiphaneia and \parousia (the usual word) occur together of the second coming. {Of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ} (\tou megalou theou kai s^t^ros I^sou Christou). This is the necessary meaning of the one article with \theou and \s^t^ros just as in 2Pe 1:1,11. See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 786. Westcott and Hort read \Christou I^sou\.

2:14 {Who gave himself for us} (hos ed^ken heauton huper h^m^“n\). Paul's great doctrine (Ga 1:4; 2:20; 1Ti 2:6). {That he might redeem us} (hina lutr^“s^tai\). Final clause, \hina\ and the aorist middle subjunctive of \lutro^“\, old verb from \lutron\ (ransom), in N.T. only here, Lu 24:21; 1Pe 1:18. {Purify to himself} (katharis^i heaut^“i\). Final clause with first aorist active subjunctive of \kathariz^“\, for which verb see Eph 5:26. {Lawlessness} (anomias\). See 2Th 2:3. {A people for his own possession} (laon periousion\). A late word (from \perieimi\, to be over and above, in papyri as well as \periousia\), only in LXX and here, apparently made by the LXX, one's possession, and so God's chosen people. See 1Pe 2:9 (laos eis peripoi^sin\). {Zealous of good works} (\z^l^“t^“n kal^“n erg^“n\). "A zealot for good works." Substantive for which see 1Co 14:12; Ga 1:14. Objective genitive \erg^“n\.

2:15 {With all authority} (meta pas^s epitag^s\). See 1Co 7:6; 2Co 8:8. Assertion of authority is sometimes necessary. {Let no man despise thee} (m^deis sou periphroneit^“\). Present active imperative in prohibition of \periphrone^“\, old verb, only here in N.T., to think around (on all sides). Literally, "let no man think around thee" (and so despise thee). In 1Ti 4:12 it is \kataphroneit^“\ (think down on), a stronger word of scorn, but this one implies the possibility of one making mental circles around one and so "out-thinking" him. The best way for the modern minister to command respect for his "authority" is to do thinking that will deserve it.

3:1 {To be in subjection to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient} (\archais exousiais hupotassesthai peitharchein\). Remarkable double asyndeton, no \kai\ (and) between the two substantives or the two verbs. \Peitharchein\ (to obey), old verb (from \peithomai, arch^), in N.T. only here and Ac 27:21. {To be ready unto every good work} (\pros pan ergon agathon hetoimous einai\). Pauline phrase (2Co 9:8; 2Ti 2:21; 3:17), here adjective \hetoimos\ (2Co 9:5), there verb.

3:2 {To speak evil} (\blasph^mein\). See Col 3:8; 1Ti 6:4. {Not to be contentious} (\amachous einai\). "To be non-fighters" (1Ti 3:3), originally "invincible." {Gentle} (\epieikeis\). See 1Ti 3:3. {Meekness} (\praut^ta\). \Praot^ta\. See Col 3:12.

3:3 {Aforetime} (\pote\). "Once" in our unconverted state as in Eph 2:3. {Foolish} (\ano^toi\). See Ro 1:14,21. {Disobedient} (\apeitheis\). See Ro 1:30. {Deceived} (\plan^menoi\). Present passive participle of \plana^\" though the middle is possible. {Divers lusts} (\h^donais poikilais\). "Pleasures" (\h^donais\ from \h^domai, old word, in N.T. only here, Lu 8:14; Jas 4:1,3; 2Pe 2:13). \Poikilais\ (old word) is many-coloured as in Mr 1:34; Jas 1:2; 2Ti 3:6, etc. {Living} (\diagontes\). See 1Ti 3:6 (supply \bion\). {In malice} (\en kakifi\). See Ro 1:29. {Envy} (\phthon^i\). See Ro 1:29. {Hateful} (\stug^toi\). Late passive verbal from \stuge^\", to hate. In Philo, only here in N.T. {Hating one another} (\misountes all^lous\). Active sense and natural result of being "hateful."

3:4 {The kindness} (\h^chr^stot^s\). See Ro 2:4 for this very word used of God as here. {His love toward man} (\h^philanthr^pia\). "The philanthropy of God our Saviour." Old word from \philanthr^pos\, for love of mankind, in N.T. only here and Ac 28:2. {Appeared} (\epephan^). See 2:11 and here as there the Incarnation of Christ. See 1Ti 1:1 for \s^t^r\ with \theos\ (God).

3:5 {Done} (not in the Greek, only the article \t^\"), "not as a result of works those in righteousness which we did." Same idea as in Ro 3:20f. {According to his mercy he saved us} (\kata to autou eleos es“sen\). See Ps 109:26; 1Pe 1:3; Eph 2:4. Effective aorist active indicative of \s“z“\. {Through the washing of regeneration} (\dia loutrou palingenesias\). Late and common word with the Stoics (Dibelius) and in the Mystery-religions (Angus), also in the papyri and Philo. Only twice in the N.T. (Mt 19:28 with which compare \apokatastasia\ in Ac 3:21, and here in personal sense of new birth). For \loutron\, see Eph 5:26, here as there the laver or the bath. Probably in both cases there is a reference to baptism, but, as in Ro 6:3-6, the immersion is the picture or the symbol of the new birth, not the means of securing it. {And renewing of the Holy Spirit} (\kai anakain“se“s pneumatos hagiou\). "And renewal by the Holy Spirit" (subjective genitive). For the late word \anakain“sis\, see Ro 12:2. Here, as often, Paul has put the objective symbol before the reality. The Holy Spirit does the renewing, man submits to the baptism after the new birth to picture it forth to men.

3:6 {Which} (\hou\). Genitive case by attraction from \ho\ (grammatical gender) to the case of \pneumatos hagiou\. We do not have grammatical gender (only natural) in English. Hence here we should say "whom," even if it does not go smoothly with \execheen\ (he poured out, second aorist active indicative of \ekche“). The reference is to the great Pentecost (Ac 2:33) as foretold by Joel (Joe 2:28). {Richly} (\plousi“s\). Then and to each one in his own experience. See Ro 10:12; 1Ti 6:17.

3:7 {Being justified by his grace} (\dikai“thentes t`i ekeinou chariti\). First aorist passive participle of \dikaio“\ and instrumental case of \charis\ as in Ro 3:24; 5:1. {That we might be made heirs} (\hina kl`ronomoi gen`th“men\). Purpose with \hina\ and first aorist passive of \ginomai\. See Ro 4:13; 8:17.

3:8 {The saying} (\ho logos\). In verses 4-7. {I will} (\boulomai\). See 1Ti 2:8. {That thou affirm confidently} (\se diabebaiousthai\). Indirect command. For the verb see 1Ti 1:7. {That they may be careful} (\hina phrontiz“sin\). Sub-final use of \hina\ with present active subjunctive of \phrontiz“\, old verb, only here in N.T. {To maintain good works} (\kal“n erg“n pro<stasthai\). Present middle infinitive of \proist`mi\, intransitive use, to stand before, to take the lead in, to care for. Paul is anxious that "believers" may take the lead in good works.

3:9 {Fightings about the law} (\machas nomikas). "Legal battles." See 1Ti 6:4; 2Ti 2:23. Wordy fights about Mosaic and Pharisaic and Gnostic regulations. {Shun} (\periistaso). Present middle imperative of \periist^{mi}, intransitive, step around, stand aside (2Ti 2:16). Common in this sense in the literary _Koin, _. {Unprofitable} (\an“pheleis). Old compound adjective (\a\ privative and \ophelos), in N.T. only here and Heb 7:18.

3:10 {Heretical} (\hairetikon). Old adjective from \hairesis (\haireomai, to choose), a choosing of a party (sect, Ac 5:17) or of teaching (2Pe 2:1). Possibly a schism had been started here in Crete. {Refuse} (\paraitou). Present middle imperative of \paraite“, to ask from, to beg off from. See same form in 1Ti 4:7; 5:11. Possibly an allusion here to Christ's directions in Mt 18:15-17.

3:11 {Is perverted} (\exestraptai). Perfect passive indicative of \ekstreph“, old word to turn inside out, to twist, to pervert. Only here in N.T. {Self-condemned} (\autokatakritos). Only known example of this double compound verbal adjective (\autos, kata, krin“).

3:12 {When I shall send} (\hotan pemp“). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan and the first aorist active subjunctive (or future indicative) of \pemp“ (same form). {Artemas} (\Artemfn). Perhaps abbreviation of Artemidorus. Nothing more is known of him. {Or Tychicus} (\^ Tuchikon). Paul's well-known disciple (Col 4:7; Eph 6:21; 2Ti 4:12). {To Nicopolis} (\eis Nikopolin). Probably in Epirus, a good place for work in Dalmatia (2Ti 4:10). {I have determined} (\kekrika). Perfect active indicative. I have decided. {To winter there} (\ekei paracheimasai). First aorist active infinitive of \paracheimaz“, a literary _Koin, _ word for which see Ac 27:12; 1Co 16:6.

3:13 {Zenas the lawyer} (\Z^{nfn} ton nomikon). Possibly abbreviation of Zenodorus and may be one of the bearers of the Epistle with Apollos. Probably an expert in the Mosaic law as the word means in the Gospels. A converted Jewish lawyer. The Latin term is _jurisconsultum_ for \nomikon. {Apollos} (\Apoll“n). Paul's friend (Ac 18:24-19:1; 1Co 1:12ff.). {Set forward} (\propempson). First aorist active imperative of \propemp“, old verb, to send on ahead (1Co 16:6,11; Ro 15:24). {That nothing be wanting unto them} (\hina m^den autois leip^i\). Purpose with \hina\ and present (or second aorist \lip^i\, some MSS.) subjunctive of \leip^i\, old verb to leave, to remain, to lack. With dative case here (\autois\).

3:14 {Our people} (\hoi h^meteroi\). "Our folks." The Cretan converts, not just Paul's friends. {Let learn} (\manthanet^san\). Present active imperative, keep on learning how. {To maintain} (\pro^stasthai\). See verse 8. {For necessary uses} (\eis anagkaias chreias\). "For necessary wants." No idlers wanted. See 1Th 4:12; 2Th 3:10f. {Unfruitful} (\akarpoi\). See 1Co 14:14; Eph 5:11.

3:15 {That love us} (\tous philountas h^mfs\). Paul craved the love of his friends as opposed to 2:8.

1:1 {A prisoner of Christ Jesus} (\desmios Christou I'sou\). As verse 9 and in Eph 3:1; 4:1. Old adjective from \desmos\ (bond, \de'', to bind). Apparently used here on purpose rather than \apostolos\ as more effective with Philemon and a more touching occasion of pride as Paul writes with his manacled right hand. {Timothy} (\Timotheos\). With Paul in Ephesus (Ac 19:22) and probably known to Philemon. Associated with Paul also in I and II Thess., II Cor., Philipp., Col. {To Philemon} (\Phil'moni\). A resident of Colossae and a convert of Paul's (verse 19), perhaps coming to Ephesus while Paul was there when his ministry had so much influence over the province of Asia (Ac 19:9f., 26; 1Co 16:19). The name Philemon occurs in the legend of Baucis and Philemon (Ovid's _Metamorphoses_), but with no connection with the brother here. He was active in the church in Colossae ('our co-worker,' \sunerg'i h'm'n\ and was beloved (\agap'it'i\ by Paul.

1:2 {To Apphia our sister} (\Apphifi t'i adelph'i\). Dative case in address. A common name in Phrygian inscriptions and apparently the wife of Philemon. "Sister" is in the Christian sense. {To Archippus} (\Archipp'i\). Dative case in address. It is uncertain whether he is the son of Philemon or not. Apparently he is prominent in the church in Colossae, possibly even pastor, probably not in Laodicea as some understand Col 4:17 to imply. {Fellow-soldier} (\sunstrati't'i\). Old word, only here and Php 2:25 in N.T. In metaphorical sense. Perhaps while Paul was in Ephesus. {To the church in thy house} (\t'i kat' oikon sou ekkl'sifi\). The church that met in the house of Philemon. In large cities there would be several meeting-places. Before the third century there is no certain evidence of special church buildings for worship (White, _Exp. Grk. T._). See Ac 12:12 for Mary's house in Jerusalem, 1Co 16:19 for the house of Aquila and Prisca in Ephesus, Ro 16:5 for the house of Prisca and Aquila in Rome, Col 4:15 for the house of Nympha in Laodicea.

1:4 {Always} (\pantote\). Goes with \eucharist'' though so far away in the Greek sentence. {Making mention of thee} (\mneian sou poioumenos\). See 1Th 1:2 for this phrase. {In} (\epi\). Upon the occasion of.

1:5 {Hearing} (\akou“n\). Through Epaphras (Col 1:7,8; 4:12), possibly from Onesimus also. {And towards all the saints} (\kai eis pantas tous hagious\). He spoke of "thy love and faith" (\sou t^n agap^n kai t^n pistin\) "towards the Lord Jesus" (\pros ton Kurion I^soun\) and by a sort of momentum (Vincent) he carries both words over to the saints, though it can be explained as chiasm (Ga 4:4) also.

1:6 {That} (\hop“s\). Rather than the more common final particle \hina\. Connected with \mneian poioumenos\. {The fellowship of thy faith} (\h^ koin“nia t^s piste“s sou\). Partnership like Php 1:5 in (objective genitive, \piste“s\). {Effectual} (\energ^s\). Common adjective, like \energus\ (at work), in N.T. only here, 1Co 16:9; Heb 4:12. Papyri use \energus\ of a mill in working order, of ploughed land, etc. {In you} (\en humin\). Some MSS. have \en h^min\ (in us), itacism and common.

1:7 {I had} (\eschon\). Ingressive second aorist active indicative of \ech“\, not \eichom^n\ as the Textus Receptus has it. Paul refers to his joy when he first heard the good news about Philemon's activity (verse 5). {The hearts} (\ta splagchna\). See Php 1:8 for this use of this word for the nobler viscera (heart, lungs, liver) and here for the emotional nature. {Have been refreshed} (\anapepautai\). Perfect passive indicative of old compound verb \anapau“\ as in Mt 11:28, a relief and refreshment whether temporary (Mr 6:31) or eternal (Re 14:13).

1:8 {Though I have} (\ech“n\). Concessive participle (present active). {That which is befitting} (\to an^kon\). Neuter singular accusative of the articular participle (present active) of \an^k“\, to come up to requirements and so to be befitting. For idea in \an^k“\, see Col 3:18; Eph 5:4. This idiom is in later writers. {I rather beseech} (\mflon parakal“\). Rather than command (\epitass“\) which he has a perfect right to do.

1:9 {Paul the aged} (\Paulos presbut^s\). Paul is called \neanias\ (a young man) at the stoning of Stephen (Ac 7:58). He was perhaps a bit under sixty now. Hippocrates calls a man \presbut^s\ from 49 to 56 and \ger“n\ after that. The papyri use \presbut^s\ for old man as in Lu 1:18 of Zacharias and in Tit 2:2. But in Eph 6:20 Paul says \presbeu“ en halusei\ (I am an ambassador in a chain). Hence Lightfoot holds that here \presbutˆs\ = \presbeutˆs\ because of common confusion by the scribes between \u\ and \eu\. In the LXX four times the two words are used interchangeably. There is some confusion also in the papyri and the inscriptions. Undoubtedly ambassador (\presbeutˆs\) is possible here as in Eph 6:20 (\presbeuˆ“)) though there is no real reason why Paul should not term himself properly "Paul the aged."

1:10 {For my child} (\peri tou emou teknou\). Tender and affectionate reference to Onesimus as his spiritual child. {Whom I have begotten in my bonds} (\hon egennˆsa en tois desmois\).
 First aorist active indicative of \gennaˆ“, to beget. See 1Co 4:15 for this figurative sense. Paul is evidently proud of winning Onesimus to Christ though a prisoner himself.

1:11 {Onesimus} (\Onˆsimon\). A common name among slaves and made like Chresimus, Chrestus. The word is from \onˆsis\ (profit) and that from \oninˆmi\, to profit, to help. {Who was aforetime unprofitable to thee} (\ton pote soi achrˆston\). "The once to thee useless one." Play (pun) on the meaning of the name Onesimus (\onˆsimos\, useful) as once "useless" (\achrˆstos\, verbal adjective, |a| privative and |chraomai\, to use). {But now is profitable to thee and to me} (\nuni de soi kai emoi euchrˆston\). "But now to thee and to me useful." Still further play on the name Onesimus by \euchrˆston\ (verbal adjective from |eu| and |chraomai\, to use). Ethical dative here (\soi, emoi\).

1:12 {I have sent back} (\anepempsa\). Epistolary aorist. As it will look when Onesimus arrives. {In his own person} (\auton\).
 "Himself," intensive pronoun with \hon\ (whom). {My very heart} (\ta ema splagchna\). As in verse 7. He almost loves Onesimus as his own son.

1:13 {I would fain have kept} (\eboulomˆn katechein\). Imperfect middle and present infinitive, "I was wishing to hold back." Again from the standpoint of the arrival of Onesimus. {In thy behalf} (\huper sou\). So "in thy stead," "in place of thee." {He might minister} (\diakonˆi\). Present active subjunctive (retained after |eboulomˆn\) with \hina\, purpose continued,
 "that he might keep on ministering."

 purpose (1Co 1:10; 7:25). Ablative case with \chˆris\ (apart from). {I would do nothing} (\ouden ^thel^sa poi^sai\). First aorist active indicative of \thel^sai\, I decided, I wished, decision reached (cf. \eboulom^sai\ in verse 13). {Thy goodness} (\to agathon sou\). Neuter articular adjective (thy good deed). {As of necessity} (\h^s kata anagk^s\). "As if according to compulsion." See 2Co 9:7. {But of free will} (\alla kata hekousion\). According to what is voluntary (Nu 15:3). Perhaps \tropon\ (way, manner) is to be understood with the adjective \hekousios\ (old word, here alone in N.T.), from \hek^s\ (1Co 9:17; Ro 8:20).

1:15 {Perhaps} (\tachai\). Old adverb, in N.T. only here and Ro 5:7. {That thou shouldst have him} (\hina auton apech^sai\). Final clause with \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \apech^sai\, to have back, "that thou might keep on having him back." {For ever} (\ai^s^on\). "Eternal," here and hereafter. Surely a noble thing for Paul to say and a word that would touch the best in Philemon.

1:16 {No longer as a servant} (\ouketi h^s doulon\). "No longer as a slave." So it has to be here. So it should be always. Paul sends Onesimus, the converted runaway slave, back to his legal master, but shows that he expects Philemon the Christian to treat Onesimus as a brother in Christ, not as a slave. {But more than a servant} (\all' huper doulon\). "But beyond a slave." {A brother beloved} (\adelphos agap^ton\). A brother in Christ. {How much rather to thee} (\pos^s^i de m^llon soi\). "By how much more to thee," because of Philemon's legal ownership of this now Christian slave. "In the flesh Philemon had the brother for a slave; in the Lord he had the slave for a brother" (Meyer).

1:17 {If then thou countest me a partner} (\ei oun me echeis koin^s^on\). As I assume that you do, condition of the first class. {Receive him as myself} (\proslabou auton h^s eme\). "Take him to thyself (indirect second aorist middle of \proslamban^sai\ as in Ac 18:26) as myself." Surpassing delicacy and consummate tact. These words sound the death-knell of human slavery wherever the spirit of Christ is allowed to have its way. It has been a long and hard fight to break the shackles of human bondage even in Christian countries and there are still millions of slaves in pagan and Mohammedan lands. Paul wrote these words with wisdom and courage and sincerity.

1:18 {But if he hath wronged thee at all} (\ei de ti ^dik^se se\). Condition of the first class, assumed to be true. Onesimus did wrong (dik^{se}, first aorist active indicative of adik^o, to wrong, without justice). He had probably robbed Philemon before he ran away. {Or oweth} (opheilei). Delicate way of putting the stealing. {Put that to mine account} (touto emoi ellogf). Present active imperative of elloga“\ . In the _Koin, verbs in \-e“\ often appear in \-a“\ like elee“, elea“\ . So with elloga“\ as elloga“, late verb in inscriptions and papyri (Deissmann, _Light, etc., p. 84), though in N.T. only here and Ro 5:13. It means to set to one's account.

1:19 {Write} (egrapsa). Epistolary aorist. {With mine hand} (tⁱ emⁱ cheiri). Instrumental case and a note of hand that can be collected. See 2Th 3:17; 1Co 16:21; Col 4:18. {I will repay it} (eg[“] apotis[“]). Future active indicative of apoti“\ (apoti“\) to pay back, to pay off. The more usual word was apod“s“\ . This is Paul's promissory note. Deissmann (_Light, etc., p. 331) notes how many of the papyri are concerning debts. {That I say not} (hina m[“] leg[“]). Neat idiom as in 2Co 9:4, delicately reminding Philemon that Paul had led him also to Christ. {Thou owest to me even thine own self besides} (kai seauton moi prosopheileis). Old verb, only here in N.T., Paul using the verb opheil“\ of verse 18 with pros\ added. He used every available argument to bring Philemon to see the higher ground of brotherhood in Christ about Onesimus.

1:20 {Let me have joy of thee} (eg[“] sou onaimⁿ). Second aorist middle optative of onin^{mi}, old verb, only here in N.T. Optative the regular construction for a wish about the future. "May I get profit from thee in the Lord." {Refresh my heart in Christ} (anapauson mou ta splagchna en Christⁱ). See verse 7 for anapauson\ (first aorist active imperative of anapau“\) and splagchna\ (3 times in this letter, 7,12,20).

1:21 {Obedience} (hupakoⁱ). "Compliance" seems less harsh to us in the light of 9. {I write} (egrapsa). Epistolary aorist again. {Even beyond what I say} (kai huper ha leg[“]). That can only mean that Paul "knows" (eid“s\, second perfect active participle of oida) that Philemon will set Onesimus free. He prefers that it come as Philemon's idea and wish rather than as a command from Paul. Paul has been criticized for not denouncing slavery in plain terms. But, when one considers the actual conditions in the Roman empire, he is a wise man who can suggest a better plan than the one pursued here for the ultimate overthrow of slavery.

1:22 {But withal} (\hama de\). Along with your kindly reception of Onesimus. On \hama\, see Ac 24:26; 27:40. {A lodging} (\xenian\). Old word from \xenos\, stranger. In N.T. only here and Ac 28:23. {I shall be granted unto you} (\charisth^soma humin\). First future passive of \charizomai\. Used either as a favour as here and Ac 3:14 or for destruction (Ac 25:11).

1:23 {Epaphras} (\Epaphrfs\). The Colossian preacher who apparently started the work in Colossae, Hierapolis, and Laodicea, and who had come to Rome to enlist Paul's help in the fight against incipient Gnosticism in the Lycus Valley. {My fellow-prisoner} (\ho sunaichmal^tos mou\). See on ^Ro 16:7 for this word, also in Col 4:10. Used metaphorically like the verb \aichmal^tiz^ in 2Co 10:5, though some hold that Epaphras became a prisoner with Paul in Rome.

1:24 The other "co-workers" (\sunergoi\) here (Mark, Aristarchus, Demas, Luke) are all named in detail in Col 4:10-14 with kindly words.

1:25 {Grace} (\h^ charis\). This great word occurred in the greeting (verse 3) as it does in the farewell.

1:1 {God} (\ho theos). This Epistle begins like Genesis and the Fourth Gospel with God, who is the Author of the old revelation in the prophets and of the new in his Son. Verses 1-3 are a _proemium_ (Delitzsch) or introduction to the whole Epistle. The periodic structure of the sentence (1-4) reminds one of Lu 1:1-4, Ro 1:1-7, 1Jo 1:1-4. The sentence could have concluded with \en hui"i in verse 2, but by means of three relatives (\hon, di' hou, hos) the author presents the Son as "the exact counterpart of God" (Moffatt). {Of old time} (\palai). "Long ago" as in Mt 11:21. {Having spoken} (\lal'sas). First aorist active participle of \lale", originally chattering of birds, then used of the highest form of speech as here. {Unto the fathers} (\tois patrasin). Dative case. The Old Testament worthies in general without "our" or "your" as in Joh 6:58; 7:22; Ro 9:5. {In the prophets} (\en tois proph'tais). As the quickening power of their life (Westcott). So 4:7. {By divers portions} (\polumer"s). "In many portions." Adverb from late adjective \polumer's\ (in papyri), both in _Vettius Valens_, here only in N.T., but in Wisdom 7:22 and Josephus (_Ant_. VIII, 3, 9). The Old Testament revelation came at different times and in various stages, a progressive revelation of God to men. {In divers manners} (\polutrop"s). "In many ways." Adverb from old adjective \polutropos, in Philo, only here in N.T. The two adverbs together are "a sonorous hendiadys for 'variously'" (Moffatt) as Chrysostom (\diaphor"s). God spoke by dream, by direct voice, by signs, in different ways to different men (Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Elijah, Isaiah, etc.).

1:2 {At the end of these days} (\ep' eschatou t'n h'mer"n tout"n). In contrast with \palai above. {Hath spoken} (\elal'sen). First aorist indicative of \lale", the same verb as above, "did speak" in a final and full revelation. {In his Son} (\en hui"i). In sharp contrast to \en tois proph'tais. "The Old Testament slopes upward to Christ" (J. R. Sampey). No article or pronoun here with the preposition \en, giving the absolute sense of "Son." Here the idea is not merely what Jesus said, but what he is (Dods), God's Son who reveals the Father (Joh 1:18). "The revelation was a _son-revelation_" (Vincent).

{Hath appointed} (\eth^ken\). First aorist (kappa aorist) active of \tith^mi\, a timeless aorist. {Heir of all things} (\kl^ronomon pant^“n\). See Mr 12:6 for \ho kl^ronomos\ in Christ's parable, perhaps an allusion here to this parable (Moffatt). The idea of sonship easily passes into that of heirship (Ga 4:7; Ro 8:17). See the claim of Christ in Mt 11:27; 28:18 even before the Ascension. {Through whom} (\di^hou\). The Son as Heir is also the Intermediate Agent (\dia\ in the work of creation as we have it in Col 1:16f.; Joh 1:3. {The worlds} (\tous ai^“nas\). "The ages" (_secula_, Vulgate). See 11:3 also where \tous ai^“nas=ton kosmon\ (the world) or the universe like \ta panta\ (the all things) in 1:3; Ro 11:36; Col 1:16. The original sense of \ai^“n\ (from aei, always) occurs in Heb 5:20, but here "by metonymy of the container for the contained" (Thayer) for "the worlds" (the universe) as in LXX, Philo, Josephus.

1:3 {Being} (\^“n\). Absolute and timeless existence (present active participle of eimi) in contrast with \genomenos\ in verse 4 like \^n\ in Joh 1:1 (in contrast with egeneto in 1:14) and like \huparch^“n\ and \genomenos\ in Php 2:6f. {The effulgence of his glory} (\apaugasma t^s dox^s\). The word \apaugasma\, late substantive from \apaugaz^“, to emit brightness (\aug^, augaz^“ in 2Co 4:4), here only in the N.T., but in Wisdom 7:26 and in Philo. It can mean either reflected brightness, refulgence (Calvin, Thayer) or effulgence (ray from an original light body) as the Greek fathers hold. Both senses are true of Christ in his relation to God as Jesus shows in plain language in Joh 12:45; 14:9. "The writer is using metaphors which had already been applied to Wisdom and the Logos" (Moffatt). The meaning "effulgence" suits the context better, though it gives the idea of eternal generation of the Son (Joh 1:1), the term Father applied to God necessarily involving Son. See this same metaphor in 2Co 4:6. {The very image of his substance} (\charakt^r t^s hupostase^“s\). \Charakt^r\ is an old word from \charass^“, to cut, to scratch, to mark. It first was the agent (note ending \=t^r\ or tool that did the marking, then the mark or impress made, the exact reproduction, a meaning clearly expressed by \charagma\ (Ac 17:29; Re 13:16f.). Menander had already used (Moffatt) \charakt^r\ in the sense of our "character." The word occurs in the inscriptions for "person" as well as for "exact reproduction" of a person. The word \hupostasis\ for the being or essence of God "is a philosophical rather than a religious term" (Moffatt). Etymologically it is the sediment or foundation under a building (for instance). In 11:1 \hypostasis\ is like the "title-deed" idea found in the papyri. Athanasius rightly used Heb 1:1-4 in his controversy with Arius. Paul in Php 2:5-11 pictures the real and eternal deity of Christ free from the philosophical language here employed. But even Paul's simpler phrase \morph^ theou\ (the form of God) has difficulties of its own. The use of \Logos\ in Joh 1:1-18 is parallel to Heb 1:1-4. {And upholding} (\pher^"n te\). Present active participle of \pher^" closely connected with \^"n\ (being) by \te\ and like Col 1:17 in idea. The newer science as expounded by Eddington and Jeans is in harmony with the spiritual and personal conception of creation here presented. {By the word of his power} (\t^"i r^mati t^s duname^s autou\). Instrumental case of \r^ma\ (word). See 11:3 for \r^mati theou\ (by the word of God) as the explanation of creation like Genesis, but here \autou\ refers to God's Son as in 1:2. {Purification of sins} (\katharismos t^"n hamarti^"n\). \Katharismos\ is from \kathariz^", to cleanse (Mt 8:3; Heb 9:14), here only in Hebrews, but in same sense of cleansing from sins, 2Pe 1:9; Job 7:21. Note middle participle \poi^samenos\ like \heuramenos\ in 9:12. This is the first mention of the priestly work of Christ, the keynote of this Epistle. {Sat down} (\ekathisen\). First aorist active of \kathiz^", "took his seat," a formal and dignified act. {Of the Majesty on high} (\t^s megalosun^s en hups^lois\). Late word from \megas\, only in LXX (De 32:3; 2Sa 7:23, etc.), Aristeas, Heb 1:3; 8:1; Jude 1:25. Christ resumed his original dignity and glory (Joh 17:5). The phrase \en hups^lois\ occurs in the Psalms (Ps 93:4), here only in N.T., elsewhere \en hupsistois\ in the highest (Mt 21:9; Lu 2:14) or \en tois epouraniois\ in the heavenlies (Eph 1:3,20). Jesus is here pictured as King (Prophet and Priest also) Messiah seated at the right hand of God.

1:4 {Having become} (\genomenos\). Second aorist middle participle of \ginomai\. In contrast with on in verse 3. {By so much} (\tosout^"i\). Instrumental case of \tosoutos\ correlative with \hos^"i\ (as) with comparative in both clauses (\kreitt^"n\, better, comparative of \kratus\, \diaphor^"teron\, more excellent, comparative of \diaphoros\). {Than the angels} (\t^"n aggel^"n\). Ablative of comparison after \kreitt^"n\, as often. {Than they} (\par^ autous\). Instead of the ablative \aut^"n\ here the preposition \para\ (along, by the side of) with the accusative occurs, another common idiom as in 3:3; 9:23. \Diaphoros\ only in Hebrews in N.T. except Ro 12:6. {Hath inherited} (\kek^lronom^ˆken\). Perfect active indicative of \kl^ˆronome“\ (from \kl^ˆronomos\, heir, verse 2), and still inherits it, the name (\onoma\, oriental sense of rank) of "Son" which is superior to prophets as already shown (1:2) and also to angels (1:4-2:18) as he now proceeds to prove. Jesus is superior to angels as God's Son, his deity (1:4-2:4). The author proves it from Scripture (1:4-14).

1:5 {Unto which} (\Tini\). "To which individual angel." As a class angels are called sons of God (Elohim) (Ps 29:1), but no single angel is called God's Son like the Messiah in Ps 2:7. Dods takes "have I begotten thee" (\gegenn^ˆka se\, perfect active indicative of \genna“\) to refer to the resurrection and ascension while others refer it to the incarnation. {And again} (\kai palin\). This quotation is from 2Sa 7:14. Note the use of \eis\ in the predicate with the sense of "as" like the Hebrew (LXX idiom), not preserved in the English. See Mt 19:5; Lu 2:34. Like Old English "to" or "for." See 2Co 6:18; Re 21:7 for the same passage applied to relation between God and Christians while here it is treated as Messianic.

1:6 {And when he again bringeth in} (\hotan de palin eisagag^ˆi\). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \eisagag^ˆi\, If \palin\ is taken with \eisagag^ˆi\, the reference is to the Second Coming as in 9:28. If \palin\ merely introduces another quotation (Ps 97:7) parallel to \kai palin\ in verse 5, the reference is to the incarnation when the angels did worship the Child Jesus (Lu 2:13f.). There is no way to decide certainly about it. {The first-born} (\ton pr^ˆtotokon\). See Ps 89:28. For this compound adjective applied to Christ in relation to the universe see Col 1:15, to other men, Ro 8:29; Col 1:18, to the other children of Mary, Lu 2:7; here it is used absolutely. {The world} (\t^ˆn oikoumen^ˆn\). "The inhabited earth." See Ac 17:6. {Let worship} (\proskun^ˆsat^ˆsan\). Imperative first aorist active third plural of \proskune“\, here in the full sense of worship, not mere reverence or courtesy. This quotation is from the LXX of De 32:43, but is not in the Hebrew, though most of the LXX MSS. (except F) have \huioi theou\, but the substance does occur also in Ps 97:7 with \hoi aggeloi autou\.

1:7 {Of the angels} (\pros tous angelous\). "With reference to"

(\pros\) as in Lu 20:9. So "of the Son" in verse 8. Note \men\ here and \de\ in verse 8 in carefully balanced contrast. The quotation is from Ps 104:4. {Winds} (\pneumata\). "Spirits" the word also means. The meaning (note article with \aggelous\, not with \pneumata) apparently is one that can reduce angels to the elemental forces of wind and fire (Moffatt). {A flame of fire} (\puros phloga\). Predicate accusative of \phlox\, old word, in N.T. only here and Lu 16:24. Lunemann holds that the Hebrew here is wrongly rendered and means that God makes the wind his messengers (not angels) and flaming fire his servants. That is all true, but that is not the point of this passage. Preachers also are sometimes like a wind-storm or a fire.

1:8 {O God} (\ho theos\). This quotation (the fifth) is from Ps 45:7f. A Hebrew nuptial ode (\epithalamium\) for a king treated here as Messianic. It is not certain whether \ho theos\ is here the vocative (address with the nominative form as in Joh 20:28 with the Messiah termed \theos\ as is possible, Joh 1:18) or \ho theos\ is nominative (subject or predicate) with \estin\ (is) understood: "God is thy throne" or "Thy throne is God." Either makes good sense. {Sceptre} (\rabdōs\). Old word for walking-stick, staff (Heb 11:21).

1:9 {Hath anointed thee} (\echrīsen se\). First aorist active indicative of \chri\, to anoint, from which verb the verbal \Christos\ (Anointed One) comes. See Christ's use of \echrīsen\ in Lu 4:18 from Isa 66:1. {With the oil of gladness} (\elaion agalliase\). Accusative case with \echrīsen\ (second accusative besides \se). Perhaps the festive anointing on occasions of joy (12:2). See Lu 1:44. {Fellows} (\metochous\). Old word from \metech\, partners, sharers, in N.T. only in Hebrews save Lu 5:7. Note \para\ with accusative here, beside, beyond, above (by comparison, extending beyond).

1:10 {Lord} (\Kurios\). In the LXX, not in the Hebrew. Quotation (the sixth) from Ps 102:26-28 through verses 10-12. Note emphatic position of \su\ here at the beginning as in verses 11-12 (\su de\). This Messianic Psalm pictures the Son in his Creative work and in his final triumph. {Hast laid the foundation} (\ethemeli\). First aorist active of \themelio\, old verb from \themelios\ (foundation) for which see Col 1:23.

1:11 {They} (\autoi\). The heavens (\ouranoi\). {Shall perish} (\apolountai\). Future middle of \apollumi\. Modern scientists no longer postulate the eternal existence of the heavenly bodies. {But thou continuest} (\su de diameneis\). This is what matters most, the eternal existence of God's Son as Creator and Preserver of the universe (Joh 1:1-3; Col 1:14ff.). {Shall wax old} (\palaithsontai\). First future passive indicative of \palaio^o\, from \palaiois\, for which see Lu 12:33; Heb 8:13.

1:12 {A mantle} (\peribolaion\). Old word for covering from \pariball^o\, to fling around, as a veil in 1Co 11:15, nowhere else in N.T. {Shalt thou roll up} (\helixeis\). Future active of \heliss^o\, late form for \heiliss^o\, in N.T. only here and Re 6:14, to fold together. {As a garment} (\h^s himation\). LXX repeats from 11. {They shall be changed} (\allag^ssontai\). Second future passive of \allass^o\, old verb, to change. {Shall not fail} (\ouk ekleipsousin\). Future active of \ekleip^o\, to leave out, to fail, used of the sun in Lu 23:45. "Nature is at his mercy, not he at nature's" (Moffatt).

1:13 {Hath he said} (\eir^{ken}\). Perfect active common use of the perfect for permanent record. This seventh quotation is proof of the Son's superiority as the Son of God (his deity) to angels and is from Ps 110:1, a Messianic Psalm frequently quoted in Hebrews. {Sit thou} (\kathou\). Second person singular imperative middle of \kath^{mai}\, to sit, for the longer form \kath^{so}\, as in Mt 22:44; Jas 2:3. {On my right hand} (\ek dexiⁿ mou\). "From my right." See 1:3 for \en dexifi\ "at the right hand." {Till I make} (\he^s an th^o\). Indefinite temporal clause about the future with \he^s\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \tith^{mi}\ with \an\ (often not used), a regular and common idiom. Quoted also in Lu 20:43. For the pleonasm in \hupodion\ and \tⁿ podⁿ\ (objective genitive) see Mt 5:35.

1:14 {Ministering spirits} (\leitourgika pneumata\). Thayer says that \leitourgikos\ was not found in profane authors, but it occurs in the papyri for "work tax" (money in place of service) and for religious service also. The word is made from \leitourgia\ (Lu 1:23; Heb 8:6; 9:21). {Sent forth} (\apostellomena\). Present passive participle of \apostell^o\, sent forth repeatedly, from time to time as occasion requires. {For the sake of} (\dia\). With the accusative, the usual causal meaning of \dia\. {That shall inherit} (\tous mellontas kl^{ronomein}\). "That are going to inherit," common idiom of \mell^o\ (present active participle) with the infinitive (present active here), "destined to inherit" (Mt 11:14). {Salvation}

(\s“t^rian\). Here used of the final salvation in its consummation. Only here in the N.T. do we have "inherent salvation," but see 6:12; 12:17. We do not have here the doctrine of special guardian angels for each of us, but simply the fact that angels are used for our good. "And if so, may we not be aided, inspired, guided by a cloud of witnesses--not witnesses only, but helpers, agents like ourselves of the immanent God?" (Sir Oliver Lodge, _The Hibbert Journal_, Jan., 1903, p. 223).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {Therefore} (\dia touto). Because Jesus is superior to prophets and angels and because the new revelation is superior to the old. The author often pauses in his argument, as here, to drive home a pungent exhortation. {Ought} (\dei). It is necessity, necessity rather than obligation (\chr^). {To give heed} (\prosechein). Present active infinitive with \noun (accusative singular of \nous) understood as in Ac 8:6. {More earnest} (\perissoter“s). Comparative adverb, "more earnestly," "more abundantly" as in 1Th 2:7 {To the things that were heard} (\tois akoustheisin). Dative plural neuter of the articular participle first aorist passive of \akou“. {Lest haply we drift away} (\m^pote pararu“men). Negative clause of purpose with \m^pote and the second aorist passive subjunctive of \pararre“, old verb to flow by or past, to glide by, only here in N.T. (cf. Pr 3:21). Xenophon (Cyrop. IV. 52) uses it of the river flowing by. Here the metaphor is that "of being swept along past the sure anchorage which is within reach" (Westcott), a vivid picture of peril for all ("we," \h^mas).

2:2 {For if ... proved steadfast} (\ei gar ... egeneto bebaios). Condition of first class, assumed as true. {Through angels} (\di' aggel“n). Allusion to the use of angels by God at Sinai as in Ac 7:38,53; Gal 3:19, though not in the O.T., but in Josephus (_Ant_. XV. 156). {Transgression and disobedience} (*\parabasis kai parako^ *). Both words use \para as in \pararu“men, refused to obey (stepping aside, \para-basis\ as in Ro 2:23), neglect to obey (\par-ako^ as in Ro 5:19), more than a mere hendiadys. {Recompense of reward} (\misthapodosian). Late double compound, like \misthapodot^s (Heb 11:6), from \misthos (reward) and \apodid“mi, to give back. The old Greeks used \misthodosia. {Just} (\endikon). Old compound adjective, in N.T. only here and Ro 3:8.

2:3 {How shall we escape?} (*\p“s h^meis ekpheuxometha; *). Rhetorical question with future middle indicative of \ekpheug“ and conclusion of the condition. {If we neglect} (\amel^santes). First aorist active participle of \amele“, "having neglected." {So great salvation} (\t^likaut^s s“t^rias). Ablative case after \amel^{santes}\. Correlative pronoun of age, but used of size in the N.T. (Jas 3:4; 2Co 1:10). {Which} (\h^{tis}\). "Which very salvation," before described, now summarized. {Having at the first been spoken} (\arch^{n labousa laleisthai}\). Literally, "having received a beginning to be spoken," "having begun to be spoken," a common literary _Koin,_ idiom (Polybius, etc.). {Through the Lord} (\dia tou kuriou\). The Lord Jesus who is superior to angels. Jesus was God's full revelation and he is the source of this new and superior revelation. {Was confirmed} (\ebebaith\). First aorist passive indicative of \bebaio^α\, from \bebaios\ (stable), old verb as in 1Co 1:6. {By them that heard} (\hupo t^{n akousant}ⁿ\). Ablative case with \hupo\ of the articular first aorist active participle of \akou^α\. Those who heard the Lord Jesus. Only one generation between Jesus and the writer. Paul (Ga 1:11) got his message directly from Christ.

2:4 {God also bearing witness with them} (\sunepimartuountos tou theou\). Genitive absolute with the present active participle of the late double compound verb \sunepimarture^α\, to join (\sun\) in giving additional (\epi\) testimony (\marture^α\). Here only in N.T., but in Aristotle, Polybius, Plutarch. {Both by signs} (\s^{meiois te kai}\) {and wonders} (\kai terasin\) {and by manifold powers} (\kai poikilais dunamesin\) {and by gifts of the Holy Ghost} (\kai pneumatos hagiou merismois\). Instrumental case used with all four items. See Ac 2:22 for the three words for miracles in inverse order (powers, wonders, signs). Each word adds an idea about the \erga\ (works) of Christ. \Teras\ (wonder) attracts attention, \dunamis\ (power) shows God's power, \s^{meion}\ reveals the purpose of God in the miracles. For \poikilais\ (manifold, many-coloured) see Mt 4:24; Jas 1:2. For \merismos\ for distribution (old word, in N.T. only here and Heb 4:12) see 1Co 12:4-30. {According to his own will} (\kata t^{n autou thel}^{sin}\). The word \thel^{sis}\ is called a vulgarism by Pollux. The writer is fond of words in \-is\.

2:5 {For not unto angels} (\ou gar aggelois\). The author now proceeds to show (2:5-18) that the very humanity of Jesus, the Son of Man, likewise proves his superiority to angels. {The world to come} (\t^{n oikoumen}^{n t^{n mellousan}}\). The new order, the salvation just described. See a like use of \mell^α\ (as participle) with \s^{t^{ria}}\ (1:14), \aiⁿ\ (6:4f.), \agatha\ (9:11; 10:1), \polis\ (13:14). {Whereof we speak} (\peri h^{s laloumen}\). The author is discussing this new order introduced by Christ which makes obsolete the old dispensation of rites and symbols. God did not put this new order in charge of angels.

2:6 {But one somewhere} (\de pou tis). See 4:4 for a like indefinite quotation. Philo uses this "literary mannerism" (Moffatt). He quotes Ps 8:5-7 and extends here to 8a. {Hath testified} (\diemarturato). First aorist middle indicative of \diamarturomai, old verb to testify vigorously (Ac 2:40). {What} (\Ti). Neuter, not masculine \tis (who). The insignificance of man is implied. {The son of man} (\huios anthr'pou). Not \ho huios tou anthr'pou which Jesus used so often about himself, but literally here "son of man" like the same words so often in Ezekiel, without Messianic meaning here. {Visited} (\episkepti). Second person singular present indicative middle of \episkeptomai, old verb to look upon, to look after, to go to see (Mt 25:36), from which verb \episcopos, overseer, bishop, comes.

2:7 {Thou madest him a little lower} (\elatt'sas auton brachu ti). First aorist active of old verb \elatto' from \elatt'n (less), causative verb to lessen, to decrease, to make less, only here, and verse 9 and Joh 3:30 in N.T. \Brachu ti is accusative neuter of degree like 2Sa 16:1, "some little," but of time in Isa 57:17 (for a little while). {Than the angels} (\par' aggelous). "Beside angels" like \para with the accusative of comparison in 1:4,9. The Hebrew here has _Elohim_ which word is applied to judges in Ps 82:1,6 (Joh 10:34f.). Here it is certainly not "God" in our sense. In Ps 29:1 the LXX translates _Elohim_ by \huoi theou (sons of God). {Thou crownedst} (\estephan'sas). First aorist active indicative of old verb, \stephano', to crown, in N.T. only here and 2Ti 2:5. The Psalmist refers to God's purpose in creating man with such a destiny as mastery over nature. The rest of verse 7 is absent in B.

2:8 {In that he subjected} (\en t'i hupotaxai). First aorist active articular infinitive of \hupatass' in the locative case, "in the subjecting." {He left} (\aph^ken). First aorist active indicative (kappa aorist) of \aphi^mi. {Nothing that is not subject to him} (\ouden aut'i anupotakton). Later verbal of \hupotass' with \a privative. Here in passive sense, active sense in 1Ti 1:9. Man's sovereignty was meant to be all-inclusive including the administration of "the world to come." "He is crowned king of nature, invested with a divine authority over creation" (Moffatt). But how far short of this destiny has man come! {But now we see not yet} (\n^{un} de oup^{hor}“men”). Not even today in the wonderful twentieth century with man's triumphs over nature has he reached that goal, wonderful as are the researches by the help of telescope and microscope, the mechanism of the airplane, the submarine, steam, electricity, radio.

2:9 {Even Jesus} (\I^{soun}). We do not see man triumphant, but we do see Jesus, for the author is not ashamed of his human name, realizing man's destiny, "the very one who has been made a little lower than the angels" (\ton brachu ti par' aggelous^{latt}“menon”), quoting and applying the language of the Psalm in verse 7 to Jesus (with article \ton^l and the perfect passive participle of \elatta“”). But this is not all. Death has defeated man, but Jesus has conquered death. {Because of the suffering of death} (\dia to path^{ma} tou thanatou^l). The causal sense of \dia^l with the accusative as in 1:14. Jesus in his humanity was put lower than the angels "for a little while" (\brachu ti^l). Because of the suffering of death we see (\blepomen^l) Jesus crowned (\estephan^{menon}“^l, perfect passive participle of \stephano““^l from verse 7), crowned already "with glory and honour" as Paul shows in Php 2:9-11 (more highly exalted, \huperups^{sen}“^l) "that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." There is more glory to come to Jesus surely, but he is already at God's right hand (1:3). {That by the grace of God he should taste death for every man} (\hop^{men}“s chariti theou huper pantos geus^{tai} thanatou^l). This purpose clause (\hop^{men}“s^l instead of the more usual \hina^l) is pregnant with meaning. The author interprets and applies the language of the Psalm to Jesus and here puts Christ's death in behalf of (\huper^l), and so instead of, every man as the motive for his incarnation and death on the Cross. The phrase to taste death (\geuomai thanatou^l) occurs in the Gospels (Mt 16:28; Mr 9:1; Lu 9:27; Joh 8:52), though not in the ancient Greek. It means to see death (Heb 11:5), "a bitter experience, not a rapid sip" (Moffatt). His death was in behalf of every one (not everything as the early Greek theologians took it). The death of Christ (Andrew Fuller) was sufficient for all, efficient for some. It is all "by the grace (\chariti^l, instrumental case) of God," a thoroughly Pauline idea. Curiously enough some MSS. read \ch^{men}“ris theou^l (apart from God) in place of \chariti theou^l, Nestorian doctrine whatever the origin.

2:10 {It became him} (\eprepen aut“i). Imperfect active of \prep“, old verb to stand out, to be becoming or seemly. Here it is impersonal with \telei“sai as subject, though personal in Heb 7:26. \Aut“i (him) is in the dative case and refers to God, not to Christ as is made plain by \ton arch^gon (author). One has only to recall Joh 3:16 to get the idea here. The voluntary humiliation or incarnation of Christ the Son a little lower than the angels was a seemly thing to God the Father as the writer now shows in a great passage (2:10-18) worthy to go beside Php 2:5-11. {For whom} (\di' hon). Referring to \aut“i (God) as the reason (cause) for the universe (\ta panta). {Through whom} (\di' hou). With the genitive \dia expresses the agent by whom the universe came into existence, a direct repudiation of the Gnostic view of intermediate agencies (aeons) between God and the creation of the universe. Paul puts it succinctly in Ro 11:36 by his \ex autou kai di' autou kai eis auton ta panta. The universe comes out of God, by means of God, for God. This writer has already said that God used his Son as the Agent (\di' hou) in creation (1:2), a doctrine in harmony with Col 1:15f. (\en aut“i, di' autou eis auton) and Joh 1:3. {In bringing} (\agagonta). Second aorist active participle of \ag“ in the accusative case in spite of the dative \aut“i just before to which it refers. {The author} (\ton arch^gon). Old compound word (\arch^ and \ag“) one leading off, leader or prince as in Ac 5:31, one blazing the way, a pioneer (Dods) in faith (Heb 12:2), author (Ac 3:15). Either sense suits here, though author best (verse 9). Jesus is the author of salvation, the leader of the sons of God, the Elder Brother of us all (Ro 8:29). {To make perfect} (\telei“sai). First aorist active infinitive of \teleio“ (from \teleios). If one recoils at the idea of God making Christ perfect, he should bear in mind that it is the humanity of Jesus that is under discussion. The writer does not say that Jesus was sinful (see the opposite in 4:15), but simply that "by means of sufferings" God perfected his Son in his human life and death for his task as Redeemer and Saviour. One cannot know human life without living it. There was no moral imperfection in Jesus, but he lived his human life in order to be able to be a sympathizing and effective leader in the work of salvation.

2:11 {He that sanctifieth} (\ho hagiaz“n). Present active articular participle of \hagiaz“. Jesus is the sanctifier (9:13f.; 13:12). {They that are sanctified} (\hoi hagiazomenoi). Present passive articular participle of \hagiaz“. It is a process here as in 10:14, not a single act, though in 10:10 the perfect passive indicative presents a completed state. {Of one} (\ex henos). Referring to God as the Father of Jesus and of the "many sons" above (verse 10) and in harmony with verse 14 below. Even before the incarnation Jesus had a kinship with men though we are not sons in the full sense that he is. {He is not ashamed} (\ouk epaischunetai). Present passive indicative of \epaischunomai, old compound (Ro 1:16). Because of the common Father Jesus is not ashamed to own us as "brothers" (\adelphous), unworthy sons though we be.

2:12 {Unto my brethren} (\tois adelphois mou). To prove his point the writer quotes Ps 22:22 when the Messiah is presented as speaking "unto my brethren." {Congregation} (\ekkl^hsias). The word came to mean the local church and also the general church or kingdom (Mt 16:18; Heb 12:23). Here we have the picture of public worship and the Messiah sharing it with others as we know Jesus often did.

2:13 {I will put my trust in him} (\Eg“ esomai pepoith“s ep' aut“i). A rare periphrastic (intransitive) future perfect of \peith“, a quotation from Isa 8:17. The author represents the Messiah as putting his trust in God as other men do (cf. Heb 12:2). Certainly Jesus did this constantly. The third quotation (\kai palin, And again) is from Isa 8:18 (the next verse), but the Messiah shows himself closely linked with the children (\paidia) of God, the sons (\huioi) of verse 10.

2:14 {Are sharers in flesh and blood} (\kekoin“n^hken haimatos kai sarkos). The best MSS. read "blood and flesh." The verb is perfect active indicative of \koin“ne“, old verb with the regular genitive, elsewhere in the N.T. with the locative (Ro 12:13) or with \en\ or \eis\. "The children have become partners (\koin“noi) in blood and flesh." {Partook} (\metesche). Second aorist active indicative of \metech“, to have with, a practical synonym for \koin“ne“ and with the genitive also (\t“n aut“n). That he might bring to nought (\hina katarg^hs^hi). Purpose of the incarnation clearly stated with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \katarge“, old word to render idle or ineffective (from \kata, argos), causative verb (25 times in Paul), once in Luke (Lu 13:7), once in Hebrews (here). "By means of death" (his own death) Christ broke the power (\kratos) of the devil over death (paradoxical as it seems), certainly in men's fear of death and in some unexplained way Satan had sway over the realm of death (Zec 3:5f.). Note the explanatory \tout' estin\ (that is) with the accusative after it as before it. In Re 12:7 Satan is identified with the serpent in Eden, though it is not done in the Old Testament. See Ro 5:12; Joh 8:44; 14:30; 16:11; 1Jo 3:12. Death is the devil's realm, for he is the author of sin. "Death as death is no part of the divine order" (Westcott).

2:15 {And might deliver} (\kai apallaxⁱ\). Further purpose with the first aorist active subjunctive of \appallass^a\, old verb to change from, to set free from, in N.T. only here, Lu 12:58; Ac 19:12. {Through fear of death} (\phobⁱ thanatou\). Instrumental case of \phobos\. The ancients had great fear of death though the philosophers like Seneca argued against it. There is today a flippant attitude towards death with denial of the future life and rejection of God. But the author of Hebrews saw judgement after death (9:27f.). Hence our need of Christ to break the power of sin and Satan in death. {All their lifetime} (\dia pantos tou zⁱn\). Present active infinitive with \pas\ and the article in the genitive case with \dia\, "through all the living." {Subject to bondage} (\enochoi douleias\). Old adjective from \enech^a\, "held in," "bound to," with genitive, bond-slaves of fear, a graphic picture. Jesus has the keys of life and death and said: "I am the life." Thank God for that.

2:16 {Verily} (\de pou\). "Now in some way," only here in N.T. {Doth he take hold} (\epilambanetai\). Present middle indicative and means to lay hold of, to help, like \bo^hth^hsai\ in verse 18. {The seed of Abraham} (\spermatos Abraham\). The spiritual Israel (Ga 3:29), children of faith (Ro 9:7).

2:17 {Wherefore} (\hothen\). Old relative adverb (\ho\ and enclitic \then\, whence of place (Mt 12:44), of source (1Jo 2:18), of cause as here and often in Hebrews (3:1; 7:25; 8:3; 9:18; 11:19). {It behoved him} (\pⁱheilen\). Imperfect active of \opheil^a\, old verb to owe, money (Mt 18:28), service and love (Ro 13:8), duty or obligation as here and often in N.T. (Lu 17:10). Jesus is here the subject and the reference is to the incarnation. Having undertaken the work of redemption (Joh 3:16), voluntarily (Joh 10:17), Jesus was under obligation to be properly equipped for that priestly service and sacrifice. {In all things} (\kata panta\). Except yielding to sin (Heb 4:15) and yet he knew what temptation was, difficult as it may be for us to comprehend that in the Son of God who is also the Son of man (Mr 1:13). Jesus fought through to victory over Satan. {To be made like unto his brethren} (\tois adelphois homoi“th^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \homoio“, old and common verb from \homoios\ (like), as in Mt 6:8, with the associative instrumental case as here. Christ, our Elder Brother, resembles us in reality (Php 2:7 "in the likeness of men") as we shall resemble him in the end (Ro 8:29 "first-born among many brethren"; 1Jo 3:2 "like him"), where the same root is used as here (\hoi“ma, homoios\). That he might be (\hina gen^tai\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\, to become, "that he might become." That was only possible by being like his brethren in actual human nature. {Merciful and faithful high priest} (\ele^m“n kai pistos archiereus\). The sudden use of \archiereus\ here for Jesus has been anticipated by 1:3; 2:9 and see 3:1. Jesus as the priest-victim is the chief topic of the Epistle. These two adjectives (\ele^m“n\ and \pistos\ touch the chief points in the function of the high priest (5:1-10), sympathy and fidelity to God. The Sadducean high priests (Annas and Caiaphas) were political and ecclesiastical tools and puppets out of sympathy with the people and chosen by Rome. {In things pertaining to God} (\ta pros ton theon\). The adverbial accusative of the article is a common idiom. See the very idiom \ta pros ton theon\ in Ex 18:19; Ro 15:17. This use of \pros\ we had already in Heb 1:7f. On the day of atonement the high priest entered the holy of holies and officiated in behalf of the people. {To make propitiation for} (\eis to hilaskesthai\). Purpose clause with \eis to\ and the infinitive (common Greek idiom), here present indirect middle of \hilaskomai\, to render propitious to oneself (from \hilaos\, Attic \hile“s\, gracious). This idea occurs in the LXX (Ps 65:3), but only here in N.T., though in Lu 18:13 the passive form (\hilasth^ti\ occurs as in 2Ki 5:18. In 1Jo 2:2 we have \hilasmos\ used of Christ (cf. Heb 7:25). The inscriptions illustrate the meaning in Heb 2:17 as well as the LXX.

2:18 {In that} (\en h“i\). Literally, "In which" (\=en tout“i en h“i\, in that in which), a causal idea, though in Ro 14:22 \en h“i\ means "wherein." {Hath suffered} (\peponthen\). Second perfect active indicative of \pasch“, permanent part of Christ's experience. {Being tempted} (\peirastheis\). First aorist passive participle of \peiraz“. The temptation to escape the shame of the Cross was early and repeatedly presented to Christ, by Satan in the wilderness (Mt 4:8-11), by Peter in the spirit of Satan (Mt 16:22f.), in Gethsemane (Mt 26:39), and caused intense suffering to Jesus (Lu 22:44; Heb 5:8). {He is able} (\dunatai). This word strikes the heart of it all. Christ's power to help is due not merely to his deity as God's Son, but also to his humanity without which he could not sympathize with us (Heb 4:15). {To succour} (\bo^th^sai). First aorist active infinitive of the old compound verb \bo^the^“ (\bo^, a cry, \the^“, to run), to run at a cry or call for help (Mt 15:25). {Them that are tempted} (\tois peirazomenois). Dative plural of the articular participle (present passive) of \peiraz^“. These Jewish Christians were daily tempted to give up Christ, to apostatize from Christianity. Jesus understands himself (\autos) their predicament and is able to help them to be faithful.

3:1 {Holy brethren} (adelphoi hagioi\). Only here in N.T., for \hagiois\ in 1Th 5:27 only in late MSS. See Heb 2:11 for same idea. First time the author makes direct appeal to the readers, though first person in 2:1. {Partakers} (metochoi\). See Lu 5:7 for "partners" in the fishing, elsewhere in N.T. only in Hebrews (1:9; 6:4; 12:8) in N.T. {Of a heavenly calling} (kl'se's epouraniou\). Only here in the N.T., though same idea in 9:15. See \h^ an^ kl'sis\ in Php 3:14 (the upward calling). The call comes from heaven and is to heaven in its appeal. {Consider} (katano'sate\). First aorist active imperative of \katano^e^, old compound verb (kata, nous\), to put the mind down on a thing, to fix the mind on as in Mt 7:3; Lu 12:24. {Even Jesus} (I'soun\). No "even" in the Greek, just like the idiom in 2:9, the human name held up with pride. {The Apostle and High Priest of our confession} (ton apostolon kai archierea t's homologias h^m^'n\). In descriptive apposition with \I'soun\ and note the single article \ton\. This is the only time in the N.T. that Jesus is called \apostolos\, though he often used \apostell^ of God's sending him forth as in Joh 17:3 (apesteilas\). This verb is used of Moses as sent by God (Ex 3:10). Moffatt notes that \apostolos\ is Ionic for \presbeut^s\, "not a mere envoy, but an ambassador or representative sent with powers." The author has already termed Jesus high priest (2:17). For \homologia\ (confession) see 2Co 9:13; 1Ti 6:12. These Hebrew Christians had confessed Jesus as their Apostle and High Priest. They do not begin to understand what Jesus is and means if they are tempted to give him up. The word runs through Hebrews with an urgent note for fidelity (4:14; 10:23). See \homologe^ (homon\, same, \leg^, say), to say the same thing, to agree, to confess, to profess.

3:2 {Who was faithful} (piston onta\). Present active participle with predicate accusative agreeing with \I'soun\, "as being faithful." {That appointed him} (t^'i poi'santi auton\). See 1Sa 12:6. Dative case of the articular participle (aorist active) of \poie^ and the reference is to God. Note \pistos\ as in 2:17. {As also was Moses} (h^'s kai M^'us^s\). The author makes no depreciatory remarks about Moses as he did not about the prophets and the angels. He cheerfully admits that Moses was faithful "in all his house" (\en hol“i t“i oik“i autou), an allusion to Nu 12:7 (\ean hol“i t“i oik“i mou) about Moses. The "his" is God's. The use of \oikos for the people (family) of God, not the building, but the group (1Ti 3:15) in which God is the Father. But wherein is Jesus superior to Moses? The argument is keen and skilful.

3:3 {Hath been counted worthy of more glory than Moses} (\pleionos dox“s para M“us“n ^xi“tai). Perfect passive indicative of \axio“, to deem worthy, permanent situation described with definite claim of Christ's superiority to Moses. \Dox“s in genitive case after \^xi“tai. For \para after the comparative \pleionos see 1:4,9; 2:7. {By so much as} (\kath' hoson). A proportionate measurement (common use of \kata\ and the quantitative relative \hosos). {Than the house} (\tou oikou). Ablative case of comparison after \pleiona. The architect is superior to the house just as Sir Christopher Wren is superior to St. Paul's Cathedral. The point in the argument calls for Jesus as the builder (\ho kataskeuusas\, first aorist active participle of \kataskeuaz“\, to found or build). But it is God's house as \autou means (verses 2,5) and \hou in verse 6. This house of God existed before Moses (11:2,25). Jesus as God's Son founded and supervised this house of God.

3:4 {Is God} (\theos). God is the Creator of all things and so of his "house" which his Son, Jesus Christ, founded and supervises.

3:5 {And Moses} (\kai M“us“s men). "Now Moses indeed on his part" (\men\ contrasted with \de). {In} (\en). Moses was in "God's house" "as a servant" (\h“s therap“n). Old word, in LXX, only here in N.T. and quoted from Nu 12:7f. Kin to the verb \therapeu“, to serve, to heal, and \therapeia, service (Lu 9:11) and a group of servants (Lu 12:42). {For a testimony of those things which were afterward to be spoken} (\eis marturion t“n lal“th“somen“n). Objective genitive of the articular future passive participle of \lale“. It is not certain what it means whether the "testimony" (\marturion) is to Moses or to God and whether it points on to Christ. In 9:9 see \parabol“ applied to the old dispensation as a symbol pointing to Christ and Christianity. {But Christ} (\Christos de). In contrast with Moses (\men\ in verse 5). {As a son} (\h“s huios). Instead of a \therap“n\ (servant). {Over his house} (\epi ton oikon autou).

The difference between \epi\ and \en\ added to that between \huios\ and \therap“n\). It is very neat and quite conclusive, especially when we recall the high place occupied by Moses in Jewish thought. In Ac 7:11 the Jews accused Stephen of speaking "blasphemous words against Moses and God" (putting Moses on a par with God).

3:6 {Whose house are we} (\hou oikos esmen h^{meis}\). We Christians (Jew and Gentile) looked at as a whole, not as a local organization. {If we hold fast} (\ean katasch“men\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \katech“\). This note of contingency and doubt runs all through the Epistle. We are God's house if we do not play the traitor and desert. {Boldness} (\parr^{sian}\) {and glorying} (\kai kauch^{ma}\) some had lost. The author makes no effort to reconcile this warning with God's elective purpose. He is not exhorting God, but these wavering Christians. All these are Pauline words. B does not have \mechri telous bebaian\ (firm unto the end), but it is clearly genuine in verse 14. He pleads for intelligent confidence.

3:7 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Probably this inferential conjunction (\dia, ho\, because of which) goes with \m^{skl^{run^{te}}}\ (harden not) in verse 8 rather than with \blepete\ (take heed) in verse 12 unless the long quotation be considered a parenthesis. The long quotation in verses 7-11 is from Ps 95:7-11. After the quotation the author has "three movements" (Moffatt) in his discussion of the passage as applied to the Jewish Christians (3:12-19; 4:1-10; 4:11-13). The peril of apostasy as shown by the example of the Israelites is presented with vividness and power. {As the Holy Ghost saith} (\kath“s legei to pneuma to hagion\). Just this phrase nowhere else in the N.T., except Act 21:11 (Agabus), though practically the same idea in 9:8; 10:15. In 1Ti 4:1 the adjective "Holy" is wanting as in Re 2; 3. But the writer quotes this Psalm as the Word of God and in 4:7 attributes it to David. {If ye shall hear} (\ean akous^{te}\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \akou“\).

3:8 {Harden not} (\m^{skl^{run^{te}}}\). Prohibition with \m\ and first aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \skl^{run}“, late verb from \skl^{ros}\ (dried up, stiff, hard) as in Ac 19:9; Ro 9:18. {As in the provocation} (\h“s n t“i parapikrasm“i\). Late compound from \parapikrain“, late verb to embitter (\para, pikros), found only in LXX and here and verse 15. It means embitterment, exasperation. For the simple verb \pikrain“, to make bitter, see Col 3:19. The reference is to _Meribah_ (Ex. 17:1-7). {Like as in the day} (kata t^n h^meran). "According to the day" as in Ac 12:1; 19:23. {Of the temptation} (tou peirasmou). The reference is to _Massah_ which took place at Rephidim.

3:9 {Wherewith} (hou). Literally, "where" (the wilderness) as in De 8:15. {Tempted me by proving me} (epeirasan en dokimasifi). No word for "me." The Israelites "tested" God "in putting to the proof" (only N.T. use of this word from dokimaz“ and this from the LXX). They were not content with God's promise, but demanded objective proof (erga, deeds) of God.

3:10 {And saw} (kai eidon). "And yet saw." {Wherefore} (dio). Not in the LXX, but it makes clear the argument in the Psalm. {I was displeased} (pros“chthisa). First aorist active of \prosochthiz“, late compound for extreme anger and disgust. In N.T. only here and verse 17. {Err} (plan“ntai). Present middle indicative of \plana“, to wander astray, common verb. {They did not know} (ouk egn“san). In spite of God's works (erga) and loving patience the Israelites failed to understand God's ways with them. Are we any better? They "cared not to take my road" (Moffatt).

3:11 {As I swear} (h“s “mosa). "Correlating the oath and the disobedience" (Vincent). First aorist active indicative of \omnu“, old verb for solemn oath (6:13). {They shall not enter} (ei eiseleusontai). Future middle of \eiserchomai\ with \ei\ as an anacoluthon for the Hebrew _im_ (not). Really it is a condition of the first class with the conclusion not expressed, common in the LXX as here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1024). {Into my rest} (eis t^n katapausin mou). Old word from \katapau“\ (Heb 4:8), to give rest, in LXX, in N.T. only in Ac 7:49; Heb 3:11-4:11. Primarily the rest in Canaan and then the heavenly rest in which God dwells.

3:12 {Take heed} (blepete). Present active imperative as in Php 3:2 (three times) of \blep“\ in place of the more usual \horate\. Solemn warning to the Jewish Christians from the experience of the Israelites as told in Ps 95. {Lest haply there shall be} (m^pote estai). Negative purpose with \m^pote\ and the future indicative as in Mr 14:2. But we have in Col 2:8 \m[^] tis estai\ as in Heb 12:25; \m[^]\ occurs with the aorist subjunctive, and \m[^] pote\ with present subjunctive (Heb 4:1) or aorist subjunctive (Ac 5:39). {In any one of you} (\en tini hum[^]n\). The application is personal and pointed. {An evil heart of unbelief} (\kardia pon[^]ra apistias\). A remarkable combination. {Heart} (\kardia\) is common in the LXX (about 1,000 times), but "evil heart" only twice in the O.T. (Jer 16:12; 18:12). \Apistias\ is more than mere unbelief, here rather disbelief, refusal to believe, genitive case describing the evil heart marked by disbelief which is no mark of intelligence then or now. {In falling away from the living God} (\en t[^]i apost[^]nai apo theou z[^]ntos\). "In the falling away" (locative case with \en\ of the second aorist active (intransitive) infinitive of \aphist[^]mi\, to stand off from, to step aside from (\apo\ with the ablative case \theou\ the living God (common phrase in the O.T. and the N.T. for God as opposed to lifeless idols)). "Remember that to apostatize from Christ in whom you have found God is to apostatize from God" (Dods). That is true today. See Eze 20:8 for this use of the verb.

3:13 {So long as it is called today} (\achris hou to s[^]meron kaleitai\). The only instance in the N.T. of this conjunction (\achri\ or \achris\ or \achris hou\, etc.) with the present indicative in the sense of "so long as" or "while" like \he[^]s\. Elsewhere it means "until" and with either the aorist indicative (Ac 7:18), the future (Re 17:17), or the aorist subjunctive (Re 7:3). {Lest any one of you be hardened} (\hina m[^] skl[^]runth[^]i tis ex hum[^]n\). Negative purpose clause with \hina m[^]\ (that not) and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \skl[^]run[^]\, the vivid verb from verse 8. {By the deceitfulness of sin} (\apat[^]i t[^]s hamartias\). Instrumental case \apat[^]i\ (trick, fraud) as is always the case with sin (Ro 7:11; 2Th 2:10). Apostasy (12:4) is their peril and it is a trick of sin.

3:14 {For we are become partakers of Christ} (\metochoi gar tou Christou gegonamen\). Second perfect active of \ginomai\, "we have become," not the equivalent of \esmen\ (are). For \metochoi\ see 1:9; 3:1; 6:4. We have become partners with Christ and hence (\gar\, for) should not be tricked into apostasy. {If we hold fast} (\ean per katasch[^]men\). The same condition as in verse 6 with \per\ (indeed, forsooth) added to \ean\. Jonathan Edwards once said that the sure proof of election is that one holds out to the end. {The beginning of our confidence} (tⁿ archⁿ t^s hupostase^s). For \hupostasis\ see 1:3; 11:1. These faltering believers (some even apostates) began with loud confidence and profession of loyalty. And now?

3:15 {While it is said} (en tⁱ legesthai). Locative case with \en\ of the articular present passive infinitive of \leg^a, "in the being said." Thus the author (cf. same phrase in Ps 42:4) introduces the repeated quotation from verses 7,8. Probably it is to be connected with \katasch^amen\, though it can be joined with \parakaleite\ in verse 13 (treating 14 as a parenthesis).

3:16 {Who} (Tines). Clearly interrogative, not indefinite (some). {Did provoke} (parepikranan). First aorist active indicative of \parapikrin^a, apparently coined by the LXX like \parapikrasmos\ (verse 15) to which it points, exasperating the anger of God. {Nay, did not all} (all' ou pantes). "A favourite device of the diatribe style" (Moffatt), answering one rhetorical question with another (Lu 17:8) as in verses 17,18, There was a faithful minority mentioned by Paul (1Co 10:7f.).

3:17 {With them that sinned} (tois hamart^sasin). Dative masculine plural after \pros^achthisen\ (cf. verse 10) of the articular first aorist active participle of \hamartan^a (hamart^sas, not hamart^an). {Carcases} (k^ala). Old word for members of the body like the feet, in LXX a dead body (Nu 14:29), here only in N.T.

3:18 {That they should not enter} (m^e eiseleusesthai). Negative \m^e (cf. ei in verse 11) and the future middle infinitive in indirect discourse. {To them that were disobedient} (tois apeith^sasin). Dative masculine plural of the articular first aorist active participle of \apeithe^a, active disobedience with which compare \apistias\ in verse 12,19.

3:19 {And we see} (kai blepomen). Triumphant conclusion of the exegesis of Ps 95. "So we see."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

4:1 {Let us fear therefore} (\phobth“men oun). First aorist passive volitive subjunctive of \phobeomai, to be afraid. There is no break in the argument on Ps 95. This is a poor chapter division. The Israelites perished because of disbelief. We today face a real peril. {Lest haply} (\m^{pote}) Here with the present subjunctive (\dokei), but future indicative in 3:12, after the verb of fearing. For the optative see 2Ti 2:25. {A promise being left} (\kataleipomen^s epaggelias). Genitive absolute of the present passive participle of \kataleip^a, to leave behind. God's promise still holds good for us in spite of the failure of the Israelites. {Should seem to have come short of it} (\dokei huster^{kenai}). Perfect active infinitive of \hustere^a, old verb from \husteros (comparative of root \ud\ like our out, outer, outermost), to be too late, to fail to reach the goal as here, common in the N.T. (11:37; 12:15).

4:2 {For indeed we have had good tidings preached unto us} (\kai gar esmen eu^{ggelismenoi} esmen). Periphrastic perfect passive indicative of \euaggeliz^a (from \euaggelion\, good news, glad tidings) to bring good news, used here in its original sense as in verse 6 of the Israelites (\euaggelisthentes\ first aorist passive participle). {Even as also they} (\kathaper kakeinoi). See verse 6. We have the promise of rest as the Israelites had. The parallel holds as to the promise, the privilege, the penalty. {The word of hearing} (\ho logos t^s ako^s). As in 1Th 2:13. Genitive \ako^s describing \logos, the word marked by hearing (the word heard). {Because they were not united by faith with them that heard} (\m^{sun}kekerasmenous tⁱ pistei tois akousasin). \M^a, the usual negative of the participle. A very difficult phrase. The text is uncertain whether the participle (perfect passive of \sunkerannumi\, old verb to mix together) ends in \-os agreeing with \logos or \-ous agreeing with \ekeinous (them). Taking it in \-ous the translation is correct. \Pistei is in the instrumental case and \tois akousasin in the associative instrumental after \sun.

4:3 {Do enter} (\eiserchometha). Emphatic futuristic present middle indicative of \eiserchomai. We are sure to enter in, we who believe. {He hath said} (\eir^ken). Perfect active indicative for the permanent value of God's word as in 1:13; 4:4; 10:9,13; 13:5; Ac 13:34. God has spoken. That is enough for us. So he quotes again what he has in verse 11 from Ps 95. {Although the works were finished} (\kaitoi t^"n erg^"n gen^thent^"n). Genitive absolute with concessive use of the participle. Old particle, in N.T. only here and Ac 14:17 (with verb). {From the foundation of the world} (\apo katabol^s kosmou). \Katabol^, late word from \kataball^, usually laying the foundation of a house in the literal sense. In the N.T. usually with \apo (Mt 25:44) or \pro (Joh 17:24) about the foundation of the world.

4:4 {Somewhere on this wise} (\pou hout^"s). See 2:6 for \pou tis for a like indefinite allusion to an Old Testament quotation. Here it is Ge 2:2 (cf. Ex 20:11; 31:17). Moffatt notes that Philo quotes Ge 2:2 with the same "literary mannerism." {Rested} (\katapausen). First aorist active indicative of \katapau^, intransitive here, but transitive in verse 8. It is not, of course, absolute rest from all creative activity as Jesus shows in Joh 5:17. But the seventh day of God's rest was still going on (clearly not a twenty-four hour day).

4:5 {And in this place again} (\kai en tout^"i palin). The passage already quoted in verse 3; 3:11.

4:6 {It remaineth} (\apoleipetai). Present passive indicative of \apoleip^, old verb to leave behind, to remain over. So again in 4:9; 10:26. Here the infinitive clause (\tinis eiselthein eis aut^"n) is the subject of \apoleipetai. This left-over promise is not repeated, though not utilized by the Israelites under Moses nor in the highest sense by Joshua and David. {Failed to enter in} (\ouk eis^lthon). "Did not enter in" (second aorist active indicative of \eiserchomai). It is a rabbinical argument all along here, but the author is writing to Jews.

4:7 {He again defineth a certain day} (\palin tina horizei h^meran). Present active indicative of \horiz^, old verb to set a limit (\horos, horizon) as in Ac 17:26; Ro 1:4. {In David} (\en Daueid). Attributing the Psalm to David or in the Psalter at any rate. {Hath been before said} (\proeir^tai). Perfect passive indicative referring to the quotation in 3:7,15. {After so long a time} (\meta tosouton chronon). The time between Joshua and David.

4:8 {Joshua} (\I^{sous}\). The Greek form is Jesus. Condition of the second class (determined as unfulfilled) with \ei\ and aorist indicative in the condition and \an\ with the imperfect in the conclusion. {He would not have spoken} (\ouk elalei\). Wrong translation, "he would not speak" (be speaking), in the passage in David. Imperfect tense, not aorist.

4:9 {A sabbath rest} (\sabbatismos\). Late word from \sabbatiz“\ (Ex 16:30) to keep the Sabbath, apparently coined by the author (a doubtful passage in Plutarch). Here it is parallel with \katapausis\ (cf. Re 14:13). {For the people of God} (\t“i la“i tou theou\). Dative case of blessed personal interest to the true Israel (Ga 6:16).

4:10 {As God did from his} (\h“sper apo t“n idi“n ho theos\). It is not cessation of work, but rather of the weariness and pain in toil. The writer pictures salvation as God's rest which man is to share and God will have perfect satisfaction when man is in harmony with him (Dods).

4:11 {Let us therefore give diligence} (\spoudas“men oun\). Volitive subjunctive aorist of \spoudaz“\, old verb to hasten (2Ti 4:9), to be eager and alert (1Th 2:17). The exhortation has a warning like that in 4:1. {That no man fall} (\hina m^{pes}i\). Negative purpose with \hina m^{pes}i\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \pipt“, to fall. {After the same example of disobedience} (\en t“i aut“i hupodeigmati t^s apeitheias\). The unbelief is like that seen in the Israelites (3:12,18; 4:2). \Hupodeigma\ is a late word from \hupodeiknumi\ (Mt 3:7) and means a copy (Joh 13:15; Jas 5:10). The Israelites set a terrible example and it is so easy to copy the bad examples.

4:12 {The word of God} (\ho logos tou theou\). That just quoted about the promise of rest and God's rest, but true of any real word of God. {Living} (\z“n\). Cf. the Living God (3:12). In Philo and the Book of Wisdom the Logos of God is personified, but still more in Joh 1:1-18 where Jesus is pictured as the Logos on a par with God. "Our author is using Philonic language rather than Philonic ideas" (Moffatt). See Joh 6:63: "The words which I have spoken are spirit and are life." {Active} (\energ^s\). Energetic, powerful (Joh 1:12; Php 3:21; Col 1:29). {Sharper} (\tom“teros\). Comparative of \tomos\, cutting (from \temn“, to cut), late adjective, here only in the N.T. {Than} (\huper\). Often so after a comparative (Lu 16:8; 2Co 12:13). {Two-edged} (\distomon\). "Two-mouthed" (\di-, stoma\), double-mouthed like a river (Polybius), branching ways (Sophocles), applied to sword (\xiphos\) by Homer and Euripides. {Piercing} (\diiknoumenos\). Present middle participle of \diikneomai\, old verb to go through, here only in N.T. {Even to the dividing} (\achri merismou\). Old word from \meriz\ (\meros\, part), to partition. {Of soul and spirit} (\psuch[^]s kai pneumatos\). As in 1Th 5:23; 1Co 15:45, but not an argument for trichotomy. Psychology is constantly changing its terminology. {Of both joints and marrow} (\harm[^]n te kai muel[^]n\). From \ar\, to join, comes \harmos\, old word, here only in the N.T. \Muelos\ (from \mu[^]\, to shut), old word, here only in N.T. This surgeon goes into and through the joints and marrow, not cleaving between them. {Quick to discern} (\kritikos\). Verbal adjective in \-ikos\, from \krin\, skilled in judging, as the surgeon has to be and able to decide on the instant what to do. So God's word like his eye sees the secret lurking doubt and unbelief "of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (\enthum[^]se[^]n kai ennoi[^]n kardias\). The surgeon carries a bright and powerful light for every dark crevice and a sharp knife for the removal of all the pus revealed by the light. It is a powerful picture here drawn.

4:13 {That is not manifest} (\aphan[^]s\). Old adjective (\a\ privative and phain[^]\, to show), here only in the N.T. God's microscope can lay bare the smallest microbe of doubt and sin. {Naked} (\gumna\). Both soul and body are naked to the eye of God. {Laid open} (\tetrach[^]lismena\). Perfect passive participle of \trach[^]liz\, late verb to bend back the neck (\trach[^]los\, Mt 18:6) as the surgeon does for operating, here only in N.T. See Ro 16:4 for the peril of risking one's neck (\trach[^]lon hupotithenai\). God's eyes see all the facts in our inmost hearts. There are no mental reservations from God. {With whom we have to do} (\pros hon h[^]min ho logos\). "With whom the matter or account for us is." There is a slight play here on \logos\ of verse 12. Surely every servant of Christ today needs to gaze into this revealing mirror and be honest with himself and God.

4:14 {A great high priest} (\archiereia megan\). The author now takes up the main argument of the Epistle, already alluded to in 1:3; 2:17f.; 3:1, the priestly work of Jesus as superior to that of the Levitical line (4:14-12:3). Jesus is superior to the prophets (1:1-3), to angels (1:4-2:18), to Moses (3:1-4:13), he has already shown. Here he only terms Jesus "great" as high priest (a frequent adjective with high priest in Philo) but the superiority comes out as he proceeds. {Who hath passed through the heavens} (\dielˈluthota tous ouranous\). Perfect active participle of \dierchomai\, state of completion. Jesus has passed through the upper heavens up to the throne of God (1:3) where he performs his function as our high priest. This idea will be developed later (6:19f.; 7:26-28; 9:11f.,24f.). {Jesus the Son of God} (\Iˈsoun ton huion tou theou\). The human name linked with his deity, clinching the argument already made (1:1-4:13). {Let us hold fast our confession} (\kratˈmen tˈs homologias\). Present active volitive subjunctive of \krateˈ\, old verb (from \kratos\, power), with genitive to cling to tenaciously as here and 6:18 and also with the accusative (2Th 2:15; Col 2:19). "Let us keep on holding fast." This keynote runs all through the Epistle, the exhortation to the Jewish Christians to hold on to the confession (3:1) of Christ already made. Before making the five points of Christ's superior priestly work (better priest than Aaron, 5:1-7:25; under a better covenant, 8:1-13; in a better sanctuary, 9:1-12; offering a better sacrifice, 9:13-10:18; based on better promises, 10:19-12:3), the author gives a double exhortation (4:14-16) like that in 2:1-4 to hold fast to the high priest (14f.) and to make use of him (16).

4:15 {That cannot be touched with the feeling} (\mˆ dunamenon sunpathˆsai\). "Not able to sympathize with." First aorist passive infinitive of \sunpatheˈ\, late compound verb from the late adjective \sunpathos\ (Ro 12:15), both from \sunpaschˈ\, to suffer with (1Co 12:26; Ro 8:17), occurring in Aristotle and Plutarch, in N.T. only in Hebrews (here and 10:34). {One that hath been tempted} (\pepeirasmenon\). Perfect passive participle of \peirazˈ\, as already shown in 2:17f. {Without sin} (\chˈris hamartias\). This is the outstanding difference that must never be overlooked in considering the actual humanity of Jesus. He did not yield to sin. But more than this is true. There was no latent sin in Jesus to be stirred by temptation and no habits of sin to be overcome. But he did have "weaknesses" (\astheneiai\) common to our human nature (hunger, thirst, weariness, etc.). Satan used his strongest weapons against Jesus, did it repeatedly, and failed. Jesus remained "undefiled" (\amiantos\) in a world of sin (Joh 8:46). This is our ground of hope, the sinlessness of Jesus and his real sympathy.

4:16 {Let us therefore draw near} (\proserch“metha oun\). Present active middle volitive subjunctive of \proserchomai\, "Let us keep on coming to" our high priest, this sympathizing and great high priest. Instead of deserting him, let us make daily use of him. This verb in Hebrews means reverent approach for worship (7:25; 10:1,22; 11:6). {Unto the throne of grace} (\t“i thron“i t^s charitos\). This old word (\thronos\) we have taken into English, the seat of kings and of God and so of Christ (1:3,8), but marked by grace because Jesus is there (Mt 19:28). Hence we should come "with boldness" (\meta parr^sias\). Telling Jesus the whole story of our shortcomings. {That we may receive mercy} (\hina lab“men eleos\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban“\, {And find grace} (\kai charin heur“men\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \heurisk“\, We are sure to gain both of these aims because Jesus is our high priest on the throne. {To help us in time of need} (\eis eukairon bo^theian\). \Bo^theia\ is old word (from \bo^the“\, 2:18 which see), in N.T. only here and Ac 27:17. \Eukairos\ is an old word also (\eu\, well, \kairos\, opportunity), only here in N.T. "For well-timed help," "for help in the nick of time," before too late.

5:1 {In things pertaining to God} (\ta pros ton theon). Accusative of general reference as in 2:17 (Ro 15:17). The two essential points about any high priest are human sympathy (5:1-3) and divine appointment (5:4). He is taken from men and appointed in behalf of men. {That he may offer} (\hina prosphe^i). Purpose clause with \hina and present active subjunctive of \prosphe^i, "that he keep on offering (from time to time)." {Both gifts} (\d^ra) {and sacrifices} (\kai thusias). General term (\d^ra) and bloody offerings, but the two together are inclusive of all as in 8:3; 9:9 (1Ki 8:64). {For sins} (\huper hamarti^n). His own included (7:27) except in the case of Jesus.

5:2 {Who can bear gently} (\metriopathein dunamenos). Present active infinitive of the late verb \metriopathe^i (\metrios, moderate, \pate^i, to feel or suffer). It is a philosophical term used by Aristotle to oppose the \apatheia (lack of feeling) of the Stoics. Philo ranks it below \apatheia. Josephus (_Ant_. XII. 32) uses it of the moderation of Vespasian and Titus towards the Jews. It occurs here only in the N.T. "If the priest is cordially to plead with God for the sinner, he must bridle his natural disgust at the loathsomeness of sensuality, his impatience at the frequently recurring fall, his hopeless alienation from the hypocrite and the superficial, his indignation at any confession he hears from the penitent" (Dods). {With the ignorant} (\tois agnoousin). Dative case of the articular present active participle of \agnoe^i, old verb not to know (Mr 9:32). {And erring} (\kai plan^menois). Present middle participle (dative case) of \plana^i. The one article with both participles probably makes it a hendiadys, sins of ignorance (both accident and sudden passion) as opposed to high-handed sins of presumption and deliberate purpose. People who sinned "willingly" (\hekousi^s, 10:26) had no provision in the Levitical system. For deliberate apostasy (3:12; 10:26) no pardon is offered. {Is compassed with infirmity} (\perikeitai astheneian). Present passive indicative of the old verb \perikeimai here used transitively as in Ac 28:20 (\halusin, chain). The priest himself has weakness lying around him like a chain. Not so Jesus.

5:3 {For himself} (\peri heautou\). Note \peri\ three times here (\peri tou laou, peri heautou, peri hamarti“n\), but in verse 1 \huper anthr“p“n, huper hamarti“n\). In the _Koin_, this interchange of \peri\ (around) and \huper\ (over) is common (Mt 26:28).

5:4 {Taketh the honour unto himself} (\heaut“i lambanei t^*n tim^n\). Dative case of personal interest (\heaut“i\). The priest was called of God. This is the ideal and was true of Aaron. The modern minister is not a priest, but he also should be a God-called man and not one who pushes himself into the ministry or into ecclesiastical office.*

5:5 {So Christ also} (\hout“s kai ho Christos\). Just as with Aaron. Jesus had divine appointment as high priest also. {To be made} (\gen^th^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \ginomai\. {High priest} (\archiereia\). Predicate accusative agreeing with \heauton\ (himself) object of \edoxasen\. {But he that spake unto him} (\all' ho lal^sas pros auton\). Ellipsis of \edoxasen\ to be supplied from preceding clause. God did glorify Jesus in appointing him priest as we see in Ps 2:7 quoted already as Messianic (Heb 1:5). Jesus himself repeatedly claimed that the Father sent him on his mission to the world (Joh 5:30,43; 8:54; 17:5, etc.). Bruce holds that Christ's priesthood is co-eval with his Sonship. Davidson thinks it is merely suitable because he is Son. Clearly the Father nominated (Dods) the Son to the Messianic priesthood (Joh 3:16).

5:6 {In another place} (\en heter“i\). That is Ps 110:4. It is this crucial passage by which the author will prove the superiority of Jesus to Aaron as high priest. Only the word priest (\hiereus\) occurs here which the author uses as synonymous with high priest (\archiereus\). The point lies in the meaning of the phrase "After the order of Melchizedek" (\kata t^n taxin Melchisedek\). But at this point the only thing pressed is the fact of the divine appointment of Jesus as priest. He returns to this point (5:10-7:28).

5:7 {In the days of his flesh} (\en tais h^*merais t^s sarkos autou\). Here (verses 7-9) the author turns to the other requirement of a high priest (human sympathy). Since Jesus was "without sin" (4:15) he did not have to offer sacrifices "for* himself," yet in all other points he felt the sympathy of the human high priest, even more so by reason of his victory over sin. {Having offered up} (\prosenegkas\). Second aorist active (\-a\ form) participle of \prospher“\ (cf. verse 3). An allusion to the Agony of Christ in Gethsemane. {Supplications} (\hiket^ˆrias\). Socrates, Polybius, Job (Job 40:22) combine this word with \de^ˆseis\ (prayers) as here. The older form was \hikesia\. The word \hiket^ˆrios\ is an adjective from \hiket^ˆs\ (a suppliant from hik“\, to come to one) and suggests one coming with an olive-branch (\elaia\). Here only in the N.T. {With strong crying and tears} (\meta kraug^ˆs ischuras kai dakru“n\). See Lu 22:44f. for a picture of the scene in Gethsemane (anguish and pathos). No doubt the writer has in mind other times when Jesus shed tears (Joh 11:35; Lu 19:41), but Gethsemane chiefly. {To save him from death} (\s“zein ek thanatou\). A reference to the cry of Jesus in Gethsemane (Mt 26:39). {Having been heard for his godly fear} (\eisakoustheis apo t^ˆs eulabeias\). Old word from \eulab^ˆs\ (taking hold well, Lu 2:25 from eu, lamban“\, the verb eulabeomai\ in N.T. only in Heb 11:7), in N.T. only here and 12:28. Fine picture of Christ's attitude toward the Father in the prayer in Gethsemane and in all his prayers. Jesus in Gethsemane at once surrendered his will to that of the Father who heard his plea and enabled him to acquiesce in the Father's will.

5:8 {Though he was a Son} (\kaiper “n huios\). Concessive participle with \kaiper\, regular Greek idiom as in 7:5; 12:17. {Yet learned obedience} (\emathen hupako^ˆn\). Second aorist active indicative of \manthan“\. Succinct and crisp statement of the humanity of Jesus in full harmony with Lu 2:40,52 and with Heb 2:10. {By the things which he suffered} (\aph' h“n epathen\). There is a play on the two verbs (\emathen--epathen\), paronomasia. Second aorist active indicative of \pasch“\. He always did his Father's will (Joh 8:29), but he grew in experience as in wisdom and stature and in the power of sympathy with us.

5:9 {Having been made perfect} (\telei“theis\). First aorist passive participle of \teleio“\, the completion of the process of training mentioned by this same verb in 2:10 "by means of sufferings" (\dia path^ˆmat“n\) as stated again here in verse 8. {The author of eternal salvation} (\aitios s“t^ˆrias ai“niou\). Common adjective from \aitia\ (cause), causing, often in Greek with \s“t^rias\ (Aeschines, Philo), in N.T. only here, Lu 23:4,14,22; Ac 19:40. See same idea in Heb 2:10 (\arch^gon\). See Isa 45:17.

5:10 {Named of God} (\prosagoreutheis\). First aorist passive participle of \prosagoreu“, old verb to salute, to address, only here in N.T. Common in Plutarch.

5:11 {Of whom} (\peri hou\). Or "concerning which," for \hou\ can be either masculine or neuter (genitive). It is the likeness of Jesus as high priest to Melchizedek that the author has in mind. He is ready to discuss that but for the fear that the reader may fail to grasp his meaning, for he will run counter to the usual Jewish ideas. Hence he pauses to stir up the interest of the readers (5:11-6:20) before going on with the argument (7:1-28). {Hard of interpretation} (\duserm^neutos\). Late and rare verbal compound (\dus, herm^neu“\), in Diodorus and Philo, here only in N.T. Hard to explain because of the strange (to Jews) line taken, but still more because of their dulness. {Dull of hearing} (\n“throï tais akoais\). Old adjective (papyri also), from negative \n^ and \“the“, to push, no push in the hearing, slow and sluggish in mind as well as in the ears. In N.T. only here and 6:12 (slack, sluggish). Plato calls some students \n“throï\ (stupid).

5:12 {Teachers} (\didaskaloi\). Predicate nominative after \einai\. {By reason of the time} (\dia ton chronon\). Alas, what a commentary on modern Christians. {That some one teach you the rudiments} (\tou didaskein humas tina ta stoicheia\). Neat Greek idiom, genitive case of the articular infinitive (need of the teaching) with two accusatives of the person (\humas\, you) and the thing (\ta stoicheia\, the rudiments) and the accusative of general reference (\tina\, as to some one). For \stoicheia\ see Ga 4:3,9; Col 2:8. {Of the first principles of the oracles of God} (\t^s arch^s t“n logi“n tou theou\). Three genitives linked to each other. \Arch^s\ (beginning) illustrates \ta stoicheia\, just before, the A B C of Christian teaching like Heb 6:1f. \Logion\ is a diminutive of logos, divine oracles being usually brief, common in the O.T. and Philo for God's words, in N.T. used for the O.T. (Ac 7:38; Rom 3:2), of God's word through Christians (1Pe 4:11), of the substance of Christian teaching (Heb 5:12). {Of milk} (\galaktos\). Because still babes (1Co 3:2) and not able to chew "solid food" (\sterefs troph^s\), without intellectual and spiritual teeth.

5:13 {Without experience} (\apeiros\). Old adjective (alpha privative and peira, trial). Inexperienced. The babe (\n^pios\, old word, negative n^ and epos\, word like Latin _infans_, infant, not able to talk), not able to chew if one uses only milk and is without teeth. Perhaps moral truth is meant by "word of righteousness" (cf. 1:2; 2:3 for the word spoken by Christ).

5:14 {For full-grown men} (\telei“n\). Predicate genitive. The word is for adults, relative perfection (\teleioi\ in contrast with babes as in 1Co 2:6; 3:1; 13:11; Php 3:15; Eph 4:4, not absolute perfection (Mt 5:48). {Their senses} (\ta aisth^t^ria\). The organs of perception (Stoic term for sense organs) from \aisthanomai\ (Lu 9:45), in Plato, Galen, Hippocrates, here only in N.T. {Exercised} (\gegumnasmena\). Perfect passive participle of \gumnaz“, to exercise (naked, gumnos). Galen uses \aisth^t^ria gegumnasmena\ together after \ech“\ as we have here. For this predicate use of the participle with \ech“\ see Lu 13:6; 14:19f. "By reason of use" one gains such skill. {To discern} (\pros diakrisin\). "For deciding between" (from diakrin“), old word with ablative \kalou te kai kakou\ (between good and evil). See 1Co 12:1; Rom 14:1.

6:1 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Because of the argument already made about the difficulty of the subject and the dulness of the readers. {Let us cease to speak} (\aphentes ton logon\). Second aorist active participle of \aphi^mi\, to leave off or behind. {Of the first principles of Christ} (t^s arch^s tou Christou\). Objective genitive \Christou\ (about Christ). "Leaving behind the discussion of the beginning about Christ," another way of saying again \ta stoicheia t^s arch^s t^"n logi^"n tou theou\ of 5:12. {And press on} (\kai pher^metha\). Volitive present subjunctive passive, "Let us be borne on" (both the writer and the readers). The Pythagorean Schools use \pher^metha\ in precisely this sense of being borne on to a higher stage of instruction. Bleek quotes several instances of Greek writers using together as here of \aphentes pher^metha\ (Eurip., _Androm_. 393, for instance). {Unto perfection} (\epi t^"n teleiot^ta\). Old word from \teleios\ mature, adults as in 5:14. Only twice in N.T. (here and Col 3:14). Let us go on to the stage of adults, not babes, able to masticate solid spiritual food. The writer will assume that the readers are adults in his discussion of the topic. {Not laying again the foundation} (m^ palin themelion kataballomenoi\). The regular idiom for laying down the foundation of a building (\themelion\, Lu 6:48f.). The metaphor is common (1Co 3:11) and the foundation is important, but one cannot be laying the foundation always if he is to build the house. There are six items mentioned here as part of the "foundation," though the accusative \didach^"n\ in apposition with \themelion\ may mean that there are only four included in the \themelion\. Two are qualitative genitives after \themelion\ (\metanoias\ and \piste^s\). What is meant by "dead works" (\apo nekr^"n erg^"n\ is not clear (9:14), though the reference may be to touching a corpse (Nu 19:1f.; 31:19). There are frequent allusions to the deadening power of sin (Jas 2:17,26; Joh 7:25; Rom 6:1,11; 7:8; Col 2:13; Eph 2:1,5). The use of repentance and faith together occurs also elsewhere (Mr 1:15; Ac 20:21; 1Th 1:9).

6:2 The other four items are qualitative genitives with \didach^"n\ (\baptism^"n, epithese^s cheir^"n, anastase^s nekr^"n, krimatos ai^niou\). The plural \baptism^"n\ "by itself does not mean specifically Christian baptism either in this epistle (9:10) or elsewhere (Mr 7:4), but ablutions or immersions such as the mystery religions and the Jewish cultus required for initiates, proselytes, and worshippers in general" (Moffatt). The disciples of the Baptist had disputes with the Jews over purification (Joh 3:25). See also Ac 19:2. "The laying on of hands" seems to us out of place in a list of elementary principles, but it was common as a sign of blessing (Mt 19:13), of healing (Mr 7:32), in the choice of the Seven (Ac 6:6), in the bestowal of the Holy Spirit (Ac 8:17f.; 19:6), in separation for a special task (Ac 13:3), in ordination (1Ti 4:14; 5:22; 2Ti 1:6). Prayer accompanied this laying on of the hands as a symbol. The resurrection of the dead (both just and unjust, Joh 5:29; Ac 24:15) is easily seen to be basal (cf. 1Co 15) as well as eternal judgment (timeless and endless).

6:3 {If God permit} (\eanper epitrepⁱ ho theos\). Condition of the third class with \eanper\ (note \per\ indeed). See 1Co 16:7 (\ean ho kurios epitrepsⁱ\) and Ac 18:21 (\tou theou thelontos\). It is not an idle form with the author. He means that he will go on with the argument and not attempt to lay again the foundation (the elements). Moffatt takes him to mean that he will teach them the elements at a later time (13:23) if the way opens, a less probable interpretation.

6:4 {As touching those who were once enlightened} (\tous hapax ph[“]tisthentas\). First aorist passive articular participle (the once for all enlightened) of \photiz[“]\, old and common verb (from \ph[“]s\) as in Lu 11:36. The metaphorical sense here (cf. Joh 1:9; Eph 1:18; Heb 10:32) occurs in Polybius and Epictetus. The accusative case is due to \anakainizein\ in verse 6. \Hapax\ here is "once for all," not once upon a time (\pote\) and occurs again (9:7,26,27,28; 12:26,27). {Tasted of the heavenly gift} (\geusamenous t^s d[“]reas t^s epouraniou\). First aorist middle participle of \geu[“]\, old verb once with accusative (verse 5, \kalon r^ˆma, dunameis), usually with genitive (Heb 2:9) as here. {Partakers of the Holy Ghost} (\metochous pneumat^{os} hagiou\). See 3:14 for \metochoi\. These are all given as actual spiritual experiences. {And then fell away} (\kai parapesontas\). No "then" here, though the second aorist (effective) active participle of \parapipt[“]\, old verb to fall beside (aside), means that. Only here in N.T. In Gal 5:4 we have \t^s charitos exepesate\ (ye fell out of grace, to law, Paul means).

6:6 {It is impossible to renew them again} (\adunaton palin anakainizein\). The \adunaton\ (impossible) comes first in verse 4 without \estin\ (is) and there is no "them" in the Greek. There are three other instances of \adunaton\ in Hebrews (6:18; 10:4; 11:6). The present active infinitive of \anakainiz\ (late verb, \ana, kainos\, here only in the N.T., but \anakaino, 2Co 4:16; Col 3:10) with \adunaton\ bluntly denies the possibility of renewal for apostates from Christ (cf. 3:12-4:2). It is a terrible picture and cannot be toned down. The one ray of light comes in verses 8-12, not here. {Seeing they crucify to themselves afresh} (\anastraurountas heautois\). Present active participle (accusative plural agreeing with \tous ... parapesontas) of \anastauro\, the usual verb for crucify in the old Greek so that \ana-\ here does not mean "again" or "afresh," but "up," _sursum_, not _rursum_ (Vulgate). This is the reason why renewal for such apostates is impossible. They crucify Christ. {And put him to an open shame} (\kai paradeigmatizontas\). Present active participle of \paradeigmatiz\, late verb from \paradeigma\ (example), to make an example of, and in bad sense to expose to disgrace. Simplex verb \deigmatisai\ in this sense in Mt 1:19.

6:7 {Which hath drunk} (\h[^] piouosa\). Articular second aorist active participle of \pin\, to drink. {Herbs} (\botan[^]n\). Old word from \bosk\, to feed, green plant, only here in N.T. Cf. our botany. {Meet} (\eutheton\). Old compound verbal (\eu, tith[^]mi\ well-placed, fit (Lu 9:62). {It is tilled} (\ge[^]rgeitai\). Present passive indicative of \ge[^]rge\, old and rare verb from \ge[^]rgos\ (tiller of the soil, \g[^], ergon\, 2Ti 2:6), here only in the N.T. {Receives} (\metalambanei\). Present active indicative of \metalamban\, old verb to share in, with genitive (\eulogias\ as here (Ac 2:46) or with accusative (Ac 24:25).

6:8 {If it beareth} (\ekpherousa\). Present active participle of \ekpher\, conditional participle. For "thorns and thistles" see Mt 7:16 for both words (\akanthas kai tribolous\). Roman soldiers scattered balls with sharp iron spikes, one of which was called _tribulus_, to hinder the enemy's cavalry. {Rejected} (\adokimos\). See 1Co 9:27; Ro 1:28. For \kataras eggus\ (nigh unto a curse) see Gal 3:10. {To be burned} (\eis kausin\). "For burning." Common sight in clearing up ground.

6:9 {But we are persuaded} (\pepeismetha de\). Perfect passive indicative of \peith“, literary plural. Note Paul's use of \pepeismai\ in 2Ti 1:12. {Better things} (\ta kreissona\). "The better things" than those pictures in 6:4-8. {That accompany salvation} (\echomena s“t^rias\). "Things holding on to salvation" (Mr 1:38), a common Greek phrase \echomena\, present middle participle of \ech“. {Though we thus speak} (\ei kai hout“s laloumen\). Concessive condition of the first class. Explanatory, not apologetic, of his plain talk. {Not unrighteous to forget} (\ou gar adikos epilathesthai\). Second aorist middle infinitive of \epilanthan“\ with genitive case (\ergou\, work, \agap^s\, love). But even God cannot remember what they did not do. {In that ye ministered and still do minister} (\diakon^santes kai diakonountes\). First aorist active and present active participle of the one verb \diakone“, the sole difference being the tense (single act _aorist_, repeated acts _present_).

6:11 {And we desire} (\epithumoumen de\). Literary plural again like \pepeismetha\ (6:9). He is not wholly satisfied with them as he had already shown (5:11-14). They have not given up Christ (6:4-8), but many of them are still babes (\n^pioi\, 5:13) and not adults (\teleioi\, 5:14) and others are in peril of becoming so. {Unto the fulness of hope} (\pros t^n pl^rophorian t^s elpidos\). For \pl^rophoria\ see 1Th 1:5; Col 2:2. {To the end} (\achri telous\). As in 3:6,14.

6:12 {That ye be not sluggish} (\hina m^ n“throï gen^sthe\). Negative final clause with second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\, "that ye become not sluggish (or dull of hearing)" as some already were (5:11). {Imitators} (\mim^tai\). See 1Th 1:6; 2:14 for this word (our "mimic" in good sense). The writer wishes to hold and develop these sluggards through those who inherit the promises (see 10:19-12:3), one of his great appeals later in ch. Heb 11 full of examples of "faith and long-suffering."

6:13 {Made promise} (\epaggeilamenos\). First aorist middle participle of \epaggell“. Could swear by none greater (\kat' oudenos eichen meizonos omosai\). Imperfect active of \ech“\ in sense of \edunato\ as often with \omosai\ (first aorist active infinitive of \omnu“) and \“mosen\ (he sware) is first aorist active indicative.

6:14 {Surely} (\ei m^{\hat{n}}). By itacism for \^ m^{\hat{n}} (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 205). The quotation is from Ge 22:16f. (the promise renewed to Abraham with an oath after offering of Isaac). {Blessing} (\eulog^{\hat{n}}). Hebraism (present active participle) for the Hebrew infinitive absolute and so with \pl^{\hat{thun}}^{\hat{n}} (multiplying).

6:15 {Having patiently endured} (\makrothum^{\hat{sas}}). First aorist active participle of \makrothumos (\makros, thumos, long spirit) illustrating \makrothumia of verse 12. {He obtained} (\epetuchen). Second aorist (effective) active indicative of \epetugchan^{\hat{}}, old verb with genitive. God was true to his word and Abraham was faithful.

6:16 {In every dispute} (\pas^{\hat{s}} antilogias). Objective genitive of old word several times in Hebrews (6:16; 7:7; 12:3). Talking back, face to face, in opposition. {Final} (\peras). Limit, boundary (Mt 12:42). Men may perjure themselves.

6:17 {To shew} (\epideixai). First aorist active infinitive of \epideiknumi, to show in addition (\epi-) to his promise "more abundantly" (\perissoteron). {The immutability of his counsel} (\to ametatheton t^{\hat{s}} boul^{\hat{s}} autou). Late compound verbal neuter singular (alpha privative and \metatith^{\hat{mi}}, to change), "the unchangeableness of his will." {Interposed} (\emesiteusen). First aorist active indicative of \mesiteu^{\hat{}}, late verb from \mesit^{\hat{s}}, mediator (Heb 8:6), to act as mediator or sponsor or surety, intransitively to pledge one's self as surety, here only in the N.T. {With an oath} (\hork^{\hat{i}}). Instrumental case of \horkos (from \herkos, an enclosure), Mt 14:7,9.

6:18 {By two immutable things} (\dia duo pragmat^{\hat{n}} ametathet^{\hat{n}}). See verse 17. God's promise and God's oath, both unchangeable. {In which it is impossible for God to lie} (\en hois adunaton pseusasthai theon). Put this "impossibility" by that in verses 4-6. {Theon} is accusative of general reference with \pseusasthai, first aorist middle infinitive of \pseudomai. {That we may have} (\hina ech^{\hat{men}}). Purpose clause with \hina and the present active subjunctive of \ech^{\hat{}}, "that we may keep on having." {Strong consolation} (\ischuran parakl^{\hat{sin}}). "Strong encouragement" by those two immutable things. {Who have fled for refuge} (\hoi kataphugontes). Articular effective second aorist active participle of \katapheug^{\hat{}}, old verb, in N.T. only here and Ac 14:6. The word occurs for fleeing to the cities of refuge (De 4:42; 19:5; Jos 20:9). {To lay hold of} (\krat^sai). First aorist active (single act) infinitive of \krate“ in contrast with present tense in 4:14 (hold fast). {Set before us} (\prokeimen^s). Placed before us as the goal. See this same participle used with the "joy" (\charas) set before Jesus (12:2).

6:19 {Which} (\h^n). Which hope. What would life be without this blessed hope based on Christ as our Redeemer? {As an anchor of the soul} (\h^s agkuran t^s psuch^s). Old word, literally in Ac 27:29, figuratively here, only N.T. examples. The ancient anchors were much like the modern ones with iron hooks to grapple the rocks and so hold on to prevent shipwreck (1Ti 1:19). {Both sure and steadfast} (\asphal^ te kai bebaian). This anchor of hope will not slip (alpha privative and \sphall“, to totter) or lose its grip (\bebaia, from \bain“, to go, firm, trusty). {That which is within the veil} (\to es^teron tou katapetasmatos). The Holy of Holies, "the inner part of the veil" (the space behind the veil), in N.T. only here and Ac 16:24 (of the inner prison). The anchor is out of sight, but it holds. That is what matters.

6:20 {As a forerunner} (\prodromos). Old word used for a spy, a scout, only here in N.T. Jesus has shown us the way, has gone on ahead, and is the surety (\egguos, Heb 7:22) and guarantor of our own entrance later. In point of fact, our anchor of hope with its two chains of God's promise and oath has laid hold of Jesus within the veil. It will hold fast. All we need to do is to be true to him as he is to us. {A high priest for ever} (\archiereus eis ton ai^na). There he functions as our great high priest, better than Aaron for he is "after the order of Melchizedek," the point that now calls for elucidation (5:10f.).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

7:1 {This Melchizedek} (\houtos ho Melchisedek). The one already mentioned several times with whose priesthood that of Christ is compared and which is older and of a higher type than that of Aaron. See Ge 14:18-20; Ps 110 for the only account of Melchizedek in the Old Testament. It is a daring thing to put Melchizedek above Aaron, but the author does it. Moffatt calls verses 1-3 "a little sermon" on 6:20. It is "for ever" (\eis ton ai^na) that he explains. Melchizedek is the only one in his line and stands alone in the record in Genesis. The interpretation is rabbinical in method, but well adapted to Jewish readers. The description is taken verbatim from Genesis except that "who met" (\ho sunant^sas) is here applied to Melchizedek from Ge 14:17 instead of to the King of Sodom. They both met Abraham as a matter of fact. For this verb (first aorist active participle of \sunanta^s) see Lu 9:37. {Slaughter} (\kop^s). Old word for cutting (\kopt^s, to cut), here only in N.T. These kings were Amraphel, Arioch, Chedorlaomer, Tidal. Amraphel is usually taken to be Khammurabi. {Priest of God Most High} (\hiereus tou theou tou hupsistou). He is called "priest" and note \tou hupsistou applied to God as the Canaanites, Phoenicians, Hebrews did. It is used also of Zeus and the Maccabean priest-kings. The demons apply it to God (Mr 5:7; Lu 8:28).

7:2 {A tenth} (\dekat^n). It was common to offer a tenth of the spoils to the gods. So Abraham recognized Melchizedek as a priest of God. {Divided} (\emerisen). First aorist active of \meriz^s, from \meros (portion), to separate into parts. From this point till near the end of verse 3 (the Son of God) is a long parenthesis with \houtos of verse 1 as the subject of \menei (abideth) as the Revised Version punctuates it. Philo had made popular the kind of exegesis used here. The author gives in Greek the meaning of the Hebrew words Melchizedek (King of righteousness, cf. 1:8) and Salem (peace).

7:3 {Without father, without mother, without genealogy} (\apat^r, am^t^r, agenealog^tos). Alliteration like Ro 1:30, the first two old words, the third coined by the author (found nowhere else) and meaning simply "devoid of any genealogy." The argument is that from silence, made much of by Philo, but not to be pressed. The record in Genesis tells nothing of any genealogy. Melchizedek stands alone. He is not to be understood as a miraculous being without birth or death. Melchizedek has been made more mysterious than he is by reading into this interpretation what is not there. {Made like} (\aph“moi“menos\). Perfect passive participle of \aphomoio“, old verb, to produce a facsimile or copy, only here in N.T. The likeness is in the picture drawn in Genesis, not in the man himself. Such artificial interpretation does not amount to proof, but only serves as a parallel or illustration. {Unto the Son of God} (\t“i hui“i tou theou\). Associative instrumental case of \huios|. {Abideth a priest} (\menei hiereus\). According to the record in Genesis, the only one in his line just as Jesus stands alone, but with the difference that Jesus continues priest in fact in heaven. {Continually} (\eis to diⁿ*nekes*\). Old phrase (for the continuity) like \eis ton ai“na\, in N.T. only in Hebrews (7:3; 10:1,14,21).

7:4 {How great} (\pⁿ*likos*\). Geometrical magnitude in contrast to arithmetical (\posos\), here only in N.T., "how distinguished." He received tithes from Abraham (verses 4-6a) and he blessed Abraham (6b-7) and even Levi is included (verses 8-10). {Out of the chief spoils} (\ek t“n akrothini“n\). Old word from \akros\, top, and \this\, a heap (the top of the pile). {Patriarch} (\patriarch^s\). LXX word (\patria\, tribe, \arch“, to rule) transferred to N.T. (Ac 2:29).

7:5 {The priest's office} (\tⁿ hierateian\). LXX and _Koin_, word from \hiereus\, in N.T. only here and Lu 1:9. {To take tithes} (\apodekatoin\). Present active infinitive (in \-oin\, not \-oun\, as the best MSS. give it) of \apodekato“ a LXX word (\apo, dekato“), to take a tenth from (\apo\). {Brethren} (\adelphous\). Accusative case in apposition with \laon\ (people) unaffected by the explanatory phrase \tout' estin\ (that is). {Though come out} (\kaiper exel'luthotas\). Concessive participle (cf. 5:8) with \kaiper\ (perfect active of \exerchomai\).

7:6 {He whose genealogy is not counted} (\ho mⁿ genealogoumenos\). Articular participle with negative \mⁿ\ (usual with participles) of the old verb \genealoge“\ trace ancestry (cf. verse 3) {Hath taken tithes} (\dedekat“ken\). Perfect active indicative of \dekato“, standing on record in Genesis.

{Hath blessed} (\eulog^{ken}). Perfect active indicative of \euloge^o, likewise standing on record. Note the frequent perfect tenses in Hebrews. {Him that hath the promises} (\ton echonta tas epaggelias). Cf. 6:12,13-15 for allusion to the repeated promises to Abraham (Ge 12:3,7; 13:14; 15:5; 17:5; 22:16-18).

7:7 {Dispute} (\antilogias). Ablative case with \ch^{ris}. For the word see 6:16. The writer makes a parenthetical generalization and uses the article and neuter adjective (\to elasson\, the less, \hupo tou kreittonos\, by the better), a regular Greek idiom.

7:8 {Here} (\h^{de}). In the Levitical system. {There} (\ekei). In the case of Melchizedek. {Of whom it is witnessed} (\marturoumenos). "Being witnessed," present passive participle of \marture^o (personal construction, not impersonal). {That he lives} (\hoti zⁱ). Present active indicative of \za^o. The Genesis record tells nothing of his death.

7:9 {So to say} (\h^s epos eipein). An old idiom, here only in the N.T., common in Philo, used to limit a startling statement, an infinitive for conceived result with \h^s. {Hath paid tithes} (\dedekat^{tai}). Perfect passive indicative of \dekato^o, "has been tithed." This could only be true of Levi "so to speak."

7:10 {In the loins of his father} (\en tⁱ osphui tou patros). Levi was not yet born. The reference is to Abraham, the forefather (\patros) of Levi. This is a rabbinical imaginative refinement appealing to Jews.

7:11 {Perfection} (\telei^{sis}). Abstract substantive of \teleio^o. More the act than the quality or state (\teleiot^s, 6:1). The condition is of the second class, "if there were perfection, etc." The Levitical priesthood failed to give men "a perfectly adequate relation to God" (Moffatt). {Priesthood} (\hierosun^s). Old word, in N.T. only here, verses 12,24. Cf. \hieretia in verse 5. The adjective \Leueitik^o occurs in Philo. {Received the law} (\nenomothet^{tai}). Perfect passive indicative of \nomothete^o, old compound to enact law (\nomos, tith^{mi}), to furnish with law (as here), only other N.T. example in 8:6. {What further need was there?} (\tis eti chreia;). No copula expressed, but it would normally be \n an, not just \n: "What need still would there be?" {Another priest} (\heteron hierea). Of a different line (\heteron), not just one more (\allon). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive \anistasthai (present middle of \anist^{mi}\ intransitive). {And not to be reckoned} (\kai ou legesthai). The negative \ou belongs rather to the descriptive clause than just to the infinitive.

7:12 {The priesthood being changed} (\metatithemen^s t^s hierosun^s). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of \metatith^{mi}, old word to transfer (Ga 1:6). {A change} (\metathesis). Old substantive from \metatith^{mi}. In N.T. only in Heb. (7:12; 11:5; 12:27). God's choice of another kind of priesthood for his Son, left the Levitical line off to one side, forever discounted, passed by "the order of Aaron" (tⁿ taxin Aarⁿ).

7:13 {Belongeth to another tribe} (\phul^s heteras metesch^{ken}). See 2:14 for \metech^a, perfect active indicative here. A different (\heteras) tribe. {Hath given attendance at} (\prosesch^{ken}). Perfect active indicative (watch perfects in Hebrews, not "for" aorists) of \prosech^a, old verb, here with either \noun (mind) or self (\heauton) understood with dative case (t^ai thusiast^{ri}ⁱ, the altar, for which word see Mt 5:23; Lu 1:11).

7:14 {It is evident} (\prod^{lon}). Old compound adjective (\pro, d^{los}), openly manifest to all, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 5:24f. {Hath sprung} (\anatetalken). Perfect active indicative of \anatell^a, old compound to rise up like the sun (Mt 5:45).

7:15 {Yet more abundantly evident} (\perissoteron eti katad^{lon}). Only N.T. instance of the old compound adjective \katad^{los} thoroughly clear with \eti (still) added and the comparative \perissoteron (more abundantly) piling Ossa on Pelion like Php 1:23. {Likeness} (\homoiot^{ta}). See 4:15, only N.T. examples. Cf. the verb in verse 3. {Ariseth another priest} (\anistatai hierous heteros). As said in verse 11, now assumed in condition of first class.

7:16 {Carnal} (\sarkin^s). "Fleshen" as in 1Co 3:1, not \sarkik^s (fleshlike, 1Co 3:3). The Levitical priests became so merely by birth. {Of an endless life} (\z^as akatalutou). Late compound (alpha privative and verbal adjective from \katalu^a\, to dissolve, as in 2Co 4:1), indissoluble. Jesus as priest lives on forever. He is Life.

7:17 {It is witnessed} (\martureitai\). Present passive indicative of \marture“\ . The author aptly quotes again Ps 110:4.

7:18 {A disannulling} (\athet^sis\). Late word from \athete“\ (alpha privative and \tith^mi), to set aside (Mr 6:26), in N.T. only here and 9:26. Common in the papyri in a legal sense of making void. Involved in \metathesis\ (change in verse 12). {Foregoing} (\proagous^s\). Present active participle of \proag“\ , to go before (ITi 1:18). {Because of its weakness} (\dia to aut^s asthenes\). Neuter abstract adjective with article for quality as in verse 7 with \dia\ and accusative case for reason. {Unprofitableness} (\an“pheles\). Old compound (alpha privative and \ophelos) useless, and neuter singular like \asthenes\ . In N.T. only here and Tit 3:9.

7:19 {Made nothing perfect} (\ouden etelei“sen\). Another parenthesis. First aorist active indicative of \teleio“\ . See verse 11. And yet law is necessary. {A bringing in thereupon} (\epeisag“g^). An old double compound (\epi\ , additional, \eisag“g^, bringing in from \eisag“\). Here only in N.T. Used by Josephus (_Ant_. XI. 6, 2) for the introduction of a new wife in place of the repudiated one. {Of a better hope} (\kreittonos elpidos\). This better hope (6:18-20) does bring us near to God (\eggizomen t“i the“i\) as we come close to God's throne through Christ (4:16).

7:20 {Without the taking of an oath} (\ch“ris hork“mosias\). As in Ps 110:4.

7:21 {Have been made} (\eisin gegonotes\). Periphrastic perfect active indicative of \ginomai\ (perfect active participle of \ginomai) and then \eisin\ . The parenthesis runs from \hoi men gar\ (for they) to \eis ton ai“na\ (for ever, end of verse 21). {But he with an oath} (\ho de meta hork“mosias\). Positive statement in place of the negative one in verse 20.

7:22 {By so much also} (\kata tosouto kai\). Correlative demonstrative corresponding to \kath' hoson\ (the relative clause) in verse 20. {The surety} (\egguos\). Vulgate _sponsor_. Old word, here only in the N.T., adjective (one pledged, betrothed), from \eggu^, a pledge, here used as substantive like \eggu^t^s\ , one who gives a pledge or guarantee.

There may be a play on the word \eggiz“\ in verse 19. \Eggua“\ is to give a pledge, \eggualiz“\, to put a pledge in the hollow of the hand. It is not clear whether the author means that Jesus is God's pledge to man, or man's to God, or both. He is both in fact, as the Mediator (\ho mesit^s\, 8:6) between God and man (Son of God and Son of man).

7:23 {Many in number} (\pleiones\). Comparative predicate adjective, "more than one," in succession, not simultaneously. {Because they are hindered} (\dia to k“luesthai\). Articular infinitive (present passive) with \dia\ and the accusative case, "because of the being hindered." {By death} (\thanat“i\). Instrumental case. {From continuing} (\paramenein\). Present active infinitive of the compound (remain beside) as in Php 1:25 and in the ablative case.

7:24 {Because he abideth} (\dia to menein auton\). Same idiom as in verse 23, "because of the abiding as to him" (accusative of general reference, \auton\). {Unchangeable} (\aparabaton\). Predicate adjective in the accusative (feminine of compound adjective like masculine), late double compound verbal adjective in Plutarch and papyri, from alpha privative and \parabain“\, valid or inviolate. The same idea in verse 3. God placed Christ in this priesthood and no one else can step into it. See verse 11 for \hier“sun^\.

7:25 {Wherefore} (\hothen\). Since he alone holds this priesthood. {To the uttermost} (\eis to panteles\). Old idiom, in N.T. only here and Lu 13:10. Vulgate renders it _in perpetuum_ (temporal idea) or like \pantote\. This is possible, but the common meaning is completely, utterly. {Draw near} (\proserchomenous\). Present middle participle of \proserchomai\, the verb used in 4:16 which see. {To make intercession} (\eis to entugchanein\). Purpose clause with \eis\ and the articular present active infinitive of \entugchan“\ for which verb see Ro 8:34. "His intercession has red blood in it, unlike Philo's conception" (Moffatt).

7:26 {Became us} (\h^min eprepen\). Imperfect active indicative of \prep“\ as in 2:10, only there it was applied to God while here to us. "Such" (\toioutos\) refers to the Melchizedek character of Jesus as high priest and in particular to his power to help and save (2:17f.) as just explained in 7:24f. Moffatt notes that "it is generally misleading to parse a rhapsody" but the adjectives that follow picture in outline the qualities of the high priest needed by us. {Holy} (\hosios). Saintly, pious, as already noted. Cf. Ac 2:24; 13:35. {Guileless} (\akakos). Without malice, innocent. In N.T. only here and Ro 16:18. {Undefiled} (\amiantos). Untainted, stainless. In the papyri. Not merely ritual purity (Le 21:10-15), but real ethical cleanness. {Separated from sinners} (\kech“rismenos apo t“n hamart“l“n). Perfect passive participle. Probably referring to Christ's exaltation (9:28). {Made higher than the heavens} (\hups^lotos t“n ouran“n genomenos). "Having become higher than the heavens." Ablative case (\ouran“n) after the comparative adjective (\hups^lotos).

7:27 {First} (\proteron). Regular adverb for comparison between two, though \pr“ton often occurs also (Joh 1:41), with \epeita (then) following. {For the sins} (\ton). Only the article in the Greek with repetition of \huper or of \hamarti“n. {When he offered up himself} (\heauton anenegkas). First aorist active participle of \anapher“, to offer up. See same idea in 9:14 where \heauton pros^negken is used. Old verb for sacrifice to place on the altar (1Pe 2:5,24).

7:28 {After the law} (\meta ton nomon). As shown in verses 11-19, and with an oath (Ps 110:4). {Son} (\huion). As in Ps 2:7; Heb 1:2 linked with Ps 110:4. {Perfected} (\tetelei“menon). Perfect passive participle of \teleio“. The process (2:10) was now complete. Imperfect and sinful as we are we demand a permanent high priest who is sinless and perfectly equipped by divine appointment and human experience (2:17f.; 5:1-10) to meet our needs, and with the perfect offering of himself as sacrifice.

8:1 {In the things which we are saying} (\epi tois legomenois\). Locative case of the articular present passive participle of \leg“\ after \epi\ as in Lu 5:5; Heb 11:4, "in the matter of the things being discussed." {The chief point} (\kephalaion\). Neuter singular of the adjective \kephalaios\ (from \kephal^, head), belonging to the head. Vulgate _capitulum_, nominative absolute in old and common sense, the main matter (even so without the article as in Thucydides), "the pith" (Coverdale), common in the papyri as in Greek literature. The word also occurs in the sense of the sum total or a sum of money (Ac 22:28) as in Plutarch, Josephus, and also in the papyri (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). {Such an high priest} (\toiouton archierea\). As the one described in chapters 4:16-7:28 and in particular 7:26 (\toioutos\) 7:27,28. But the discussion of the priestly work of Jesus continues through 12:3. \Toioutos\ is both retrospective and prospective. Here we have a summary of the five points of superiority of Jesus as high priest (8:1-6). He is himself a better priest than Aaron (\toioutos\ in 8:1 such as shown in 4:16-7:28); he works in a better sanctuary (8:2,5); he offers a better sacrifice (8:3f.); he is mediator of a better covenant (8:6); his work rests on better promises (8:6); hence he has obtained a better ministry as a whole (8:6). In this resum, (\kephelaion\) the author gives the pith (\kephalaion\) of his argument, curiously enough with both senses of \kephalaion\ (pith, summary) pertinent. He will discuss the four points remaining thus: (1) the better covenant, 8:7-13. (2) The better sanctuary, 9:1-12. (3) The better sacrifice, 9:13-10:18. (4) The better promises, 10:19-12:3. One point (the better high priest, like Melchizedek) has already been discussed (4:16-7:28). {Sat down} (\ekathisen\). Repetition of 1:3 with \tou thronou\ (the throne) added. This phrase prepares the way for the next point.

8:2 {Minister} (\leitourgos\). See on Ro 13:6; Php 2:25. {Of the sanctuary} (\t“n hagi“n\). "Of the holy places" (\ta hagia\), without any distinction (like 9:8f.; 10:19; 13:11) between the holy place and the most holy place as in 9:2f. {Of the true tabernacle} (\t^s sk^n^s t^s al^thin^s\). By way of explanation of \t“n hagi“n\ . For \sk^n^ \ see Mt 17:4 and \sk^nos\ (2Co 5:1), old word used here for the antitype or archetype of the tabernacle in the wilderness in which Aaron served, the ideal tabernacle in heaven of which the earthly tabernacle was a symbol and reproduced in the temple which merely copied the tabernacle. Hence it is the "genuine" tabernacle and see Joh 1:9 for \al^thinos\ . {Pitched} (\ep^xen\). First aorist active indicative of \p^gnumi\, old verb to fasten as the pegs of a tent, here only in the N.T. Cf. Nu 24:6.

8:3 {Is appointed} (\kathistatai\). As in 5:1. {To offer} (\eis to prospherein\). Articular infinitive accusative case with \eis\ as is common while \hina prosper^i\ (\hina\ with present active subjunctive) for purpose in 5:1, with \d“ra te kai thusias\ as there. {It is necessary} (\anagkaion\). A moral and logical necessity (from \anagk^ \ necessity) as seen in Ac 13:46; Php 1:24. {This high priest also} (\kai touton\). "This one also," no word for high priest, accusative of general reference with the infinitive \echein\ (have). {Somewhat to offer} (\ti h“ prosenegk^i\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \prospher“\ (verse 3). Vulgate _aliquid quod offerat_. The use of the subjunctive in this relative clause is probably volitive as in Ac 21:16; Heb 12:28 (possibly here merely futuristic), but note \ho prospherei\ (present indicative) in 9:7. See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 955.

8:4 {On earth} (\epi g^s\). As opposed to \en tois ouranois\ (verse 1). Condition of second class, determined as unfulfilled. {He would not be a priest at all} (\oud' an ^n hiereus\). "Not even would he be a priest." Conclusion of second class condition with \an\ and imperfect indicative (\^n\). {Seeing there are those} (\ont“n t“n\). Genitive absolute with \ont“n\ (from \eimi\) and the articular present active participle of \prospher“\ (verse 3). Jesus was not of the tribe of Levi and so could not serve here.

8:5 {Serve} (\latreuousin\). Present active indicative of \latreu“\ for which verb see on ^Mt 4:10. {A copy} (\hupodeigmati\). Dative case after \latreuousin\ . See already on ^Joh 13:15; Heb 4:11 for this interesting word. {Shadow} (\skifi\). Dative case. Old word for which see already Mt 4:16; Mr 4:32; Col 2:17. See same idea in Heb 9:23. For difference between \skia\ and \eik“n\ see 10:1. Here "copy and shadow" form a practical hendiadys for "a shadowy out- line" (Moffatt).

{Is warned of God} (\kechrˆmatistai). Perfect passive indicative of \chrˆmatizˆ, old verb (from \chrˆma\, business) for which see on Mt 2:12,22; Lu 2:26. The word "God" is not used, but it is implied as in Ac 10:22; Heb 12:25. So in LXX, Josephus, and the papyri. {For saith he} (\gar phˆsi). Argument from God's command (Ex 25:40). {See that thou make} (\Horf poiˆseis). Common Greek idiom with present active imperative of \horaˆ and the volitive future of \poieˆ without \hina (asyndeton, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 949). {The pattern} (\ton tupon). The very word used in Ex 25:40 and quoted also by Stephen in Ac 7:44. For \tupos see already Joh 20:25; Ro 6:17, etc. The tabernacle was to be patterned after the heavenly model.

8:6 {But now} (\nun de). Logical use of \nun, as the case now stands, with Jesus as high priest in heaven. {Hath he obtained} (\tetuchen). Perfect active indicative of \tugchanˆ with the genitive, a rare and late form for \teteuchen (also \teteuchˆken), old verb to hit the mark, to attain. {A ministry the more excellent} (\diaphorˆˆteras leitourgias). "A more excellent ministry." For the comparative of \diaphoros see 1:4. This remark applies to all the five points of superiority over the Levitical priesthood. {By how much} (\hosˆi). Instrumental case of the relative \hosos between two comparative adjectives as in 1:4. {The mediator} (\mesitˆs). Late word from \mesos (amid) and so a middle man (arbitrator). Already in Ga 3:19f. and see 1Ti 2:5. See Heb 9:15; 12:24 for further use with \diathˆkˆ. {Of a better covenant} (\kreittonos diathˆkˆs). Called "new" (\kainˆs, neas\ in 9:15; 12:24). For \diathˆkˆ see Mt 26:28; Lu 1:72; Ga 3:17, etc. This idea he will discuss in 8:7-13. {Hath been enacted} (\nenomothetˆtai). Perfect passive indicative of \nomotheteˆ as in 7:11 which see. {Upon better promises} (\epi kreittosin epaggeliais). Upon the basis of (\epi). But how "better" if the earlier were also from God? This idea, alluded to in 6:12-17, Will be developed in 10:19-12:3 with great passion and power. Thus it is seen that "better" (\kreissˆˆn) is the keynote of the Epistle. At every point Christianity is better than Judaism.

8:7 {That first covenant} (\hˆ prˆˆtˆ ekeinˆ). The word \diathˆkˆ (covenant) is not expressed, but clearly meant by the feminine gender \prˆˆtˆ. {Faultless} (\amemptos). Old compound adjective for which see Lu 1:6; Php 2:15. The condition is second class and assumes that the old covenant was not "blameless," apparently a serious charge which he hastens to explain. {For a second} (\deuteras). Objective genitive with \diath^k^s understood. The conclusion with \an and the imperfect passive indicative (\ez^teito) is clearly a second-class condition. See a like argument in 7:11.

8:8 {Finding fault with them} (\memphomenos autous). Present middle participle of \memphomai (cf. \amemptos), old verb, in N.T. only here and Ro 9:19. The covenant was all right, but the Jews failed to keep it. Hence God made a new one of grace in place of law. Why do marriage covenants so often fail to hold? The author quotes in verses 8-12; Jer 38:31-34 (in LXX 31:31-34) in full which calls for little explanation or application to prove his point (verse 13). {I will make} (\sunteles^{\}). Future active of \suntele^{\}, old compound verb to accomplish as in Mr 13:4; Ro 9:28. {A new covenant} (\diath^k^{\n kain^{\n}). In 12:24 we have \diath^k^{\s neas, but \kain^{\s in 1Co 11:25. \Kainos is fresh, on new lines as opposed to the old (\palaaios) as in 2Co 3:6,14; \neos is young or not yet old.

8:9 {In the day that I took them} (\en h^{\merfi epilabomenou mou). Genitive absolute (\mou and second aorist middle participle of \epilamban^{\}), "a Hellenistic innovation" (Moffatt) in imitation of the Hebrew after \h^{\merfi in place of \en h^{\i epelabomen, occurring also in Barn. 2:28. {By the hand} (\t^{\s cheiros). Technical use of the genitive of the part affected. {To lead them forth} (\exagagein autous). Second aorist active infinitive of \exag^{\} to denote purpose. {For they continued not} (\hoti autoi ouk enemeinan). First aorist active indicative of \emmen^{\}, old verb to remain in (Ac 14:22). The Israelites broke the covenant. Then God annulled it. {I regarded not} (\mel^{\sa). "I neglected" as in 2:3. The covenant was void when they broke it.

8:10 {This} (\haut^{\}). The "new" one of verse 8. {That I will make} (\h^{\n diath^{\somai). Future middle of \diatith^{\mi, "that I will covenant," cognate accusative (\h^{\n), using the same root in the verb as in \diath^{\k^{\}. {I will put} (\didous). "Giving," present active participle of \did^{\mi, to give. {Into their mind} (\eis t^{\n dianoian aut^{\n). Their intellect, their moral understanding, all the intellect as in Aristotle (Col 1:21; Eph 4:18). {On their heart} (\epi kardias aut^{\n). Either genitive singular or accusative plural. \Kardia is the seat of man's personal life (Westcott), the two terms covering the whole of man's inward nature. {A god} (\eis theon\). Note the Hebraistic use of \eis\ in the predicate instead of the usual nominative \theos\ as in "a people" (\eis laon\). This was the ideal of the old covenant (Ex 6:7), now at last to be a fact.

8:11 {They shall not teach} (\ou m^ didax"sin\). Strong double negative (\ou m^\) with the first aorist active (futuristic) subjunctive of \didask"\". {His fellow-citizen} (\ton polit^ n autou\). See Lu 15:15; 19:14. {Know the Lord} (\Gn"thi ton kurion\). Second aorist active imperative of \gin"sk"\". In the new covenant all will be taught of God (Isa 54:13; Joh 6:45), whereas under the old only the educated scribe could understand the minutiae of the law (Dods). See Paul's comparison in 2Co 3:7-18. {Shall know} (\eid^sousin\). Future perfect active, old form of \oida\ (note \gin"sk"\" just before of recognizing God), one of the rare future perfects (cf. 2:13, \esomai pepoith"s).

8:12 {Merciful} (\hile"s\). Old Attic adjective for \hilaos\, common in the LXX, only here in N.T., from which \hilaskomai\ comes (Lu 18:13). {Will I remember no more} (\ou m^ mn^sth" eti\). Double negative \ou m^\) with first aorist passive subjunctive (volitive) of \mimn^sk"\", to recall.

8:13 {In that he saith} (\en t"i legein\). Locative case of the articular present active infinitive of \leg"\", "in the saying as to him." {He hath made the first old} (\pepalai"ken t^ n pr"t^ n\). Perfect active indicative of \palaio"\", old verb from \palaaios\ (in contrast with \kainos\, fresh, new), to treat as old and out of date. The conclusion is to the point. {That which is becoming old and waxeth aged} (\to palaiousmenon kai g^ raskon\). \G^ rask"\" is old verb from \g^ ras\ (age) like \ger"n\ (old man) and refers to the decay of old age so that both ideas appear here in opposition to \kainos\ (\palaaios\) and \neos\ (\geraios\). {Is nigh unto vanishing away} (\eggus aphanismou\). Genitive case with \eggus\ and late word for disappearance (from \aphaniz"\", Mt 6:19), here only in the N.T. The author writes as if the Old Testament legal and ceremonial system were about to vanish before the new covenant of grace. If he wrote after A.D. 70, would he not have written "has vanished away"?

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

9:1 {Even the first covenant} (\kai h[^] pr[“]t[^]\). \Kai\ (even) is doubtful. No word for covenant with \pr[“]te\ (cf. 8:7). {Had} (\eiche\). Imperfect active, used to have. {Ordinances} (\dikai[“]mata\). Regulations (from \dikaio[“]\) as in Lu 1:6; Ro 5:16. {Of divine service} (\latreias\). No word for "divine," though worship is meant as in Ro 9:4; Php 3:3. Genitive case. {And its sanctuary, a sanctuary of this world} (\to te hagion kosmikon\). By \to hagion\ the author describes the whole sanctuary (Ex 36:3; Nu 3:38) like \t[“]n hagi[“]n\ in 8:2. \Kosmikon\ is a late adjective (Aristotle, Plutarch) from \kosmos\, relating to this world, like \epi g[^]s\ (upon earth) of 8:4. It is in the predicate position, not attributive.

9:2 {A tabernacle the first} (\sk[^]n[^] h[^] pr[“]t[^]\). See 8:2 for \sk[^]n[^]\. Large tents usually had two divisions (the outer and the inner or the first and the second). Note \pr[“]t[^]\ for the first of two as with the first covenant (8:7,13; 9:1). The large outer tent was entered first and was called \Hagia\ (Holy), the first division of the tabernacle. The two divisions are here termed two tabernacles. {Was prepared} (\kateskeuasth[^]\). First aorist passive of \kataskeuaz[“]\. See 3:3. For the furniture see Ex 25; 26. Three items are named here: the candlestick (\h[^] luchnia\, late word for \luchnion\) or lampstand, necessary since there were no windows (Ex 25:31-39); the table (\h[^] trapeza\, old word, Mt 15:27) for the bread (Ex 25:23-30; Le 24:6 of pure gold); the shewbread (\h[^] prothesis t[“]n art[“]n\) as in Ex 25:30; 40:23; Le 24:5-9. Probably a hendiadys for the table with the loaves of God's Presence.

9:3 {After the second veil} (\meta to deuteron katapetasma\). The first veil opened from outside into the Holy Place, the second veil opened from the Holy Place into the Holy of Holies (\Hagia Hagi[“]n\). The word \katapetasma\ is from \katapetannumi\, to spread down, and we have already had it in 6:19. Cf. also Mt 27:51.

9:4 {Having a golden censer} (\chrousoun echousa thumiat[^]rion\). The present active participle \echousa\ (feminine singular) agrees with \sk^n^ (the Holy of Holies). It is not certain whether \thumiat^rion\ here means censer or altar of incense. In the LXX (2Ch 26:19; Ex 8:11; IV Macc. 7:11) it means censer and apparently so in the inscriptions and papyri. But in Philo and Josephus it means altar of incense for which the LXX has \thusiast^rion tou thumiatos\ (Ex 30:1-10). Apparently the altar of incense was in the Holy Place, though in Ex 30:1-10 it is left quite vague. B puts it in verse 2. So we leave the discrepancy unsettled. At any rate the altar of incense was used for the Holy of Holies ("its ritual associations," Dods). {The ark of the covenant} (\t^n kib^ton t^s diath^k^s\). A box or chest four feet long, two and a half broad and high (Ex 25:10f.). The Scotch have a "meal-ark." {Wherein} (\en h^i\). In the ark. There were three treasures in the ark of the covenant (a pot of manna, Aaron's rod, the tables of the covenant). For the pot of manna (golden added in the LXX) see Ex 16:32-34. For Aaron's rod that budded (\h^blast^sasa\, first aorist active participle of blastan^\) see Nu 17:1-11. For the tables of the covenant see Ex 25:16f.; 31:18; De 9:9; 10:5. Not definitely clear about these items in the ark, but on front, except that 1Ki 8:9 states that it did contain the tables of the covenant. For \plakes\ (tables) see 2Co 3:3 (only other N.T. example).

9:5 {Above it} (\huperan^ aut^s\). Up above, in local sense as in Eph 4:10, with ablative case \aut^s\ (it, the ark). {Cherubim of glory} (\Cheroubein dox^s\). Hebrew word (dual form), two in number, made of gold (Ex 25:18-22). They are called \z^a\ (living creatures) in the LXX (Isa 6:2f.; Eze 1:5-10; 10:5-20). {Overshadowing} (\kataskiazonta\). Present active participle of \kataskiaz^, old verb to shadow down on, cover with shade, only here in the N.T. {The mercy seat} (\to hilast^rion\). The pinions of the Cherubim spread over the rectangular gold slab on top of the ark termed the mercy seat. Here the adjective \hilast^rios\ has to mean mercy seat, the place, not the propitiatory gift or propitiation, as in Ro 3:25 (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 124-35). {Severally} (\kata meros\). In detail, distributive use of \kata\ with \meros\ (part).

9:6 {These things having been thus prepared} (\tout^ n hout^s kateskeuasmen^ n\). Genitive absolute with the perfect passive participle of \kataskeuaz^ for which verb see verse 2. A mere summary has been made of the furniture. {Go in} (\eisiasin\). Present active indicative of \eiseimi\, to go in, old verb, in N.T. only here, Ac 3:3; 21:18,26. {Accomplishing} (\epitelountes). Present active participle of \epitele“ for which see 8:5.

9:7 {Alone} (\monos). Predicate adjective with \ho archiereus. {Once in the year} (\hapax tou eniautou). Once for each year (not \pote\, at any time) with genitive of time. {Not without blood} (\ou ch“ris haimatos). According to Le 16:14f. Not even he could enter the second tent (Holy of Holies) without blood. {The errors of the people} (\t“n tou laou agno^mat“n). Late word from \agnoe“, not to know (5:2), only here in the N.T., but in LXX, papyri, and inscriptions where a distinction is drawn between errors (\agno^mata) and crimes (\harmart^mata). In Ge 43:12 \agno^ma is "an oversight." But these sins of ignorance (\agno^mata) were sins and called for atonement. See Heb 10:26 for wilful sinning.

9:8 {The Holy Ghost this signifying} (\touto d^lountos tou pneumatos tou hagiou). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \d^lo“, to make plain. Used as in 12:27. {The way into the Holy place} (\t^n t“n hagi“n hodon). Here as in verses 12,25 \t“n hagi“n is used for the very Presence of God as in 8:2 and is in the objective genitive. \Hodon is the accusative of general reference with the infinitive. {Hath not yet been made manifest} (\m^p“ pephaner“sthai). Perfect passive infinitive of \phanero“, to make plain (\phaneros) in indirect discourse after \d^lountos with negative \m^p“. {While as the first tabernacle is yet standing} (\eti t^s pr“t^s sk^h^s echous^s stasin). Another genitive absolute with present active participle of \ech“ (having standing \stasin), "the first tabernacle still having a place." The veil at the entrance kept the people out of the first tent as the second veil (verse 3) kept the priests out of the Holy of Holies (the very Presence of God).

9:9 {Which} (\h^tis). "Which very thing," the first tent (\t^s pr“t^s sk^h^s\, division of the tabernacle), a parenthesis and explanation. {A parable} (\parabol^). Only in the Synoptic Gospels in the N.T. and Heb 9:9; 11:19. See on ^Mt 13:3 for the word (from \paraball“\, to place alongside). Here like \tupos (type or shadow of "the heavenly reality," Moffatt). {For the time now present} (\eis ton kairon ton enest^kota). "For the present crisis " (\kairon\, not \ai“na\, age, not \chronon\, time). Perfect active articular (repeated article) participle of \enist^{mi}\ (intransitive), the age in which they lived, not the past, not the future. See 1Co 3:22; Ro 8:38 for contrast between \enest^{ta}\ and \mellonta\. This age of crisis, foreshadowed by the old tabernacle, pointed on to the richer fulfilment still to come. {According to which} (\kath' hⁿ\). Here the relative refers to \parabol[^]\ just mentioned, not to \skⁿs\. See 5:1; 8:3. {As touching the conscience} (\kata suneid^{sin}\). For \suneid^{sis}\ see 1Co 8:10; 10:17; Ro 2:15. This was the real failure of animal sacrifice (10:1-4). {Make the worshipper perfect} (\telei^{sai ton latreuonta}\). First aorist active infinitive (2:10). At best it was only ritual or ceremonial purification (7:11), that called for endless repetition (10:1-4).

9:10 {Only with meats and drinks and divers washings} (\monon epi br^{masin kai pomasin kai diaphorois baptismois}\). The parenthesis of the Revised Version here is unnecessary. The use of \epi\ here with the locative case is regular, "in the matter of" (Lu 12:52; Joh 12:16; Ac 21:24). What ritual value these Levitical sacrifices had was confined to minute regulations about diet and ceremonial cleansing (clean and unclean). For "divers" (\diaphorois\, late adjective, in N.T. only in Heb 1:4; 8:6; 9:10; Ro 12:6) say "different" or "various." \Baptismois\ is, of course, the Jewish ceremonial immersions (cf. Mr 7:4; Ex 29:4; Le 11:25,28f.; Nu 8:7; Re 6:2). {Carnal ordinances} (\dikai^{masin sarkos}\). But the correct text is undoubtedly simply \dikai^{mata sarkos}\ (nominative case), in apposition with \d^{ra te kai thusiai}\ (gifts and sacrifices). See 9:1 for \dikai^{mata}\. {Imposed} (\epikeimena\). Present middle or passive participle of \epikeimai\, old verb to lie upon (be laid upon). Cf. 1Co 9:16. {Until a time of reformation} (\mechri kairou diorth^{se}s\). Definite statement of the temporary nature of the Levitical system already stated in 7:10-17; 8:13 and argued clearly by Paul in Ga 3:15-22. \Diorth^{sis}\ is a late word, here alone in N.T. (from \diortho[^]\, to set right or straight), used by Hippocrates for making straight misshapen limbs like \anortho[^]\ in Heb 12:12. Here for reformation like \diorth^{ma}\ (reform) in Ac 24:2f. Christianity itself is the great Reformation of the current Judaism (Pharisaism) and the spiritual Judaism foreshadowed by the old Abrahamic promise (see Ga 3; Ro 9).

9:11 {Having come} (\paragenomenos\). Second aorist middle participle of \paraginomai\. This is the great historic event that is the crux of history. "Christ came on the scene, and all was changed" (Moffatt). {Of the good things to come} (\t“n mellont“n agath“n\). But B D read \genomen“n\ (that are come). It is a nice question which is the true text. Both aspects are true, for Christ is High Priest of good things that have already come as well as of the glorious future of hope. Westcott prefers \genomen“n\, Moffatt \mellont“n\.

{Through the greater and more perfect tabernacle} (\dia t’s meizonos kai teleioteris sk^h^s\). Probably the instrumental use of \dia\ (2Co 2:4; Ro 2:27; 14:20) as accompaniment, not the local idea (4:14; 10:20). Christ as High Priest employed in his work the heavenly tabernacle (8:2) after which the earthly was patterned (9:24). {Not made with hands} (\ou cheiropoi^tou\). Old compound verbal for which see Mr 14:58; Ac 7:48; 17:24. Cf. Heb 8:2. Here in the predicate position. {Not of this creation} (\ou taut^s t^s ktise“s\). Explanation of \ou chieropoi^tou\.

For \ktisis\ see 2Co 5:17; Ro 8:19. For the idea see 2Co 4:18; Heb 8:2. This greater and more perfect tabernacle is heaven itself (9:24).

9:12 {Through his own blood} (\dia tou idiou haimatos\). This is the great distinction between Christ as High Priest and all other high priests. They offer blood (verse 7), but he offered his own blood. He is both victim and High Priest. See the same phrase in 13:12; Ac 20:28. {Once for all} (\ephapax\). In contrast to the repeated (annual) entrances of the Levitical high priests (9:7). {Into the holy place} (\eis ta hagia\). Here, as in verses 8,24 heaven itself. {Having obtained} (\heuramenos\). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of \heurisk“\, simultaneous action with \eis^lthen\, and by or of himself "as the issue of personal labour directed to this end" (Westcott). The value of Christ's offering consists in the fact that he is the Son of God as well as the Son of man, that he is sinless and so a perfect sacrifice with no need of an offering for himself, and that it is voluntary on his part (Joh 10:17). \Lutr“sis\ (from \lutro“) is a late word for the act of ransoming (cf. \lutron\, ransom), in O.T. only here and Lu 1:68; 2:38. But \apolutr“sis\ elsewhere (as in Lu 21:28; Ro 3:24; Heb 9:15; 11:35). For "eternal" (\ai“nian\, here feminine form) see 6:2. The author now turns to discuss the better sacrifice (9:13-10:18) already introduced.

9:13 {Ashes} (\spodos\). Old word, in N. T. only here, Mt 11:21; Lu 10:13. Common in LXX. {Of a heifer} (\damale“s\). Old word (\damalis\), a red heifer whose ashes mingled with water (\meta hudatos\, verse 19) were sprinkled (\rantizousa\, present active participle of rantiz“\, in LXX, though rain“\ more common) on the contaminated or defiled ones (Nu 19) as the blood of bulls and goats was offered for sins (Le 16).

{Sanctify} (\hagiazai\). First-class condition, assumed as true. This ceremonial ritual does serve "for the cleansing (\katharot^ta\, old word here only in N.T.) of the flesh," but not for the conscience (verse 9). The cow was \am“mon\, the individual \katharos\.

9:14 {How much more} (\pos“i mallon\). Instrumental case, "by how much more," by the measure of the superiority of Christ's blood to that of goats and bulls and the ashes of a heifer. {Through the eternal Spirit} (\dia pneumatou ai“niou\). Not the Holy Spirit, but Christ's own spirit which is eternal as he is. There is thus a moral quality in the blood of Christ not in that of other sacrifices. {Offered himself} (\heautou pros^negken\). Second aorist active indicative of \prospher“\ (used so often as in 5:1,3; 8:3). The voluntary character of Christ's death is again emphasized. {Without blemish} (\am“mon\). Old compound adjective (Col 1:22; 1Pe 1:19) as the sacrifice had to be (Ex 29:1; Le 1:3,10). {Shall cleanse from conscience} (\katharizei t^h suneid^sin hum“n\). Future active indicative of \kathariz“\.

Some MSS. have \h^m“n\ (our). The old Greek used \kathair“\, not \kathariz“\ (in inscriptions for ceremonial cleansing, Deissmann, Bible Studies, pp. 216f.), for cleansing. {From dead works} (\apo nekr“n erg“n\). As in 6:1. "A pause might be made before \erg“n\, from dead--(not bodies but) works."

9:15 {Mediator of a new covenant} (\diath^k^s kain^s mesit^s\). See 8:6 for this phrase with \kreittonos\ instead of \kain^s\.

{A death having taken place} (\thanatou genomenou\). Genitive absolute, referring to Christ's death. {For the redemption} (\eis apolutr“sin\). {Of the transgressions} (\t“n parabase“n\). Really ablative case, "from the transgressions." See verse 12, \lutr“sin\.

{Under the first covenant} (\epi t^i pr“t^i diath^k^i\). Here there is a definite statement that the real value in the typical sacrifices under the Old Testament system was in the realization in the death of Christ. It is Christ's death that gives worth to the types that pointed to him. So then the atoning sacrifice of Christ is the basis of the salvation of all who are saved before the Cross and since. {That they may receive} (\hop“s lab“sin\). Purpose clause (God's purpose in the rites and symbols) with \hop“s\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban“\.

9:16 {A testament} (\diath^k^). The same word occurs for covenant (verse 15) and will (verse 16). This double sense of the word is played upon also by Paul in Ga 3:15f. We say today "The New Testament" (_*Novum Testamentum*_) rather than " The New Covenant." Both terms are pertinent. {That made it} (\tou diathemenou\). Genitive of the articular second aorist middle participle of \diatith^mi\ from which \diath^k^ comes. The notion of will here falls in with \kl^ronomia\ (inheritance, 1Pe 1:4) as well as with \thanatos\ (death). {Of force} (\bebaia\). Stable, firm as in 3:6,14. {Where there hath been death} (\epi nekrois\). "In the case of dead people." A will is only operative then. {For doth it ever avail while he that made it liveth?} (\epeí m^ pote ischuei hote z^i ho diathemenos;\). This is a possible punctuation with \m^ pote\ in a question (Joh 7:26). Without the question mark, it is a positive statement of fact. Aleph and D read \tote\ (then) instead of \pote\ . The use of \m^ in a causal sentence is allowable (Joh 3:18, hoti m^).

9:18 {The first covenant} (\h^ pr“t^). Supply \diath^k^ as in 9:1. {Has been dedicated} (\enkekainistai\). Stands dedicated. Perfect passive indicative of \enkainizo\, a late verb in LXX, one papyrus, and in N.T. only here and 10:20. It means to renew, to inaugurate (1Sa 11:14; 2Ch 15:8) and in 1Ki 8:63 to dedicate. Note \ta enkainia\ (Joh 10:22) for the feast of dedication.

9:19 {When every commandment had been spoken} (\lal^theis^s\). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle feminine singular of \lale“\ . The author uses the account in Ex 24:3f. "with characteristic freedom" (Moffatt). There is nothing there about the water, the scarlet wool (\erion\, diminutive of \eros, eiros\, old word, here and in Re 1:14; for \kokkinos\ see on Mt 27:6,28), and hyssop (\huss“pou\, a plant mentioned in Joh 19:29). It had become the custom to mingle water with the blood and to use a wisp of wool or a stem of hyssop for sprinkling (Nu 10:2-10). {Both the book itself} (\auto te to biblion\). There is nothing in Exodus about sprinkling the book of the covenant, though it may very well have been done. He omits the use of oil in Ex 40:9f.; Le 8:10f. and applies blood to all the details.

{Sprinkled} (\erantisen\). First aorist active indicative from \rantiz“\ (from \rantos\ and this from \rain“), like \baptiz“\ from \bapt“\. Cf. Mr 7:4; Heb 10:22; Re 19:13.

9:20 {This is} (\touto\). Instead of \idou\ of the LXX (Ex 24:8), just like our Lord's words in Mr 14:24, a possible reminiscence of the Master's words (Dods). The author also has \eneteilato\ (he commanded) for \dietheto\ of the LXX.

9:21 {In like manner with the blood} (\t“i haimati homoi“s\).
Instrumental case of \haima\ (blood). But the use of the article does not necessarily refer to the blood mentioned in verse 19.
In Ex 40:9 Moses sprinkled the tabernacle with oil. It had not been erected at the time of Ex 24:5f. Josephus (Ant. III. 8, 6) gives a tradition that blood was used also at this dedication.
Blood was used annually in the cleansing rites on the day of atonement.

9:22 {I may almost say} (\schedon\). Old adverb, only three times in the N.T., here, Ac 13:44; 19:26. Here it qualifies the entire clause, not just \panta\. {With blood} (\en haimati\). In blood. There were exceptions (Ex 19:10; 32:30f.; Le 5:11f.; 15:5; Nu 16:46f.; 31:23f., etc.). {Apart from shedding of blood}
(\ch“ris haimatekchusias\). A double compound first found here (coined by the writer) and later in ecclesiastical writers (\haima\, blood, \ek\, out, \che“\, to pour, like \ekchusis haimatos | 1Ki 18:28). "Pouring out of blood." The author seems to have in mind Christ's words in Mt 26:28: "This is my blood of the covenant which is shed for many for the forgiveness of sins." The blood is the vital principle and is efficacious as an atonement. The blood of Christ sets aside all other plans for pardon.

9:23 {The copies} (\ta hupodeigmata\). See 8:5 for this word, the earthly (8:4; 9:1) tabernacle. {With these} (\toutois\).
Instrumental case of \houtos\, like the rites above described (verse 19), perhaps with some disparagement. {Themselves} (\auta\). The heavenly realities (8:2,5; 9:11f.). {With better sacrifices} (\kreittosin thusiais\). Instrumental case again.
Point of this section (9:13-10:18). {Than these} (\para tautas\). Use of \para\ and the accusative case after a comparative as in 1:4,9. To us it seems a bit strained to speak of the ritual cleansing or dedication of heaven itself by the appearance of Christ as Priest-Victim. But the whole picture is highly mystical.

9:24 {Made with hands} (\cheiropoi^{ta}\). See verse 11 for this word. {Like in pattern to the true} (\antitupa tⁿ al^{thin}“n\). Late compound word, only twice in N.T. (here, 1Pe 3:21). Polybius uses \antitupos\ for infantry "opposite" to the cavalry. In modern Greek it means a copy of a book. Here it is the "counterpart of reality" (Moffatt). Moses was shown a \tupos\ (model) of the heavenly realities and he made an \antitupon\ on that model, "answering to the type" (Dods) or model. In 1Pe 3:21 \antitupos\ has the converse sense, "the reality of baptism which corresponds to or is the antitype of the deluge" (Dods). {Now to appear} (\nun emphanisth^{nai}\). Purpose clause by the first aorist passive infinitive of \emphaniz“\ (Mt 27:53; Joh 14:21f.). For the phrase see Ps 42:3. For this work of Christ as our High Priest and Paraclete in heaven see Heb 7:25; Ro 8:34; 1Jo 2:1f.

9:25 {That he should offer himself often} (\hina pollakis prosperⁱ heauton\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \prospher“\ (keep on offering himself, like 5:1,3). {With blood not his own} (\en haimati allotri“i\). So-called instrumental use of \en\ (accompaniment). \allotrios\ means "belonging to another," "not one's own" (Lu 16:12).

9:26 {Else must he often have suffered} (\epei edei auton pollakis pathein\). A common elliptical use of \epei\ after which one must supply "if that were true" or "in that case," a protasis of a condition of the second class assumed to be untrue. The conclusion with \edei\ is without \an\ (verbs of necessity, obligation, etc.). See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 963. The conclusion with \an\ occurs in 10:2. See also 1Co 5:10. "Since, if that were true, it would be necessary for him to suffer often." {Since the foundation of the world} (\apo katabol^s kosmou\). See 4:3 for this phrase. The one sacrifice of Christ is of absolute and final value (1Pe 1:19f.; Re 13:8). {At the end} (\epi sunteleifi\). Consummation or completion as in Mt 13:39f. which see. {Hath he been manifested} (\pephaner“tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \phanero“\, permanent state. See "the primitive hymn or confession of faith" (Moffatt) in 1Ti 3:16 and also 1Pe 1:20. Jesus came once for all (Heb 1:2). {To put away sin} (\eis athet^{sin} t^s hamartias\). See 7:18 for the word \athet^{sis}\. "The sacrifice of Christ dealt with sin as a principle: the Levitical sacrifices with individual transgressions" (Vincent).

9:27 {It is appointed} (\apokeitai\). Present middle (or passive) of \apokeimai\, "is laid away" for men. Cf. same verb in Lu 19:20; Col 1:5; 2Ti 4:8 (Paul's crown). {Once to die} (\hapax apothanein\). Once for all to die, as once for all to live here. No reincarnation here. {After this cometh judgement} (\meta touto krisis\). Death is not all. Man has to meet Christ as Judge as Jesus himself graphically pictures (Mt 25:31-46; Joh 5:25-29).

9:28 {Once} (\hapax\). "Once for all" (verse 26) as already stated. {Shall appear a second time} (\ek deuterou ophth^setai\). Future passive indicative of \hora^\. Blessed assurance of the Second Coming of Christ, but this time "apart from sin" (\ch^ris hamartias\, no notion of a second chance then). {Unto salvation} (\eis s^t^rian\). Final and complete salvation for "them that wait for him" (\tois auton apekdechomenois\). Dative plural of the articular participle present middle of \apekdechomai\, the very verb used by Paul in Php 3:20 of waiting for the coming of Christ as Saviour.

10:1 {Shadow} (\skian\). The contrast here between \skia\ (shadow, shade caused by interruption of light as by trees, Mr 4:32) and \eik“n\ (image or picture) is striking. Christ is the \eik“n\ of God (2Co 4:4; Col 1:15). In Col 2:17 Paul draws a distinction between \skia\ for the Jewish rites and ceremonies and \s“ma\ for the reality in Christ. Children are fond of shadow pictures. The law gives only a dim outline of the good things to come (9:11). {Continually} (\eis to di^nekes\). See this phrase also in 7:3; 9:12,14. Nowhere else in N.T. From \di^negka\ (\diapher“\), to bear through. {They can} (\dunantai\). This reading leaves \ho nomos\ a _nominativus pendens_ (an anacoluthon). But many MSS. read \dunatai\ (it--the law--can). For the idea and use of \telei“sai\ see 9:9.

10:2 {Else they would not have ceased?} (\epeí ouk an epausanto;\). Ellipsis of condition after \epeí\ (since if they really did perfect) with the conclusion of the second-class condition (\an\ and the aorist middle indicative of \pauomai). {To be offered} (\prospheromenai\). Regular idiom, participle (present passive) with \pauomai\ (Ac 5:42). {Because} (\dia to\). \Dia\ with the accusative of the articular infinitive, "because of the having" (\echein\) as to the worshippers (\tous latreuontas\, accusative of general reference of the articular participle), not "would have had." {No more conscience of sins} (\m^demian eti suneid^sin hamarti“n\). Rather "consciousness of sins" as in 9:14. {Having been once cleansed} (\hapax kekatharismenous\). Perfect passive participle of \kathariz“\, "if they had once for all been cleansed."

10:3 {A remembrance} (\anamn^sis\). A reminder. Old word from \anamimn^sk“\, to remind, as in Lu 22:19; 1Co 11:24f.

10:4 {Should take away} (\aphairein\). Present active infinitive of \aphaire“\. Old verb and common in N.T., only here and Ro 11:27 with "sins". Cf. 9:9.

10:5 {When he cometh into the world} (\eiserchomenos eis ton kosmon\). Reference to the Incarnation of Christ who is represented as quoting Ps 40:7-9 which is quoted. The text of the LXX is followed in the main which differs from the Hebrew chiefly in having \s“ma\ (body) rather than \“tia\ (ears). The LXX translation has not altered the sense of the Psalm, "that there was a sacrifice which answered to the will of God as no animal sacrifice could" (Moffatt). So the writer of Hebrews "argues that the Son's offering of himself is the true and final offering for sin, because it is the sacrifice, which, according to prophecy, God desired to be made" (Davidson). {A body didst thou prepare for me} (\s“ma kat^{rtis}“ moi\). First aorist middle indicative second person singular of \katartiz“\, to make ready, equip. Using \s“ma\ (body) for \“tia\ (ears) does not change the sense, for the ears were the point of contact with God's will.

10:6 {Thou hadst no pleasure} (\ouk eudok^{sas}\). First aorist active indicative of \eudoke“\, common for God's good pleasure (Mt 3:17). God took no pleasure in the animal offering (\thusian\), the meal-offering (\prosphoran\), the burnt-offering (\holokaut“mata\), the sin-offering (\peri hamartias\, concerning sin).

10:7 {Then} (\tote\). When it was plain that God could not be propitiated by such sacrifices. {Lo, I am come} (\Idou h^k“\). The Messiah is represented as offering himself to do God's will (\tou poi^{sai} to the^{ma} sou\, the genitive articular infinitive of purpose). {In the roll of the book it is written of me} (\en kephalidi bibliou gegraptai peri emou\). Stands written (\gegraptai\, perfect passive indicative). \Kephalis\ is a diminutive of \kephal^h\ (head), a little head, then roll only here in N.T., but in the papyri. Here it refers "to the O.T. as a prediction of Christ's higher sacrifice" (Moffatt).

10:8 {Saying above} (\an“teron leg“n\). Christ speaking as in verse 5. "Higher up" (\an“teron\, comparative of \an“\, up) refers to verses 5,6 which are quoted again.

10:9 {The which} (\haitines\). "Which very things" (\thusiai\). {Then hath he said} (\tote eir^{ken}\). That is Christ. Perfect active indicative with which compare \tote eipon\ (second aorist active) in verse 7 which is quoted again. {He taketh away the first} (\anairei to pr“ton\). Present active indicative of \anaire“\, to take up, to abolish, of a man to kill (Mt 2:16). By "the first" (\to pr“ton\) he means the system of animal sacrifices in verse 8. {That he may establish the second}

(\hina to deuteron st's i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active (transitive) subjunctive of \hist^mi\, to place. By "the second" (\to deuteron\) he means doing God's will as shown in verse 9 (following verse 8). This is the author's exegesis of the Psalm.

10:10 {We have been sanctified} (\h^giasmenoi esmen\). Periphrastic perfect passive indicative of \hagiaz^, to set apart, to sanctify. The divine will, unfulfilled in animal sacrifices, is realized in Christ's offering of himself. "He came to be a great High Priest, and the body was prepared for him, that by the offering of it he might put sinful men for ever into the perfect religious relation to God" (Denney, _The Death of Christ_, p. 234).

10:11 {Standeth} (\hest^ken\). Perfect active indicative of \hist^mi\ (intransitive), vivid picture. {Ministering and offering} (\leitourg^"n kai prosper^"n\). Present active participles graphically describing the priest. {Take away} (\perielein\). Second aorist active infinitive of \periaire^, old verb to take from around, to remove utterly as in Ac 27:20.

10:12 {When he had offered} (\prosenegkas\). Second aorist active participle (with first aorist ending -as\ in place of -on) of \prospher^, single act in contrast to present participle \prospher^"n\ above. {One sacrifice} (\mian thusian\). This the main point. The one sacrifice does the work that the many failed to do. One wonders how priests who claim that the "mass" is the sacrifice of Christ's body repeated explain this verse. {For ever} (\eis to di^nekes\). Can be construed either with \mian thusian\ or with \ekathisen\ (sat down). See 1:3 for \ekathisen\.

10:13 {Henceforth expecting} (\to loipon ekdechomenos\). "For the rest" or "for the future" (\to loipon\, accusative of extent of time). The expectant attitude of Christ here is that of final and certain victory (Joh 16:33; 1Co 15:24-28). {Till his enemies be made} (\he^"s teth^"sin hoi echthroi autou\). Purpose and temporal clause with \he^"s\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \tith^mi\. He quotes Ps 110:1 again.

10:14 {He hath perfected} (\tetelei^"ken\). Perfect active indicative of \teleio^, He has done what the old sacrifices failed to do (verse 1). {Them that are sanctified} (\tous hagiazomenous\). Articular participle (accusative case) present passive of \hagiaz“\ (note perfect in verse 10) either because of the process still going on or because of the repetition in so many persons as in 2:11.

10:15 {And the Holy Ghost also beareth witness to us} (\marturei de h^min kai to pneuma to hagion\). \Marture“\ is common in Philo for Scripture quotation. The author confirms his interpretation of Ps 40:7-9 by repeating from Jeremiah (Jer 31:31ff.) what he had already quoted (8:8-12). {After he hath said} (\meta to eir^kenai\). Accusative case after \meta\ of the articular infinitive perfect active, "after the having said."

10:16 {With them} (\pros autous\). The author changes \t“i oik“i Israel\ (8:10) thus without altering the sense. He also changes the order of "heart" (\kardias\) and "mind" (\dianoian\) from that in 8:10.

10:17 Here again the writer adds "their iniquities" (\t“n anomi“n\) to "sins" of 8:12 and reads \mn^sth^somai\ (first future passive) with \ou m^ rather than \mn^sth“\ (first aorist passive subjunctive) of 8:12 (the more common idiom). It is uncertain also whether the writer means verse 17 to be the principal clause with 15,16 as subordinate or the whole quotation to be subordinate to \meta to eir^kenai\ of verse 15 with anacoluthon in verse 18. At any rate verse 17 in the quotation does not follow immediately after verse 16 as one can see in 8:10-12 (skipping part of 8:10 and all of 8:11).

10:18 {There is no more offering for sin} (\ouketi prosphora peri hamartias\). This is the logical and triumphant conclusion concerning the better sacrifice offered by Christ (9:13-10:18). As Jeremiah had prophesied, there is actually remission (\aphesis\, removal) of sins. Repetition of the sacrifice is needless.

10:19 {Having therefore} (\echontes oun\). The author now gives a second (the first in 8:1-6) resum, of the five arguments concerning the superior priestly work of Christ (10:19-25) coupled with an earnest exhortation like that in 4:14-16, with which he began the discussion, before he proceeds to treat at length the fifth and last one, the better promises in Christ (10:26-12:3). {Boldness} (\parr^sian\). This is the dominant note all through the Epistle (3:6; 4:16; 10:19,35). They were tempted to give up Christ, to be quitters. Boldness (courage) is the need of the hour. {Into the holy place} (\t“n hagi“n\). That is, the heavenly sanctuary where Jesus is (6:18-20). This is the better sanctuary (9:1-12). {By the blood of Jesus} (\en t“i haimati I’sou\). This is the better sacrifice just discussed (9:13-10:18).

10:20 {By the way which he dedicated for us} (\h[^]n enekainisen h[^]min hodon\). This "new" (\prosphaton\, freshly killed, newly made, from \pros\ and the root of \phatos\, in the papyri, only here in N.T.) and "living" (\z“san\) Jesus opened ("dedicated") for us by his Incarnation and Death for us. Thus he fulfilled God's promise of the "New Covenant" (8:7-13) in Jeremiah. The language is highly symbolic here and "through the veil" here is explained as meaning the flesh of Christ, his humanity, not the veil opening into heaven (6:20). Some do take "veil" here as obscuring the deity of Christ rather than the revelation of God in the human body of Christ (Joh 1:18; 14:9). At any rate because of the coming of Christ in the flesh we have the new way opened for access to God (Heb 2:17f.; 4:16).

10:21 {A great priest} (\hierea megan\). As has been shown in 4:14-7:28. {Over the house of God} (\epi ton oikon tou theou\). As God's Son (3:5f.).

10:22 {Let us draw near} (\proserch“metha\). Present middle volitive subjunctive as in 4:16 with which exhortation the discussion began. There are three exhortations in verses 22:25 (Let us draw near, \proserch“metha\, let us hold fast, \katech“men\, let us consider one another, \katano“men all’lous\). Four items are added to this first exhortation. {With a true heart} (\meta al[^]thin[^]s kardias\). With loyalty and fealty. {In fulness of faith} (\en pl[^]rophorifi piste“s\). See 6:11 for this very phrase. {Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience} (\rerantismenoi tas kardias apo suneid[^]se“s pon[^]ras\). Perfect passive participle of \rantiz“\ with the accusative retained in the passive, an evident allusion to the sprinkling of blood in the old tabernacle (9:18-22) and the shedding of Christ's blood for the cleansing of our consciences (10:1-4). Cf. 1Pe 1:2 for "the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." {Our body washed with pure water} (\lelousmenoi to s“ma hudati kathar“i\). Perfect passive (or middle) of \lou“\, old verb to bathe, to wash. Accusative also retained if passive. \Hudati\ can be either locative (in) or instrumental (with). See

Eph 5:26; Tit 3:5 for the use of \loutron\. If the reference here is to baptism (quite doubtful), the meaning is a symbol (Dods) of the previous cleansing by the blood of Christ.

10:23 {Let us hold fast} (\katech“men\). Present (keep on holding fast) active volitive subjunctive of \katech“\ as in 3:6,14. {That it waver not} (\aklin^). Common compound adjective (alpha privative and \klin“\, unwavering, not leaning, here only in N.T. It is a confession of hope, not of despair). {That promised} (\ho epaggeilamenos\). First aorist middle articular participle of \epaggell“\ . This is the argument remaining to be discussed (10:26-12:3) and already alluded to (6:13f.; 8:6). The ministry of Jesus rests upon "better promises." How better? God is "faithful," but he made the other promises also. We shall see.

10:24 {Let us consider one another} (\katano“men all^lous\). Present (keep on doing so) active volitive subjunctive of \katanoe“\ . The verb used about Jesus in 3:1. {To provoke} (\eis paroxusmon\). Our very word "paroxysm," from \paroxun“\ (\para, oxun“\ from \oxus\, sharp), to sharpen, to stimulate, to incite. So here in good sense (for incitement to), but in Ac 15:39 the word is used of irritation or contention as in the LXX and Demosthenes. Hippocrates uses it for "paroxysm" in disease (so in the papyri). {Unto love and good works} (\agap^s kai kal“n erg“n\). Objective genitive. So Paul seeks to stir up the Corinthians by the example of the Macedonians (2Co 8:1-7).

10:25 {Not forsaking} (\m^ egkataleipontes\). "Not leaving behind, not leaving in the lurch" (2Ti 4:10). {The assembling of yourselves together} (t^n episunag“g^n heaut“n\). Late double compound from \episunag“\, to gather together (\sun\) besides (\epi\) as in Mt 23:37; Lu 17:27. In N.T. only here and 2Th 2:1. In an inscription 100 B.C. for collection of money (Deissmann, Light, etc., p. 103). {As the custom of some is} (\kath“s ethos tisin\). "As is custom to some." For \ethos\ (custom) see Lu 22:39; Joh 19:40. Already some Christians had formed the habit of not attending public worship, a perilous habit then and now. {So much the more as} (\tosout“i mallon hos“i\). Instrumental case of measure or degree, "by so much the more as," both with \tosout“i\ and \hos“i\ . {The day drawing nigh} (\eggizousan t^n h^meran\). The Second Coming of Christ which draws nearer all the time (Ro 13:12).

10:26 {If we sin wilfully} (\hekousi“s hamartanont“n h^m“n\).

Genitive absolute with the present active participle of \hamartan“\, circumstantial participle here in a conditional sense. {After that we have received} (\meta to labein\). "After the receiving" (accusative case of the articular infinitive second aorist active of \lamban“\ after \meta). {Knowledge} (\epign“sin\). "Full knowledge," as in 6:4f. {There remaineth no more} (\ouketi apoleipetai\). "No longer is there left behind" (present passive indicative as in 4:9), for one has renounced the one and only sacrifice for sin that does or can remove sin (10:1-18).

10:27 {Expectation} (\ekdoch^)\. Usually reception or interpretation from \ekdechomai\ (Heb 11:10), only here in N.T. and in unusual sense like \prosdokia\, like \apekdechomai\ (Ro 8:19,23,25), this sense apparently "coined by the writer" (Moffatt) from his use of \ekdechomai\ in 10:13. The papyri have it in the sense of interpretation. {A fierceness of fire} (\puros z^los\). An anger (zeal, jealousy) marked (genitive) by fire. Language kin to that in Isa 26:11; Zep 1:19; Ps 79:5. See also 2Th 1:8-10 for a like picture of destined doom. {Devour} (\esthiein\). "To eat" (figuratively), present active infinitive. {The adversaries} (\tous hupenantious\). Old double compound adjective (\hupo, en, antios\), in N.T. only here and Col 2:14. Those directly opposite.

10:28 {Hath set at naught} (\athet^sas\). First aorist active participle of \athete“\, late compound, very common in LXX, from alpha privative and \tith^mi\, to render null and void, to set aside, only here in Hebrews (see Mr 7:9), but note \athet^sis\ (Heb 7:18; 9:26). {Without mercy} (\ch“ris oiktirm“n\). See 2Co 1:3. This was the law (De 17:6) for apostates. {On the word of two or three} (\epi dusin ^ trisin\). "On the basis of two or three." For this use of \epi\ with the locative see 9:17.

10:29 {How much} (\pos“i\). Instrumental case of degree or measure. An argument from the less to the greater, "the first of Hillel's seven rules for exegesis" (Moffatt). {Think ye} (\dokeite\). An appeal to their own sense of justice about apostates from Christ. {Sorer} (\cheironos\). "Worse," comparative of \kakos\ (bad). {Punishment} (\tim“rias\). Genitive case with \axi“th^setai\ (first future passive of \axio“\, to deem worthy). The word \tim“ria\ originally meant vengeance. Old word, in LXX, only here in N.T. {Who hath trodden under foot the Son of God} (\ho ton huion tou theou katapat^sas\). First aorist active articular participle of \katapate^{\,}, old verb (Mt 5:13) for scornful neglect like Zec 12:3. See same idea in Heb 6:6. {Wherewith he was sanctified} (\en h^i h^giasth^{\,}). First aorist passive indicative of \hagiaz^{\,}. It is an unspeakable tragedy that should warn every follower of Christ not to play with treachery to Christ (cf. 6:4-8). {An unholy thing} (\koinon\). Common in the sense of uncleanness as Peter used it in Ac 10:14. Think of one who thus despises "the blood of Christ wherewith he was sanctified." And yet there are a few today who sneer at the blood of Christ and the gospel based on his atoning sacrifice as "a slaughter house" religion! {Hath done despite} (\enubrisas\). First aorist active participle of \enubriz^{\,}, old verb to treat with contumely, to give insult to, here only in the N.T. It is a powerful word for insulting the Holy Spirit after receiving his blessings (6:4).

10:30 {We know him that said} (\oidamen ton eiponta\). God lives and is true to his word. He quotes De 32:35 (cf. Ro 12:19). For \ekdik^sis\ see Lu 18:7f. God is the God of justice. He is patient, but he will punish. {And again} (\kai palin\). De 32:36.

10:31 {A fearful thing} (\phoberon\). Old adjective (from \phobe^{\,}, to frighten). In N.T. only in Heb. (10:27,31; 12:21). The sense is not to be explained away. The wrath of God faces wrongdoers. {To fall} (\to empesein\). "The falling" (articular infinitive second aorist active of \empipt^{\,}, to fall in, followed here by |eis|). We are not dealing with a dead or an absentee God, but one who is alive and alert (3:12).

10:32 {Call to remembrance} (\anamimn^skesthe\). Present middle imperative of \anamimn^sk^{\,}, as in 2Co 7:15 "remind yourselves." The former days were some distance in the past (5:12), some years at any rate. It is a definite experience of people in a certain place. Jerusalem Christians had had experiences of this nature, but so had others. {After ye were enlightened} (\ph^tisthentes\). First aorist passive participle of \ph^tiz^{\,} in the same sense as in 6:4 (regeneration) and like "the full knowledge of the truth" in 10:26. {Conflict} (\athl^sin\). Late word from \athle^{\,}, to engage in a public contest in the games (2Ti 2:5), only here in the N.T. It occurs in the inscriptions. Cf. 2:10 for the benefit of "sufferings" in training.

10:33 {Partly} (\touto men) {and partly} (\touto de).

Accusative of general reference (\touto) with \men and \de for contrast. {Being made a gazing-stock} (\theatrizomenoi). Late verb to bring upon the stage, to hold up to derision. See Paul's use of \theatron of himself in 1Co 4:9. {By reproaches and afflictions} (\oneidismois te kai thlipsesin). Instrumental case. See Ro 15:3. {Partakers} (\koin“noi). Partners (Lu 5:10) with those (\t“n\ objective genitive). {So used} (\hout“s anastrephomen“n). Present middle articular participle of \anastreph“, to conduct oneself (2Co 1:12).

10:34 {Ye had compassion on} (\sunepath^sate). First aorist active indicative of \sunpathe“, old verb to have a feeling with, to sympathize with. {Them that were in bonds} (\tois desmiois). Associative instrumental case, "with the prisoners" (the bound ones). Used of Paul (Eph 3:1; 2Ti 1:8). {Took joyfully} (\meta charas prosedexasthe). First aorist middle (indirect) indicative, "ye received to yourselves with joy." See Ro 13:1,3; 15:7. {The spoiling} (\t^n harpag^n). "The seizing," "the plundering." Old word from \harpaz“. See Mt 23:35. {Of your possessions} (\t“n huparchont“n hum“n). "Of your belongings." Genitive of the articular present active neuter plural participle of \huparch“ used as a substantive (cf. \hum“n\ genitive) as in Mt 19:21. {That ye yourselves have} (\echein heautous). Infinitive (present active of \ech“) in indirect discourse after \gin“skontes\ (knowing) with the accusative of general reference (\heautous\, as to yourselves), though some MSS. omit \heautous, some have \heautois\ (dative, for yourselves), and some \en heautois\ (in yourselves). The predicate nominative \autoi could have been used agreeing with \gin“skontes\ (cf. Ro 1:22). {A better possession} (\kreissona huparxin). Common word in the same sense as \ta huparchonta above, in N.T. only here and Ac 2:45. In place of their plundered property they have treasures in heaven (Mt 6:20). {Abiding} (\menousan). Present active participle of \men“. No oppressors (legal or illegal) can rob them of this (Mt 6:19ff.).

10:35 {Cast not away therefore your boldness} (\m^ apobal^te oun t^n parr^sian hum“n). Prohibition with \m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \apoball“. Old verb to throw away from one as worthless, only twice in the N.T., here in a figurative sense and Mr 10:50 in a literal sense (garment by Bartimaeus). The Jewish Christians in question were in peril of a panic and of stampeding away from Christ. Recall \katech“men\ in verse 23.

10:36 {Which} (\h^{tis}\). Your boldness of verse 35. {Recompense of reward} (\misthapodosian\). Late double compound, like \misthapodot^s\ (Heb 11:6), from \misthos\ (reward, wages) and \apodid“mi\, to give back, to pay (repay). In N.T. only here, 2:2; 11:26. {Of patience} (\hupomon^s\). Old word for remaining under trial (Lu 8:15). This was the call of the hour then as now. {Having done the will of God} (\to thel^{ma} tou theou\). This is an essential prerequisite to the exercise of patience and to obtain the promised blessing. There is no promise to those who patiently keep on doing wrong. {That ye may receive the promise} (\hina komis^{the tⁿ epaggelian}\) Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist middle subjunctive of \komiz“\, old verb to carry (Lu 7:37), in the middle to get back one's own (Mt 25:27), to receive. See also 11:39. Now the author is ready to develop this great idea of receiving the promise in Christ.

10:37 {A very little while} (\mikron hoson hoson\). From Isa 26:20 as an introduction to the quotation from Hab 2:3f. {He that cometh} (\ho erchomenos\). The article \ho\ is added to \erchomenos\ in Hab 2:3 and is given here a Messianic application.

10:38 {If he shrink back} (\ean huposteil^{tai}\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and the first aorist middle subjunctive of \hupostell“\, old verb to draw oneself under or back, to withdraw, as already in Ac 20:20,27; Ga 2:12. See Ro 1:17 for the quotation also of "the just shall live by faith."

10:39 {But we} (\h^{meis} de\). In contrast to renegades who do flicker and turn back from Christ. {Of them that shrink back unto perdition} (\hupostol^s eis ap“leian\). Predicate genitive of \hupostol“, as in 12:11, from \hupostell“\ with same sense here, stealthy retreat in Plutarch, dissimulation in Josephus. Here alone in the N.T. {Unto the saving of the soul} (\eis peripoi^{sin psuch^s}\). Old word from \peripoie“\, to reserve, to preserve (Lu 17:33) to purchase (Ac 20:28). So here preserving or saving one's life as in Plato, but possession in Eph 1:14, obtaining in 1Th 4:9. Papyri have it in sense of preservation.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

11:1 {Now faith is} (\estin de pistis). He has just said that "we are of faith" (10:39), not of apostasy. Now he proceeds in a chapter of great eloquence and passion to illustrate his point by a recital of the heroes of faith whose example should spur them to like loyalty now. {The assurance of things hoped for} (\elpizomen“n hupostasis). {Hupostasis} is a very common word from Aristotle on and comes from \huphist^mi (\hupo, under, \hist^mi, intransitive), what stands under anything (a building, a contract, a promise). See the philosophical use of it in 1:3, the sense of assurance (une assurance certaine, M,n,goz) in 3:14, that steadiness of mind which holds one firm (2Co 9:4). It is common in the papyri in business documents as the basis or guarantee of transactions. "And as this is the essential meaning in Heb 11:1 we venture to suggest the translation 'Faith is the _title-deed_ of things hoped for'" (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_, etc.). {The proving of things not seen} (\pragmat“n elegchos ou blepomen“n). The only N.T. example of \elegchos (except Textus Receptus in 2Ti 3:16 for \elegmon). Old and common word from \elegch“ (Mt 18:15) for "proof" and then for "conviction." Both uses occur in the papyri and either makes sense here, perhaps "conviction" suiting better though not in the older Greek.

11:2 {Therein} (\en taut^i). That is, "in faith," feminine demonstrative referring to \pistis. {The elders} (\hoi presbuteroi). More nearly like "the fathers," not the technical sense of elders (officers) usual in the N.T., but more like "the tradition of the elders" (Mr 7:3,5; Mt 15:2). {Had witness borne to them} (\emartur^th^san). First aorist passive of \marture“ (cf. 7:8), "were testified to."

11:3 {By faith} (\pistei). Instrumental case of \pistis which he now illustrates in a marvellous way. Each example as far as verse 31 is formally and with rhetorical skill introduced by \pistei. After that only a summary is given. {We understand} (\nooumen). Present active indicative of \noe“, old verb (from \nous, intellect) as in Mt 15:17; Ro 1:20. The author appeals to our knowledge of the world in which these heroes lived as an illustration of faith. Recent books by great scientists like Eddington and Jeans confirm the position here taken that a Supreme Mind is behind and before the universe. Science can only stand still in God's presence and believe like a little child. {The worlds} (\tous ai“nas\). "The ages" as in 1:2 (cf. Einstein's fourth dimension, time). Accusative case of general reference. {Have been framed} (\kat^rtisthai\). Perfect passive infinitive of \katartiz“\, to mend, to equip, to perfect (Lu 6:40), in indirect discourse after \nooumen\. {So that} (\eis to\). As a rule \eis to\ with the infinitive is final, but sometimes as here it expresses result as in Ro 12:3 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1003). {Hath been made} (\gegonenai\). Perfect active infinitive of \ginomai\. {What is seen} (\to blepomenon\). Present passive articular participle (accusative case of general reference) of \blep“\, to see. {Of things which do appear} (\ek phainomen“n\). Ablative case with \ek\ (out of) of the present passive participle. The author denies the eternity of matter, a common theory then and now, and places God before the visible universe as many modern scientists now gladly do.

11:4 {A more excellent sacrifice} (\pleiona thusian\). Literally, "more sacrifice" (comparative of \polus\, much). For this rather free use of \plei“n\ with the point implied rather than stated see Mt 6:25; Lu 10:31; 12:23; Heb 3:3. {Than Cain} (\para Kain\). For this use of \para\ after comparative see 1:4,9. For the incident see Ge 4:4. {Through which} (\di' h^s\). The sacrifice (\thusia\). {He had Witness borne to him} (\emartur^th^). First aorist passive indicative of \marture“\ as in verse 2, "he was witnessed to." {That he was righteous} (\einai dikaios\). Infinitive in indirect discourse after \emartur^th^, personal construction of \dikaios\ (predicate nominative after \einai) agreeing with the subject of \emartur^th^ (cf. Ro 1:22, \einai sophoi). {God bearing witness} (\marturountos tou theou\). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \marture“\, to bear witness. {Through it} (\di' aut^s\). Through his faith (as shown by his sacrifice). Precisely why Abel's sacrifice was better than that of Cain apart from his faith is not shown. {Being dead} (\apothan“n\). Second aorist active participle of \apothn^sk“\, "having died." {Yet speaketh} (\eti lalei\). Cf. Ge 4:10; Heb 12:24. Speaks still through his faith.

11:5 {Was translated} (\meteteth^). First aorist passive indicative of \metatith^{mi}\, old verb to transpose, to change as in 7:12; Ac 7:16. {That he should not see death} (\tou m^{idein} thanaton\). Here again \tou\ with the infinitive usually expresses purpose, but in this case result is the idea as in Mt 21:23; Ro 1:24; 7:3, etc. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1002). {He was not found} (\ouch h^{urisketo}\). Imperfect passive of \heurisk[“]\ from Ge 5:24. Was still not found. {Translated} (\meteth^{ken}\). First aorist active of same verb as \meteteth[^]\ just before. {Translation} (\metathese^{“s}\). Substantive from the same verb \metatith^{mi}\, used already in 7:12 for change. See also 12:27. Our very word "metathesis." {He hath had witness borne him} (\memartur^{tai}\). Perfect passive indicative of \marture[“]\, stands on record still, "he has been testified to." {That he had been well-pleasing unto God} (\euares^{tkenai t^{“i} theⁱ}\). Perfect active infinitive of \euares^t\, late compound from \euares^{tos}\ (well-pleasing), in N.T. only in Heb 11:5f.; 13:16. With dative case \theⁱ\. Quoted here from Ge 5:22,24. The word is common of a servant pleasing his master.

11:6 {Impossible} (\adunaton\). Strong word as in 6:4,18. See Ro 8:8 for same idea with \aresai\ (\aresk[“]\, Ga 1:10). {Must believe} (\pisteusai dei\). Moral necessity to have faith (trust, \pisteu[“]\). This is true in business also (banks, for instance). {That he is} (\hoti estin\). The very existence of God is a matter of intelligent faith (Ro 1:19ff.) So that men are left without excuse. {He is a rewarder} (\misthapodot^{s ginetai}\). Rather, "becomes a rewarder" (present middle indicative of ginomai, not of eimi\). Only N.T. example of \misthapodot^s\, late and rare double compound (one papyrus example, from misthos (reward) and \apodid^{“mi}\ (to pay back) like \misthapodosia\ (10:35; 11:26). {Seek after} (\ekz^{tousin}\). That seek out God.

11:7 {Being warned of God} (\chr^{matistheis}\). First aorist passive participle of \chr^{matiz[“]}\, old word for oracular or divine communications as already in 8:5 (cf. Mt 2:12,22, etc.). {Moved with godly fear} (\eulabth\). First aorist passive indicative of \eulabeomai\, old verb from \eulab^s\ (from eu and labein, to take hold well or carefully), to show oneself \eulab^s\, to act circumspectly or with reverence, here only in N.T. (save Textus Receptus in Ac 23:10), often in LXX. {An ark} (\kib^{“ton}\). Ge 6:15; Mt 24:38. Shaped like a box (cf. Heb 9:4). {Through which} (\di^{h^s}\). Through his faith as shown in building the ark. {The world} (\|ton kosmon\). Sinful humanity as in verse 38. {Heir} (\|kl^ronomos\). In 2Pe 2:5 Noah is called "a preacher of righteousness" as here "heir of righteousness." He himself believed his message about the flood. Like Enoch he walked with God (Ge 6:9).

11:8 {Not knowing whither he went} (\|m^ epistamenos pou erchetai\). Usual negative \|m^ with a participle (present middle from \|epistamai\, old and common verb to put the mind on). Present middle indicative (\|erchetai\) preserved in the indirect question after the secondary tense \|ex^lthen\ (went out) from which \|epistamenos\ gets its time. Abraham is a sublime and graphic example of faith. He did not even know where the land was that he was going to receive "as an inheritance" (\|eis kl^ronomian\).

11:9 {Became a sojourner} (\|par^ik^sen\). First aorist active indicative of \|paroike^, old verb to dwell (\|oike^\) beside (\|para\), common in LXX, in N.T. only here and Lu 24:18. Called \|paroikon\ (sojourner) in Ac 7:6. {In the land of promise} (\|eis g^n t^s epaggelias\). Literally, "land of the promise." The promise made by God to him (Ge 12:7; 13:15; 17:8). {As in a land not his own} (\|h^s allotrian\). For \|allotrios\ (belonging to another) see 9:25; 11:34. {The heirs with him of the same promise} (\|t^ n sunkl^romen^ n t^s epaggelias t^s aut^s\). Not just "tents" (\|sk^nais\, verse 9). Abraham set his steady gaze on heaven as his real home, being a mere pilgrim (\|paroikos\) on earth. {Builder} (\|technit^s\). Old word from \|techn^ (\i>craft) or trade (Ac 17:29; 18:3), craftsman, artificer, in N.T. only here and Ac 19:24,38. {Maker} (\|d^miourgos\). Old word from \|d^mios\ (public) and \|ergon\, a worker for the public, artisan, framer, here only in N.T.

11:11 {To conceive seed} (\|eis katabol^ n spermatos\). For deposit of seed. See 4:3 for \|katabol^\. {Past age} (\|para kairon h^likias\). Beyond (\|para\ with the accusative) the season of age. {Since she counted him faithful who had promised} (\epei piston h^g^sato ton epageilamenon\). Sarah herself (\aut^--Sarra\). Even Sarah, old as she was, believed God who had promised. Hence she received power.

11:12 {And that as good as dead} (\kai tauta nenekr^“menou\). Accusative of general reference (\tauta\), sometimes singular as in 1Co 6:8. The perfect passive participle from \nekro^“, late verb to make dead, to treat as dead (Ro 4:19), here by hyperbole. {By the sea shore} (\para to cheilos t^s thalass^s\). "Along the lip of the sea" (from Ge 22:17), \cheilos\ here alone in this sense in the N.T. {Innumerable} (\anarithm^tos\). Old compound verbal adjective (alpha privative and \arithme^“, to number), here alone in N.T.

11:13 {In faith} (\kata piston\). Here a break in the routine \pistei\ (by faith), "according to faith," either for literary variety "or to suggest \pistis\ as the sphere and standard of their characters" (Moffatt). {These all} (\houtoi pantes\). Those in verses 9-12 (Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Jacob). {Not having the promises} (\m^ komisamenoi tas epaggelias\). First aorist middle participle of \komiz^“, to obtain, as in 10:36; 11:39. And yet the author mentions Abraham (6:15) as having obtained the promise. He received the promise of the Messiah, but did not live to see the Messiah come as we have done. It is in this sense that we have "better promises." {Greeted them} (\aspasamenoi\). First aorist middle participle of \aspazomai\, to salute (Mt 5:47). Abraham rejoiced to see Christ's day in the dim distance (Joh 8:56). {Strangers} (\zenoi\). Foreigners. "To reside abroad carried with it a certain stigma" (Moffatt). But they "confessed" it (Ge 23:4; 47:9). {Pilgrims} (\parepid^moi\). Late double compound (\para, epi, d^mos\), a sojourner from another land, in N.T. only here and 1Pe 1:1; 2:11.

11:14 {A country of their own} (\patrida\). Land of the fathers (\pat^r\), one's native land (Joh 4:44). Cf. our patriotic, patriotism.

11:15 {Had been mindful} (\emn^moneuon\)-- {would have had} (\eichon an\). Condition of second class (note \an\ in conclusion) with the imperfect (not aorist) in both condition and conclusion. So it means: "If they had continued mindful, they would have kept on having (linear action in both cases in past time). {Opportunity to return} (\kairon anakampsai\). Old verb \anakampt“\ to bend back, to turn back (Mt 2:12), here first aorist active infinitive. Continual hankering would have found a way. Cf. the Israelites in the wilderness yearning after Egypt.

11:16 {They desire} (\oregontai\). Present middle indicative of \oreg“, old word for stretching out after, yearning after as in 1Ti 3:1. {Their God} (\theos aut“n\). Predicate nominative with the epexegetic infinitive \epikaleisthai\ (to be called) used with \ouk epaischunetai\ (is not ashamed).

11:17 {Being tried} (\peirazomenos\). Present passive participle of \peiraz“. The test was still going on. {Offered up} (\prosen^nochen\). Perfect active indicative of \prospher“, the verb so often used in this Epistle. The act was already consummated so far as Abraham was concerned when it was interrupted and it stands on record about him. See Ge 22:1-18. {He that had gladly received the promises} (\ho tas epaggelias anadexamenos\). \Anadechomai\ is old verb to welcome, to entertain, in N.T. only here and Ac 28:7. It seemed the death of his hopes. {Was offering up} (\prosepheren\). It is the imperfect of an interrupted action like \ekaloun\ in Lu 1:59.

11:18 {To whom it was said} (\pros elal^th^). First aorist passive indicative of \lale“\ (Ge 21:12). God's very words were in the heart of Abraham now about Isaac "his only son" (\ton monogen^\. Cf. Lu 7:12).

11:19 {Accounting} (\logisamenos\). First aorist middle participle of \logizomai\. Abraham had God's clear command that contravened God's previous promise. This was his solution of his difficult situation. {God is able} (\dunatai ho theos\). God had given him Isaac in his old age. God can raise him from the dead. It was Abraham's duty to obey God. {In a parable} (\en parabol^i\). See already 9:9 for \parabol^\. Because of (\hothen\, whence) Abraham's superb faith Isaac was spared and so he received him back (\ekomisato\) as almost from the dead. This is the test that Abraham stood of which James speaks (Jas 2:23).

11:20 {Even concerning things to come} (\kai peri mellont“n\). As told in Ge 27:28-40 when Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau.

11:21 {Leaning upon the top of his staff} (\epi to akron t^s rabdou autou\). From Ge 47:31, but no word for "leaning." The quotation is from the LXX, the Hebrew having "the head of the bed," but the Hebrew word allows either meaning with different vowel points.

11:22 {When his end was nigh} (\teleutⁿ\). Present active participle of \teleutaⁿ\, to finish or close (Mt 2:19), "finishing his life." {Of the departure} (\peri t^s exodou\). Late compound for way out, exit as here, metaphorically of death as here (Lu 9:31; 2Pe 1:15). {Concerning his bones} (\peri tⁿ osteⁿ autou\). Uncontracted form as in Mt 23:27.

11:23 {Was hid} (\ekrubⁿ\). Second aorist passive indicative of \kruptⁿ\, to hide, as in Mt 5:14. {Three months} (\trimⁿ non\). Old adjective used as neuter substantive in accusative case for extent of time, here only in N.T. {A goodly child} (\asteion to paidion\). Literally, "the child was goodly" (predicate adjective). Old adjective from \astu\ (city), "of the city" ("citified"), of polished manners, genteel. In N.T. only here and Ac 7:20, about Moses both times. Quoted from Ex 2:2f. {The king's commandment} (\to diatagma tou basile^s\). Late compound for injunction from \diatassⁿ\, only here in the N.T.

11:24 {When he was grown up} (\megas genomenos\). "Having become great" (from Ex 2:11). {Refused} (\^rnesato\). First aorist middle indicative of \arneomai\, to deny, to refuse. He was of age and made his choice not from ignorance. {Son} (\huios\). Predicate nominative with \legesthai\ (to be spoken of, present passive infinitive, of legⁿ).

11:25 {Choosing rather} (\mallon helomenos\). "Rather having chosen" (second aorist middle of \haireⁿ, to take for oneself a position). {To be entreated with} (\sunkakoucheisthai\). Present passive infinitive of the double compound \sunkakoucheⁿ\ (*from \sun, kakos, echⁿ, to treat ill with (associative instrumental case), only known example save one in the papyri (second century A.D.), though \kakoucheⁿ in Heb 11:37; 13:3. {To enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season} (\proskairon echein hamartias apolausin\). Literally, "to have temporary pleasure of sin." \Apolausis\ is old word from \apolauⁿ\, to enjoy, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:17. \Proskairos\ (from \pros, kairos) is a common _Koin,_ word as the antithesis to \aiⁿios\ (eternal) as in Mt 13:21; Mr 4:17; 2Co 4:18 (only N.T. examples). To have been disloyal to God's people would have brought enjoyment to Moses in the Egyptian Court for a short while only.*

11:26 {The reproach of Christ} (\ton oneidismon tou Christou\). See Ps 89:51 for the language where "the Messiah" ("The Anointed One") is what is meant by \tou Christou\, here rightly applied by the writer to Jesus as the Messiah who had his own shame to bear (12:2; 13:12). There is today as then (Heb 13:13) a special reproach (\oneidismos\, already, 10:33) in being a follower of Jesus Christ. Moses took this obloquy as "greater riches" (\meizona plouton\) than "the treasures of Egypt" (\t“n Aiguptou th’saur“n\, ablative case after comparative meizona\, for which see Mt 6:19f.). Moses was laying up treasure in heaven. {For he looked unto the recompense of reward} (\apeblepen gar eis t’n misthapodosian\). In perfect active of \apoblep“\, "for he was looking away (kept on looking away)." For \misthapodosia\ see 10:35.

11:27 {Not fearing} (\m^ phob^theis\). Negative \m^ with first aorist passive participle of \phobe“\ here used transitively with the accusative as in Mt 10:26. Moses did flee from Egypt after slaying the Egyptian (Ex 2:15), but the author omits that slaughter and ignores it as the dominant motive in the flight of Moses. \Thumon\ (wrath) is common in the N.T. (Lu 4:28), though here only in Hebrews. {He endured} (\ekarter^sen\). First aorist (constative) active indicative of \kartere“\, old word from \karteros\, strong, here only in N.T. Moses had made his choice before slaying the Egyptian. He stuck to it resolutely. {As seeing him who is invisible} (\ton aoraton h“s hor“n\). This is the secret of his choice and of his loyalty to God and to God's people. This is the secret of loyalty in any minister today who is the interpreter of God to man (2Co 4:16-18).

11:28 {He kept} (\pepoi^ken\). Perfect active indicative of \poie“\, to make, "he has made," emphasizing the permanent nature of the feast. {The sprinkling of the blood} (\t^ n proschusin tou haimatos\). Rather, "the pouring of the blood" (\proschusis\ from prosche“\, to pour upon), only here in the N.T. (earliest known example). An allusion to the command in Ex 12:7,22 but in the LXX \prosche“\ is the usual term for the act (Ex 24:6; 29:16; Le 1:5,11; De 16:6). {That the destroyer of the first-born should not touch them} (\hina m^ ho olothreu“n ta pr“totoka thig^i aut“n\). Negative final clause with \hina m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \thiggan“\, old verb to touch with genitive, in the N.T. only here, 12:20; Col 2:21. The articular participle \ho olothreu“n\ is from Ex 11:23. For \pr“totoka\ see Lu 2:7; Ex 12:29.

11:29 {Which assaying to do} (\h^s pieran labontes). Literally, "of which taking trial" (second aorist active participle of \lamban[“]\, to take). The idiom \peiran lambanein occurs in De 28:56, in N.T. only here and verse 36, though a classical idiom (Demosthenes, etc.). {Were swallowed up} (\katepoth[^]san). First aorist passive indicative of \katapin[“]\, to drink down, to swallow down (Mt 23:24).

11:30 {Fell down} (\epesan). "Fell," second aorist active indicative of \pipt[“] with first aorist endings as often in the _Koin, _. {After they had been compassed} (\kukl[“]thenta). First aorist passive participle of \kuklo[“]\, old verb to encircle (from \kuklos\, circle) as in Ac 14:20. Antecedent action here.

11:31 {Having received the spies with peace} (\dexamen[^] tous kataskopous met' eir[^]n^s). First aorist middle participle of \dechomai\, to welcome (Lu 10:8,10). \Kataskopos is an old compound (\kataskope[“]\, Ga 2:4), used of scout or spy, in LXX, here only in N.T.

11:32 {And what shall I more say?} (\Kai ti eti leg[“];). Deliberative present active subjunctive (same form as indicative, \leg[“]). It is both a literary and an oratorical idiom here. He feels helpless to go on in the same style as he has done from Abel to Rahab (11:4-31). {Will fail me if I tell about} (\epileipsei me di[^]goumenon peri). Literally, "will leave me telling about." Present middle participle of \di[^]geomai\, to lead through, carry a discussion through, and masculine (disposing of Priscilla as possible author) with \me. Vivid and picturesque description of the author's embarrassment of riches as he contemplates the long list of the heroes of faith during the long years in Palestine. He mentions six names (Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephtha, David, Samuel) and then summarizes the rest under "the prophets" (\t[“]n proph[^]t[“]n\, the for-speakers for God) of whom Samuel was the leader.

11:33 {Through faith} (\dia piste[“]s). Change thus from the routine \pistei used so far. {Subdued kingdoms} (\kat[^]g[“]nisanto basileias). First aorist middle indicative of \katag[“]nizomai\, _Koin, _ verb to struggle against, to overcome, here alone in the N.T. Used by Josephus of David's conquests. The author has here (verses 33,34), "nine terse clauses" (Moffatt) with no connective (asyndeton) with great rhetorical and oratorical force (sledge-hammer style). For "wrought righteousness" (ῥγασαντο δικαιοσύνῃ, first aorist middle indicative of ῥγάζομαι) see Ac 10:35. {Obtained promises} (ἐπετυχὼν ἐπαγγελίᾳ). Second aorist active indicative of ἐπιτυχᾶν, old verb (already in 6:15) with genitive. But they did not see the fulfilment of the Messianic promise (11:39f.). {Stopped the mouths of lions} (ἐφραξαν στόματα λεόντων). First aorist active indicative of ἐφρασᾶν, old verb to fence in, to block up. See Da 6:18-23.

11:34 {Quenched the power of fire} (ἐσβέσαν δυνάμιν πυρὸς). First aorist active indicative of σβέννυμι (Mt 12:20). See Da 3:19-28. {Escaped the edge of the sword} (ἐφύγον στόματα μάχαιρας). Second aorist active indicative of φεύγω, old verb to flee. "Mouths (στόματα) of the sword" (Lu 21:24). See 1Sa 18:11; 1Ki 19:2. {Were made strong} (ἐδυνάμηνσαν). First aorist passive indicative of δυναμίζω, late verb from δύναμις as in Col 1:11. {Waxed mighty in war} (ἐγενήσαν ἰσχυροὶ ἐν πόλει). "Became strong in battle" (Ps 18:34ff.). {Armies of aliens} (παρεμβολὰς ἀλλοτρίων). Late compound (para, en, ball) for encampment (Polybius, Plutarch), barracks (Ac 21:34,37), armies in battle line (Re 20:9 and here as in LXX and Polybius). Apparently a reference to the campaigns of Judas Maccabeus.

11:35 {By a resurrection} (ἐκ ἀναστάσεως). Cf. 1Ki 17:17ff.; 2Ki 4:8-37. {Were tortured} (ἐτὺμpanισθήσαν). First aorist passive indicative of τύμpanίζω, late verb from τύμpanον (kettledrum, drumstick), to beat the drum, to beat to death (cf. II Macc. 7 about Eleazar and the Mother and the seven sons), once in LXX (1Sa 21:13). {Not accepting their deliverance} (οὐ προσδέξαντο τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν). Offered at the price of disloyalty as in II Macc. 6:21-27. {That they might obtain a better resurrection} (ἵνα κρείττονος ἀναστάσεως τύχῃσιν). Purpose clause with ἵνα and the second aorist active subjunctive of τύγχανω to obtain with the genitive case. A "better resurrection" than the temporary ones alluded to in this verse by the women.

11:36 {Of mockings and scourgings} (ἐμπαῖμον καὶ μάστιγας). Ἐμπαῖμος is from ἐμπαίζω (Mt 20:19), late word, in LXX, here alone in N.T. Μάστιγας (μάστιξ, a whip, a scourge) is old and common enough (Ac 22:24).

11:37 {They were stoned} (\elithasth^{san}\). Like Zechariah son of Jehoiada (2Ch 24:20). "A characteristic Jewish punishment" (Vincent). First aorist passive indicative of \lithaz"\ (Joh 10:31). {They were sawn asunder} (\epristh^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative of \pri"\ or \priz"\, old verb (\prion\, a saw). Cruel Jewish punishment (Am 1:3) said to have been inflicted on Isaiah. {They were tempted} (\epeirasth^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative of \peiraz"\. The MSS. vary greatly in the text here and the order of these two items. This mild word seems an anticlimax after \epristh^{san}\. One of the seven brothers was fried (II Macc. 7:4) and so \epr^{sthesan}\ (were burned) from \pimpra"\ (Ac 28:6) has been suggested. {With the sword} (\en phon^{i machair^s}\). "In (by) slaughter of the sword" (Ionic form of the genitive \machaires\ as in Ex 17:13; Nu 21:24). The fate of unpopular prophets (IKi 10:10; Jer 26:23). {They went about} (\peri^{lthon}\). Constatative aorist active indicative of \perierchomai\ (picturesque compound verb). Here the sufferings of the living. {In sheep skins} (\en m^{l^{tais}}\). Late word from \m^{lon}\ (sheep), rough garment of prophets as Elijah (IKi 19:13,19), here only in N.T. In Byzantine Greek a monk's garb. {In goatskins} (\en aigeiois dermasin\). \Derma\, old word from \der"\, to flay (Mt 21:35), here only in N.T. \Aigeios\, old adjective (from \aix\, goat), here only in N.T. {Being destitute} (\husteroumenoi\). Present passive participle of \hustere"\, old verb to be left behind, used by Paul of himself (2Co 11:9). {Afflicted} (\thlibomenoi\). Present passive participle of \thlib"\, common verb to oppress. {Evil entreated} (\kakouchoumenoi\). Present passive participle of \kakouche"\, late compound verb from obsolete \kakouchos\ (\kakos\ and \ech"), in LXX (IKi 2:26), in N.T. only here and 13:3. See \sunkakoucheisthai\ in 11:25.

11:38 {Of whom the world was not worthy} (\h^{n oukⁿ axios ho kosmos}\) Graphic picture in a short parenthetical relative clause (\hⁿ\, genitive plural with \axios), a phrase to stir the blood of the readers. {Wandering} (\plan^{menoi}\). Present middle participle of \plana"\, like lost sheep, hunted by wolves. {Caves} (\sp^{laiois}\). Old word from \speos\ (cavern) as in Mt 21:13. {Holes} (\opais\). Old word, perhaps from \ops\ (root of \hora", to see), opening, in N.T. only here and Jas 3:11. Cf. 1Ki 18:4; II Macc. 5:27; 10:6 (about Judas Maccabeus and others).

11:39 {These all} (\houtoi pantes\). The whole list in verses 5-38. Cf. verse 13. {Through their faith} (\dia piste"s\). Here rather than \pistei\ as so often. {Received not the promise} (\ouk ekomisanto t^ n epaggelian\). First aorist middle of \komiz"\. The Messianic promise they did not live to see (11:13), though they had individual special promises fulfilled as already shown (11:33).

11:40 {God having provided} (\tou theou problepsamenou\). Genitive absolute with first aorist middle participle of \problep"\, late compound to foresee, here only in the N.T. {Some better thing} (\kreitton ti\). "Something better," "the better promises" of 8:6. {That apart from us they should not be made perfect} (\hina m^ ch"ris h^ m^ n telei"th"sin\). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \teleio"\. But this glorious and gracious purpose (foresight) of God is not due to any special merit in us. It is simply the fulness of the time in God's dispensation of grace of which we are the beneficiaries. But all the same and all the more (_noblesse oblige_), we should prove worthy of our heritage and of God's goodness to us and be loyal to Christ.

12:1 {Therefore} (\toigaroun\). Triple compound inferential participle (\toi, gar, oun\) like the German _doch denn nun_, a conclusion of emphasis, old particle, in N.T. only here and 1Th 4:8. There should be no chapter division here, since 12:1-3 really is the climax in the whole argument about the better promises (10:19-12:3) with a passionate appeal for loyalty to Christ. {Us also} (\kai h^meis\). We as well as "these all" of 11:39 and all the more because of the "something better" given us in the actual coming of Christ. {Compassed about} (\echontes perikeimenon\). Literally, "having (\echontes\, present active participle of \ech\") lying around us" (\perikeimenon\, present middle participle of \perikeimai\, old verb as in Lu 17:2). {Cloud of witnesses} (\nephos martur^n\). Old word (Latin _nubes_), here only in the N.T., for vast mass of clouds. \Nephel^ is a single cloud. The metaphor refers to the great amphitheatre with the arena for the runners and the tiers upon tiers of seats rising up like a cloud. The \martures\ here are not mere spectators (\theatai\), but testifiers (witnesses) who testify from their own experience (11:2,4,5,33,39) to God's fulfilling his promises as shown in chapter Heb 11. {Laying aside} (\apothemenoi\). Second aorist-middle (indirect, from ourselves) participle of \apotith^mi\, old verb as in Col 3:8 (laying off old clothes). The runners ran in the stadium nearly naked. {Every weight} (\ogkon panta\). Old word (kin to \enegkein, pher^") like \phortos, baros\). Here every encumbrance that handicaps like doubt, pride, sloth, anything. No trailing garment to hinder or trip one. {The sin which doth so easily beset us} (\t^n euperistaton hamartian\). "The easily besetting sin." There are a dozen possible renderings of this double compound verbal from \eu\, well, and \periist^mi\, to place around or to stand around (intransitive). The Vulgate has _circumstans nos peccatum_ (the sin standing around us). Probably this is the true idea here, "the easily encompassing (or surrounding) sin." In this case apostasy from Christ was that sin. In our cases it may be some other sin. The verbal adjective reminds one of the ring of wild beasts in the jungle that encircle the camp-fire at night each ready to pounce upon a careless victim. {Let us run} (\trech^men\). Present active volitive subjunctive of \trech“\, "let us keep on running." {With patience} (\di' hupomonˆs\). Not with impatience, doubt, or despair. {The race that is set before us} (\ton prokeimenon hˆmin agˆna\). Note the article and the present middle participle of \prokeimai\, old compound (already in 6:18, and also in 12:2). Dative case (\hˆmin\) of personal interest.

12:2 {Looking unto} (\aphorˆntes eis\). Present active participle of \aphora“\, old verb to look away, "looking away to Jesus." In N.T. only here and Php 2:23. Fix your eyes on Jesus, after a glance at "the cloud of witnesses," for he is the goal. Cf. Moses in 11:26 (\apeblepen\). {The author} (\ton archˆgon\). See 2:10 for this word. "The pioneer of personal faith" (Moffatt). {Perfecter} (\teleiˆtˆn\). A word apparently coined by the writer from \teleio“\ as it has been found nowhere else. Vulgate has _consummator_. {For the joy} (\anti tˆs charas\). Answering to, in exchange for (verse 16), at the end of the race lay the joy "set before him" (\prokeimenˆs autˆi\), while here was the Cross (\stauron\) at this end (the beginning of the race) which he endured (\hupemeinen\, aorist active indicative of \hupomen“), {despising shame} (\aischunˆs kataphronˆsas\). The cross at his time brought only shame (most shameful of deaths, 'yea, the death of the cross' Php 2:8). But Jesus despised that, in spite of the momentary shrinking from it, and did his Father's will by submitting to it. {Hath sat down} (\kekathiken\). Perfect active indicative of \kathiz“\, and still is there (1:3).

12:3 {Consider} (\analogisasthe\). First aorist middle imperative of \analogizomai\, old word to reckon up, to compare, to weigh, only here in the N.T. See \katanoˆsate\ in 3:1. Understanding Jesus is the key to the whole problem, the cure for doubt and hesitation. {Endured} (\hupomemenˆkota\). Perfect active participle of the same verb \hupomen“\ used in verse 2. {Gainsaying} (\antilogian\). Old word from \antilogos\ (from \antileg“), already in 6:16; 7:7. {Of sinners} (\hupo tˆn hamartˆlˆn\). "By sinners." {Against themselves} (\eis heautous\). Against their better selves if a genuine reading. But \eis heauton\ (against himself), against Christ, is far more likely correct. {That ye wax not weary} (\hina mˆ kamˆte\). Negative final clause with \hina mˆ\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \kamn“\, old verb to be weary as here or sick as in Jas 5:15. {Fainting in your souls} (\tais psuchais humˆn ekluomenoi\). Present passive participle of \eklu“\, old verb to loosen out, to set free, and in passive to be enfeebled, to be tired out (here in soul with locative case), as in verse 5. The rest of the Epistle drives home the argument.

(here and Ro 2:20). {We gave them reverence} (\enetrepometha\). Imperfect middle of old word \entrep“, to turn in or at. Here "we turned ourselves to" as in Mt 21:37, habitual attitude of reverence. {Shall we be in subjection} (\hupotag^sometha\). Second future passive of \hupotass“. kai m^ ex h^m^“n). {Peaceable fruit} (\karpon eir^nikon). Old adjective from \eir^n^ (peace), in N.T. only here and Jas 3:17. Vivid picture of concern for the lame (\ch^“lon\, as in Mt 11:5). Graphic picture of concern for the weak, a good argument for prohibition also.

12:14 {Follow after peace} (\eir^n^ n di^“kete). Give peace a chase as if in a hunt. {With all men} (\meta pant^“n). Like Paul's use of \di^“k^“ with \eir^n^ n in Ro 14:19 and his to \ex hum^“n (so far as proceeds from you) in 12:18. This lesson the whole world needs including Christians. {Sanctification} (\hagiasmon). Consecration as in 1Th 4:7; Ro 6:19, etc. {Without which} (\hou ch^“ris). He sought it (aut^n\, the blessing |eulogian|) with tears, but in vain. There was no change of mind in Isaac. The choice was irrevocable as Isaac shows (Ge 27:33). Esau is a tragic example of one who does a wilful sin which allows no second chance (Heb 6:6; 10:26). The author presses the case of Esau as a warning to the Christians who were tempted to give up Christ.

12:18 {Ye are not come} (ou prosel^luthate\). Perfect active indicative of \proserchomai\. There is no word here in the Greek for "a mount" like \orei\ in verses 20,22 (and Ex 19:12f.; De 4:11), but it is clearly understood since the dative participles agree with it unless they be taken as descriptive of \puri\ ("a palpable and kindled fire " when |puri| would be the dative case after |prosel^luthate|). {That might be touched} (ps^laph“men“i\). First aorist middle (indirect) indicative of \paraiteomai\, old verb, to ask from alongside (Mr 15:6), then to beg away from oneself, to depreciate as here, to decline (Ac 25:11), to excuse (Lu 14:18), to avoid (1Ti 4:7). {That no word should be spoken unto them} (\prosteth^nai autois logon\). First aorist passive infinitive of \prostith^mi\, old word to add, here with accusative of general reference (\logon\), "that no word be added unto them." Some MSS. have here a redundant negative \m^ with the infinitive because of the negative idea in \par^it^santo\ as in Ga 5:7.

12:20 {For they could not endure} (\ouk epheron gar\). Imperfect active of \pher“\, "for they were not enduring (bearing)." {That which was enjoined} (\to diastellomenon\). Present passive articular participle of \diastell“\, old verb to distinguish, to dispose, to order. The quotation is from Ex 19:12f. The people appealed to Moses (Ex 20:19) and the leaders did so also (De 5:23f.), both in terror. {If even} (\kan\). "Even if." Condition of third class with second aorist active subjunctive of \thiggan“\ as in 11:28, followed by genitive \orous\ (mountain). {It shall be stoned} (\lithobol^th^setai\). From Ex 19:13. Late compound verb from \lithobolos\ (from \lithos, ball“\)) as in Mt 21:35.

12:21 {Fearful} (\phoberon\). As in 10:27,31, only in Heb. in N.T. {The appearance} (\to phantazomenon\). "I am terrified (\ekphobos\, late compound like \ekphobe“\, to frighten, Mr 9:6) and trembling" (\entromos\, late compound like \entrem“\, to tremble at, as in Ac 7:32; 16:29).

\Ekphobos\ is quoted from De 9:19.

12:22 {But} (\alla\). Sharp contrast to verse 18 with same form \prosel^luthate\. {Unto Mount Zion} (\Si“n orei\). Dative case of \oros\, as with the other substantives. In contrast to Mount Sinai (verses 18-21). Paul has contrasted Mount Sinai (present Jerusalem) with the Jerusalem above (heaven) in Ga 4:21-31. {City} (\polei\). As in 11:10,16. Heaven is termed thus a spiritual mountain and city. {The heavenly Jerusalem} (\Ierousalem epourani“i\). See 11:10,16; Isa 60:14. {Innumerable hosts of angels} (\muriasin aggel“n\). "Myriads of angels." \Murias\ is an old word (from \muriros\, 1Co 4:15) as in Lu 12:1.

12:23 {To the general assembly} (\pan^gurei\). Old word (from \pas\ and \aguris, ageir“). Here only in N.T. \Pan^guriz“\ occurs in Isa 66:10 for keeping a festal holiday. Possibly to be connected with \aggel“n\, though not certain. {Church of the firstborn} (\ekkl^sifi pr“totok“n\). Probably an additional item besides the angelic host as the people of Israel are called firstborn (Ex 4:22). The word \ekkl^sia\ here has the general sense of all the redeemed, as in Mt 16:18; Col 1:18; Eph 5:24-32, and equivalent to the kingdom of God. {Who are enrolled in heaven} (\apogegrammen“n en ouranois\). Perfect passive participle of \apograph“, old verb to write off, to copy, to enroll as in Lu 2:1,3,5 (only N.T. examples). Enrolled as citizens of heaven even while on earth (Lu 10:20; Php 1:27; 3:20; 4:3; Re 13:8, etc.). {To God the Judge of all} (\krit^i the“i pant“n\). All these chief substantives in the dative case. People should not forget that God is the Judge of all men. {Made perfect} (\tetelei“men“n\). Perfect passive participle of \teleio“, perfected at last (11:40).

12:24 {To Jesus} (\I^sou\). This great fact is not to be overlooked (Php 2:10f.). He is there as Lord and Saviour and still "Jesus." {The mediator of a new covenant} (\diath^k^s neas mesit^i\). As already shown (7:22; 8:6,8,9,10; 9:15) and now gloriously consummated. {To the blood of sprinkling} (\haimati rantismou\). As in 9:19-28. {Than Abel} (\para ton Abel\). Accusative as in 1:4. {Better} (\kreitton\). Comparative of \kalos\. Abel's blood still speaks (11:4), but it is as nothing compared to that of Jesus.

12:25 {See} (\blepete). Earnest word as in 3:12. Driving home the whole argument of the Epistle by this powerful contrast between Mount Zion and Mount Sinai. The consequences are dreadful to apostates now, for Zion has greater terrors than Sinai, great as those were. {That ye refuse not} (\m^ parait's^sthe). Negative purpose with \m^ and the first aorist middle subjunctive of \paraiteomai, the same verb used in verse 19 about the conduct of the Israelites at Sinai and also below. {Him that speaketh} (\ton lalounta). Present active articular participle of \lale^ as in verse 24 (Jesus speaking by his blood). {For if they did not escape} (\ei gar ekeinoi ouk exephugon). Condition of first class with \ei and second aorist active indicative of \ekpheug^, to escape. Direct reference to Sinai with use of the same verb again (\parait^sameno, when they refused). {Him that warned} (\ton chr^matizonta). That is Moses. For \chr^matiz^ see 8:5; 11:7. {Much more we} (\polu mallon h^meis). Argument from the less to the greater, \polu, adverbial accusative case. The verb has to be supplied from the condition, "We shall not escape." Our chance to escape is far less, "we who turn away (\apostrephomenoi, middle participle, turn ourselves away from) the one from heaven (\ton ap' ouran^," God speaking through his Son (1:2).

12:26 {Then shook} (\esaleusen tote). Old verb as in Mt 11:7. {He hath promised} (\ep^ggeltai). Perfect middle indicative of \epaggell^ and it still holds. He quotes Hag 2:6. {Will I make to tremble} (\seis^). Old and strong verb (here future active) \sei^, to agitate, to cause to tremble as in Mt 21:10. The author applies this "yet once more" (\eti hapax) and the reference to heaven (\ton ouranon) to the second and final "shaking" at the Second Coming of Jesus Christ for judgement (9:28).

12:27 {And this word} (\to de). He uses the article to point out "\eti hapax" which he explains (\d^loi, signifies, present active indicative of \d^lo^). {The removing} (\t^n metathesin). For this word see 7:12; 11:5. For the transitory nature of the world see 1Co 7:31; 1Jo 2:17. "There is a divine purpose in the cosmic catastrophe" (Moffatt). {Made} (\pepoi^men^). Perfect passive participle of \poie^. Made by God, but made to pass away. {That those things which are not shaken may remain} (\hina mein^i ta m^ saleuomena). Final clause with \m^ and the first orist active subjunctive of \men“. The Kingdom of God is not shaken, fearful as some saints are about it.

12:28 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Ground for loyalty to Christ and for calm trust in God. {That cannot be shaken} (\asaleuton\). Old compound with alpha privative and the verbal adjective from \saleu“\ just used. In N.T. only here and Ac 27:41. {Let us have grace} (\ech“men charin\). Present active volitive subjunctive of \ech“, "Let us keep on having grace" as in 4:16, though it can mean "Let us keep on having gratitude" as in Lu 17:9. {Whereby} (\di' h^s\). That is \dia charitos\. {We may offer service} (\latreu“men\). This subjunctive in a relative clause can be volitive like \ech“men\ just before (cf. imperative st^te in 1Pe 5:12) or it might be the futuristic subjunctive as in 8:3 (\ho prosenegk^i\). {Well pleasing} (\euares^s\). Old compound adverb, here only in N.T. {With reverence and awe} (\meta eulabeias kai deous\). For \eulabeia\ see 5:7; 11:7. \Deos\ is apprehension of danger as in a forest. Old word for hospitality, from \philoxenos\ (1Ti 3:2), in N.T. only here and Ro 12:3. In genitive case with \epilanthanesthe\ (present middle imperative, cf. Heb 6:10). {Have entertained angels unawares} (\elathon xenisantes aggelous\). Second aorist active indicative of \lanthan“, old verb to escape notice and first aorist active participle of \xeniz“, old verb to entertain a guest (\xenos\, stranger), according to a classic idiom seen with \lanthan“, tugchan“, phthan“, by which the chief idea is expressed by the participle (supplementary participle), here meaning, "some escaped notice when entertaining angels." The reference is to Ge 18; 19 (Abraham and Sarah did this very thing).

13:2 {As bound with them} (\h^s sundedemenoi\). Perfect passive participle of \sunde“, old verb, here only in N.T. For sympathy with prisoners see 10:34. {As being yourselves also in the body} (\h^s kai autoi ontes en s[“]mati\). And so subject to evil treatment. See 11:37 for \kakouche“ and 11:25 for \sunkakouche“.

13:4 {Let marriage be} (\ho gamos\). No verb in the Greek. The copula can be supplied either \estin\ (is) or \est“\ (let be, imperative). {Had in honour} (\timios\). Old adjective from \tim^ (honour) as in Ac 5:34. \Gamos\ elsewhere in the N.T., means the wedding or wedding feast (Mt 22:29; Joh 2:1). {Undefiled} (\amiantos\). Old compound word (alpha privative and verbal of \miain“, to defile), already in Heb 7:26. \Miain“ tⁿ koitⁿ is a common expression for adultery. {Fornicators} (\pornous\). Unmarried and impure. {Adulterers} (\moichous\). Impure married persons. God will judge both classes whether men do or not.

13:5 {Be ye free from the love of money} (\aphilarguros ho tropos\). No copula, but supply \esto\: "Let your manner of life (\tropos\, way, Mt 23:37), be without love of money"

(\aphilarguros\, double compound), once found only in the N.T., here and 1Ti 3:3, but now several times--or the adverb \aphilargur"s\ --in papyri and inscriptions (Deissmann, _Light_, etc., pp. 85f.). Alpha privative and \philos\ and \arguros\. The N.T. is full of the peril of money on the character as modern life is also. {Content with such things as ye have} (\arkoumenoi tois parousin\). Present passive participle of \arke"\, to suffice, to be content as in Lu 3:14. Cf. \autark^s\ in Php 4:11. Here in the nominative plural with no substantive or pronoun (anacoluthon, as in 2Co 1:7) or the participle used as a principal verb as in Ro 12:16. "Contented with the present things" (\tois parousin\, associative instrumental case of \ta paronta\, present active neuter plural participle of \pareimi\, to be present or on hand). {For himself hath said} (\autos gar eir^ken\). God himself as in Ac 20:33 of Christ. Perfect active indicative as in 1:13; 4:3f.; 10:9. The quotation is a free paraphrase of Ge 28:15; De 31:8; Jos 1:5; 1Ch 28:20. Philo (de Confus. Ling. 32) has it in this form, "a popular paraphrase" (Moffatt). Note the five negatives strengthening each other (\ou m^ with the second aorist active subjunctive \an"\ from \ani^mi\, to relate, as in Ac 16:26; \oud' ou m^ with second aorist active subjunctive \egkatalip"\ from \egkataleip"\, to leave behind, as in Mt 27:46; 2Ti 4:10). A noble promise in times of depression.

13:6 {So that we say} (\h"ste h^mas legein\). The usual construction (the infinitive) with \h"ste\ in the _Koin_, even when the idea is result instead of purpose. The accusative \h^mas\ is that of general reference. {With good courage} (\tharrountas\). Present active participle of \tharre"\ (Ionic and early Attic \tharse", Mt 9:2) as in 2Co 5:6,8. genitive of the person (\hum“n) as in verses 17,24. The author reminds them of the founders of their church in addition to the long list of heroes in chapter Ac 11. See a like exhortation to respect and follow their leaders in 1Th 5:12f. Few lessons are harder for the average Christian to learn, viz., good following. {The word of God} (\ton logon tou theou). The preaching of these early disciples, apostles, and prophets (1Co 1:17). {And considering the issue of their life} (\h“n anathe“rountes t^n ekbasin t's anastroph^s). No "and" in the Greek, but the relative \h“n (whose) in the genitive case after \anastroph^s, "considering the issue of whose life." Present active participle of \anathe“re“, late compound, to look up a subject, to investigate, to observe accurately, in N.T. only here and Ac 17:23. \Ekbasis is an old word from \ekbain“, to go out (Heb 11:15, here only in N.T.), originally way out (1Co 10:13), but here (only other N.T. example) in sense of end or issue as in several papyri examples (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). {Imitate their faith} (\mimeisthe t^n pistin). Present middle imperative of \mimeomai, old verb (from \mimos\, actor, mimic), in N.T. only here, 2Th 3:7,9; 3Jo 1:11. Keep on imitating the faith of the leaders.

13:8 {Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, yea and forever} (\I'sous Christos echthes kai s^meron ho autos kai eis tous ai“nas). There is no copula in the Greek. Vincent insists that \estin be supplied between \I'sous and \Christos, "Jesus is Christ," but it more naturally comes after \Christos as the Revised Version has it. The old adverb \echthes is rare in the N.T. (Joh 4:52; Ac 7:28; Heb 13:8). Here it refers to the days of Christ's flesh (2:3; 5:7) and to the recent work of the leaders (13:7). "Today" (\s^meron\, 3:15) is the crisis which confronts them. "Forever" (\eis tous ai“nas) is eternity as well as the Greek can say it. Jesus Christ is eternally "the same" (1:12) and the revelation of God in him (1:1f.) is final and never to be superseded or supplemented (Moffatt). Hence the peril of apostasy from the only hope of man.

13:9 {Be not carried away} (\m^ parapheresthe). Prohibition with \m^ and present passive imperative of \parapher“, old verb to lead along (Jude 1:12), to carry past (Mr 14:36), to lead astray as here. {By divers and strange teachings} (\didachais poikilais kai xenais). For \poikilos (many coloured) see 2:4. \Xenos for guest we have had in 11:13, but here as adjective meaning unheard of (1Pe 4:12) as in older Greek also. The new is not always wrong any more than the old is always right (Mt 13:52). But the air was already full of new and strange teachings that fascinated many by their very novelty. The warning here is always needed. Cf. Ga 1:6-9; 2Ti 3:16. {That the heart be established by grace} (\chariti bebaïousthai tⁿ kardian\). Present passive infinitive of \bebaio“\ (from \bain“\) to make stable with the instrumental case \chariti\ (by grace) and the accusative of general reference (\tⁿ kardian\). How true it is that in the atmosphere of so many windy theories only the heart is stable that has an experience of God's grace in Christ. {That occupied themselves} (\hoi peripatountes\). "That walked" in the ritualistic Jewish rules about meats. {Were not profited} (\ouk “phelthsan\). First aorist passive indicative of \“phele“\, to help. Mere Jewish ceremonialism and ritualism failed to build up the spiritual life. It was sheer folly to give up Christ for Pharisaism or for Moses.

13:10 {We have an altar} (\echomen thusiast^{rion}\). We Christians have a spiritual altar (\thusiast^{rion}\), not a literal one (7:13). This metaphor is carried out. {Whereof} (\ex hou\). Our spiritual altar. {The tabernacle} (\tⁱ skⁿ i\). Dative case with \latreuontes\ (serve), \skⁿ being used for "the whole ceremonial economy" (Vincent) of Judaism.

13:11 {Of those beasts whose blood} (\h“n z““n to haima tout“n\). The antecedent (\z““n\) of \h“n\ is here incorporated and attracted into the case of the relative, "the blood of which beasts" and then \tout“n\ (genitive demonstrative) is added, "of these." Cf. Le 4:12f.,21; 16:27 for the Old Testament ritual in such cases. This is the only example in the LXX or N.T. where \z““n\ (animal) is used of a sacrificial victim. See also Ex 29:14; 32:26f. for burning without the camp.

13:12 {Wherefore Jesus also} (\dio kai I^{sous}\). The parallel is drawn between the O.T. ritual and the better sacrifice of Jesus already discussed (9:13-10:18). The purpose of Jesus is shown (\hina hagianⁱ\, \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \hagiaz“\, to sanctify), the means employed (\dia tou idiou haimatos\, by his own blood), the place of his suffering (\epathen\, as in 5:8) is also given (\ex“ t^s pul^s\, outside the gate, implied in Joh 19:17) which phrase corresponds to "outside the camp" of verse 11.

13:13 {Let us therefore go forth to him} (\toinun exerch“metha pros auton\). Inferential particle (\toi, nun\), usually post-positive (Lu 20:25; 1Co 9:26) only N.T. examples. Present middle volitive subjunctive of \exerchomai\, "Let us keep on going out there to him." If a separation has to come between Judaism and Christianity, let us give up Judaism, and go out to Christ "outside the camp" and take our stand with him there on Golgotha, "bearing his reproach (\ton oneidismon autou pherontes\) as Jesus himself endured the Cross despising the shame (12:2) and as Moses accepted "the reproach of the Messiah" (11:26) in his day. The only decent place for the follower of Christ is beside the Cross of Christ with the reproach and the power (Ro 8:1f.) in it. This is the great passionate plea of the whole Epistle.

13:14 {An abiding city} (\menousan polin\). Jerusalem has lost its charm for followers of Christ. Vincent rightly argues that the Epistle must have been written before the destruction of Jerusalem else a reference to that event could hardly have been avoided here. We are now where Abraham was once (11:10).

13:15 {Through him} (\di' autou\). That is Jesus. He is our Priest and Sacrifice, the only efficient and sufficient one. {Let us offer up} (\anapher“men\). Present active volitive subjunctive of \anapher“, "let us keep on offering up." Jesus is living and let us go to him. {A sacrifice of praise} (\thusian ainese“s\). This phrase occurs in Le 7:12; Ps 54:8. The word \ainesis\ (from \aine“, to praise), common in LXX, is only here in N.T. {The fruit of lips} (\karpon cheile“n\). In apposition (\tout 'estin\ and explanation of \thusian ainese“s\. Cf. Ho 14:3; Isa 57:19. {Which made confession to his name} (\homologount“n t“i onomati autou\). This use of \homologe“\ with the dative in the sense of praise like \exomologe“\ is unique, though the papyri furnish examples in the sense of gratitude (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_).

13:16 {To do good} (t's eupoiias\). Genitive case. Late compound from \eupoios\ (eupoie“\), common in Epictetus, but here only in N.T., a doing good. {To communicate} (\koin“nias\). Genitive case. See 2Co 9:13 for use for contribution, beneficence. Moffatt notes that the three great definitions of worship and religious service in the N.T. (here, Ro 12:1f.; Jas 1:27) are all inward and ethical. {Forget not} (m^ epilanthanesthe\). Prohibition with \m^ and the present middle imperative of \epilanthan“\ (6:10; 13:2). Here with the genitive case. {Is well pleased} (\euaresteitai\). Present passive indicative of \euareste“\ (Heb 11:5). With the associative instrumental case \thusiais\ (sacrifices).

13:17 {Obey} (\peithesthe\). Present middle imperative of \peith“\ with dative case. {Submit} (\hupeikete\). Present active imperative of \hupeik“\, old compound to yield under, to give up. Here only in N.T. {They watch} (\agrupnousin\). Present active indicative of \agrupne“\ old verb (from \agre“\, to search, \hupnos\, sleep), to seek after sleep, to be sleepless, be watchful (Mr 13:33). {As they that shall give account} (\h“s logon apod“sontes\). Regular Greek idiom with \h“s\ and the future participle. For \logon apodid“mi\, to render account, see Mt 12:36. These leaders as good shepherds recognize keenly their responsibility for the welfare of the flock. {And not with grief} (\kai m^ stenazontes\). "And not groaning" (cf. Ro 8:23). {Unprofitable} (\alusiteles\). Old double compound adjective (alpha privative and \lusitel“s\ and this from \lu“\, to pay, and \telos\, tax, useful or profitable as Lu 17:2), not profitable, not advantageous, by _litotes_, hurtful, pernicious. Common rhetorical _litotes_, here only in N.T.

13:18 {Honestly} (\kal“s\). Nobly, honourably. Apparently the writer is conscious that unworthy motives have been attributed to him. Cf. Paul in 1Th 2:18; 2Co 1:11f.,17f.

13:19 {That I may be restored to you the sooner} (\hina tacheion apokatastath“ humin\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \apokathist^mi\, an old double compound as in Mt 12:13. What is meant by \tacheion\ (Joh 13:27; 20:4) we do not know, possibly sickness. See verse 23 also for \tacheion\.

13:20 {The God of peace} (\ho theos t^s eir^ n^s\). God is the author and giver of peace, a Pauline phrase (6 times) as in 1Th 5:23. {Who brought again from the dead} (\ho anagag“n ek nekr“n\). Second aorist active articular participle of \anag“\ (cf. Ro 10:7), the only direct mention of the resurrection of Jesus in the Epistle, though implied often (1:3, etc.). {That great shepherd of the sheep} (\ton poimena t“n probat“n ton megan\). This phrase occurs in Isa 63:11 except \ton megan\ which the author adds as in 4:14; 10:21. So here, "the shepherd of the sheep the great one." {With the blood of the eternal covenant} (\en haimati diath^hk^hs ai^hniou\). This language is from Zec 9:11. The language reminds us of Christ's own words in Mr 14:24 (Mt 26:28; Lu 22:20; 1Co 11:25) about "my blood of the covenant."

13:21 {Make you perfect} (\katartisai\). First aorist active optative of \katartiz^h\, to equip, as in 10:5. A wish for the future. See 1Co 1:10; 2Co 13:11; 2Ti 3:17. {Working in us} (\poi^hn en hemin\). "Doing in us." Some MSS. read "in you." {Well-pleasing} (\euaireston\). Compound adjective (\eu, aistos\). Usually with the dative (Ro 12:2), here with \en^hpion autou\ more like the Hebrew. This is one of the noblest doxologies in the N.T.

13:22 {Bear with} (\anechesthe\). Present middle imperative (some MSS. have \anechesthai\, infinitive) of \anech^h\ with the ablative, "hold yourselves back from" as in Col 3:13. {The word of exhortation} (\tou logou t^hs parakl^hse^hs\). His description of the entire Epistle. It certainly is that, a powerful appeal in fact. {I have written} (\episteila\). First aorist active indicative (epistolary aorist) of \epistell^h\, old word to send a letter (\epistol^h\) as in Ac 15:20. {In few words} (\dia brache^hn\). Common Greek idiom, here only in N.T. (from \brachus\, brief, short). Cf. \di' olig^hn egrapsa\ in 1Pe 5:12.

13:23 {Hath been set at liberty} (\apolelumenon\). Perfect passive participle of \apolu^h\, to set free, in indirect discourse after \gin^hskete\. Possibly from prison if he came to Rome at Paul's request (2Ti 4:11,21). {Shortly} (\tacheion\). Same comparative as in verse 19, "sooner" than I expect (?).

13:24 {They of Italy} (\hoi apo t^hs Italias\). Either those with the author in Italy or those who have come from Italy to the author outside of Italy.

1:1 {James} (\Iak“bos\). Grecised form (nominative absolute) of the Hebrew \Iak“b\ (so LXX). Common name among the Jews, and this man in Josephus (_Ant_. XX.9.1) and three others of this name in Josephus also. {Servant} (\doulos\). Bond-servant or slave as Paul (Ro 1:1; Php 1:1; Tit 1:1). {Of the Lord Jesus Christ} (\kuriou I’sou Christou\). Here on a par with God (\theou\) and calls himself not \adelphos\ (brother) of Jesus, but \doulos\.

The three terms here as in 2:1 have their full significance: Jesus is the Messiah and Lord. James is not an Ebionite. He accepts the deity of Jesus his brother, difficult as it was for him to do so. The word \kurios\ is frequent in the LXX for _Elohim_ and _Jahweh_ as the Romans applied it to the emperor in their emperor worship. See 1Co 12:3 for \Kurios I’sous\ and Php 2:11 for \Kurios I’sous Christos\.

{To the twelve tribes} (\tais d“deka phulais\). Dative case. The expression means "Israel in its fulness and completeness" (Hort), regarded as a unity (Ac 26:7) with no conception of any "lost" tribes. {Which are of the Dispersion} (\tais en t’i diasporfi\). "Those in the Dispersion" (repeated article). The term appears in De 28:25 (LXX) and comes from \diaspeir“\, to scatter (sow) abroad. In its literal sense we have it in Joh 7:34, but here and in 1Pe 1:1 Christian Jews are chiefly, if not wholly, in view. The Jews at this period were roughly divided into Palestinian Jews (chiefly agriculturists) and Jews of the Dispersion (dwellers in cities and mainly traders). In Palestine Aramaic was spoken as a rule, while in the Western Diaspora the language was Greek (_Koin_, _LXX), though the Eastern Diaspora spoke Aramaic and Syriac. The Jews of the Diaspora were compelled to compare their religion with the various cults around them (comparative religion) and had a wider outlook on life. James writes thus in cultural _Koin_, but in the Hebraic tone. {Greeting} (\chairein\). Absolute infinitive (present active of \chair“) as in Ac 15:23 (the Epistle to Antioch and the churches of Syria and Galatia). It is the usual idiom in the thousands of papyri letters known to us, but in no other New Testament letter. But note \chairein legete\ in 2Jo 1:10,11.

1:2 {Count it} (\h^g^sasthe\). First aorist middle imperative of \h^geomai\, old verb to consider. Do it now and once for all. {All joy} (\pfsan charan\). "Whole joy," "unmixed joy," as in Php 2:29. Not just "some joy" along with much grief. {When} (\hotan\). "Whenever," indefinite temporal conjunction. {Ye fall into} (\peripes^te\). Second aorist active subjunctive (with the indefinite \hotan\) from \peript^{\, literally to fall around (into the midst of), to fall among as in Lu 10:30 \l^istais periepesen\ (he fell among robbers). Only other N.T. example of this old compound is in Ac 27:41. Thucydides uses it of falling into affliction. It is the picture of being surrounded (\peri\) by trials. {Manifold temptations} (\peirasmois poikilois\). Associative instrumental case. The English word temptation is Latin and originally meant trials whether good or bad, but the evil sense has monopolized the word in our modern English, though we still say "attempt." The word \peirasmos\ (from \peiraz^{\, late form for the old \peira^{\, as in Ac 26:21, both in good sense as in Joh 6:6, and in bad sense as in Mt 16:1) does not occur outside of the LXX and the N.T. except in Dioscorides (A.D. 100?) of experiments on diseases. "Trials" is clearly the meaning here, but the evil sense appears in verse 12 (clearly in \peiraz^{\, in verse 13) and so in Heb 3:8. Trials rightly faced are harmless, but wrongly met become temptations to evil. The adjective \poikilos\ (manifold) is as old as Homer and means variegated, many coloured as in Mt 4:24; 2Ti 3:6; Heb 2:4. In 1Pe 1:6 we have this same phrase. It is a bold demand that James here makes.

1:3 {Knowing} (\gin^skontes\). Present active participle of \gin^sk^{\, (experimental knowledge, the only way of getting this view of "trials" as "all joy"). {The proof} (\to dokimion\). Now known (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 259ff.) from the papyri examples of \dokimios\ as an adjective in the same sense (good gold, standard gold) as \dokimos\ proved or tested (Jas 1:12). The use of \to dokimion\ (neuter article with neuter single adjective) here and in 1Pe 1:7, clearly means "the genuine element in your faith," not "crucible" nor "proving." Your faith like gold stands the test of fire and is approved as standard. James here, as in verse 6; 2:1; 5:15, regards faith (\pistis\) like Paul "as the very foundation of religion" (Mayor). {Worketh} (\katergazetai\). Present (durative) middle indicative of the compound verb with the perfective sense of \kata\ as in Php 2:12, which see. {Patience} (\hupomon^n\). Old and common word for remaining under (\hupomen^{\, "staying power" (Ropes), as in

1:4 {Let have} (\echet“\). Present active imperative of \ech“\, let it keep on having. {Perfect} (\teleion\). See Ro 5:3f. for a like chain of blessings. Carry on the work to the end or completion (from \telos\, end) as in Joh 17:4 (to ergon telei“sas\, having finished the work). {That ye may be} (\hina^te\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \eimi\. This is the goal of patience. {Perfect and entire} (\teleioi kai holokl^roi\). Perfected at the end of the task (\telos\) and complete in all parts (\holokl^roi\, \holos\ whole and \kl^ros\ lot or part). "Perfected all over." These two adjectives often occur together in Philo, Plutarch, etc. See Ac 3:16 for \holokl^rian\ (perfect soundness). {Lacking in nothing} (\en m^deni leipomenoi\). Present passive participle of \leip“\ to leave. Negative statement of the preceding positive as often in James (cf. 1:6). There is now a digression (verses 5-8) from the discussion of \peirasmos\, which is taken up again in verse 9. The word \leipomenoi\ (lacking) suggests the digression.

1:5 {Lacketh wisdom} (\leipetai sophias\). Condition of first class, assumed as true, \ei\ and present passive indicative of \leip“\ to be destitute of, with ablative case \sophias\. "If any one falls short of wisdom." A banking figure, to have a shortage of wisdom (not just knowledge, \gn“se“s\, but wisdom \sophias\, the practical use of knowledge) . {Let him ask} (\aiteit“\). Present active imperative of \aite“\, "let him keep on asking." {Of God} (\para tou theou\). "From (from beside) God," ablative case with \para\. Liberally (\hapl“s\). This old adverb occurs here only in the N.T. (from \haplous\, single-fold, Mt 6:22, and \haplot^s\, simplicity, generosity, is common-- 2Co 8:2; Ro 12:8). But the adverb is common in the papyri by way of emphasis as simply or at all (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). Mayor argues for the sense of "unconditionally" (the logical moral sense) while Hort and Ropes agree and suggest "graciously." The other sense of "abundantly" or "liberally" suits the idea in \haplot^s\ in 2Co 8:2; Ro 12:8, but no example of the adverb in this sense has been found unless this is one here. See Isa 55:1 for the idea of God's gracious giving and the case of Solomon (1Ki 3:9-12; Pr 2:3). {Upbraideth not} (\m^ oneidizontos\). Present active participle of \oneidiz“\ (old verb to reproach, to cast in one's teeth, Mt 5:11) in the ablative case like \didontos\ agreeing with \theou\ and with the usual negative of the participle (\me\). This is the negative statement of \didontos hapl“s\ (giving graciously). The evil habit of giving stinging words along with the money is illustrated in Sirach 41:22 and Plutarch (De adulat., p. 64A).] Cf. Heb 4:16. {And it shall be given him} (\kai doth^setai aut“i\). First future passive of \did“mi\, a blessed promise in accord with the words of Jesus (Mt 7:7,11; Lu 11:13), meaning here not only "wisdom," but all good gifts, including the Holy Spirit. There are frequent reminiscences of the words of Jesus in this Epistle.

1:6 {In faith} (\en pistei\). Faith here "is the fundamental religious attitude" (Ropes), belief in God's beneficent activity and personal reliance on him (Oesterley). {Nothing doubting} (\m^den diakrinomenos\). Negative way of saying \en pistei\ (in faith), present passive participle of \diakrin“\, old verb to separate (\krin“\) between (\dia\), to discriminate as shown clearly in Ac 11:12, 15:9, but no example of the sense of divided against oneself has been found earlier than the N.T., though it appears in later Christian writings. It is like the use of \diamerizomai\ in Lu 11:18 and occurs in Mt 21:21; Mr 11:23; Ac 10:20; Ro 2:4; 4:20; 14:23. It is a vivid picture of internal doubt. {Is like} (\eoiken\). Second perfect active indicative with the linear force alone from \eik“\ to be like. Old form, but in N.T. only here and verse 23 (a literary touch, not in LXX). {The surge of the sea} (\klud“ni thalass^s\). Old word (from \kluz“\ to wash against) for a dashing or surging wave in contrast with \kuma\ (successive waves), in N.T. only here and Lu 8:24. In associative instrumental case after \eoiken\). In Eph 4:14 we have \kludoniz“\ (from \klud“n\), to toss by waves. {Driven by the wind} (\anemizomen“i\). Present passive participle (agreeing in case with \klud“ni\) of \anemiz“\, earliest known example and probably coined by James (from \anemos\), who is fond of verbs in \-iz“\ (Mayor). The old Greek used \anemo“\). In Eph 4:14 Paul uses both \kludoniz“\ and \peripher“\ anem“i\). It is a vivid picture of the sea whipped into white-caps by the winds. {Tossed} (\ripizomen“i\). Present passive participle also in agreement with \klud“ni\ from \ripiz“\, rare verb (Aristophanes, Plutarch, Philo) from \ripis\ (a bellows or fire-fan), here only in N.T. It is a picture of "the restless swaying to and fro of the surface of the water, blown upon by shifting breezes" (Hort), the waverer with slight ruffling.

1:7 {That man} (\ho anthr“pos ekeinos\). Emphatic use of \ekeinos\ {Of the Lord} (\para tou kuriou\). Ablative case with \para\ like \theou\ in verse 5.

1:8 {Man} (\an^r\). Instead of \anthr“pos\ (general term) in verse 7, perhaps for variety (Ropes), but often in James (1:12,23; 2:2; 3:2), though in other Epistles usually in distinction from \gun^ (woman). {Double-minded} (\dipsuchos\). First appearance of this compound known and in N.T. only here and 4:8. Apparently coined by James, but copied often in early Christian writings and so an argument for the early date of James' Epistle (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). From \dis\ twice and \psuch^ soul, double-souled, double-minded, Bunyan's "Mr. Facing-both-ways." Cf. the rebuke to Peter (\edistasas\ in Mt 14:31. {Unstable} (\akatastatos\). Late double compound (alpha privative and \katastatos\ verbal from \kathist^mi), in LXX once (Is 54:11) and in Polybius, in N.T. only here and 3:8. It means unsteady, fickle, staggering, reeling like a drunken man. Surely to James such "doubt" is no mark of intellectuality.

1:9 {But} (\de\). Return to the point of view in verse 2. {Of low degree} (\ho tapeinos\). "The lowly" brother, in outward condition (Lu 1:52), humble and poor as in Ps 9:39; Pr 30:14, not the spiritually humble as in Mt 11:29; Jas 4:6. In the LXX \tapeinos\ was used for either the poor in goods or the poor in spirit. Christianity has glorified this word in both senses. Already the rich and the poor in the churches had their occasion for jealousies. {Glory in his high estate} (\kauchasth“ en t“i hupsei autou\). Paradox, but true. In his low estate he is "in his height" (\hupsos\, old word, in N.T., also in Lu 1:78; Eph 3:1; etc.).

1:10 {In that he is made low} (\en t“i tapein“sei autou\). "In his low estate." Play on \tapein“sis\ (from \tapeino“\, Php 3:7), like \tapeinos\ of verse 9, old word in various senses, in N.T. only here, Lu 1:48; Ac 8:33; Php 3:21. The Cross of Christ lifts up the poor and brings down the high. It is the great leveller of men. {As the flower of the grass} (\h“s anthos chortou\). From the LXX (Isa 40:6). \Chortos\ means pasture, then grass (Mr 6:39) or fodder. \Anthos\ is old word, in N.T. only here, verse 11; 1Pe 1:24 (same quotation). This warning is here applied to "the rich brother," but it is true of all. {He shall pass away} (\pareleusetai\). Future middle indicative (effective aoristic future, shall pass completely away from earth).

1:11 {Ariseth} (\aneteilen\). Gnostic or timeless aorist active indicative of the old compound \anatell“, used here of plants (cf. \anathall“ in Php 4:10), often of the sun (Mt 13:6). {With the scorching wind} (\sun t“i kaus“ni\). Associative instrumental case with \sun\. In the LXX this late word (from \kausos\) is usually the sirocco, the dry east wind from the desert (Job 1:19). In Mt 20:12; Lu 12:55 it is the burning heat of the sun. Either makes sense here. {Withereth} (\ex^ranen\). Another gnostic aorist active indicative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 837) of \x^rain“, old verb (from \x^ros\, dry or withered, Mt 12:10), to dry up. Grass and flowers are often used to picture the transitoriness of human life. {Falleth} (\exepesen\). Another gnostic aorist (second aorist active indicative) of \ekpipt“ to fall out (off). {The grace} (\h^ euprepeia\). Old word (from \euprep^s\ well-looking, not in the N.T.), only here in N.T. Goodly appearance, beauty. {Of the fashion of it} (\tou pros“pou autou\). "Of the face of it." The flower is pictured as having a "face," like a rose or lily. {Perisheth} (\ap“leto\). Another gnostic aorist (second aorist middle indicative of \apollumi\, to destroy, but intransitive here, to perish). The beautiful rose is pitiful when withered. {Shall fade away} (\maranth^setai\). Future passive indicative of \marain“, old verb, to extinguish a flame, a light. Used of roses in Wisdom 2:8. {Goings} (\poreiais\). Old word from \poreu“ to journey, in N.T. only here and Lu 13:22 (of Christ's journey toward Jerusalem). The rich man's travels will come to "journey's end."

1:12 {Endureth} (\hupomenei\). Present active indicative of \hupomen“. Cf. verse 3. {Temptation} (\peirasmon\). Real temptation here. See verse 2 for "trials." {When he hath been approved} (\dokimos genomenos\). "Having become approved," with direct reference to \to dokimion\ in verse 3. See also Ro 5:4 for \dokim^ (approval after test as of gold or silver). This beatitude (\makarios\) is for the one who has come out unscathed. See 1Ti 6:9. {The crown of life} (\ton stephanon t^s z“^s\). The same phrase occurs in Re 2:10. It is the genitive of apposition, life itself being the crown as in 1Pe 5:4. This crown is "an honourable ornament" (Ropes), with possibly no reference to the victor's crown (garland of leaves) as with Paul in 1Co 9:25; 2Ti 4:8, nor to the linen fillet (\diad^ma) of royalty (Ps 20:3, where \stephanos\ is used like \diad^ma\, the kingly crown). \Stephanos has a variety of uses. Cf. the thorn chaplet on Jesus (Mt 27:29). {The Lord}. Not in the oldest Greek MSS., but clearly implied as the subject of \ep^ggeilato ({he promised}, first aorist middle indicative).

1:13 {Let no one say} (\m^deis leget^{\}). Present active imperative, prohibiting such a habit. {When he is tempted} (\peirazomenos). Present passive participle of \peiraz^{\}, here in evil sense of tempt, not test, as in Mt 4:1. Verses 12-18 give a vivid picture of temptation. {I am tempted of God} (\apo theou peirazomai). The use of \apo shows origin (\apo\ with ablative case), not agency (\hupo), as in Mr 1:13, of Satan. It is contemptible, but I have heard wicked and weak men blame God for their sins. Cf. Pr 19:3; Sirach 15:11f. Temptation does not spring "from God." {Cannot be tempted with evil} (\apeirastos kak^{\}n). Verbal compound adjective (alpha privative and \peiraz^{\}), probably with the ablative case, as is common with alpha privative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 516), though Moulton (_Prolegomena_, p. 74) treats it as the genitive of definition. The ancient Greek has \apeiratos (from \peira^{\}), but this is the earliest example of \apeirastos (from \peiraz^{\}) made on the same model. Only here in the N.T. Hort notes \apeiratos kak^{\}n as a proverb (Diodorus, Plutarch, Josephus) "free from evils." That is possible here, but the context calls for "untemptable" rather than "untempted." {And he himself tempteth no man} (\peirazei de autos oudena). Because "untemptable."

1:14 {When he is drawn away by his own lust} (\hupo t^s idias epithumias exelkomenos). \Epithumia is old word for craving (from \epithume^{\}, to have a desire for) either good (Php 1:23) or evil (Ro 7:7) as here. Like a fish drawn out from his retreat. {Enticed} (\deleazomenos). Present passive participle of \deleaz^{\}, old verb from \delear (bait), to catch fish by bait or to hunt with snares and Philo has \huph' h^don^s deleazetai (is enticed by pleasure). In N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:14,18. Allured by definite bait.

1:15 {Then} (\eita). The next step. {The lust} (\h^ epithumia). Note article, the lust (verse 14) which one has. {When it hath conceived} (\sullabousa). Second aorist active participle of \sullamban^{\}, old word to grasp together, in hostile sense (Ac 26:21), in friendly sense of help (Php 4:3), in technical sense of a woman taking a man's seed in conception (Lu 1:24), here also of lust (as a woman), "having conceived." The will yields to lust and conception takes place. {Beareth sin} (\tiktei hamartian\). Present active indicative of \tikte“\ to bring forth as a mother or fruit from seed, old verb, often in N.T., here only in James. Sin is the union of the will with lust. See Ps 7:14 for this same metaphor. {The sin} (\h^ hamartia\). The article refers to \hamartia\ just mentioned. {When it is full-grown} (\apotelestheisa\). First aorist passive participle of \apotele“\, old compound verb with perfective use of \apo\, in N.T. only here and Lu 13:32. It does not mean "full-grown" like \teleio“\, but rather completeness of parts or functions as opposed to rudimentary state (Hort) like the winged insect in contrast with the chrysalis or grub (Plato). The sin at birth is fully equipped for its career (Ro 6:6; Col 3:5). {Bringeth forth death} (\apokuei thanaton\). Late compound (\kue“\ to be pregnant, perfective use of \apo\) to give birth to, of animals and women, for normal birth (papyrus example) and abnormal birth (Hort). A medical word (Ropes) rather than a literary one like \tikte“\, The child of lust is sin, of sin is death, powerful figure of abortion. The child is dead at birth. For death as the fruit of sin see Ro 6:21-23; 8:6. "The birth of death follows of necessity when one sin is fully formed" (Hort).

1:16 {Be not deceived} (\m^ planfsthe\). Prohibition with \m^ and the present passive imperative of \plana“\, common verb to lead astray. This is the way of sin to deceive and to kill (Ro 7:7-14). The devil is a pastmaster at blinding men's eyes about sin (2Co 4:4; Ro 1:27; Eph 4:14; etc.).

1:17 {Gift} (\dosis\) {--boon} (\d^r^ma\). Both old substantives from the same original verb (\did“mi\), to give. \Dosis\ is the act of giving (ending \-sis\), but sometimes by metonymy for the thing given like \ktisis\ for \ktisma\ (Col 1:15). But \d^r^ma\ (from \d^re“\, from \d^ron\ a gift) only means a gift, a benefaction (Ro 5:16). The contrast here argues for "giving" as the idea in \dosis\, Curiously enough there is a perfect hexameter line here: \pfsa do / sis aga / th^ kai / pfn d^ / r^ma te / leion\, Such accidental rhythm occurs occasionally in many writers. Ropes (like Ewald and Mayor) argues for a quotation from an unknown source because of the poetical word \d^r^ma\, but that is not conclusive. {From above} (\an“then\). That is, from heaven. Cf. Joh 3:31; 19:11. {Coming down} (\katabainon\).

Present active neuter singular participle of \katabain“\ agreeing with \d“r^ma\, expanding and explaining \an“then\ (from above). {From the Father of lights} (\apo tou patros t“n ph“t“n\). "Of the lights" (the heavenly bodies). For this use of \pat^r\ see Job 38:28 (Father of rain); 2Co 1:3; Eph 1:17. God is the Author of light and lights. {With whom} (\par' h“i\). For \para\ (beside) with locative sense for standpoint of God see \para t“i the“i\ (Mr 10:27; Ro 2:11; 9:14; Eph 6:9). {Can be no} (\ouk eni\). This old idiom (also in Ga 3:28; Col 3:11) may be merely the original form of \en\ with recessive accent (Winer, Mayor) or a shortened form of \enesti\. The use of \eni en\ in 1Co 6:5 argues for this view, as does the use of \eine\ (einai) in Modern Greek (Robertson, Grammar_, p. 313). {Variation} (\parallag^). Old word from \parallass“\, to make things alternate, here only in N.T. In Aristeas in sense of alternate stones in pavements. Dio Cassius has \parallaxis\ without reference to the modern astronomical parallax, though James here is comparing God (Father of the lights) to the sun (Mal 4:2), which does have periodic variations. {Shadow that is cast by turning} (\trop^s aposkiasma\). \Trop^ is an old word for "turning" (from \trep“\ to turn), here only in N.T. \Aposkiasma\ is a late and rare word (\aposkiasmos\ in Plutarch) from \aposkiaz“\ (\apo, skia\) a shade cast by one object on another. It is not clear what the precise metaphor is, whether the shadow thrown on the dial (\aposkiaz“\ in Plato) or the borrowed light of the moon lost to us as it goes behind the earth. In fact, the text is by no means certain, for Aleph B papyrus of fourth century actually read \h^ trop^s aposkiasmatos\ (the variation of the turning of the shadow). Ropes argues strongly for this reading, and rather convincingly. At any rate there is no such periodic variation in God like that we see in the heavenly bodies.

1:18 {Of his own will} (\boul^theis\). First aorist passive participle of \boulomai\. Repeating the metaphor of birth in verse 15, but in good sense. God as Father acted deliberately of set purpose. {He brought us forth} (\apeku^sen\). First aorist active indicative of \apokue“\ (verse 15), only here of the father (4 Macc. 15:17), not of the mother. Regeneration, not birth of all men, though God is the Father in the sense of creation of all men (Ac 17:28f.). {By the word of truth} (\log“i al^theias\). Instrumental case \log“i\. The reference is thus to the gospel message of salvation even without the article (2Co 6:7) as here, and certainly with the article (Col 1:5; Eph 1:13; 2Ti 2:15). The message marked by truth (genitive case \al^{theias}\). {That we should be} (\eis to einai h^{mfs}\). Purpose clause \eis to\ and the infinitive \einai\ with the accusative of general reference \h^{mfs}\ (as to us). {A kind of first-fruits} (\aparch^{n tina}\). "Some first-fruits" (old word from \aparchomai\), of Christians of that age. See Ro 16:5.

1:19 {Ye know this} (\iste\). Or "know this." Probably the perfect active indicative (literary form as in Eph 5:5; Heb 12:17, unless both are imperative, while in Jas 4:4 we have \oidate\, the usual vernacular _Koin, _perfect indicative). The imperative uses only \iste\ and only the context can decide which it is. \Esto\ (let be) is imperative. {Swift to hear} (\tachus eis to akousai\). For this use of \eis to\ with the infinitive after an adjective see 1Th 4:9. For \eis to\ after adjectives see Ro 16:19. The picture points to listening to the word of truth (verse 18) and is aimed against violent and disputatious speech (chapter 3:1-12). The Greek moralists often urge a quick and attentive ear. {Slow to speak} (\bradus eis to lal^{sai}\). Same construction and same ingressive aorist active infinitive, slow to begin speaking, not slow while speaking. {Slow to anger} (\bradus eis orgⁿ\). He drops the infinitive here, but he probably means that slowness to speak up when angry will tend to curb the anger.

1:20 {The wrath of man} (\org^{andros}\). Here \an^r\ (as opposed to \gun[^]\ woman), not \anthr^{pos}\ of verse 19 (inclusive of both man and woman). If taken in this sense, it means that a man's anger (settled indignation in contrast with \thumos\, boiling rage or fury) does not necessarily work God's righteousness. There is such a thing as righteous indignation, but one is not necessarily promoting the cause of God by his own personal anger. See Ac 10:35 for "working righteousness," and Jas 2:9 for "working sin" (\ergazomai\ both times).

1:21 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Because of this principle. See Eph 4:25. {Putting away} (\apothemenoi\). Second aorist middle participle of \apotith^{mi}\, to put off, metaphor of removing clothing as in Ro 13:12; Col 3:8; Eph 4:22,25; 1Pe 2:1. {Filthiness} (\ruparian\). Late word (Plutarch) from \ruparos\, dirty (Jas 2:2), here only in N.T. Surely a dirty garment. {Overflowing of wickedness} (\perisseian kakias\). \Perisseia\ is a late word (from \perissos\, abundant, exceeding), only four times in N.T., in 2Co 8:2 with \charas\ (of joy), in Ro 5:17 with \charitos\ (of grace). \Kakia\ (from \kakos\, evil) can be either general like \ruparia\ (filthiness, naughtiness), or special like "malice." But any of either sense is a "superfluity." {With meekness} (\en pra-t̃ti\). In docility. "The contrast is with \org̃\ rather than \kakias\" (Ropes). {The implanted word} (\ton emphuton logon\). This old verbal adjective (from \emphu“\ to implant, to grow in), only here in N.T., meaning properly ingrown, inborn, not \emphuteuton\ (engrafted). It is "the rooted word" (verse 18), sown in the heart as the soil or garden of God (Mt 13:3-23; 15:13; 1Co 3:6). {Able to save} (\dunamenon s̃sai\). Cf. 1Pe 1:9; Jas 2:14; 4:12; 5:20; Ro 1:16. Ultimate salvation (effective aorist active infinitive \s̃sai\ from \s̃z̃\).

1:22 {But be ye} (\ginesthe de\). Rather, "But keep on becoming" (present middle imperative of \ginomai). {Doers of the word} (\poĩtai logou\). Old word for agent (\-t̃s\) from \poie“\ to do as in 4:11; Ro 2:13, but in Ac 17:28 our "poet" (long regarded as a "doer" or "maker"). {Hearers} (\akroatai\). Old word for agent again from \akroamai\ (to be a hearer), in N.T. only here and Ro 2:13. {Deluding yourselves} (\paralogizomenoi heautous\). Present middle (direct) participle of \paralogizomai\, to reckon aside (\para\) and so wrong, to cheat, to deceive. Redundant reflexive \heautous\ with the middle. In N.T. only here and Col 2:4. Such a man does not delude anyone but himself.

1:23 {And not a doer} (\kai ou poĩt̃s\). Condition of first class, assumed as true, and \ou\ (rather than \m̃) contrasts \poĩt̃s\ with \akroat̃s\). {Unto a man beholding} (\andri katanooounti\). Associative instrumental case after \eoiken\ as in 1:6. Note \andri\ as in 1:8 in contrast with \gunaiki\ (woman), not \anthr̃p̃i\ (general term for man). Present active participle of \katanoe“\ to put the mind down on (\kata, nous\), to consider attentively, to take note of, as in verse 24 (\katenõsen\). {His natural face} (\to pros̃pon t̃s genese“s autou\). "The face of his birth" (origin, lineage, nativity). For this use of \genesis\ see 3:6; Mt 1:1,18; Lu 1:13. {In a mirror} (\en esoptr̃i\). Old word (from \eis, opt̃“) in N.T. only here and 1Co 13:12. The mirrors of the ancients were not of glass, but of polished metal (of silver or usually of copper and tin). See \katoptrizomai\ in 2Co 3:18.

1:24 {He beholdeth himself} (\kateno^{sen} heauton). Usually explained as gnomic aorist like those in 1:11, but the ordinary force of the tenses is best here. "He glanced at himself (\kateno^{sen}\ aorist) and off he has gone (\apel^{luthen}\ perfect active) and straightway forgot (\epelatheto\, second aorist middle indicative of \epilanthanomai) what sort of a man he was" (\hopoiosⁿ\, back in the picture, imperfect tense). The tenses thus present a vivid and lifelike picture of the careless listener to preaching (Christ's wayside hearer).

1:25 {He that looketh into} (\ho parakupsas). First aorist active articular participle of \parakupt^α, old verb, to stoop and look into (Joh 20:5,11), to gaze carefully by the side of, to peer into or to peep into (1Pe 1:12). Here the notion of beside (\para) or of stooping (\kupt^α) is not strong. Sometimes, as Hort shows, the word means only a cursory glance, but the contrast with verse 24 seems to preclude that here. {The perfect law} (\nomon teleion). For \teleion see 1:17. See Ro 7:12 for Paul's idea of the law of God. James here refers to the word of truth (1:18), the gospel of grace (Ga 6:2; Ro 12:2). {The law of liberty} (\ton t^s eleutherias). "That of liberty," explaining why it is "perfect" (2:12 also), rests on the work of Christ, whose truth sets us free (Joh 8:32; 2Co 3:16; Ro 8:2). {And so continueth} (\kai parameinas). First aorist active articular participle again of \paramen^α, parallel with \parakupsas. \Paramen^α is to stay beside, and see Php 1:25 for contrast with the simplex \men^α. {Being} (\genomenos). Rather, "having become" (second aorist middle participle of \ginomai\ to become). {Not a hearer that forgetteth} (\ouk akroat^s epil^{smon}^s). "Not a hearer of forgetfulness" (descriptive genitive, marked by forgetfulness). \Epil^{smon} is a late and rare word (from \epilsm^αn\, forgetful, from \epilanthomai\, to forget, as in verse 24), here only in N.T. {But a doer that worketh} (\alla poi^t^s ergou). "But a doer of work," a doer marked by work (descriptive genitive \ergou), not by mere listening or mere talk. {In his doing} (\en tⁱ poi^{sei} autou). Another beatitude with \makarios as in 1:12, like the Beatitudes in Mt 5:3-12. \Poi^{sis} is an old word (from \poie^α\ for the act of doing), only here in N.T.

1:26 {Thinketh himself to be religious} (\dokei thr^{skos} einai). Condition of first class (\ei-dokei). \Thr^{skos} (of uncertain etymology, perhaps from \threomai\, to mutter forms of prayer) is predicate nominative after \einai\, agreeing with the subject of \dokei\ (either "he seems" or "he thinks"). This source of self-deception is in saying and doing. The word \thr^skos\ is found nowhere else except in lexicons. Hatch (Essays in Biblical Greek, pp. 55-57) shows that it refers to the external observances of public worship, such as church attendance, almsgiving, prayer, fasting (Mt 6:1-18). It is the Pharisaic element in Christian worship. {While he bridleth not his tongue} (\m^ chalinag "g" "n gl" "ssan heautou\). "Not bridling his own tongue." A reference to verse 19 and the metaphor is repeated in 3:12. This is the earliest known example of the compound \chalinag "ge" (\chalinog\, bridle ago\, to lead). It occurs also in Lucian. The picture is that of a man putting the bridle in his own mouth, not in that of another. See the similar metaphor of muzzling (\phimo") one's mouth (Mt 22:12 \ephim"th^). {Deceiveth} (\apat "n\). Present active participle from \apat^ (deceit). He plays a trick on himself. {Religion} (\thr^skeia\). Later form of \thr^ski^ (Herodotus) from \thr^skos\ above. It means religious worship in its external observances, religious exercise or discipline, but not to the exclusion of reverence. In the N.T. we have it also in Ac 26:5 of Judaism and in Col 2:18 of worshipping angels. It is vain (\mataios\, feminine form same as masculine) or empty. Comes to nothing.

1:27 {Pure religion and undefiled} (\thr^skeia kathara kai amiantos\). Numerous examples in papyri and inscriptions of \thr^skeia\ for ritual and reverential worship in the Roman Empire (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary; Deissmann, St. Paul, p. 251). As Hort shows, this is not a definition of religion or religious worship, but only a pertinent illustration of the right spirit of religion which leads to such acts. {Before our God and Father} (\para t "i the "i kai patri\). By the side of (\para\) and so from God's standpoint (Mr 10:27). \Amiantos\ (compound verbal adjective, alpha privative, miain" to defile), puts in negative form (cf. 1:4,6) the idea in \kathara\ (pure, clean). This (\haut^). Feminine demonstrative pronoun in the predicate agreeing with \thr^skeia\ . {To visit} (\episkeptesthai\). Epexegetic (explaining haut^) present middle infinitive of \episkeptomai\, common verb to go to see, to inspect, present tense for habit of going to see. See Mt 25:36,43 for visiting the sick. {The fatherless and widows} (\orphanous kai ch^{ras}\). "The natural objects of charity in the community" (Ropes). \Orphanos\ is old word for bereft of father or mother or both. In N.T. only here and Joh 14:18. Note order (orphans before widows). {Unspotted} (\aspilon\). Old adjective (alpha privative and \spilos\, spot), spotless. This the more important of the two illustrations and the hardest to execute. {To keep} (t^{rein}\). Present active infinitive, "to keep on keeping oneself un-specked from the world" (a world, \kosmos\, full of dirt and slime that bespatters the best of men).

2:1 {My brethren} (\adelp^hoi mou\). Transition to a new topic as in 1:19; 2:5,14; 3:1; 5:7. {Hold not} (\m[^] echete\). Present active imperative of \ech\ with negative \m[^]\, exhortation to stop holding or not to have the habit of holding in the fashion condemned. {The faith of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\tⁿ pistin tou kuriou h^m“n I^{sou} Christou\). Clearly objective genitive, not subjective (faith of), but "faith in our Lord Jesus Christ," like \echete pistin theou\ (Mr 11:22), "have faith in God." See the same objective genitive with \pistis\ in Ac 3:6; Ga 2:16; Ro 3:22; Re 14:12. Note also the same combination as in 1:1 "our Lord Jesus Christ" (there on a par with God). {The Lord of Glory} (\t^s dox^s\). Simply "the Glory." No word for "Lord" (\kuriou\ in the Greek text. \T^s dox^s\ clearly in apposition with \tou kuriou I^{sou} Christou\. James thus terms "our Lord Jesus Christ" the Shekinah Glory of God. See Heb 9:5 for "the cherubim of Glory." Other New Testament passages where Jesus is pictured as the Glory are Ro 9:4; 2Co 4:6; Eph 1:17; Heb 1:3. Cf. 2Co 8:9; Php 2:5-11. {With respect of persons} (\en pros“pol[^]mpsiais\). A Christian word, like \pros“pol[^]mpt^s\ (Ac 10:34) and \pros“pol[^]mpteite\ (Jas 2:9), not in LXX or any previous Greek, but made from \pros“pon lambanein\ (Lu 20:21; Ga 2:6), which is \a\ Hebrew idiom for panim nasa_, "to lift up the face on a person," to be favorable and so partial to him. See \pros“pol[^]mpsia\ in this sense of partiality (respect of persons) in Ro 2:11; Col 3:25; Eph 6:9 (nowhere else in N.T.). Do not show partiality.

2:2 {For} (\gar\). An illustration of the prohibition. {If there come in} (\ean eiselhⁱ\). Condition of third class (supposable case) with \ean\ and second (ingressive) aorist active subjunctive of \eiserchomai\. {Into your synagogue} (\eis sunag“gⁿ hum“n\). The common word for the gathering of Jews for worship (Lu 12:11) and particularly for the building where they met (Lu 4:15,20,28, etc.). Here the first is the probable meaning as it clearly is in Heb 10:25 (\tⁿ episunag“gⁿ heaut“n\), where the longer compound occurs. It may seem a bit odd for a Christian church (\ekkl^{sia}\) to be termed \sunag“gⁿ\, but James is writing to Jewish Christians and this is another incidental argument for the early date. Epiphanius (_Haer_. XXX. 18) states that the Ebionites call their church \sunag“g^\", not \ekkl^sia\\. In the fourth century an inscription has \sunag“g^\" for the meeting-house of certain Christians. {A man with a gold ring} (\an^r chrusodaktulios\\). "A gold-fingered man," "wearing a gold ring." The word occurs nowhere else, but Lucian has \chrusocheir\\ (gold-handed) and Epictetus has \chrousos daktulios\\ (golden seal-rings). "Hannibal, after the battle of Cannae, sent as a great trophy to Carthage, three bushels of gold-rings from the fingers of Roman knights slain in battle" (Vincent). {In fine clothing} (\en esth^ti lamprfi\\). "In bright (brilliant) clothing" as in Lu 23:11; Ac 10:30; Re 18:41. In contrast with "vile clothing" (\en ruparfi esth^ti\\), "new glossy clothes and old shabby clothes" (Hort). \Ruparos\\ (late word from \rupos\\, filth, 1Pe 3:21) means filthy, dirty. In N.T. only here and Re 22:11 (filthy). {Poor man} (\pt“chos\\). Beggarly mendicant (Mt 19:21), the opposite of \plousios\\ (rich).

2:3 {And ye have regard to} (\epibleps^te de epi\\). First aorist active subjunctive (still with \ean\\ of verse 2) of \epiblep“\\, followed by repeated preposition \epi\\, to gaze upon, old compound, in N.T. only here and Lu 1:48; 9:38. {Weareth} (\phorounta\\). "Wearing," present active participle of the old frequentative verb \phore“\\ (from \pher“), to bear constantly, to wear (Mt 11:8). Note repeated article \t^n\\ (the) with \esth^ta\\ pointing to verse 2. {And say} (\kai eip^te\\). Continuing the third-class condition with \ean\\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \eipon\\. {Sit thou here in a good place} (\su kathou h“de kal“s\\). Emphatic position of \su\\, "Do thou sit here in a good place." Present middle imperative of \kath^mai\\ to sit for the literary \kath^so\\. See Mt 23:6 for the first seats in the synagogue (places of honour). {And ye say to the poor man} (\kai t“i pt“ch“i eip^te\\). Third class condition with \ean\\ continued as before (\eip^te\\). Note article \t“i\\ pointing to verse 2. {Stand thou there} (\su st^thi ekei\\). Second aorist (intransitive) active imperative of \hist^mi\\, to place. Ingressive aorist, Take a stand. \Su\\ emphatic again. The MSS. vary in the position of \ekei\\ (there). {Or sit under my footstool} (\^kathou hupo to hupopodion mou\\). For this use of \hupo\\ "down against" or "down beside" see Ex 19:17 \hupo to oros\\ ("at the foot of the mountain") and \hupo se\\ ("at thy feet") (De 33:3). Conquerors often placed their feet on the necks of the victims (Lu 20:43).

2:4 {Are ye not divided in your own mind?} (\ou diekrith^{te} en heautois;|). First aorist (gnomic) passive indicative of \diakrin“, to separate, conclusion of the third-class condition (future) in a rhetorical question in the gnomic aorist (as if past) with ou expecting an affirmative answer. For this idiom (gnomic aorist) in a conclusion of the third-class condition see 1Co 7:28. "Were ye not divided in (among) yourselves?" Cf. 1:6; Mt 21:21. {Judges with evil thoughts} (\kritai dialogismⁿ pon^r“n|). Descriptive genitive as in 1:25. \Dialogismos\ is an old word for reasoning (Ro 1:21). Reasoning is not necessarily evil, but see Mt 15:19 (\pon^{roi}|) and Mr 7:21 (\kakoi|) for evil reasonings, and 1Ti 2:8 without an adjective. See Jas 1:8; 4:8 for \dipsuchos|. They are guilty of partiality (a divided mind) as between the two strangers.

2:5 {Did not God choose?} (\ouch ho theos exelexato;|). Affirmative answer expected. First aorist middle (indirect, God chose for himself) indicative of \ekleg“, the very form used by Paul three times of God's choice in 1Co 1:27f. {As to the world} (\tⁱ kosmⁱ“i|). The ethical dative of interest, as the world looks at it as in Ac 7:20; 1Co 1:18; 2Co 10:4; Jas 4:4. By the use of the article (the poor) James does not affirm that God chose all the poor, but only that he did choose poor people (Mt 10:23-26; 1Co 1:26-28). {Rich in faith} (\plousious en pistei|). Rich because of their faith. As he has shown in 1:9f. {Which he promised} (\h^s epeggeilato|). Genitive of the accusative relative \hⁿ| attracted to the case of the antecedent \basileias| (the Messianic kingdom), the same verb and idea already in 1:12 (\ep^ggeilato|). Cf. the beatitude of Jesus in Mt 5:3 for the poor in spirit.

2:6 {But ye have dishonoured the poor man} (\humeis de ^{timasate} ton pt^{ch}on|). First aorist active indicative of \atimaz“, old verb from \atimos|, dishonoured (Mt 13:57). In the act of partiality pictured in 2:3. {Oppress you} (\katadunasteuousin humⁿ|). Not very common compound (\katadunasteu“, present active indicative, from \kata| and \dunast^s|, potentate, Lu 1:52), used of the devil in Ac 10:38 (only other N.T. example). Examples in papyri of harsh treatment by men in authority. Already poor Christians are feeling pressure from rich Jews as overlords. {Drag you} (\helkousin humas|). Old and vigorous word for violent treatment, as of Paul in Ac 16:19; 21:30. Cf. such violence in Lu 12:58; Ac 8:3. {Before the judgment-seats} (\eis krit^{ria}\). "To courts of justice" as in 1Co 6:2,4 (only other N.T. examples). Common in the papyri in this sense. From \krin^α\ to judge, \krit^s\ (judge), place where judgment is given.

2:7 {Blasphe} (\blasph^{mousin}\). Present active indicative of common verb \blasph^{me}\ (from \blasph^{mos}\, speaking evil, \blax\ or \blapt^α\ and \ph^m\), as in Lu 22:65. {The honourable name} (\to kalon onoma\). "The beautiful name." {By the which ye were called} (\to epikl^{then eph'} humfs\). "The one called upon you" (first aorist passive articular participle of epikale^α\, to put a name upon, to give a surname to, as Ac 10:18). What name is that? Almost certainly the name of Christ as we see it in Ac 11:26; 26:28; 1Pe 4:14,16. It was blasphemy to speak against Christ as some Jews and Gentiles were doing (Ac 13:45; 18:6; 26:11; 1Co 12:3; 1Ti 1:13). Cf. Ac 15:17.

2:8 {Howbeit} (\mentoi\). Probably not adversative here, but simply confirmatory, "if now," "if indeed," "if really." Common in Xenophon in this sense. See the contrast (\de\ in verse 9. {If ye fulfil} (\ei teleite\). Condition of first class, assumed as true with \ei\ and present active indicative of \tele^α\, old verb, to bring to completion, occurring in Ro 2:27 also with \nomos\ (law). Jesus used \pl^{ro}\ in Mt 4:17. James has \t^{re}\ in 2:10. {The royal law} (\nomon basilikon\). Old adjective for royal, regal (from basileus\ king), as of an officer (Joh 4:46). But why applied to \nomos\? The Romans had a phrase, _lex regia_, which came from the king when they had kings. The absence of the article is common with \nomos\ (4:11). It can mean a law fit to guide a king, or such as a king would choose, or even the king of laws. Jesus had said that on the law of love hang all the law and the prophets (Mt 22:40), and he had given the Golden Rule as the substance of the Law and the prophets (Mt 7:12). This is probably the royal law which is violated by partiality (Jas 2:3). It is in accord with the Scripture quoted here (Le 19:18) and ratified by Jesus (Lu 10:28).

2:9 {But if ye have respect of persons} (\ei de pros^{pol^{mpteite}}\). Condition of first class by contrast with that in verse 8. For this verb (present active indicative), formed from \pros^{pon lamban}\, here alone in the N.T., see in 2:1. A direct reference to the partiality there pictured. {Ye commit sin} (\hamartian ergazesthe\). "Ye work a sin." A serious charge, apparently, for what was regarded as a trifling fault. See Mt 7:23, \hoi ergazomenoi t^n anomian\ (ye that work iniquity), an apparent reminiscence of the words of Jesus there (from Ps 6:8). {Being convicted} (\elegchomenoi\). Present passive participle of \elegch\, to convict by proof of guilt (Joh 3:20; 8:9,46; 1Co 14:24). {As transgressors} (\h"s parabatai\). For this word from \parabain\, to step across, to transgress, see Ga 2:18; Ro 2:25,27. See this very sin of partiality condemned in Le 19:15; De 1:17; 16:19. To the law and to the testimony.

2:10 {Whosoever shall keep} (\hostis t^r^s^i\). Indefinite relative clause with \hostis\ and aorist active subjunctive of \t^re\, old verb, to guard (from t^ros\ guarding), as in Mt 27:36, without \an\ (though often used, but only one example of modal |ean=an| in James, viz., 4:4). This modal \an\ (\|ean\|) merely interprets the sentence as either more indefinite or more definite (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 957f.). {And yet stumble in one point} (\ptais^i de en heni\). First aorist active subjunctive also of \ptai\, old verb, to trip, as in 3:2; Ro 11:11. "It is incipient falling" (Hort). {He is become} (\gegonen\). Second perfect indicative of \ginomai\, "he has become" by that one stumble. {Guilty of all} (\pant^"n enochos\). Genitive of the crime with \enochos\, old adjective from \enech\ (to hold on or in), held in, as in Mr 3:29. This is law. To be a lawbreaker one does not have to violate all the laws, but he must keep all the law (\holon ton nomon\|) to be a law-abiding citizen, even laws that one does not like. See Mt 5:18f. for this same principle. There is Talmudic parallel: "If a man do all, but omit one, he is guilty for all and each." This is a pertinent principle also for those who try to save themselves. But James is urging obedience to all God's laws.

2:11 {He that said} (\ho eip^"n\|) {--said also} (\eipen kai\|). The unity of the law lies in the Lawgiver who spoke both prohibitions (\m^ and the aorist active subjunctive in each one, moicheus^is, phoneus^is\). The order here is that of B in Ex 20 (Lu 18:20; Ro 13:9), but not in Mt 5:21,27 (with |ou\ and future indicative). {Now if thou dost not commit adultery, but killest} (\ei de ou moicheueis, phoneueis de\|). Condition of first class with \ou\ (not |m^|) because of the contrast with \de\, whereas \ei m^ would mean "unless," a different idea. So \ou\ in 1:23. {A transgressor of the law} (\parabat^s nomou\|)

as in verse 9. Murder springs out of anger (Mt 5:21-26). People free from fleshly sins have often "made their condemnation of fleshly sins an excuse for indulgence towards spiritual sins" (Hort).

2:12 {So speak ye, and so do} (\hout“s laleite kai hout“s poieite\). Present active imperatives as a habit. For the combination see 1:19-21 contrasted with 1:22-25, and 1:26 with 1:27. {By a law of liberty} (\dia nomou eleutherias\). The law pictured in 1:25, but law, after all, not individual caprice of "personal liberty." See Ro 2:12 for this same use of \dia\ with \krin“ in the sense of accompaniment as in Ro 2:27; 4:11; 14:20. "Under the law of liberty."

2:13 {Without mercy} (\aneleos\). Found here only save a doubtful papyrus example (\anele“s\) for the vernacular \anile“s\ and the Attic \an^le^s\). For this principle of requital see Mt 5:7; 6:14; 7:1f.; 18:33. {Glorieth against} (\katakauchtai\). Present middle indicative of the old compound verb \katakauchaomai\, to exult over (down), in N.T. only here, 3:14; Ro 11:18. Only mercy can triumph over justice with God and men. "Mercy is clothed with the divine glory and stands by the throne of God" (Chrysostom). See Ro 8:31-39; Mt 9:13; 12:7.

2:14 {What doth it profit?} (\ti ophelos;\). Rhetorical question, almost of impatience. Old word from \ophell“, to increase, in N.T. only here, verse 16; 1Co 15:32. "\Ti ophelos\ was a common expression in the vivacious style of a moral diatribe" (Ropes). {If a man say} (\ean leg^i tis\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and the present active subjunctive of \leg“, "if one keep on saying." {He hath faith} (\pistin echein\). Infinitive in indirect assertion after \leg^i\). {But have not works} (\erga de m^ech^i\). Third-class condition continued, "but keeps on not having (\m^ and present active subjunctive \ech^i\) works." It is the spurious claim to faith that James here condemns. {Can that faith save him?} (\m^ dunatai h^ pistis s“sai auton;\). Negative answer expected (\m^). Effective aorist active infinitive \s“sai\ (from \s“z“\). The article \h^ here is almost demonstrative in force as it is in origin, referring to the claim of faith without works just made.

2:15 {If a brother or sister be naked} (\ean adelphos ^adelph^ gumnoi huparch“sin\). Condition again of third class (supposable case) with \ean\ and present active subjunctive of \huparch“, to exist, in the plural though \^ (or) is used and not \kai (and). Hence \gunnoi is masculine plural in the predicate nominative. It does not here mean absolutely naked, but without sufficient clothing as in Mt 25:36ff.; Joh 21:7; Ac 19:16. {In lack of daily food} (\leipomenoi t^s eph^merou troph^s\). Present passive participle of \leip^ and ablative case \troph^s\ like \leipetai sophias\ (1:5). The old adjective \eph^meros\ (\ho epi h^meran ^n\, that which is for a day) occurs here only in the N.T., though \eph^meria\ (daily routine) is found in Lu 1:5,8. This phrase occurs in Diodorus, but not in LXX.

2:16 {And one of you say unto them} (\eip^i de tis autois ex hum^n\). Third-class condition again continued from verse 15 with second aorist active subjunctive \eip^i\ {Go in peace} (\hupagete en eir^n^i\). Present active imperative of \hupag^\. Common Jewish farewell (Jud 18:6; 1Sa 1:17; 20:42; 2Sa 15:9). Used by Jesus (Mr 5:34; Lu 7:50). {Be ye warmed and filled} (\thermainesthe kai chortazesthe\). Present imperative either middle (direct) or passive. We have \thermainomai\ as a direct middle in Joh 18:18 (were warming themselves) and that makes good sense here: "Warm yourselves." \Chortaz^ was originally used for pasturing cattle, but came to be used of men also as here. "Feed yourselves" (if middle, as is likely). Instead of warm clothes and satisfying food they get only empty words to look out for themselves. {And yet ye give not} (\m^ d^te de\). Third-class condition with \de\ (and yet) and \m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \did^mi\, to give, cold deeds with warm words. {The things needful to the body} (\ta epit^deia tou s^matos\). "The necessities of the body" (the necessities of life). Old adjective from adverb \epit^des\ (enough), only here in N.T. {What doth it profit?} (\ti ophelos;\). As in verse 14 and here the conclusion (apodosis) of the long condition begun in verse 15.

2:17 {If it have not works} (\ean m^ ech^i erga\). Another condition of the third class with \ean\ and \m^ and the present active subjunctive of \ech^, "if it keep on not having works." {In itself} (\kath' heaut^n\). In and of itself (according to itself), inwardly and outwardly dead (\nekra\). Same idiom in Ac 28:16; Ro 14:22. It is a dead faith.

2:18 {Yea, a man will say} (\all' erei tis\). Future active of \eipon\ {But some one will say}, not confirmatory. James introduces an imaginary objector who speaks one sentence: "Thou hast faith and I have works" (\su pistin echeis kag“ erga ech“\). Then James answers this objector. The objector can be regarded as asking a short question: "Hast thou faith?" In that case James replies: "I have works also." {Show me thy faith apart from thy works} (\deixon moi t^ⁿ pistin sou ch“ris t“ⁿ erg“ⁿ\). This is the reply of James to the objector. First aorist active imperative of \deiknumi\, tense of urgency. The point lies in \ch“ris\, which means not "without," but "apart from," as in Heb 11:6 (with the ablative case), "the works that properly belong to it and should characterise it" (Hort). James challenges the objector to do this. {And I by my works will shew thee my faith} (\kag“ soi deix“ ek t“ⁿ erg“ⁿ mou t^ⁿ pistin\). It is not faith _or_ works, but proof of real faith (live faith _vs_ . dead faith). The mere profession of faith with no works or profession of faith shown to be alive by works. This is the alternative clearly stated. Note \pistin\ (faith) in both cases. James is not here discussing "works" (ceremonial works) as a means of salvation as Paul in Ga 3; Ro 4, but works as proof of faith.

2:19 {Thou believest that God is one} (\su pisteueis hoti heis theos estin\). James goes on with his reply and takes up mere creed apart from works, belief that God exists (there is one God), a fundamental doctrine, but that is not belief or trust in God. It may be mere creed. {Thou doest well} (\kal“s poieis\). That is good as far as it goes, which is not far. {The demons also believe} (\kai ta daimonia pisteuousin\). They go that far (the same verb \pisteu“). They never doubt the fact of God's existence. {And shudder} (\kai phrissousin\). Present active indicative of \phriss“, old onomatopoetic verb to bristle up, to shudder, only here in N.T. Like Latin _horreo_ (horror, standing of the hair on end with terror). The demons do more than believe a fact. They shudder at it.

2:20 {But wilt thou know?} (\theleis de gn“nai?\). "But dost thou wish to know?" Ingressive aorist active infinitive of \ginosk“\ (come to know). James here introduces a new argument like Ro 13:3. {O vain man} (\“ anthr“pe kene\). Goes on with the singular objector and demolishes him. For "empty" (deficient) Paul uses \aphr“n\ (fool) in 1Co 15:36 and just \anthr“pe\ in Ro 2:1; 9:20. {Barren} (\arge\). See 2Pe 1:8 (not idle nor unfruitful) and Mt 12:36, but Hort urges "inactive" as the idea here, like money with no interest and land with no crops.

2:21 {Justified by works} (\ex erg“n edikai“th^). First aorist passive indicative of \dikaio“ (see Galatians and Romans for this verb, to declare righteous, to set right) in a question with \ouk expecting an affirmative answer. This is the phrase that is often held to be flatly opposed to Paul's statement in Ro 4:1-5, where Paul pointedly says that it was the faith of Abraham (Ro 4:9) that was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness, not his works. But Paul is talking about the faith of Abraham before his circumcision (4:10) as the basis of his being set right with God, which faith is symbolized in the circumcision. James makes plain his meaning also. {In that he offered up Isaac his son upon the altar} (\anenegkas Isaak ton huion autou epi to thusiast^rion). They use the same words, but they are talking of different acts. James points to the offering (\anenegkas second aorist--with first aorist ending--active participle of \anapher“) of Isaac on the altar (Ge 22:16f.) as _proof_ of the faith that Abraham already had. Paul discusses Abraham's faith as the basis of his justification, that and not his circumcision. There is no contradiction at all between James and Paul. Neither is answering the other. Paul may or may not have seen the Epistle of James, who stood by him loyally in the Conference in Jerusalem (Ac 15; Ga 2).

2:22 {Thou seest} (\blepeis). Obvious enough with any eyes to see. This may be a question, seest thou? {Wrought with} (\sun^rgei). Imperfect active of \sunerge“, old verb for which see Ro 8:28. Followed by associative-instrumental case \ergois. Faith cooperated with the deed of offering up Isaac. {Was made perfect} (\etelei“th^). First aorist passive indicative of \teleio“, to carry to the end, to complete like love in 1Jo 4:18. See Jas 1:4 for \teleion ergon.

2:23 {Was fulfilled} (\epl^r“th^). First aorist passive indicative of \pl^ro“, the usual verb for fulfilling Scripture. So James quotes Ge 15:6 as proving his point in verse 21 that Abraham had works with his faith, the very same passage that Paul quotes in Ro 4:3 to show that Abraham's faith preceded his circumcision and was the basis of his justification. And both James and Paul are right, each to illustrate a different point. {And he was called the friend of God} (\kai philos theou ekl^th^). First aorist passive indicative of \kal^o. Not a part of the Scripture quoted. Philo calls Abraham the friend of God and see _Jubilees_ 19:9; 30:20. The Arabs today speak of Abraham as God's friend. It was evidently a common description before James used it, as in Isa 41:8; 2Ch 20:7.

2:24 {Ye see} (\horfte). Present indicative active of \hora. Now he uses the plural again as in 2:14. {Is justified} (\dikaoutai). Present passive indicative of \dikaio, here not "is made righteous," but "is shown to be righteous." James is discussing the proof of faith, not the initial act of being set right with God (Paul's idea in Ro 4:1-10). {And not only by faith} (\kai ouk ek piste"s monon). This phrase clears up the meaning of James. Faith (live faith) is what we must all have (2:18), only it must shew itself also in deeds as Abraham's did.

2:25 {Rahab the harlot} (\Raab h^ porn^). Her vicious life she left behind, but the name clung to her always. For our purposes the argument of James may seem stronger without the example of Rahab (Jos 2:1-21; 6:17; 22-25; Mt 1:5; Heb 11:31). It is even said in Jewish Midrash that Rahab married Joshua and became an ancestor of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. {In that she received} (\hupodexamen^). First aorist middle participle of \hupodechomai, to welcome. {The messengers} (\tous aggelous). Original meaning of \aggelos (Mt 11:10). In Heb 11:31 we have \kataskopous (spies, scouts). {Sent out} (\ekbalousa). Second aorist active participle of \ekball, to hurl out. {Another way} (\heterfi hod"i). "By another way" (instrumental case), by a window instead of a door (Jos 2:15f.).

2:26 {Apart from the spirit} (\ch"ris pneumatos). "Apart from breath" (the breath of life). It is not easy to tell when one is dead, but the absence of a sign of breath on a glass before the mouth and nose is proof of death. Startling picture of dead faith in our churches and church members with only a name to live (Re 3:2).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

3:1 {Be not many teachers} (\m^ polloi didaskaloi ginesthe\). Prohibition with \m^ and present middle imperative of \ginomai\ "Stop becoming many teachers" (so many of you). There is thus a clear complaint that too many of the Jewish Christians were attempting to teach what they did not clearly comprehend. There was a call for wise teachers (verses 13f.), not for foolish ones. This soon became an acute question, as one can see in I Cor. 12 to 14. They were not all teachers (1Co 12:28f.; 14:26). The teacher is here treated as the wise man (3:13-18) as he ought to be. The rabbi was the teacher (Mt 23:7f.; Joh 1:38; 3:10; 20:16). Teachers occupied an honourable position among the Christians (Eph 4:11; Ac 13:1). James counts himself a teacher (we shall receive, 3:1) and this discussion is linked on with 1:19-27. Teachers are necessary, but incompetent and unworthy ones do much harm. {Heavier judgment} (\meizon krima\). "Greater sentence." See Mr 12:40; Lu 20:47 for \perrisoteron krima\ (the sentence from the judge, Ro 13:2). The reason is obvious. The pretence of knowledge adds to the teacher's responsibility and condemnation.

3:2 {In many things} (\polla\). Accusative neuter plural either cognate with \ptaiomen\ or accusative of general reference. On \ptaiomen\ (stumble) see on 2:10. James includes himself in this list of stumblers. {If not} (\ei-ou\). Condition of first class with \ou\ (not m^) negating the verb \ptaiei\ {In word} (\en log"i\). In speech. The teacher uses his tongue constantly and so is in particular peril on this score. {The same} (\houtos\). "This one" (not ho autos the same). {A perfect man} (\teleios an^r\). "A perfect husband" also, for \an^r\ is husband as well as man in distinction from woman (\gun^). The wife is at liberty to test her husband by this rule of the tongue. {To bridle the whole body also} (\chalinag" g^sai kai holon to s^ma\). See 1:26 for this rare verb applied to the tongue (\gl^ssan\). Here the same metaphor is used and shown to apply to the whole body as horses are led by the mouth. The man follows his own mouth whether he controls the bridle therein (1:26) or someone else holds the reins. James apparently means that the man who bridles his tongue does not stumble in speech and is able also to control his whole body with all its passions.

See Tit 1:11 about stopping people's mouths (\epistomiz“).

3:3 {If we put} (\ei ballomen). Condition of the first class assumed as true. {The horses' bridles} (\t“n hipp“n tous chalinous). \Hipp“n (genitive plural of \hippos\, horse, old word, in N.T. only here except in the Apocalypse), put first because the first of the several illustrations of the power and the peril of the tongue. This is the only N.T. example of \chalinous, old word for bridle (from \chala“\ to slacken, let down), except Re 14:20. {That they may obey us} (\eis to peithesthai autous h^min). Present middle infinitive of \peith“ with \eis to as a purpose clause with the dative \h^min after \peithesthai and \autous the accusative of general reference. {We turn about} (\metagomen). Present active indicative of \metag“, late compound to change the direction (\meta\, \ag“), to guide, in N.T. only here and verse 4. The body of the horse follows his mouth, guided by the bridle.

3:4 {The ships also} (\kai ta ploia). Old word from \ple“, to sail (Mt 4:21). Another metaphor like "horses" (\hippoi).
"There is more imagery drawn from mere natural phenomena in the one short Epistle of James than in all St. Paul's epistles put together" (Howson). {Though they are so great} (\t^likauta onta). Concessive participle of \eimi. The quantitative pronoun \t^likoutos occurs in the N.T. only here, 2Co 1:10; Heb 2:3; Re 16:18. If James had only seen the modern mammoth ships. But the ship on which Paul went to Malta carried 276 persons (Ac 27:37). {And are driven} (\kai elaunomena). Present passive participle of \elaun“, old verb, in this sense (2Pe 2:17) for rowing (Mr 6:48; Joh 6:19). {Rough} (\skl^ron). Old adjective (from \skell“\, to dry up), harsh, stiff, hard (Mt 25:24). {Are yet turned} (\metagetai). Present passive indicative of the same verb, \metag“, in verse 3. James is fond of repeating words (1:13f.; 2:14,16; 2:21,25). {By a very small rudder} (\hupo elachistou p^daliou). For the use of \hupo (under) with things see Lu 8:14; 2Pe 2:7. There is possibly personification in the use of \hupo for agency in Jas 1:14; 2:9; Col 2:18. \P^daliou (from \p^don\, the blade of an oar) is an old word, in N.T. only here and Ac 27:40. \Elachistou is the elative superlative as in 1Co 4:3 (from the Epic \elachus\ for \mikros). {The impulse} (\h^ horm^h). Old word for rapid, violent motion, here of the hand that worked the rudder, in N.T. only here and Ac

14:5 (rush or onset of the people). {Of the steersman} (\|tou euthunontos\). Present active genitive articular participle of \|euthun\, old verb, to make straight (from \|euthus\, straight, level, Mr 1:3), in N.T. only here and Joh 1:23. Used also of the shepherd, the charioteer, and today it would apply to the chauffeur. "The twin figure of the control of horse and of ship are frequently found together in later Greek writers" (Ropes). As in Plutarch and Philo. {Willeth} (\|bouletai\). Present middle indicative of \|boulomai\, common verb to will. Here intention of the steersman lies back of the impact of the hand on the rudder.

3:5 {A little member} (\|mikron melos\). \|Melos\ is old and common word for members of the human body (1Co 12:12, etc.; Ro 6:13, etc.). {Boasteth great things} (\|megala auchei\). Present active indicative of \|auchē\, old verb, here only in N.T. The best MSS. here separate \|megala\ from \|auchē\, though \|megalauchē\ does occur in Aeschylus, Plato, etc. \|Megala\ is in contrast with \|mikron\. {How much--how small} (\|h^likon--h^lik^n\). The same relative form for two indirect questions together, "What-sized fire kindles what-sized forest?" For double interrogatives see Mr 15:24. The verb \|anaptei\ is present active indicative of \|anapt\, to set fire to, to kindle (Lu 12:49, only other N.T. example except some MSS. in Ac 28:2). \|Hul^n\ is accusative case, object of \|anaptei\, and occurs here only in N.T., though old word for forest, wood. Forest fires were common in ancient times as now, and were usually caused by small sparks carelessly thrown.

3:6 {The tongue is a fire} (\|h^gl^ssa pur\). So necessarily since there is no article with \|pur\ (apparently same word as German _feuer_, Latin _purus_, English _pure, fire_). This metaphor of fire is applied to the tongue in Pr 16:27; 26:18-22; Sirach 28:22. {The world of iniquity} (\|ho kosmos t^s adikias\). A difficult phrase, impossible to understand according to Ropes as it stands. If the comma is put after \|pur\ instead of after \|adikias\, then the phrase may be the predicate with \|kathistatai\ (present passive indicative of \|kathist^mi\, "is constituted, or the present middle 'presents itself'"). Even so, \|kosmos\ remains a difficulty, whether it means the "ornament" (1Pe 3:3) or "evil world" (Jas 1:27) or just "world" in the sense of widespread power for evil. The genitive \|adikias\ is probably descriptive (or qualitative). Clearly James means to say that the tongue can play havoc in the members of the human body.

{Which defileth the whole body} (\h^ spilousa holon to s^ma). Present active participle of \spilo^ late _Koin,_, verb, to stain from \spilos (spot, also late word, in N.T. only in Eph 5:27; 2Pe 2:13), in N.T. only here and Jud 1:23. Cf. 1:27 \aspilon (unspotted). {Setteth on fire} (\phlogizousa). Present active participle of \phlogiz^ old verb, to set on fire, to ignite, from \phlox (flame), in N.T. only in this verse. See \anaptei (verse 5). {The wheel of nature} (\ton trochon genese^s). Old word for wheel (from \trech^ to run), only here in N.T. "One of the hardest passages in the Bible" (Hort). To what does \trochon refer? For \genese^s see 1:23 apparently in the same sense. Vincent suggests "the wheel of birth" (cf. Mt 1:1,18). The ancient writers often use this same phrase (or \kuklos\, cycle, in place of \trochos), but either in a physiological or a philosophical sense. James may have caught the metaphor from the current use, but certainly he has no such Orphic or Pythagorean doctrine of the transmigration of souls, "the unending round of death and rebirth" (Ropes). The wheel of life may be considered either in motion or standing still, though setting on fire implies motion. There is no reference to the zodiac. {And is set on fire by hell} (\kai phlogizomen^ hupo gehenn^s). Present passive participle of \phlogiz^ giving the continual source of the fire in the tongue. For the metaphor of fire with \gehenna see Mt 5:22.

3:7 {Kind} (\phusis). Old word from \phu^ order of nature (Ro 1:26), here of all animals and man, in 2Pe 1:4 of God and redeemed men. {Of beasts} (\th^ri^"n). Old word diminutive from \th^r and so "little beasts" originally, then wild animals in general (Mr 1:13), or quadrupeds as here. These four classes of animals come from Ge 9:2f. {Birds} (\petein^"n). Old word for flying animals (from \petomai\, to word from \herp^ to crawl (Latin _serpo_), hence serpents. {Things in the sea} (\enali^"n). Old adjective (\en, hals\, sea, salt) in the sea, here only in N.T. The four groups are put in two pairs here by the use of \te kai with the first two and the second two. See a different classification in Ac 10:12; 11:6. {Is tamed} (\damazetai). Present passive indicative of \damaz^ old verb kin to Latin _dominus_ and English tame, in N.T. only in this passage and Mr 5:4. The present tense gives the general picture of the continuous process through the ages of man's lordship over the animals as stated in Ge 1:28. {Hath been tamed} (\dedamastai). Perfect passive indicative of the same verb, repeated to present the state of conquest in some cases (domestic animals, for instance). {By mankind} (\t^i phusei t^i anthr^pin^i\). Instrumental case with repeated article and repetition also of \phusis\, "by the nature the human." For \anthr^pinos\ see Ac 17:25.

3:8 {No one} (\oudeis\). Especially his own tongue and by himself, but one has the help of the Holy Spirit. {A restless evil} (\akatastaton kakon\). Correct reading, not \akatascheton\, for which see 1:8. The tongue is evil when set on fire by hell, not evil necessarily. {Full of deadly poison} (\mest^iou thanat^phorou\). Feminine adjective agreeing with \gl^ssa\, not with \kakon\ (neuter). \Iou\ (poison here, as in Ro 3:13, but rust in 5:3, only N.T. examples), old word. Genitive case after \mest^ (full of). \Thanat^phorou\, old compound adjective (from \thanatos\, death, \pher^, to bear or bring), death-bringing. Here only in N.T. Like the restless death-bringing tongue of the asp before it strikes.

3:9 {Therewith} (\en aut^i\). This instrumental use of \en\ is not merely Hebraistic, but appears in late _Koin,_ writers (Moulton, _Prol._, pp. 11f., 61f.). See also Ro 15:6. {We bless} (\eulougoumen\). Present active indicative of \euloge^, old verb from \eulogos\ (a good word, \eu, logos), as in Lu 1:64 of God. "This is the highest function of speech" (Hort). {The Lord and Father} (\ton kurion kai patera\). Both terms applied to God. {Curse we} (\katar^metha\). Present middle indicative of the old compound verb \kataraoimai\, to curse (from \katara\ a curse), as in Lu 6:28. {Which are made after the likeness of God} (\tous kath' homoi^sin theou gegonotas\). Second perfect articular participle of \ginomai\ and \homoi^sis\, old word from \homoio^ (to make like), making like, here only in N.T. (from Ge 1:26; 9:6), the usual word being \homoi^ma\, resemblance (Php 2:7). It is this image of God which sets man above the beasts. Cf. 2Co 3:18.

3:10 {Ought not} (\ou chr^). The only use of this old impersonal verb (from \chra^) in the N.T. It is more like \prepei\ (it is appropriate) than \dei\ (it is necessary). It is a moral incongruity for blessing and cursing to come out of the same mouth. {So to be} (\hout^s ginesshai\). "So to keep on happening," not just "to be," present middle infinitive of \ginomai\.

3:11 {The fountain} ($\backslash h^{\wedge} p^{\wedge} g^{\wedge} \backslash$). Old word for spring (Joh 4:14). {Opening} ($\backslash op^{\wedge} s \backslash$). Old word for fissure in the earth, in N.T. only here and Heb 11:38 (caves). {Send forth} ($\backslash bruei \backslash$). Present active indicative of $\backslash bru^{\wedge} \backslash$, old verb, to bubble up, to gush forth, here only in N.T. The use of $\backslash m^{\wedge} ti \backslash$ shows that a negative answer is expected in this rhetorical question. {The sweet and the bitter} ($\backslash to\ glukukai\ to\ pikron \backslash$). Cognate accusatives with $\backslash bruei \backslash$. Separate articles to distinguish sharply the two things. The neuter singular articular adjective is a common way of presenting a quality. $\backslash Glukus \backslash$ is an old adjective (in N.T. only here and Re 10:9f.), the opposite of $\backslash pikron \backslash$ (from old root, to cut, to prick), in N.T. only here and verse 14 (sharp, harsh).

3:12 {Can?} ($\backslash m^{\wedge} dunatai; \backslash$). Negative answer expected. See the same metaphor in Mt 7:16f. {Fig-tree} ($\backslash suk^{\wedge} \backslash$). Old and common word (Mt 21:19f.). {Figs} ($\backslash suka \backslash$). Ripe fruit of $\backslash h^{\wedge} suk^{\wedge} \backslash$. {Olives} ($\backslash elaias \backslash$). Elsewhere in the N.T. for olive-trees as Mt 21:1. {Vine} ($\backslash ampelos \backslash$). Old word (Mt 26:29). {Salt water} ($\backslash halukon \backslash$). Old adjective from $\backslash hals \backslash$ ($\backslash halas \backslash$ salt), here only in N.T.

3:13 {Who} ($\backslash Tis \backslash$). Rhetorical interrogative like Lu 11:11. Common in Paul and characteristic of the diatribe. James here returns to the standpoint of verse 1 about many teachers. Speech and wisdom are both liable to abuse (1Co 1:5,17; 2:1-3:20). {Wise and understanding} ($\backslash sophos\ kai\ epist^{\wedge} m^{\wedge} n^{\wedge} \backslash$). $\backslash Sophos \backslash$ is used for the practical teacher (verse 1), $\backslash epist^{\wedge} m^{\wedge} n^{\wedge} \backslash$ (old word from $\backslash epistamai \backslash$, here only in N.T.) for an expert, a skilled and scientific person with a tone of superiority. In De 1:13,15; 4:6, the two terms are practically synonyms. {Let him shew} ($\backslash deixat^{\wedge} \backslash$). First aorist active imperative of $\backslash deiknumi \backslash$, old verb to show. As about faith in 2:18. Emphatic position of this verb. {By his good life} ($\backslash ek\ t^{\wedge} s\ kal^{\wedge} s\ anastroph^{\wedge} s \backslash$). For this literary _Koin,_ word from $\backslash anastrephomai \backslash$ (walk, conduct) see Ga 1:13. Actions speak louder than words even in the case of the professional wise man. Cf. 1Pe 1:15. {In meekness of wisdom} ($\backslash en\ praut^{\wedge} ti\ sophias \backslash$). As in 1:21 of the listener, so here of the teacher. Cf. Mt 5:5; 11:29 and Zac 9:9 of King Messiah quoted in Mt 21:5. Startling combination.

3:14 {Bitter jealousy} ($\backslash z^{\wedge} lon\ pikron \backslash$). $\backslash Z^{\wedge} los \backslash$ occurs in N.T. in good sense (Joh 2:17) and bad sense (Ac 5:17). Pride of knowledge is evil (1Co 8:1) and leaves a bitter taste. See "root of bitterness" in Heb 12:14 (cf. Eph 4:31). This is a condition of the first class. {Faction} (\erithian). Late word, from \erithos (hireling, from \eritheu\ to spin wool), a pushing forward for personal ends, partisanship, as in Php 1:16. {In your heart} (\en t'i kardifi hum^n). The real fountain (\p^g^, verse 11). {Glory not} (\m^ katakauchfsthe). Present middle imperative of \katakauchaomai, for which see 2:13. Wisdom is essential for the teacher. Boasting arrogance disproves the possession of wisdom. {Lie not against the truth} (\pseudesthe kata t's al^theias). Present middle imperative of \pseudomai, old verb, to play false, with \m^ carried over. Lying against the truth is futile. By your conduct do not belie the truth which you teach; a solemn and needed lesson. Cf. Ro 1:18f., 2:18,20.

3:15 {This wisdom} (\haut^ h^ sophia). All talk and disproved by the life, counterfeit wisdom, not real wisdom (1:5; 3:17). {Coming down from above} (\katerchomen^ an^then). As in 1:5,17. All true wisdom comes from God. {Earthly} (\epigeios). Old adjective, on earth (\epi, g^), as in Joh 3:12, then with earthly limitations (Php 3:19), as here. {Sensual} (\psuchik^). Old adjective, belonging to the \psuch^, the sensuous or animal life (1Co 2:14 and here). {Devilish} (\daimoni^d^s). Late adjective from \daimonion (demon) and so demoniacal or demon-like, here only in N.T.

3:16 {Confusion} (\akatastasia). Late word (from \akatastatos), 1:8; 3:8), a state of disorder (1Co 14:33). {Vile} (\phaulon). Kin to German _faul_, first slight, ordinary, then bad. The steps are cheap, paltry, evil. Opposed to \agatha (good) in Joh 5:39.

3:17 {First pure} (\pr^ton men hagn^). First in rank and time. \Hagnos is from the same root as \hagios (holy), old adjective, pure from fault, not half-good and half-bad, like that above. {Then peaceable} (\epeita eir^nik^). Old adjective from \eir^n^ (peace), loving peace here, bringing peace in Heb 12:11 (only N.T. examples). But clearly great as peace is, purity (righteousness) comes before peace and peace at any price is not worth the having. Hence Jesus spurned the devil's peace of surrender. {Gentle} (\epieik^s). Old adjective (from \eikos\, reasonable, fair), equitable (Php 4:5; 1Pe 2:18). No English word renders it clearly. {Easy to be entreated} (\eupeith^s).

Old adjective (\eu, peithomai), compliant, approachable. Only here in N.T. {Mercy} (\eleous). Practical help (2:13,16). {Good fruits} (\karp“n agath“n). \Kaloι karpoi\ in Mt 7:17f. Good deeds the fruit of righteousness (Php 1:11). {Without variance} (\adiakritos). Late verbal adjective (from alpha privative and diakrin“\, to distinguish). "Unhesitating," not doubting (\diakrinomenos) like the man in 1:6. Here only in N.T. This wisdom does not put a premium on doubt. {Without hypocrisy} (\anupokritos). Late and rare verbal adjective (alpha privative and hupokrin“). Not hypocritical, sincere, unfeigned (Ro 12:9).

3:18 {Is sown in peace} (\en eir“n“i speiretai). Present passive indicative of \speir“\, to sow. The seed which bears the fruit is sown, but James catches up the metaphor of \karpos\ (fruit) from verse 17. Only in peace is the fruit of righteousness found. {For them that make peace} (\tois poiousin eir“n“n). Dative case of the articular participle of \poie“\, See Eph 2:15 for this phrase (doing peace), and Col 1:20 for \eir“nopoie“\, of Christ, and Mt 5:9 for \eir“nopoioi\ (peacemakers). Only those who act peaceably are entitled to peace.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(James: Chapter 3)

4:1 {Whence} (\pothen\). This old interrogative adverb (here twice) asks for the origin of wars and fights. James is full of interrogatives, like all diatribes. {Wars} (\polemoi\) {--fightings} (\machai\). {War} (\polemos\, old word, Mt 24:6) pictures the chronic state or campaign, while \mach^ (\i*also old word, 2Co 7:5*) presents the separate conflicts or battles in the war. So James covers the whole ground by using both words. The origin of a war or of any quarrel is sometimes hard to find, but James touches the sore spot here. {Of your pleasures} (\ek t^*n h^don^*n hum^*n\). Old word from \h^domai\. Ablative case here after \ek\, "out of your sinful, sensual lusts," the desire to get what one does not have and greatly desires. {That war} (\t^*n strateuomen^*n\). Present middle articular participle (ablative case agreeing with \h^don^n\) of \strateu^, to carry on a campaign, here as in 1Pe 2:11 of the passions in the human body. James seems to be addressing nominal Christians, "among you" (\en humin\). Modern church disturbances are old enough in practice.*

4:2 {Ye lust} (\epithumeite\). Present active indicative of \epithume^, old word (from \epi, thumos\, yearning passion for), not necessarily evil as clearly not in Lu 22:15 of Christ, but usually so in the N.T., as here. Coveting what a man or nation does not have is the cause of war according to James. {Ye kill and covet} (\phoneuete kai z^loute\). Present active indicatives of \phoneu^ (old verb from \phoneus\, murderer) and \z^lo^, to desire hotly to possess (1Co 12:31). It is possible (perhaps probable) that a full stop should come after \phoneuete\ (ye kill) as the result of lusting and not having. Then we have the second situation: "Ye covet and cannot obtain (\epituchein\, second aorist active infinitive of \epitugchan^), and (as a result) ye fight and war." This punctuation makes better sense than any other and is in harmony with verse 1. Thus also the anticlimax in \phoneuete\ and \z^loute\ is avoided. Mayor makes the words a hendiadys, "ye murderously envy." {Ye have not, because ye ask not} (\ouk echete dia to m^ aiteisthai humas\). James refers again to \ouk echete\ (ye do not have) in verse 2. Such sinful lusting will not obtain. "Make the service of God your supreme end, and then your desires will be such as God can fulfil in answer to your prayer" (Ropes). Cf. Mt 6:31-33. The reason here is expressed by \dia\ and the accusative of the articular present middle infinitive of \aite“, used here of prayer to God as in Mt 7:7f. \Humfs\ (you) is the accusative of general reference. Note the middle voice here as in \aiste\ in 3. Mayor argues that the middle here, in contrast with the active, carries more the spirit of prayer, but Moulton (Prol., p. 160) regards the distinction between \aite“ and \aiteomai\ often "an extinct subtlety."

4:3 {Because ye ask amiss} (\dioti kak“s aiste\). Here the indirect middle does make sense, "ye ask for yourselves" and that is "evilly" or amiss (\kak“s\), as James explains. {That ye may spend it in your pleasures} (\hina en tais h^donais hum“n dapan^te\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist subjunctive of \dapan“, old verb from \dapan^, cost (Lu 14:28 only in N.T.), to squander (Lu 15:14). God does not hear prayers like this.

4:4 {Ye adulteresses} (\moichalides\). \Moichoi kai\ (ye adulterers) is spurious (Syrian text only). The feminine form here is a common late word from the masculine \moichoi\. It is not clear whether the word is to be taken literally here as in Ro 7:3, or figuratively for all unfaithful followers of Christ (like an unfaithful bride), as in 2Co 11:1f.; Eph 5:24-28 (the Bride of Christ). Either view makes sense in this context, probably the literal view being more in harmony with the language of verses 2f. In that case James may include more than Christians in his view, though Paul talks plainly to church members about unchastity (Eph 5:3-5). {Enmity with God} (\echthra tou theou\). Objective genitive \theou\ with \echthra\ (predicate and so without article), old word from \echthros, enemy (Ro 5:10), with \eis theon\ (below and Ro 8:7). {Whosoever therefore would be} (\hos ean oun boul^th^i\). Indefinite relative clause with \hos\ and modal \ean\ and the first aorist passive (deponent) subjunctive of \boulomai, to will (purpose). {A friend of the world} (\philos tou kosmou\). Predicate nominative with infinitive \einai\ agreeing with \hos\. See 2:23 for \philos theou\ (friend of God). {Maketh himself} (\kathistatai\). Present passive (not middle) indicative as in 3:6, "is constituted," "is rendered." {An enemy of God} (\echthros tou theou\). Predicate nominative and anarthrous and objective genitive (\theou).

4:5 {The Scripture} (\h^ graph^). Personification as in Ga 3:8; Jas 2:23. But no O.T. passage is precisely like this, though it is "a poetical rendering" (Ropes) of Ex 20:5. The general thought occurs also in Ge 6:3-5; Isa 63:8-16, etc. Paul has the same idea also (Ga 5:17,21; Ro 8:6,8). It is possible that the reference is really to the quotation in verse 6 from Pr 3:34 and treating all before as a parenthesis. There is no way to decide positively. {In vain} (\ken"s). Old adverb (Aristotle) from \ken"s (2:20), here alone in N.T. "Emptily," not meaning what it says. {Made to dwell} (\kat"ikisen). First aorist active of \katoikiz"\', old verb, to give a dwelling to, only here in N.T. {Long unto envying} (\pros phthonon epipothei). A difficult phrase. Some even take \pros phthonon with \legei rather than with \epipothei, as it naturally does go, meaning "jealously." But even so, with God presented as a jealous lover, does \to pneuma refer to the Holy Spirit as the subject of \epipothei or to man's spirit as the object of \epipothei? Probably the former and \epipothei then means to yearn after in the good sense as in Php 1:8.

4:6 {More grace} (\meizona charin). "Greater grace." Greater than what? "Greater grace in view of the greater requirement" (Ropes), like Ro 5:20f. God does this. {Wherefore} (\dio). To prove this point James quotes Pr 3:34. {God resisteth the proud} (\ho theos huper^phanois antitassetai). Present middle (direct) indicative of \antitass"\', old military term, to range in battle against, with dative case (Ro 13:2) as in 5:6. \Huper^phanois (\huper, phainomai) is like our vernacular "stuck-up folks" (Ro 1:30), "haughty persons." {But giveth grace to the humble} (\tapeinois de did"sin charin). Anarthrous adjective again, "to humble or lowly persons," for which word see 1:9f. Cf. 2:5-7; 5:1-6.

4:7 {Be subject therefore unto God} (\hupotag^te oun t"i the"i). Second aorist (ingressive) passive imperative of \hupotass"\', old verb, to range under (military term also). Same form in 1Pe 2:23; 5:5. With the dative case \the"i (unto God). The aorist has the note of urgency in the imperative. Note the ten aorist imperatives in verses 7-10 (\hupotag^te, antist^te, eggisate, katharisate, hagnisate, talaip"r^sate, penth^sate, klausate, metatrap^t"\', tapein"th^te). {But resist the devil} (\antist^te de t"i diabol"i). Second aorist (ingressive) active (intransitive) imperative of \anthist^{mi}\, "take a stand against." Dative case \diabolⁱ\. Result of such a stand is that the devil will flee (\p^{heuxetai}\, future middle of \p^{heug}\). See 1Pe 5:8f.; Eph 6:11f.; Lu 10:17.

4:8 {Draw nigh to God} (\eggisate tⁱ theⁱ\). First aorist active imperative of \eggiz[“]\, late verb from \eggus\ (near) as in Mt 3:2. With dative case again of personal relation. The priests in the sanctuary drew nigh to God (Ex 19:22), as we should now. {Cleanse your hands} (\katharisate cheiras\). First aorist active imperative of \kathariz[“]\, to cleanse, from dirt in a ritual sense (Ex 30:19-21; Mr 7:3,19). Here it is figurative, as in Ho 1:16; Ps 24:4. If we always had clean (from sin) hands and hearts? {Ye sinners} (\hamart^{“loi}\). A sharp term to strike the conscience, "a reproach meant to startle and sting" (Ropes). {Purify your hearts} (\hagnisate kardias\). First aorist active imperative of \hagniz[“]\, old verb from \hagnos\ (Jas 3:17), ceremonially (Ac 21:24,26), but here morally as in 1Pe 1:22; 1Jo 3:3. Anarthrous use of \kardias\ as of \cheiras\ (wash hands, purify hearts). {Ye double-minded} (\dipsuchoi\). As in 1:8.

4:9 {Be afflicted} (\talaip^{“r}sate\). First aorist active imperative \talaip^{“re}\, old verb from \talaip^{“ros}\ (Ro 7:24), to endure toils, here only in N.T. Cf. \talaip^{“riais}\ in 5:1. {Mourn} (\penth^{^sate}\). First aorist active imperative of \penthe[“]\, old verb from \penthos\ (mourning, 4:9), as in Mt 5:4f. Often in N.T. joined as here with \klai[“]\, to weep (Mr 16:10; Lu 6:25). A call to the godly sorrow spoken of in 2Co 7:10 (Mayor), like an O.T. prophet. {Weep} (\klausate\). First aorist active imperative of \klai[“]\. {Laughter} (\gel^{“s}\). Old word from Homer down, only here in N.T. as \gela[“]\, to {laugh} (opposite of \klai[“]\), in N.T. only in Lu 6:21,25, but \katagela[“]\ in Lu 8:53 (Mr 5:40; Mt 9:24). {Be turned} (\metatrap^{^t}\). Second aorist passive imperative of \metatrep[“]\, old word, to turn about, to transmute, in Homer (not in Attic), here only in N.T. {Heaviness} (\kat^{^pheian}\). Old word from \kat^{^ph}s\ (of a downcast look, from \kata\, \pha[^] eyes), hanging down of the eyes like the publican in Lu 18:13, here only in N.T.

4:10 {Humble yourselves} (\tapein^{“th}te\). First aorist passive imperative of \tapeino[“]\, old verb from \tapeinos\ (1:9), as in Mt 18:4. The passive here has almost the middle or reflexive sense. The middle voice was already giving way to the passive. See 1Pe 5:6 for this same form with the same promise of exaltation. {He shall exalt you} (\hups“sei humas). Future active indicative of \hupso“, common verb from \hupsos (height), used by Jesus in contrast with \tapeino“ as here (Mt 23:12; Lu 14:11; 18:14).

4:11 {Speak not one against another} (\m^ katalaleite all^l“n). Prohibition against such a habit or a command to quit doing it, with \m^ and the present imperative of \katalale“, old compound usually with the accusative in ancient Greek, in N.T. only with the genitive (here, 1Pe 2:12; 3:16). Often harsh words about the absent. James returns to the subject of the tongue as he does again in 5:12 (twice before, 1:26; 3:1-12). {Judgeth} (\krin“n). In the sense of harsh judgment as in Mt 7:1; Lu 6:37 (explained by \katadikaz“). {Not a doer of the law, but a judge} (\ouk poi^t^s nomou, alla krit^s). This tone of superiority to law is here sharply condemned. James has in mind God's law, of course, but the point is the same for all laws under which we live. We cannot select the laws which we will obey unless some contravene God's law, and so our own conscience (Ac 4:20). Then we are willing to give our lives for our rebellion if need be.

4:12 {One only} (\heis). No "only" in the Greek, but \heis here excludes all others but God. {The lawgiver} (\ho nomothet^s). Old compound (from \nomos, tith^mi), only here in N.T. In Ps 9:20. Cf. \nomothete“ in Heb 7:11; 8:6. {To save} (\s“sai, first aorist active infinitive of \s“z“) {and to destroy} (\kai apolesai, first aorist active infinitive of \apollumi\ to destroy). Cf. the picture of God's power in Mt 10:28, a common idea in the O.T. (De 32:39; 1Sa 2:16; 2Ki 5:7). {But who art thou?} (\su de tis ei;). Proleptic and emphatic position of \su (thou) in this rhetorical question as in Ro 9:20; 14:4. {Thy neighbour} (\ton pl^sion). "The neighbour" as in Jas 2:8.

4:13 {Go to now} (\age nun). Interjectional use of \age (from \ag“) as in 5:1 (only N.T. instances) with a plural verb (\hoi legontes, present active articular participle, ye that say) as is common in ancient Greek like \ide nun ^kousate (Mt 26:65). {Today or tomorrow} (\s^meron ^aurion). Correct text (Aleph B), not \kai (and). {Into this city} (\eis t^nde t^n polin). Old demonstrative \hode, rare in N.T. (Lu 10:39) save in neuter plural \tade (these things Ac 21:11). One would point out the city on the map (Mayor) as he made the proposal (we will go, \poreusometha). {And spend a year there} (\kai poi^somen ekei eniauton). Another future (active of \poie^{\}). "We will do a year there." {And trade} (\kai emporeusometha). Future middle of \emporeuomai (\en, poreuomai\, to go in), old verb from \emporos (a merchant or trader, a drummer, one going in and getting the trade, Mt 13:45), a vivid picture of the Jewish merchants of the time. {And get gain} (\kai kerd^somen). Future (Ionic form) active of \kerdain^{\}, old verb from \kerdos (gain, Php 1:21), as in Mt 16:26.

4:14 {Whereas ye know not} (\hoitines ouk epistasthe). The longer relative \hostis defines here more precisely (like Latin _qui_) \hoi legontes (ye who say) of verse 13 in a causal sense, as in Ac 10:47, "who indeed do not know" (present middle indicative of \epistamai). {What shall be on the morrow} (\t^s aurion). Supply \h^meras (day) after \aurion. This is the reading of B (Westcott) "on the morrow" (genitive of time), but Aleph K L cursives have \to t^s aurion ("the matter of tomorrow"), while A P cursives have \ta t^s aurion ("the things of tomorrow"). The sense is practically the same, though \to t^s aurion is likely correct. {What is your life?} (\poia h^z^{\ hum^{\}). Thus Westcott and Hort punctuate it as an indirect question, not direct. \Poia is a qualitative interrogative (of what character). {As vapour} (\atmis). This is the answer. Old word for mist (like \atmos\, from which our "atmosphere"), in N.T. only here and Ac 2:19 with \kapnou (vapour of smoke (from Joe 2:30)). {For a little time} (\pros oligon). See same phrase in 1Ti 4:8, \pros kairon in Lu 8:13, \pros h^{\ran in Joh 5:35. {That appeareth and then vanisheth away} (\phainomen^epeita kai aphanizomen^{\}). Present middle participles agreeing with \atmis, "appearing, then also disappearing," with play on the two verbs (\phainomai, aphaniz^{\} as in Mt 6:19, from \aphan^s\ hidden Heb 4:13) with the same root \phan (\phain^{\, a-phan-^s).

4:15 {For that ye ought to say} (\anti tou legein humfs). "Instead of the saying as to you" (genitive of the articular infinitive with the preposition \anti\ and the accusative of general reference with \legein), "instead of your saying." {If the Lord will} (\ean ho kurios thel^i). Condition of the third class with \ean and the present active subjunctive (or first aorist active \theles^i\ in some MSS). The proper attitude of mind (Ac 18:21; 1Co 4:19; 16:7; Ro 1:19; Php 2:19,24; Heb 6:3), not to be uttered always in words like a charm. This Hellenistic formula was common among the ancient heathen, as today among modern Arabs like the Latin _deo volente_. {This or that} (\touto^ekeino). Applicable to every act.

4:16 {In your vauntings} (\en tais alazoniais hum^'n). Old word for braggart talk (from \alazoneuomai\, to act the \alaz^'n\ empty boaster Ro 1:30), common in Aristophanes, in N.T. only here and 1Jo 2:16. {Glorying} (\kauch^sis). Act of glorying, late word from \kauchaomai, good if for Christ (1Th 2:19), bad if for self as here.

4:17 {To him that knoweth} (\eidoti). Dative case of second perfect participle \eid^'s (from \oida), and with the infinitive to know how, "to one knowing how." {To do good} (\kalon poiein). "To do a good deed." {And doeth it not} (\kai m^ poiounti). Dative again of the present active participle of \poie^', "and to one not doing it." Cf. "not a doer" (1:23) and Mt 7:26. {Sin} (\hamartia). Unused knowledge of one's duty is sin, the sin of omission. Cf. Mt 23:23.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(James: Chapter 4)

5:1 {Come now, ye rich} (\age nun hoi plousioi). Exclamatory interjection as in 4:13. Direct address to the rich as a class as in 1Ti 6:17. Apparently here James has in mind the rich as a class, whether believer, as in 1:10f., or unbeliever, as in 2:1f., 6. The plea here is not directly for reform, but a warning of certain judgment (5:1-6) and for Christians "a certain grim comfort in the hardships of poverty" (Ropes) in 5:7-11. {Weep and howl} (\klausate ololuzontes). "Burst into weeping (ingressive aorist active imperative of \klai) as in 4:9), howling with grief" (present active participle of the old onomatopoetic verb \ololuz, here only in N.T., like Latin _ululare_, with which compare \alalaz in Mt 5:38). {For your miseries} (*\epi tais talaip\riais hum*ⁿ). Old word from \talaip\ros (Ro 7:24) and like \talaip\re in Jas 4:9 (from \tla to endure and \p\ros a callus). {That are coming upon you} (\tais eperchomenais). Present middle participle of the old compound \eperchomai to come upon, used here in futuristic prophetic sense.

5:2 {Riches} (\ho ploutos). Masculine singular, but occasionally neuter \to ploutos in nominative and accusative (2Co 8:2). Apparently \pleotos fulness (from \pleos full, \pimpl\mi to fill). "Wealth." {Are corrupted} (\ses\pen). Second perfect active indicative of \s\p (root \sap as in \sapros, rotten), to corrupt, to destroy, here intransitive "has rotted." Only here in N.T. On the worthlessness of mere wealth see Mt 6:19,24. {Were moth-eaten} (\s\toibr\ta gegonen). "Have become (second perfect indicative of \ginomai, singular number, though \himatia, neuter plural, treated collectively) moth-eaten" (\s\toibr\ta, late and rare compound from \s\^s, moth, Mt 6:19f. and \br\tos, verbal adjective of \bibr\sk to eat Joh 6:13. This compound found only here, Job 13:28, Sibyll. Orac. _Proem_. 64). Rich robes as heirlooms, but moth-eaten. Vivid picture. Witness the 250 "lost millionaires" in the United States in 1931 as compared with 1929. Riches have wings.

5:3 {Are rusted} (\kati\tai). Perfect passive indicative (singular for \chrusos\ and \arguros\ are grouped as one) of \katio“, late verb (from \ios\, rust) with perfective sense of \kata\, to rust through (down to the bottom), found only here, Sir. 12:11, Epictetus (_Diss_. 4, 6, 14). {Rust} (\ios\). Poison in Jas 3:8; Ro 3:13 (only N.T. examples of old word). Silver does corrode and gold will tarnish. Dioscorides (V.91) tells about gold being rusted by chemicals. Modern chemists can even transmute metals as the alchemists claimed. {For a testimony} (\eis marturion\). Common idiom as in Mt 8:4 (use of \eis\ with accusative in predicate). {Against you} (\humin\). Dative of disadvantage as in Mr 6:11 (\eis marturion autois\) where in the parallel passage (Lu 9:5) we have \eis marturion ep' autous\. "To you" will make sense, as in Mt 8:4; 10:18, but "against" is the idea here as in Lu 21:13. {Shall eat} (\phagetai\). Future middle (late form from \ephagon\) of defective verb \esthi“, to eat. {Your flesh} (\tas sarkas\). The plural is used for the fleshy parts of the body like pieces of flesh (Re 17:16; 19:18,21). Rust eats like a canker, like cancer in the body. {As fire} (\h“s pur\). Editors differ here whether to connect this phrase with \phagetai\, just before (as Mayor), for fire eats up more rapidly than rust, or with the following, as Westcott and Hort and Ropes, that is the eternal fire of Gehenna which awaits them (Mt 25:41; Mr 9:44). This interpretation makes a more vivid picture for \eth^saurisate\ (ye have laid up, first aorist active indicative of \th^sauriz“, Mt 6:19 and see Pr 16:27), but it is more natural to take it with \phagetai\.

5:4 {The hire} (\ho misthos\). Old word for wages (Mt 20:8). {Labourers} (\ergat“n\). Any one who works (\ergazomai\), especially agricultural workers (Mt 9:37). {Who mowed} (\t“n am^sant“n\). Genitive plural of the articular first aorist active participle of \ama“\ (from \hama\, together), old verb, to gather together, to reap, here only in N.T. {Fields} (\ch“ras\). Estates or farms (Lu 12:16). {Which is of you kept back by fraud} (\ho aphuster^menos aph' hum“n\). Perfect passive articular participle of \aphustere“, late compound (simplex \hustere“\ common as Mt 19:20), to be behindhand from, to fail of, to cause to withdraw, to defraud. Pitiful picture of earned wages kept back by rich Jews, old problem of capital and labour that is with us yet in acute form. {The cries} (\hai boai\). Old word from which \boa“\ comes (Mt 3:3), here only in N.T. The stolen money "cries out" (\krazei\), the workers cry out for vengeance. {That reaped} (\t“n therisant“n\). Genitive plural of the articular participle first aorist active of \theriz“\ (old verb from \theros\, summer, Mt 24:32), to reap, to harvest while summer allows (Mt 6:26). {Have entered} (\eisel^{luthan}\). Perfect active third person plural indicative of \eiserchomai\, old and common compound, to go or come into. This late form is by analogy of the aorist for the usual form in \-asi\. {Of the Lord of Sabaoth} (\Kuriou Sabath\). "Of the Lord of Hosts," quotation from Isa 5:9 as in Ro 9:29, transliterating the Hebrew word for "Hosts," an expression for the omnipotence of God like \Pantokrat“r\ (Re 4:8). God hears the cries of the oppressed workmen even if the employers are deaf.

5:5 {Ye have lived delicately} (\etruph^{sate}\). First aorist (constative, summary) active indicative of \trupha“\, old verb from \truph^ (luxurious living as in Lu 7:25, from \thrupt“\, to break down, to enervate), to lead a soft life, only here in N.T. {Taken your pleasure} (\espatal^{sate}\). First aorist (constative) active indicative of \spatala“\, late and rare verb to live voluptuously or wantonly (from \spatal^, riotous living, wantonness, once as bracelet), in N.T. only here and 1Ti 5:6. {Ye have nourished} (\ethrepsate\). First aorist (constative) active indicative of \treph“\, old verb, to feed, to fatten (Mt 6:26). They are fattening themselves like sheep or oxen all unconscious of "the day of slaughter" (\en h^{merfi sphag}s\, definite without the article) ahead of them. For this use of \sphag^s\ see Ro 8:36 (\probata sphag^s\, sheep for the slaughter, \sphag^ from \sphaz“\, to slay), consummate sarcasm on the folly of sinful rich people.

5:6 {Ye have condemned} (\katedikasate\). First aorist active indicative of \katadikaz“\, old verb (from \katadik^, condemnation, Ac 25:15). The rich controlled the courts of justice. {Ye have killed the righteous one} (\ephoneusate ton dikaion\). First aorist active indicative of \phoneu“\ (2:11; 4:2). "The righteous one" (\t“^{n dikaion}\) is the generic use of the singular with article for the class. There is probably no direct reference to one individual, though it does picture well the death of Christ and also the coming death of James himself, who was called the Just (Eus. _H.E_. ii. 23). Stephen (Ac 7:52) directly accuses the Sanhedrin with being betrayers and murderers (\prodotai kai phoneis\) of the righteous one (\tou dikaion\). {He doth not resist you} (\ouk antitassetai humin\). It is possible to treat this as a question. Present middle indicative of \antitass“, for which see Jas 4:6. Without a question the unresisting end of the victim (\ton dikaion\)) is pictured. With a question (\ouk\, expecting an affirmative answer) God or Lord is the subject, with the final judgment in view. There is no way to decide definitely.

5:7 {Be patient therefore} (\makrothum^{sate} oun\). A direct corollary (\oun\, therefore) from the coming judgment on the wicked rich (5:1-6). First aorist (constative) active imperative of \makrothume“, late compound (Plutarch, LXX) from \makrothumos\ (\makros, thumos\, of long spirit, not losing heart), as in Mt 18:26. The appeal is to the oppressed brethren. Catch your wind for a long race (long-tempered as opposed to short-tempered). See already the exhortation to patience (\hupomon“) in 1:3f., 12 and repeated in 5:11. They will need both submission (\hupomen“) 5:11 and steadfastness (\makrothumia\ 5:10). {Until the coming of the Lord} (\he“s t^s parousias\). The second coming of Christ he means, the regular phrase here and in verse 8 for that idea (Mt 24:3,37,39; 1Th 2:19, etc.). {The husbandman} (\ho ge“rgos\). The worker in the ground (\g[^], erg“) as in Mt 21:33f. {Waiteth for} (\ekdechetai\). Present middle indicative of \ekdechomai\, old verb for eager expectation as in Ac 17:16. {Precious} (\timion\). Old adjective from \tim[^] (honor, price), dear to the farmer because of his toil for it. See 1Pe 1:19. {Being patient over it} (\makrothum“n ep' aut“i\). Present active participle of \makrothume“\ just used in the exhortation, picturing the farmer longing and hoping over his precious crop (cf. Lu 18:7 of God). {Until it receive} (\he“s labⁱ\). Temporal clause of the future with \he“s\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban“, vividly describing the farmer's hopes and patience. {The early and latter rain} (\pro<mon kai opsimon\). The word for rain (\hueton\ Ac 14:17) is absent from the best MSS. The adjective \pro<mos\ (from \pr“<\, early) occurs here only in N.T., though old in the form \pro<mos\ and \pr“<s\). See De 11:14; Jer 5:24, etc. for these terms for the early rain in October or November for the germination of the grain, and the latter rain (\opsimon\, from \opse\, late, here only in N.T.) in April and May for maturing the grain.

5:8 {Ye also} (\kai humeis\). As well as the farmers. {Stablish} (\st[^]rixate\). First aorist active imperative of \st[^]riz“, old verb, (from \st[^]rigx\, a support) to make stable, as in Lu 22:32; 1Th 3:13. {Is at hand} (\^ggiken). Present perfect active indicative of \eggiz“, common verb, to draw near (from \eggus), in Jas 4:8, for drawing near. Same form used by John in his preaching (Mt 3:2). In 1Pe 4:7 the same word appears to have an eschatological sense as apparently here. How "near" or "nigh" did James mean? Clearly, it could only be a hope, for Jesus had distinctly said that no one knew when he would return.

5:9 {Murmur not} (\m^ stenazete). Prohibition with \m^ and the present active imperative of \stenaz“, old verb, to groan. "Stop groaning against one another," as some were already doing in view of their troubles. In view of the hope of the Second Coming lift up your heads. {That ye be not judged} (\hina m^ krith^te). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \krin“. As already indicated (2:12f.; 4:12) and repeated in 5:12. Reminiscence of the words of Jesus in Mt 7:1f. {Standeth before the doors} (\pro t^“n thur^“n hest^ken). Perfect active indicative of \hist^mi, "is standing now." Again like the language of Jesus in Mt 24:33 (\epi thurais) and Mr 13:29. Jesus the Judge is pictured as ready to enter for the judgment.

5:10 {For an example} (\hupodeigma). Late word for the old \paradeigma, from \hupodeiknumi, to copy under, to teach (Lu 6:47), here for copy to be imitated as in Joh 13:15, as a warning (Heb 4:11). Here predicate accusative with \tous proph^tas (the prophets) as the direct object of \labete (second aorist active imperative of \lamban“). {Of suffering} (\t^s kakopathias). Old word from \kakopath^s (suffering evil, \kakopathe“\ in verse 13; 2Ti 2:3,9), here only in N.T. {Of patience} (\makrothumias). Like \makrothume“ in 5:7. See both \makrothumia and \hupomon^ in 2Co 4:6; Col 1:11 (the one restraint from retaliating, the other not easily succumbing). {In the name of} (\en t^“i onomati). As in Jer 20:9. With the authority of the Lord (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 198).

5:11 {We call blessed} (\makarizomen). Old word (present active indicative of \makariz“), from \makarios (happy), in N.T. only here and Lu 1:48. "We felicitate." As in 1:3,12; Da 12:12. {Ye have heard} (\^kousate). First aorist (constative) active indicative of \akou“. As in Mt 5:21,27,33,38,43. Ropes suggests in the synagogues. {Of Job} (\I^“b). Job did complain, but he refused to renounce God (Job 1:21; 2:10; 13:15; 16:19; 19:25f.). He had become a stock illustration of loyal endurance.

{Ye have seen} (\eidete). Second aorist (constative) active indicative of \hora. In Job's case. {The end of the Lord} (\to telos kuriou). The conclusion wrought by the Lord in Job's case (Job 42:12). {Full of pity} (\polusplagchnos). Late and rare compound (\polus, plagchnon), only here in N.T. It occurs also in Hermas (_Sim_ v. 7. 4; _Mand_ iv, 3). "Very kind." {Merciful} (\oiktirm^n). Late and rare adjective (from \oikteir\ to pity), in N.T. only here and Lu 6:36.

5:12 {Above all things} (\pro pant^ n). No connection with what immediately precedes. Probably an allusion to the words of Jesus (Mt 5:34-37). It is not out of place here. See the same phrase in 1Pe 4:8. Robinson (_Ephesians_, p. 279) cites like examples from the papyri at the close of letters. Here it means "But especially" (Ropes). {Swear not} (\m^ omnuete). Prohibition of the habit (or to quit doing it if guilty) with \m^ and the present active imperative of \omnu. The various oaths (profanity) forbidden (\m^te\, thrice) are in the accusative case after \omnuete, according to rule (\ouranon, g^ n, horkon). The Jews were wont to split hairs in their use of profanity, and by avoiding God's name imagine that they were not really guilty of this sin, just as professing Christians today use "pious oaths" which violate the prohibition of Jesus. {Let be} (\^r). Imperative active third singular of \eimi, late form (1Co 16:22) for \est. "Your yea be yea" (and no more). A different form from that in Mt 5:37. {That ye fall not under judgment} (\hina m^ hupo krisin pes^te). Negative purpose with \hina m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \pipt, to fall. See \hina m^ krith^te in verse 9. \Krisis (from \krin) is the act of judging rather than the judgment rendered (\krima\ Jas 3:1).

5:13 {Is any suffering?} (\kakopathei tis;). See verse 10 for \kakopathia. The verb in N.T. occurs only here and in 2Ti 2:3,9; 4:5. The lively interrogative is common in the diatribe and suits the style of James. {Among you} (\en humin). As in 3:13. {Let him pray} (\proseuchesth). Present middle imperative, "let him keep on praying" (instead of cursing as in verse 12). {Is any cheerful} (\euthumei;). Present active indicative of \euthume, old verb from \euthumos (Ac 27:36), in N.T. only here and Ac 27:22,25. {Let him sing praise} (\psallet). Present active imperative of \psall, originally to twang a chord as on a harp, to sing praise to God whether with instrument or without, in N.T. only here, 1Co 14:15; Ro 15:9; Eph 5:19. "Let him keep on making melody."

5:14 {Is any among you sick?} (\asthenei tis en humin;). Present active indicative of \asthene“\, old verb, to be weak (without strength), often in N.T. (Mt 10:8). {Let him call for} (\proskalesasth“\). First aorist (ingressive) middle imperative of \proskale“\, Note change of tense (aorist) and middle (indirect) voice. Care for the sick is urged in 1Th 5:14 ("help the sick"). Note the plural here, "elders of the church, as in Ac 20:17; 15:6,22; 21:18; Php 1:1 (bishops). {Let them pray over him} (\proseuxasth“san ep' auton\). First aorist middle imperative of \proseuchomai\. Prayer for the sick is clearly enjoined. {Anointing him with oil} (\aleipsantes elai“i\). First aorist active participle of \aleiph“\, old verb, to anoint, and the instrumental case of \elaion\ (oil). The aorist participle can be either simultaneous or antecedent with \proseuxasth“san\ (pray). See the same use of \aleiph“elai“i\ in Mr 6:13. The use of olive oil was one of the best remedial agencies known to the ancients. They used it internally and externally. Some physicians prescribe it today. It is clear both in Mr 6:13 and here that medicinal value is attached to the use of the oil and emphasis is placed on the worth of prayer. There is nothing here of the pagan magic or of the later practice of "extreme unction" (after the eighth century). It is by no means certain that \aleiph“\ here and in Mr 6:13 means "anoint" in a ceremonial fashion rather than "rub" as it commonly does in medical treatises. Trench (N.T. Synonyms) says: "\Aleiphein\ is the mundane and profane, \chriein\ the sacred and religious, word." At bottom in James we have God and medicine, God and the doctor, and that is precisely where we are today. The best physicians believe in God and want the help of prayer.

5:15 {The prayer of faith} (\h^ euch^ t^s piste“s\). Cf. 1:6 for prayer marked by faith. {Shall save} (\s“sei\). Future active of \s“z“\, to make well. As in Mt 9:21f.; Mr 6:56. No reference here to salvation of the soul. The medicine does not heal the sick, but it helps nature (God) do it. The doctor cooperates with God in nature. {The sick} (\ton kamnonta\). Present active articular participle of \kamn“\, old verb, to grow weary (Heb 12:3), to be sick (here), only N.T. examples. {The Lord shall raise him up} (\egerei auton ho kurios\). Future active of \egeir“\, Precious promise, but not for a professional "faith-healer" who scoffs at medicine and makes merchandise out of prayer. {And if he have committed sins} (\kan hamartias ^i pepoi^k"s\). Periphrastic perfect active subjunctive (unusual idiom) with \kai ean\ (crasis \kan\) in condition of third class. Supposing that he has committed sins as many sick people have (Mr 2:5ff.; Joh 5:14; 9:2f.; 1Co 11:30). {It shall be forgiven him} (\apheth^setai aut^i\). Future passive of \aphi^mi\ (impersonal passive as in Mt 7:2,7; Ro 10:10). Not in any magical way, not because his sickness has been healed, not without change of heart and turning to God through Christ. Much is assumed here that is not expressed.

5:16 {Confess therefore your sins one to another} (\exomologeisthe oun all'lois tas hamartias\). Present middle (indirect) of \exomologe^\. Confession of sin to God is already assumed. But public confession of certain sins to one another in the meetings is greatly helpful in many ways. This is not confessing to one man like a priest in place of the public confession. One may confess to the pastor without confessing to God or to the church, with little benefit to anybody. {Pray for one another} (\proseuchesthe huper all^l^n\). Present middle imperative. Keep this up. {That ye may be healed} (\hop^s iath^te\). Purpose clause with \hop^s\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \iaomai\. Probably of bodily healing (verse 14), though \iaomai\ is used also of healing of the soul (Mt 13:15; 1Pe 2:24; Heb 12:13) as Mayor takes it here. {Availeth much} (\polu ischuei\). "Has much force." Present active indicative of \ischu^\. (from \ischus\, strength). {In its working} (\energoumen^\. Probably the present middle participle of \energe^\. as Paul apparently uses it in Ga 5:6; 2Co 4:12; 2Th 2:7, meaning "when it works." The passive is possible, as is the usual idiom elsewhere. Mayor argues strongly for the passive here, "when it is exercised" (Ropes).

5:17 {Of like passions with us} (\homoioopath^s h^min\). Associative-instrumental case \h^min\ as with \homoios\. This old compound adjective (\homoios, pasch^\.), suffering the like with another, in N.T. only here and Ac 14:15. {He prayed fervently} (\proseuch^i pros^uxato\). First aorist middle indicative of \proseuchomai\ and the instrumental case \proseuch^i\ (cognate substantive), after idiom for intensity in classical Greek, like \pheugein phug^i\, to flee with all speed (_figura etymologica_), but particularly frequent in the LXX (Ge 2:17; 31:30) in imitation of the Hebrew infinitive absolute. So Lu 22:15; Joh 3:29; Ac 4:17. {That it might not rain} (\|tou m^ brexai\). Genitive of the articular infinitive (\|brexai\, first aorist active of \|brech“, old verb, to moisten, Lu 7:38, to rain, Mt 5:45) with negative \|m^ used either for direct purpose, for an object clause as here and Ac 3:12; 15:20, or even for result. {For three years and six months} (\|eniautous treis kai m^nas hex\). Accusative of extent of time.

5:18 {Gave rain} (\|hueton ed^ken\). This idiom is in the LXX of God as here of heaven (1Sa 12:17; 1Ki 18:1) and also in Ac 14:17 instead of \|ebrexen\ of verse 17. \|Hueton\ is old word for rain (from \|hu“, to rain), genuine here, but not in verse 7. {Brought forth} (\|eblast^sen\). First aorist active of \|blastan“, old verb, to sprout (intransitive as Mr 4:27), here as occasionally in later Greek transitive with accusative \|karpon\.

5:19 {If any one among you do err} (\|ean tis en humin plan^th^i\). Third-class condition (supposed case) with \|ean\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \|plana“, old verb, to go astray, to wander (Mt 18:12), figuratively (Heb 5:2). {From the truth} (\|apo t^s al^theias\). For truth see 1:18; 3:14; Joh 8:32; 1Jo 1:6; 3:18f. It was easy then, and is now, to be led astray from Christ, who is the Truth. {And one convert him} (\|kai epistreps^i tis auton\). Continuation of the third-class condition with the first aorist active subjunctive of \|epistrephe“, old verb, to turn (transitive here as in Lu 1:16f., but intransitive often as Ac 9:35).

5:20 {Let him know} (\|gin^sket“\). Present active imperative third person singular of \|gin^sk“, but Westcott and Hort read \|gin^skete\ (know ye) after B. In either case it is the conclusion of the condition in verse 19. {He which converteth} (\|ho epistrepsas\). First aorist active articular participle of \|epistrephe“ of verse 19. {From the error} (\|ek plan^s\). "Out of the wandering" of verse 19 (\|plan^\, from which \|plana“ is made). See 1Jo 4:6 for contrast between "truth" and "error." {A soul from death} (\|psuch^n ek thanatou\). The soul of the sinner (\|hamart^lon\) won back to Christ, not the soul of the man winning him. A few MSS. have \|autou\ added (his soul), which leaves it ambiguous, but \|autou\ is not genuine. It is ultimate and final salvation here meant by the future (\|s^sei\). {Shall cover a multitude of sins} (\|kalupsei pl^thos hamarti^n\). Future active of \kalupt“\, old verb, to hide, to veil. But whose sins (those of the converter or the converted)? The Roman Catholics (also Mayor and Ropes) take it of the sins of the converter, who thus saves himself by saving others. The language here will allow that, but not New Testament teaching in general. It is apparently a proverbial saying which Resch considers one of the unwritten sayings of Christ (Clem. Al. _Paed_. iii. 12). It occurs also in 1Pe 4:8, where it clearly means the sins of others covered by love as a veil thrown over them. The saying appears also in Pr 10:12: "Hatred stirs up strife, but love hides all transgressions"--that is "love refuses to see faults" (Mayor admits). That is undoubtedly the meaning in 1Pe 4:8; Jas 5:20.

1:1 {Peter} (\Petros). Greek form for the Aramaic (Chaldaic) \C^phfs, the nickname given Simon by Jesus when he first saw him (Joh 1:42) and reaffirmed in the Greek form on his great confession (Mt 16:18), with an allusion to \petra, another form for a rock, ledge, or cliff. In 2Pe 1:1 we have both \Sim^n and \Petros. Paul in his Epistles always terms himself Paul, not Saul. So Peter uses this name, not Cephas or Simon, because he is writing to Christians scattered over Asia Minor. The nominative absolute occurs here as in Jas 1:1, but without \chairein as there, the usual form of greeting in letters (Ac 23:26) so common in the papyri. {An apostle of Jesus Christ} (\apostolos I^sou Christou). This is his official title, but in 2Pe 1:1 \doulos is added, which occurs alone in Jas 1:1. In II and III John we have only \ho presbuteros (the elder), as Peter terms himself \sunpresbuteros in 1Pe 5:1. Paul's usage varies greatly: only the names in I and II Thessalonians, the title \apostolos added and defended in Galatians and Romans as also in I and II Corinthians and Colossians and Ephesians and II Timothy with "by the will of God" added, and in I Timothy with the addition of "according to the command of God." In Philippians Paul has only "\doulos\ (slave) \Christou I^sou\," like James and Jude. In Romans and Titus Paul has both \doulos and \apostolos, like II Peter, while in Philemon he uses only \desmios\ (prisoner) I^sou Christou. {To the elect} (\eklektois). Without article (with the article in Mt 24:22,24,31) and dative case, "to elect persons" (viewed as a group). Bigg takes \eklektois\ (old, but rare verbal adjective from \ekleg^, to pick out, to select) as an adjective describing the next word, "to elect sojourners." That is possible and is like \genos eklekton in 2:9. See the distinction between \kl^toi\ (called) and \eklektoi\ (chosen) in Mt 22:14. {Who are sojourners} (\parepid^mois). Late double compound adjective (\para, epid^mountes\, Ac 2:10, to sojourn by the side of natives), strangers sojourning for a while in a particular place. So in Polybius, papyri, in LXX only twice (Ge 23:4; 38 or 39 12), in N.T. only here, 2:11; Heb 11:13. The picture in the metaphor here is that heaven is our native country and we are only temporary sojourners here on earth. {Of the Dispersion} (\diaporfs\). See Joh 7:35 for literal sense of the word for scattered (from \diaspeir“\, to scatter abroad, Ac 8:1) Jews outside of Palestine, and Jas 1:1 for the sense here to Jewish Christians, including Gentile Christians (only N T. examples). Note absence of the article, though a definite conception (of the Dispersion). The Christian is a pilgrim on his way to the homeland. These five Roman provinces include what we call Asia Minor north and west of the Taurus mountain range (Hort). Hort suggests that the order here suggests that Silvanus (bearer of the Epistle) was to land in Pontus from the Euxine Sea, proceed through Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, to Bithynia, where he would re-embark for Rome. This, he holds, explains the separation of Pontus and Bithynia, though the same province. Only Galatia and Asia are mentioned elsewhere in the N.T. as having Christian converts, but the N.T. by no means gives a full account of the spread of the Gospel, as can be judged from Col 1:6,23.

1:2 {According to} (\kata\). Probably to be connected with \eklektois\ rather than with \apostolos\ in spite of a rather loose arrangement of words and the absence of articles in verses 1,2. {The foreknowledge} (\progn“sin\). Late substantive (Plutarch, Lucian, papyri) from \progin“sk“\ (1:20), to know beforehand, only twice in N.T. (here and Ac 2:23 in Peter's sermon). In this Epistle Peter often uses substantives rather than verbs (cf. Ro 8:29). {Of God the Father} (\theou patros\). Anarthous again and genitive case. See \pat^r\ applied to God also in 1:3,17 as often by Paul (Ro 1:7, etc.). Peter here presents the Trinity (God the Father, the Spirit, Jesus Christ). {In sanctification of the Spirit} (\en hagiasm“i pneumatos\). Clearly the Holy Spirit, though anarthous like \theou patros\. Late word from \hagiaz“, to render holy (\hagios\), to consecrate, as in 1Th 4:7. The subjective genitive here, sanctification wrought by the Spirit as in 2Th 2:13 (where the Trinity mentioned as here). {Unto obedience} (\eis hupako^n\). Obedience (from \hupakou“\, to hear under, to hearken) to the Lord Jesus as in 1:22 "to the truth," result of "the sanctification." {And sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ} (\rantismon haimatos I^sou Christou\). Late substantive from \rantiz“, to sprinkle (Heb 9:13), a word used in the LXX of the sacrifices (Nu 19:9,13,20, etc.), but not in any non-biblical source so far as known, in N.T. only here and Heb 12:24 (of the sprinkling of blood). Reference to the death of Christ on the Cross and to the ratification of the New Covenant by the blood of Christ as given in Heb 9:19f.; 12:24 with allusion to Ex 24:3-8. Paul does not mention this ritual use of the blood of Christ, but Jesus does (Mt 26:28; Mr 14:24). Hence it is not surprising to find the use of it by Peter and the author of Hebrews. Hort suggests that Peter may also have an ulterior reference to the blood of the martyrs as in Re 7:14f.; 12:11, but only as illustration of what Jesus did for us, not as having any value. The whole Epistle is a commentary upon \progn“sis theou, hagioσmos pneumatos, haima Christou\ (Bigg). Peter is not ashamed of the blood of Christ. {Be multiplied} (\pl^{thunthei}\). First aorist passive optative (volitive) of \pl^{thun}\, old verb (from \pl^{thus}\, fulness), in a wish. So in 2Pe 1:2; Jude 1:2, but nowhere else in N.T. salutations. Grace and peace (\charis kai eirⁿ\) occur together in 2Pe 1:2, in 2Jo 1:2 (with \eleos\), and in all Paul's Epistles (with \eleos\ added in I and II Timothy).

1:3 {Blessed be} (\eulog^{tos}\). No copula in the Greek (\est“\, let be, or \estin\, is, or \ei“\, may be). The verbal adjective (from \euloge“\) occurs in the N.T. only of God, as in the LXX (Lu 1:68). See also 2Co 1:3; Eph 1:3. {The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\ho theos kai pat^r tou kuriou h^m“n I^{sou} Christou\). This precise language in 2Co 1:3; Eph 1:3; and part of it in 2Co 11:31; Ro 15:6. See Joh 20:17 for similar language by Jesus. {Great} (\polu\). Much. {Begat us again} (\anagenn^{sas} h^mfs\). First aorist active articular (\ho\, who) participle of \anagenna“\, late, and rare word to beget again, in Aleph for _Sirach_ (_Prol_. 20), in Philo, in Hermetic writings, in N.T. only here and verse 23. "It was probably borrowed by the New Paganism from Christianity" (Bigg). The Stoics used \anagenn^{sis}\ for \palingenesia\ (Tit 3:5). If \an“then\ in Joh 3:3 be taken to mean "again," the same idea of regeneration is there, and if "from above" it is the new birth, anyhow. {Unto a living hope} (\eis elpida z“san\). Peter is fond of the word "living" (present active participle of \za“\) as in 1:23; 2:4,5,24; 4:5,6. The Pharisees cherished the hope of the resurrection (Ac 23:6), but the resurrection of Jesus gave it proof and permanence (1Co 15:14,17). It is no longer a dead hope like dead faith (Jas 2:17,26). This revival of hope was wrought "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (\dia anastase“s\). Hope rose up with Christ from the dead, though the disciples (Peter included) were slow at first to believe it.

1:4 {Unto an inheritance} (\eis kl^{ronomian}\). Old word (from \kl^{ronomos}\, heir) for the property received by the heir (Mt 21:38), here a picture of the blessedness in store for us pilgrims (Ga 3:18). {Incorruptible} (\aphtharton\). Old compound adjective (alpha privative and \phtheir“\, to corrupt), imperishable. So many inheritances vanish away before they are obtained. {Undefined} (\amianton\). Old verbal adjective (note alliteration) from alpha privative and \miaiain“\, to defile, without defect or flaw in the title, in N.T. only here, Jas 1:27; Heb 13:4. {That fadeth not away} (\amaranton\). Alliterative and verbal adjective again from alpha privative and \marain“\ (to dry up, to wither, as in Jas 1:11), late and rare word in several inscriptions on tombs, here only in N.T. These inscriptions will fade away, but not this inheritance in Christ. It will not be like a faded rose. {Reserved} (\tet^rmenⁿ\). Perfect passive participle of \t^{re}“\, old verb, to take care of, to guard. No burglars or bandits can break through where this inheritance is kept (Mt 6:19f.; Joh 17:11f.). Cf. Col 1:5, where laid away" (\apokeimenⁿ\) occurs. {For you} (\eis humas\). More graphic than the mere dative.

1:5 {By the power of God} (\en dunamei theou\). No other \dunamis\ (power) like this (Col 1:3). {Are guarded} (\phrouroumenous\). Present (continuous process) passive articular (\tous\) participle of \phroure“\, to garrison, old verb (from \phrouros\ sentinel), a military term (Ac 9:24; 2Co 11:32), used of God's love (Php 4:7) as here. "The inheritance is kept; the heirs are guarded" (Bengel). {Through faith} (\dia piste“s\). Intermediate agency (\dia\), the immediate being (\en\, in, by) God's power. {Unto a salvation} (\eis s^trian\). Deliverance is the goal (\eis\) of the process and final salvation here, consummation as in 1Th 5:8, from \s^tr\ (Saviour, from \s^z“\, to save). {Ready} (\hetoimⁿ\). Prepared awaiting God's will (Ga 3:23; Ro 8:18). {To be revealed} (\apokaluphth^{nai}\). First aorist passive infinitive of \apokalupt“\, to unveil. Cf. Col 3:4 for \phanero“\ (to manifest) in this sense. {In the last time} (\en kairⁱ eschatⁱ\). This precise phrase nowhere else, but similar ones in Joh 6:39; Ac 2:17; Jas 5:3; 2Ti 3:1; 2Pe 3:3; He 1:2; Jude 1:18; 1Jo 2:18. Hort translates it here "in a season of extremity," but it is usually taken to refer to the Day of Judgment. That day no one knows, Jesus said.

1:6 {Wherein} (\en h*“i*\). This translation refers the relative \h*“i*\ to \kair*“i*\, but it is possible to see a reference to \Christou\ (verse 3) or to \theou\ (verse 5) or even to the entire content of verses 3-5. Either makes sense, though possibly \kair*“i*\ is correct. {Ye greatly rejoice} (\agallifsthe\). Present middle indicative (rather than imperative) of \agalliaomai\, late verb from \agallomai\, to rejoice, only in LXX, N.T., and ecclesiastical literature as in Mt 5:12. {Now for a little while} (\oligon arti\). Accusative case of time (\oligon\) probably as in Mr 6:31, though it can be used of space (to a small extent) as in Lu 5:3. {If need be} (\ei deon\). Present active neuter singular participle of \dei\ (it is necessary). Some MSS. have \estin\ after \deon\ (periphrastic construction). Condition of first class. {Though ye have been put to grief} (\lup*^*thentes\). First aorist passive participle (concessive circumstantial use) of \lupe*“*\, to make sorrowful (from \lup*^*\, sorrow), old and common verb. See 2Co 6:10. {In manifold temptations} (\en poikilois peirasmois\). Just the phrase in Jas 1:2, which see for discussion. "Trials" clearly right here as there. Seven N.T. writers use \poikilos\ (varied).

1:7 {The proof of your faith} (\to dokimion hum*“n t’s* piste*“s*\). The identical phrase in Jas 1:3 and probably derived from there by Peter. See there for discussion of \to dokimion\ (the test or touchstone of faith). {Being more precious} (\polutimoteron\). No word for "being" (\on\) in the Greek. The secondary uncials have \polu timi*“*teron\). The text is the comparative of \polutimos\, late adjective (Plutarch) from \polu\ and \tim*^*\ (of great price) as in Mt 13:46. {Than gold} (\chrusiou\). Ablative case after the comparative adjective. {That perisheth} (\tou apollumenou\). Present middle articular participle of \apollumi\ to destroy. Even gold perishes (wears away). {Though it is proved by fire} (\dia puros de dokimazomenou\). Present passive articular participle (in the ablative like \chrusiou\) of \dokimaz*“*\ (common verb for testing metals) with \de\, which gives a concessive sense to the participle. Faith stands the test of fire better than gold, but even gold is refined by fire. {That might be found} (\hina heureth*^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \heurisk“\, common verb, to find. As in 2Pe 3:14, this is the result of the probation by God as the Refiner of hearts. {Unto praise and glory and honour} (\eis epainon kai doxan kai tim^n\). Here probably both to God and man in the result. Cf. Mt 5:11f.; Ro 2:7,10; 1Ti 1:17. {At the revelation of Jesus Christ} (\en apokalupsei I'sou Christou*). So also in 1:13; 4:13; 2Th 1:7; 1Co 1:7; Lu 17:30 of the second coming of Christ as the Judge and Rewarder (Bigg).

1:8 {Whom} (\hon). Relative referring to Christ just before and accusative case, object of both \idontes and \agapate (ye love). {Not having seen} (\ouk idontes). Second aorist active participle of \hora“, to see, with \ouk rather than \m^ because it negatives an actual experience in contrast with \m^hor“ntes (though not seeing, hypothetical case). On whom (\eis hon) with \pisteuontes common construction for "believing on" (\pisteu“ eis). It is possible that Peter here has in mind the words of Jesus to Thomas as recorded in Joh 20:29 ("Happy are those not seeing and yet believing"). Peter was present and heard the words of Jesus to Thomas, and so he could use them before John wrote his Gospel. {Ye rejoice greatly} (\agallifte). Same form as in verse 6, only active here instead of middle. {With joy} (\charfi). Instrumental case (manner). {Unspeakable} (\aneklal't“i). Late and rare double compound verbal (alpha privative and eklale“), here only in N.T., in Dioscorides and Heliodorus, "unutterable," like Paul's "indescribable" (\anekdi'g'tos) gift (2Co 9:15, here alone in N.T.). {Full of glory} (\dedoxasmen'i). Perfect passive participle of \doxaz“, to glorify, "glorified joy," like the glorified face of Moses (Ex 34:29ff.; 2Co 3:10).

1:9 {Receiving} (\komizomenoi). Present middle participle of \komiz“, old verb, to receive back, to get what is promised (5:4; Heb 10:36). {The end of your faith} (\to telos t's piste“s). The conclusion, the culmination of faith (2Co 3:13; Ro 2:21f.; 10:4). See Heb 12:2 of Jesus as "Pioneer and Perfector of Faith." {Even the salvation of your souls} (\s“t'rian psuch“n). No "even" in the text, just the accusative of apposition with \telos, viz., final salvation.

1:10 {Concerning which salvation} (\peri h's s“t'rias). Another relative clause (taking up s“t'ria\ from verse 9 and incorporating it) in this long sentence (verses 3-12, inclusive, all connected by relatives). Peter lingers over the word \s“t'ria (salvation) with something new to say each time (Bigg). Here it is the general sense of the gospel of grace. {Sought} (\exez't'san). First aorist active indicative of \ekz'te“, to seek out (Ac 15:17), late and rare compound, only in LXX and N.T. save once in Aristides. {Searched diligently} (\ex^raun^san). First aorist active indicative of \exerauna^{\}, old and common compound (\exereuna^{\}), to search out diligently, here only in N.T. Both of these words occur together in I Macc. 9:26. {Of the grace that should come unto you} (\peri t^s eis humas charitos). "Concerning the for you grace" (meant for you).

1:11 {Searching} (\eraun^ntes). Present active participle of \erauna^{\}, late form for older \ereuna^{\} (both in the papyri), uncompounded verb (Joh 7:52), the compound occurring in verse 10 above. {What time or what manner of time} (\eis tina ^ poion kairon). Proper sense of \poios (qualitative interrogative) kept here as in 1Co 15:35, Ro 3:27, though it is losing its distinctive sense from \tis (Ac 23:34). The prophets knew what they prophesied, but not at what time the Messianic prophecies would be fulfilled. {The Spirit of Christ which was in them} (\to en autois pneuma Christou). Peter definitely asserts here that the Spirit of Jesus Christ (the Messiah) was in the Old Testament prophets, the Holy Spirit called the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of God (Ro 8:9), who spoke to the prophets as he would speak to the apostles (Joh 16:14). {Did point unto} (\ed^lou). Imperfect active of \d^lo^{\}, to make plain, "did keep on pointing to," though they did not clearly perceive the time. {When it testified beforehand} (\promarturomenon). Present middle participle of \promarturomai, a late compound unknown elsewhere save in a writer of the fourteenth century (Theodorus Mech.) and now in a papyrus of the eighth. It is neuter here because \pneuma is neuter, but this grammatical gender should not be retained as "it" in English, but should be rendered "he" (and so as to Ac 8:15). Here we have predictive prophecy concerning the Messiah, though some modern critics fail to find predictions of the Messiah in the Old Testament. {The sufferings of Christ} (\ta eis Christon path^mata). "The sufferings for (destined for) Christ" like the use of \eis in verse 10 (\eis humas\ for you). {The glories that should follow them} (\tas meta tauta doxas). "The after these things (sufferings) glories." The plural of \doxa is rare, but occurs in Ex 15:11; Ho 9:11. The glories of Christ followed the sufferings as in 4:13; 5:1,6.

1:12 {To whom} (\hois). Dative plural of the relative pronoun. To the prophets who were seeking to understand. Bigg observes that "the connexion between study and inspiration is a great mystery." Surely, but that is no argument for ignorance or obscurantism. We do the best that we can and only skirt the shore of knowledge, as Newton said. {It was revealed} (\apekalupth^). First aorist passive indicative of \apokalupt^, old verb, to reveal, to unveil. Here is revelation about the revelation already received, revelation after research. {Did they minister} (\di^konoun). Imperfect active of \diakone^, old verb, to minister, "were they ministering." {Have been announced} (\an^ggel^). Second aorist passive indicative of {anaggell^}, to report, to bring back tidings (Joh 4:25). {Through them} (\dia t^"n). Intermediate agent (\dia), "the gospelizers" (\t^"n euaggelisamen^"n, articular first aorist middle participle of \euaggeliz^, to preach the gospel). {By the Holy Ghost} (\pneumati hagi^"i). Instrumental case of the personal agent, "by the Holy Spirit" (without article). {Sent forth from heaven} (\apostalenti). Second aorist passive participle of \apostell^ in instrumental case agreeing with \pneumati hagi^"i (the Spirit of Christ of verse 11). {Desire} (\epithumousin). Eagerly desire (present active indicative of \epithume^, to long for). {To look into} (\parakupsai). First aorist active infinitive of \parakupt^, old compound to peer into as in Lu 24:12; Joh 20:5,11; Jas 1:25, which see. For the interest of angels in the Incarnation see Lu 2:13f.

1:13 {Wherefore} (\dio). "Because of which thing," the glorious free grace opened for Gentiles and Jews in Christ (verses 3-12). {Girding up} (\anaz^"samenoi). First aorist middle participle of \anaz^"nnumi, late and rare verb (Jud 18:16; Pr 29:35; 31:17), here only in N.T., vivid metaphor for habit of the Orientals, who quickly gathered up their loose robes with a girdle when in a hurry or starting on a journey. {The loins} (\tas osphuas). Old word for the part of the body where the girdle (\z^"n) was worn. Metaphor here as in Lu 12:35; Eph 6:14. {Mind} (\dianoias). Old word for the faculty of understanding, of seeing through a thing (\dia, noe^) as in Mt 22:37. {Be sober} (\n^phontes). "Being sober" (present active participle of \n^ph^, old verb, but in N.T. always as metaphor (1Th 5:6,8, etc., and so in 4:7). {Perfectly} (\telei^"s). Adverb, old word (here alone in N.T.), from adjective \teleios (perfect), connected with \elpisate (set your hope, first aorist active imperative of \elpiz^) in the Revised Version, but Bigg, Hort, and most modern commentators take it according to Peter's usual custom with the preceding verb, \n^phontes ("being perfectly sober," not "hope perfectly"). {That is to be brought} (\t^n pheromen^ n\). Present passive articular participle of \pher^, picturing the process, "that is being brought." For "revelation" (\apokalupsei) see end of verse 7.

1:14 {As children of obedience} (\h^s tekna hupako^s\). A common Hebraism (descriptive genitive frequent in LXX and N.T., like \hui oi t^s apeitheias\, children of disobedience, in Eph 2:2) suggested by \hupako^ n\ in verse 2, "children marked by obedience." {Not fashioning yourselves} (\m^ sunsch^matizomenoi\). Usual negative \m^ with the participle (*present direct middle of \sunch^matiz^, a rare (Aristotle, Plutarch) compound (\sun, sch^matiz^, from \sch^ma\ from \ech^), in N.T. only here and Ro 12:2 (the outward pattern in contrast with the inward change \metamorpho^). See Php 2:6f. for contrast between \sch^ma\ (pattern) and \morph^ (form). {According to your former lusts} (\tais proteron epithumiais\). Associative instrumental case after \sunch^matizomenoi\ and the bad sense of \epithumia\ as in 4:2; 2Pe 1:4; Jas 1:14f. {In the time of your ignorance} (\en t^i agnoifi hum^ n\). "In your ignorance," but in attributive position before "lusts." \Agnoia\ (from \agnoe^, to be ignorant) is old word, in N.T. only here, Ac 3:17; 17:30; Eph 4:18.*

1:15 {But like as he which called you is holy} (\alla kata ton kalesanta humas hagion\). This use of \kata\ is a regular Greek idiom (here in contrast with \sunch^matizomenoi). "But according to the holy one calling you or who called you" (first aorist articular participle of \kale^, to call). God is our standard or pattern (\kata\), not our lusts. {Be ye yourselves also holy} (\kai autoi hagioi gen^th^te\). First aorist (ingressive) passive imperative of \ginomai\, to become with allusion (\kai\ also) to \kata\ (God as our example), "Do ye also become holy." For \anastroph^ (manner of life) see verse 18; 2:12; 3:1-16; Jas 3:13; 2Pe 2:7. Peter uses \anastroph^ eight times. The original meaning (turning up and down, back and forth) suited the Latin word _conversatio_ (_convertito_), but not our modern "conversation" (talk, not walk).

1:16 {Because it is written} (\dioti gegraptai\). "Because (\dioti\ stronger than \hoti\ below) it stands written" (regular formula for O.T. quotation, perfect passive indicative of \graph^). The quotation is from Le 11:44; 19:2; 20:7. Reenforced by Jesus in Mt 5:48. The future \esesthe\ here is volitive like an imperative.

1:17 {If ye call} (\ei epikaleisthe\). Condition of first class and present middle indicative of \epikalea\, to call a name on, to name (Ac 10:18). {As Father} (\patera\). Predicate accusative in apposition with \ton--krinonta\ {Without respect of persons} (\apros“pol^mpt“s\). Found nowhere else except in the later Ep. of Clem. of Rome and Ep. of Barn., from alpha privative and \pros“pol^mpt^s\ (Ac 10:34. See Jas 2:9 for \pros“pol^mpte“\ and 1:1 for \pros“pol^mpsia) from \pros“pon lamban“\ (in imitation of the Hebrew). {According to each man's work} (\kata to hekastou ergon\). "According to the deed of each one" God judges (\krinonta\) just as Christ judges also (2Co 5:10). {Pass} (\anastroph^te\). Second aorist passive imperative of \anastreph“\, metaphorical sense as in 2Co 1:12; 2Pe 2:18. {The time} (\ton chronon\). Accusative case of extent of time. {Of your sojourning} (\t^s paroikias hum“n\). A late word, found in LXX (Ps 119:5) and in N.T. only here and Ac 13:17 and in ecclesiastical writers (one late Christian inscription). It comes from \paroike“\, old verb, to dwell beside (in one's neighbourhood), and so of pilgrims or strangers (\paroikos\ Ac 7:6) as of Jews away from Palestine or of Christians here on earth, then of a local region (our "parish"). Peter here recurs to 1:1 ("sojourners of the Dispersion"). {In fear} (\en phob“i\). Emphatic position at beginning of the clause with \anastroph^te\ at the end.

1:18 {Knowing} (\eidotes\). Second perfect active participle of \oida\, causal participle. The appeal is to an elementary Christian belief (Hort), the holiness and justice of God with the added thought of the high cost of redemption (Bigg). {Ye were redeemed} (\elutr“th^te\). First aorist passive indicative of \lutro“\, old verb from \lutron\ (ransom for life as of a slave, Mt 20:28), to set free by payment of ransom, abundant examples in the papyri, in N.T. only here, Lu 24:21; Tit 2:14. The ransom is the blood of Christ. Peter here amplifies the language in Isa 52:3f. {Not with corruptible things} (\ou phthartois\). Instrumental case neuter plural of the late verbal adjective from \phtheir“\ to destroy or to corrupt, and so perishable, in N.T. here, verse 23; 1Co 9:25; 15:53f.; Ro 1:23. \Arguri“i ^chrusi“i\ (silver or gold) are in explanatory apposition with \phthartois\ and so in the same case. Slaves were set free by silver and gold. {From your vain manner of life} (\ek t^s mataias hum“n anastroph^s\). "Out of" (\ek\), and so away from, the pre-Christian \anastroph^ of verse 15, which was "vain" (\mataias|. Cf. Eph 4:17-24). {Handed down from your fathers} (\patroparadotou|). This adjective, though predicate in position, is really attributive in idea, like \cheiropoi^tou| in Eph 2:11 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 777), like the French idiom. This double compound verbal adjective (\pater, para, did^mi|), though here alone in N.T., occurs in Diodorus, Dion. Halic, and in several inscriptions (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_; Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 266f.). The Jews made a wrong use of tradition (Mt 15:2ff.), but the reference here seems mainly to Gentiles (1Pe 2:12).

1:19 {But with precious blood} (\alla timi^i haimati|). Instrumental case of \haima| after \elutr^th^te| (repeated from verse 18). Peter here applies the old adjective \timios| (from tim^, of Christ in 1Pe 2:7) to Christ as in 1:7 \polutimoteron| to testing of faith. The blood of anyone is "precious" (costly), far above gold or silver, but that of Jesus immeasurably more so. {As of a lamb} (\h^s amnou|). This word occurs in Le 12:8; Nu 15:11; De 14:4 of the lamb prescribed for the passover sacrifice (Ex 12:5). John the Baptist applies it to Jesus (Joh 1:29,36). It occurs also in Ac 8:32 quoted from Isa 53:7f. Undoubtedly both the Baptist and Peter have this passage in mind. Elsewhere in the N.T. \arnion| is used of Christ (Re 5:6,12). Jesus is the Paschal Lamb. Peter sees clearly that it was by the blood of Christ that we are redeemed from sin. {Without blemish} (\am^mou|). Without (alpha privative) spot (\m^mos|) as the paschal lamb had to be (Le 22:21). So Heb 9:14. {Without spot} (\aspilou|). Without (alpha privative) stain (\spilos| spot) as in Jas 1:27; 2Pe 3:14; 1Pe 6:14. {Even the blood of Christ} (\Christou|). Genitive case with \haimati|, but in unusual position for emphasis and clearness with the participles following.

1:20 {Who was foreknown indeed} (\proegn^smenou men|). Perfect passive participle (in genitive singular agreeing with Christou|) of \progin^sk^, old verb, to know beforehand (Ro 8:29; 2Pe 3:17). See \progn^sin theou| in verse 2. {Before the foundation of the world} (\pro katabol^s kosmou|). This precise curious phrase occurs in Joh 17:24 in the Saviour's mouth of his preincarnate state with the Father as here and in Eph 1:4. We have \apo katabol^s kosmou| in Mt 25:34 (\kosmou| omitted in Mt 13:35); Lu 11:50; Heb 4:3; 9:26; Re 13:8; 17:8. \Katabol^

(from \kataball“\)) was originally laying the foundation of a house (Heb 6:1). The preincarnate Messiah appears in the counsels of God also in 1Co 2:7; Col 1:26f.; Eph 1:9f.; 3:9-11; Ro 16:25; 1Ti 1:9. {But was manifested} (\phaner“thentos de\). First aorist (ingressive) passive participle of \phanero“, referring to the Incarnation in contrast with the preexistence of Christ (cf. Joh 1:31; 1Jo 3:5,8). {At the end of the times} (\ep' eschatou t“n chron“n\). Like \ep' eschatou t“n h^mer“n\ (Heb 1:2). The plural \chronoi\, doubtless referring to successive periods in human history until the fullness of the time came (Ga 4:4). {For your sake} (\di' humfs\). Proof of God's love, not of their desert or worth (Ac 17:30f.; Heb 11:39f.).

1:21 {Who through him are believers in God} (\tous di' autou pistous eis theon\). Accusative case in apposition with \humfs\ (you), "the through him (that is Christ as in 1:8; Ac 3:16) believers (\pistous\ correct text of A B) in God." {Which raised} (\ton egeiranta\). Accusative singular articular (agreeing with theon) first aorist active participle of \egeir“\ (cf. di' anastase“s I^sou in verse 3). {Gave glory to him} (\doxan aut“i donta\). Second aorist active participle of \did“mi\ agreeing also with \theon\. See Peter's speech in Ac 3:13 about God glorifying (\edoxasen\) Jesus and also the same idea by Peter in Ac 2:33-36; 5:31. {So that your faith and hope might be in God} (\h“ste t^n pistin hum“n kai elpida eis theon\). \H“ste\ with the infinitive (\einai\) and the accusative of general reference (\pistin kai elpida\) is used in the N.T. as in the _Koin,_ for either purpose (Mt 10:1) or usually result (Mr 4:37). Hence here result (so that is) is more probable than design.

1:22 {Seeing ye have purified} (\h^gnikotes\). Perfect active participle of \hagniz“, old verb from \hagnos\ (pure), here with \psuchas\ (souls), with \kardias\ (hearts) in Jas 4:8 as in 1Jo 3:3 of moral cleansing also. See the ceremonial sense of the word as in LXX in Joh 11:55; Ac 21:24,26; 24:18. {In your obedience} (\en t^i hupako^i\). With repetition of the idea in 1:2,14 (children of obedience). {To the truth} (\t^s aletheias\). Objective genitive with which compare Joh 17:17,19 about sanctification in the truth and 2Th 2:12 about believing the truth. There is cleansing power in the truth of God in Christ. {Unfeigned} (\anupokriton\). Late and rare double compound, here alone in Peter, but see Jas 3:17; 2Co 6:6, etc.

No other kind of \philadelphia\ (brotherly love) is worth having (1Th 4:9; Heb 13:1; 2Pe 1:7). {From the heart fervently} (\ek kardias ektenˆs\). Late adverb (in inscriptions, Polybius, LXX).
The adjective \ektenˆs\ is more common (1Pe 4:8).

1:23 {Having been begotten again} (\anagegennˆmenoi\). Perfect passive participle of \anagennaˆ\, which see in verse 2. {Not of corruptible seed} (\ouk ek sporfs phthartˆs\). Ablative with \ek\ as the source, for \phthartos\ see verse 18, and \sporfs\ (from \speirˆ\ to sow), old word (sowing, seed) here only in N.T., though \sporos\ in Mr 4:26f., etc. For "incorruptible"
(\aphthartou\) see verse 4; 3:4. {Through the word of God}
(\dia logou theou\). See Jas 1:18 for "by the word of truth," verse 25 here, and Peter's use of \logos\ in Ac 10:36. It is the gospel message. {Which liveth and abideth} (\zˆˆntos kai menontos\). These present active participles (from \zaˆ\ and \menˆ) can be taken with \theou\ (God) or with \logou\ (word).
In verse 25 \menei\ is used with \rˆma\ (word). Still in Da 6:26 both \menˆn\ and \zˆˆn\ are used with \theos\. Either construction makes sense here.

1:24 24,25 Quotation from Isa 40:6-8 (partly like the LXX, partly like the Hebrew). {For} (\dioti\). As in verse 16 (\dia and \hoti\), "for that." So in 2:6. See a free use of this imagery about the life of man as grass and a flower in Jas
1:11. The best MSS. here read \autˆs\ (thereof) after \doxa\
(glory) rather than \anthrˆpou\ (of man). {Withereth} (\exˆranthˆ\). First aorist (gnomic, timeless) passive indicative of \xˆrainˆ\ (see Jas 1:11). {Falleth} (\exepesen\). Second aorist (gnomic, timeless) active indicative of \ekpiptˆ\ (see Jas 1:11). In verse 25 note \eis humfs\ (unto you) like \eis humfs\ in 1:4 (\humin\ dative).

2:1 {Putting away therefore} (\apothemenoi oun\). Second aorist middle participle of \apotith^mi\, old and common verb, in metaphorical sense either to cleanse defilements (3:21; Jas 1:21) or to put off clothing (Ro 13:12; Col 3:5ff.; Eph 4:22). Either sense suits here. Therefore (\oun\) because of the new birth (1:23) and the new life demanded. {Wickedness} (\kakian\). This old word, from \kakos\ (evil), in the ancients meant vice of any kind and note \pfsan\ (all) here. {Guile} (\dolon\). Old word (from \del^{\, to catch with bait), deceit. {Hypocrisies} (\hupokriseis\). Singular (\hupokrisin\) in the best MSS. See 1:22 (\anupokriton\) and Mr 7:6f. for Christ's denunciation of hypocrites which the disciples did not understand, including Peter (Mt 15:16ff.). {Envies} (\phthonous\). Genuine here, not \phonous\ (murders), as B has it. For the word see Mt 27:18. {Evil speakings} (\katalalias\). Late word (from \katalalos\, defamer, Ro 1:30), in N.T. only here and 2Co 12:20. "Backbitings." For verb see 2:12.

2:2 {As newborn babes} (\h^s artigenn^ta breph^{\). \Brephos\, old word, originally unborn child (Lu 1:41-44), then infant (Lu 2:12), here figuratively, like \n^pioi\. \Artigenn^ta\ is a late and rare compound (Lucian, imperial inscription) from \arti\ and \genna^{\, with evident allusion to \anagegenn^menoi\ in 1:23, probably meaning that they were recent converts, possibly slight proof that the Epistle written before Romans by Paul (Kuhl). {Long for} (\epipoth^sate\). First aorist (constative) active imperative of \epipoth^{\, old verb for intense yearning (Php 2:26). {The spiritual milk which is without guile} (\to logikon adolon gala\). \Gala\ is old word for milk as in 1Co 9:7 and as metaphor in 1Co 3:2. \Adolos\ is an old compound (here alone in N.T.) adjective (alpha privative and \dolos\ deceit), unadulterated milk which, alas, is so hard to get. \Logikon\ is an old adjective in \-ikos\, from \logos\ (reason, speech), in N.T. only here and Ro 12:1, used here with allusion to \logou\ (1:23) and \r^ma\ (1:25), "the sincere milk of the word" ("the milk belonging to the word," either the milk which is the word or the milk contained in the word, that is Christ). So Bigg holds. But in Ro 12:1 Paul uses \logikon\ in the sense of "rational" or "spiritual," and that idea is possible here as Hort holds. In the Pelagia legend (Usener) we have the phrase \t“n logik“n probat“n tou Christou\ (the spiritual or rational sheep of Christ). {That ye may grow thereby} (\hina en aut“i auxthte\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \auxan“\, old and common verb to grow. See this same metaphor in Col 2:19; Eph 4:15. Peter uses the word of God as the food for growth, especially for babes in Christ, not emphasizing the distinction from solid food (\br“ma\) made in 1Co 3:2; Heb 5:13. Salvation (\s“t^{rian}\) here is final salvation.

2:3 {If ye have tasted} (\ei egeusasthe\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and first aorist middle indicative of \geu“\ in figurative sense as in Heb 6:4f. "A taste excites the appetite" (Bengel). {Gracious} (\chr^{stos}\). Quotation from Ps 34:8. The Hebrew for the LXX \chr^{stos}\ is simply _tobh_ (good). Plato used the word for food also, and Peter carries out the metaphor in \gala\ (milk) as in Lu 5:39.

2:4 {Unto whom} (\pros hon\). The Lord, carrying on the imagery and language of the Psalm. {Coming} (\proserchomenoi\). Present middle participle masculine plural of \proserchomai\ (proselthate in the Psalm) agreeing with the subject of \oikodomeisthe\. {A living stone} (\lithon z“nta\). Accusative case in apposition with \hon\ (whom, the Lord Christ). There is apparent an intentional contradiction between "living" and "stone." Cf. "living hope" in 1:3 and "living word" in 1:23. {Rejected indeed of men} (\hupo anthr“p“n men apodedokimasmenon\). Perfect passive participle of \apodokimaz“\, old verb to repudiate after test (Lu 9:22), in the accusative case agreeing with \lithon\. {But with God} (\para de the“i\). "By the side of God," as he looks at it, in contrast with the rejection "by men" (\hupo anthr“p“n\). {Elect} (\eklekton\). From Isa 28:6 as in \entimon\ (precious, for which see Lu 7:2) rather than \dokimon\ (proved) expected after \apodedokimasmenon\ as meaning far more in God's sight, "a pre-eminence of position with" (Hort).

2:5 {Ye also as living stones} (\kai autoi h“s lithoi z“ntes\). Peter applies the metaphor about Christ as the living stone to the readers, "ye yourselves also." {Are built up a spiritual house} (\oikodomeisthe oikos pneumatikos\). Present passive indicative second person plural of \oikodome“\, the very verb used by Jesus to Peter in Mt 16:18 (\oikodom^s“) of building his church on the rock. If the metaphor of a house of living stones seems "violent" (Vincent), it should be remembered that Jesus employed the figure of a house of believers. Peter just carried it a bit farther and Paul uses a temple for believers in one place (1Co 3:16) and for the kingdom of God in general (Eph 2:22), as does the author of Hebrews (Heb 3:6). This "spiritual house" includes believers in the five Roman provinces of 1:1 and shows clearly how Peter understood the metaphor of Christ in Mt 16:18 to be not a local church, but the church general (the kingdom of Christ). {To be a holy priesthood} (\eis hierateuma hagion\). Late word (from \hierateu“, to serve as priest, Lu 1:8 alone in N.T.), in LXX (Ex 19:6), in N.T. only here and verse 9, either the office of priest (Hort) or an order or body of priests. At any rate, Peter has the same idea of Rev 1:6 (\hiereis\, priests) that all believers are priests (Heb 4:16) and can approach God directly. {To offer up} (\anenegkai\). First aorist active infinitive (of purpose here) of \anapher“, the usual word for offering sacrifices (Heb 7:27). Only these are "spiritual" (\pneumatikas\) as pictured also in Heb 13:15f. {Acceptable} (\euprosdektous\). Late (Plutarch) double compound verbal adjective (\eu, pros, dechomai\) as in 2Co 6:2.

2:6 {It is contained} (\periechei\). Present active (here intransitive, to contain, only N.T. example) of \periech“, old verb, to surround, transitive in Lu 5:9 to seize (only other N.T. example). The formula with \periechei\ is in Josephus (_Ant_. XI. 7). This Scripture (\en graphⁱ\) is Isa 28:16 with some changes. Peter had in verse 4 already quoted \eklekton\ and \entimon\. Now note \akrog^{niaion}\ (a chief corner stone), a word apparently invented by Isaiah (from \akros\, highest, and \g^{niaios}\, Attic word for corner stone). Paul in Eph 2:20 uses the same word, making Christ the chief corner stone (the only other N.T. example). In Isaiah the metaphor is rather a foundation stone. Peter and Paul make it "the primary foundation stone at the structure" (W. W. Lloyd). {On him} (\ep' autⁱ\). That is, "on it" (this corner stone, that is, Christ). {Shall not be put to shame} (\ou m^{kataischunth}i\). Strong negatives \ou mⁱ\ with first aorist passive subjunctive of \kataischun“, old verb, to put to shame (Ro 5:5).

2:7 {The preciousness} (\h^{tim}\). Or "the honour." Explanation of \entimon\ and \ou m^ kataischunth^i\ and only true "for you which believe" (\tois pisteuousin\ ethical dative of articular present active participle of \pisteu“\ to believe). {But for such as disbelieve} (\apistousin de\). Dative present active participle again of \apiste“, opposite of \pisteu“\ (Lu 24:11). {Was made the head of the corner} (\egen^th^ eis kephal^ n g^“nias\). This verse is from Ps 118:22 with evident allusion to Isa 28:16 (\kephal^ n g^“nias=akrog^“niaion\). See Mt 21:42; Mr 12:10; Lu 20:17, where Jesus himself quotes Ps 118:22 and applies the rejection of the stone by the builders (\hoi oikodomountes\, the experts) to the Sanhedrin's conduct toward him. Peter quoted it also (and applied it as Jesus had done) in his speech at the Beautiful Gate (Ac 4:11). Here he quotes it again to the same purpose.

2:8 {And} (\kai\). Peter now quotes Isa 8:14 and gives a new turn to the previous quotation. To the disbelieving, Christ was indeed "a stone of stumbling (\lithos proskommatos\) and rock of offence (\petra skandalou\)," quoted also by Paul in Ro 9:32f., which see for discussion. \Proskomma\ (from \proskopt“\, to cut against) is an obstacle against which one strikes by accident, while \skandalon\ is a trap set to trip one, but both make one fall. Too much distinction need not be made between \lithos\ (a loose stone in the path) and \petra\ (a ledge rising out of the ground). {For they} (\hoi\). Causal use of the relative pronoun. {Stumble at the word, being disobedient} (\proskoptousin t^“i log^“i apeithountes\). Present active indicative of \proskopt“\ with dative case, \log^“i\, and present active participle of \apeithe“\ (cf. \apistousin\ in 2:7) as in 3:1. \T^“i log^“i\ can be construed with \apeithountes\ (stumble, being disobedient to the word). {Whereunto also they were appointed} (\eis ho kai eteth^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \tith^mi\). See this idiom in 1Ti 2:7. "Their disobedience is not ordained, the penalty of their disobedience is" (Bigg). They rebelled against God and paid the penalty.

2:9 {But ye} (\humeis de\). In contrast with the disobedient ones. {An elect race} (\genos eklekton\). From Isa 43:20. The blood relation of the spiritual Israel (not the Jewish race) through the new birth (1:23). {A royal priesthood} (\basileion hierateuma\). From Ex 19:6 (cf. Re 1:6; 5:10). The official in Christian churches is \presbuteros=episcopos\, not \hiereus\. We are all \hiereis\ (priests). Cf. 2:5. {A holy nation}

(\ethnos hagian\). Also from Ex 19:6, but here applied, not to the national Israel, but to the spiritual Israel of believers (both Jews and Gentiles). {A people for God's own possession} (\laos eis peripoi^{sin}\). The idea here occurs in Ex 19:5; De 7:6; 14:2; 26:18, where we have \laos periousios\ as in Tit 2:14 (alone in the N.T.), and in Mal 3:17 we find \eis peripoi^{sin}\ (for a possession). \Periousios laos\ is a people over and above the others and \peripoi^{sis}\ is a possession in a special sense (Eph 1:14). See Paul's use of \periepoi^{sato}\ in Ac 20:28. The old rendering, "a peculiar people," had this idea of possession, for "peculiar" is from _pecus_ (Latin for flock). {That ye may shew forth} (\hop^s exaggeil^{te}\). Purpose clause with \hop^s\, rather than \hina\, with the first aorist active subjunctive of \exaggell^o\, old verb, to tell out, here alone in N.T. {The excellencies} (\tas aretas\). From Isa 43:21. Old word for any preeminence (moral, intellectual, military), often for "virtue," but not in that sense in the O.T. or the N.T. The word has the sense of moral worth in 2Pe 1:3,5; Php 4:8; and the Apocrypha. In Isaiah (here quoted) it means praise and glory to God. So also Isa 42:12. See Ac 2:11 \ta megaleia tou theou\ (the mighty works of God). {Darkness} (\skotous\). Heathenism. {His marvellous light} (\to thaumaston autou ph^s\). Christianity. For \thaumaston\ (from \thaumaz^o) see Mt 21:42. For the change from heathenism to Christianity see Col 1:12; Eph 5:8-14.

2:10 {Which in time past} (\hoi pote\). "Who once upon a time." {No people} (\ou laos\). This phrase from Hos 2:23. Note use of \ou\ (not \oudeis) with \laos\ like Hebrew negative. {Which had not obtained mercy} (\hoi ouk ele^{meno}i\). Perfect passive articular participle of \elee^o\ and the emphatic negative \ou\, with which compare Paul's use of Ho 1; 2 in Ro 9:25, which may have been known to Peter or not. {But now have obtained mercy} (\nun de ele^{thentes}\). Change to first aorist passive participle from "the long antecedent state" to "the single event of conversion which ended it" (Hort).

2:11 {As sojourners and pilgrims} (\h^s paroikous kai parepid^{mous}\). This combination from the LXX (Ge 33:4; Ps 39:13). See 1:1 for \parepid^{mos}\ and 1:17 for \paroikia\ and Eph 2:19 for \paroikos\ (only there and here in N.T., Christians whose fatherland is heaven). {To abstain from} (\apechesthai\). Present middle (direct) infinitive of \apech^o\, old verb, to hold back from (1Th 4:3). In indirect command (to keep on abstaining from) after \parakal“\ (I beseech). With the ablative case \t“n sarkik“n epithumi“n\, the grosser sins of the flesh (for \sarkikos\ see 1Co 3:3) like the list in 4:3. {Which} (\haitines\). "Which very ones." Like Latin _quippe qui_. {War against the soul} (\strateuontai kata t^s psuch^s\). Present middle indicative of \strateu“\, to carry on a campaign (Jas 4:1). See this struggle between the flesh and the spirit vividly pictured by Paul in Ga 5:16-24.

2:12 {Seemly} (\kal^n\). Predicate adjective with \anastroph^n\, for which see 1:15,18. The Gentiles are on the watch for slips in moral conduct by the Christians. {That} (\hina\). Final conjunction with \doxas“sin\ (they may glorify, first aorist active subjunctive of \doxaz“\, the purpose of the Christians about the Gentiles). {Wherein} (\en h“i\). "In what thing." {As evil-doers} (\h“s kakopoi“n\). As they did and do, old word (from \kakon\ and \poie“\, Joh 18:30), in N.T. only here and verse 14 in correct text. Heathen talk against us (\katalalousin\) gleefully. {By your good works} (\ek t“n kal“n erg“n\). "Out of (as a result of) your good (beautiful) deeds." {Which they behold} (\epopteuontes\). Present active participle of \epopteu“\, old verb (from, \epopt^s\, overseer, spectator, 2Pe 1:16), to be an overseer, to view carefully, in N.T. only here and 3:2. {In the day of visitation} (\en h^merfi episkop^s\). From Isa 10:33. Cf. its use in Lu 19:44, which see for the word \episkop^ \ (from \episkope“\, to inspect Heb 12:15). Clear echo here of Mt 5:16.

2:13 {Be subject to} (\hupotag^te\). Second aorist passive imperative second person plural of \hupotass“\, to subject to, as in 3:22. {Every ordinance of man} (\pas^i anthr“pin^i ktisei\). Dative case of old and common word \ktisis\ (from \ktiz“\, to create, to found), act of creation (Ro 1:20), a creature or creation (Ro 1:25), all creation (Col 1:15), an institution as here (in Pindar so). For \anthr“pinos\ (human) see Jas 3:7. Peter here approves no special kind of government, but he supports law and order as Paul does (Ro 13:1-8) unless it steps in between God and man (Ac 4:20). {For the Lord's sake} (\dia ton kurion\). For Jesus' sake. That is reason enough for the Christian not to be an anarchist (Mt 22:21). The heathen were keen to charge the Christians with any crime after Nero set the fashion. "It should not be forgotten that, in spite of the fine language of the philosophers, the really popular religions in Greece and Rome were forms of devil-worship, intimately blended with magic in all its grades" (Bigg). {As supreme} (\h“s huperechonti\). Dative singular of present active participle of \huperech“\, old verb (intransitive), to stand out above (to have it over), as in Ro 13:1. It is not the divine right of kings, but the fact of the king as the outstanding ruler.

2:14 {Unto governors} (\h^gemosin\). Dative again of \h^gem“n\, a leader (from \h^geomai\, to lead), old and common word (Mt 10:18). {As sent by him} (\h“s di' autou pempomenois\). Present passive participle of \pemp“\, \Di' autou\ is "by God," as Jesus made plain to Pilate; even Pilate received his authority ultimately "from above" (Joh 18:11). {For vengeance on evil-doers} (\eis ekdik^sin kakopoi“n\). Objective genitive with \ekdik^sin\, for which see Lu 18:7f. {For praise to them that do well} (\epainon agathopoi“n\). Objective genitive again, \agathopoios\, a late word (Plutarch, Sirach) from \agathon\ and \poie“\ here only in N.T. Found in a magical papyrus.

2:15 {By well-doing} (\agathopoiountas\). Present active participle of \agathopoie“\, only in LXX and N.T. (Mr 3:4). In accusative case agreeing with \humas\ understood, accusative of general reference with \phimoin\, present active infinitive (epexegetic infinitive after \to thel^ma tou theou\, the will of God), late and rare verb (from \phimos\ muzzle), as in Mt 22:12. {The ignorance of foolish men} (\t^n t“n aphron“n anthr“p“n agn“sian\). \Agn“sia\ is late and rare word (in the papyri) from alpha privative and \gn“sis\ (knowledge), in N.T. only here and 1Co 15:24 (disgraceful ignorance in both instances). Note alliteration.

2:16 {As free} (\h“s eleutheroi\). Note nominative again connected with \hupotag^te\ in verse 13, not with \phimoin\ in verse 14 (a parenthesis in fact). For this ethical sense of \eleutheros\ see Ga 4:26. {And not using your freedom} (\kai m^ echontes t^n eleutherian\). "And not holding your liberty" (present active participle of \ech“\, with usual negative \m^ with participle). {For a cloke of wickedness} (\h“s epikalumma t^s kakias\). \Epikalumma\ (from \epikalupt“\ Ro 4:7) is a rare word (Aristotle, LXX) for veil, here only in N.T. and in figurative sense for pretext to do wickedness under, a thing, alas, that sometimes happens. {But as bondservants of God} (\all' h“s theou douloi\). Paul's proud title. There is no such thing as absolute freedom (personal freedom), for that is anarchy. Cf. Ro 6:22 "enslaved to God."

2:17 {Honour all men} (\pantas tim^{sate}\). Not with the same honour. Constative use of the aorist imperative. {Love the brotherhood} (\t^{n adelphot^{ta} agapfte}\). Present active imperative of \agapa“, keep on doing it. Note the abstract \adelphot^s (\from \adelphos\, brother) in the collective sense, rare save in ecclesiastical literature, though in I Macc. 12:10; IV Macc. 10:3, and in late papyri. It is a word for all Christians. {Fear God} (\ton theon phobeisthe\). In both senses of reverence and dread, and keep it up (present middle imperative). {Honour the king} (\ton basilea timfte\). Keep that up also. A fine motto in this verse.

2:18 {Servants} (\hoi oiketai\). Note article with the class as with \andres\ (3:7), though not with \gunaikes\ (3:1). \Oiket^s\, old word from \oikos\ (house), means one in the same house with another (Latin _domesticus_), particularly house servants (slaves) in distinction from the general term \doulos\ (slave). "Ye domestics." See similar directions to Christian servants (slaves) in Col 3:22-25; Eph 6:5-7; 1Ti 6:1f.; Tit 2:9f. \Oiket^s\ in N.T. occurs only here, Lu 16:13; Ac 10:7; Ro 14:4. {Be in subjection} (\hupotassomenoi\). Present middle participle of \hupotass“, common late compound to subject oneself to one (Lu 2:51). Either the participle is here used as an imperative (so in 3:1,7) as in Ro 12:16f., or the imperative \este\ has to be supplied (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 945). {To your masters} (\tois despotais\). Dative case of \despot^s\, old word for absolute owner in contrast with \doulos\). It is used also of God (Lu 2:29; Ac 4:24,29) and of Christ (2Pe 2:1; Jude 1:4). \Kurios\ has a wider meaning and not necessarily suggesting absolute power. {To the good and gentle} (\tois agathois kai epieikesin\). Dative case also with the article with class. For \epieik^s\ see on Jas 3:17. There were slave-owners (masters) like this as there are housekeepers and employers of workmen today. This is no argument for slavery, but only a sidelight on a condition bad enough at its best. {To the froward} (\tois skoliois\). "To the crooked." Old word, also in Lu 3:5; Ac 2:40; Php 2:15. Unfortunately there were slave-holders as there are employers today, like this group. The test of obedience comes precisely toward this group.

2:19 {For this is acceptable} (\touto gar charis\). "For this thing (neuter singular \touto\, obedience to crooked masters) is grace" (\charis\ is feminine, here "thanks" as in Ro 7:25). "Acceptable" calls for \euprosdekton\ (2:5), which is not the text here. {If a man endureth griefs} (\ei huopherei tis lupas\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and present active indicative of \hupopher\, old verb, to bear up under, in N.T. only here, 1Co 10:13; 2Ti 3:11. Note plural of \lup^ (grief). {For conscience toward God} (\dia suneid^sin theou\). Suffering is not a blessing in and of itself, but, if one's duty to God is involved (Ac 4:20), then one can meet it with gladness of heart. \Theou\ (God) is objective genitive. For \suneid^sis\ (conscience) see on ^Ac 23:1; 1Co 8:7. It occurs again in 1Pe 3:16. {Suffering wrongfully} (\pasch^"n adik"s\). Present active participle of \pasch^ and the common adverb \adik"s\, unjustly, here alone in N.T. This is the whole point, made clear already by Jesus in Mt 5:10-12, where Jesus has also "falsely" (\pseudomenoi\). See also Lu 6:32-34.

2:20 {For what glory} (\poion gar kleos\). Qualitative interrogative (what kind of glory). "What price glory?" \Kleos\ is old word from \kle^ (\kale^, to call), report, praise, glory, here only in N.T. {If ye shall take it patiently} (\ei hupomeneite\). First-class condition with \ei\ and future active indicative of \hupomen^, for which see Jas 1:12. Same condition also in next sentence (\all' ei\, etc.). {When ye sin} (\hamartanontes\). Present active participle of \hamartan^ (\continued repetition). {And are buffeted for it} (\kai kolaphizomenoi\). Present passive participle of \kolaphiz^, late word (from \kolaphos\ fist), only in N.T. (cf. Mt 26:67) and ecclesiastical writers. Repeated action again. No posing as a martyr allowed here. Christians do sometimes deserve persecution, as Jesus implied (Mt 5:10-12). {When ye do well} (\agathopoiousantes\). Present active participle of \agathopoie^ as in verse 15. {And suffer for it} (\kai paschontes\). Present active participle of \pasch^ (verse 19). No "for it" in the Greek here or in the previous sentence. {This is acceptable with God} (\touto charis para the^i\). "This thing (neuter) is thanks (verse 19) by the side of (\para\ God (as God looks at it)."

2:21 {For hereunto were ye called} (\eis touto gar ekl^th^te\). First aorist indicative of \kale^, to call. They were called to suffer without flinching (Hort), if need be. {Because} (\hoti\). The fact that Christ suffered (\epathen\) lifts their suffering to a new plane. {Leaving you an example} (\humin hupolimpan“n hupogrammon\). Present active participle of the late Ionic verb \hupolimpan“\ (in the papyri) for the common \hupoleip“\, to leave behind (under), here only in N.T. \Hupogrammos\ is also a late and rare word (from \hupograph“\, to write under), a writing-copy for one to imitate, in II Macc. 2:28; Philo, Clement of Rome, here only in N.T. Clement of Alex. (_Strom_. V. 8. 49) uses it of the copy-head at the top of a child's exercise book for the child to imitate, including all the letters of the alphabet. The papyri give many examples of \hupograph“\ and \hupograph“\ in the sense of copying a letter. {That ye should follow his steps} (\hina epakolouth“s te tois ichnesin autou\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \epakolouth“\, old verb, to follow closely upon, with the associative-instrumental (ITi 5:10,24) or the locative here. \Ichnos\ is old word (from \hik“\, to go), tracks, footprints, in N.T. only here, 2Co 12:18; Ro 4:12. Peter does not mean that Christ suffered only as an example (1:18), but he did leave us his example for our copying (1Jo 2:6).

2:22 {Who did no sin} (\hos hamartian ouk epoi“sen\). Quotation from Isa 53:9. He has already expressed the sinlessness of Christ in 1:19. The next clause is a combination of Isa 53:9; Zep 3:13. For "guile" (\dolos\) see verse 1. {Was found} (\heureth“\). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk“\, Christ's guilelessness stood the test of scrutiny (Vincent), as Peter knew (Mt 26:60; Joh 18:38; 19:4,6).

2:23 {When he was reviled} (\loidoroumenos\). Present passive participle of \loidore“\, old verb (from \loidoros\, reviler, 1Co 5:11) as in Joh 9:28. {Reviled not again} (\ouk anteloidorei\). Imperfect active (for repeated incidents) of \antiloidore“\, late and rare compound (Plutarch, Lucian, one papyrus example with compound following the simplex verb as here, Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_), here only in N.T. Idiomatic use of \anti\ (in turn, return, back). {Threatened not} (\ouk peilei\). Imperfect again (repeated acts) of \apeile“\, old compound (from \apeil“\, threat, Ac 9:1), in N.T. only here and Ac 4:17. {But committed himself} (\paredidou de\). Imperfect active again (kept on committing himself) of \paradid“mi\, to hand over, usually of one to a judge, but here not of another (as the Sanhedrin), but himself (supply \heauton\), for Jesus uses this very idea in Lu 23:46 as he dies. Jesus thus handed himself and his cause over to the Father who judges righteously (\t“i krinonti dikai“s\, dative of present active articular participle of \krin“).

2:24 {Who his own self} (\hos autos\). Intensive pronoun with the relative referring to Christ (note relatives also in verses 22,23). {Bare our sins} (\an^negken tas hamartias h^m“n\).
Second aorist active indicative of \anapher“, common verb of bringing sacrifice to the altar. Combination here of Isa 53:12; De 21:23. Jesus is the perfect sin offering (Heb 9:28). For Christ's body (\s“ma\ as the offering see 1Co 11:24. "Here St.
Peter puts the Cross in the place of the altar" (Bigg). {Upon the tree} (\epi to xulon\). Not tree here as in Lu 23:31, originally just wood (1Co 3:12), then something made of wood, as a gibbet or cross. So used by Peter for the Cross in Ac 5:30; 10:39; and by Paul in Ga 3:13 (quoting De 21:23). {Having died unto sins} (\tais hamartiais apogenomenoi\). Second aorist middle participle of \apoginomai\, old compound to get away from, with dative (as here) to die to anything, here only in N.T. {That we might live unto righteousness} (\hina t^i dikaiousun^i z^s“men\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \za“\ with the dative (cf. Ro 6:20). Peter's idea here is like that of Paul in Ro 6:1-23, especially verses 2,10f.). {By whose stripes ye were healed} (\hou t“i m“l“pi iath^te\). From Isa 53:5. First aorist passive indicative of \iaomai\, common verb to heal (Jas 5:16) and the instrumental case of \m“l“ps\, rare word (Aristotle, Plutarch) for bruise or bloody wound, here only in N.T. Cf. 1:18. Writing to slaves who may have received such stripes, Peter's word is effective.

2:25 {For ye were going astray like sheep} (\^te gar h“s probata plan“menoi\). Brought from Isa 53:6, but changed to periphrastic imperfect indicative with \^te\ and present middle participle of \plana“, to wander away. Recall the words of Jesus in Lu 15:4-7. {But are now returned} (\alla epestraph^te\).
Second aorist passive indicative of \epistreph“, old verb, to turn, to return (Mt 10:13). {Unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls} (\epi ton poimena kai episkopon t“n psuch“n hum“n\).
Jesus called himself the Good Shepherd (Joh 10:11, and see also Heb 13:20). Here alone is Christ called our "Bishop" (overseer). See both ideas combined in Eze 34:11. Philo calls God \Episcopos\ (Jesus is also \Apostolos\ Heb 3:1) and he deserves all other titles of dignity that we can give him.

3:1 {In like manner} (\homoi“s\). Adverb closely connected with \hupotassomenoi\, for which see 2:18. {Ye wives} (\gunaikes\). Without article. About wives see also Col 3:18; Eph 5:22; Tit 2:4. {To your own husbands} (\tois idiois andrasin\). \Idiois\ occurs also in Ephesians and Titus, but not in Colossians. It strengthens the idea of possession in the article \tois\. Wives are not enjoined to be in subjection to the husbands of other women, as some think it fine to be (affinities!) {Even if any obey not the word} (\kai ei tines apeithousin t“i log“i\). Condition of first class and dative case of \logos\ (1:23,25; 2:8), that is, remain heathen. {That they be gained} (\hina kerd“th“sontai\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first future passive indicative of \kerdain“\, old verb, to gain (from \kerdos\, gain, interest) as in Mt 18:15. See the future with \hina\ also in Lu 20:10; Re 3:9. {Without the word} (\aneu logou\). Probably here "word from their wives" (Hart), the other sense of \logos\ (talk, not technical "word of God"). {By the behaviour of their wives} (\dia t“s t“n gunaik“n anastroph“s\). Won by pious living, not by nagging. Many a wife has had this blessed victory of grace.

3:2 {Beholding} (\epopteusantes\). First aorist active participle of \epopteu“\, for which see 2:12. See 2:12 also for \anastroph“n\ manner of life). {Chaste} (\hagn“n\). Pure because "in fear" (\en phob“i\), no word in the Greek for "coupled," fear of God, though in Eph 5:33 fear (reverence for) of the husband is urged.

3:3 {Whose adorning} (\h“n kosmos\). Genitive plural of the relative referring to \gunaik“n\ (wives). \Kosmos\ has here its old meaning of ornament (cf. our cosmetics), not the common one of world (Joh 17:5) considered as an orderly whole. _Mundus_ in Latin is used in this double sense (ornament, world). {Let it be} (\est“\). Imperative third singular of \eimi\). Not the outward adorning of plaiting the hair (\ouch ho ex“then emplok“s trich“n\). The use of \ouch\ here rather than \m^ (\iusual negative with the imperative) because of the sharp contrast in verse 4 (\all“\). The old adverb \ex“then\ (from without) is in the attributive position like an adjective. \Emplok^ is a late word (from \emplek^, to inweave, 2Ti 2:4; 2Pe 2:20) in Strabo, but often in the papyri for struggle as well as plaiting, here only in N.T. {Of wearing} (\perithese^s). Late and rare word (Galen, Arrian) from \peritith^mi (Mt 27:28), to put around, a placing around. Ornaments of gold were worn round the hair as nets and round the finger, arm, or ankle. {Or of putting on} (\enduse^s). Old word from \endu^ (to put on), here only in N.T. Peter is not forbidding the wearing of clothes and ornaments by women, but the display of finery by contrast. Cf. 1Ti 2:9-13; Isa 3:16ff.

3:4 {But the hidden man of the heart} (\all' ho kruptos t^s kardias anthr^pos). Here \anthr^pos is in contrast with \kosmos just before. See Paul's use of \anthr^pos for the outer and old, the inner and new man (2Co 4:16; Ro 7:22; Col 3:9; Eph 3:16; 4:22,24). See also the Jew \en krupt^i (Ro 2:29) and what Jesus said about God seeing "in secret" (Mt 6:4,6). {In the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit} (\en t^i aphthart^i tou h^suchiou kai prae^s pneumatou). No word in the Greek for "apparel" (\kosm^i). For \aphthartos see 1:4,23. For \praus see Mt 5:5; 11:29. \Pneuma (spirit) is here disposition or temper (Bigg), unlike any other use in the N.T. In 3:18,19; 4:6 it means the whole inner man as opposed to \sarx or \s^ma, very much as \psuch^ is used as opposed to \s^ma. {Which} (\ho). Spirit just mentioned. {Of great price} (\poluteles). Old word (from \polu and \telos, cost), in N.T. only here, Mr 14:3; 1Ti 2:9.

3:5 {Adorned themselves} (\ekosmoun heautas). Imperfect active of customary action, "used to adorn themselves." \Kosme^ is old verb from \kosmos in the sense in verse 3. See Heb 11:11,35 for like tribute to holy women of the O.T. The participle \hupotassomenai repeats verse 1.

3:6 {As Sarah} (\h^s Sarra). {Obeyed Abraham} (\hup^kouen t^i Abraam). Imperfect active of \hupakou^, "used to obey" (with dative). {Calling him lord} (\kurion auton kalousa). Present active participle of \kale^s. See Gen 18:12. {Whose children ye now are} (\h^s egen^th^te tekna). First aorist passive indicative of \ginomai, "whose children ye became." {If ye do well} (\agathopoiousai). Present active feminine plural participle of \agathopoie^ (2:15), "doing good." {And are not put in fear by any terror} (\kai m^ phoboumenai m^demian pto^{sin}). Free quotation from Pr 3:25, "and not fearing any terror" (cognate accusative of \pto^{sis}, after \phoboumenai, present middle participle, late and rare word from \ptoe^{ai}, to terrify, as in Lu 21:9, here only in N.T.). Perhaps Peter regards Sarah's falsehood as the yielding to a sudden terror (Hart). Hannah could also be named along with Sarah. The women somehow do not organize "daughters of Sarah" societies.

3:7 {Ye husbands likewise} (\hoi andres homoi^{ai}). Probably "likewise" here refers to honouring all men (2:17), not "likewise" of 3:1. {Dwell with} (\sunoikountes). Present active participle of \sunoike^{ai}, old verb for domestic association, here only in N.T. Used as imperative here like the participle in 2:18; 3:1. {According to knowledge} (\kata gn^{sin}). "With an intelligent recognition of the nature of the marriage relation" (Vincent). {Giving honour unto the woman as unto the weaker vessel} (\h^{ai} asthenester^{ai} i skeuei t^{ai} i gunaikei^{ai} i aponemontes tim^{en}). Present active participle of \aponem^{ai}, old verb, to assign, to portion out (or off), here only in N.T. \Skeuos is an old and common word for vessel, furniture, utensil (Mt 12:29; 2Ti 2:20). Here both husband and wife are termed vessels or "parts of the furniture of God's house" (Bigg). See Paul's use of \skeuos for ministers (2Co 4:7). \Gunaikei^{ai} here is an adjective (female, feminine) from \gun^{ai} (woman, wife). She is termed "the weaker" (\t^{ai} i asthenester^{ai}), not for intellectual or moral weakness, but purely for physical reasons, which the husband must recognize with due consideration for marital happiness. {Joint-heirs of the grace of life} (\sunkl^{ai} ronomoi charitos z^{ai} ai^{ai}). Late double compound found in an Ephesian inscription and the papyri, in N.T. only here, Ro 8:17; Eph 3:6; Heb 11:9. God's gift of life eternal belongs to woman as well as to man. In the eyes of God the wife may be superior to the husband, not merely equal. {To the end that your prayers be not hindered} (\eis to m^{ai} egkoptesthai tas proseuchas hum^{an}). Purpose clause with \eis to and the present passive infinitive (with negative m^{ai}) of \egkopt^{ai}, to cut in, to interrupt, late verb (Polybius), as in Ro 15:22, etc. Very vivid to us now with our telephones and radios when people cut in on us. \Proseuchas (prayers) is the accusative of general reference. Husbands surely have here cause to consider why their prayers are not answered.

3:8 {Finally} (\to telos). Adverbial accusative. Conclusion, not of the Epistle, but only of the addresses to various classes. No verb (\este| imperative, be) here. {Likeminded} (\homophrones). Old compound (\homos, phr^{\hat{n}}), here only in N.T. {Compassionate} (\sumpatheis). Old adjective (\sun, pasch^{\hat{a}}), in N.T. only here and Ro 12:15. Our "sympathetic" in original sense. {Loving as brethren} (\philadelphoi). Old compound (\philos, adelphos), here only in N.T. {Tender-hearted} (\eusplagchnoi). Late and rare compound (\eu| and \splagchnon), in Hippocrates, Apocrypha, in N.T. only here and Eph 4:32. {Humble minded} (\tapeinophrones). Late compound (\tapeinos, phr^{\hat{n}}), in Plutarch, Pr 29:23, here only in N.T.

3:9 {Not rendering evil for evil} (\m^{\hat{a}} apodidontes kakon anti kakou). \M^{\hat{a}} and the present active participle of \apodid^{\hat{a}}mi, to give back. The same phrase in Ro 12:17 and the same idea in 1Th 5:15. Peter may have obtained it from Paul or both from Pr 17:13; 20:22, "an approximation to Christ's repeal of the \lex talionis (Mt 5:38ff.) which Plato first opposed among the Greeks" (Hart). Common use of \anti for exchange. {Reviling for reviling} (\loidorian anti loidorias). Allusion to 2:23 (Christ's own example). {But contrariwise blessing} (\tounantion de eulogountes). Adverbial accusative and crasis (\to enantion) of the neuter article and the adjective \enantios (\en, antios, opposite, Mt 14:24), "on the contrary." For \eulogountes (present active participle of \euloge^{\hat{a}}) see Lu 6:28; Ro 12:14 (imperative \eulogeite). {For hereunto were ye called} (\hoti eis touto ekl^{\hat{t}}h^{\hat{t}}e). See 2:21 for this verb and use of \eis touto (pointing to the preceding argument). {That ye should inherit a blessing} (\hina eulogian kl^{\hat{r}}onom^{\hat{s}}^{\hat{t}}e). Purpose clause with \hina and the first aorist active subjunctive of \kl^{\hat{r}}onome^{\hat{a}}, a plain reference to Esau, who wanted "to inherit the blessing" (Heb 12:17) after he had sold his birthright. Christians are the new Israel (both Gentiles and Jews) and are the spiritual descendants of Isaac (Ga 4:22ff.).

3:10 {For} (\gar). Reason for the entire exhortation in verses 8,9 and introducing in verses 10-12 a quotation from Ps 34:13-17 with some slight changes. {Would love life} (\thel^{\hat{a}}n z^{\hat{a}}^{\hat{n}} agapfin). "Wishing to love life." This present life. The LXX expressions are obscure Hebraisms. The LXX has \agap^{\hat{a}}n (participle present active of \agapa^{\hat{a}}, not the infinitive \agapfin). {Let him refrain} (\pausat^{\hat{a}}). Third person singular first aorist active imperative of \pau^{\hat{a}} to make stop, whereas the LXX has \pauson (second person singular). {His tongue} (\t^{\hat{n}} gl“ssan). See Jas 3:1-12. {That they speak no guile} (\tou m[^]lal[^]sai dolon). Purpose clause with genitive article \tou (negative \m[^]) and the first aorist active infinitive of \lale“. But it can also be explained as the ablative case with the redundant negative \m[^] after a verb of hindering (\pausat“) like Lu 4:42. See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1061. "Let him refrain his lips from speaking guile."

3:11 {Let him turn away} (\ekklinat“). First aorist active imperative third person singular of \ekklin“, where the LXX has \ekklinon (second person singular). Old verb, in N.T. only here, Ro 3:12; 16:17. Peter adapted the passage all through to his own construction and use. So as to \poi[^]sat“ (let him do) for \poi[^]son (do thou), \z[^]t[^]sat“ (let him seek) for \z[^]t[^]son (do thou seek), \di[^]xat“ (let him pursue) for \di[^]xon (do thou pursue), all first aorist active imperatives (of \poie“, z[^]te“, di[^]k“). See Heb 12:14 for "pursuing peace." If men only did!

3:12 {Upon} (\epi). In the case of righteous (\dikaious, in the O.T. sense like \dikaion Lot\ in 2Pe 2:7) for their good, but in the case of men "that do evil" (\epi poiountas kaka, "upon men doing evil things") "the face of the Lord" (\pros“pon kuriou) is not for their good, \epi here approaching "against" in idea.

3:13 {That will harm you} (\ho kak“s“n humas). Future active articular participle of \kako“, old verb (from \kakos, bad) as in Ac 7:6,19. Any real hurt, either that wishes to harm you or that can harm. See the words in Isa 50:9. {If ye be} (\ean gen[^]sthe). Rather, "if ye become" (condition of third class with \ean\ and second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai). {Zealous of that which is good} (\tou agathou z[^]l“tai). "Zealots for the good" (objective genitive after \z[^]l“tai (zealots, not zealous), old word from \z[^]lo“ (1Co 12:12).

3:14 {But and if ye should suffer} (\all' ei kai paschoite). "But if ye should also (or even) suffer." Condition of the fourth class with \ei and the optative (undetermined with less likelihood), a rare condition in the vernacular _Koin_, since the optative was a dying mode. If matters, in spite of the prophetic note of victory in verse 13, should come to actual suffering "for righteousness' sake" (\dia dikaiosun[^]n) as in Mt 5:10 (\heneken, not \dia), then "blessed" (\makarioi, the very word of Jesus there which see, a word meaning "happy, " not \eulog^{toi}\) "are ye" (not in the Greek). If the conclusion were expressed regularly, it would be \ei^{te} an\ (ye would be), not \este\ (ye are). It is interesting to note the third-class condition in verse 13 just before the fourth-class one in verse 14. {Fear not their fear} (\ton phobon autⁿ m^{phob}th^{te}\). Prohibition with \m^{phob}\ and the first aorist (ingressive) passive subjunctive of \phobeomai\, to fear, and the cognate accusative \phobon\ (fear, terror). "Do not fear their threats" (Bigg). Quotation from Isa 8:12f. {Neither be troubled} (\m^{de} taraxth^{te}\). Prohibition with \m^{de}\ and the first aorist (ingressive) subjunctive of \tarass^{ai}\, to disturb (Mt 2:6; Joh 12:27). Part of the same quotation. Cf. 3:6.

3:15 {Sanctify} (\hagiasate\). First aorist active imperative of \hagiaz^{ai}\. This instead of being afraid. {Christ as Lord} (\kurion ton Christon\). \Ton Christon\, direct object with article and \kurion\ predicate accusative (without article). This is the correct text, not \ton theon\ of the Textus Receptus. An adaptation to Christ of Isa 8:13. {Being ready always} (\hetoimoi aei\). No participle in the Greek, old adjective (Tit 3:1). {To give answer} (\pros apologian\). "For an apology," the old sense of \apologia\, an answer back, a defence (not excuse), as in Ac 22:1, from \apologeomai\ to defend (not to apologize). {A reason concerning the hope that is in you} (\logon peri t^s en humin elpidos\). Original sense of \logon\ (accusative of the thing with \aitounti\ with \humfs\, accusative of the person) "concerning the in you hope." Ready with a spoken defence of the inward hope. This attitude calls for an intelligent grasp of the hope and skill in presenting it. In Athens every citizen was expected to be able to join in the discussion of state affairs. {Yet with meekness and fear} (\alla meta praut^{tos} kai phobou\). Of God (2:18; 3:2,4), not of man.

3:16 {Having a good conscience} (\suneid^{sin} echontes agathⁿ\). Present active participle of \ech^{ai}\. See 2:18 for \suneid^{sin}\ and 3:21 for \suneid^{sis} agathⁿ\ again ("a quasi-personification," Hart). {That they may be put to shame} (\hina kataischunth^{sin}\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \kataischun^{ai}\, old verb, to put to shame (Lu 13:17; 1Pe 2:6). {Wherein ye are spoken against} (\en hⁱ katalaleisthe\). Present passive indicative of \katalale^{ai}\, for which see 2:12 with \en hⁱ\ also. Peter may be recalling (Hart) his own experience at Pentecost when the Jews first scoffed and others were cut to the heart (Ac 2:13,37).

{Who revile} (\hoi ep^reazontes). Articular present active participle of \ep^reaz^, old verb (from \ep^reia\, spiteful abuse), to insult, in N.T. only here and Lu 6:28. {In Christ} (\en Christ^i). Paul's common mystical phrase that Peter has three times (here, 5:10,14), not in John, though the idea is constantly in John. Peter here gives a new turn (cf. 2:12) to \anastroph^ (manner of life). "Constantly the apostle repeats his phrases with new significance and in a new light" (Bigg).

3:17 {Better} (\kreitton). Comparative of \kratus as in 2Pe 2:21; Heb 1:4. Patient endurance not only silences calumny (verse 16), is Christlike (verse 18), but it has a value of its own (verse 17). {If the will of God should so will} (\ei theloi to the^ma tou theou). Condition of the fourth class again (\ei--theloi) with \ei and the optative. For a like pleonasm see Joh 7:17. {For well-doing than for evil-doing} (\agathopoountas ^kakopoountas). Accusative plural agreeing with \humfs understood (accusative of general reference with the infinitive \paschein\ (to suffer) of the participles from \agathopoie^ (see 2:15) and \kakopoie^ (Mr 3:4, and see 1Pe 2:14 for \kakopoios).

3:18 {Because Christ also died} (\hoti kai Christos apethanen). So the best MSS.; later ones \epathen\ (suffered). The example of Christ should stir us to patient endurance. {For sins} (\peri hamarti^"n). "Concerning sins" (not his, but ours, 1:18). \Peri\ (around, concerning) with \hamartias in the regular phrase for the sin offering (Le 5:7; 6:30), though \huper hamartias does occur (Eze 43:25). So in the N.T. we find both \peri hamarti^"n\ (Heb 5:3) and \huper hamarti^"n\ (Heb 5:1). {Once} (\hapax). Once for all (Heb 9:28), not once upon a time (\pote). {The righteous for the unrighteous} (\dikaios huper adik^"n). Literally, "just for unjust" (no articles). See 1Pe 2:19 for the sinlessness of Christ as the one perfect offering for sin. This is what gives Christ's blood value. He has no sin himself. Some men today fail to perceive this point. {That he might bring us to God} (\hina h^mfs prosagag^i t^"i the^"i). Purpose clause with \hina, with second aorist active subjunctive of \prosag^ and the dative case t^"i the^"i. The MSS. vary between \h^mfs\ (us) and \humfs\ (you). The verb \prosag^ means to lead or bring to (Mt 18:24), to approach God (cf. \prosag^"g^"n\ in Eph 2:18), to present us to God on the basis of his atoning death for us, which has opened the way (Ro 3:25; Heb 10:19f.) {Being put to death in the flesh} (\thanat[“]theis men sarki\). First aorist passive participle of \thanato[“]\, old verb (from \thanatos\ death), to put to death. \Sarki\ is locative case of \sarx\. {But quickened in the spirit} (\z[“]opoi^ˆtheis de pneumati\). First aorist passive participle of \z[“]opoie[“]\ rare (Aristotle) verb (from \z[“]opoios\ making alive), to make alive. The participles are not antecedent to \apethanen\, but simultaneous with it. There is no such construction as the participle of subsequent action. The spirit of Christ did not die when his flesh did, but "was endued with new and greater powers of life" (Thayer). See 1Co 15:22 for the use of the verb for the resurrection of the body. But the use of the word \pneumati\ (locative case) in contrast with \sarki\ starts Peter's mind off in a long comparison by way of illustration that runs from verses 19-22. The following verses have caused more controversy than anything in the Epistle.

3:19 {In which also} (\en h[“]i kai\). That is, in spirit (relative referring to \pneumati\). But, a number of modern scholars have followed Griesbach's conjecture that the original text was either \N[“]e kai\ (Noah also), or \En[“]ch kai\ (Enoch also), or \en h[“]i kai En[“]ch\ (in which Enoch also) which an early scribe misunderstood or omitted \En[“]ch kai\ in copying (\homoioteleuton\). It is allowed in Stier and Theile's _Polyglott_. It is advocated by J. Cramer in 1891, by J. Rendel Harris in _The Expositor_ (1901), and _Sidelights on N.T. Research_ (p. 208), by Nestle in 1902, by Moffatt's New Translation of the New Testament. Windisch rejects it as inconsistent with the context. There is no manuscript for the conjecture, though it would relieve the difficulty greatly. Luther admits that he does not know what Peter means. Bigg has no doubt that the event recorded took place between Christ's death and his resurrection and holds that Peter is alluding to Christ's _Descensus ad Inferos_ in Ac 2:27 (with which he compares Mt 27:52f.; Lu 23:34; Eph 4:9). With this Windisch agrees. But Wohlenberg holds that Peter means that Christ in his preexistent state preached to those who rejected the preaching of Noah who are now in prison. Augustine held that Christ was in Noah when he preached. Bigg argues strongly that Christ during the time between his death and resurrection preached to those who once heard Noah (but are now in prison) and offered them another chance and not mere condemnation. If so, why did Jesus confine his preaching to this one group? So the theories run on about this passage. One can only say that it is a slim hope for those who neglect or reject Christ in this life to gamble with a possible second chance after death which rests on very precarious exegesis of a most difficult passage in Peter's Epistle.

Accepting the text as we have, what can we make of it? {He went and preached} (\poreutheis ek^{ruxen}). First aorist passive (deponent) participle of \poreuomai\ and first aorist active indicative of \k^{russ}\, the verb commonly used of the preaching of Jesus. Naturally the words mean personal action by Christ "in spirit" as illustration of his "quickenings" (verse 18) whether done before his death or afterwards. It is interesting to observe that, just as the relative \en hⁱ\ here tells something suggested by the word \pneumati\ (in spirit) just before, so in verse 21 the relative \ho\ (which) tells another illustration of the words \di' hudatos\ (by water) just before. Peter jumps from the flood in Noah's time to baptism in Peter's time, just as he jumped backwards from Christ's time to Noah's time. He easily goes off at a word. What does he mean here by the story that illustrates Christ's quickening in spirit? {Unto the spirits in prison} (\tois en phulakⁱ pneumasin\). The language is plain enough except that it does not make it clear whether Jesus did the preaching to spirits in prison at the time or to people whose spirits are now in prison, the point of doubt already discussed. The metaphorical use of \en phulakⁱ\ can be illustrated by 2Pe 2:4; Jude 1:6; Re 20:7 (the final abode of the lost). See Heb 12:23 for the use of \pneumata\ for disembodied spirits.

3:20 {Which aforetime were disobedient} (\apeith^{sasin pote}). First aorist active participle of \apeithe\ (for which verb see 3:20) in the dative plural agreeing with \pneumasin\. These spirits now in prison once upon a time (pote) were disobedient (typical rebels, Hart calls them). {Waited} (\apexedecheto\). Imperfect middle of the double compound \apekdechomai\, late verb, probably first by Paul (1Co 1:7), though in the apocryphal _Acta Pauli_ (iii) and other late writings cited by Nageli (p. 43). Perfective use of the two prepositions (\apo, ek\) to wait out to the end, as for Christ's Second Coming (Php 3:20). A hundred years apparently after the warning (Ge 5:32; 6:3; 7:6) Noah was preparing the ark and Noah as a preacher of righteousness (2Pe 2:5) forewarned the people, who disregarded it. {While the ark was a preparing} (\kataskeuazomen^{s kib^{tu}}). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of \kataskeuaz“, old compound (Mt 11:10), for \kib“tos\ (ark) see on ˘Mt 24:38. {Wherein} (\eis hˆn\). "Into which" (the ark). {That is} (\tout' estin\). Explanatory expression like our English idiom (Ro 10:6, etc.). {Souls} (\psuchai\). Persons of both sexes (living men) as in Ac 2:41; 27:37, etc. {Were saved} (\dies“thˆsan\). First aorist passive indicative of \dias“z“, old compound, to bring safe through as in Ac 27:44. {Through water} (\di' hudatos\). "By means of water" as the intermediate agent, an apparent change in the use of \dia\ in composition just before (local use) to the instrumental use here. They came through the water in the ark and so were saved by the water in spite of the flood around them. Peter lays stress (Hart) on the water rather than on the ark (Heb 11:7) for the sake of the following illustration.

3:21 {Which also} (\ho kai\). Water just mentioned. {After a true likeness} (\antitupon\). Water in baptism now as an anti-type of Noah's deliverance by water. For \baptisma\ see on ˘Mt 3:7. For \antitupon\ see on ˘Heb 9:24 (only other N.T. example) where the word is used of the earthly tabernacle corresponding (\antitupa\) to the heavenly, which is the pattern (\tupon\ Heb 8:5) for the earthly. So here baptism is presented as corresponding to (prefigured by) the deliverance of Noah's family by water. It is only a vague parallel, but not over-fanciful. {Doth now save you} (\humas nun s“zei\). Simplex verb (\s“z“, not the compound \dias“z“). The saving by baptism which Peter here mentions is only symbolic (a metaphor or picture as in Ro 6:2-6), not actual as Peter hastens to explain. {Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh} (\ou sarkos apothesis rupou\). \Apothesis\ is old word from \apotithˆmi\ (2:1), in N.T. only here and 2Pe 1:14. \Rupou\ (genitive of \rupos\) is old word (cf. \ruparos\, filthy, in Jas 2:2; Re 22:11), here only in N.T. (cf. Isa 3:3; 4:4). Baptism, Peter explains, does not wash away the filth of the flesh either in a literal sense, as a bath for the body, or in a metaphorical sense of the filth of the soul. No ceremonies really affect the conscience (Heb 9:13f.). Peter here expressly denies baptismal remission of sin. {But the interrogation of a good conscience toward God} (\alla suneidˆse“s agathˆs eper“tˆma eis theon\). Old word from \eper“ta“\ (to question as in Mr 9:32; Mt 16:1), here only in N.T. In ancient Greek it never means answer, but only inquiry. The inscriptions of the age of the Antonines use it of the Senate's approval after inquiry. That may be the sense here, that is, avowal of consecration to God after inquiry, having repented and turned to God and now making this public proclamation of that fact by means of baptism (the symbol of the previous inward change of heart). Thus taken, it matters little whether \eis theon\ (toward God) be taken with \eper“t^ma\ or \suneid^se“s\. {Through the resurrection of Jesus Christ} (\di' anastase“s I^sou Christou\). For baptism is a symbolic picture of the resurrection of Christ as well as of our own spiritual renewal (Ro 6:2-6). See 1:3 for regeneration made possible by the resurrection of Jesus.

3:22 {Having gone} (\poreutheis\). First aorist (deponent) participle (not periphrastic) of \poreuomai\. {Being made subject} (\hupotagent“n\). Second aorist passive participle of \hupotass“\ (see 2:18; 3:1) in the genitive absolute construction. {Unto him} (\aut“i\). Christ. See 1Co 15:28.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

4:1 {For as much then as Christ suffered in the flesh} (\(Christou oun pathontos sarki\)). Genitive absolute with second aorist active participle of \pasch"\, to suffer, and the locative case of \sarx\ (flesh). The \oun\ (then, therefore) draws and applies the main lesson of 3:18-22, the fact that Christ suffered for us. {Arm ye yourselves also} (\(kai humeis hoplisasthe\)). Direct middle first aorist imperative of \hopliz"\, old verb from \hoplon\ (weapon, Joh 18:3), in metaphorical sense, here only in N.T. {With the same mind} (\(t^n aut^n ennoian\)). Accusative of the thing (content), \ennoian\, old word (from en, nous), putting in mind, thinking, will, in N.T. only here and Heb 4:12. "Here again _Christus Patiens_ is our \hupogrammos\" (Bigg). {For} (\(hoti\)). Reason for the exhortation. {Hath ceased from sin} (\(pepautai hamartias\)). Perfect middle indicative of \pau"\ to make cease and the ablative singular \hamartias\, but B reads the dative plural \hamartiais\ (cf. Ro 6:1f.). Temptation has lost its appeal and power with such a man.

4:2 {That ye no longer should live} (\(eis to m^keti bi"sai\)). Purpose clause with \eis to\ (negative m^) and the first aorist (for the Attic second aorist bi"nai) active infinitive of \bio"\, old verb, to spend a life (from bios\, course of life, Lu 8:14), here only in N.T. {The rest of your time in the flesh} (\(ton epiloipon en sarki chronon\)). Accusative of time (\(chronon\, period of time). \Epiloipon\ is old adjective (\(epi, loipos\, remaining in addition), here only in N.T. But \eis to\ here can be result (so that) as in Ro 1:20; 4:18.

4:3 {Past} (\(parel^luth"s\)). Perfect active participle of the compound verb \parerchomai\, old verb, to go by (beside) as in Mt 14:15 with \h^ra\ (hour). {May suffice} (\(arketos\)). No copula in the Greek, probably \estin\ (is) rather than \dunatai\ (can). Late and rare verbal adjective from \arke"\, to suffice, in the papyri several times, in N.T. only here and Mt 6:34; 10:25, apparently referring to Christ's words in Mt 6:34 (possibly an axiom or proverb). {To have wrought} (\(kateirgasthai\)). Perfect middle infinitive of \katergazomai\, common compound (\(kata, ergon\ work) as in 1Co 5:3. {The desire} (\to boul^ma). Correct text, not \thel^ma. Either means the thing desired, willed. Jews sometimes fell in with the ways of Gentiles (Ro 2:21-24; 3:9-18; Eph 2:1-3) as today some Christians copy the ways of the world. {And to have walked} (\peporeumenous). Perfect middle participle of \poreuomai in the accusative plural of general reference with the infinitive \kateirgasthai. Literally, "having walked or gone." {In lasciviousness} (\en aselgeiais). All these sins are in the locative case with \en. "In unbridled lustful excesses" (2Pe 2:7; 2Co 12:21). {Lusts} (\epithumiais). Cf. 2:11; 4:2. {Winebibbings} (\oinophlugiais). Old compound (\oinos, wine, \phlu^{\prime}, to bubble up), for drunkenness, here only in N.T. (also in De 21:20). {Revellings} (\komois). Old word (from \keimai, to lie down), rioting drinking parties, in N.T. here and Ga 5:21; Ro 13:13. {Carousings} (\potois). Old word for drinking carousal (from \pin^{\prime}, to drink), here only in the N.T. In the light of these words it seems strange to find modern Christians justifying their "personal liberty" to drink and carouse, to say nothing of the prohibition law. The Greeks actually carried lust and drunkenness into their religious observances (Aphrodite, for instance). {Abominable idolatries} (\athemitois eid^{\prime}lolatriais). To the Christian all "idolatry," (\eid^{\prime}lon, latreia), worship of idols, is "abominable," not allowed (alpha privative and \themitos, \themistos\ the old form, verbal of \themiz^{\prime}, to make lawful), but particularly those associated with drinking and licentiousness. The only other N.T. example of \athemitos is by Peter also (Ac 10:28) and about the Mosaic law. That may be the idea here, for Jews often fell into idolatrous practices (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 274).

4:4 {Wherein} (\en h^{\prime}i). "In which thing" (manner of life). {They think it strange} (\xenizontai). Present passive indicative of \xeniz^{\prime}, old verb (from \xenos, stranger), to entertain a guest (Ac 10:23), to astonish (Ac 17:20). See also 4:12. "They are surprised or astonished." {That ye run not with them} (\m^{\wedge} suntrechont^{\prime}n hum^{\prime}n). Genitive absolute (negative \m^{\wedge}) with present active participle of \suntrech^{\prime}, old compound, to run together like a crowd or a mob as here (just like our phrase, "running with certain folks"). {Into the same excess of riot} (\eis t^{\wedge}n aut^{\wedge}n t^{\wedge}s as^{\prime}tias anachusin). \Anachusin (from \anache^{\prime} to pour forth) is a late and rare word, our overflowing, here only in N.T. \As^{\prime}tias is the character of an abandoned man (\as^{\prime}tos, cf. \as^{\prime}t^{\prime}s in Lu 15:13), old word for a dissolute life, in N.T. only here, Eph 5:18; Tit 1:6. {Speaking evil of you} (\blasph^{me}\). Present active participle of \blasph^{me}\ as in Lu 22:65. "The Christians were compelled to stand aloof from all the social pleasures of the world, and the Gentiles bitterly resented their puritanism, regarding them as the enemies of all joy, and therefore of the human race" (Bigg).

4:5 {Who shall give account} (\hoi apod^{sousin} logon\). Future active indicative of \apodid^{mi}\. For this use with \logon\ (account) see Mt 12:36; Lu 16:2; Ac 19:40; Heb 13:17. For the sudden use of the relative \hoi\ see Ro 3:8. {To him that is ready to judge} (\tⁱ hetoim^s krinonti\). Dative, "to the one readily judging," correct text, not \hetoim^s echonti krinai\, "to the one ready to judge," which "softens the rugged original" (Hart). That is Christ apparently (1:13; 2Co 5:10), but the Father in 1:17. {The quick and the dead} (\z^{ntas} kai nekrous\). "Living and dead." Those living at the time and those already dead (1Th 4:15).

4:6 {Was the gospel preached} (\eu^{ggelisth}\). First aorist passive indicative of \euaggeliz^{ai}\. Impersonal use. {Even to the dead} (\kai nekrois\). Does Peter here mean preached to men after they are dead or to men once alive but dead now or when the judgment comes? There are those (Augustine, Luther, etc.) who take "dead" here in the spiritual sense (dead in trespasses and sins as in Col 2:13; Eph 2:1), but consider it "impossible" for Peter to use the same word in two senses so close together; but Jesus did it in the same sentence, as in the case of \psuch^{ai}\ (life) in Mt 16:25. Bigg takes it to mean that all men who did not hear the gospel message in this life will hear it in the next before the final judgment. {That they might be judged} (\hina krith^{sin} men\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \krin^{ai}\, to judge, whereas \z^{sin} de\ (by contrast) is the present active subjunctive of \za^{ai}\, to live. There is contrast also between \kata anthr^{pous}\ (according to men) and \kata theon\ (according to God).

4:7 {But the end of all things is at hand} (\pantⁿ de to telos ^{ggiken}\). Perfect active indicative of \eggiz^{ai}\, to draw near, common late verb (from \eggus\), same form used by the Baptist of the Messiah's arrival (Mt 3:2) and by James in 5:8 (of the second coming). How near Peter does not say, but he urges readiness (1:5f.; 4:6) as Jesus did (Mr 14:38) and Paul (1Th

5:6), though it is drawing nearer all the time (Ro 12:11), but not at once (2Th 2:2). {Be ye therefore of sound mind} (\s“phron^sate oun\). In view of the coming of Christ. First aorist (ingressive) active imperative of \s“phrone“\ (\s“s\, sound, \phr^n\, mind) as in Mr 5:15. {Be sober unto prayer} (\n^psate eis proseuchas\). First aorist (ingressive of \n^ph“\ (see 1:13) and plural \proseuchas\, (prayers). Cf. Eph 6:18.

4:8 {Above all things} (\pro pant“n\). See this phrase in Jas 5:12. {Being fervent} (\ekten^echontes\). Present active participle of \echontes\ and predicate accusative of adjective \ekten^s\ (from \ektein“\, to stretch out), stretched out, here only in N.T., "holding intent you love among yourselves." {For love covereth a multitude of sins} (\hoti agap^kaluptei pl^thos hamarti“n\). See Jas 5:20 for meaning, sins of the one loved, not of the one loving.

4:9 {Using hospitality} (\philoxenoi\). "Friendly to strangers," old word (from \philos, xenos\), in N.T. only here and 1Ti 3:2; Tit 1:8. No verb here in the Greek. {Without murmuring} (\aneu goggusmou\). Like \ch“ris goggusm“n\ in Php 2:14. Complaint spoils hospitality. Jesus enjoined the entertainment of strangers (Mt 25:35). Inns were rare and very poor. Hospitality made mission work possible (3Jo 1:5).

4:10 {Gift} (\charisma\). Late N.T. word (in late papyri) from \charizomai\, to give graciously. It is used here by Peter as one of the gifts of the Holy Spirit (1Co 12:4,9,29-31; Ro 12:6). {Ministering} (\diakonountes\). Present active participle plural of \diakone“\, common verb (Mt 20:28), though \hekastos\ (each) is singular. {As good stewards} (\h“s kaloi oikonomoi\). For "steward" (\oikonomos\, house-manager) see Lu 16:1; 1Co 4:1 (used by Paul of himself) and of any bishop (Tit 1:7), but here of any Christian. See \kalos\ used with \diakonos\ in 1Ti 4:6. {Of the manifold grace of God} (\poikil^s charitos theou\). For \poikilos\ (many-colored) see on 1:6; Jas 1:2.

4:11 {If any man speaketh} (\ei tis lalei\). Condition of first class, assumed as a fact. {Speaking as it were oracles of God} (\h“s logia theou\). No predicate in this conclusion of the condition. For \logia theou\ see Ac 7:38 (Mosaic law); Ro 3:2 (the Old Testament); Heb 5:12 (the substance of Christian teaching), here of the utterances of God through Christian teachers. \Logion\ (old word) is a diminutive of \logos\ (speech, word). It can be construed here as nominative or as accusative. The verb has to be supplied. {If any one ministereth} (\ei tis diakonei). First-class condition again. See Ac 6:2-4 for the twofold division of service involved here. {Which God supplieth} (\h^s chor^gei ho theos). Ablative case (\h^s) of the relative attracted from the accusative \h^n, object of \chor^gei (present active indicative of \chor^ge, old verb, to supply from \chor^gos, chorus leader, in N.T. only here and 2Co 9:10). Peter has the compound \epichor^ge in 2Pe 1:5,11. God is the supplier of strength. {That God may be glorified} (\hina doxaz^tai ho theos). Purpose clause with \hina and the present passive subjunctive of \doxaz^s. See Joh 15:8. {Whose is} (\h^i estin). "To whom (dative) is," that is to Jesus Christ the immediate antecedent, but in Ro 16:27; Jude 1:25 the doxology is to God through Christ. For other doxologies see 1Pe 5:11; 2Pe 3:18; Ga 1:5; Ro 9:5; 11:36; Php 4:20; Eph 3:21; 1Ti 1:17; 6:16; 2Ti 4:18; Heb 13:21; Re 1:6; 5:13; 7:12. The others addressed to Christ are 2Pe 3:18; 2Ti 4:18; Re 1:6.

4:12 {Think it not strange} (\m^ xenizesthe). Prohibition with \m^ and the present passive imperative of \xeniz^s, for which verb see 4:4. "Be not amazed." {Concerning the fiery trial among you} (\tei en humin pur^sei). Instrumental case, "by the among you burning," metaphorical sense of old word (since Aristotle), from \puro, to burn (\pur\ fire). See 1:7 for the metaphor. See Re 18:9,18 only other N.T. examples. It occurs in Pr 27:21 for the smelting of gold and silver and so in Ps 56:10 (LXX 65:10): "Thou didst smelt us as silver is smelted" (\epur^sas h^mfs h^s puroutai to argurion). {Which cometh upon you} (\humin ginomen^i). Present middle participle of \ginomai (already coming) with dative case \humin. {To prove you} (\pros peirasmon). "For testing." {As though a strange thing happened unto you} (\h^s xenou humin sumbainontos). Genitive absolute with \h^s, giving the alleged reason, and \humin, dative case with \sumbainontos (present active participle of \sumbain^s, to go together, to happen (Mr 10:32), agreeing with \xenou (strange, Heb 13:9).

4:13 {Inasmuch} (\katho). "In so far forth as" ("according to which thing"), old conjunction, in N.T. only here and 2Co 8:12; Ro 8:26. {Ye are partakers of} (\koin^neite). Present active indicative of \koin^ne^s, old verb (from \koin^nos, partner), to share in either with genitive (Heb 2:14) or dative as here (\path^{masin}\). {That ye may rejoice with exceeding joy} (\hina char^{te agalli}“menoi”). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist passive subjunctive of \chair“, with the present middle participle of \agallia“\ to exult (1:8), "that ye may rejoice exulting." See 1:6-8 for this same idea associated with the second coming of Christ as here.

4:14 {If ye are reproached} (\ei oneidizesthe\). Condition of first class assumed as true with \ei\ and present passive indicative of \oneidiz“, for which verb see Jas 1:5. {For the name of Christ} (\en onomati Christou\). "In the matter of the name of Christ." For the idea see Mt 5:11f.; 19:29; Ac 5:41; 9:16; 21:13. This is the only N.T. example of just \onoma Christou\, here used because of the use of \Christianos\ in verse 16. For the beatitude \makarioi\ see Mt 5:11f. {The Spirit of glory and the Spirit of God} (\to t^s dox^s kai to tou theou pneuma\). Note repetition of the article (\to\) though \pneuma\ only once. The reference is to the Holy Spirit, who is the Spirit of Glory and of God. {Resteth upon you} (\eph' h^{mas} anapauetai\). Quotation from Isa 11:2. Present middle indicative of \anapau“, to give rest, refresh (Mt 11:28). "He rests upon the Christian as the Shechinah rested upon the tabernacle" (Bigg). Cf. 1:8; Mt 3:16.

4:15 {Let no one of you suffer} (\m^{tis} hum“n paschet“\). Prohibition with \m^{tis} and present active imperative (habit prohibited). {As} (\h“s\). Charged as and being so. Two specific crimes (murderer, thief) and one general phrase (\kakopoios\, evildoer, 1Pe 2:12,14), and one unusual term \allotriepiscopos\ (a meddler in other men's matters). Note \h“s\ (or as) = or "also only as" (Wohlenberg). The word was apparently coined by Peter (occurring elsewhere only in Dionys. Areop. and late eccles. writers) from \allotrios\ (belonging to another, 2Co 10:15) and \episkopos\, overseer, inspector, 1Pe 2:25). The idea is apparently one who spies out the affairs of other men. Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 224) gives a second-century papyrus with \allotri“n epithum^{tis} a _speculator alienorum_. Epictetus has a like idea (iii. 22. 97). Biggs takes it to refer to "things forbidden." Clement of Alexandria tells of a disciple of the Apostle John who became a bandit chief. Ramsay (_Church in the Roman Empire_, pp. 293, 348) thinks the word refers to breaking up family relationships. Hart refers us to the gadders-about in 1Th 4:11; 2Th 3:11 and women as gossipers in 1Th 5:13. It is interesting to note also that \episkopos\ here is the word for "bishop" and so suggests also preachers meddling in the work of other preachers.

4:16 {But if as a Christian} (\ei de h“s Christianos\). Supply the verb \paschei\ (condition of first class, "if one suffer as a Christian"). This word occurs only three times in the N.T. (Ac 11:26; 26:28; 1Pe 4:16). It is word of Latin formation coined to distinguish followers of Christ from Jews and Gentiles (Ac 11:26). Each instance bears that idea. It is not the usual term at first like \math^{tai}\ (disciples), saints (hagioi\), believers (pisteuontes\), etc. The Jews used \Naz“raioi\ (Nazarenes) as a nickname for Christians (Ac 24:5). By A.D. 64 the name Christian was in common use in Rome (Tacitus, Ann. XV. 44). Owing to itacism it was sometimes spelled \Chr^{tianoi}\ (\i, ei\ and \^ pronounced alike). {Let him not be ashamed} (\m^a aischunesth“\). Prohibition with \m^a\ and present passive imperative of \aischun“\. Peter had once been ashamed to suffer reproach or even a sneer for being a disciple of Christ (Mr 14:68). See the words of Jesus in Mr 8:38 and Paul's in 2Ti 1:12. Peter is not ashamed now. In this name (\en t“i onomati tout“i\). Of Christian as in Mr 9:41, "because ye are Christ's."

4:17 {For the time is come} (\hoti ho kairos\). No predicate, probably \estin\ (is) to be supplied. The phrase that follows comes from the vision of Ezekiel (chapter Eze 9). The construction is unusual with \tou arxasthai\ (genitive articular aorist middle infinitive of \arch“\), not exactly purpose or result, and almost in apposition (epexegetic), but note \tou elthein\ used as subject in Lu 17:1. The persecution on hand (1:7) was a foretaste of more to come. By "house of God" he can mean the same as the "spiritual house" of 2:5 or a local church. Biggs even takes it to refer to the family. {And if it begin first at us} (\ei de pr“ton aph'h^m“n\). Condition of first class again, with the verb \archetai\ understood. "From us" (\aph' h^m“n\ more exactly. {End} (\telos\). Final fate. {Of them that obey not the gospel of God} (\t“n apeithount“n t“i tou theou euaggeli“i\). "Of those disobeying the gospel of God." See the same idea in Ro 2:8. See Mr 1:14 for believing in the gospel.

4:18 {And if the righteous is scarcely saved} (\kai ei ho dikaios molis s“zetai\). First-class condition again with \ei\ and present passive indicative of \s“z“. Quotation from Pr 11:31. See 3:12,14; Mt 5:20. But the Christian is not saved by his own righteousness (Php 3:9; Re 7:14). For \molis\ see Ac 14:18 and for \aseb^s\ (ungodly, without reverence) see Ro 4:5; 2Pe 2:5. {Will appear} (\phaneitai). Future middle of \phain“, to show. For the question see Mr 10:24-26.

4:19 {Wherefore} (\h“ste\). Picking up the thread of consolation again (Bigg). {Commit their souls} (\paratithesth“san tas psuchas\). Present (continuous) middle imperative third plural of \paratith^mi\, old word, a banking figure, to deposit, as in 1Ti 1:18; 2Ti 2:2, the word used by Jesus as he died (Lu 23:46). {In well-doing} (\en agathopoiïfi). Late and rare word, only here in N.T., from \agathopoie“\ (1Pe 2:15,20).

5:1 {Who am a fellow-elder} (\ho sunpresbuteros\). Earliest use of this compound in an inscription of B.C. 120 for fellow-elders (alderman) in a town, here only in N.T., in eccles. writers. For the word \presbuteros\ in the technical sense of officers in a Christian church (like elder in the local synagogues of the Jews) see Ac 11:30; 20:17. It is noteworthy that here Peter the Apostle (1:1) calls himself an elder along with (\sun\) the other "elders." {A witness} (\martus\). This is what Jesus had said they must be (Ac 1:8) and what Peter claimed to be (Ac 3:15; 10:39). So Paul was to be a \martus\ (Ac 22:15). {Who am also a partaker} (\ho kai koin"nos\). "The partner also," "the partaker also." See Lu 5:10; 2Co 1:7; 2Pe 1:4. See same idea in Ro 8:17. In Ga 3:23; Ro 8:18 we have almost this about the glory about to be revealed to us where \mell" as here is used with the infinitive.

5:2 {Tend} (\poimanate\). First aorist active imperative of \poimain", old verb, from \poim"n\ (shepherd) as in Lu 17:7. Jesus used this very word to Peter in the interview by the Sea of Galilee (Joh 21:16) and Peter doubtless has this fact in mind here. Paul used the word to the elders at Miletus (Ac 20:28). See 2:25 for the metaphor. {Flock} (\poimnion\). Old word, likewise from \poim"n\, contraction of \poimenion\ (Lu 12:32). {Exercising the oversight} (\episkopountes\). Present active participle of \episkope", old word (in Heb 12:15 alone in N.T.), omitted here by Aleph B. {Not by constraint} (\m"anagkast"s\). Negative \m" because of the imperative. Old adverb from verbal adjective \anagkastos\, here alone in N.T. {But willingly} (\alla hekousi"s\). By contrast. Old adverb, in N.T. only here and Heb 10:26. {Nor yet for filthy lucre} (\m"de aischrokerd"s\). A compound adverb not found elsewhere, but the old adjective \aischrokerd"s is in 1Ti 3:8; Tit 1:7. See also Tit 1:11 "for the sake of filthy lucre" (\aischrou kerdous charin\). Clearly the elders received stipends, else there could be no such temptation. {But of a ready mind} (\alla prothum"s\). Old adverb from \prothumos\ (Mt 26:41), here only in N.T.

5:3 {Lording it over} (\katakurieuontes\). Present active participle of \katakuriēu“, late compound (\kata, kurios\) as in Mt 20:25. {The charge allotted to you} (\t“n kl̂r“n\). "The charges," "the lots" or "the allotments." See it in Ac 1:17,25 in this sense. The old word meant a die (Mt 27:25), a portion (Col 1:12; 1Pe 1:4), here the charges assigned (cf. Ac 17:4). From the adjective \kl̂rikos\ come our cleric, clerical, clerk. Wycliff translated it here "neither as having lordship in the clergie." {Making yourselves ensamples} (\tupoi ginomenoi\). Present active participle of \ginomai\ and predicate nominative \tupoi\ (types, models) for which phrase see 1Th 1:7. Continually becoming. See 2:21 for \hupogrammos\ (writing-copy). {To the flock} (\tou poimniou\). Objective genitive.

5:4 {When the chief Shepherd shall be manifested} (\phaner“thentos tou archipoimenos\). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle of \phanero“, to manifest, and genitive of \archipoim̂n\, a compound (\archi, poim̂n\ after analogy of \archiereus\, here only in N.T., but in _Testam. of Twelve Patrs_. (Jud. 8) and on a piece of wood around an Egyptian mummy and also on a papyrus A.D. 338 (Deissmann, _Light, etc._, p. 100). See Heb 13:20 for \ho poim̂n ho megas\ (the Shepherd the great). {Ye shall receive} (\komieisthe\). Future of \komiz“\ (1:9, which see). {The crown of glory that fadeth not away} (\ton amarantinon t̂s dox̂s stephanon\). For "crown" (\stephanos\ see Jas 1:12; 1Co 9:25; 2Ti 4:8; Re 2:10; 3:10; 4:4. In the Gospels it is used only of the crown of thorns, but Jesus is crowned with glory and honor (Heb 2:9). In all these passages it is the crown of victory as it is here. See 1:4 for \amarantos\, unfading. \Amarantinos\ is made from that word as the name of a flower \amaranth\ (so called because it never withers and revives if moistened with water and so used as a symbol of immortality), "composed of amaranth" or "amarantine," "the amarantine (unfading) crown of glory."

5:5 {Be subject} (\hopotaĝte\). Second aorist passive imperative of \hupotass“. {Unto the elder} (\presbuterois\). Dative case. Here the antithesis between younger and elder shows that the word refers to age, not to office as in 5:1. See a like change in meaning in 1Ti 5:1,17. {All} (\pantes\). All ages, sexes, classes. {Gird yourselves with humility} (\t̂n tapeinophrosun̂n egkomb“sasthe\). First aorist middle imperative of \egkomboomai\, late and rare verb (in Apollodorus, fourth cent. B.C.), here only in N.T., from \en\ and \kombos\ (knot, like the knot of a girdle). \Egkomb“ma\ was the white scarf or apron of slaves. It is quite probable that Peter here is thinking of what Jesus did (Joh 13:4ff.) when he girded himself with a towel and taught the disciples, Peter in particular (Joh 13:9ff.), the lesson of humility (Joh 13:15). Peter had at last learned the lesson (Joh 21:15-19). {The proud} (\huper^{phanois}). Dative plural of \huper^{phanos} (Jas 4:6; Ro 1:30) after \antitassetai\ (present middle indicative of antitass“ as in Jas 4:6 (quoted there as here from Pr 3:34)).

5:6 {Humble yourselves therefore} (\tapein“th^{te oun}). First aorist passive imperative of \tapeino“, old verb, for which see Mt 18:4. Peter is here in the role of a preacher of humility. "Be humbled." {Under the mighty hand of God} (\hupo t^{n krataian cheira tou theou}). Common O.T. picture (Ex 3:19; 20:33, etc.). {That he may exalt you} (\hina hups“sⁱ). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \hupso“. Cf. Lu 14:11; Php 2:9. {In due time} (\en kair“i). Same phrase in Mt 24:45.

5:7 {Casting} (\epiripsantes). First aorist active participle of \epiript“, old verb, to throw upon, in N.T. only here and Lu 19:35 (casting their clothes on the colt), here from Ps 55:22. For \merimna\ see Mt 6:25,31,34. {He careth} (\aut“i melei). Impersonal verb \melei\ (present active indicative) with dative \aut“i\, "it is a care to him." God does care (Lu 21:18).

5:8 {Be watchful} (\gr^{gor^{sate}}). First aorist active imperative of \gr^{gore}“, late present imperative from perfect \egr^{gora}\ (to be awake) from \egeir“ (to arouse), as in Mt 24:42. For \n^{psate}\ see 1:13; 4:7. {Your adversary} (\ho antidikos hum“n). Old word for opponent in a lawsuit (Mt 5:25). {The devil} (\diabolos). Slanderer. See on Mt 4:1. {As a roaring lion} (\h“s “ruomenos le“n). But Jesus is also pictured as the Lion of the tribe of Judah (Re 5:5). But Satan {roars} at the saints. Present middle participle \“ruomai\, old verb, here only in N.T., to howl like a wolf, dog, or lion, of men to sing loud (Pindar). See Ps 22:13. {Whom he may devour} (\katapiein). Second aorist active infinitive of \katapin“, to drink down. B does not have \tina\, Aleph has \tina\ (somebody), "to devour some one," while A has interrogative \tina\, "whom he may devour" (very rare idiom). But the devil's purpose is the ruin of men. He is a "peripatetic" (\peripatei) like the peripatetic philosophers who walked as they talked. Satan wants all of us and sifts us all (Lu 22:31).

5:9 {Whom withstand} (\h*“i antist^{te}\). Imperative second aorist active (intransitive) of \anthist^{mi}\; same form in Jas 4:7, which see. Dative case of relative (\h“i*\). For the imperative in a subordinate clause see verse 12; 2Th 3:10; 2Ti 4:15; Heb 13:7. Cowardice never wins against the devil (2Ti 1:7), but only courage. {Steadfast in your faith} (\stereo*i tⁱ pistei*\). Locative case \pistei\. \Stereos\ is old adjective for solid like a foundation (2Ti 2:19). {The same sufferings} (\ta auta t^{“n path^{mat}“n}\). An unusual construction with the genitive rather than the usual \ta auta path^{mata}\, perhaps as Hofmann suggests, "the same tax of sufferings" (“the same things in sufferings”). Probably this is correct and is like Xenophon's phrase in the Memorabilia (IV. 8. 8), \ta tou g^r“s epiteleisthai\ (to pay the tax of old age). {Are accomplished} (\epiteleisthai\). Present (and so process) middle (you are paying) or passive (is paid) infinitive of \epitele[“]\, old verb, to accomplish (2Co 7:1). {In your brethren who are in the world} (\tⁱ en t^{“i kosm^{“i} hum^{“n adelphot^{ti}}\). Associate-instrumental case \adelphot^{ti}\ (in N.T. only here and 2:17, which see) after \ta auta\ (like 1Co 11:5) or dative after \epiteleisthai\. Even so \eidotes\ (second perfect active participle of oida) with an infinitive usually means "knowing how to" (object infinitive) as in Lu 12:56; Php 3:18 rather than "knowing that" (indirect assertion) as taken above.}

5:10 {The God of all grace} (\ho theos t^{s charitos}\). See 4:10 for \poikil^{s charitos theou}\ (of the variegated grace of God). {In Christ} (\en Christ^{“i}\). A Pauline phrase (2Co 5:17-19), but Petrine also. For God's "calling" us (\kalesas\) see 1Th 5:23f.; 1Co 1:8f.; Ro 8:29f. {After that ye have suffered a little while} (\oligon pathontas\). Second aorist active participle of \pasch[“]\, antecedent to the principal verbs which are future active (\katartisei\, to mend, Mr 1:19; Ga 6:1, st^{rixei}, for which see Lu 9:51; 22:32, sthen^{“sei} from sthenos and so far a hapax legomenon like enischu[“] according to Hesychius). For \oligon\ see 1:6.

5:11 {To him} (\aut^{“i}\). To God (dative case). Note \kratos\ in the doxology as in 1Ti 6:16 and briefer than the doxology in 1Pe 4:11, to Christ.

5:12 {By Silvanus} (\dia Silouanou\). Probably this postscript (12-14) is in Peter's own handwriting, as Paul did (2Th 3:17f.; Ga 6:11-18). If so, Silvanus (Silas) was the amanuensis and the bearer of the Epistle. {As I account him} (\h"s logizomai\). Peter uses Paul's phrase (1Co 4:1; Ro 8:18) in giving approval to Paul's former companion (Ac 15:40). {I have written} (\egrapsa\). Epistolary aorist applying to this Epistle as in 1Co 5:11 (not 1Co 5:9); 1Co 9:15; Ga 6:11; Ro 15:15; Phm 1:19,21. {Briefly} (\di' olig"n\). "By few words," as Peter looked at it, certainly not a long letter in fact. Cf. Heb 13:22. {Testifying} (\epimartur"n\). Present active participle of \epimarture"\, to bear witness to, old compound, here alone in N.T., though the double compound \sunepimarture"\ in Heb 2:4. {That this is the true grace of God} (\taut^"n einai al^th^ charin tou theou\). Infinitive \einai\ in indirect assertion and accusative of general reference (\taut^"n\) and predicate accusative \charin\). Peter includes the whole of the Epistle by God's grace (1:10) and obedience to the truth (Joh 1:17; Gal 2:5; Col 1:6). {Stand ye fast therein} (\eis h^"n st^te\). "In which (grace) take your stand" (ingressive aorist active imperative of \hist^mi).

5:13 {She that is in Babylon, elect together with you} (\h^ en Babul"ni suneklekt^"\). Either actual Babylon or, as most likely, mystical Babylon (Rome) as in the Apocalypse. If Peter is in Rome about A.D. 65, there is every reason why he should not make that fact plain to the world at large and least of all to Nero. It is also uncertain whether \h^ suneklekt^"\ (found here alone), "the co-elect woman," means Peter's wife (1Co 9:5) or the church in "Babylon." The natural way to take it is for Peter's wife. Cf. \eklekt^i kurifi\ in 2Jo 1:1 (also verse 2Jo 1:13). {Mark my son} (\Markos ho huios mou\). So this fact agrees with the numerous statements by the early Christian writers that Mark, after leaving Barnabas, became Peter's "interpreter" and under his influence wrote his Gospel. We know that Mark was with Paul in Rome some years before this time (Col 4:10).

5:14 {With a kiss of love} (\en phil^mati agap^s\). As in 1Co 16:20. The abuse of this custom led to its confinement to men with men and women with women and to its final abandonment (_Apost. Const_. ii. 57, 12). {That are in Christ} (\tois en Christ"i\). This is the greatest of all secret orders and ties, one that is open to all who take Christ as Lord and Saviour.

1:1 {Simon Peter} (\Sim“n Petros\). Aleph A K L P have \Syme“n\ as in Ac 15:14, while B has \Sim“n\. The two forms occur indifferently in I Macc. 2:3, 65 for the same man. {Servant and apostle} (\doulos kai apostolos\). Like Ro 1:1; Tit 1:1. {To them that have obtained} (\tois lachousin\). Dative plural articular participle second aorist active of \lagchan“, old verb, to obtain by lot (Lu 1:9), here with the accusative (\pistin\)) as in Ac 1:17. {Like precious} (\isotimon\). Late compound adjective (\isos, equal, \tim^, honor, price), here only in N.T. But this adjective (Field) is used in two ways, according to the two ideas in \tim^ (value, honor), either like in value or like in honor. This second idea is the usual one with \isotimos\ (inscriptions and papyri, Josephus, Lucian), while \polutimos\ has the notion of price like \tim^ in 1:7,19; 2:4,6f. The faith which they have obtained is like in honor and privilege with that of Peter or any of the apostles. {With us} (\h^min\). Associative-instrumental case after \isotimon\. Equal to \t^i h^m“n\ (the faith of us). {In the righteousness} (\en dikaiosun^i\). Definite because of the preposition \en\ and the following genitive even though anarthrous. The O.T. sense of \dikaiosun^ applied to God (Ro 1:17) and here to Christ. {Of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ} (\tou theou h^m“n kai s“t^ros I^sou Christou\). So the one article (\tou\) with \theou\ and \s“t^ros\ requires precisely as with \tou kuriou h^m“n kai s“t^ros I^sou Christou\ (of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ), one person, not two, in 1:11 as in 2:20; 3:2,18. So in 1Pe 1:3 we have \ho theos kai pat^r\ (the God and Father), one person, not two. The grammar is uniform and inevitable (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 786), as even Schmiedel (Winer-Schmiedel, _Grammatik_, p. 158) admits: "Grammar demands that one person be meant." Moulton (_Prol._, p. 84) cites papyri examples of like usage of \theos\ for the Roman emperors. See the same idiom in Tit 2:13. The use of \theos\ by Peter as a predicate with Jesus Christ no more disproves the Petrine authorship of this Epistle than a like use in Joh 1:1 disproves the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel and the same use in Tit 2:13 disproves the genuineness of Titus. Peter had heard Thomas call Jesus God (Joh 20:28) and he himself had called him the Son of God (Mt 16:16).

1:2 {Be multiplied} (\pl^thunthei^). First aorist passive optative of \pl^thun^ in a wish for the future (volitive use) as in 1Pe 1:2; Jude 1:2. {In the knowledge} (\en epign^sei^). Full (additional, \epi^) knowledge as in 1:8 (only \gn^sis^\ in 1:5,6; 3:18), but \epign^sin^ again in 1:3,8; 2:20. As in Colossians, so here full knowledge is urged against the claims of the Gnostic heretics to special \gn^sis^. {Of God and of Jesus our Lord} (\tou theou kai I^sou tou kuriou h^m^"n^). At first sight the idiom here seems to require one person as in 1:1, though there is a second article (\tou^) before \kuriou^, and \I^sou^ is a proper name. But the text here is very uncertain. Bengel, Spitta, Zahn, Nestle accept the short reading of P and some Vulgate MSS. and some minuscules with only \tou kuriou h^m^"n^ (our Lord) from which the three other readings may have come. Elsewhere in II Peter \gn^sis^ and \epign^sis^ are used of Christ alone. The text of II Peter is not in a good state of preservation.

1:3 {Seeing that his divine power hath granted unto us} (\h^"s h^min t^s theias duname^"s autou ded^"r^men^s^). Genitive absolute with the causal particle \h^"s^ and the perfect middle participle of \d^"re^, old verb, to bestow (\d^"rea^, gift), usually middle as here, in N.T. elsewhere only Mr 15:45. \Autou^ refers to Christ, who has "divine power" (\t^s theias duname^"s^), since he is \theos^ (1:1). \Theios^ (from \theos^) is an old adjective in N.T. here and verse 4 only, except Ac 17:29, where Paul uses \to theion^ for deity, thus adapting his language to his audience as the papyri and inscriptions show. The use of \theios^ with an imperial connotation is very common in the papyri and the inscriptions. Deissmann (Bible Studies, pp. 360-368) has shown the singular linguistic likeness between 2Pe 1:3-11 and a remarkable inscription of the inhabitants of Stratonicea in Caria to Zeus Panhemerios and Hecate dated A.D. 22 (in full in C I H ii No. 2715 a b). One of the likenesses is the use of \t^s theias duname^"s^. Peter may have read this inscription (cf. Paul in Athens) or he may have used "the familiar forms and formulae of religious emotion" (Deissmann), "the official liturgical language of Asia Minor." Peter is fond of \dunamis^ in this Epistle, and the \dunamis^ of Christ "is the sword which St. Peter holds over the head of the False Teachers" (Bigg). {All things that pertain unto life and godliness} (\panta ta pros z^"n kai eusebeian^).

"All the things for life and godliness." The new life in Christ who is the mystery of godliness (1Ti 3:16). \Eusebeia\ with its cognates (\euseb^hs, euseb^hs, eusebe^h\) occurs only in this Epistle, Acts, and the Pastoral Epistles (from \eu\, well, and \sebomai\, to worship). {Of him that called us} (\tou kalesantos\). Genitive of the articular first aorist active participle of \kale^h\. Christ called Peter and all other Christians. {By his own glory and virtue} (\dia dox^hs kai aret^hs\). So B K L, but Aleph A C P read \idifi doxⁱ kai aretⁱ\ (either instrumental case "by" or dative "to"). Peter is fond of \idios\ (own, 1Pe 3:1,5; 2Pe 2:16,22, etc.). "Glory" here is the manifestation of the Divine Character in Christ. For \aret^h\ see on 1Pe 2:9 and Php 4:8; 2Pe 1:5.

1:4 {Whereby} (\di' h^hn\). Probably the "glory and virtue" just mentioned, though it is possible to take it with \panta ta pros\, etc., or with \h^hmin\ (unto us, meaning "through whom"). {He hath granted} (\ded^hr^htai\). Perfect middle indicative of \d^hre^h\, for which see verse 3. {His precious and exceeding great promises} (\ta timia kai megista epaggelmata\). \Epaggelma\ is an old word (from \epaggell^h\) in place of the common \epaggelia\, in N.T. only here and 3:13. \Timios\ (precious, from \tim^h\, value), three times by Peter (1Pe 1:7 of faith; 1:19 of the blood of Christ; 2Pe 1:4 of Christ's promises). \Megista\ is the elative superlative used along with a positive adjective (\timia\). {That ye may become} (\hina gen^hsthe\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\. {Through these} (\dia tout^hn\). The promises. {Partakers} (\koin^hnoi\). Partners, sharers in, for which word see 1Pe 5:1. {Of the divine nature} (\theias phuse^hs\). This phrase, like \to theion\ in Ac 17:29, "belongs rather to Hellenism than to the Bible" (Bigg). It is a Stoic phrase, but not with the Stoic meaning. Peter is referring to the new birth as 1Pe 1:23 (\anagegenn^hmenoi\). The same phrase occurs in an inscription possibly under the influence of Mithraism (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). {Having escaped} (\apophugontes\). Second aorist active participle of \apopheug^h\, old compound verb, in N.T. only here and 2:18-20, with the ablative here (\phthorfs\, old word from \phtheir^h\, moral decay as in 2:12) and the accusative there. {By lust} (\en epithumifi\). Caused by, consisting in, lust. "Man becomes either regenerate or degenerate" (Strachan).

1:5 {Yea, and for this very cause} (\kai auto touto de\).

Adverbial accusative (\auto touto) here, a classic idiom, with both \kai and \de. Cf. \kai touto (Php 1:29), \touto men--touto de (Heb 10:33). "The soul of religion is the practical part" (Bunyan). Because of the new birth and the promises we have a part to play. {Adding on your part} (\pareisenegkantes). First aorist active participle of \pareispher“, old double compound, to bring in (\eispher“), besides (\para), here only in N.T. {All diligence} (\spoud^n pfsan). Old word from \speud“ to hasten (Lu 19:5f.). This phrase (\pfsan spoud^n) occurs in Jude 1:3 with \poioumenos and on the inscription in Stratonicea (verse 3) with \ispheresthai (certainly a curious coincidence, to say the least, though common in the _Koin, _). {In your faith} (\en t^i pistei hum“^n). Faith or \pistis (strong conviction as in Heb 11:1,3, the root of the Christian life Eph 2:8) is the foundation which goes through various steps up to love (\agap^l). See similar lists in Jas 1:30; 1Th 1:3; 2Th 1:3f.; Ga 5:22f.; Ro 5:3f.; 8:29f. Hermas (Vis. iii. 8. 1-7) has a list called "daughters" of one another. Note the use of \en (in, on) with each step. {Supply} (\epichor^g^sate). First aorist active imperative of \epichor^ge“, late and rare double compound verb (\epi and \chor^ge“ 1Pe 4:11 from \chor^gos, chorus-leader, \choros and \h^geomai, to lead), to fit out the chorus with additional (complete) supplies. Both compound and simplex (more common) occur in the papyri. In 1:11 and already in 2Co 9:10; Ga 3:5; Col 2:19. {Virtue} (\aret^n). Moral power, moral energy, vigor of soul (Bengel). See 3. {Knowledge} (\gn“^sin). Insight, understanding (1Co 16:18; Joh 15:15).

1:6 {Temperance} (\t^n egkrateian). Self-control. Old word (from \egkrat^s, \en and \kratos, one holding himself in as in Tit 1:8), in N.T. only here, Ac 24:25; Ga 5:23. The opposite of the \pleonexia of the heretics. {Patience} (\t^n hupomon^n). For which see Jas 1:3. {Godliness} (\t^n eusebeian). For which see verse 3.

1:7 {Love of the brethren} (\t^n philadelphian). See 1Pe 1:22. {Love} (\t^n agap^n). By deliberate choice (Mt 5:44). Love for Christ as the crown of all (1Pe 1:8) and so for all men. Love is the climax as Paul has it (1Co 13:13).

1:8 {For if these things are yours and abound} (\tauta gar humin huparchonta kai pleonazonta). Present active circumstantial (conditional) participles neuter plural of \huparch“ and \pleonaz“ (see 1Th 3:12) with dative case \humin\, "these things existing for you (or in you) and abounding." {They make you to be} (\kathist^{sin}). "Render" (present active indicative of \kathist^{mi}, old verb, Jas 3:6), singular because \tauta\ neuter plural. {Not idle nor unfruitful} (\ouk argous oude akarpous\). Accusative predicative plural with \humas\ understood, both adjectives with alpha privative, for \argos\ see Jas 2:20 and for \akarpous\ Mt 13:22. {Knowledge} (\epign^{sin}). "Full (additional) knowledge" as in 1:2.

1:9 {He that lacketh these things} (\hⁱ m^{parestin} tauta\). "To whom (dative case of possession) these things are not (\m^{because a general or indefinite relative clause})." {Seeing only what is near} (\mu^{pazⁿ}). Present active participle of \mu^{pazⁿ}, a rare verb from \mu^{ps} (in Aristotle for a near-sighted man) and that from \mue^{tous} "pas\ (to close the eyes in order to see, not to keep from seeing). The only other instance of \mu^{pazⁿ} is given by Suicer from Ps. Dion. Eccl. Hier. ii. 3 (\mu^{pasousⁱ kai apostrephomenⁱ}) used of a soul on which the light shines (blinking and turning away). Thus understood the word here limits \tuphlos\ as a short-sighted man screwing up his eyes because of the light. {Having forgotten} (\l^{thⁿ labⁿ}). "Having received forgetfulness." Second aorist active participle of \lambanⁿ and accusative \l^{thⁿ}, old word, from \l^{thomai}, to forget, here only in N.T. See 2Ti 1:5 for a like phrase \hupomn^{sin} labⁿ (having received remembrance). {The cleansing} (\tou katharismou\). See Heb 1:3 for this word for the expiatory sacrifice of Christ for our sins as in 1Pe 1:18; 2:24; 3:18. In 1Pe 3:21 Peter denied actual cleansing of sin by baptism (only symbolic). If there is a reference to baptism here, which is doubtful, it can only be in a symbolic sense. {Old} (\palai\). Of the language as in Heb 1:1.

1:10 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Because of the exhortation and argument in verses 5-9. {Give the more diligence} (\m^{flon} spoudasate\). "Become diligent (first aorist ingressive active imperative of \spoudazⁿ as in 2Ti 2:15; 2Pe 1:15) the more" (\mallon\, not less). {To make} (\poieisthai\). Present middle infinitive of \poieⁿ, to make for yourselves. {Calling and election} (\kl^{sin} kai eklogⁿ). Both words (\kl^{sin}, the invitation, \eklogⁿ, actual acceptance). See for \eklogⁿ 1Th 1:4; Ro 9:11. {If ye do} (\poiountes\). Present active circumstantial (conditional) participle of \poieⁿ, "doing." {Ye shall never stumble} (\ou m^{never} ptais^{te} pote). Strong double negative (ou m^{te} pote) with first aorist active subjunctive of ptai, old verb to stumble, to fall as in Jas 2:10; 3:2.

1:11 {Thus} (hout^s). As shown in verse 10. {Shall be supplied} (epichor^{gthsetai}). Future passive of epichor^{ge}, for which see verse 5. You supply the virtues above and God will supply the entrance (h^e eisodos, old word already in 1Th 1:9, etc.). {Richly} (plousi^s). See Col 3:16 for this adverb. {Into the eternal kingdom} (eis tⁿ ai^{nion} basileian). The believer's inheritance of 1Pe 1:4 is here termed kingdom, but "eternal" (ai^{nion} feminine same as masculine). Curiously again in the Stratonicea inscription we find t^s ai^{nion} arch^s (of the eternal rule) applied to "the lords of Rome." But this is the spiritual reign of God in men's hearts here on earth (1Pe 2:9) and in heaven. {Of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ} (tou kuriou h^{mⁿ kai s^{t^{ros}} I^{sou} Christou}). For which idiom see on 1:1.

1:12 {Wherefore} (dio). Since they are possessed of faith that conduces to godliness which they are diligently practising now he insists on the truth and proposes to do his part by them about it. {I shall be ready always} (mell^{s^{aei}}). Future active of mell (Mt 24:6), old verb, to be on the point of doing and used with the infinitive (present, aorist, or future). It is not here a periphrastic future, but rather the purpose of Peter to be ready in the future as in the past and now (Zahn). {To put you in remembrance} (humas hupomimn^{skein}). Present active infinitive of hupomimn^{sk}, old causative compound (hupo, mimn^{sk}, like our suggest), either with two accusatives (Joh 14:26) or peri with the thing as here), "to keep on reminding you of those things" (peri toutⁿ). {Though ye know them} (kaiper eidotas). Second perfect active concessive participle of oida, agreeing (acc. plural), with humas. Cf. Heb 5:8. {Are established} (est^{rigmenous}). Perfect passive concessive participle of st^{riz} (1Pe 5:10). The very verb (st^{rison}) used by Jesus to Peter (Lu 22:32). {In the truth which is with you} (en tⁱ parousⁱ al^{theifi}). "In the present truth" (the truth present to you), parousⁱ present active participle of pareimi, to be beside one. See Col 1:6 for this use of parⁿ. Firmly established in the truth, but all the same Peter is eager to make them stronger.

1:13 {I think it right} (dikaion h^{goumai}). Peter considers this to be his solemn duty, "right" (\dikaion\). Cf. Php 3:1; Eph 6:1. {So long as} (\eph' hoson\). For this phrase see Mt 9:15; Ro 11:13. {Tabernacle} (\sk^nn^"mati\). Old word, in literal sense in De 33:18 for the usual \sk^n^ (\iPeter's word at the Transfiguration, Mr 9:5), earliest use (in N.T. only here, verse 14; Ac 7:46 of the tabernacle of the covenant) in this metaphorical sense of life as a pilgrimage (1Pe 1:1; 2:11), though Paul has \sk^nos\, so in 2Co 5:1,4. Peter feels the nearness of death and the urgency upon him. {To stir you up} (\diegeirein humas\). Present active infinitive of \diegeir^, late (Arist., Hippocr., Herodian, papyri), perfective (\dia\ = thoroughly) compound, to wake out of sleep (Mr 4:39), "to keep on rousing you up." {By putting you in remembrance} (\en hupomn^sei\). Old word, from \hupomimn^sk^ (verse 12), in N.T. only here, 3:1; 2Ti 1:5. "By way of reminding you."

1:14 {The putting off of my tabernacle} (\h^ apothesis tou sk^nn^"matos mou\). For \apothesis\ see on 1Pe 3:21 and for \sk^nn^"ma\ verse 13. For the metaphor see 2Co 5:3f. {Cometh swiftly} (\tachin^ estin\). Late adjective (Theocritus, LXX, inscription), in N.T. only here and 2:1. It is not clear whether \tachinos\ means soon or speedy as in Isa 59:7 and like \tachus\ in Jas 1:19, or sudden, like \tachus\ in Plato (_Republ_. 553 D). Either sense agrees with the urgent tone of Peter here, whether he felt his death to be near or violent or both. {Signified unto me} (\ed^l^"sen moi\). First aorist active indicative of \d^lo^, old verb (from \delos\), as in 1Pe 1:11. Peter refers to the incident told in Joh 21:18f., which he knew by personal experience before John wrote it down.

1:15 Peter may also have had an intimation by vision of his approaching death (cf. the legend _Domine quo vadis_) as Paul often did (Ac 16:9; 18:9; 21:11; 23:11; 27:23). {At every time} (\hekastote\). As need arises, old adverb, here alone in N.T. {After my decease} (\meta t^nn em^nn exodon\). For \exodos\ meaning death see Lu 9:31, and for departure from Egypt (way out, \ex, hodos\) see Heb 11:22, the only other N.T. examples. Here again Peter was present on the Transfiguration mount when the talk was about the "exodus" of Jesus from earth. {That ye may be able} (\echein humas\). Literally, "that ye may have it," the same idiom with \ech^ and the infinitive in Mr 14:8; Mt 18:25. It is the object-infinitive after \spoudas^ (I will give diligence, for which see verse 10). {To call these things to remembrance}

(\t^{\n} tout^{\n} mn^{\n} m^{\n} poieisthai\). Present middle infinitive of \poie^{\n} (as in verse 10). \Mn^{\n} m^{\n} is an old word (from \mnaomai\), here alone in N.T. This idiom, like the Latin _mentionem facere_, is common in the old writers (papyri also both for "mention" and "remembrance"), here only in N.T., but in Ro 1:20 we have \mneian poioumai\ (I make mention). Either sense suits here. It is possible, as Irenaeus (iii. I. I) thought, that Peter had in mind Mark's Gospel, which would help them after Peter was gone. Mark's Gospel was probably already written at Peter's suggestion, but Peter may have that fact in mind here.

1:16 {We did not follow} (\ouk exakolouth^{\n} santes\). First aorist active participle of \exakolouth^{\n}, late compound verb, to follow out (Polybius, Plutarch, LXX, papyri, inscriptions as of death following for any Gentile in the temple violating the barrier), with emphatic negative \ouk\, "not having followed." See also 2:2 for this verb. {Cunningly devised fables} (\sesophismenois muthois\). Associative instrumental case of \muthos\ (old term for word, narrative, story, fiction, fable, falsehood). In N.T. only here and the Pastoral Epistles (1Ti 1:4, etc.). Perfect passive participle of \sophiz^{\n}, old word (from \sophos\), only twice in N.T., in causative sense to make wise (2Ti 3:15), to play the sophist, to invent cleverly (here) and so also in the old writers and in the papyri. Some of the false teachers apparently taught that the Gospel miracles were only allegories and not facts (Bigg). Cf. 2:3 for "feigned words." {When we made known unto you} (\egn^{\n} risamen humin\). First aorist active indicative of \gn^{\n} riz^{\n}, to make known unto you. Possibly by Peter himself. {The power and coming} (\t^{\n} dunamin kai parousian\). These words can refer (Chase) to the Incarnation, just as is true of \epiphaneia\ in 2Ti 1:10 (second coming in 1Ti 6:14), and is true of \parousia\ (2Co 7:6 of Titus). But elsewhere in the N.T. \parousia\ (technical term in the papyri for the coming of a king or other high dignitary), when used of Christ, refers to his second coming (2Pe 3:4,12). {But we were eye-witnesses} (\all' epoptai gen^{\n} thentes\). First aorist passive participle of \ginomai\, "but having become eye-witnesses." \Epoptai\, old word (from \epopt^{\n} like \epopteu^{\n} in 1Pe 2:12; 3:2), used of those who attained the third or highest degree of initiates in the Eleusinian mysteries (common in the inscriptions). Cf. \autopt^{\n}s\ in Lu 1:2. {Of his majesty} (\t^{\n} s ekeinou megaleiot^{\n} tos\). Late and rare word (LXX and papyri) from \megaleios\ (Ac 2:11), in N.T. only here, Lu 9:43 (of God); Ac 19:27 (of Artemis). Peter clearly felt that he and James and John were lifted to the highest stage of initiation at the Transfiguration of Christ. Emphatic \ekeinou\ as in 2Ti 2:26.

1:17 {For he received} (\lab“n gar\). Second aorist active participle nominative singular of \lamban“\, "he having received," but there is no finite verb, anacoluthon, changing in verse 19 (after parenthesis in 18) to \echomen bebaioteron\ rather than \ebesai“sen\. {When there came such a voice to him} (\ph“n^s enechtheis^s aut“i toiasde\). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle feminine singular of \pher“\ (cf. 1Pe 1:13), repeated \enechtheisan\ in verse 18. \Ph“n^ (voice) is used also of Pentecost (Ac 2:6). \Toiosde\ (classical demonstrative) occurs here alone in the N.T. {From the excellent glory} (\hupo t^s megaloprepous dox^s\). "By the majestic glory." \Megaloprep^s\, old compound (\megas\, great, \prepei\, it is becoming), here only in N.T., several times in O.T., Apocr. (II Macc. 8:15), adverb in the inscriptions. Probably a reference to \nephel^ ph“tein^ (bright cloud, shekinah) in Mt 17:5. The words given here from the "voice" agree exactly with Mt 17:5 except the order and the use of \eis hon\ rather than \en h“i\. Mark (Mr 9:7) and Luke (Lu 9:35) have \akouete\. But Peter did not need any Gospel for his report here.

1:18 {This voice} (\taut^n t^n ph“n^ n\). The one referred to in verse 17. {We heard} (\^kousamen\). First aorist active indicative of \akou“\, a definite experience of Peter. {Brought} (\enechtheisan\). "Borne" as in verse 17. {When we were with him} (\sun aut“i ontes\). Present active participle of \eimi\, "being with him." {In the holy mount} (\en t“i hagi“i orei\). Made holy by the majestic glory. See Eze 28:14 for "holy mount of God," there Sinai, this one probably one of the lower slopes of Hermon. Peter's account is independent of the Synoptic narrative, but agrees with it in all essentials.

1:19 {The word of prophecy} (\ton proph^tikon logon\). "The prophetic word." Cf. 1Pe 1:10, a reference to all the Messianic prophecies. {Made more sure} (\bebaioteron\). Predicate accusative of the comparative adjective \bebaios\ (2Pe 1:10). The Transfiguration scene confirmed the Messianic prophecies and made clear the deity of Jesus Christ as God's Beloved Son. Some with less likelihood take Peter to mean that the word of prophecy is a surer confirmation of Christ's deity than the Transfiguration. {Whereunto} (\h*“i*). Dative of the relative referring to "the prophetic word made more sure." {That ye take heed} (\prosechontes\). Present active participle with \noun\ (mind) understood, "holding your mind upon" with the dative (\h*“i*). {As unto a lamp} (\h*“s luchn“i*). Dative also after \prosechontes\ of \luchnos\, old word (Mt 5:15). {Shining} (\phainonti\). Dative also present active participle of \phain“, to shine (Joh 1:5). So of the Baptist (Joh 5:35). {In a dark place} (\en auchm*^r“i top“i*). Old adjective, parched, squalid, dirty, dark, murky, here only in N.T., though in Aristotle and on tombstone for a boy. {Until the day dawn} (\he*“s hou h^mera diaugas^i*). First aorist active subjunctive of \diaugaz“\ with temporal conjunction \he*“s hou*\, usual construction for future time. Late compound verb \diaugaz“\ (Polybius, Plutarch, papyri) from \dia\ and \aug^, to shine through, here only in N.T. {The day-star} (\ph*“sphoros*). Old compound adjective (\ph*“s*\, light, \pher“, to bring), light-bringing, light-bearer (Lucifer) applied to Venus as the morning star. Our word \phosphorus\ is this word. In the LXX \he*“sphoros*\ occurs. Cf. Mal 4:2; Lu 1:76-79; Re 22:16 for "dawn" applied to the Messiah. {Arise} (\anateil*^i*). First aorist active subjunctive of \anatell“\ (Jas 1:11; Mt 5:45).

1:20 {Knowing this first} (\touto pr*“ton gin“skontes*). Agreeing with \poieite\ like \prosechontes\ in verse 19. {No prophecy of Scripture} (\pfsa proph*^teia ou*). Like the Hebrew _lo-k*“l*_, but also in the papyri as in 1Jo 2:21 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 753). {Is} (\ginetai\). Rather "comes," "springs" (Alford), not "is" (\estin\). {Of private interpretation} (\idias epiluse*“s*). Ablative case of origin or source in the predicate as with \gn*“m^s*\ in Ac 20:3 and with \tou theou\ and \ex h*^m“n*\ in 2Co 4:7. "No prophecy of Scripture comes out of private disclosure," not "of private interpretation." The usual meaning of \epiluse\ is explanation, but the word does not occur elsewhere in the N.T. It occurs in the papyri in the sense of solution and even of discharge of a debt. Spitta urges "dissolved" as the idea here. The verb \epilu“, to unloose, to untie, to release, occurs twice in the N.T., once (Mr 4:34) where it can mean "disclose" about parables, the other (Ac 19:39) where it means to decide. It is the prophet's grasp of the prophecy, not that of the readers that is here presented, as the next verse shows.

1:21 {For} (\gar\). The reason for the previous statement that no prophet starts a prophecy himself. He is not a self-starter. {Came} (\^nechth^). First aorist passive indicative of \pher“\ (verses 17f.). {By the will of man} (\thel^mati anthr“pou\). Instrumental case of \thel^ma\. Prophecy is of divine origin, not of one's private origination (\idias epiluse“s\). {Moved by the Holy Ghost} (\hupo pneumatōs hagiou pheromenoi\). Present passive participle of \pher“, moved from time to time. There they "spoke from God." Peter is not here warning against personal interpretation of prophecy as the Roman Catholics say, but against the folly of upstart prophets with no impulse from God.

2:1 {But there arose} (\egenonto de). Second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai (cf. \ginetai\ in 1:20). {False prophets also} (\kai pseudoproph^tai). In contrast with the true prophets just pictured in 1:20f. Late compound in LXX and Philo, common in N.T. (Mt 7:15). Allusion to the O.T. times like Balaam and others (Jer 6:13; 28:9; Eze 13:9). {False teachers} (\pseudodidaskaloi). Late and rare compound (\pseud^s, didaskalos) here alone in N.T. Peter pictures them as in the future here (\esontai\, shall be) and again as already present (\eisin\, are, verse 17), or in the past (\eplan^th^san\, they went astray, verse 15). {Shall privily bring in} (\pareisaxousin). Future active of \pareisag^s, late double compound \pareisag^s, to bring in (\eisag^s), by the side (\para), as if secretly, here alone in N.T., but see \pareisaktous in Ga 2:4 (verbal adjective of this same verb). {Destructive heresies} (\haireseis ap^leias). Descriptive genitive, "heresies of destruction" (marked by destruction) as in Lu 16:8. \Hairesis (from \haire^s) is simply a choosing, a school, a sect like that of the Sadducees (Ac 5:17), of the Pharisees (Ac 15:5), and of Christians as Paul admitted (Ac 24:5). These "tenets" (Ga 5:20) led to destruction. {Denying} (\arnoumenoi). Present middle participle of \arneomai. This the Gnostics did, the very thing that Peter did, alas (Mt 26:70) even after Christ's words (Mt 10:33). {Even the Master} (\kai ton despot^n). Old word for absolute master, here of Christ as in Jude 1:4, and also of God (Ac 4:24). Without the evil sense in our "despot." {That bought them} (\ton agorasanta autous). First aorist active articular participle of \agoraz^s, same idea with \lutro^s in 1Pe 1:18f. These were professing Christians, at any rate, these heretics. {Swift destruction} (\tachin^n ap^leian). See 1:14 for \tachin^n and note repetition of \ap^leian. This is always the tragedy of such false prophets, the fate that they bring on (\epagontes) themselves.

2:2 {Lascivious doings} (\aselgeiais). Associative instrumental ease after \exakolouth^sousin (future active, for which verb see 1:16). See 1Pe 4:3 for this word. {By reason of whom} (\di' hous\). "Because of whom" (accusative case of relative, referring to polloi, many). Aut“n\ (their) refers to pseudodidaskaloi\ (false teachers) while polloi\ to their deluded followers. See Ro 2:23f. for a picture of such conduct by Jews (quotation from Isa 52:5, with blasph“me“ used as here with di' humas, because of you). {The way of truth} (h^ hodos t^s al^theias\). Hodos\ (way) occurs often in N.T. for Christianity (Ac 9:2; 16:17; 18:25; 22:4; 24:14). This phrase is in Ge 24:48 as "the right road," and that is what Peter means here. So Ps 119:30. See again 2:15,21.

2:3 {In covetousness} (en pleonexifi\). As did Balaam (verse 15). These licentious Gnostics made money out of their dupes. A merely intellectual Gnosticism had its fruit in immorality and fraud. {With feigned words} (plastois logois\). Instrumental case. Plastos\ is verbal adjective (from plass“, to mould as from clay, for which see Ro 9:20), here only in N.T. "With forged words." See sample in 3:4. {Shall make merchandise of you} (humas emporeusontai\). Future middle of emporeuomai\ (from emporos, a travelling merchant), old word, to go in for trade, in N.T. only here and Jas 4:13, which see. Cf. our emporium (Joh 2:16, market house). {Whose sentence} (hois to krima\). "For whom (dative case) the sentence" (verdict, not process krisis). {Now from of old} (ekpalai\). Late and common compound adverb, in N.T. only here and 3:5. {Lingereth not} (ouk argei\). "Is not idle," old verb, arge“\ (from argos not working, alpha privative and ergon), here only in N.T. {Slumbereth not} (ou nustazei\). Old and common verb (from nu“ to nod), in N.T. only here and Mt 25:5. Note ap“leia\ (destruction) three times in verses 1-3.

2:4 {For if God spared not} (ei gar ho theos ouk epheisato\). First instance (gar\) of certain doom, that of the fallen angels. Condition of the first class precisely like that in Ro 11:21 save that here the normal apodosis (hum“n ou pheisetai\) is not expressed as there, but is simply implied in verse 9 by ouden kurios ruesthai\ (the Lord knows how to deliver) after the parenthesis in verse 8. {Angels when they sinned} (aggel“n hamart“sant“n\). Genitive case after epheisato\ (first aorist middle indicative of pheidomai) and anarthrous (so more emphatic, even angels), first aorist active participle of hamartan“, "having sinned." {Cast them down to hell} (tartar“sas\). First aorist active participle of tartaro“, late word (from \tartaros\, old word in Homer, Pindar, LXX Job 40:15; 41:23, Philo, inscriptions, the dark and doleful abode of the wicked dead like the Gehenna of the Jews), found here alone save in a scholion on Homer. \Tartaros\ occurs in Enoch 20:2 as the place of punishment of the fallen angels, while Gehenna is for apostate Jews. {Committed} (\pared“ken\). First aorist active indicative of \paradid“mi\, the very form solemnly used by Paul in Ro 1:21,26,28. {To pits of darkness} (\seirois zophou\). \Zophos\ (kin to \gnophos, nephos\) is an old word, blackness, gloom of the nether world in Homer, in N.T. only here, verse 17; Jude 1:13; Heb 12:18. The MSS. vary between \seirais\ (\seira\, chain or rope) and \seirois\ (\seiros\, old word for pit, underground granary). \Seirois\ is right (Aleph A B C), dative case of destination. {To be reserved unto judgment} (\eis krisin t^roumenous\). Present (linear action) passive participle of \t^re“\, "Kept for judgment." Cf. 1Pe 1:4. Aleph A have \kolazomenous t^rein\ as in verse 9. Note \krisis\ (act of judgment).

2:5 {The ancient world} (\archaiou kosmou\). Genitive case after \epheisato\ (with \ei\ understood) repeated (the second example, the deluge). This example not in Jude. Absence of the article is common in the prophetic style like II Peter. For \archaios\ see Lu 9:8. {Preserved} (\ephulaxen\). Still part of the long protasis with \ei\, first aorist active indicative of \phulass“\, {With seven others} (\ogdoon\). "Eighth," predicate accusative adjective (ordinal), classic idiom usually with \auton\, See 1Pe 3:20 for this same item. Some take \ogdoon\ with \k^ruka\ (eighth preacher), hardly correct. {A preacher of righteousness} (\dikaiousun^s k^ruka\). "Herald" as in 1Ti 2:7; 2Ti 1:11 alone in N.T., but \k^russ“\ is common. It is implied in 1Pe 3:20 that Noah preached to the men of his time during the long years. {When he brought} (\epaxas\). First aorist active participle (instead of the common second aorist active \epagag“n\) of \eisag“\, old compound verb to bring upon, in N.T. only here and Ac 5:28 (by Peter here also). {A flood} (\kataklusmon\). Old word (from \katakluz“\, to inundate), only of Noah's flood in N.T. (Mt 24:38ff.; Lu 17:27; 2Pe 2:5). {Upon the world of the ungodly} (\kosmoi aseb“n\). Anarthrous and dative case \kosm“i\, The whole world were "ungodly" (\asebeis\ as in 1Pe 4:18) save Noah's family of eight.

2:6 {Turning into ashes} (\tephr“sas\). First aorist participle of \tephro“, late word from \tephra\, ashes (in Dio Cassius of an eruption of Vesuvius, Philo), here alone in N.T. {The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah} (\poleis Sodom“n kai Gomorrfs\). Genitive of apposition after \poleis\ (cities), though it makes sense as possessive genitive, for Jude 1:7 speaks of the cities around these two. The third example, the cities of the plain. See Ge 19:24f. {Condemned them} (\katekrinen\). First aorist active indicative of \katakrin“, still part of the protasis with \ei\.

{With an overthrow} (\katakastroph^i\). Instrumental case or even dative like \thanat“i\ with \katakrin“\ in Mt 20:18. But Westcott and Hort reject the word here because not in B C Coptic.

{Having made them} (\tetheik“s\). Perfect active participle of \tith^mi\.

{An example} (\hupodeigma\). For which see Jas 5:10; Joh 13:15. Cf. 1Pe 2:21. {Unto those that should live ungodly} (\mellont“n asebesin\). Rather, "unto ungodly men of things about to be" (see Heb 11:20 for this use of \mellont“n). But Aleph A C K L read \asebein\ (present active infinitive) with \mellont“n\=\aseb^sont“n\ (future active participle of \asebe“), from which we have our translation.

2:7 {And delivered} (\kai erusato\). First aorist middle of \ruomai\ as in Mt 6:13, still part of the protasis with \ei\.

{Righteous Lot} (\dikaion Lot\). This adjective \dikaios\ occurs three times in verses 7,8. See Wisdom 10:6. {Sore distressed} (\kataponoumenon\). Present passive participle of \katapone“, late and common verb, to work down, to exhaust with labor, to distress, in N.T. only here and Ac 7:24. {By the lascivious life of the wicked} (\hupo t^s t“n athesm“n en aselgeifi anastroph^s\). "By the life in lasciviousness of the lawless." \Athesmos\ (alpha privative and \thesmos), late and common adjective (cf. \athemitos\ 1Pe 4:3) for rebels against law (of nature and conscience here). \Anastroph^ is frequent in I Peter.

2:8 {For} (\gar\). Parenthetical explanation in verse 8 of the remark about Lot. {Dwelling} (\enkatoik“n\). Present active participle of \enkatoike“, old but rare double compound, here only in N.T. {In seeing and hearing} (\blemmati kai ako^i\). "By sight (instrumental case of \blemma\, old word, from \blep“\ to see, here only in N.T.) and hearing" (instrumental case of \ako^ from \akou“, to hear, common as Mt 13:14). {From day to day} (\h^meran ex h^merfs\). "Day in day out." Accusative of time and ablative with \ex\.

Same idiom in Ps 96:2 for the more common \ex h^meras eis h^meran\.

{Vexed} (\ebasanizen\). Imperfect active (kept on vexing) of \basaniz“, old word, to test metals, to torment (Mt 8:29). {With their lawless deeds} (\anomois ergois\). Instrumental case of cause, "because of their lawless (contrary to law) deeds." For \anomos\ see 2Th 2:8.

2:9 {The Lord knoweth how} (\oiden kurios\). The actual apodosis of the long protasis begun in verse 4. God can deliver his servants as shown by Noah and Lot and he will deliver you. The idiomatic use of \oida\ and the infinitive (\ruesthai\ present middle and see verse 7) for knowing how as in Mt 7:11; Jas 4:17. {The godly} (\eusebeis\). Old anarthrous adjective (from \eu\ and \sebomai\, to worship), in N.T. only here and Ac 10:2,7 (by Peter). For {temptation} (\peirasmou\) see Jas 1:2,12; 1Pe 1:6. {To keep} (\t^rein\). Present active infinitive of \t^re“ after \oiden\. {Unrighteous} (\adikous\). As in 1Pe 3:18. {Under punishment} (\kolazomenous\). Present passive participle of \kolaz“, old verb (from \kolos\, lopped off), in N.T. only here and Ac 4:21. Present tense emphasises continuity of the punishment. See \kolasin ai“nion\ in Mt 25:46.

2:10 {Chiefly} (\malista\). Especially. He turns now to the libertine heretics (verses 2,7). {After the flesh} (\opis“ sarkos\). Hebraistic use of \opis“ as with \hamarti“n\ (sins) in Isa 65:2. Cf. Mt 4:19; 1Ti 5:15. {Of defilement} (\miasmou\). Old word (from \miain“\ Tit 1:15), here only in N.T. {Despise dominion} (\kuriot^tos kataphronountas\). \Kuriot^s\ is late word for lordship (perhaps God or Christ) (from \Kurios\), in Col 1:16; Eph 1:21; Jude 1:8. Genitive case after \kataphronountas\ (thinking down on, Mt 6:24). {Daring} (\tolm^tai\). Old substantive (from \tolma“, to dare), daring men, here only in N.T. {Self-willed} (\authadeis\). Old adjective (from \autos\ and \h^domai\), self-pleasing, arrogant, in N.T. only here and Tit 1:7. {They tremble not to rail at dignities} (\doxas ou tremousin blasph^mountes\). "They tremble not blaspheming dignities." \Trem“ is old verb (Mr 5:33), used only in present as here and imperfect. Here with the complementary participle \blasph^mountes\ rather than the infinitive \blasph^mein\. See Jude 1:8. Perhaps these dignities (\doxas\) are angels (\evil\).

2:11 {Whereas} (\hopou\). Loose use of \hopou\ (in Xenophon) = "wherein." {Though greater} (\meizones ontes\). Than the evil \doxai\. Concessive participle and comparative adjective. {In might and strength} (\ischui kai dunamei\). Locative case. Both indwelling strength (\ischus, Mr 12:30) and ability (\dunamis, Mt 25:15). {Railing judgment} (\blasphemon krisin). "Blasphemous accusation." {Against them} (\kat' aut' n). The evil angels (\doxai). {Before the Lord} (\para kuri' i). In God's presence. See Jude 1:9 and possibly Enoch 9.

2:12 {But these} (\houtoi de). The false teachers of verse 1. {As creatures} (\z' a). Living creatures, old word, from \z' os (alive), Jude 1:10; Re 4:6-9. {Without reason} (\aloga). Old adjective, in N.T. only here, Jude 1:10; Ac 25:27. Brute beasts like \th^ria (wild animals). {Born} (\gegenn^mena). Perfect passive participle of \genna'\'. {Mere animals} (\phusika). Old adjective in \-ikos (from \phusis, nature), natural animals, here only in N.T. {To be taken} (\eis hal' sin). "For capture" (old substantive, from \halo'\', here only in N.T.). {And destroyed} (\kai phthoran). "And for destruction" just like a beast of prey caught. See 1:4. {In matters whereof they are ignorant} (\en hois agnoousin). "In which things they are ignorant." Here \en hois = \en toutois ha (in those things which), a common Greek idiom. For \agnoe'\' (present active indicative) see 1Th 4:13; 1Ti 1:7 for a like picture of loud ignoramus posing as professional experts. {Shall in their destroying surely be destroyed} (\en t' i phthorfi aut' n phthar^sontai). Second future passive of \phtheir'\'. Rhetorical Hebraism in the use of \en phthorfi (same root as \phtheir'\'), word four times in II Peter. See Jude 1:10.

2:13 {Suffering wrong} (\adikoumenoi). Present middle or passive participle of \adike'\' to do wrong. So Aleph B P, but A C K L have \komioumenoi (future middle participle of \komiz'\'), shall receive. {As the hire of wrong-doing} (\misthon adikias). The Elephantine papyrus has the passive of \adike'\' in the sense of being defrauded, and that may be the idea here. Peter plays on words again here as often in II Peter. The picture proceeds now with participles like \h^goumenoi (counting). {Pleasure} (\h^don^ n). See Jas 4:1,3. {To revel in the daytime} (\t^ n en h^merfi truph^ n). "The in the daytime revel" (old word \truph^\' from \thrupt'\', to enervate, in N.T. only here and Lu 7:25). {Spots} (\spiloi). Old word for disfiguring spot, in N.T. only here and Eph 5:27. {Blemishes} (\m' moi). Old word for blot (kin to \mu'\'), only here in N.T. See 1Pe 1:19 for \am' mos kai aspilos. {Revelling} (\entruph' ntes). Present active participle of \entrupha'\', old compound for living in luxury, only here in N.T. {In their love-feasts} (\en tais agapais\). So B Sah, but Aleph A C K L P read \apatais\ (in their deceivings). If \agapais\ is genuine as it is in Jude 1:12, they are the only N.T. examples of this use of \agap^\. {While they feast with you} (\suneu“choumenoi\). Present passive participle of late and rare verb \suneu“che“\ (\sun\, together, and \eu“che“\, to feed abundantly) to entertain with. Clement of Alex. (_Paed_. ii. I. 6) applies \eu“chia\ to the \agap^\.

2:14 {Of adultery} (\moichalidos\). Rather, "of an adulteress," like Jas 4:4. Vivid picture of a man who cannot see a woman without lascivious thoughts toward her (Mayor). Cf. Mt 5:28. {That cannot cease} (\akatapastous\). Reading of A B in place of \akatapaustous\ (alpha privative and verbal of \katapau“\, to cease). "Unable to stop." This a late verbal, only here in N.T. It is probable that \akatapastous\ is merely a misspelling of \akatapaustous\. {From sin} (\hamartias\). Ablative case as in 1Pe 4:1 (\hamartias\). Insatiable lust. {Enticing} (\deleazontes\). Present active participle of \deleaz“\, to catch by bait as in verse 18; Jas 1:14. {Unsteadfast} (\ast^riktous\). Late verbal adjective (alpha privative and \st^riz“\), in Longinus and Vettius Valens, here alone in N.T. {Exercised} (\gegumnasmen^n\). Perfect passive predicate participle with \echontes\, from \gumnaz“\ precisely as in Heb 5:14. Rhetorical metaphor from the gymnasium. {In covetousness} (\pleonexias\). Genitive case after the participle. {Children of cursing} (\kataras tekna\). Hebraism like \tekna hupako^s\ in 1Pe 1:14 = accursed (\kataratoi\).

2:15 {Forsaking} (\kataleipontes\). Present active participle of \kataleip“\ (continually leaving) or \katalipontes\ (second aorist active), having left. {The right way} (\eutheian hodon\). "The straight way" of 1Sa 12:23 (cf. Mt 7:13f. for this use of \hodos\), "the way of truth" (2:2). {They went astray} (\eplan^th^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \plana“\, like Mr 12:24. {The way of Balaam} (\t^i hod“i tou Balaam\). Associative instrumental case after \exakolouth^santes\, for which verb see 1:16; 2:2. These false teachers, as shown in verse 13, followed the way of Balaam, "who loved the hire of wrong-doing" (\hos misthon adikias ^gap^sen\).

2:16 {But he was rebuked} (\elegxin de eschen\). "But he had rebuke." Second aorist active indicative of \ech“\ and accusative of \elegxis\ (late word from \elegch“\, a periphrasis for \elegch“, here only in N.T.) {For his own transgression} (\idias paranomias\). Objective genitive of \paranomia\, old word (from \paranomos\ lawbreaker), here only in N.T. {A dumb ass} (\hupo zugion aph“non\). Dumb is without voice, old word for idols and beasts. The adjective \hupo zugios\ (\hupo zugon on\) "being under a yoke," is applied to the ass as the common beast of burden (papyri, Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 160), in N.T. only here and Mt 21:5. {Spake} (\phthegxamenon\). First aorist middle participle of \phtheggomai\, old verb, to utter a sound, in N.T. only here, verse 18, Ac 4:18. {Stayed} (\ek“lusen\). First aorist active indicative of \k“lu“, to hinder. {Madness} (\paraphronian\). Only known example of this word instead of the usual \paraphrosun^ or \paraphron^sis\. It is being beside one's wits.

2:17 {Without water} (\anudroi\). As in Mt 12:43; Lu 11:24. Old word for common and disappointing experience of travellers in the orient. {Mists} (\homichlai\). Old word for fog, here alone in N.T. {Driven by a storm} (\hupo lailapos elaunomenai\). \Lailaps\ is a squall (Mr 4:37; Lu 8:23, only other N.T. examples). See Jas 3:4 for another example of \elaun“ for driving power of wind and waves. {For whom} (\hois\). Dative case of personal interest. {The blackness} (\ho zophos\). See verse 4 for this word. {Hath been reserved} (\tet^r^tai\). Perfect passive participle of \t^re“, for which see verses 4,9.

2:18 {Great swelling words} (\hyperogka\). Old compound adjective (\hyper\ and \ogkos\, a swelling, swelling above and beyond), in N.T. only here and Jude 1:16. {Of vanity} (\mataiot^tos\). Late and rare word (from \mataios\, empty, vain), often in LXX, in N.T. here, Ro 8:20; Eph 4:17. {By lasciviousness} (\aselgeiais\). Instrumental plural, "by lascivious acts." Note asyndeton as in 1:9,17. {Those who are just escaping} (\tous olig“s apopheugontas\). So A B read \olig“s\ (slightly, a little), while Aleph C K L P read \ont“s\ (actually). \Olig“s\ late and rare, only here in N.T. So again the Textus Receptus has \apopheugontas\ (second aorist active participle, clean escaped) while the correct text is the present active \apopheugontas\. {From them that live in error} (\tous en plan^i anastrephomenous\). Accusative case after \apopheugontas\ (escaping from) according to regular idiom. Peter often uses \anastreph“ and \anastroph^.

2:19 {Liberty} (\eleutherian\). Promising "personal liberty," that is license, after the fashion of advocates of liquor today, not the freedom of truth in Christ (Joh 8:32; Ga 5:1,13). {Themselves bondservants} (\autoi douloi\). "Themselves slaves" of corruption and sin as Paul has it in Ro 6:20. {Of whom} (\h"i\). Instrumental case, but it may mean "of what." {Is overcome} (\h^tt^tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \h^tta" (from \h^tt"n\, less) old verb, in N.T. only here, verse 20; 2Co 12:13. {Of the same} (\tout"i\). "By this one (or thing). " {Is brought into bondage} (\dedoul"tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \doulo". Like Paul again (Ro 6:16,18; 8:21).

2:20 {After they have escaped} (\apophugontes\). Second aorist active participle here (see verse 18). {The defilements} (\ta miasmata\). Old word miasma, from \miain", here only in N.T. Our "miasma." The body is sacred to God. Cf. \miasmou\ in verse 10. {They are again entangled} (\palin emplakentes\). Second aorist passive participle of \emplek", old verb, to inweave (noosed, fettered), in N.T. only here and 2Ti 2:4. {Overcome} (\h^tt"ntai\). Present passive indicative of \h^ttao", for which see verse 19, "are repeatedly worsted." Predicate in the condition of first class with \ei\. It is not clear whether the subject here is "the deluded victims" (Bigg) or the false teachers themselves (Mayor). See Heb 10:26 for a parallel. {Therein} (\toutois\). So locative case (in these "defilements"), but it can be instrumental case ("by these," Strachan). {With them} (\autois\). Dative of disadvantage, "for them." {Than the first} (\t"n pr"t"n\). Ablative case after the comparative \cheirona\. See this moral drawn by Jesus (Mt 12:45; Lu 11:26).

2:21 {It were better} (\kreitton ^n\). Apodosis of a condition of second class without \an\, as is usual with clauses of possibility, propriety, obligation (Mt 26:24; 1Co 5:10; Ro 7:7; Heb 9:26). {Not to have known} (\m^ epegn"kenai\). Perfect active infinitive of \epigin"sk" (cf. \epign"sei\, verse 20) to know fully. {The way of righteousness} (\t^n hodon t^s dikaiosun^s\). For the phrase see Mt 21:33, also the way of truth (2:2), the straight way (2:15). {After knowing it} (\epignousin\). Second aorist active participle of \epigin"sk" (just used) in the dative plural agreeing with \autois\ (for them). {To turn back} (\hupostrepsai\). First aorist active infinitive of \hupostreph", old and common verb, to turn back, to return. {From} (\ek\). Out of. So in Ac 12:25 with \hupostreph". With ablative case. See Ro 7:12 for \hagia\ applied to \h^ entol\ (cf. 1Ti 6:14). II Peter strikes a high ethical note (1:5ff.). {Delivered} (\paradotheis^s\). First aorist passive participle feminine ablative singular of \paradid^mi\.

2:22 {It has happened} (\sumbeb^ken\). Perfect active indicative of \sumbain^, for which see 1Pe 4:12. {According to the true proverb} (\to t^s al^thous paroimias\). "The word (\to\ used absolutely, the matter of, as in Mt 21:21; Jas 4:14) of the true proverb" (\paroimia\ a wayside saying, for which see Joh 10:6; 16:25,29). The first proverb here given comes from Pr 26:11. \Exerama\ is a late and rare word (here only in N.T., in Diosc. and Eustath.) from \exera^, to vomit. {The sow that had washed} (\h-s lousamen^). \H-s\, old word for hog, here only in N.T. Participle first aorist direct middle of \lou^ shows that it is feminine (anarthrous). This second proverb does not occur in the O.T., probably from a Gentile source because about the habit of hogs. Epictetus and other writers moralize on the habit of hogs, having once bathed in a filthy mud-hole, to delight in it. {To wallowing} (\eis kulismon\). "To rolling." Late and rare word (from \kuli^, Mr 9:20), here only in N.T. {In the mire} (\borborou\). Objective genitive, old word for dung, mire, here only in N.T. J. Rendel Harris (_Story of Ahikar_, p. LXVII) tells of a story about a hog that went to the bath with people of quality, but on coming out saw a stinking drain and went and rolled himself in it.

3:1 {Beloved} (\agap^{toi}\). With this vocative verbal (four times in this chapter), Peter "turns away from the Libertines and their victims" (Mayor). {This is now the second epistle that I write unto you} (\tautⁿ ^d^{deuteran humin graph} "epistolⁿ\).

Literally, "This already a second epistle I am writing to you."

For ^dⁿ see Joh 21:24. It is the predicate use of \deuteran epistolⁿ in apposition with \tautⁿ, not "this second epistle." Reference apparently to I Peter. {And in both of them} (\en hais\). "In which epistles." {I stir up} (\diegeirⁿ\).

Present active indicative, perhaps conative, "I try to stir up."

See 1:13. {Mind} (\dianoian\). Understanding (Plato) as in 1Pe

1:13. {Sincere} (\eilikrinⁿ\). Old adjective of doubtful etymology (supposed to be \heilⁿ, sunlight, and \krinⁿ, to judge by it). Plato used it of ethical purity (\psuchⁿ eilikrin^s) as here and Php 1:10, the only N.T. examples. {By putting you in remembrance} (\en hupomnⁿ sei\). As in 1:13.

3:2 {That ye should remember} (\mn^{sth} nai\). First aorist passive (deponent) infinitive of \mimn^{sk}, to remind. Purpose (indirect command) is here expressed by this infinitive.

Imperative in Jude 1:17. {Spoken before} (\proeir^{men} "n\).

Perfect passive participle of \proeipon\ (defective verb).

Genitive case \r^{mat} "n\ after \mn^{sth} nai\. {And the commandment}

(\kai t^s entol^s\). Ablative case with \hupo\ (agency). {Of the Lord and Saviour through your apostles} (\tⁿ apostolⁿ humⁿ tou kuriou kai s^t ros\). \Humⁿ (your) is correct, not \h^m "n\

(our). But the several genitives complicate the sense. If \dia\

(through) occurred before \tⁿ apostolⁿ, it would be clear. It is held by some that Peter would not thus speak of the twelve apostles, including himself, and that the forger here allows the mask to slip, but Bigg rightly regards this a needless inference.

The meaning is that they should remember the teaching of their apostles and not follow the Gnostic libertines.

3:3 {Knowing this first} (\touto pr^{ton gin} skontes\). Present active participle of \gin^{sk}. See 1:20 for this identical phrase. Nominative absolute here where accusative \gin^{skontas} would be regular. Peter now takes up the \parousia\ (1:16) after having discussed the \dunamis\ of Christ. {In the last days} (\ep' eschat"n t"n h^mer"n\). "Upon the last of the days." Jude 1:18 has it \ep' eschatou chronou\ (upon the last time). In 1Pe 1:5 it is \en kair"i eschat"i\ (in the last time), while 1Pe 1:20 has \ep' eschatou t"n chron"n\ (upon the last of the times). John has usually \t^i eschat^i h^merfi\ (on the last day, 6:39f.). Here \eschat"n\ is a predicate adjective like \summus mons\ (the top of the mountain). {Mockers with mockery} (\empaigmon^i empaiktai\). Note Peter's play on words again, both from \empaiz" (\i> Mt 2:16), to trifle with, and neither found elsewhere save \empaikt^s\ in Jude 1:18; Isa 3:4 (playing like children).

3:4 {Where is the promise of his coming?} (\pou estin h^ epaggelia t^s parousias autou;). This is the only sample of the questions raised by these mockers. Peter had mentioned this subject of the \parousia\ in 1:16. Now he faces it squarely. Peter, like Paul (1Th 5:1f.; 2Th 2:1f.), preached about the second coming (1:16; Ac 3:20f.), as Jesus himself did repeatedly (Mt 24:34) and as the angels promised at the Ascension (Ac 1:11). Both Jesus and Paul (2Th 2:1f.) were misunderstood on the subject of the time and the parables of Jesus urged readiness and forbade setting dates for his coming, though his language in Mt 24:34 probably led some to believe that he would certainly come while they were alive. {From the day that} (\aph' h^s\). "From which day." See Lu 7:45. {Fell asleep} (\ekoim^th^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \koima" , old verb, to put sleep, classic euphemism for death (Joh 11:11) like our cemetery (sleeping-place). {Continue} (\diamenei\). Present active indicative of \diamen" , to remain through (Lu 1:22). _In statu quo_. {As they were} (\hout"s\). "Thus." {From the beginning of creation} (\ap' arch^s ktise"s\). Precisely so in Mr 10:6, which see.

3:5 {For this they wilfully forget} (\lanthanei gar autous touto thelontas\). Literally, "for this escapes them being willing." See this use of \lanthan" (\i> old verb, to escape notice of, to be hidden from) in Ac 26:26. The present active participle \thelontas\ (from thel" , to wish) has almost an adverbial sense here. {Compacted} (\sunest^sa\). See Paul's \sunest^ken\ (Col 1:17) "consist." Second perfect active (intransitive) participle of \sunist^mi\, feminine singular agreeing with \g^ (\i> nearest to it) rather than with \ouranoi\ (subject of ^san\ imperfect plural). There is no need to make Peter mean the Jewish mystical "seven heavens" because of the plural which was used interchangeably with the singular (Mt 5:9f.). {Out of water and amidst water} (\ex hudatos kai di' hudatos\). Out of the primeval watery chaos (Ge 1:2), but it is not plain what is meant by \di' hudatos\, which naturally means "by means of water," though \dia\ with the genitive is used for a condition or state (Heb 12:1). The reference may be to Ge 1:9, the gathering together of the waters. {By the word of God} (\t*“i tou theou log*“i\). Instrumental case \log*“i*\, "by the fiat of God" (Ge 1:3; Heb 11:3 \r*ˆ*mati theou\).

3:6 {By which means} (\di' h*“n*\). The two waters above or the water and the word of God. Mayor against the MSS. reads \di' hou\ (singular) and refers it to \log*“i*\ alone. {Being overshadowed} (\kataklustheis\). First aorist passive participle of \katakluz*“\, old compound, here only in N.T., but see \kataklusmos\ in 2:5. {With water} (\hudati\). Instrumental case of \hud“r*\. {Perished} (\ap*“leto*\). Second aorist middle indicative of \apollumi\.

3:7 {That now are} (\nun\). "The now heavens" over against "the then world" (\ho tote kosmos\ verse 6). {By the same word} (\t*“i aut*“i log*“i*\). Instrumental case again referring to \log*“i*\ in verse 6. {Have been stored up} (\teth*ˆ*saurismenoi eisin\). Perfect passive indicative of \th*ˆ*sauriz*“*\, for which verb see Mt 6:19; Lu 12:21. {For fire} (\puri\). Dative case of \pur\, not with fire (instrumental case). The destruction of the world by fire is here pictured as in Joe 2:30f.; Ps 50:3. {Being reserved} (\t*ˆ*roumenoi\). Present passive participle of \t*ˆ*re*“*\, for which see 2:4. {Against} (\eis\). Unto. As in 2:4,9 and see 1Pe 1:4 for the inheritance reserved for the saints of God.

3:8 {Forget not this one thing} (\hen touto m*ˆ* lanthanet*“* humas\). Rather, "let not this one thing escape you." For \lanthanet*“*\ (present active imperative of \lanthan*“*\) see verse 5. The "one thing" (\hen\) is explained by the \hoti\ (that) clause following. Peter applies the language of Ps 90:4 about the eternity of God and shortness of human life to "the impatience of human expectations" (Bigg) about the second coming of Christ. "The day of judgment is at hand (1Pe 4:7). It may come tomorrow; but what is tomorrow? What does God mean by a day? It may be a thousand years" (Bigg). Precisely the same argument applies to those who argue for a literal interpretation of the thousand years in Re 20:4-6. It may be a day or a day may be a thousand years. God's clock (\para kuri“i, beside the Lord) does not run by our timepieces. The scoffers scoff ignorantly.

3:9 {Is not slack concerning his promise} (\ou bradunei t^s epaggelias). Ablative case \epaggelias after \bradunei (present active indicative of \bradun“, from \bradus, slow), old verb, to be slow in, to fall short of (like \leipetai sophias in Jas 1:5), here and 1Ti 3:15 only in N.T. {Slackness} (\bradut^{ta}). Old substantive from \bradus (Jas 1:19), here only in N.T. God is not impotent nor unwilling to execute his promise. {To youward} (\eis humas). \Pros rather than \eis after \makrothumei in 1Th 5:14 and \epi in Jas 5:7, etc. {Not wishing} (m[^] boulomenos). Present middle participle of \boulomai. Some will perish (verse 7), but that is not God's desire. Any (\tinias). Rather than "some" (\tines) above. Accusative with the infinitive \apolesthai (second aorist middle of \apollumi). God wishes "all" (\pantas) to come (\ch“r^{sai} first aorist active infinitive of \ch“re“, old verb, to make room). See Ac 17:30; Ro 11:32; 1Ti 2:4; Heb 2:9 for God's provision of grace for all who will repent.

3:10 {The day of the Lord} (\h^{mera} kuriou). So Peter in Ac 2:20 (from Joe 3:4) and Paul in 1Th 5:2,4; 2Th 2:2; 1Co 5:5; and day of Christ in Php 2:16 and day of God in 2:12 and day of judgment already in 2:9; 3:7. This great day will certainly come (\h^{xei}). Future active of \h^k“, old verb, to arrive, but in God's own time. {As a thief} (\h“s klept^s). That is suddenly, without notice. This very metaphor Jesus had used (Lu 12:39; Mt 24:43) and Paul after him (1Th 5:2) and John will quote it also (Re 3:3; 16:15). {In the which} (\en hⁱ). The day when the Lord comes. {Shall pass away} (\pareleusontai). Future middle of \parerchomai, old verb, to pass by. {With a great noise} (\roiz^{don}). Late and rare adverb (from \roize“, roizos)-- Lycophron, Nicander, here only in N.T., onomatopoeic, whizzing sound of rapid motion through the air like the flight of a bird, thunder, fierce flame. {The elements} (\ta stoicheia). Old word (from \stoichos a row), in Plato in this sense, in other senses also in N.T. as the alphabet, ceremonial regulations (Heb 5:12; Ga 4:3; 5:1; Col 2:8). {Shall be dissolved} (\luth^{setai}). Future passive of \lu“, to loosen, singular because \stoicheia is neuter plural. {With fervent heat} (\kausoumena). Present passive participle of \kausos, late verb

(from \kausos\, usually medical term for fever) and nearly always employed for fever temperature. Mayor suggests a conflagration from internal heat. Bigg thinks it merely a vernacular (Doric) future for \kausomena\ (from \kai“\, to burn). {Shall be burned up} (\kataka^setai\). Repeated in verse 12. Second future passive of the compound verb \katakai“\, to burn down (up), according to A L. But Aleph B K P read \heureth^setai\ (future passive of \heurisk“\, to find) "shall be found." There are various other readings here. The text seems corrupt.

3:11 {To be dissolved} (\luomen“n\). Present passive participle (genitive absolute with \tout“n pant“n\, these things all) of \lu“\, either the futuristic present or the process of dissolution presented. {What manner of persons} (\potapous\). Late qualitative interrogative pronoun for the older \podapos\ as in Mt 8:27, accusative case with \dei huparchein\ agreeing with \humfs\ (you). See 1:8 for \huparch“\, {In all holy living and godliness} (\en hagiais anastrophais kai eusebeiais\). "In holy behaviours and pieties" (Alford). Plural of neither word elsewhere in N.T., but a practical plural in \pfsa anastroph^ in 1Pe 1:15.

3:12 {Looking for} (\prosdok“ntas\). Present active participle of \prosdoka“\ (Mt 11:3) agreeing in case (accusative plural) with \humfs\, {Earnestly desiring} (\speudontas\). Present active participle, accusative also, of \speud“\, old verb, to hasten (like our speed) as in Lu 2:16, but it is sometimes transitive as here either (preferably so) to "hasten on the parousia" by holy living (cf. 1Pe 2:12), with which idea compare Mt 6:10; Ac 3:19f., or to desire earnestly (Isa 16:5). {Being on fire} (\proumenoi\). Present passive participle of \puro“\, old verb (from pur), same idea as in verse 10. {Shall melt} (\t^ketai\). Futuristic present passive indicative of \t^k“\, old verb, to make liquid, here only in N.T. Hort suggests \t^xetai\ (future middle), though Isa 34:4 has \tak^sontai\ (second future passive). The repetitions here make "an effective refrain" (Mayor).

3:13 {Promise} (\epaggelma\). As in 1:4. The reference is to Isa 65:17f.; 66:22. See also Re 21:1. For \kainos\ (new) see on ~Mt 26:29. For the expectant attitude in \prosdok“men\ (we look for) repeated from verse 12 and again in verse 14, see \apekdechometha\ (we eagerly look for) in Php 3:20. {Wherein} (\en hois\). The new heavens and earth. {Dwelleth} (\katoikei\).

Has its home (\oikos\). Certainly "righteousness" (\dikaiosun^) is not at home in this present world either in individuals, families, or nations.

3:14 {Wherefore} (\dio\). As in 1:10,12. {Give diligence} (\spoudasate\). As in 1:10. {That ye may be found} (\heureth^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive (cf. \heureth^setai\ in verse 10). For this use of \heurisk^ about the end see 2Co 5:3; Php 3:9; 1Pe 1:7. {Without spot and blameless} (\aspiloi kai am^m^toi\). Predicate nominative after \heureth^nai\. See 2:13 for position words \spiloi kai m^moi\ and 1Pe 1:19 for \am^mos\ (so Jude 1:24) \kai aspilos\ (so Jas 1:27). \Am^m^tos\ (old verbal of \m^maomai\) only here in N.T. save some MSS. in Php 2:15.

3:15 {In his sight} (\aut^i\). Ethical dative. Referring to Christ. {Is salvation} (\s^t^rian\). Predicate accusative after \h^geisthe\ in apposition with \makrothumian\ (long-suffering), an opportunity for repentance (cf. 1Pe 3:20). The Lord here is Christ. {Our beloved brother Paul} (\ho agap^tos adelphos Paulos\). Paul applies the verbal \agap^tos\ (beloved) to Epaphras (Col 1:7), Onesimus (Col 4:9; Phm 1:16), to Tychicus (Col 4:7; Eph 6:21), and to four brethren in Ro 16 (Epainetus Ro 16:5, Ampliatus Ro 16:8, Stachys Ro 16:9, Persis Ro 16:12). It is not surprising for Peter to use it of Paul in view of Gal 2:9f., in spite of Ga 2:11-14. {Given to him} (\dotheisan aut^i\). First aorist passive participle of \did^mi\ with dative case. Peter claimed wisdom for himself, but recognises that Paul had the gift also. His language here may have caution in it as well as commendation. "St. Peter speaks of him with affection and respect, yet maintains the right to criticise" (Bigg).

3:16 {As also in all his epistles} (\h^s kai en pasais epistolais\). We do not know to how many Peter here refers. There is no difficulty in supposing that Peter "received every one of St. Paul's Epistles within a month or two of its publication" (Bigg). And yet Peter does not here assert the formation of a canon of Paul's Epistles. {Speaking in them of these things} (\lal^n en autais peri tout^n\). Present active participle of \lale^\. That is to say, Paul also wrote about the second coming of Christ, as is obviously true. {Hard to be understood} (\dusno^ta\). Late verbal from \dus\ and \noe^ (in Aristotle, Lucian, Diog. Laert.), here only in N.T. We know that the Thessalonians persisted in misrepresenting Paul on this very subject of the second coming as Hymenaeus and Philetus did about the resurrection (2Ti 2:17) and Spitta holds that Paul's teaching about grace was twisted to mean moral laxity like Ga 3:10; Ro 3:20,28; 5:20 (with which cf. 6:1 as a case in point), etc. Peter does not say that he himself did not understand Paul on the subject of faith and freedom. {Unlearned} (\amatheis\). Old word (alpha privative and \manthan“\ to learn), ignorant, here only in N.T. {Unsteadfast} (\ast^riktoi\). See on 2:14. {Wrest} (\streblousin\). Present active indicative of \streblo“, old verb (from \streblos\ twisted, \streph“, to turn), here only in N.T. {The other scriptures} (\tas loipas graphas\). There is no doubt that the apostles claimed to speak by the help of the Holy Spirit (1Th 5:27; Col 4:16) just as the prophets of old did (2Pe 1:20f.). Note \loipas\ (rest) here rather than \allas\ (other). Peter thus puts Paul's Epistles on the same plane with the O.T., which was also misused (Mt 5:21-44; 15:3-6; 19:3-10).

3:17 {Knowing these things beforehand} (\progin“skontes\). Present active participle of \progin“sk“\ as in 1Pe 1:20. Cf. \pr“ton gin“sk“\ (1:20; 3:1). Hence they are without excuse for misunderstanding Peter or Paul on this subject. {Beware} (\phulassesthe\). Present middle imperative of \phulass“, common verb, to guard. {Lest} (\hina m^). Negative purpose, "that not." {Being carried away} (\sunapachthentes\). First aorist passive participle of \sunapag“, old verb double compound, to carry away together with, in N.T. only here and Ga 2:13. {With the error} (\t^i plan^i\). Instrumental case, "by the error" (the wandering). {Of the wicked} (\t“n athesm“n\). See on 2:7. {Ye fall from} (\ekpes^te\). Second aorist active subjunctive with \hina m^ of \ekpipt“, old verb, to fall out of, with the ablative here (\st^rigmou\, steadfastness, late word from \st^riz“, here alone in N.T.) as in Ga 5:4 (\t^s charitos exepesate\, ye fell out of grace).

3:18 {But grow} (\auxanete de\). Present active imperative of \auxan“, in contrast with such a fate pictured in verse 17, "but keep on growing." {In the grace and knowledge} (\en chariti kai gn“sei\). Locative case with \en\. Grow in both. Keep it up. See on 1:1 for the idiomatic use of the single article (\tou\ here, "of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." {To him} (\aut“i\). To Christ. {For ever} (\eis h^meran ai“nos\). "Unto the day of eternity." So Sirach 18:9f. One of the various ways of expressing eternity by the use of \ai“n\. So \eis ton ai“na\ in Joh 6:5; 12:34.

(2 Peter: Chapter 3)

1:1 {That which} (\ho\). Strictly speaking, the neuter relative here is not personal, but the message "concerning the Word of life" (\peri tou logou t^s z'^s\), a phrase that reminds one at once of the Word (\Logos\ in Joh 1:1,14; Re 19:14 (an incidental argument for identity of authorship for all these books). For discussion of the \Logos\ see on Joh 1:1-18. Here the \Logos\ is described by t^s z'^s\ (of life), while in Joh 1:4 he is called h^ z'^\ (the Life) as here in verse 2 and as Jesus calls himself (Joh 11:25; 14:6), an advance on the phrase here, and in Re 19:14 he is termed ho logos tou theou\ (the Word of God), though in Joh 1:1 the \Logos\ is flatly named ho theos\ (God). John does use ho\ in a collective personal sense in Joh 6:37,39. See also pan ho\ in 1Jo 5:4. {From the beginning} (\ap' arch^s\). Anarthrous as in Joh 1:1; 6:64; 16:4. See same phrase in 2:7. The reference goes beyond the Christian dispensation, beyond the Incarnation, to the eternal purpose of God in Christ (Joh 3:16), "coeval in some sense with creation" (Westcott). {That which we have heard} (\ho ak^koamen\). Note fourfold repetition of ho\ (that which) without connectives (asyndeton). The perfect tense (active indicative of akou') stresses John's equipment to speak on this subject so slowly revealed. It is the literary plural unless John associates the elders of Ephesus with himself (Lightfoot) the men who certified the authenticity of the Gospel (Joh 21:24). {That which we have seen} (\ho he'^rakamen\). Perfect active, again, of hora'\, with the same emphasis on the possession of knowledge by John. {With our eyes} (\tois ophthalmois h^m'^n\). Instrumental case and showing it was not imagination on John's part, not an optical illusion as the Docetists claimed, for Jesus had an actual human body. He could be heard and seen. {That which we beheld} (\ho etheasametha\). Repetition with the aorist middle indicative of theaomai\ (the very form in Joh 1:14), "a spectacle which broke on our astonished vision" (D. Smith). {Handled} (\eps^laph^san\). First aorist active indicative of ps^lapha'\, old and graphic verb (from psa', to touch), the very verb used by Jesus to prove that he was not a mere spirit (Lu 24:39). Three senses are here appealed to (hearing, sight, touch) as combining to show the reality of Christ's humanity against the Docetic Gnostics and the qualification of John by experience to speak. But he is also "the Word of life" and so God Incarnate.

1:2 {Was manifested} (\ephanerth\). First aorist passive indicative of \phaneroth\, to make known what already exists, whether invisible (B. Weiss) or visible, "intellectual or sensible" (Brooke). In Col 3:4 Paul employs it of the second coming of Christ. Verse 2 here is an important parenthesis, a mark of John's style as in Joh 1:15. By the parenthesis John heaps reassurance upon his previous statement of the reality of the Incarnation by the use of \he^{rakamen}\ (as in verse 1) with the assertion of the validity of his "witness" (\marturoumen\), and "message" (\apaggellomen\), both present active indicatives (literary plurals), \apaggellth\ being the public proclamation of the great news (Joh 16:25). {The life, the eternal life} (\tⁿ zth tⁿ ai^{nion}\). Taking up \zth\ of verse 1, John defines the term by the adjective \ai^{nios}\, used 71 times in the N.T., 44 times with \zth\ and 23 in John's Gospel and Epistles (only so used in these books by John). Here it means the divine life which the Logos was and is (Joh 1:4; 1Jo 1:1). {Which} (\h^{tis}\). Qualitative relative, "which very life." {Was with the Father} (\ⁿ pros ton patera\). Not \egeneto\, but \ⁿ\, and \pros\ with the accusative of intimate fellowship, precisely as in Joh 1:1 \ⁿ pros ton theon\ (was with God). Then John closes the parenthesis by repeating \ephanerth\.

1:3 {That which we have seen} (\ho he^{rakamen}\). Third use of this form (verses 1,2,3), this time resumption after the parenthesis in verse 2. {And heard} (\kai ak^{koamen}\). Second (verse 1 for first) use of this form, a third in verse 5. Emphasis by repetition is a thoroughly Johannine trait. {Declare we} (\apaggellomen\). Second use of this word (verse 2 for first), but \aggelia\ (message) and \anaggellomen\ (announce) in verse 5. {That ye also may have} (\hina kai humeis ech^{te}\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and present active subjunctive of \echth\ (may keep on having). "Ye also" who have not seen Jesus in the flesh as well as those like John who have seen him. Like \kai humin\ (to you also) just before. {Fellowship with us} (\koin^{nian meth' h^mn}\). Common word in this Epistle, from \koin^{nos}\, partner (Lu 5:10), and \koin^{ne}\, to share, in (1Pe 4:13), with \meta\ emphasising mutual relationship (Ac 2:42). This Epistle often uses \echth\ with a substantive rather than a verb. {Yea, and our fellowship} (\kai h^ koin“nia de h^ h^metera\). Careful explanation of his meaning in the word "fellowship" (partnership), involving fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ and only possible in Christ.

1:4 {We write} (\graphomen h^meis\). Literary plural present active indicative of \graph“, which see in the singular in 2:12-14. {May be fulfilled} (\i pepl^r“men^). Periphrastic perfect passive subjunctive of \pl^ro“, stressing the state of completion in the purpose (\hina\), remain full, precisely as in Joh 16:24. See aorist subjunctive in Joh 15:11 and perfect indicative in Joh 17:13. The MSS. differ as often between \h^m“n\ (our) and \hum“n\ (your).

1:5 {And} (\kai\). Mutual fellowship depends on mutual knowledge (Westcott). {Message} (\aggelia\). Old word (from \aggelos\, messenger), in N.T. only here and 3:11, and note \ap' autou\ (from God like \apaggell“\ in verse 3) and \anaggellomen\, to announce, to disclose, here as in Joh 4:25. {God is light} (\ho theos ph“s estin\). Precisely so the \Logos\ is light (Joh 1:4-9) and what Jesus claimed to be (Joh 8:12). John repeats it in negative form as he often does (Joh 1:3).

1:6 {If we say} (\ean eip“men\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and second aorist (ingressive, up and say) active subjunctive. Claiming fellowship with God (see verse 3) involves walking in the light with God (verse 5) and not in the darkness (\skotos\ here, but \skotia\ in Joh 1:5). See 2:11 also for \en t^i skotifi peripate“. {We lie} (\pseudometha\). Present middle indicative, plain Greek and plain English like that about the devil in Joh 8:44. {Do not the truth} (\ou poioumen t^ n al^theian\). Negative statement of the positive \pseudometha\ as in Joh 8:44. See Joh 3:21 for "doing the truth," like Ne 9:33.

1:7 {If we walk} (\ean peripat“men\). Condition of third class also with \ean\ and present active subjunctive (keep on walking in the light with God). {As he} (\h“s autos\). As God is light (verse 5) and dwells in light unapproachable (1Ti 6:16). {One with another} (\met' all^l“n\). As he has already said in verse 3. But we cannot have fellowship with one another unless we have it with God in Christ, and to do that we must walk in the light with God. {And the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin} (\kai to haima I^sou tou huiou autou katharizei h^mfs apo pfs^s hamartias\). This clause with \kai\ in true Johannine style is coordinate with the preceding one. Walking in the light with God makes possible fellowship with one another and is made possible also by the blood of Jesus (real blood and no mere phantom, atoning blood of the sinless Son of God for our sins). John is not ashamed to use this word. It is not the mere "example" of Jesus that "cleanses" us from sin. It does cleanse the conscience and life and nothing else does (Heb 9:13f.; Tit 2:14). See in verse 9 both forgiveness and cleansing. Cf. 1Jo 3:3.

1:8 {If we say} (\ean eip^men\). See verse 6. {We have no sin} (\hamartian ouk echomen\). For this phrase see Joh 9:41; 15:22,24. That is, we have no personal guilt, no principle of sin. This some of the Gnostics held, since matter was evil and the soul was not contaminated by the sinful flesh, a thin delusion with which so-called Christian scientists delude themselves today. {We deceive ourselves} (\heautous plan^men\). Present active indicative of \plana^, to lead astray. We do not deceive others who know us. Negative statement again of the same idea, "the truth is not in us."

1:9 {If we confess} (\ean homolog^men\). Third-class condition again with \ean\ and present active subjunctive of \homologe^, "if we keep on confessing." Confession of sin to God and to one another (Jas 5:16) is urged throughout the N.T. from John the Baptist (Mr 1:5) on. {Faithful} (\pistos\). Jesus made confession of sin necessary to forgiveness. It is God's promise and he is "righteous" (\dikaios\). {To forgive} (\hina aph^i\). Sub-final clause with \hina\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \aphi^mi\). {And to cleanse} (\kai hagian^i\). So again with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \kathariz^ (verse 7).

1:10 {If we say} (\ean eip^men\). As in verses 6,8. {We have not sinned} (\ouch hamart^kamen\). Perfect active indicative of \hamartan^\. This is a denial of any specific acts of sin, while in verse 8 we have the denial of the principle of sin. David Smith observes that the claim to personal perfectionism has two causes, one the stifling of conscience in making God a liar (\pseust^n\, the word used of the devil by Jesus in Joh 8:44), and the other ignorance of God's word, which is not in us, else we should not make such a claim.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {My little children} (\teknia mou\). Tender tone with this diminutive of \teknon\ (child), again in 2:12; 3:18, but \paidia\ in 2:14. John is now an old man and regards his readers as his little children. That attitude is illustrated in the story of his visit to the robber to win him to Christ. {That ye may not sin} (\hina m^ hamart^te\). Purpose (negative) clause with \hina m^\ and the second aorist (ingressive, commit sin) active subjunctive of \hamartan^, to sin. John has no patience with professional perfectionists (1:8-10), but he has still less with loose-livers like some of the Gnostics who went to all sorts of excesses without shame. {If any man sin} (\ean tis hamart^i\). Third-class condition with \ean\ and second aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive again, "if one commit sin." {We have} (\echomen\). Present active indicative of \ech^ in the apodosis, a present reality like \echomen\ in 2Co 5:1. {An advocate} (\parakl^ton\). See on ^Joh 14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7 for this word, nowhere else in the N.T. The Holy Spirit is God's Advocate on earth with men, while Christ is man's Advocate with the Father (the idea, but not the word, in Ro 8:31-39; Heb 7:25). As \dikaios\ (righteous) Jesus is qualified to plead our case and to enter the Father's presence (Heb 2:18).

2:2 {And he} (\kai autos\). He himself in his own person, both priest and sacrifice (Heb 9:14). {The propitiation} (\hilasmos\). Late substantive from \hilaskomai\ (Lu 18:13; Heb 2:17), in LXX, Philo, Plutarch, in N.T. only here and 4:10. Christ himself is the means of propitiation for (\peri\ concerning) our sins. See \hilast^rion\ in Ro 3:15. {For the whole world} (\peri holou tou kosmou\). It is possible to supply the ellipsis here of \t^ n hamarti^ n\ (the sins of) as we have it in Heb 7:27, but a simpler way is just to regard "the whole world" as a mass of sin (5:19). At any rate, the propitiation by Christ provides for salvation for all (Heb 2:9) if they will only be reconciled with God (2Co 5:19-21).

2:3 {Hereby} (\en tout^i\). See this phrase also in 2:5; 3:16,19,24; 4:2,13; 5:2. That is explained by the \ean\ clause, "if we keep his commandments " (\ean t^ r^ men\, condition of the *third class, \ean\ with present active subjunctive, "if we keep on keeping"), the clause itself in apposition with \tout“i\ (locative case). {Know we that we know him} (\ginoskomen hoti egn“kamen auton\). "Know we that we have come to know and still know him," \egn“kamen\ the perfect active indicative of \gin“sk“\. The Gnostics boasted of their superior knowledge of Christ, and John here challenges their boast by an appeal to experimental knowledge of Christ which is shown by keeping his (\autou\, Christ's) commandments, thoroughly Johannine phrase (12 times in the Gospel, 6 in this Epistle, 6 in the Apocalypse).*

2:4 {I know him} (\Egn“ka auton\). Perfect active indicative with recitative \hoti\ like quotation marks just before it. This is one of the pious platitudes, cheap claptrap of the Gnostics, who would bob up in meetings with such explosions. John punctures such bubbles with the sharp addition "and keepeth not" (\ho m^t^r“n\, present active linear participle). "The one who keeps on saying: 'I have come to know him,' and keeps on not keeping his commandments is a liar" (\pseust^s\, just like Satan, Joh 8:44 and like 1Jo 1:8,10), followed by the negative statement as in 1:8,10. There is a whip-cracker effect in John's words.

2:5 {But whoso keepeth} (\hos d' an t^r^i\). Indefinite relative clause with modal \an\ and the present active subjunctive, "whoever keeps on keeping." {Verily} (\al^th“s\). Truly, of a truth. This prize is open to all, not confined to a few initiated Gnostic intellectuals or pneumatics. {Hath the love of God been perfected} (\h^agap^ tou theou tetelei“tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \teleio“, stands completed. Probably objective genitive, our love for God, which is realized in absolute obedience (Brooke). {Hereby} (\en tout“i\). That is by continuous keeping of Christ's commandments, not by loud talk and loose living.

2:6 {Himself also to walk} (\kai autos peripatein\). Present active infinitive after \opheilei\ (ought), "Himself also to keep on walking," a continuous performance, not a spasmodic spurt. {Even as he walked} (\kath“s ekeinos periepat^sen\). Constative aorist active indicative summing up the life of Christ on earth with the emphatic use of the demonstrative \ekeinos\ in reference to Christ as in 3:3,5,7,16; 4:17; Joh 7:11; 9:12,28; 19:21.

2:7 {Beloved} (\agap^toi\). First instance of this favourite form of address in these Epistles (3:2,21; 4:1,7; 3Jo 1,2,5,11). {No new commandment} (\ouk entolⁿ kainⁿ\). Not novel or new in kind (\kainⁿ\ as distinct from \neos\, new in time, for which distinction see Lu 5:33-38). {But an old commandment} (\all' entolⁿ palaian\). Ancient as opposed both to \kainos\ and \neos\. The Mosaic law taught love for one's neighbours and Christ taught love even of enemies. {Which ye had} (\hⁿ eichete\). Imperfect active, reaching back to the beginning of their Christian lives (\ap' arch^s\). They had heard it expressly from Jesus (Joh 13:34), who, however, calls it "a new commandment."

2:8 {Again a new commandment} (\palin entolⁿ kainⁿ\). Paradox, but truth. Old in teaching (as old as the story of Cain and Abel, 3:11f.), but new in practice. For this use of \palin\ for a new turn see Joh 16:28. To walk as Christ walked is to put in practice the old commandment and so make it new (ever new and fresh), as love is as old as man and fresh in every new experience. {True in him and in you} (\al^{thes en aut}"i kai en humin\). This newness is shown supremely in Christ and in disciples when they walk as Jesus did (verse 6). {Because} (\hoti\). Explanation of the paradox. {Is passing away} (\paragetai\). Present middle indicative of \parag^a\, old verb, to lead by, to go by (intransitive), as in Mt 20:30. Night does pass by even if slowly. See this verb in verse 17 of the world passing by like a procession. {True} (\al^{thinon}\). Genuine, reliable, no false flicker. {Already shineth} (\d^{phainei}\). Linear present active, "is already shining" and the darkness is already passing by. Dawn is here. Is John thinking of the second coming of Christ or of the victory of truth over error, of light over darkness (cf. Joh 1:5-9), the slow but sure victory of Christ over Satan as shown in the Apocalypse? See 1:5.

2:9 {And hateth his brother} (\kai ton adelphon autou misⁿ\). Sharp contrast between the love just described and hate. The only way to walk in the light (1:7) is to have fellowship with God who is light (1:3,5). So the claim to be in the light is nullified by hating a brother. {Even until now} (\he^{s arti}\). Up till this moment. In spite of the increasing light and his own boast he is in the dark.

2:10 {Abideth} (\menei\). Present active indicative, continues in the light and so does not interrupt the light by hating his brother. {Occasion of stumbling} (\skandalon\). See on Mt 13:41; 16:23 for this interesting word. It is a stumbling block or trap either in the way of others (its usual sense), as in Mt 18:7, or in one's own way, as is true of \proskopt“\ in Joh 11:9 and in verse 11 here. But, as Westcott argues, John may very well have the usual meaning here and the other in verse 11.

2:11 {Blinded} (\etuphl“sen\). First aorist active indicative of \tuphlo“, the very verb and form used in 2Co 4:4 of the god of this age to keep men from beholding the illumination of the gospel of the glory of Christ who is the image of God. The first part of the verse repeats verse 9, but adds this vivid touch of the blinding power of darkness. In the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky the fish in Echo River have eye-sockets, but no eyes.

2:12 {I write} (\graph“\). Present active indicative, repeated three times, referring to this Epistle. For "the name" see 3:23; 3Jo 1:7. They were loyal to the name of Christ (Mt 10:22). {Are forgiven} (\aphe“ntai\). Doric perfect passive indicative of \aphi^mi\ (seen also in Lu 5:20,23) for the usual \apheintai\.

\Teknia\ (little children) probably includes all, as in verse 1.

2:13 {Fathers} (\pateres\). Those mature believers with long and rich experience (\egn“kate, ye have come to know and still know). {Him which is from the beginning} (\ton ap' arch^s\). See 1:1 as explaining this crisp description of the Word of life (cf. Joh 1:1-18). {Young men} (\neaniskoi\). The younger element in contrast to the fathers, full of vigor and conflict and victory. {Ye have overcome the evil one} (\nenik^kate ton pon^ron\). Perfect active indicative of \nika“, a permanent victory after conflict. The masculine article \ton\ shows that the prince of darkness is the one defeated in this struggle, the devil plain in 3:8,10 (Joh 8:44; 13:2).

2:14 {I have written} (\egrapsa\). Repeated three times. Epistolary aorist referring to this Epistle, not to a previous Epistle. Law (_Tests of Life_, p. 309) suggests that John was interrupted at the close of verse 13 and resumes here in verse 14 with a reference to what he had previously written in verse 13. But that is needless ingenuity. It is quite in John's style to repeat himself with slight variations. {The Father} (\ton patera\). The heavenly Father as all of God's children should come to know him. He repeats from verse 13 what he said to "fathers." To the young men he adds \ischuroi\ (strong) and the word of God abiding in them. That is what makes them powerful

2:15 {Love not the world} (\m^ agapfte ton kosmon\). Prohibition with \m^ and the present active imperative of \agapa“, either stop doing it or do not have the habit of doing it. This use of \kosmos\ is common in John's Gospel (1:10; 17:14ff.) and appears also in 1Jo 5:19. In epitome the Roman Empire represented it. See it also in Jas 4:4. It confronts every believer today. {If any man love} (\ean tis agapfi\). Third-class condition with \ean\ and present active subjunctive of \agapa“ (same form as indicative), "if any keep on loving the world." {The love of the Father} (\h^ agap^ tou patros\). Objective genitive, this phrase only here in N.T., with which compare "love of God" in 2:5. In antithesis to love of the world.

2:16 {All that} (\pfn to\). Collective use of the neuter singular as in 5:4, like \pfn ho\ in Joh 6:37,39. Three examples, not necessarily covering all sins, are given in the nominative in apposition with \pfn to\. "The lust of the flesh" (\h^ epithumia t^s sarkos\, subjective genitive, lust felt by the flesh) may be illustrated by Mr 4:19; Ga 5:17. So the genitive with \h^ epithumia t^ n ophthalm^ n\ (the lust of the eyes) is subjective, lust with the eyes as organs as shown by Jesus in Mt 5:28. The use of the "movies" today for gain by lustful exhibitions is a case in point. For \alazoneia\ see on ^Jas 4:16, the only other N.T. example. \Alaz^ n\ (a boaster) occurs in Ro 1:30; 2Ti 3:2. \Bios\ (life) as in 3:17 is the external aspect (Lu 8:14), not the inward principle (\z^“^). David Smith thinks that, as in the case of Eve (Ge 3:1-6) and the temptations of Jesus (Mt 4:1-11), these three sins include all possible sins. But they are all "of the world" (\ek tou kosmou\) in origin, in no sense "of the Father" (\ek tou patros\). The problem for the believer is always how to be in the world and yet not of it (Joh 17:11,14ff.).

2:17 {Passeth away} (\paragetai\). "Is passing by" (linear action, present middle indicative), as in verse 8. There is consolation in this view of the transitoriness of the conflict with the world. Even the lust which belongs to the world passes also. The one who keeps on doing (\poi^ n\ present active participle of poie^) the will of God "abides for ever" (\menei eis ton ai^ na\ "amid the flux of transitory things" (D. Smith).

2:18 {It is the last hour} (\eschat^ h^ ra estin\). This phrase only here in N.T., though John often uses \h“ra\ for a crisis (Joh 2:4; 4:21,23; 5:25,28, etc.). It is anarthrous here and marks the character of the "hour." John has seven times "the last day" in the Gospel. Certainly in verse 28 John makes it plain that the \parousia\ might come in the life of those then living, but it is not clear that here he definitely asserts it as a fact. It was his hope beyond a doubt. We are left in doubt about this "last hour" whether it covers a period, a series, or the final climax of all just at hand. {As ye heard} (\kath“s ^kousate\). First aorist active indicative of \akou“\ . {Antichrist cometh} (\antichristos erchetai\). "Is coming." Present futuristic or prophetic middle indicative retained in indirect assertion. So Jesus taught (Mr 13:6,22; Mt 24:5,15,24) and so Paul taught (Ac 20:30; 2Th 2:3). These false Christs (Mt 24:24; Mr 13:22) are necessarily antichrists, for there can be only one. \Anti\ can mean substitution or opposition, but both ideas are identical in the word \antichristos\ (in N.T. only here, 2:22; 4:3; 2Jo 1:7). Westcott rightly observes that John's use of the word is determined by the Christian conception, not by the Jewish apocalypses. {Have there arisen} (\gegonasin\). Second perfect active indicative of \ginomai\ . {Many antichrists} (\antichristoi polloi\). Not just one, but the exponents of the Gnostic teaching are really antichrists, just as some modern deceivers deserve this title. {Whereby} (\hothen\). By the fact that these many antichrists have come.

2:19 {From us} (\ex h^m“n\) {--of us} (\ex h^m“n\). The same idiom, \ex\ and the ablative case (\h^m“n\), but in different senses to correspond with \ex^lthan\ (they went out from our membership) and \ouk ^san\ (they were not of us in spirit and life). For \ex\ in the sense of origin see Joh 17:15, for \ex\ in the sense of likeness, Joh 17:14. {For if they had been of us} (\ei gar ex h^m“n ^san\). Condition of second class with \ei\ and imperfect tense (no aorist for eimi). {They would have continued} (\memen^keisan an\). Past perfect of \men“\, to remain, without augment, with \an\ in apodosis of second-class condition. {With us} (\meth' h^m“n\). In fellowship, for which see \meta\ in 1:3. They had lost the inner fellowship and then apparently voluntarily broke the outward. {But they went} (\all'\). Ellipsis of the verb \ex^lthan\ above, a common habit (ellipse) in John's Gospel (1:8; 9:3; 13:18; 15:25). {That they might be made manifest} (\hina phaner“th“sin\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \phanero“, for which verb see Joh 21:1; Col 3:4. See 2Co 3:3 for the personal construction with \hoti\ as here. {They all are not} (\ouk eisin pantes\). Not just some, but all, as in 2:21; 3:5. These antichrists are thus revealed in their true light.

2:20 {Anointing} (\chrisma\). Old word for result (\mat\) and for the material, from \chri“, to anoint, perhaps suggested by the use of \antichristoi\ in verse 18. Christians are "anointed ones," \christoi\ in this sense, with which compare Ps 105:15: "Touch not my anointed ones" (\m^haps^sthe t^“n christ^“n mou\). These antichrists posed as the equals of or even superior to Christ himself. But followers of Christ do have "the oil of anointing" (\to elaion tou chrismatos\, Ex 29:7), the Holy Spirit. This word in the N.T. only here and verse 27. Later the term was applied to baptism after baptismal remission came to be taught (Tertullian, etc.). {From the Holy One} (\apo tou hagiou\). They receive this anointing of the Holy Spirit from the Anointed One, Jesus Christ (the Holy One). Cf. Joh 6:69; Ac 3:14. {And ye know all things} (\kai oidate panta\). But the best MSS. read \pantes\ rather than \panta\, "Ye all know it." This anointing is open to all Christians, not just a select few.

2:21 {I have not written} (\ouk egrapsa\). Not epistolary aorist (2:14), but a reference to what he has just said. {And because no lie is of the truth} (\kai hoti pfn pseudos ek t^s al^theias ouk estin\). Not certain whether \hoti\ here is causal (because) or declarative (that). Either makes sense. Note the idiomatic use of \ek\ and \pfn--ouk=ouden\ (no) as in verse 19.

2:22 {The liar} (\ho pseust^s\). The liar (with the article) _par excellence_. Rhetorical question to sharpen the point made already about lying in 1:6,10; 2:4,21. See 5:5 for a like rhetorical question. {But} (\ei m^). Except, if not. {That denieth that Jesus is the Christ} (\ho arnoumenos hoti I^sous ouk estin ho Christos\). Common Greek idiom for \ouk\ to appear after \arneomai\ like redundant \m^ in Lu 20:27; Heb 12:19. The old Latin retains _non_ here as old English did (Shakespeare, _Comedy of Errors_ IV. ii. 7, "He denied you had in him no right"). The Cerinthian Gnostics denied the identity of the man Jesus and Christ (an \aeon\, they held) like the modern Jesus or Christ controversy. {This is the antichrist} (\houtos estin ho antichristos\). The one just mentioned, Cerinthus himself in particular. {Even he that denieth the Father and the Son} (\ho arnoumenos ton patera kai ton huion\). This is the inevitable logic of such a rejection of the Son of God. Jesus had himself said this very same thing (Joh 5:23f.).

2:23 {Hath not the Father} (\oude ton patera echei\). "Not even does he have the Father" or God (2Jo 1:9). {He that confesseth the Son} (\ho homologⁿ ton huion\). Because the Son reveals the Father (Joh 1:18; 14:9). Our only approach to the Father is by the Son (Joh 14:6). Confession of Christ before men is a prerequisite for confession by Christ before the Father (Mt 10:32; Lu 12:8).

2:24 {As for you} (\humeis\). Emphatic proleptic position before the relative \ho\ and subject of \^kousate\, a familiar idiom in Joh 8:45; 10:29, etc. Here for emphatic contrast with the antichrists. See 1:1 for \ap' arch^s\ (from the beginning). {Let abide in you} (\en humin menet\). Present active imperative of \men\, to remain. Do not be carried away by the new-fangled Gnostic teaching.

2:25 {And this is the promise} (\kai haut^e estin h^e epaggelia\). See 1:5 for the same idiom with \aggelia\ (message). This is the only instance of \epaggelia\ in the Johannine writings. Here "the promise" is explained to be "the life eternal" (1:2). In Ac 1:4 the word is used for the coming of the Holy Spirit. {He promised} (\autos ep^eggeilato\). First aorist middle indicative of \epagell\, \Autos\ (he) is Christ as is seen in 3:3 by \ekeinos\.

2:26 {Concerning them that would lead you astray} (\peri tⁿ plan^{nt} ton humas\). "Concerning those that are trying to lead you astray" (conative use of the present active articular participle of \plana). See 1:8 for this verb. John is doing his part to rescue the sheep from the wolves, as Paul did (Ac 20:29).

2:27 {And as for you} (\kai humeis\). Prolepsis again as in verse 24. {Which ye received of him} (\ho elabete ap' autou\). Second aorist active indicative of \lamban\, a definite experience, this anointing (\chrisma\), from Christ himself as in verse 20. This Paraclete was promised by Christ (Joh 14:26; 16:13ff.) and came on the great Pentecost, as they knew, and in the experience of all who yielded themselves to the Holy Spirit. {That any one teach you} (\hina tis didaskⁱ humas\). Sub-final use of \hina\ and the present active subjunctive of \didask\, "that any one keep on teaching you." {Teacheth you} (\didaskei humas\). Present active indicative. The Holy Spirit was to bring all things to their remembrance (Joh 14:26) and to bear witness concerning Christ (Joh 15:26; 16:12-15). Yet they need to be reminded of what they already know to be "true" (al^thes) and "no lie" (ouk estin pseudos), according to John's habit of positive and negative (1:5). So he exhorts them to "abide in him" (menete en aut^i, imperative active, though same form as the indicative). Precisely so Jesus had urged that the disciples abide in him (Joh 15:4f.).

2:28 {And now} (kai nun). John tenderly repeats the exhortation, "keep on abiding in him." {If he shall be manifested} (ean phaner^th^i). Condition of third class with ean and first aorist passive subjunctive as in verse 19; Col 3:3. A clear reference to the second coming of Christ which may be at any time. {That we have boldness} (hina sch^men parr^sian). Purpose clause with hina and the ingressive second aorist active subjunctive of ech^s, "that we may get boldness." {And not be ashamed} (kai m^ aischunth^men). Likewise negative purpose (after John's fashion) with m^ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of aischun^s, to put to shame. {Before him} (ap' autou). "From him," as if shrinking away from Christ in guilty surprise. See 2Th 1:9 for this use of apo (from the face of the Lord).

2:29 {If ye know} (ean eid^te). Third-class condition again with ean and second perfect active subjunctive of oida. If ye know by intuitive or absolute knowledge that Christ (because of verse 28) is righteous, then "ye know" or "know ye" (gin^skete either indicative or imperative) by experimental knowledge (so gin^sk^s means in contrast with oida). {Is begotten} (gegenn^tai). Perfect passive indicative of genna^s, stands begotten, the second birth (regeneration) of Joh 3:3-8. {Of him} (ex autou). Plainly "of God" in verse 9 and so apparently here in spite of dikaiois referring to Christ. Doing righteousness is proof of the new birth.

3:1 {What manner of love} (\potapⁿ agapⁿ\). Qualitative interrogative as in 2Pe 3:11; Mt 8:27. Only here in John's writings. Originally of what country or race. {Hath bestowed} (\ded^{ken}\). Perfect active indicative of \did^{mi}\, state of completion, "the endowment of the receiver" (Vincent). {That we should be called} (\hina klth^{men}\). Sub-final use of \hina\ with the first aorist passive subjunctive of \kale^{ai}\, to call or name, as in Mt 2:23. {Children} (\tekna\). As in Joh 1:12 and with an allusion to \gegenn^{tai}\ in 2:29 in an effort "to restore the waning enthusiasm of his readers, and to recall them to their first love" (Brooke). {And such we are} (\kai esmen\). "And we are." A parenthetical reflection characteristic of John (\kai nun estin\ in Joh 5:25 and \kai ouk eisin\ in Re 2:2; 3:9) omitted by Textus Receptus, though, in the old MSS. {Because it knew him not} (\hoti ouk egn^{ai} auton\). Second aorist active indicative of \gin^{sk}\, precisely the argument in Joh 15:18f.

3:2 {Now} (\nun\). Without waiting for the \parousia\ or second coming. We have a present dignity and duty, though there is greater glory to come. {It is not yet made manifest} (\oup^{ai} ephaner^{ai} th\). First aorist passive indicative of \phanero^{ai}\. For the aorist indicative with \oup^{ai}\ with a future outlook Brooke notes Mr 11:2; 1Co 8:2; Heb 12:4; Re 17:10,12. {What we shall be} (\ti esometha\). Not \tines\ (who), but \ti\ (what) neuter singular predicate nominative. "This _what_ suggests something unspeakable, contained in the likeness of God" (Bengel). {If he shall be manifested} (\ean phaner^{ai} thⁱ\). As in 2:28, which see. The subject may be Christ as in verse 9, or the future manifestation just mentioned. Either makes sense, probably "it" here better than "he." {Like him} (\homoioi autⁱ\). \Autⁱ\ is associative instrumental case after \homoioi\. This is our destiny and glory (Ro 8:29), to be like Jesus who is like God (2Co 4:6). {We shall see him even as he is} (\opsometha auton kath^{ai} s estin\). Future middle indicative of \hora^{ai}\. The transforming power of this vision of Christ (1Co 13:12) is the consummation of the glorious process begun at the new birth (2Co 3:18).

3:3 {Set on him} (\ep' aut' i\). Resting upon (\epi\) with locative rather than \eis\, looking to, Ac 24:15. That is upon Christ (Brooke), upon God (D. Smith), upon God in Christ (Westcott). {Purifieth himself} (\hagnizei heauton\). Present active indicative of \hagniz'\, old verb, from \hagnos\ (pure from contamination), used of ceremonial purifications (Joh 11:55; Ac 21:24,26 as in Ex 19:10) and then of personal internal cleansing of heart (Jas 4:8), soul (1Pe 1:22), self (here). Cf. Php 2:12f. the work of both God and man. {As he is pure} (\kath' s ekeinos hagnos estin\). As in 2:6; 3:9 \ekeinos\ (emphatic demonstrative) refers to Christ. Christ can be termed \hagnos\ "in virtue of the perfection of his humanity" (Westcott). Our destiny is to be conformed to the image of God in Christ (Ro 8:29).

3:4 {Sin is lawlessness} (\h^ hamartia estin h^ anomia\). The article with both subject and predicate makes them coextensive and so interchangeable. Doing sin is the converse of doing righteousness (2:29). The present active participle (\poi' n\) means the habit of doing sin.

3:5 {He} (\ekeinos\). As in verse 3; Joh 1:18. {Was manifested} (\ephaner' th^ \). Same form as in verse 2, but here of the Incarnation as in Joh 21:1, not of the second coming (1Jo 2:28). {To take away sins} (\hina tas hamartias ar' i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \air'\ as in Joh 1:29. In Isa 53:11 we have \anapher'\ for bearing sins, but \air'\ properly means to lift up and carry away (Joh 2:16). So in Heb 10:4 we find \aphaire'\ and Heb 10:11 \periaire'\, to take away sins completely (the complete expiation wrought by Christ on Calvary). The plural \hamartias\ here, as in Col 1:14, not singular (collective sense) \hamartian\ as in Joh 1:29. {And in him is no sin} (\kai hamartia en aut' i ouk estin\). "And sin (the sinful principle) in him is not." As Jesus had claimed about himself (Joh 7:18; 8:46) and as is repeatedly stated in the N.T. (2Co 5:21; Heb 4:15; 7:26; 9:13).

3:6 {Sinneth not} (\ouch hamartanei\). Linear present (linear men' n\, keeps on abiding) active indicative of \hamartan'\, "does not keep on sinning." For \men'\ (abide) see 2:6; Joh 15:4-10. {Whosoever sinneth} (\ho hamartan' n\). Present (linear) active articular participle like \men' n\ above, "the one who keeps on sinning" (lives a life of sin, not mere occasional acts of sin as \hamart^ˆˈsas\, aorist active participle, would mean). {Hath not seen him} (\ouch he^ˆ“raken auton\). Perfect active indicative of \hora^ˆ\. The habit of sin is proof that one has not the vision or the knowledge (\egn^ˆ“ken\, perfect active also) of Christ. He means, of course, spiritual vision and spiritual knowledge, not the literal sense of \hora^ˆ\ in Joh 1:18; 20:29.

3:7 {Let no man lead you astray} (\m^ˆˈdeis planft^ˆ“humas\). Present active imperative of \plana^ˆ\, "let no one keep on leading you astray." See 1:8; 2:26. Break the spell of any Gnostic charmer. {He that doeth righteousness} (\ho poi^ˆ“n t^ˆn dikaio sun^ˆn\). "He that keeps on doing (present active participle of \poie^ˆ“\) righteousness." For this idiom with \poie^ˆ\ see 1:6; 3:4. {He} (\ekeinos\). Christ as in verse 5.

3:8 {He that doeth sin} (\ho poi^ˆ“n t^ˆn hamartian\). "He that keeps on doing sin" (the habit of sin). {Of the devil} (\ek tou diabolou\). In spiritual parentage as Jesus said of the Pharisees in Joh 8:44. When one acts like the devil he shows that he is not a true child of God. {Sinneth from the beginning} (\ap^ˆ arch^ˆs hamartanei\). Linear progressive present active indicative, "he has been sinning from the beginning" of his career as the devil. This is his normal life and those who imitate him become his spiritual children. {That he might destroy} (\hina lus^ˆi\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \lu^ˆ“\. This purpose (\eis touto\) Jesus had and has. There is eternal conflict, with final victory over Satan certain.

3:9 {Doeth no sin} (\hamartian ou poiei\). Linear present active indicative as in verse 4 like \hamartanei\ in verse 8. The child of God does not have the habit of sin. {His seed} (\sperma autou\). God's seed, "the divine principle of life" (Vincent). Cf. Joh 1. {And he cannot sin} (\kai ou dunatai hamartanein\). This is a wrong translation, for this English naturally means "and he cannot commit sin" as if it were \kai ou dunatai hamartein\ or \hamart^ˆsai\ (second aorist or first aorist active infinitive). The present active infinitive \hamartanein\ can only mean "and he cannot go on sinning," as is true of \hamartanei\ in verse 8 and \hamartan^ˆn\ in verse 6. For the aorist subjunctive to commit a sin see \hamart^ˆte\ and \hamart^ˆi\ in 2:1. A great deal of false theology has grown out of a misunderstanding of the tense of \hamartanein\ here. Paul has precisely John's idea in Ro 6:1 \epimen^ˆ“men t^ˆi hamartifi\ (shall we continue in sin, present active linear subjunctive) in contrast with \hamart^s“men\ in Ro 6:15 (shall we commit a sin, first aorist active subjunctive).

3:10 {In this} (\en tout“i\). As already shown. A life of sin is proof that one is a child of the devil and not of God. This is the line of cleavage that is obvious to all. See Joh 8:33-39 for the claim of the Pharisees to be the children of Abraham, whereas their conduct showed them to be children of the devil. This is not a popular note with an age that wishes to remove all distinctions between Christians and the world. {Doeth not righteousness} (\ho m^ poi“n dikaiosun^n\). Habit (linear present participle) again of not doing righteousness, as in verse 7 of doing it. Cf. \poiei\ and \m^ poi“n\ (doing and not doing) in Mt 7:24,26. {Neither} (\kai\). Literally, "and," but with the ellipsis of \ouk estin ek tou theou\ (is not of God). The addition here of this one item about not loving (\m^ agap“n\) one's brother is like Paul's summary in Ro 13:9, a striking illustration of the general principle just laid down and in accord with 2:9-11.

3:11 {Message} (\aggelia\). In N.T. only here and 1:5, but \epaggelia\ (promise) fifty-one times. {From the beginning} (\ap' arch^s\). See 1:1 for this phrase and 2:7 for the idea. They had the message of love for the brotherhood from the beginning of the gospel and it goes back to the time of Cain and Abel (verse 12). {That we should love one another} (\hina agap“men all^lous\). Sub-final clause (content of the \aggelia) with \hina\ and present active subjunctive. John repeats the message of 2:7f.

3:12 {Of the evil one} (\ek tou pon^rou\). Ablative case and the same for neuter and masculine singular, but verse 10 makes it clear that the reference is to the devil. {Slew} (\esphaxen\). First aorist active indicative of \sphaz“\, old verb, to slay, to butcher, to cut the throat (Latin _jugulare_) like an ox in the shambles, in N.T. only here and Rev. (Re 5:6,9,12, etc.). {Wherefore?} (\charin tinos; \). "For the sake of what?" Post-positive preposition (Eph 3:1,14) except here. The interpretation of the act of Cain (Ge 4:8ff.) is an addition to the narrative, but in accord with Heb 11:4. Jealousy led to murder.

3:13 {If} (\ei\). Common construction after \thaumaz“\ (wonder) rather than \hoti\ (that, because). Present imperative here with \m^\ means "cease wondering." Note \m^ thaumas^is\ (do not begin to wonder) in Joh 3:6 (an individual case). See this same condition and language in Joh 15:18.

3:14 {We know} (\h^meis oidamen\). Emphatic expression of \h^meis\ (we) in contrast to the unregenerate world, the Christian consciousness shared by writer and readers. {We have passed} (\metabeb^kamen\). Perfect active indicative of \metabain^, old compound to pass over from one place to another (Joh 7:3), to migrate, out of death into life. We have already done it while here on earth. {Because} (\hoti\). Proof of this transition, not the ground of it. {We love the brethren} (\agap^men tous adelphous\). Just this phrase (plural) here alone, but see 2:9 for the singular. {He that loveth not} (\ho m^agap^"n\). "The not loving man," general picture and picture of spiritual death.

3:15 {A murderer} (\anthr^poktonos\). Old compound (Euripides) from \anthr^pos\ (man) and \ktein^ (to kill), a man-killer, in N.T. only here and Joh 8:44 (of Satan). {No} (\pfs--ou\). According to current Hebraistic idiom= \oudeis\ as in 2:19,21. {Abiding} (\menousan\). Present active feminine accusative predicate participle of \men^, "a continuous power and a communicated gift" (Westcott).

3:16 {Know we} (\egn^kamen\). Perfect active indicative, "we have come to know and still know." See 2:3 for "hereby" (\en tout^i\). {Love} (\t^n agap^"n\). "The thing called love" (D. Smith). {He for us} (\ekeinos huper h^m^"n\). \Ekeinos\ as in 2:6; 3:3,5, \huper\ here alone in this Epistle, though common in John's Gospel (10:11,15; 11:50, etc.) and in 3Jo 1:7. {Laid down his life} (\t^n psuch^"n autou eth^ken\). First aorist active indicative of \tith^mi\, the very idiom used by Jesus of himself in Joh 10:11,17f. {We ought} (\h^meis opheilomen\). Emphatic \h^meis\ again. For \opheil^ see 2:6. Of course our laying down our lives for the brethren has no atoning value in our cases as in that of Christ, but is a supreme proof of one's love (Joh 13:37f.; 15:13), as often happens.

3:17 {Whoso hath} (\hos an ech^i\). Indefinite relative clause with modal \an\ with \hos\ and the present active subjunctive of \ech^". {The world's goods} (\ton bion tou kosmou\). "The living or livelihood (not \z^", the principle of life, and see 2:16 for \bios) of the world" (not in the sense of evil or wicked, but simply this mundane sphere). {Beholdeth} (\the“rei). Present active subjunctive of \the“re“, like \echei just before. {In need} (\chreian echonta). "Having need" (present active predicate participle of \ech“\, agreeing with \adelphon). See the vivid picture of a like case in Jas 2:15f. {Shutteth up} (\kleis^i). First aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \klei“, to close like the door, changed on purpose from present tense to aorist (graphic slamming the door of his compassion, \splugchna\, common in LXX and N.T. for the nobler viscera, the seat of the emotions, as in Php 2:11; Col 3:12). Only here in John. {How} (\p“s). Rhetorical question like that in Jas 2:16 (what is the use?). It is practical, not speculative, that counts in the hour of need.

3:18 {In word, neither with the tongue} (\log“i m^de t^i gl“ss^i). Either instrumental or locative makes sense. What John means is "not merely by word or by the tongue." He does not condemn kind words which are comforting and cheering, but warm words should be accompanied by warm deeds to make real "in deed and in truth" (\en erg“i kai al^theifi). Here is a case where actions do speak louder than mere words.

3:19 {Shall we know} (\gn“sometha). Future middle indicative of \gin“sk“, at any future emergency, we shall come to know by this (\en tout“i) "that we are of the truth" (\hoti ek t^s al^theias esmen). {Before him} (\emprosthen autou). In the very presence of God we shall have confident assurance (\peisomen t^n kardian h^m“n\, either we shall persuade our heart or shall assure our heart) because God understands us.

3:20 {Whereinsoever our heart condemn us} (\hoti ean katagin“sk^i h^m“n h^ kardia). A construction like \hoti an, whatever, in Joh 2:5; 14:13. \Katagin“sk“ occurs only three times in the N.T., here, verse 21; Ga 2:11. It means to know something against one, to condemn. {Because God is greater than our heart} (\hoti meiz“n estin t^s kardias h^m“n). Ablative \kardias after the comparative \meiz“n. {And knoweth all things} (\kai gin“skei panta). Just so Peter replied to Jesus in spite of his denials (Joh 21:17). God's omniscience is linked with his love and sympathy. God knows every secret in our hearts. This difficult passage strikes the very centre of Christian truth (Brooke).

katagin“sk^hi”). Condition of third class with \ean m^h\ and present active subjunctive. The converse of the preceding, but not a claim to sinlessness, but the consciousness of fellowship in God's presence. {Boldness toward God} (\parr^hsian pros ton theon\). Even in prayer (Heb 4:16). See also 2:28.

3:22 {Whatsoever we ask} (\ho ean ait“men”). Indefinite relative clause with modal \an\ and the present active subjunctive, like \hoti ean katagin“sk^hi” in verse 20. In form no limitations are placed here save that of complete fellowship with God, which means complete surrender of our will to that of God our Father. See the clear teaching of Jesus on this subject in Mr 11:24; Lu 11:9; Joh 14:12f.; 16:23 and his example (Mr 14:36; Mt 26:39; Lu 22:42). The answer may not always be in the form that we expect, but it will be better. {We receive of him} (\lambanomen ap' autou\). See 1:5 for \ap' autou\ (from him). {Because} (\hoti\). Twofold reason why we receive regularly (\lambanomen\) the answer to our prayers (1) "we keep" (\t^hroumen\, for which see 2:3) his commandments and (2) "we do" (\poioumen\, we practise regularly) "the things that are pleasing" (\ta aresta\, old verbal adjective from aresk“\, to please, with dative in Joh 8:29 with same phrase; Ac 12:3 and infinitive in Ac 6:2, only other N.T. examples) "in his sight" (\en“pion autou”, common late vernacular preposition in papyri, LXX, and in N.T., except Matthew and Mark, chiefly by Luke and in the Apocalypse), in God's eye, as in Heb 13:21.

3:23 {His commandment} (\h^h entol^h autou\). {That} (\hina\). Subfinal use of \hina\ in apposition with \entol^h\ (commandment) and explanatory of it, as in Joh 15:12 (\entol^h hina\). See Christ's summary of the commandments (Mr 12:28-31; Mt 22:34-40). So these two points here (1) {We should believe} (\pisteus“men”, first aorist active subjunctive according to B K L, though Aleph A C read the present subjunctive pisteu“men”) either in a crisis (aorist) or the continuous tenor (present) of our lives. The "name" of Jesus Christ here stands for all that he is, "a compressed creed" (Westcott) as in 1:3. Note dative \onomati\ here with \pisteu“\ as in 5:10, though \eis onoma\ (on the name) in 5:13; Joh 1:12; 2:23; 3:18. But (2) we should love one another" (\agap“men all^hlous”), as he has already urged (2:7f.; 3:11) and as he will repeat (4:7,11f.; 2Jo 1:5) as Jesus (even as he gave us commandment, that is Christ) had previously done (Joh 13:34; 15:12,17). There are frequent points of contact between this Epistle and the words of Jesus in Joh 13-17.

3:24 {And he in him} (\kai autos en aut“i). That is "God abides in him" as in 4:15. We abide in God and God abides in us through the Holy Spirit (Joh 14:10,17,23; 17:21). "Therefore let God be a home to thee, and be thou the home of God: abide in God, and let God abide in thee" (Bede). {By the Spirit} (\ek tou pneumatos). It is thus (by the Holy Spirit, first mention in this Epistle and "Holy" not used with "Spirit" in this Epistle or the Apocalypse) that we know that God abides in us. {Which} (\hou). Ablative case by attraction from accusative \ho (object of \ed“ken) to agree with \pneumatos as often, though not always. It is a pity that the grammatical gender (which) is retained here in the English instead of "whom," as it should be.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(1 John: Chapter 3)

4:1 {Beloved} (\agap^toi). Three times in this chapter (1,7,11) we have this tender address on love. {Believe not every spirit} (\m^panti pneumatisti pisteuete). "Stop believing," as some were clearly carried away by the spirits of error rampant among them, both Docetic and Cerinthian Gnostics. Credulity means gullibility and some believers fall easy victims to the latest fads in spiritualistic humbuggery. {Prove the spirits} (\dokimazete ta pneumata). Put them to the acid test of truth as the metallurgist does his metals. If it stands the test like a coin, it is acceptable (\dokimos, 2Co 10:18), otherwise it is rejected (\adokimos, 1Co 9:27; 2Co 13:5-7). {Many false prophets} (\polloi pseudoproph^tai). Jesus had warned people against them (Mt 7:15), even when they as false Christs work portents (Mt 24:11,24; Mr 13:22). It is an old story (Lu 6:26) and recurs again and again (Ac 13:6; Re 16:13; 19:20; 20:10) along with false teachers (2Pe 2:1). {Are gone out} (\exel^luthasin). Perfect active indicative of \exerchomai. Cf. aorist in 2:19. They are abroad always.

4:2 {Hereby know ye} (\en tout^i gin^skete). Either present active indicative or imperative. The test of "the Spirit of God" (\to pneuma tou theou) here alone in this Epistle, save verse 13. With the clamour of voices then and now this is important. The test (\en tout^i, as in 3:19) follows. {That Jesus Christ is come in the flesh} (\I^soun Christon en sarki el^luthota). The correct text (perfect active participle predicate accusative), not the infinitive (\el^luthenai, B Vg). The predicate participle (see Joh 9:22 for predicate accusative with \homologe^i) describes Jesus as already come in the flesh (his actual humanity, not a phantom body as the Docetic Gnostics held). See this same idiom in 2Jo 1:7 with \erchomenon (coming). A like test is proposed by Paul for confessing the deity of Jesus Christ in 1Co 12:3 and for the Incarnation and Resurrection of Jesus in Ro 10:6-10.

4:3 {Confesseth not} (\m^homologei). Indefinite relative clause with the subjective negative \m^i rather than the usual objective negative \ou (verse 6). It is seen also in 2Pe 1:9; Tit

1:11, a survival of the literary construction (Moulton, _Prolegomena_, p. 171). The Vulgate (along with Irenaeus, Tertullian, Augustine) reads _solvit_ (\luei) instead of \m^homologeì, which means "separates Jesus," apparently an allusion to the Cerinthian heresy (distinction between Jesus and Christ) as the clause before refers to the Docetic heresy. Many MSS. have here also \en sarki el^luthota repeated from preceding clause, but not A B Vg Cop. and not genuine. {The spirit of the antichrist} (\to tou antichristou). \Pneuma (spirit) not expressed, but clearly implied by the neuter singular article to. It is a repetition of the point about antichrists made in 2:18-25. {Whereof} (\ho). Accusative of person (grammatical neuter referring to \pneuma) with \akou^{ along with accusative of the thing (\hoti erchetai, as in 2:18, futuristic present middle indicative). Here the perfect active indicative (\ak^koate), while in 2:18 the aorist (\^kousate). {And now already} (\kai nun ^d^{). As in 2:18 also (many have come). "The prophecy had found fulfilment before the Church had looked for it" (Westcott). It is often so. For \^d^{ see Joh 4:35; 9:27.

4:4 {Have overcome them} (\nenik^kate autous). Perfect active indicative of \nika^{, calm confidence of final victory as in 2:13; Joh 16:33. The reference in \autous (them) is to the false prophets in 4:1. {Because} (\hoti). The reason for the victory lies in God, who abides in them (3:20,24; Joh 14:20; 15:4f.). God is greater than Satan, "he that is in the world" (\ho en t^i kosm^i), the prince of this world (Joh 12:31; 14:30), the god of this age (2Co 4:4), powerful as he seems.

4:5 {Of the world} (\ek tou kosmou). As Jesus is not and as the disciples are not (Joh 17:14ff.). {As of the world} (\ek tou kosmou). No "as" (\h^s), but that is the idea, for their talk proceeds from the world and wins a ready hearing. The false prophets and the world are in perfect unison.

4:6 {We} (\h^meis). In sharp contrast with the false prophets and the world. We are in tune with the Infinite God. Hence "he that knoweth God" (\ho gin^sk^{ n ton theon, present active articular participle, the one who keeps on getting acquainted with God, growing in his knowledge of God) "hears us" (\akouei h^m^{). This is one reason why sermons are dull (some actually are, others so to dull hearers) or inspiring. There is a touch of mysticism here, to be sure, but the heart of Christianity is mysticism (spiritual contact with God in Christ by the Holy Spirit). John states the same idea negatively by a relative clause parallel with the preceding articular participle, the negative with both clauses. John had felt the cold, indifferent, and hostile stare of the worldling as he preached Jesus. {By this} (ek toutou). "From this," deduction drawn from the preceding; only example in the Epistle for the common \en tout "i" as in 4:2. The power of recognition (gin "skomen", we know by personal experience) belongs to all believers (Westcott). There is no reason for Christians being duped by "the spirit of error" (to pneuma t's plan "s"), here alone in the N.T., though we have \pneumas in planois (misleading spirits) in 1Ti 4:1. Rejection of the truth may be due also to our not speaking the truth in love (Eph 4:15).

4:7 {Of God} (ek tou theou). Even human love comes from God, "a reflection of something in the Divine nature itself" (Brooke). John repeats the old commandment of 2:7f. Persistence in loving (present tense agap "men" indicative and agap "n" participle) is proof that one "has been begotten of God" (ek tou theou gegenn "tai" as in 2:29) and is acquainted with God. Otherwise mere claim to loving God accompanied by hating one's brother is a lie (2:9-11).

4:8 {He that loveth not} (ho m "agap" "n"). Present active articular participle of agapa " " "keeps on not loving." {Knoweth not God} (ouk egn "ton theon"). Timeless aorist active indicative of gin "sk", has no acquaintance with God, never did get acquainted with him. {God is love} (ho theos agap "estin"). Anarthrous predicate, not h "agap". John does not say that love is God, but only that God is love. The two terms are not interchangeable. God is also light (1:5) and spirit (Joh 4:24).

4:9 {Was manifested} (ephaner "th"). First aorist passive indicative of \phanero " ". The Incarnation as in 3:5. Subjective genitive as in 2:5. {In us} (en h "min"). In our case, not "among us" nor "to us." Cf. Ga 1:16. {Hath sent} (apestalken). Perfect active indicative of \apostell " ", as again in verse 14, the permanent mission of the Son, though in verse 10 the aorist \apesteilen occurs for the single event. See Joh 3:16 for this great idea. {His only-begotten Son} (ton huion autou ton monogen " "). "His Son the only-begotten" as in Joh 3:16. John applies \monogen "s" to Jesus alone (Joh

1:14,18), but Luke (Lu 7:12; 8:42; 9:38) to others. Jesus alone completely reproduces the nature and character of God (Brooke). {That we might live through him} (\hina z^s“men di' autou\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist (ingressive, get life) active subjunctive of \za“\, "Through him" is through Christ, who is the life (Joh 14:6). Christ also lives in us (Ga 2:20). This life begins here and now.

4:10 {Not that} (\ouch hoti\) {--but that} (\all' hoti\). Sharp contrast as in Joh 7:22; 2Co 7:9; Php 4:17. {We loved} (\^gap^samen\). First aorist active indicative, but B reads \^gap^kamen\ (perfect active, we have loved). {He} (\autos\). Emphatic nominative (God). {To be the propitiation} (\hilasmon\). Merely predicate accusative in apposition with \huion\ (Son). For the word see 2:2; Ro 3:25 for \hilast^rion\, and for \peri\ see also 2:2.

4:11 {If God so loved us} (\ei hout“s ho theos ^gap^sen h^mas\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and the first aorist active indicative. As in Joh 3:16, so here \hout“s\ emphasises the manifestation of God's love both in its manner and in its extent (Ro 8:32). {Ought} (\opheilomen\). As in 2:6. _Noblesse oblige_. "Keep on loving," (\agapfin\) as in 3:11.

4:12 {No one hath beheld God at any time} (\theon oudeis p“pote tetheftai\). Perfect middle indicative of \theaomai\ (Joh 1:14). Almost the very words of Joh 1:18 \theon oudeis p“pote he“raken\ (instead of \tetheftai\). {If we love one another} (\ean agap“men all^lous\). Third-class condition with \ean\ and the present active subjunctive, "if we keep on loving one another." {God abideth in us} (\ho theos en h^min menei\). Else we cannot go on loving one another. {His love} (\h^agap^ autou\). More than merely subjective or objective (2:5; 4:9). "Mutual love is a sign of the indwelling of God in men" (Brooke). {Is perfected} (\tetelei“men^estin\). Periphrastic (see usual form \tetelei“tai\ in 2:5; 4:17) perfect passive indicative of \teleio“\ (cf. 1:4). See verse 18 for "perfect love."

4:13 {Hereby know we} (\en tout“i gin“skomen\). The Christian's consciousness of the fact of God dwelling in him is due to the Spirit of God whom God has given (\ded“ken\, perfect active indicative here, though the aorist \ed“ken\ in 3:24). This gift of God is proof of our fellowship with God.

4:14 {We have beheld} (\tethef^metha\). Perfect middle of \theaomai\ as in verse 12, though the aorist in 1:1; Joh 1:14 (\ethefsametha\). John is qualified to bear witness (\marturoumen\ as in 1:2) as Jesus had charged the disciples to do (Ac 1:8). {Hath sent} (\apestalken\). As in verse 9, though \apesteilen\ in verse 10. {To be the Saviour of the world} (\s“t^{ra} tou kosmou\). Predicate accusative of \s“t^r\ (Saviour), like \hilasmon\ in verse 10. This very phrase occurs elsewhere only in Joh 4:42 as the confession of the Samaritans, but the idea is in Joh 3:17.

4:15 {Whosoever shall confess} (\hos ean homolog^si\). Indefinite relative clause with modal \ean\ (=an) and the first aorist active subjunctive, "whoever confesses." See 2:23; 4:2f. for \homologe“\ {That} (\hoti\). Object clause (indirect assertion) after \homologe“\ This confession of the deity of Jesus Christ implies surrender and obedience also, not mere lip service (cf. 1Co 12:3; Ro 10:6-12). This confession is proof (if genuine) of the fellowship with God (1:3f.; 3:24).

4:16 {We know} (\egn“kamen\). Perfect active indicative, "we have come to know and still know" as in Joh 6:9, only there order is changed (\pepisteukamen\ coming before \egn“kamen\). Confession (\homologe“\ follows experimental knowledge (\gin“sk“\ and confident trust (\pisteu“\). Believers are the sphere (\en h^{min}\, in our case) in which the love of God operates (Westcott). See Joh 13:35 for "having love." {God is love} (\ho theos agap^e estin\). Repeated from verse 8. So he gathers up the whole argument that one who is abiding in love is abiding in God and shows that God is abiding in him. Thoroughly Johannine style.

4:17 {Herein} (\en tout“i\). It is not clear whether the \hina\ clause (sub-final use) is in apposition with \en tout“i\ as in Joh 15:8 or the \hoti\ clause (because) with the \hina\ clause as parenthesis. Either makes sense. Westcott argues for the latter idea, which is reinforced by the preceding sentence. {With us} (\meth' h^m“n\). Construed with the verb \tetelei“tai\ (is perfected). In contrast to \en h^{min}\ (verses 12,16), emphasising cooperation. "God works with man" (Westcott). For boldness (\parr^{sian}\) in the day of judgment (only here with both articles, but often with no articles as in 2Pe 2:9) see 2:28. {As he is} (\kath“s ekeinos estin\). That is Christ as in 2:6; 3:3,5,7,16. Same tense (present) as in 3:7. "Love is a heavenly visitant" (David Smith). We are in this world to manifest Christ.

4:18 {Fear} (\phobos\). Like a bond-slave (Ro 8:15), not the reverence of a son (\eulabeia\, Heb 5:7f.) or the obedience to a father (\en phob“i\, 1Pe 1:17). This kind of dread is the opposite of \parr^sia\ (boldness). {Perfect love} (\h^ teleia agap^). There is such a thing, perfect because it has been perfected (verses 12,17). Cf. Jas 1:4. {Casteth out fear} (\ex“ ballei ton phobon\). "Drives fear out" so that it does not exist in real love. See \ekball“ ex“\ in Joh 6:37; 9:34f.; 12:31; 15:6 to turn out-of-doors, a powerful metaphor. Perfect love harbours no suspicion and no dread (1Co 13). {Hath punishment} (\kolasin echei\). Old word, in N.T. only here and Mt 25:46. \Tim“ria\ has only the idea of penalty, \kolasis\ has also that of discipline, while \paideia\ has that of chastisement (Heb 12:7). The one who still dreads (\phoboumenos\) has not been made perfect in love (\ou tetelei“tai\). Bengel graphically describes different types of men: "sine timore et amore; cum timore sine amore; cum timore et amore; sine timore cum amore."

4:19 {He first} (\autos pr“tos\). Note \pr“tos\ (nominative), not \pr“ton\, as in Joh 20:4,8. God loved us {before} we loved him (Joh 3:16). Our love is in response to his love for us. \Agap“men\ is indicative (we love), not subjunctive (let us love) of the same form. There is no object expressed here.

4:20 {If a man say} (\ean tis eip^i\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and second aorist active subjunctive. Suppose one say. Cf. 1:6. {I love God} (\Agap“ ton theon\). Quoting an imaginary disputant as in 2:4. {And hateth} (\kai misei\). Continuation of the same condition with \ean\ and the present active subjunctive, "and keep on hating." See 2:9; 3:15 for use of \mise“\ (hate) with \adelphos\ (brother). A liar (\pseust^s\). Blunt and to the point as in 1:10; 2:4. {That loveth not} (\ho m^ agap“n\). "The one who does not keep on loving" (present active negative articular participle). {Hath seen} (\he“raken\). Perfect active indicative of \hora“\, the form in Joh 1:18 used of seeing God. {Cannot love} (\ou dunatai agapfin\). "Is not able to go on loving," with which compare 2:9, \ou dunatai hamartanein\ (is not able to go on sinning). The best MSS. do not have \p“s\ (how) here.

4:21 {That} (\hina\). Sub-final object clause in apposition with \entol^n\ as in Joh 13:34; 15:13. {From him} (\ap' autou\).

Either God or Christ. See Mr 12:29-31 for this old commandment (2:7f.).

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(1 John: Chapter 4)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

5:1 {That Jesus is the Christ} (\hoti I^sous estin ho Christos). The Cerinthian antichrist denies the identity of Jesus and Christ (2:22). Hence John insists on this form of faith (\pisteu^n here in the full sense, stronger than in 3:23; 4:16, seen also in \pistis\ in verse 4, where English and Latin fall down in having to use another word for the verb) as he does in verse 5 and in accord with the purpose of John's Gospel (20:31). Nothing less will satisfy John, not merely intellectual conviction, but full surrender to Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour. "The Divine Begetting is the antecedent, not the consequent of the believing" (Law). For "is begotten of God" (\ek tou theou gegenn^tai) see 2:29; 3:9; 4:7; 5:4,18. John appeals here to family relationship and family love. {Him that begat} (\ton genn^santa). First aorist active articular participle of \genna^\, to beget, the Father (our heavenly Father). {Him also that is begotten of him} (\ton gegenn^menon ex autou). Perfect passive articular participle of \genna^\, the brother or sister by the same father. So then we prove our love for the common Father by our conduct towards our brothers and sisters in Christ.

5:2 {Hereby} (\en tout^i). John's usual phrase for the test of the sincerity of our love. "The love of God and the love of the brethren do in fact include each the other" (Westcott). Each is a test of the other. So put 3:14 with 5:2. {When} (\hotan). "Whenever" indefinite temporal clause with \hotan and the present active subjunctive (the same form \agap^men\ as the indicative with \hoti\ (that) just before, "whenever we keep on loving God." {And do} (\kai poi^men) "and whenever we keep on doing (present active subjunctive of \poie^) his commandments." See 1:6 for "doing the truth."

5:3 {This} (\haut^) {--that} (\hina). Explanatory use of \hina with \haut^, as in Joh 17:3, to show what "the love of God" (4:9,12) in the objective sense is, not mere declamatory boasting (4:20), but obedience to God's commands, "that we keep on keeping (present active subjunctive as in 2:3) his commandments." This is the supreme test. {Are not grievous} (\bareiai ouk eisin). "Not heavy," the adjective in Mt 23:4

with \phortia\ (burdens), with \lupoi\ (wolves) in Ac 20:29, of Paul's letters in 2Co 10:10, of the charges against Paul in Ac 25:7. Love for God lightens his commands.

5:4 {For} (\hoti\). The reason why God's commandments are not heavy is the power that comes with the new birth from God.

{Whatsoever is begotten of God} (\pfn to gegenn^menon ek tou theou\). Neuter singular perfect passive participle of \genna“\ rather than the masculine singular (verse 1) to express sharply the universality of the principle (Rothe) as in Joh 3:6,8;

6:37,39. {Overcometh the world} (\nikfi ton kosmon\). Present active indicative of \nika“\, a continuous victory because a continuous struggle, "keeps on conquering the world" ("the sum of all the forces antagonistic to the spiritual life," D. Smith).

{This is the victory} (\haut^ estin h^ nik^ \). For this form of expression see 1:5; Joh 1:19. \Nik^ (victory, cf. \nika“\), old word, here alone in N.T., but the later form \nikos\ in Mt 12:20; 1Co 15:54f.,57. {That overcometh} (\h^ nik^sasa\). First aorist active articular participle of \nika“\. The English cannot reproduce the play on the word here. The aorist tense singles out an individual experience when one believed or when one met temptation with victory. Jesus won the victory over the world (Joh 16:33) and God in us (1Jo 4:4) gives us the victory.

{Even our faith} (\h^ pistis h^m“n\). The only instance of \pistis\ in the Johannine Epistles (not in John's Gospel, though in the Apocalypse). It is our faith in Jesus Christ as shown by our confession (verse 1) and by our life (verse 2).

5:5 {And who is he that overcometh?} (\tis estin de ho nik“n?\).

Not a mere rhetorical question (2:22), but an appeal to experience and fact. Note the present active articular participle (\nik“n\ like \nikfi\ (present active indicative in verse 4), "the one who keeps on conquering the world." See 1Co 15:57 for the same note of victory (\nikos\ through Christ. See verse 1 for \ho pisteu“n\ (the one who believes) as here. {Jesus is the Son of God} (\I^sous estin ho huios tou theou\). As in verse 1 save that here \ho huios tou theou\ in place of \Christos\ and see both in 2:22f. Here there is sharp antithesis between "Jesus" (humanity) and "the Son of God" (deity) united in the one personality.

5:6 {This} (\houtos\). Jesus the Son of God (verse 5). {He that came} (\ho elth“n\). Second aorist active articular participle of \erchomai\, referring to the Incarnation as a definite historic event, the preexistent Son of God "sent from heaven to do God's will" (Brooke). {By water and blood} (\di' hudatos kai haimatos\). Accompanied by (\dia\ used with the genitive both as instrument and accompaniment, as in Ga 5:13) water (as at the baptism) and blood (as on the Cross). These two incidents in the Incarnation are singled out because at the baptism Jesus was formally set apart to his Messianic work by the coming of the Holy Spirit upon him and by the Father's audible witness, and because at the Cross his work reached its culmination ("It is finished," Jesus said). There are other theories that do not accord with the language and the facts. It is true that at the Cross both water and blood came out of the side of Jesus when pierced by the soldier, as John bore witness (Joh 19:34), a complete refutation of the Docetic denial of an actual human body for Jesus and of the Cerinthian distinction between Jesus and Christ. There is thus a threefold witness to the fact of the Incarnation, but he repeats the twofold witness before giving the third. The repetition of both preposition (\en\ this time rather than \dia\) and the article (\t"i\ locative case) argues for two separate events with particular emphasis on the blood ("not only" \ouk monon\, "but" \all\) which the Gnostics made light of or even denied. {It is the Spirit that beareth witness} (\to pneuma estin to marturoun\). Present active articular participle of \marture" with article with both subject and predicate, and so interchangeable as in 3:4. The Holy Spirit is the third and the chief witness at the baptism of Jesus and all through his ministry. {Because} (\hoti\). Or declarative "that." Either makes sense. In Joh 15:26 Jesus spoke of "the Spirit of truth" (whose characteristic is truth). Here John identifies the Spirit with truth as Jesus said of himself (Joh 14:6) without denying personality for the Holy Spirit.

5:7 {For there are three who bear witness} (\hoti treis eisin hoi martuountes\). At this point the Latin Vulgate gives the words in the Textus Receptus, found in no Greek MS. save two late cursives (162 in the Vatican Library of the fifteenth century, 34 of the sixteenth century in Trinity College, Dublin). Jerome did not have it. Cyprian applies the language of the Trinity and Priscillian has it. Erasmus did not have it in his first edition, but rashly offered to insert it if a single Greek MS. had it and 34 was produced with the insertion, as if made to order. The spurious addition is: \en t"i ouran"i ho pat^r, ho logos kai to hagian pneuma kai houtoi hoi treis hen eisin kai treis eisin hoi marturountes en tîi gî\ (in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth). The last clause belongs to verse 8. The fact and the doctrine of the Trinity do not depend on this spurious addition. Some Latin scribe caught up Cyprian's exegesis and wrote it on the margin of his text, and so it got into the Vulgate and finally into the Textus Receptus by the stupidity of Erasmus.

5:8 {The Spirit and the water and the blood} (\to pneuma kai to hud' r kai to haima\). The same three witnesses of verses 6,7 repeated with the Spirit first. {The three} (\hoi treis\). The resumptive article. {Agree in one} (\eis to hen eisin\). "Are for the one thing," to bring us to faith in Jesus as the Incarnate Son of God, the very purpose for which John wrote his Gospel (20:31).

5:9 {If we receive} (\ei lambanomen\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and the present active indicative, assumed as true. The conditions for a legally valid witness are laid down in De 19:15 (cf. Mt 18:16; Joh 8:17f.; 10:25; 2Co 13:1). {Greater} (\meiz' n\). Comparative of \megas\, because God is always true. {For} (\hoti\). So it applies to this case. {That} (\hoti\). Thus taken in the declarative sense (the fact that) as in Joh 3:19, though it can be causal (because) or indefinite relative with \memartur'ken\ (what he hath testified, perfect active indicative of \marture'\', as in Joh 1:32; 4:44, etc.), a harsh construction here because of \marturia\, though some MSS. do read \hen\ to agree with it (cf. verse 10). See \hoti ean\ in 3:20 for that idiom. Westcott notes the Trinity in verses 6-9: the Son comes, the Spirit witnesses, the Father has witnessed.

5:10 {Believeth on} (\pisteu' n eis\). John draws a distinction between "not believing God" (\m^ pisteu' n t' i the' i\ in next clause, the testimony of God about his Son, and surrender to and reliance on the Son as here (\eis\ and the accusative). See the same distinction less clearly drawn in Joh 6:30f. See also \eis tî n marturian\ after \pepisteuken\ in this same verse and Joh 2:23. {In him} (\en haut' i\). "In himself," though the evidence is not decisive between \haut' i\ and \aut' i\). {Hath made} (\pepoi' ken\). Perfect active indicative of \poie'\' like \memartur'ken\ and \pepisteuken\, permanent state. {A liar} (\pseust' n\). As in 1:10, which see. {Because he hath not believed} (\hoti ou pepisteuken\). Actual negative reason with negative \ou\, not the subjective reason as in Joh 3:18, where we have \hoti m^ pepisteuken\). The subjective negative is regular with \ho m^ pisteu“n\). Relative clause here repeats close of verse 9.

5:11 {That God gave} (\hoti ed“ken ho theos\). Declarative \hoti\ in apposition with \marturia\ as in verse 14; Joh 3:19. Note aorist active indicative \ed“ken\ (from \did“mi\) as in 3:23f., the great historic fact of the Incarnation (Joh 3:16), but the perfect \ded“ken\ in 1Jo 3:1 to emphasize the abiding presence of God's love. {Eternal life} (\z““n ai“nion\). Anarthrous emphasizing quality, but with the article in 1:2. {In his Son} (\en t“i hui“i autou\). This life and the witness also. This is why Jesus who is life (Joh 14:6) came to give us abundant life (Joh 10:10).

5:12 {Hath the life} (\echei t“n z““n\). The life which God gave (verse 11). This is the position of Jesus himself (Joh 5:24; 14:6).

5:13 {I have written} (\egrapsa\). Not epistolary aorist, but refers to verses 1-12 of this Epistle as in 2:26 to the preceding verses. {That ye may know} (\hina eid“te\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second perfect active subjunctive of \oida\, to know with settled intuitive knowledge. He wishes them to have eternal life in Christ (Joh 20:31) and to know that they have it, but not with flippant superficiality (2:3ff.). {Unto you that believe on} (\tois pisteuousin eis\). Dative of the articular present active participle of \pisteu“\ and \eis\ as in verse 10. For this use of \onoma\ (name) with \pisteu“\ see 3:23; Joh 2:23.

5:14 {Toward him} (\pros auton\). Fellowship with (\pros\, face to face) Christ. For boldness see 2:28. {That} (\hoti\). Declarative again, as in verse 11. {If we ask anything} (\ean ti ait“metha\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and present middle (indirect) subjunctive (personal interest as in Jas 4:3, though the point is not to be pressed too far, for see Mt 20:20,22; Joh 16:24,26). {According to his will} (\kata to thel“ma autou\). This is the secret in all prayer, even in the case of Jesus himself. For the phrase see 1Pe 4:19; Ga 1:4; Eph 1:5,11. {He heareth us} (\akouei h“m“n\). Even when God does not give us what we ask, in particular then (Heb 5:7f.).

5:15 {And if we know} (\kai ean oidamen\). Condition of first class with \ean\ (usually \ei\)) and the perfect active indicative, assumed as true. See 1Th 3:8; Ac 8:31 for the indicative with \ean\ as in the papyri. "An amplification of the second limitation" (D. Smith). {Whatsoever we ask} (\ho ean ait^{ta}metha\). Indefinite relative clause with modal \ean\ (=an\)) and the present middle (as for ourselves) subjunctive of \aite^{ta}\. This clause, like \h^{me}n\, is also the object of \akouei\. {We know that we have} (\oidamen hoti echomen\). Repetition of \oidamen\, the confidence of possession by anticipation. {The petitions} (\ta ait^{ta}mata\). Old word, from \aite^{ta}\, requests, here only in John, elsewhere in N.T. Lu 23:24; Php 4:6. We have the answer already as in Mr 11:24. {We have asked} (\it^{ta}kamen\). Perfect active indicative of \aite^{ta}\, the asking abiding.

5:16 {If any man see} (\ean tis id^{ei}\). Third-class condition with \ean\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \eidon\ (\hora^{ei}\). {Sinning a sin} (\hamartanonta hamartian\). Present active predicate (supplementary) participle agreeing with \adelphon\ and with cognate accusative \hamartian\. {Not unto death} (\m^{en}pros thanaton\). Repeated again with \hamartanousin\ and in contrast with \hamartia pros thanaton\ (sin unto death). Most sins are not mortal sins, but clearly John conceives of a sin that is deadly enough to be called "unto death." This distinction is common in the rabbinic writings and in Nu 18:22 the LXX has \labein hamartian thanat^{os}phoron\ "to incur a death-bearing sin" as many crimes then and now bear the death penalty. There is a distinction in Heb 10:26 between sinning wilfully after full knowledge and sins of ignorance (Heb 5:2). Jesus spoke of the unpardonable sin (Mr 3:29; Mt 12:32; Lu 12:10), which was attributing to the devil the manifest work of the Holy Spirit. It is possible that John has this idea in mind when he applies it to those who reject Jesus Christ as God's Son and set themselves up as antichrists. {Concerning this} (\peri ekein^{ta}\). This sin unto death. {That he should make request} (\hina er^{et}ta^{is}i\). Sub-final use of \hina\ with the first aorist active subjunctive of \er^{et}ta^{is}\, used here as in Joh 17:15,20 (and often) for request rather than for question. John does not forbid praying for such cases; he simply does not command prayer for them. He leaves them to God.

5:17 {All unrighteousness is sin} (\pfsa adikia hamartia estin\).

Unrighteousness is one manifestation of sin as lawlessness (3:4) is another (Brooke). The world today takes sin too lightly, even jokingly as a mere animal inheritance. Sin is a terrible reality, but there is no cause for despair. Sin not unto death can be overcome in Christ.

5:18 {We know} (\oidamen\). As in 3:2,14; 5:15,19,20. He has "ye know" in 2:20; 3:5,15. {Sinneth not} (\ouch hamartanei\). Lineal present active indicative, "does not keep on sinning," as he has already shown in 3:4-10. {He that was begotten of God} (\ho genn^{theis} ek tou theou\). First aorist passive articular participle referring to Christ, if the reading of A B is correct (\t^{rei} auton\, not \t^{rei} heauton\). It is Christ who keeps the one begotten of God (\gegenn^{menos} ek tou theou\ as in 3:9 and so different from \ho genn^{theis} here). It is a difficult phrase, but this is probably the idea. Jesus (Joh 18:37) uses \gegenn^{mai}\ of himself and uses also \t^{re}\ of keeping the disciples (Joh 17:12,15; Re 3:10). {The evil one} (\ho pon^{ros}\). Masculine and personal as in 2:13, not neuter, and probably Satan as in Mt 6:13, not just any evil man. {Touchest him not} (\ouch haptetai autou\). Present middle indicative of \hapt^{ai}\, elsewhere in John only Joh 20:17. It means to lay hold of or to grasp rather than a mere superficial touch (\thiggan^{ai}\, both in Col 2:21). Here the idea is to touch to harm. The devil cannot snatch such a man from Christ (Joh 6:38f.).

5:19 {Of God} (\ek tou theou\). See 3:10; 4:6 for this idiom. {Lieth in the evil one} (\en tⁱ pon^r i keitai\). Present middle indicative of the defective verb \keimai\, to lie, as in Lu 2:12. \Pon^r i\ is masculine, like \ho pon^{ros}\ in verse 18. This is a terrible picture of the Graeco-Roman world of the first century A.D., which is confirmed by Paul in Romans 1 and 2 and by Horace, Seneca, Juvenal, Tacitus.

5:20 {Is come} (\h^{kei}\). Present active indicative, but the root has a perfect sense, "has come." See \ex^{lthon} kai h^k\ in Joh 8:42. {An understanding} (\dianoian\). Here alone in John's writings, but in Paul (Eph 4:18) and Peter (IPe 1:13). John does not use \gn^{sis}\ (knowledge) and \nous\ (mind) only in Re 13:18; 17:9. {That we know} (\hina gin^{skomen}\). Result clause with \hina\ and the present active indicative, as is common with \hina\ and the future indicative (Joh 7:3). It is possible that here \o\ was pronounced \^o\ as a subjunctive, but many old MSS. have \hina gin^{skousin}\ (plainly indicative) in Joh 17:3, and in many other places in the N.T. the present indicative with \hina\ occurs as a variant reading as in Joh 5:20. {Him that is true} (\ton al^{thin}\). That is, God. Cf. 1:8. {In him that is true} (\en tⁱ al^{thin}“i\). In God in contrast with the world "in the evil one" (verse 19). See Joh 17:3. {Even in his Son Jesus Christ} (\en tⁱ hui“i autou I^{sou} Christ“i\). The \autou\ refers clearly to \en tⁱ al^{thin}“i\ (God). Hence this clause is not in apposition with the preceding, but an explanation as to how we are "in the True One" by being "in his Son Jesus Christ." {This} (\houtos\). Grammatically \houtos\ may refer to Jesus Christ or to "the True One." It is a bit tautological to refer it to God, but that is probably correct, God in Christ, at any rate. God is eternal life (Joh 5:26) and he gives it to us through Christ.

5:21 {Yourselves} (\heauta\). Neuter plural reflexive because of \tekna\. The active voice \phulassete\ with the reflexive accents the need of effort on their part. Idolatry was everywhere and the peril was great. See Ac 7:41: 1Th 1:9 for this word.

1:1 {And her children} (\kai tois teknois aut^s\). As with \eklekt^ kuria\, so here \tekna\ may be understood either literally as in 1Ti 3:4, or spiritually, as in Ga 4:19,25; 1Ti 1:2. For the spiritual sense in \tekna\ see 1Jo 2:1,12. {Whom} (\hous\). Masculine accusative plural, though \teknois\ is neuter plural (dative), construction according to sense, not according to grammatical gender, "embracing the mother and the children of both sexes" (Vincent). See thus \hous\ in Ga 4:19. {I} (\Eg^). Though \ho presbuteros\ is third person, he passes at once after the Greek idiom to the first and there is also special emphasis here in the use of \agap^ with the addition of \en al^theifi\ (in truth, in the highest sphere, as in Joh 17:19; 3Jo 1:1) and \ouk eg^ monos\ (not I only, "not I alone"). Brooke argues that this language is unsuitable if to a single family and not to a church. But Paul employs this very phrase in sending greetings to Prisca and Aquila (Ro 16:4). {That know} (\hoi egn^kotes\). Perfect active articular participle of \gin^sk^, "those that have come to know and still know."

1:2 {For the truth's sake} (\dia t^n al^theian\). Repetition of the word, one of which John is very fond (1Jo 1:6, "the truth, as revealed by the Christ, and gradually unfolded by the Spirit, who is truth" (Brooke). {Which abideth in us} (\t^n menousan en h^min\). See Joh 17:19 for "sanctified in truth" and 1Jo 2:6 for abiding in Christ, and so it includes all who are in Christ. {It shall be with us} (\meth' h^m^ n estai\). Confident assertion, not a mere wish. Note the order of the words, "With us it shall be" (\estai\ future middle of \eimi\).

1:3 {Shall be with us} (\estai meth' h^m^ n\). He picks up the words before in reverse order. Future indicative here, not a wish with the optative (\eie\ as we have in 1Pe 1:2; 2Pe 1:2. The salutation is like that in the Pastoral Epistles: "\Charis\, the wellspring in the heart of God; \eleos\, its outpourings; \eir^n^, its blessed effect" (David Smith). {And from Jesus Christ} (\kai para I^sou Christou\). The repetition of \para\ (with the ablative) is unique. "It serves to bring out distinctly the twofold personal relation of man to the Father and to the Son" (Westcott). "The Fatherhood of God, as revealed by one who being His Son _can_ reveal the Father, and who as man (I^{sou}) can make him known to men" (Brooke).

1:4 {I rejoice} (lecharⁿ). Second aorist passive of \chair“\ as in 3Jo 1:3, "of a glad surprise" (D. Smith), as in Mr 14:11, over the discovery about the blessing of their godly home on these lads. {Greatly} (lian). Only here and 3Jo 1:3 in John's writings. {I have found} (heur^{ka}). Perfect active indicative of \heurisk“\ as in Joh 1:41, our "eureka," here with its usual force, a continued discovery. "He sits down at once and writes to Kyria. How glad she would be that her lads, far away in the great city, were true to their early faith" (David Smith). {Certain of thy children} (ek tⁿ teknⁿ). No \tinas\ as one would expect before \ek\, a not infrequent idiom in the N.T. (Joh 16:17). {Walking} (peripatountas). Present active accusative supplementary participle agreeing with \tinas\ understood. Probably members of the church off here in Ephesus. {In truth} (en al^{theifi}). As in verse 1; 3Jo 1:4. {We received} (elabomen). Second aorist active (possibly, though not certainly, literary plural) of \lamban“\ . This very idiom (entolⁿ lambanⁿ) in Joh 10:18; Ac 17:15; Co 4:10. Perhaps the reference here is to 1Jo 2:7f.; 3:23.

1:5 {Beseech} (er^t). For pray as in 1Jo 5:16. {Lady} (kuria). Vocative case and in the same sense as in 1. {As though I wrote} (h^s graphⁿ). Common idiom \h^s\ with the participle (present active) for the alleged reason. {New} (kainⁿ). As in 1Jo 2:7f., which see. {We had} (eichamen). Imperfect active (late -a) form like eichan in Mr 8:7 of \ech“\ and note \eichete\ with \ap' arch^s\ in 1Jo 2:7. Not literary plural, John identifying all Christians with himself in this blessing. {That we love one another} (hina agapⁿ men all^{lous}). Either a final clause after \er^t“\ as in Joh 17:15 or an object clause in apposition with \entolⁿ\, like 1Jo 2:27; 3:23 and like verse 6.

1:6 {Love} (h^{agap}). The love just mentioned. {That we should walk} (hina peripatⁿ men). Object clause in nominative case in apposition with \agapⁿ\, with \hina\ and the present active subjunctive of \peripate“\, "that we keep on walking." {The commandment} (h^{entol}). The one just mentioned with the same construction with \hina\ as in 1Jo 3:23. John changes from the first person plural to the second (kousate as in 1Jo 2:7, \peripat^{te}\) as in 1Jo 2:5,7. {In it} (\en autⁱ\). Either to \al^{theifi}\ (truth) of verse 4, \agap[^]\ of this verse, or \entol[^]\ of this verse. Either makes good sense, probably "in love." With \peripate[^]\ (walk) we have often \en\ (1Jo 1:7,11, etc.) or \kata\ (according to) as in Mr 7:5; 1Co 3:3; 2Co 10:2, etc.

1:7 {Deceivers} (\planoi\). Late adjective (Diodorus, Josephus) meaning wandering, roving (1Ti 4:1). As a substantive in N.T. of Jesus (Mt 27:63), of Paul (2Co 6:8), and here. See the verb (\t[^]n planont[^]n humfs\ in 1Jo 2:26 of the Gnostic deceivers as here and also of Jesus (Joh 7:12). Cf. 1Jo 1:8. {Are gone forth} (\ex[^]lthan\, alpha ending). Second aorist active indicative of \exerchomai\, perhaps an allusion to the crisis when they left the churches (1Jo 2:19, same form). {Even they that confess not} (\hoi m[^] homologountes\). "The ones not confessing" (\m[^]\ regular negative with the participle). The articular participle describes the deceivers (\planoi\). {That Jesus Christ cometh in the flesh} (\I[^]soun Christon erchomenon en sarki\). "Jesus Christ coming in the flesh." Present middle participle of \erchomai\ treating the Incarnation as a continuing fact which the Docetic Gnostics flatly denied. In 1Jo 4:2 we have \el[^]luthota\ (perfect active participle) in this same construction with \homologe[^]\, because there the reference is to the definite historical fact of the Incarnation. There is no allusion here to the second coming of Christ. {This} (\houtos\). See 1Jo 2:18,22; 5:6,20. {The deceiver and the antichrist} (\ho planos kai ho antichristos\). Article with each word, as in Re 1:17, to bring out sharply each separate phrase, though one individual is referred to. The one _par excellence_ in popular expectation (1Jo 2:22), though many in reality (1Jo 2:18; 3Jo 1:7).

1:8 {Look to yourselves} (\blepete heautous\). Imperative active with reflexive pronoun as in Mr 13:9. The verb often used absolutely (Php 3:2) like our "look out." {That ye lose not} (\hina m[^] apoles[^]te\). Negative purpose with \hina m[^]\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \apollumi\. This is the correct text (B), not \apoles[^]men\ (we). Likewise \apolab[^]te\ (that ye receive), not \apolab[^]men\ (we). {Which we have wrought} (\ha[^]rgasametha\). This is also correct, first aorist middle indicative of \ergazomai\, to work (Joh 6:27f.). John does not wish his labour to be lost. See Ro 1:27 for this use of \apolamban“\ for receiving. See Joh 4:36 for \misthos\ in the harvest. The "full reward" (\misthon pl^r\) is the full day's wages which each worker will get (1Co 3:8). John is anxious that they shall hold on with him to the finish.

1:9 {Whosoever goeth onward} (\pfs ho proag“n\). "Every one who goes ahead. \Proag“\ literally means to go on before (Mr 11:9). That in itself is often the thing to do, but here the bad sense comes out by the parallel clause. {And abideth not in the teaching of Christ} (\kai m^e men“n en tⁱ didachⁱ tou Christou\). Not the teaching about Christ, but that of Christ which is the standard of Christian teaching as the walk of Christ is the standard for the Christian's walk (1Jo 2:6). See Joh 7:16; 18:19. These Gnostics claimed to be the progressives, the advanced thinkers, and were anxious to relegate Christ to the past in their onward march. This struggle goes on always among those who approach the study of Christ. Is he a "landmark" merely or is he our goal and pattern? Progress we all desire, but progress toward Christ, not away from him. Reactionary obscurantists wish no progress toward Christ, but desire to stop and camp where they are. "True progress includes the past" (Westcott). Jesus Christ is still ahead of us all calling us to come on to him.

1:10 {If any one cometh and bringeth not} (\ei tis erchetai kai ou pherei\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and two present indicatives (\erchetai, pherei\). {This teaching} (\tautⁿ tⁿ didachⁿ\). This teaching of Christ of verse 9, which is the standard by which to test Gnostic deceivers (verse 7). John does not refer to entertaining strangers (He 13:2; 1Ti 5:10), but to the deceiving propagandists who were carrying dissension and danger with them. {Receive him not} (\m^e lambanete auton\). Present active imperative with \m^e\. For \lamban“\ in this sense see Joh 1:12; 6:21; 13:20. {Into your house} (\eis oikian\). Definite without the article like our at home, to town. {Give him no greeting} (\chairein aut“i m^e legete\). "Say not farewell to him." Apparently \chairein\ here (present active infinitive, object of \legete\ present active imperative with negative \m^e) is used of farewell as in 2Co 13:11, though usually in the N.T. (Ac 15:23; 23:26; Jas 1:1) of the salutation. But here the point turns on the stranger bringing into the house (or trying to do so) his heretical and harmful teaching which seems to be after the salutation is over. The usual greeting to a house is given in Lu 10:5. On the other hand, if \chairein\ means greeting, not farewell, here, it can very well be understood of the peril of allowing these Gnostic propagandists to spread their pernicious teachings (cf. Mormons or Bolsheviks) in home and church (usually meeting in the home). This is assuming that the men were known and not mere strangers.

1:11 {Partaketh in his evil works} (\koin“nei tois ergois autou tois pon^{rois}\). Associative instrumental case with \koin“nei\ as in 1Ti 5:22, common verb from \koin“nos\ (partner). It is to be borne in mind that the churches often met in private homes (Ro 16:5; Col 4:15), and if these travelling deceivers were allowed to spread their doctrines in these homes and then sent on with endorsement as Apollos was from Ephesus to Corinth (Ac 18:27), there was no way of escaping responsibility for the harm wrought by these propagandists of evil. It is not a case of mere hospitality to strangers.

1:12 {I would not} (\ouk eboulthn\). Epistolary aorist (first passive indicative). {With paper and ink} (\dia chartou kai melanos\). The \chart^s\ was a leaf of papyrus prepared for writing by cutting the pith into strips and pasting together, old word (Jer 43:23), here only in N.T. \Melas\ is old adjective for black (Mt 5:36; Re 6:5,12), and for black ink here, 3Jo 1:13; 2Co 3:3. Apparently John wrote this little letter with his own hand. {To come} (\genesthai\). Second aorist middle infinitive of \ginomai\ after \elpiz“, I hope. {Face to face} (\stoma pros stoma\). "Mouth to mouth." So in 3Jo 1:14; Nu 12:8. "Face to face" (\pros“pon pros pros“pon\) we have in 1Co 13:12. {Your} (\hum“n\). Or "our" (\h^m“n\). Both true. {That may be fulfilled} (\hina pepl^r“menⁱ\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the periphrastic perfect passive subjunctive of \pl^{ro}“, as in 1Jo 1:4, which see.

1:13 {Of thine elect sister} (\t^s adelph^s sou t^s eklekt^s\). Same word \eklekt^s\ as in verse 1; Re 17:4. Apparently children of a deceased sister of the lady of verse 1 who lived in Ephesus and whom John knew as members of his church there.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {The beloved} (\t*“i agap”i*). Four times in this short letter this verbal adjective is used of Gaius (here, 2,5,11). See 2Jo 1:1 for the same phrase here, "whom I love in truth."

1:2 {I pray} (\euchomai). Here only in John's writings. See Ro 9:3. {In all things} (\peri pant*“n*). To be taken with \euodousthai\ and like \peri\ in 1Co 16:1, "concerning all things." {Thou mayest prosper} (\se euodousthai). Infinitive in indirect discourse (object infinitive) after \euchomai\, with accusative of general reference \se\ (as to thee). \Euodo*“*\ is old verb (from \euodos\, \eu\ and \hodos\, prosperous in a journey), to have a good journey, to prosper, in LXX, in N.T. only this verse (twice), 1Co 16:2; Ro 1:10. {Be in health} (\hugiainein). In Paul this word always means sound teaching (1Ti 1:10; 6:3), but here and in Lu 5:31; 7:10; 15:27, of bodily health. Brooke wonders if Gaius' health had caused his friends anxiety. {Even as thy soul prospereth} (\kath*“s euodoutai sou h^ psuch”*). A remarkable comparison which assumes the welfare (present middle indicative of \euodo*“\) of his soul (\psuch”* here as the principle of the higher life as in Joh 12:27, not of the natural life as in Mt 6:25).

1:3 {I rejoiced greatly} (\echar*^n lian*). As in 2Jo 1:4; Php 4:10, not epistolary aorist, but reference to his emotions at the good tidings about Gaius. {When brethren came} (\erchomen*“n adelph”). Genitive absolute with present middle participle of \erchomai\, and so with \marturount“n* (bare witness, present active participle of \marture*“\). Present participle here denotes repetition, from time to time. {To the truth} (\t^i al^theifi*). Dative case. "As always in the Johannine writings, 'truth' covers every sphere of life, moral, intellectual, spiritual" (Brooke). {Even as thou walkest in truth} (\kath*“s su en al^theifi peripateis*). "Thou" in contrast to Diotrephes (verse 9) and others like him. On \peripate*“*\ see 1Jo 1:6 and on \en al^theifi\ see 2Jo 1:4.

1:4 {Greater} (\meizoteran). A double comparative with \-teros\ added to \meiz*“n*, like our "lesser" and like \mallon kreisson\

(more better) in Php 1:23. In Eph 3:8 we have \elachistoter“i\, a comparative on a superlative. Like forms occur in the vernacular papyri and even in Homer (\cheiroteros\, more worse) as also in Shakespeare. {Joy} (\charan\). B reads \charin\ (grace). {Than this} (\tout“n\). Ablative neuter plural after the comparative. {To hear of} (\hina akou“\). Object clause (epexegetic) with \hina\ and \akou“\, the present active subjunctive (keep on hearing of) in apposition with \tout“n\, {Walking in truth} (\en al^theifi peripatounta\). As in 2Jo 1:4, which see. By the use of \tekna\ John may mean that Gaius is one of his converts (1Ti 1:1).

1:5 {A faithful work} (\piston\). Either thus or "thou makest sure," after an example in Xenophon quoted by Wettstein (\poiein pista\) and parallel to \kaina poie“\ in Re 21:5. But it is not certain. {In whatsoever thou doest} (\ho ean ergas^i\). Indefinite relative with modal \ean\ (=an\) and the first aorist middle subjunctive of \ergazomai\. See Col 3:23 for both \poie“\ and \ergazomai\ in the same sentence. {And strangers withal} (\kai touto xenous\). "And that too" (accusative of general reference as in 1Co 6:6; Php 1:28; Eph 2:8). This praise of hospitality (Ro 12:13; 1Pe 4:9; 1Ti 3:2; 5:10; Tit 1:8; Heb 13:2) shows that in 2Jo 1:10 John has a peculiar case in mind.

1:6 {Before the church} (\en“pion ekkl^sias\). Public meeting as the anarthrous use of \ekkl^sia\ indicates, like \en ekkl^sifi\ in 1Co 14:19,35. {Thou wilt do well} (\kal“s poi^seis\). Future active of \poie“\ with adverb \kal“s\, a common polite phrase in letters (papyri) like our "please." See also Ac 10:33; Jas 2:19; 1Co 7:37f.; Php 4:14; 2Pe 1:19. {To set forward on their journey} (\propempsas\). First aorist active participle (simultaneous action) of \propemp“\, to send forward, "sending forward," old word, in N.T. in Ac 15:3; 20:38; 21:5; 1Co 16:6,11; 2Co 1:16; Ro 15:24; Tit 3:13. {Worthily of God} (\axi“s tou theou\). Precisely this phrase in 1Th 2:12 and the genitive with \axi“s\ also in Ro 16:2; Php 1:27; Col 1:10; Eph 4:1. See Joh 13:20 for Christ's words on the subject. "Since they are God's representatives, treat them as you would God" (Holtzmann). From Homer's time (_Od_. XV. 74) it was customary to speed the parting guest, sometimes accompanying him, sometimes providing money and food. Rabbis were so escorted and Paul alludes to the same gracious custom in Ro 15:24; Tit 3:13.

1:7 {For the sake of the Name} (\huper tou onomatos\). The name of Jesus. See Ac 5:4; Ro 1:5 for \huper tou onomatos\ and Jas 2:7 for the absolute use of "the name" as in 1Pe 4:16. "This name is in essence the sum of the Christian creed" (Westcott) as in 1Co 12:3; Ro 10:9. It is like the absolute use of "the Way" (Ac 9:2; 19:9,23; 24:22). {Taking nothing} (\m^{den} lambanontes\). Present active participle with the usual negative with participles (1Jo 2:4). {Of the Gentiles} (\apo tⁿ ethnⁿ\). Instead of the usual \ethnⁿ\ (Lu 2:32), late adjective for what is peculiar to a people (\ethnos\) and then for the people themselves (Polybius, Diodorus, not in LXX), in N.T. only here, Mt 5:47; 6:7; 18:17. Like our heathen, pagan. John is anxious that Christian missionaries receive nothing from the heathen, as our missionaries have to watch against the charge of being after money. There were many travelling lecturers out for money. Paul in 1Co 9 defends the right of preachers to pay, but refuses himself to accept it from Corinth because it would be misunderstood (cf. 1Th 2:6ff.; 2Co 12:16ff. 12:16ff.). Note \apo\ here as in collecting taxes (Mt 17:25) rather than \para\, which may be suggestive.

1:8 {Ought} (\opheilomen\). See for this word 1Jo 2:6; 3:16; 4:11. {To welcome} (\hupolambanein\). Present active infinitive (habit of welcoming) of \hupolambanⁿ\, old word, to take up under, to carry off (Ac 1:9), to reply (Lu 10:30), to suppose (Ac 2:15), only here in N.T. in this sense of receiving hospitably or to take under one's protection like \hupodechomai\ (Lu 10:38). {Such} (\tous toioutous\). "The such" according to the Greek idiom (1Co 16:16,18). {That we may be} (\hina ginⁿmetha\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the present middle subjunctive of \ginomai\, "that we may keep on becoming." {Fellow-workers} (\sunergoi\). Old compound (\sun, ergon\). {With the truth} (\tⁱ al^{theifi}\). So associative instrumental case with \sun\ in \sunergoi\, but it is not certain that this is the idea, though \sunergeⁿ\ is so used with \ergois\ in Jas 2:22. \Sunergos\ itself occurs with the genitive of the person as in \theou sunergoi\ (1Co 3:9) or with genitive of the thing \t^s charfs\ (1Co 3:9). So then here the meaning may be either "co-workers with such brethren for the truth" (dative of advantage) or "co-workers with the truth" (associative instrumental case).

ekkl^hsifi). A few MSS. add \an\ to indicate that he had not written (conclusion of second-class condition), clearly spurious. Not epistolary aorist nor a reference to II John as Findlay holds, but an allusion to a brief letter of commendation (Ac 18:27; 2Co 3:1; Col 4:10) sent along with the brethren in verses 5-7 or to some other itinerant brethren. Westcott wrongly thinks that \ti\ is never used of anything important in the N.T. (Ac 8:9; Ga 6:3), and hence that this lost letter was unimportant. It may have been brief and a mere introduction. \Diotrephes\ (Dios\ and \treph^h\, nourished by Zeus). This ambitious leader and sympathiser with the Gnostics would probably prevent the letter referred to being read to the church, whether it was II John condemning the Gnostics or another letter commending Demetrius and John's missionaries. Hence he sends Gaius this personal letter warning against Diotrephes. {Who loveth to have the preeminence among them} (\ho philopr^hteu^hn aut^hn\). Present active articular participle of a late verb, so far found only here and in ecclesiastical writers (the example cited by Blass being an error, Deissmann, _Light_ etc., p. 76), from \philopr^htos\, fond of being first (Plutarch), and made like \philopone^h\ (papyri), to be fond of toil. This ambition of Diotrephes does not prove that he was a bishop over elders, as was true in the second century (as Ignatius shows). He may have been an elder (bishop) or deacon, but clearly desired to rule the whole church. Some forty years ago I wrote an article on Diotrephes for a denominational paper. The editor told me that twenty-five deacons stopped the paper to show their resentment against being personally attacked in the paper. {Receiveth us not} (\ouk epidechetai h^hmfs\). Present active indicative of this old compound, in N.T. only here and verse 10. Diotrephes refused to accept John's authority or those who sided with him, John's missionaries or delegates (cf. Mt 10:40).

1:10 {If I come} (\ean elth^h\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \erchomai\. He hopes to come (verse 14), as he had said in 2Jo 1:12 (one argument for identifying II John with the letter in 3Jo 1:9). {I will bring to remembrance} (\hupomn^hs^h\). Future active indicative of \hupomimn^hsk^h\, old compound (Joh 14:26; 2Pe 1:12). The aged apostle is not afraid of Diotrephes and here defies him. {Which he doeth} (\ha poiei\). Present active indicative, "which he keeps on doing." {Prating against us} (\phluar^hn h^hmfs\). Present active participle of old verb (from \phluaros\, babbling 1Ti 5:13), to accuse idly and so falsely, here only in N.T. with accusative \h^mfs\ (us). {With wicked words} (\logois pon^rois\). Instrumental case. Not simply foolish chatter, but malevolent words. {Not content} (\m^ arkoumenos\). Present passive participle of \arke“\ with usual negative \m^\. For this verb in this sense see 1Ti 6:8; Heb 13:5, only there \epi\ is absent. John knows that the conduct of Diotrephes will not stand the light. See Paul's threats of exposure (1Co 4:21; 2Co 10:11; 13:1-3). And John is the apostle of love all the same. {He himself} (\autos\). That was bad enough. {Them that would} (\tous boulomenous\). "Those willing or wishing or receive the brethren" from John. {He forbiddeth} (\k“luei\). "He hinders." Present active indicative of \k“lu“\ and means either actual success in one case (punctiliar use of the present indicative) or repetition in several instances (linear action) or conative action attempted, but not successful as in Mt 3:14 (this same verb) and Joh 10:32. {Casteth them out of the church} (\ek t^s ekkli^sias ekballei\). Here again \ekballei\ can be understood in various ways, like \k“luei\. This verb occurs in Joh 2:15 for casting out of the temple the profaners of it and for casting the blind man out of the synagogue (Joh 9:34f.). If this ancient "church-boss" did not succeed in expelling John's adherents from the church, he certainly tried to do it.

1:11 {Imitate not} (\m^ mimou\). Present middle imperative in prohibition (do not have the habit of imitating) of \mimeomai\ (from \mimos\, actor, mimic), old word, in N.T. only here, 2Th 3:7,9; Heb 13:7. {That which is evil} (\to kakon\). "The bad," as in Ro 12:21 (neuter singular abstract). {But that which is good} (\alla to agathon\). "But the good." As in Ro 12:21 again. Probably by the contrast between Diotrephes and Demetrius. {He that doeth good} (\ho agathopoi“n\). Articular present active participle of \agathopoie“, late and rare verb, in contrast with \ho kakopoi“n\ (old and common verb) as in Mr 3:4; Lu 6:9; 1Pe 3:17. {Is of God} (\ek tou theou estin\). As in 1Jo 3:9f. {Hath not seen God} (\ouch he“raken ton theon\). As in 1Jo 3:6. He does not say \ek tou diabolou\ as Jesus does in Joh 8:44, but he means it.

1:12 {Demetrius hath the witness of all men} (\D^m^tri“i memartur^tai hupo pant“n\). Perfect passive indicative of \marture“, "it has been witnessed to Demetrius (dative case) by all." We know nothing else about him, unless, as is unlikely, he be identified with Demas as a shortened form (Phm 1:24; Col 4:4; 2Ti 4:10), who has come back after his desertion or with the Ephesian silversmith (Ac 19:21ff.), who may have been converted under John's ministry, which one would like to believe, though there is no evidence for it. He may indeed be the bearer of this letter from Ephesus to Gaius and may also have come under suspicion for some reason and hence John's warm commendation. {And of the truth itself} (\kai hupo aut^s t^s al^theias). A second commendation of Demetrius. It is possible, in view of 1Jo 5:6 (the Spirit is the truth), that John means the Holy Spirit and not a mere personification of the truth. {Yea we also} (\kai h^meis de). A third witness to Demetrius, that is John himself (literary plural). {Thou knowest} (\oidas). "The words in Joh 21:24 sound like an echo of this sentence" (Westcott). John knew Demetrius well in Ephesus.

1:13 {I had} (\eichon). Imperfect active of \ech, when I began to write (\grapsai\, ingressive aorist active infinitive of \graph). {I am unwilling to write} (\ou thel^ graphein). "I do not wish to go on writing them. {With ink and pen} (\dia melanos kai kalamou), "by means of (\dia) black (ink) and reed (used as pen)." See 2Jo 1:12 for \melanos and Mt 11:7 for \kalamos, used for papyrus and parchment, as \grapheion\ (a sharp stilus) for wax tablets.

1:14 {I hope} (*\elpiz^ ) {--We shall speak} (\lal^somen*). Literary plural really singular like *\elpiz^ . {Face to face} (\stoma pros stoma*). As in 2Jo 1:12.

{Peace to thee} (\eir^ n^ soi). _Pax tibi_ like the Jewish greeting _shal^m_ (Lu 10:5; 24:36; Joh 20:19,21). {The friends} (\hoi philoi). Those in Ephesus. {By name} (\kat' onoma). John knew the friends in the church (at Pergamum or wherever it was) as the good shepherd calls his sheep by name (Joh 10:3, the only other N.T. example of \kat' onoma). The idiom is common in the papyri letters (Deissmann, _Light_, etc., p. 193, note 21).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {Servant} (\doulos\). Precisely as James (Jas 1:1), only James added \kuriou\ (Lord). {Brother of James} (\adelphos Iak“bou\). Thus Jude identifies himself. But not the "Judas of James" (Lu 6:16; Ac 1:13). {To them that are called} (\tois--kl^tois\). But this translation (treating kl^tois as a substantive like Ro 1:6; 1Co 1:24) is by no means certain as two participles come in between \tois\ and \kl^tois\ . \Kl^tois\ may be in the predicate position (being called), not attributive. But see 1Pe 1:1. {Beloved in God the Father} (\en the“i patri ^gap^menois\). Perfect passive participle of \agapa“, but no precise parallel to this use of \en\ with \agapa“. {Kept for Jesus Christ} (\I^sou Christ“i tet^r^menois\). Perfect passive participle again with dative, unless it is the instrumental, "kept by Jesus Christ," a quite possible interpretation.

1:2 {Be multiplied} (\pl^thunthei^). First aorist passive optative of \pl^thun“\ as in 1Pe 1:2; 2Pe 1:2.

1:3 {Beloved} (\agap^toi\). As in 3Jo 1:2. {All diligence} (\pfsan spoud^n\). As in 2Pe 1:5. {Of our common salvation} (\peri t^s koin^s h^m“n s“t^rias\). See this use of \koinos\ (common to all) in Tit 1:4 with \pistis\, while in 2Pe 1:1 we have \isotimon pistin\, which see. {I was constrained} (\anagk^n eschon\). "I had necessity" like Lu 14:18; Heb 7:27. {To contend earnestly} (\epag“nizesthai\). Late and rare (in Plutarch, inscriptions) compound, here only in N.T. A little additional (\epi\) striving to the already strong \ag“nizesthai\ (\ag“n\ contest). Cf. 1Ti 6:12 \ag“nizou ton kalon ag“na\ . {For the faith} (\t^i--pistei\). Dative of advantage. Here not in the original sense of trust, but rather of the thing believed as in verse 20; Ga 1:23; 3:23; Php 1:27. {Once for all delivered} (\hapax paradotheis^i\). First aorist passive participle feminine dative singular of \paradid“mi\, for which see 2Pe 2:21. See also 2Th 2:15; 1Co 11:2; 1Ti 6:20.

1:4 {Are crept in} (\pareisedu^san\). Second aorist passive indicative of \pareisdu“\ (\-n“\), late (Hippocrates, Plutarch, etc.) compound of \para\ (beside) and \eis\ (in) and \du“\ to sink or plunge, so to slip in secretly as if by a side door, here only in N.T. {Set forth} (\progegrammenoi\). Perfect passive participle of \prograph“, to write of beforehand, for which verb see Ga 3:1; Ro 15:4. {Unto this condemnation} (\eis touto to krima\). See 2Pe 2:3 for \krima\ and \ekpalai\ . \Palai\ here apparently alludes to verses 14,15 (Enoch). {Ungodly men} (\asebeis\). Keynote of the Epistle (Mayor), in 15 again as in 2Pe 2:5; 3:7. {Turning} (\metatithentes\). Present active participle of \metatithēmi\, to change, for which verb see Ga 1:6. For the change of "grace" (\charita) into "lasciviousness (\eis aselgeian) see 1Pe 2:16; 4:3; 2Pe 2:19; 3:16. {Our only Master and Lord} (\ton monon despotēn kai kurion hēmōn\). For the force of the one article for one person see on 2Pe 1:1. For \despotēn\ of Christ see 2Pe 2:1. {Denying} (\arnoumenoi\). So 2Pe 2:1. See also Mt 10:33; 1Ti 5:8; Tit 1:16; 1Jo 2:22.

1:5 {To put you in remembrance} (\hupomnēsai\). See 2Pe 1:12 \hupomimnēskein\ (present active infinitive there, first aorist active infinitive here). {Though ye know all things once for all} (\eidotas hapax panta\). Concessive perfect (sense of present) active participle as in 2Pe 1:12, but without \kaiper\ . {The Lord} (\kurios\). Some MSS. add \İsous\ . The use of \kurios\ here is usually understood to mean the Lord Jesus Christ, as Clement of Alex. (Adumbr. p. 133) explains, Ex 23:20, by \ho mustikos ekeinos aggelos İsous\ (that mystical angel Jesus). For the mystic reference to Christ see 1Co 10:4,9; Heb 11:26. Some MSS. here add \theos\ instead of \İsous\ . {Afterward} (\to deutron\). Adverbial accusative, "the second time." After having saved the people out of Egypt. {Destroyed} (\ap“lesen\). First aorist active indicative of \apollumi\, old verb, to destroy. {Them that believed not} (\tous mē pisteusantas\). First aorist active articular participle of \pisteu“. The reference is to Nu 14:27-37, when all the people rescued from Egypt perished except Caleb and Joshua. This first example by Jude is not in II Peter, but is discussed in 1Co 10:5-11; Heb 3:18-4:2.

1:6 {And angels} (\aggelous de\). The second example in Jude, the fallen angels, accusative case after \tetērken\ (perfect active indicative of tēre“), for which verb see 2Pe 2:4,7) at the end of the verse (two emphatic positions, beginning and end of the clause). {Kept not} (\mē tērēsas\). First aorist active participle with negative \mē\, with play on "kept not" and "he hath kept." {Principality} (\archēn\). Literally, "beginning,"

"rule," (first place of power as in 1Co 15:24; Ro 8:38). In Ac 10:11 it is used for "corners" (beginnings) of the sheet. In Eph 6:12 the word is used for evil angels. See De 32:8. Both Enoch and Philo (and Milton) discuss the fallen angels. {But left} (\alla apolipontas). Second aorist active participle of \apoleip“, old verb, to leave behind (2Ti 4:13,20). {Their own proper habitation} (\to idion oik^t^rion). Old word for dwelling-place (from \oik^t^r\, dweller at home, from \oikos), in N.T. only here and 2Co 5:2 (the body as the abode of the spirit). {In everlasting bonds} (\desmois aidiois). Either locative (in) or instrumental (by, with). \Aidios\ (from \aei\, always), old adjective, in N.T. only here and Ro 1:20 (of God's power and deity). It is synonymous with \ai“nios\ (Mt 25:46). Mayor terms \aidios\ an Aristotelian word, while \ai“nios\ is Platonic. {Under darkness} (\hupo zophon). See 2Pe 2:4 for \zophos\. In Wisd. 17:2 we find \desmioi skotous\ (prisoners of darkness). {Great} (\megal^s). Not in 2Pe 2:9, which see for discussion.

1:7 {Even as} (\h“s). Just "as." The third instance (Jude passes by the deluge) in Jude, the cities of the plain. {The cities about them} (\hai peri autas poleis). These were also included, Admah and Zeboiim (De 29:23; Ho 11:8). Zoar, the other city, was spared. {In like manner} (\ton homoion tropon). Adverbial accusative (cf. \h“s). Like the fallen angels. {Having given themselves over to fornication} (\ekporneusasai). First aorist active participle feminine plural of \ekporneu“, late and rare compound (perfective use of \ek\, outside the moral law), only here in N.T., but in LXX (Ge 38:24; Ex 34:15f., etc.). Cf. \aselgeian\ in verse 4. {Strange flesh} (\sarkos heteras). Horrible licentiousness, not simply with women not their wives or in other nations, but even unnatural uses (Ro 1:27) for which the very word "sodomy" is used (Ge 19:4-11). The pronoun \heteras\ (other, strange) is not in 2Pe 2:10. {Are set forth} (\prokeintai). Present middle indicative of \prokeimai\, old verb, to lie before, as in Heb 12:1f. {As an example} (\deigma). Predicate nominative of \deigma\, old word (from \deiknumi\ to show), here only in N.T., sample, specimen. 2Pe 2:6 has \hupodeigma\ (pattern). {Suffering} (\hupechousai). Present active participle of \hupech“, old compound, to hold under, often with \dik^n\ (right, justice, sentence 2Th 1:9) to suffer sentence (punishment), here only in N.T. {Of eternal fire} (\puros ai“niou). Like \desmois aidiois\ in verse 7. Cf. the hell of fire (Mt 5:22) and also Mt 25:46. Jude has no mention of Lot.

1:8 {Yet} (\mentoi). See Joh 4:27. In spite of these warnings. {In like manner} (\homoi“s). Like the cities of the plain. {These also} (\kai houtoi). The false teachers of verse 4. {In their dreamings} (\enupniazomenoi). Present middle participle of \enupniaz“, to dream (from \enupnion\ dream, Ac 2:17, from \en\ and \hupnos\, in sleep), in Aristotle, Hippocrates, Plutarch, papyri, LXX (Joe 2:28), here only in N.T. Cf. Col 2:18. {Defile} (\miainousin). Present active indicative of \minain“, old verb, to stain, with sin (Tit 1:15) as here. 2Pe 2:10 has \miasmou. {Set at nought} (\athetousin). Present active indicative of \athete“, to annul. Both \kuriot“s (dominion) and \doxai (dignities) occur in 2Pe 2:10, which see for discussion.

1:9 {Michael the archangel} (\ho Michael ho archaggelos). Michael is mentioned also in Da 10:13,21; 12:1; Re 12:7. \Archaggelos in N.T. occurs only here and 1Th 4:16, but in Da 10:13,20; 12:1. {Contending with the devil} (\t“i diabol“i diakrinomenos). Present middle participle of \diakrin“, to separate, to strive with as in Ac 11:2. Dative case \diabol“i. {When he disputed} (\hote dielegeto). Imperfect middle of \dialegomai as in Mr 9:34. {Concerning the body of Moses} (\peri tou M“use“s s“matos). Some refer this to Zec 3:1, others to a rabbinical comment on De 34:6. There is a similar reference to traditions in Ac 7:22; Ga 3:19; Heb 2:2; 2Ti 3:8. But this explanation hardly meets the facts. {Durst not bring} (\ouk etolm“sen epenegkein). "Did not dare (first aorist active indicative of \tolma“), to bring against him" (second aorist active infinitive of \epipher“). {A railing accusation} (\krisin blasph“mias). "Charge of blasphemy" where 2Pe 2:11 has "\blasph“mon krisin." Peter also has \para kuri“i (with the Lord), not in Jude. {The Lord rebuke thee} (\epitim“sai soi kurios). First aorist active optative of \epitima“, a wish about the future. These words occur in Zec 3:1-10 where the angel of the Lord replies to the charges of Satan. Clement of Alex. (_Adumb. in Ep. Judae_) says that Jude quoted here the _Assumption of Moses_, one of the apocryphal books. Origen says the same thing. Mayor thinks that the author of the _Assumption of Moses_ took these words from Zechariah and put them in the mouth of the Archangel Michael. There is a Latin version of the Assumption. Some date it as early as B.C. 2, others after A.D. 44.

1:10 {Whatsoever things they know not} (\hosa ouk oidasin). Here 2Pe 2:12 has \en hois agnoousin. The rest of the sentence is smoother than 2Pe 2:12. {Naturally} (\phusik“s). Here only in N.T. 2Pe 2:12 has \gegenn^mena phusika. Jude has the article \ta with \aloga z“a and the present passive \phtheirontai instead of the future passive \phthar^sontai.

1:11 {Woe to them} (\ouai autois). Interjection with the dative as is common in the Gospels (Mt 11:21). {Went} (\eporeuth^san). First aorist passive (deponent) indicative of \poreuomai. {In the way of Cain} (\t^i hod“i tou Kain). Locative case \hod“i. Cain is Jude's fourth example. Not in II Peter, but in Heb 11:4; 1Jo 3:11f. From Ge 4:7. {Ran riotously} (\exechuth^san). First aorist passive indicative of \ekche“, to pour out, "they were poured out," vigorous metaphor for excessive indulgence. But it is used also of God's love for us (Ro 5:5). {In the error of Balaam} (\t^i plan^i tou Balaam). The fifth example in Jude. In II Peter also (2Pe 2:15). Either locative case (in) or instrumental (by). \Plan^i (in Peter also) is the common word for such wandering (Mt 24:4ff., etc.). {Perished} (\ap“lonto). Second aorist middle (intransitive) of \apollumi. {In the gainsaying of Korah} (\t^i antilogifi tou Kore). Again either locative or instrumental. The word \antilogia is originally answering back (Heb 6:16), but it may be by act also (Ro 10:21) as here. This is the sixth example in Jude, not in II Peter.

1:12 {Hidden rocks} (\spilades). Old word for rocks in the sea (covered by the water), as in Homer, here only in N.T. 2Pe 2:13 has \spiloi. {Love-feasts} (\agapais). Undoubtedly the correct text here, though A C have \apatais as in 2Pe 2:14. For disorder at the Lord's Supper (and love-feasts?) see 1Co 11:17-34. The Gnostics made it worse, so that the love-feasts were discontinued. {When they feast with you} (\suneu“choumenoi). See 2Pe 2:13 for this very word and form. Masculine gender with \houtoi hoi rather than with the feminine \spilades. Cf. Re 11:4. Construction according to sense. {Shepherds that feed themselves} (\heautous poimainontes). "Shepherding themselves." Cf. Re 7:17 for this use of \poimain“. Clouds without water (\nephelai anudroi). \Nephel^i common word for cloud (Mt 24:30). 2Pe 2:17 has \p^gai anudroi\ (springs without water) and then \homichlai\ (mists) and \elaunomenai\ (driven) rather than \peripheromenai\ here (borne around, whirled around, present passive participle of \peripher““\ to bear around), a powerful picture of disappointed hopes. {Autumn trees} (\dendra phthinop“rina\). Late adjective (Aristotle, Polybius, Strabo) from \phthin“\, to waste away, and \op“ra\, autumn, here only in N.T. For \akarpa\ (without fruit) see 2Pe 1:8. {Twice dead} (\dis apothanonta\). Second aorist active participle of \apothn^sk“\, fruitless and having died. Having died and also "uprooted" (\ekriz“thenta\). First aorist passive participle of \ekrizo“\, late compound, to root out, to pluck up by the roots, as in Mt 13:29.

1:13 {Wild waves} (\kumata agria\). Waves (Mt 8:24, from \kue“\, to swell) wild (from \agros\, field, wild honey Mt 3:4) like untamed animals of the forest or the sea. {Foaming out} (\epaphrizonta\). Late and rare present active participle of \epaphriz“\, used in Moschus for the foaming waves as here. Cf. Isa 57:20. {Shame} (\aischunas\). Plural "shames" (disgraces). Cf. Php 3:19. {Wandering stars} (\asteres plan^tai\). "Stars wanderers." \Plan^t^s\, old word (from \plana““), here alone in N.T. Some refer this to comets or shooting stars. See Isa 14:12 for an allusion to Babylon as the day-star who fell through pride. {For ever} (\eis ai“na\). The rest of the relative clause exactly as in 2Pe 2:17.

1:14 {And to these also} (\de kai toutois\). Dative case, for these false teachers as well as for his contemporaries. {Enoch the seventh from Adam} (\hebdomos apo Adam Hen“ch\). The genealogical order occurs in Ge 5:4-20, with Enoch as seventh. He is so termed in Enoch 60:8; 93:3. {Prophesied} (\eproph^teusen\). First aorist active indicative of \proph^teu“\, If the word is given its ordinary meaning as in 1Pe 1:10, then Jude terms the Book of Enoch an inspired book. The words quoted are "a combination of passages from Enoch" (Bigg), chiefly from Enoch 1:9. {With ten thousand of his holy ones} (\en hagiais muriasin autou\). "With (\en\ of accompaniment, Lu 14:31) his holy ten thousands" (\murias\ regular word, feminine gender, for ten thousand, Ac 19:19, there an unlimited number like our myriads, Lu 12:1).

1:15 {To execute judgment} (\poi^sai krisin\). "To do justice." {To convict} (\elegxai\). First aorist (effective) active infinitive like \poi^sai\ before it. {Ungodly} (\asebeis\). See verse 4 and end of this verse. {Of ungodliness} (\asebeias\). Old word as in Ro 1:18, plural in Jude 1:18 as in Ro 11:26. {Which} (\h“n\). Genitive by attraction from \ha\ (cognate accusative with \seb^san\, old verb, to act impiously, here alone in N.T. save some MSS. in 2Pe 2:6) to agree with the antecedent \erg“n\ (deeds). {Hard things} (\skl^r“n\). Harsh, rough things as in Joh 6:60. {Which} (\h“n\). Genitive by attraction from \ha\ (object of \elal^san\, first aorist active indicative of \lale“\)) to the case of the antecedent \skl^r“n\.

Four times in this verse as a sort of refrain \asebeis\ (twice), \asebeias, ^seb^san\.

1:16 {Murmurers} (\goggustai\). Late onomatopoetic word for agent, from \gogguz“\ (Mt 20:11; 1Co 10:10) in the LXX (Ex 16:8; Nu 11:1,14-29). {Complainers} (\mempsimoiroi\). Rare word (Isocrates, Aristotle, Plutarch) from \memphomai\ to complain and \moira\ lot or fate. Here alone in N.T. {Lusts} (\epithumias\). As in 2Pe 3:3. {Swelling} (\huperogka\). So in 2Pe 2:18 (big words). {Showing respect of persons} (\thaumazontes pros“pa\). Present active participle of \thaumaz“\ to admire, to wonder at. Nowhere else in N.T. with \pros“pa\, but a Hebraism (in Le 19:15; Job 13:10) like \lambanein pros“pon\ (Lu 20:21) and \blepein pros“pon\ (Mt 22:16) and \prosop“lempite“\ (Jas 2:9). Cf. Jas 2:1. {For the sake of advantage} (\“pheleias charin\). To themselves. See also verse 11. The covetousness of these Gnostic leaders is plainly shown in 2Pe 2:3,14. For \charin\ as preposition with genitive see Eph 3:1,14.

1:17 {Remember ye} (\humeis mn^sth^te\). First aorist passive (deponent) imperative of \mimn^sk“\ with genitive \r^mat“n\ (words). In 2Pe 3:2 we have the indirect form (infinitive \mn^sth^nai\). The rest as in II Peter, but in simpler and more exact structure and with the absence of \t“n hagi“n proph^t“n\ (the holy prophets).

1:18 {How that} (\hoti\). Declarative \hoti\ as in verse 5. See discussion of 2Pe 3:3 for differences, no \en empaigmon^i\ here and no \t“n asebei“n\ there.

1:19 {They who make separations} (\hoi apodiorizontes\). Present active articular participle of the double compound \apodioriz“\ (from \apo, dia, horiz“, horos\, boundary, to make a horizon), rare word, in Aristotle for making logical distinctions, here only in N.T. \Dioriz“\ occurs in Le 20:24 and \aphoriz“\ in Mt

25:32, etc. See \haireseis\ in 2Pe 2:1. {Sensual} (\psuchikoi\). Old adjective from \psuch^ as in 1Co 2:14; 15:44; Jas 3:15. Opposed to \pneumatikos\. Not used by Peter. {Having not the Spirit} (\pneuma m^ echontes\). Usual negative \m^ with the participle (present active of \ech^). Probably \pneuma\ here means the Holy Spirit, as is plain in verse 20. Cf. Ro 8:9.

1:20 {Building up} (\epoikodomountes\). Present active participle of \epoikodome^, old compound with metaphor of a house (\oikos\), common in Paul (1Co 3:9-17; Col 2:7; Eph 2:20). {On your most holy faith} (\t^i hagi^tat^i hum^ n pistei\). For the spiritual temple see also 1Pe 2:3-5. See \pistis\ (faith) in this sense (cf. Heb 11:1) in 2Pe 1:5 with the list of graces added. A true superlative here \hagi^tat^i, not elative. {Praying in the Holy Spirit} (\en pneumatihagi^i proseuchomenoi\). This is the way to build themselves up on their faith.

1:21 {Keep yourselves} (\heautous t^r^sate\). First aorist active imperative (of urgency) of \t^re^\. In verse 1 they are said to be kept, but note the warning in verse 5 from the angels who did not keep their dominion. See also Jas 1:27. In Php 2:12 both sides (human responsibility and divine sovereignty are presented side by side). {Looking for} (\prosdechomenoi\). Present middle participle of \prosdechomai, the very form in Tit 2:13. The same idea in \prosdok^ntes\ in 2Pe 3:14.

1:22 {And on some} (\kai hous men\). Demonstrative plural of \hos men--hos de\ (\hous de, below), not the relative \hous, but by contrast (\men, de). So Mt 13:8. {Have mercy} (\elefte\). Present active imperative of \elea^ (\rare form in Ro 9:16 also for the usual \elee^ Mt 9:27). But A C read \elegchete, refute, in place of \eleate. The text of this verse is in much confusion. {Who are in doubt} (\diakrinomenous\). Present middle participle of \diakrin^, in the accusative case agreeing with \hous men, though K L P have the nominative. If the accusative and \eleate\ is read, see Jas 1:6 for the idea (doubters). If \elegchete\ is read, see Jude 1:9 for the idea (disputers).

1:23 {And some save} (\hous de s^zete\). B omits \hous de\ {Snatching them out of the fire} (\ek puros harpazontes\). Present active participle of \harpaz^, old verb, to seize. Quotation from Am 4:11 and Zec 3:3. Cf. Ps 106:18. Firemen today literally do this rescue work. Do Christians? {And on some have mercy with fear} (\hous de elefte en phob“i). In fear "of the contagion of sin while we are rescuing them" (Vincent). For this idea see 1Pe 1:17; 3:15; 2Co 7:1; Php 2:12. {Spotted} (\espil“menon). Perfect passive participle of \spilo“, late and common verb (from \spilos\, spot, 2Pe 2:13), in N.T. only here and Jas 3:6.

1:24 {From stumbling} (\aptaistous). Verbal from \ptai“, to stumble (Jas 3:2; 2Pe 1:10), sure-footed as of a horse that does not stumble (Xenophon), and so of a good man (Epictetus, Marcus Antoninus). {Before the presence of his glory} (\katen“pion t“s dox“s autou). Late compound preposition (\kata, en, “ps), right down before the eye of his glory as in Eph 1:4. Cf. Mt 25:31-33; Col 1:22, where Paul has \parast“sai like \st“sai here (first aorist active infinitive) and also \am“mous as here, but \am“m“tos in 2Pe 3:14. {In exceeding joy} (\en agalliasei). See Lu 1:14.

1:25 {To the only God our Saviour} (\mon“i the“i s“t“ri h“m“n). Dative in the noble doxology. See Ro 16:27, \mon“i soph“i the“i (to the alone wise God), where also we have \dia I“sou Christou, but without \tou kuriou h“m“n (our Lord) as here. \S“t“r is used of God eight times in the N.T., six of them in the Pastoral Epistles. \Doxa (glory) to God or Christ in all the doxologies except 1Ti 6:16. \Megalosun“ (Majesty) is a late LXX word, in N.T. only here and Heb 1:3; 8:1. {Before all time} (\pro pantos tou ai“nos). Eternity behind us. See same idea in 1Co 2:7 \pro t“n ai“n“n. {Now} (\nun). The present. {For ever more} (\eis pantas tous ai“nas). "Unto all the ages." All the future. As complete a statement of eternity as can be made in human language.

1:1 {The Revelation} (\apokalupsis\). Late and rare word outside of N.T. (once in Plutarch and so in the vernacular _Koin, _), only once in the Gospels (Lu 2:32), but in LXX and common in the Epistles (2Th 1:7), though only here in this book besides the title, from \apokalupt“, old verb, to uncover, to unveil. In the Epistles \apokalupsis\ is used for insight into truth (Eph 1:17) or for the revelation of God or Christ at the second coming of Christ (2Th 1:7; 1Pe 1:7). It is interesting to compare \apokalupsis\ with \epiphaneia\ (2Th 2:8) and \phaner“sis\ (1Co 12:7). The precise meaning here turns on the genitive following. {Of Jesus Christ} (\I`sou Christou\). Hort takes it as objective genitive (revelation about Jesus Christ), but Swete rightly argues for the subjective genitive because of the next clause. {Gave him} (\ed“ken autoi\). It is the Son who received the revelation from the Father, as is usual (Joh 5:20f., 26, etc.). {To shew} (\deixai\). First aorist active infinitive of \deiknumi\, purpose of God in giving the revelation to Christ. {Unto his servants} (\tois doulois autou\). Believers in general and not just to officials. Dative case. God's servants (or Christ's). {Must shortly come to pass} (\dei genesthai en tachei\). Second aorist middle infinitive of \ginomai\ with \dei\. See this same adjunct (\en tachei\ in Lu 18:8; Ro 16:20; Re 22:6). It is a relative term to be judged in the light of 2Pe 3:8 according to God's clock, not ours. And yet undoubtedly the hopes of the early Christians looked for a speedy return of the Lord Jesus. This vivid panorama must be read in the light of that glorious hope and of the blazing fires of persecution from Rome. {Sent and signified} (\es`manen aposteilas\). "Having sent (first aorist active participle of \apostell“, Mt 10:16 and again in Re 22:6 of God sending his angel) signified" (first aorist active indicative of \s`main“, from \s`ma, sign or token, for which see Joh 12:33; Ac 11:28). See 12:1 for \s`meion\, though \s`main“\ (only here in the Apocalypse) suits admirably the symbolic character of the book. {By his angel} (\dia tou aggelou autou\). Christ's angel as Christ is the subject of the verb \es`manen\, as in 22:16 Christ sends his angel, though in 22:6 God sends. {Unto his servant John} (\t“i doul“i autou I“anei\). Dative case. John gives his name here, though not in Gospel or Epistles, because "prophecy requires the guarantee of the individual who is inspired to utter it" (Milligan). "The genesis of the Apocalypse has now been traced from its origin in the Mind of God to the moment when it reached its human interpreter" (Swete). "Jesus is the medium of all revelation" (Moffatt).

1:2 {Bare witness} (\emartur^{sen}). First aorist active indicative of \marture^{an}, which, along with \martus and \marturia, is common in all the Johannine books (cf. 22:18,20), usually with \peri or \hoti, but with cognate accusative as here in 22:16,20; 1Jo 5:10. Epistolary aorist here, referring to this book. {The word of God} (\ton logon tou theou). Subjective genitive, given by God. The prophetic word as in 1:9; 6:9; 20:4, not the personal Word as in 19:14. {The testimony of Jesus Christ} (\tⁿ marturian I^{sou} Christou). Subjective genitive again, borne witness to by Jesus Christ. {Even of all the things that he saw} (\hosa eiden). Relative clause in apposition with \logon and \marturian.

1:3 {Blessed} (\makarios). As in Mt 5:3ff. This endorses the book as a whole. {He that readeth} (\ho anagin^{skⁿ}). Present active singular articular participle of \anagin^{skⁿ} (as in Lu 4:16). Christians in their public worship followed the Jewish custom of public reading of the Scriptures (2Co 3:14f.). The church reader (\anagn^{st^s}, lector) gradually acquired an official position. John expects this book to be read in each of the seven churches mentioned (1:4) and elsewhere. Today the public reading of the Bible is an important part of worship that is often poorly done. {They that hear} (\hoi akouontes). Present active plural articular participle of \akou^{an} (the audience). {And keep} (\kai t^rountes). Present active participle of \t^{re}, a common Johannine word (1Jo 2:4, etc.). Cf. Mt 7:24. "The content of the Apocalypse is not merely prediction; moral counsel and religious instruction are the primary burdens of its pages" (Moffatt). {Written} (\gegrammena). Perfect passive participle of \graph^{an}. {For the time is at hand} (\ho gar kairos eggus). Reason for listening and keeping. On \kairos see Mt 12:1, time of crisis as in 1Co 7:29. How near \eggus (at hand) is we do not know any more than we do about \en tachei (shortly) in 1:1.

1:4 {To the seven churches which are in Asia} (\tais hepta ekk^lsiais tais en tⁱ Asifi). Dative case as in a letter (Ga

1:1). John is writing, but the revelation is from God and Christ through an angel. It is the Roman province of Asia which included the western part of Phrygia. There were churches also at Troas (Ac 20:5ff.) and at Colossal and Hierapolis (Col 1:1; 2:1; 4:13) and possibly at Magnesia and Tralles. But these seven were the best points of communication with seven districts (Ramsay) and, besides, seven is a favorite number of completion (like the full week) in the book (1:4,12,16; 4:5; 5:1,6; 8:2; 10:3; 11:13; 12:3; 13:1; 14:6f.). {From him which is} (\apo ho “n\). This use of the articular nominative participle of \eimi\ after \apo\ instead of the ablative is not due to ignorance or a mere slip (\lapsus pennae\), for in the next line we have the regular idiom with \apo t“n hepta pneumat“n\). It is evidently on purpose to call attention to the eternity and unchangeableness of God. Used of God in Ex 3:14. {And which was} (\kai ho ^n\). Here again there is a deliberate change from the articular participle to the relative use of \ho\ (used in place of \hos\ to preserve identity of form in the three instances like Ionic relative and since no aorist participle of \eimi\ existed). The oracle in Pausanias X. 12 has it: \Zeus ^n, Zeus esti, Zeus essetai\ (Zeus was, Zeus is, Zeus will be). {Which is to come} (\ho erchomenos\). "The Coming One," futuristic use of the present participle instead of \ho esomenos\). See the same idiom in verse 8; 4:8 and (without \ho erchomenos) in 11:17; 16:5. {From the seven spirits} (\apo t“n hepta pneumat“n\). A difficult symbolic representation of the Holy Spirit here on a par with God and Christ, a conclusion borne out by the symbolic use of the seven spirits in 3:1; 4:5; 5:6 (from Zec 4:2-10). There is the one Holy Spirit with seven manifestations here to the seven churches (Swete, _The Holy Spirit in the N.T._, p. 374), unity in diversity (1Co 12:4). {Which are} (\t“n\ article Aleph A, \ha\ relative P). {Before his throne} (\en“pion tou thronou autou\). As in 4:5f.

1:5 {Who is the faithful witness} (\ho martus ho pistos\). "The witness the faithful," nominative in apposition like \pr“totokos\ and \arch“n\ with the preceding ablative \I’sou Christou\ with \apo\, a habit of John in this book (apparently on purpose) as in 2:13,20; 3:12, etc. See this same phrase in 2:13; 3:14. The use of \martus\ of Jesus here is probably to the witness (1:1) in this book (22:16f.), not to the witness of Jesus before Pilate (1Ti 6:13). {The first-born of the dead} (\ho pr“totokos t“n nekr“n\). A Jewish Messianic title (Ps 88:28) and as in Col 1:18 refers to priority in the resurrection to be followed by others. See Lu 2:7 for the word. {The ruler of the kings of the earth} (\ho arch“n t“n basile“n t’s g’s). Jesus by his resurrection won lordship over the kings of earth (17:14; 19:16), what the devil offered him by surrender (Mt 4:8f.). {Unto him that loveth us} (\t“i agap“nti h^mfs). Dative of the articular present (not aorist \agap^santi) active participle of \agapa“\ in a doxology to Christ, the first of many others to God and to Christ (1:6; 4:11; 5:9,12f.; 7:10,12, etc.). For the thought see Joh 3:16. {Loosed} (\lusanti). First aorist active participle of \lu“\ (Aleph A C), though some MSS. (P Q) read \lousanti\ (washed), a manifest correction. Note the change of tense. Christ loosed us once for all, but loves us always. {By his blood} (\en t“i haimati autou). As in 5:9. John here as in the Gospel and Epistles states plainly and repeatedly the place of the blood of Christ in the work of redemption.

1:6 {And he made} (\kai epoi^sen). Change from the participle construction, which would be \kai poi^santi\ (first aorist active of \poie“) like \lusanti\ just before, a Hebraism Charles calls it, but certainly an anacoluthon of which John is very fond, as in 1:18; 2:2,9,20; 3:9; 7:14; 14:2f.; 15:3. {Kingdom} (\basileian). So correctly Aleph A C, not \basileis\ (P cursives). Perhaps a reminiscence of Ex 19:6, a kingdom of priests. In 5:10 we have again "a kingdom and priests." The idea here is that Christians are the true spiritual Israel in God's promise to Abraham as explained by Paul in Ga 3; Ro 9. {To be priests} (\hiereis). In apposition with \basileian\, but with \kai\ (and) in 5:10. Each member of this true kingdom is a priest unto God, with direct access to him at all times. {Unto his God and Father} (\t“i the“i kai patri autou). Dative case and \autou\ (Christ) applies to both \the“i\ and \patri\. Jesus spoke of the Father as his God (Mt 27:46; Joh 20:17) and Paul uses like language (Eph 1:17), as does Peter (1Pe 1:3). {To him} (\aut“i). Another doxology to Christ. "The adoration of Christ which vibrates in this doxology is one of the most impressive features of the book" (Moffatt). Like doxologies to Christ appear in 5:13; 7:10; 1Pe 4:11; 2Pe 3:18; 2Ti 4:18; He 13:21. These same words (\h^ doxa kai to kratos) in 1Pe 4:11, only \h^ doxa\ in 2Pe 3:18; 2Ti 4:18, but with several others in Re 5:13; 7:10.

1:7 {Behold, he cometh with the clouds} (\idou erchetai meta t“n nephel“n). Futuristic present middle indicative of \erchomai\, a reminiscence of Da 7:13 (Theodotion). "It becomes a common eschatological refrain" (Beckwith) as in Mr 13:26; 14:62; Mt 24:30; 26:64; Lu 21:27. Compare the manifestation of God in the clouds at Sinai, in the cloudy pillar, the Shekinah, at the transfiguration" (Vincent). {Shall see} (\opsetai\). Future middle of \hora“, a reminiscence of Zec 12:10 according to the text of Theodotion (Aquila and Symmachus) rather than the LXX and like that of Mt 24:30 (similar combination of Daniel and Zechariah) and 26:64. This picture of the victorious Christ in his return occurs also in 14:14, 18-20; 19:11-21; 20:7-10. {And they which} (\kai hoitines\). "And the very ones who," Romans and Jews, all who shared in this act. {Pierced} (\exekent^san\). First aorist active indicative of \ekkente“, late compound (Aristotle, Polybius, LXX), from \ek\ and \kente“ (to stab, to pierce), in N.T., only here and Joh 19:37, in both cases from Zec 12:10, but not the LXX text (apparently proof that John used the original Hebrew or the translation of Theodotion and Aquila). {Shall mourn} (\kopsontai\). Future middle (direct) of \kopt“, old verb, to cut, "they shall cut themselves," as was common for mourners (Mt 11:17; Lu 8:52; 23:27). From Zec 12:12. See also Re 18:9. {Tribes} (\phulai\). Not just the Jewish tribes, but the spiritual Israel of Jews and Gentiles as in 7:4-8. No nation had then accepted Christ as Lord and Saviour, nor has any yet done so.

1:8 {The Alpha and the Omega} (\to Alpha kai to O\). The first and the last letters of the Greek alphabet, each with its own neuter (grammatical gender) article. This description of the eternity of God recurs in 21:6 with the added explanation \h^ arch^ kai to telos\ (the Beginning and the End) and of Christ in 22:13 with the still further explanation \ho pr^tos kai ho eschatos\ (the First and the Last). This last phrase appears also in 1:17; 2:8 without \to Alpha kai to O\). The change of speaker here is unannounced, as in 16:15; 18:20. Only here and 21:5f. is God introduced as the speaker. The eternity of God guarantees the prophecy just made. {The Lord God} (\Kurios ho theos\). "The Lord the God." Common phrase in Ezekiel (Eze 6:3,11; 7:2, etc.) and in this book (4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 19:6; 21:22). See 1:4; 4:8 for the triple use of \ho\, etc. to express the eternity of God. {The Almighty} (\ho pantokrat^r\). Late compound (\pfs\ and \krate“), in Cretan inscription and a legal papyrus, common in LXX and Christian papyri, in N.T. only in 2Co 6:18 (from Jer 38:35) and Re 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7,14;

1:9 {I John} (\Eg“ I“an^s). So 22:8. In apocalyptic literature the personality of the writer is always prominent to guarantee the visions (Da 8:1; 10:2). {Partaker with you} (\sunkoin“nos). See already 1Co 9:23. "Co-partner with you" (Ro 11:17). One article with \adelphos and \sunkoin“nos unifying the picture. The absence of \apostolos here does not show that he is not an apostle, but merely his self-effacement, as in the Fourth Gospel, and still more his oneness with his readers. So there is only one article (\t^i) with \thlipsei (tribulation), \basileifi (kingdom), \hupomon^i (patience), ideas running all through the book. Both the tribulation (see Mt 13:21 for \thlipsi) and the kingdom (see Mt 3:2 for \basileia) were present realities and called for patience (\hupomon^i\ being "the spiritual alchemy" according to Charles for those in the kingdom, for which see Lu 8:15; Jas 5:7). All this is possible only "in Jesus" (\en I^sou), a phrase on a par with Paul's common \en Christ“i (in Christ), repeated in 14:13. Cf. 3:20; 2Th 3:5. {Was} (\egenom^n). Rather, "I came to be," second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai. {In the isle that is called Patmos} (\en t^i n^s“i t^i kaloumen^i Patm“i). Patmos is a rocky sparsely settled island some ten miles long and half that wide, one of the Sporades group in the Aegean Sea, south of Miletus. The present condition of the island is well described by W. E. Geil in _The Isle That Is Called Patmos_ (1905). Here John saw the visions described in the book, apparently written while still a prisoner there in exile. {For the word of God and the testimony of Jesus} (\dia ton logon tou theou kai t^i marturian I^sou). The reason for (\dia\ and the accusative) John's presence in Patmos, naturally as a result of persecution already alluded to, not for the purpose of preaching there or of receiving the visions. See verse 2 for the phrase.

1:10 {I was in the Spirit} (\egenom^n en pneumat^i). Rather, "I came to be (as in 1:9) in the Spirit," came into an ecstatic condition as in Ac 10:10f.; 22:17, not the normal spiritual condition (\einai en pneumat^i\, Ro 8:9). {On the Lord's Day} (\en t^i kuriak^i h^merfi). Deissmann has proven (_Bible Studies_, p. 217f.; _Light_, etc., p. 357ff.) from inscriptions and papyri that the word \kuriakos was in common use for the sense "imperial" as imperial finance and imperial treasury and from papyri and ostraca that \h^mera Sebast^i (Augustus Day) was the first day of each month, Emperor's Day on which money payments were made (cf. 1Co 16:1f.). It was easy, therefore, for the Christians to take this term, already in use, and apply it to the first day of the week in honour of the Lord Jesus Christ's resurrection on that day (_Didache_ 14, Ignatius _Magn_ 9). In the N.T. the word occurs only here and 1Co 11:20 (\kuriakon deipnon the Lord's Supper). It has no reference to \h^mera kuriou\ (the day of judgment, 2Pe 3:10). {Behind me} (\opis“ mou). "The unexpected, overpowering entrance of the divine voice" (Vincent). Cf. Eze 3:12. {Voice} (\ph“n^n). Of Christ, as is plain in verses 12f. {As of a trumpet} (\h“s salpiggos). So in 4:1 referring to this. {Saying} (\legous^s). Present active participle genitive case agreeing with \salpiggos\ rather than \legousan\, accusative agreeing with \ph“n^n\ . So on purpose, as is clear from 4:1, where \lalous^s\ also agrees with \salpiggos\.

1:11 {Write in a book} (\grapson eis biblion). First aorist active imperative of \graph“\ for instantaneous action. The commission covers the whole series of visions which all grow out of this first vision of the Risen Christ. {Send} (\pempson). First aorist active imperative of \pemp“\ . Part of the commission from Christ. The names of the seven churches of 1:4 are now given, and the particular message to each church comes in chapters 2 and 3 and in the same order, the geographical order going north from Ephesus, then east and south to Laodicea. But apparently the whole book was to be read to each of the seven churches. It would probably also be copied at each church.

1:12 {To see the voice} (\blepein t^n ph“n^n). The voice put for the person speaking. {Having turned} (\epistrepsas). First aorist active participle of \epistrephe“\, from which also \epestrepsa\, just before, for which verb see Ac 15:36; 16:18. {Seven golden candlesticks} (\hepta luchnias chrusas). See Mt 5:15 for \luchnia\ (lampstand). Symbols of the seven churches as explained in verse 20. See Ex 25:35ff. for description of a seven-branched candlestick, but here the lampstands are separate.

1:13 {One like unto a son of man} (\homoion huion anthr“pou). Note accusative here with \homoion\ (object of \eidon) as in 14:14 and not the associative-instrumental as is usual (1:15; 4:3,6). Charles holds that \homoion\ here has the sense of \h“s\ (as) and compares 4:6; 22:1 for proof. The absence of the article here shows also (Charles) that the idea is not "like the Son of man" for Christ is the Son of man. He is like "a son of man," but not a man. {Clothed} (\endedumenon\). Perfect passive participle of \endu“, accusative case agreeing with \homoion\.

{A garment down to the foot} (\podˆrˆ\). Old adjective \podˆrˆs\ (from \pous\, foot, and \air“), here only in N.T., accusative singular retained with the passive participle as often with verbs of clothing. Supply \chitˆna\ or \esthˆta\ (garment). {Girt about} (\periezˆsmenon\). Perfect passive participle of \perizˆnnumi\, accusative singular agreeing with \homoion\.

{At the breasts} (\pros tois mastois\). Old word for breasts of a woman (Lu 11:27; 23:29) and nipples of a man, as here. High girding like this was a mark of dignity as of the high priest (Josephus, _Ant_. III. 7. 2). For \pros\ with the locative see Mr 5:11. {With a golden girdle} (\zˆnˆn chrusfn\). Accusative case again retained with the passive participle (verb of clothing). Note also \chrusfn\ (vernacular _Koin_,) rather than the old form, \chrusˆn\.

1:14 {As white wool} (\hˆs erion leukon\). \Erion\ (wool) in N.T. only here and Heb 9:19, though old word. The person of the Lord Jesus is here described in language largely from Da 7:9 (the Ancient of Days). {White as snow} (\hˆs chiˆn\). Just "as snow," also in Da 7:9. In N.T. only here and Mt 28:3. {As a flame of fire} (\hˆs phlox puros\). In Da 7:9 the throne of the Ancient of Days is \phlox puros\, while in Da 10:6 the eyes of the Ancient of Days are \lampades puros\ (lamps of fire). See also 2:18; 19:12 for this bold metaphor (like Heb 1:7).

1:15 {Burnished brass} (\chalkolibanˆi\). Associative-instrumental case after \homoioi\.

This word has so far been found nowhere else save here and 2:18. Suidas defines it as an \ˆlecktron\ (amber) or a compound of copper and gold and silver (_aurichalcum_ in the Latin Vulgate). It is in reality an unknown metal. {As if it had been refined} (\hˆs pepuromenˆs\). Perfect passive participle of \puro“, old verb, to set on fire, to glow, as in Eph 6:16; Re 3:18. The feminine gender shows that \hˆ chalkolibanos\ is referred to with \tˆs chalkolibanou\ understood, for it does not agree in case with the associative-instrumental \chalkolibanˆi\ just before. Some would call it a slip for \pepuromenˆi\ as Aleph, and some cursives have it (taking \chalkolibanˆi\ to be neuter, not feminine). But P Q read \pepurˆmenoi\ (masculine plural), a correction, making it agree in number and gender with \podes\ (feet). {In a furnace} (\en kamin“i\). Old word, in N.T. also 9:2; Mt 13:42,50. {As the voice of many waters} (\h“s ph“n^ hudat“n poll“n\). So the voice of God in the Hebrew (not the LXX) of Eze 43:2. Repeated in 14:2; 19:6.

1:16 {And he had} (\kai ech“n\). "And having," present active participle of \ech“\, loose use of the participle (almost like \eiche\, imperfect) and not in agreement with \autou\, genitive case. This is a common idiom in the book; a Hebraism, Charles calls it. {In his right hand} (\en t^i dexifi cheiri\). For safe keeping as in Joh 10:28. {Seven stars} (\asteras hepta\). Symbols of the seven churches (verse 20), seven planets rather than Pleiades or any other constellation like the bear. {Proceeded} (\ekporeuomen^ \). Present middle participle of \ekporeuomai\, old compound (Mt 3:5) used loosely again like \ech“n\. {A sharp two-edged sword} (\romphaia distomos oxeia\). "A sword two-mouthed sharp." \Romphaia\ (as distinct from \machaira\)) is a long sword, properly a Thracian javelin, in N.T. only Lu 2:35; Re 1:16; 2:12; Heb 4:12. See \stoma\ used with \machair^s\ in Lu 21:24 (by the mouth of the sword). {Countenance} (\opsis\). Old word (from \opt“\), in N.T. only here, Joh 7:24; 11:44. {As the sun shineth} (\h“s ho h^lios phainei\). Brachylogy, "as the sun when it shines." For \phainei\ see Joh 1:5.

1:17 {I fell} (\epesa\). Late form for the old \epeson\ (second aorist active indicative of \pipt“\, to fall). Under the over-powering influence of the vision as in 19:10. {He laid} (\eth^ken\). First aorist active indicative of \tith^mi\). The act restored John's confidence. {Fear not} (\m^ phobou\). Cf. Lu 1:13 to Zacharias to give comfort. {I am the first and the last} (\eg“ eimi ho pr“tos kai ho eschatos\). Used in Isa 44:6; 48:12 of God, but here, 2:8; 22:13 of Christ. {And the Living One} (\kai ho z“n\). Present active articular participle of \za“\, another epithet of God common in the O.T. (De 32:40; Isa 49:18, etc.) and applied purposely to Jesus, with which see Joh 5:26 for Christ's own words about it.

1:18 {And I was dead} (\kai egenom^ n nekros\). "And I be came dead" (aorist middle participle of \ginomai\ as in 1:9,10, definite reference to the Cross). {I am alive} (\z“n eimi\). Periphrastic present active indicative, "I am living," as the words \ho z“n\ just used mean. {Forevermore} (\eis tous ai“nas t“n ai“n“n\). "Unto the ages of the ages," a stronger expression of eternity even than in 1:6. {The keys} (\tas kleis\). One of the forms for the accusative plural along with \kleidas\, the usual one (Mt 16:19). {Of death and of Hades} (\tou thanatou kai tou hfidou\). Conceived as in Mt 16:18 as a prison house or walled city. The keys are the symbol of authority, as we speak of honouring one by giving him the keys of the city. Hades here means the unseen world to which death is the portal. Jesus has the keys because of his victory over death. See this same graphic picture in 6:8; 20:13f. For the key of David see 3:7, for the key of the abyss see 9:1; 20:1.

1:19 {Therefore} (\oun\). In view of Christ's words about himself in verse 18 and the command in verse 11. {Which thou sawest} (\ha eides\). The vision of the Glorified Christ in verses 13-18. {The things which are} (\ha eisin\). Plural verb (individualising the items) though \ha\ is neuter plural, certainly the messages to the seven churches (1:20-3:22) in relation to the world in general, possibly also partly epexegetic or explanatory of \ha eides\. {The things which shall come to pass hereafter} (\ha mellei ginesthai meta tauta\). Present middle infinitive with \mellei\, though both aorist and future are also used. Singular verb here (\mellei\) blending in a single view the future. In a rough outline this part begins in 4:1 and goes to end of chapter 22, though the future appears also in chapters 2 and 3 and the present occurs in 4 to 22 and the elements in the vision of Christ (1:13-18) reappear repeatedly.

1:20 {The mystery of the seven stars} (\to must^rion t^"n hepta aster^"n\). On the word \must^rion\ see on ^Mt 13:11; 2Th 2:7; Col 1:26. Here it means the inner meaning (the secret symbol) of a symbolic vision (Swete) as in 10:7; 13:18; 17:7,9; Da 2:47. Probably the accusative absolute (Charles), "as for the mystery" (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 490, 1130), as in Ro 8:3. This item is picked out of the previous vision (1:16) as needing explanation at once and as affording a clue to what follows (2:1,5). {Which} (\hous\). Masculine accusative retained without attraction to case of \aster^"n\ (genitive, h^"n). {In my right hand} (\epi t^s dexias mou\). Or "upon," but \en t^i\, etc., in verse 16. {And the seven golden candlesticks} (\kai tas hepta luchnias tas chrusfs\). "The seven lampstands the golden," identifying the stars of verse 16 with the lampstands of verse 12. The accusative case here is even more peculiar than the accusative absolute \must^rion\, since the genitive \luchni“n\ after \must^rion\ is what one would expect. Charles suggests that John did not revise his work. {The angels of the seven churches} (\aggeloi t“n hepta ekkl^si“n\). Anarthrous in the predicate (angels of, etc.). "The seven churches" mentioned in 1:4,11. Various views of \aggelos\ here exist. The simplest is the etymological meaning of the word as messenger from \aggell“\ (Mt 11:10) as messengers from the seven churches to Patmos or by John from Patmos to the churches (or both). Another view is that \aggelos\ is the pastor of the church, the reading \t^n gunaika sou\ (thy wife) in 2:20 (if genuine) confirming this view. Some would even take it to be the bishop over the elders as \episcopos\ in Ignatius, but a separate \aggelos\ in each church is against this idea. Some take it to be a symbol for the church itself or the spirit and genius of the church, though distinguished in this very verse from the churches themselves (the lampstands). Others take it to be the guardian angel of each church assuming angelic patrons to be taught in Mt 18:10; Ac 12:15. Each view is encompassed with difficulties, perhaps fewer belonging to the view that the "angel" is the pastor. {Are seven churches} (\hepta ekkl^siai eisin\). These seven churches (1:4,11) are themselves lampstands (1:12) reflecting the light of Christ to the world (Mt 5:14-16; Joh 8:12) in the midst of which Christ walks (1:13).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {In Ephesus} (\en Ephes“i\). Near the sea on the river Cayster, the foremost city of Asia Minor, the temple-keeper of Artemis and her wonderful temple (Ac 19:35), the home of the magic arts (Ephesian letters, Ac 19:19) and of the mystery-cults, place of Paul's three years' stay (Ac 19:1-10; 20:17-38), where Aquila and Priscilla and Apollos laboured (Ac 18:24-28), where Timothy wrought (I and II Tim.), where the Apostle John preached in his old age. Surely it was a place of great privilege, of great preaching. It was about sixty miles from Patmos and the messenger would reach Ephesus first. It is a free city, a seat of proconsular government (Ac 19:38), the end of the great road from the Euphrates. The port was a place of shifting sands, due to the silting up of the mouth of the Cayster. Ramsay (Letters to the Seven Churches, p. 210) calls it "the City of Change." {These things} (\tade\). This demonstrative seven times here, once with the message to each church (2:1,8,12,18; 2:1,7,14), only once elsewhere in N.T. (Ac 21:11). {He that holdeth} (\ho krat“n\). Present active articular participle of \krate“, a stronger word than \ech“n\ in 1:16, to which it refers. {He that walketh} (\ho peripat“n\). Present active articular participle of \peripate“, an allusion to 1:13. These two epithets are drawn from the picture of Christ in 1:13-18, and appropriately to conditions in Ephesus describe Christ's power over the churches as he moves among them.

2:2 {I know} (\oida\). Rather than \gin“sk“\ and so "emphasizes better the absolute clearness of mental vision which photographs all the facts of life as they pass" (Swete). So also in 2:9,13,19; 3:1,8,15. For the distinction see Joh 21:17, "where the universal knowledge passes into the field of special observation." {Works} (\erga\). The whole life and conduct as in Joh 6:29. {And thy toil and patience} (\kai ton kopon kai t^nhupomon^nsou\). "Both thy toil and patience," in explanation of \erga\, and see 1Th 1:3, where all three words (\ergon, kopos, hupomon^)\ occur together as here. See 14:13 for sharp distinction between \erga\ (activities) and \kopoi\ (toils, with weariness). Endurance (\hupomon^)\ in hard toil (\kopos\). {And that} (\kai hoti\). Further explanation of \kopos\ (hard toil).

{Not able} (\ou dun^i\). This _Koin,_ form for the Attic \dunasai\ (second person singular indicative middle) occurs also in Mr 9:22; Lu 16:2. {Bear} (\bastasai\). First aorist active infinitive of \bastaz^, for which verb see Joh 10:31; 12:6; Ga 6:2. These evil men were indeed a heavy burden. {And didst try} (\kai epeirasas\). First aorist active indicative of \peiraz^, to test, a reference to a recent crisis when these Nicolaitans (verse 6) were condemned. The present tenses (\dun^i, echeis\ indicate the continuance of this attitude. Cf. 1Jo 4:1. {Which call themselves apostles} (\tous legontas heautous apostolous\). Perhaps itinerant missionaries of these Nicolaitans who posed as equal to or even superior to the original apostles, like the Judaizers so described by Paul (2Co 11:5,13; 12:11). Paul had foretold such false teachers (Gnostics), grievous wolves, in Ac 20:29; in sheep's clothing, Jesus had said (Mt 7:15). {And they are not} (\kai ouk eisin\). A parenthesis in Johannine style (Joh 2:9; 3:9; 1Jo 3:1) for \kai ouk ontas\ to correspond to \legontas\. {And didst find} (\kai heures\). Second aorist active indicative of \heurisk^, to find. Dropping back to the regular structure parallel with \epeirasas\, {False} (\pseudeis\). Predicate accusative plural of \pseud^s, self-deceived deceivers as in 21:8.

2:3 {Thou hast} (\echeis\). Continued possession of patience. {Didst bear} (\ebastasas\). First aorist indicative of \bastaz^, repeated reference to the crisis in verse 2. {And hast not grown weary} (\kai ou kekopiakes\). Perfect active indicative of \kopia^, old verb, to grow weary (Mt 6:28), play on the word \kopos, late form in \-es, for the regular \-as\ (\lelukas\). like \aph^kes\ (verse 4) and \pept^kes\ (verse 5). "Tired in loyalty, not of it. The Ephesian church can bear anything except the presence of impostors in her membership" (Moffatt).

2:4 {This against thee, that} (\kata sou hoti\). For the phrase "have against" see Mt 5:23. The \hoti\ clause is the object of \ech^, to have against. {Thou didst leave} (\aph^kes\). First aorist active (kappa aorist, but with \-es instead of \-as) of \aphi^mi, a definite and sad departure. {Thy first love} (\t^n agap^n sou t^n pr^t^n\). "Thy love the first." This early love, proof of the new life in Christ (1Jo 3:13f.), had cooled off in spite of their doctrinal purity. They had remained orthodox, but had become unloving partly because of the controversies with the Nicolaitans.

2:5 {Remember} (\mn^moneue\). Present active imperative of \mn^moneu“, "continue mindful" (from \mn^m^“n\). {Thou art fallen} (\pept^“kes\). Perfect active indicative of \pipt^“, state of completion. Down in the valley, look up to the cliff where pure love is and whence thou hast fallen down. {And repent} (\kai metano^son\). First aorist active imperative of \metano^“, urgent appeal for instant change of attitude and conduct before it is too late. {And do} (\kai poi^son\). First aorist active imperative of \poie^“, "Do at once." {The first works} (\ta pr^“ta erga\). Including the first love (Ac 19:20; 20:37; Eph 1:3ff.) which has now grown cold (Mt 24:12). {Or else} (\ei de m^“\). Elliptical condition, the verb not expressed (\metano^eis\), a common idiom, seen again in verse 16, the condition expressed in full by \ean m^“ in this verse and verse 22. {I come} (\erchomai\). Futuristic present middle (Joh 14:2f.). {To thee} (\soi\). Dative, as in 2:16 also. {Will move} (\kin^s^“\). Future active of \kine^“. In Ignatius' Epistle to Ephesus it appears that the church heeded this warning. {Except thou repent} (\ean m^ metano^s^is\). Condition of third class with \ean m^“ instead of \ei m^“ above, with the first aorist active subjunctive of \metano^“\.

2:6 {That thou hatest} (\hoti miseis\). Accusative object clause in apposition with \touto\ (this). Trench tells of the words used in ancient Greek for hatred of evil (\misopon^ria\ and \misopon^ros\ (hater of evil), neither of which occurs in the N.T., but which accurately describe the angel of the church in Ephesus. {Of the Nicolaitans} (\t^“n Nikolait^“n\). Mentioned again in verse 15 and really meant in verse 2. Irenaeus and Hippolytus take this sect to be followers of Nicolaus of Antioch, one of the seven deacons (Ac 6:5), a Jewish proselyte, who is said to have apostatized. There was such a sect in the second century (Tertullian), but whether descended from Nicolaus of Antioch is not certain, though possible (Lightfoot). It is even possible that the Balaamites of verse 14 were a variety of this same sect (verse 15). {Which I also hate} (\ha kag^“ mis^“\). Christ himself hates the teachings and deeds of the Nicolaitans (\ha\, not \hous\, deeds, not people), but the church in Pergamum tolerated them.

2:7 {He that hath an ear} (\ho ech^“n ous\). An individualizing note calling on each of the hearers (1:3) to listen (2:7,11,17,28; 3:3,6,13,22) and a reminiscence of the words of Jesus in the Synoptics (Mt 11:15; 13:9,43; Mr 4:9,23; Lu 8:8; 14:35), but not in John's Gospel. {The spirit} (\to pneuma\). The Holy Spirit as in 14:13; 22:17. Both Christ and the Holy Spirit deliver this message. "The Spirit of Christ in the prophet is the interpreter of Christ's voice" (Swete). {To him that overcometh} (\t*"i nik"*nti\). Dative of the present (continuous victory) active articular participle of \nika"\, a common Johannine verb (Joh 16:33; 1Jo 2:13f; 4:4; 5:4f.; Re 2:7,11,17,26; 3:5,12,21; 5:5; 12:11; 15:2; 17:14; 21:7). Faith is dominant in Paul, victory in John, faith is victory (1Jo 5:4). So in each promise to these churches. {I will give} (\d*"s"\). Future active of \did"mi\ as in 2:10,17,23,26,28; 3:8,21; 6:4; 11:3; 21:6. {To eat} (\phagein\). Second aorist active infinitive of \esthi"\. {Of the tree of life} (\ek tou xulou t"s z"*^s\). Note \ek\ with the ablative with \phagein\, like our "eat of" (from or part of). From Ge 2:9; 3:22. Again in Re 22:2,14 as here for immortality. This tree is now in the Garden of God. For the water of life see 21:6; 22:17 (Cf. Joh 4:10,13f.). {Which} (\ho\). The \xulon\ (tree). {In the Paradise of God} (\en t*"i paradeis"*i tou theou\). Persian word, for which see Lu 23:43; 2Co 12:4. The abode of God and the home of the redeemed with Christ, not a mere intermediate state. It was originally a garden of delight and finally heaven itself (Trench), as here.

2:8 {In Smyrna} (\en Smurn*"i*\). North of Ephesus, on a gulf of the Aegean, one of the great cities of Asia (province), a seat of emperor-worship with temple to Tiberius, with many Jews hostile to Christianity who later join in the martyrdom of Polycarp, poor church (rich in grace) which receives only praise from Christ, scene of the recent massacre of Greeks by the Turks. Ramsay (_op. cit._, p. 251) terms Smyrna "the City of Life." Christianity has held on here better than in any city of Asia. {The first and the last} (\ho pr*"tos kai ho eschatos*\). Repeating the language of 1:17. {Which was dead} (\hos egeneto nekros\). Rather, "who became dead" (second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai) as in 1:18. {And lived again} (\kai ez*"sen*\). First aorist (ingressive, came to life) active of \za"\ (\ho z*"n\ in 1:18*). Emphasis on the resurrection of Christ.

2:9 {Thy tribulation and thy poverty} (\sou t*"n thlipsin kai pt"*cheian\). Separate articles of same gender, emphasizing each item. The tribulation was probably persecution, which helped to intensify the poverty of the Christians (Jas 2:5; 1Co 1:26; 2Co 6:10; 8:2). In contrast with the wealthy church in Laodicea (3:17). {But thou art rich} (\alla plousios ei). Parenthesis to show the spiritual riches of this church in contrast with the spiritual poverty in Laodicea (3:17), this a rich poor church, that a poor rich church. Rich in grace toward God (Lu 12:21) and in good deeds (1Ti 6:18). Perhaps Jews and pagans had pillaged their property (Heb 10:34), poor as they already were. {Blasphemy} (\blasph^mian). Reviling believers in Christ. See Mr 7:22. The precise charge by these Jews is not indicated, but see Ac 13:45. {Of them which say} (\ek t^"n legont^"n). "From those saying" (\ek\ with the ablative plural of the present active articular participle of \leg^"). {They are Jews} (\Ioudaious einai heautous). This is the accusative of general reference and the infinitive in indirect discourse after \leg^" (Ac 5:36; 8:9) even though \legont^"n is here ablative (cf. 3:9), common idiom. These are actual Jews and only Jews, not Christians. {And they are not} (\kai ouk eisin). Another parenthesis like that in 2:2. These are Jews in name only, not spiritual Jews (Ga 6:15f., Ro 2:28). {A synagogue of Satan} (\sunag^"g^ tou Satanf). In 3:9 again and note 2:13,24, serving the devil (Joh 8:44) instead of the Lord (Nu 16:3; 20:4).

2:10 {Fear not} (\m^ phobou). As in 1:17. Worse things are about to come than poverty and blasphemy, perhaps prison and death, for the devil "is about to cast" (\mellei ballein), "is going to cast." {Some of you} (\ex hum^"n). Without \tinas (some) before \ex hum^"n, a common idiom as in 3:9; 11:19; Lu 11:49. {That ye may be tried} (\hina peirasth^te). Purpose clause with \hina and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \peiraz^". John himself is in exile. Peter and John had often been in prison together. James the brother of John, Paul, and Peter had all suffered martyrdom. In 3:10 a general persecution is outlined by \peirasmos. {Ye shall have} (\hexete). Future active, but some MSS. read \ech^te (present active subjunctive with hina, "that ye may have"). {Tribulation ten days} (\thlipsin h^mer^"n deka). "Tribulation of ten days" (or "within ten days"). It is unwise to seek a literal meaning for ten days. Even ten days of suffering might seem an eternity while they lasted. {Be thou faithful} (\ginou pistos). "Keep on becoming faithful" (present middle imperative of \ginomai), "keep on proving faithful unto death" (Heb 12:4) as the martyrs have done (Jesus most of all). {The crown of life} (\ton stephanon t^ˆs z^ˆ“ˆs\). See this very image in Jas 1:12, a familiar metaphor in the games at Smyrna and elsewhere in which the prize was a garland. See also 3:11. The crown consists in life (2:7). See Paul's use of \stephanos\ in 1Co 9:25; 2Ti 4:8.

2:11 {Shall not be hurt} (\ou m^ˆ adik^ˆth^ˆi\). Strong double negative with first aorist passive subjunctive of \adike“, old verb, to act unjustly (from \adikos\), here to do harm or wrong to one, old usage as in 6:6; 7:2f.; 9:4,10; 11:5. {Of the second death} (\ek tou thanatou tou deuterou\). \Ek\ here used for the agent or instrument as often (3:18; 9:2; 18:1). See 20:6,14; 21:8 where "the second death" is explained as "the lake of fire." The idea is present in Da 12:3; Joh 5:29 and is current in Jewish circles as in the Jerusalem Targum on De 33:6 and in Philo. It is not annihilation. The Christians put to death in the persecution will at least escape this second death (eternal punishment).

2:12 {In Pergamum} (\en Pergam^ˆi\). In a north-easterly direction from Smyrna in the Caicus Valley, some fifty-five miles away, in Mysia, on a lofty hill, a great political and religious centre. Ramsay (Op. cit., p. 281) calls it "the royal city, the city of authority." Eumenes II (B.C. 197-159) extended it and embellished it with many great buildings, including a library with 200,000 volumes, second only to Alexandria. The Kingdom of Pergamum became a Roman province B.C. 130. Pliny termed it the most illustrious city of Asia. Parchment (\charta Pergamena\) derived its name from Pergamum. It was a rival of Ephesus in the temples to Zeus, Athena, Dionysos, in the great grove Nicephorium (the glory of the city). Next to this was the grove and temple of Asklepios, the god of healing, called the god of Pergamum, with a university for medical study. Pergamum was the first city in Asia (A.D. 29) with a temple for the worship of Augustus (Octavius Caesar). Hence in the Apocalypse Pergamum is a very centre of emperor-worship "where Satan dwells" (2:13). Here also the Nicolaitans flourished (2:15) as in Ephesus (2:6) and in Thyatira (2:20f.). Like Ephesus this city is called temple-sweeper (\ne^ˆkoros\) for the gods. {The sharp two-edged sword} (\t^ˆn romphaian t^ˆn distomon t^ˆn oxeian\). This item repeated from 1:16 in the same order of words with the article three times (the sword the two-mouthed the sharp) singling out each point.

2:13 {Where} (\pou--hopou). \Pou is interrogative adverb used here in an indirect question as in Joh 1:39. \Hopou is relative adverb referring to \pou. Satan's throne (\ho thronos tou Satanf). Satan not simply resided in Pergamum, but his "throne" or seat of power of king or judge (Mt 19:28; Lu 1:32,52). The symbol of Asklepios was the serpent as it is of Satan (12:9; 20:2). There was, besides, a great throne altar to Zeus cut on the Acropolis rock, symbol of "rampant paganism" (Swete) and the new Caesar-worship with the recent martyrdom of Antipas made Pergamum indeed a very throne of Satan. {Holdest fast my name} (\krateis to onoma sou). Present active indicative of \krate, "dost keep on holding," as in 2:25, 3:11. This church refused to say \Kurios Kaisar (_Martyrd. Polyc_. 8f.) and continued to say \Kurios I'sous (1Co 12:3). They stood true against the emperor-worship. {Didst not deny} (\ouk ^rn^s). First aorist middle second person singular of \arneomai. Reference to a specific incident not known to us. {My faith} (\t^n pistin mou). Objective genitive, "thy faith in me." {Of Antipas} (\Antipas). Indeclinable in this form. It is possible that \Antipa (genitive) was really written, though unimportant as the nominative follows in apposition. Nothing is really known of this early martyr in Pergamum before the writing of the Apocalypse. One legend is that he was burnt to death in a brazen bull. Other martyrs followed him at Pergamum (Agathonice, Attalus, Carpus, Polybus). {My witness} (\ho martus mou). Nominative in apposition with a genitive as in 1:5 (with ablative), common solecism in the Apocalypse. "Witness" as Jesus had said they should be (Ac 1:8) and Stephen was (Ac 22:20) and others were (Re 17:6). The word later (by third century) took on the modern meaning of martyr. {My faithful one} (\ho pistos mou). Nominative also, with \mou also. Jesus gives Antipas his own title (Swete) as in 1:5; 3:14. Faithful unto death. {Was killed} (\apektanth^). First aorist passive indicative of \apoktein, this passive form common in the Apocalypse (?2:13; 6:11; 5:9,13; 13:10,15; 18, 20; 19:21?). {Among you} (\par humin). By your side. Proof of the throne of Satan, "where Satan dwells" (\hopou ho Satanfs katoikei), repeated for emphasis.

2:14 {There} (\ekei). That is \par' humin (among you). A party in the church that resisted emperor-worship, to the death in the case of Antipas, yet were caught in the insidious wiles of the Nicolaitans which the church in Ephesus withstood. {Some that hold} (\kratountas\). "Men holding" (present active participle of \krate“\). {The teaching of Balaam} (\t^n didach^n Balaam\). Indeclinable substantive Balaam (Nu 25:1-9; 31:15f.). The point of likeness of these heretics with Balaam is here explained. {Taught Balak} (\edidasken t^i Balak\). Imperfect indicative of \didask“, Balaam's habit, "as the prototype of all corrupt teachers" (Charles). These early Gnostics practised licentiousness as a principle since they were not under law, but under grace (Ro 6:15). The use of the dative with \didask“ is a colloquialism rather than a Hebraism. Two accusatives often occur with \didask“. {To cast a stumbling-block} (\balein skandalon\). Second aorist active infinitive (accusative case after \edidasken) of \ball“, regular use with \skandalon\ (trap) like \tith^mi skandalon\ in Ro 14:13. Balaam, as Josephus and Philo also say, showed Balak how to set a trap for the Israelites by beguiling them into the double sin of idolatry and fornication, which often went together (and do so still). {To eat things sacrificed to idols} (\phagein eid^lothuta\). Second aorist active infinitive of \esthi“ and the verbal adjective (from \eid^lon\ and \thu“), quoted here from Nu 25:1f., but in inverse order, repeated in other order in verse 20. See Ac 15:29; 21:25; 1Co 8:1ff. for the controversy over the temptation to Gentile Christians to do what in itself was harmless, but which led to evil if it led to participation in the pagan feasts. Perhaps both ideas are involved here. Balaam taught Balak how to lead the Israelites into sin in both ways.

2:15 {So thou also} (\hout^s kai su\). Thou and the church at Pergamum as Israel had the wives of Balaam. {The teaching of the Nicolaitans likewise} (\t^n didach^n t^n Nikolait^n homoi^s\). See on 1:6 for the Nicolaitans. The use of \homoi^s\ (likewise) here shows that they followed Balaam in not obeying the decision of the Conference at Jerusalem (Ac 15:20,29) about idolatry and fornication, with the result that they encouraged a return to pagan laxity of morals (Swete). Some wrongly hold that these Nicolaitans were Pauline Christians in the face of Col 3:5-8; Eph 5:3-6.

2:16 {Repent therefore} (\metano^son oun\). First aorist (tense of urgency) active imperative of \metanoē“ with the inferential particle \oun\ (as a result of their sin). {I come} (\erchomai\). Futuristic present middle indicative, "I am coming" (imminent), as in 2:5 with \tachu\ as in 3:11; 11:14; 22:7,12,20. As with \en tachei\ (I:I), we do not know how soon "quickly" is meant to be understood. But it is a real threat. {Against them} (\met' aut'ˆn\). This proposition with \polemeˆ\ rather than \kata\ (against) is common in the LXX, but in the N.T. only in Re 2:16; 12:7; 13:4; 17:14 and the verb itself nowhere else in N.T. except Jas 4:2. "An eternal roll of thunder from the throne" (Renan). "The glorified Christ is in this book a Warrior, who fights with the sharp sword of the word" (Swete). {With} (\en\). Instrumental use of \en\. For the language see 1:16; 2:12; 19:15.

2:17 {Of the hidden manna} (\tou manna tou kekrummenou\). "Of the manna the hidden" (perfect passive articular participle of \krupˆ\). The partitive genitive, the only N.T. example with \didˆmi\, though Q reads \to\ (accusative) here. For examples of the ablative with \apo\ and \ek\ see Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 519. See Joh 6:31,49 for the indeclinable word \manna\. The golden pot of manna was "laid up before God in the ark" (Ex 16:23). It was believed that Jeremiah hid the ark, before the destruction of Jerusalem, where it would not be discovered till Israel was restored (II Macc. 2:5ff.). Christ is the true bread from heaven (Joh 6:31-33, 48-51) and that may be the idea here. Those faithful to Christ will have transcendent fellowship with him. Swete takes it to be "the life-sustaining power of the Sacred Humanity now hid with Christ in God." {A white stone} (\psˆphon leukˆn\). This old word for pebble (from \psaˆ\, to rub) was used in courts of justice, black pebbles for condemning, white pebbles for acquitting. The only other use of the word in the N.T. is in Ac 26:10, where Paul speaks of "depositing his pebble" (\katˆnegka psˆphon\) or casting his vote. The white stone with one's name on it was used to admit one to entertainments and also as an amulet or charm. {A new name written} (\onoma kainon gegrammenon\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \graphˆ\. Not the man's own name, but that of Christ (Heitmuller, _Im Namen Jˆsu_, p. 128-265). See 3:12 for the name of God so written on one. The man himself may be the \psˆphos\ on which the new name is written. "The true Christian has a charmed life" (Moffatt). {But he that receiveth it} (\ei mˆ ho lambanˆn\). "Except the one receiving it." See Mt 11:27 for like intimate and secret knowledge between the Father and the Son and the one to whom the Son wills to reveal the Father. See also Re 19:12.

2:18 {In Thyatira} (\en Thuateirois\). Some forty miles south-east of Pergamum, a Lydian city on the edge of Mysia, under Rome since B.C. 190, a centre of trade, especially for the royal purple, home of Lydia of Philippi (Ac 16:14f.), shown by inscriptions to be full of trade guilds, Apollo the chief deity with no emperor-worship, centre of activity by the Nicolaitans with their idolatry and licentiousness under a "prophetess" who defied the church there. Ramsay calls it "Weakness Made Strong" (_op. cit._, p. 316). {The Son of God} (\ho huios tou theou\). Here Jesus is represented as calling himself by this title as in Joh 11:4 and as he affirms on oath in Mt 26:63f. "The Word of God" occurs in 19:13. {His eyes like a flame of fire} (\tous ophthalmous autou h" s phloga puros\). As in 1:14. {His feet like burnished brass} (\hoi podes autou homoioi chalkoliban" i\). As in 1:15.

2:19 {Thy works} (\sou ta erga\) . As in 2:2 and explained (explanatory use of \kai\ =namely) by what follows. Four items are given, with separate feminine article for each (\tⁿ agapⁿ, tⁿ pistin, tⁿ diakonian, tⁿ hupomonⁿ\), a longer list of graces than in 2:2 for Ephesus. More praise is given in the case of Ephesus and Thyatira when blame follows than in the case of Smyrna and Philadelphia when no fault is found. Love comes first in this list in true Johannine fashion. Faith (\pistin\) here may be "faithfulness," and ministry (\diakonian\) is ministration to needs of others (Ac 11:29; 1Co 16:15). {And that} (\kai\). Only \kai\ (and) in the Greek, but doubtless \hoti\ (that) is understood. {Than the first} (\tⁿ prⁿ tⁿ\). Ablative after the comparative \pleiona\ (more).

2:20 {Thou sufferest} (\apheis\). Late vernacular present active indicative second person singular as if from a form \aphe" instead of the usual \aphi^{mi}\ forms. {The woman Jezebel} (\tⁿ gunaika Iezabel\). Symbolical name for some prominent woman in the church in Thyatira, like the infamous wife of Ahab who was guilty of whoredom and witchcraft (1Ki 16:31; 2Ki 9:22) and who sought to drive out the worship of God from Israel. Some MSS. here (A Q 40 min.s) have \sou\ (thy wife, thy woman Ramsay makes it), but surely Aleph C P rightly reject \sou\. Otherwise she is the pastor's wife! {Which calleth herself a prophetess} (\h[^] legousa heautⁿ proph^{tin}\). Nominative articular participle of \leg" in apposition with the accusative \gunaika\ like \ho martus\ in apposition with \Antipas\ in 2:13. \Proph^{tis}\ is an old word, feminine form for \proph^ts\, in N.T. only here and Lu 2:36 (Anna), two extremes surely. See Ac 21:9 for the daughters of Philip who prophesied. {And she teacheth and seduceth} (\kai didaskei kai planfi\). A resolution of the participles (didaskousa kai plan“sa\ into finite verbs (present active indicatives) as in 1:5f. This woman was not a real prophetess, but a false one with loud claims and loose living. One is puzzled to know how such a woman had so much shrewdness and sex-appeal as to lead astray the servants of God in that church. The church tolerated the Nicolaitans and this leader whose primary object was sexual immorality (Charles) and became too much involved with her to handle the heresy.

2:21 {I gave her time} (\ed“ka autⁱ chronon\). First aorist active indicative of \did“mi\, allusion to a definite visit or message of warning to this woman. {That she should repent} (\hina metano^si\). Sub-final use of \hina\ with first aorist active subjunctive of \metanoē“. {And she willeth not} (\kai ou thelei\). "And she is not willing." Blunt and final like Mt 23:37. {To repent of} (\metano^{sai} ek\). First aorist (ingressive) active infinitive with \ek\, "to make a change out of," the usual construction with \metanoē“ in this book (2:22; 9:20ff.; 16:11), with \apo\ in Ac 8:22. \Porneia\ (fornication) here, but \moicheu“\ (to commit adultery) in verse 22.

2:22 {I do cast} (\ball“\). Futuristic present active indicative rather than the future \bal“\, since judgment is imminent. {Into a bed} (\eis klinⁿ\). "A bed of sickness in contrast with the bed of adultery" (Beckwith). {Them that commit adultery with her} (\tous moicheuontas met' aut^s\). Present active articular participle accusative plural of \moicheu“\. The actual paramours of the woman Jezebel, guilty of both \porneia\ (fornication, verse 21) and \moicheia\ (adultery), works of Jezebel of old and of this Jezebel. There may be also an allusion to the spiritual adultery (2Co 11:2) towards God and Christ as of old (Jer 3:8; 5:7; Eze 16:22). {Except they repent} (\ean m[^] metano^{sousin}\). Condition of first class with \ean m[^]\ and the future active indicative of \metanoē“, put in this vivid form rather than the aorist subjunctive (\-“sin\) third-class condition. {Of her works} (\ek t“n erg“n aut^s\). \Aut^s\ (her) correct rather than \aut“n\ (their). Jezebel was chiefly responsible.

2:23 {I will kill with death} (\apokten“en thanat“i\). Future (volitive) active of \apoktein“\ with the tautological (cognate) \en thanat“i\ (in the sense of pestilence) as in Eze 33:27. {Her children} (\ta tekna aut^s\). Either her actual children, like the fate of Ahab's sons (2Ki 10:7) or "her spiritual progeny" (Swete) who have completely accepted her Nicolaitan practices. {Shall know} (\gn“sontai\). Future (ingressive punctiliar) middle of \gin“sk“\, "shall come to know." "The doom of the offenders was to be known as widely as the scandal had been" (Charles). {Searcheth} (\eraun“n\). Present active articular participle of \erauna“\, to follow up, to track out, late form for \ereuna“\, from Jer 17:10. {Reins} (\nephrous\). Old word for kidneys, here only in N.T., quoted also with \kardias\ from Jer 17:10. See 22:17 for the reward of punishment.

2:24 {To you the rest} (\humin tois loipois\). Dative case. Those who hold out against Jezebel, not necessarily a minority (9:20; 19:21; 1Th 4:13). {As many as} (\hosoì\). Inclusive of all "the rest." {This teaching} (\t^n didach^n taut^n\). That of Jezebel. {Which} (\hoitines\). "Which very ones," generic of the class, explanatory definition as in 1:7. {Know not} (\ouk egn“san\). Second aorist (ingressive) active of \gin“sk“\, "did not come to know by experience." {The deep things of Satan} (\ta bathea tou Satanf\). The Ophites (worshippers of the serpent) and other later Gnostics (Cainites, Carpocratians, Naassenes) boasted of their knowledge of "the deep things," some claiming this very language about Satan (the serpent) as Paul did of God (1Co 2:10). It is not clear whether the words here quoted are a boast of the Nicolaitans or a reproach on the other Christians for not knowing the depths of sin. Some even claimed that they could indulge in immorality without sinning (1Jo 1:10; 3:10). Perhaps both ideas are involved. {As they say} (\h“s legousin\). Probably referring to the heretics who ridicule the piety of the other Christians. {None other burden} (\ou--allo baros\). \Baros\ refers to weight (Mt 20:12), \phortion\, from \pher“\, to bear, refers to load (Ga 6:5), \ogkos\ to bulk (Heb 12:1). Apparently a reference to the decision of the Jerusalem Conference (Ac 15:28) where the very word \baros\ is used and mention is made about the two items in verse 20 (fornication and idolatry) without mentioning the others about things strangled, etc. See the Pharisaic narrowness in Mt 23:4.

2:25 {Howbeit} (\pl^{\text{n}}). Common after \ouk allo as a preposition with the ablative (Mr 12:32), but here a conjunction as in Php 1:18. {Hold fast} (\krat^{\text{sate}}). First aorist active imperative of \krate^{\text{}}, either ingressive (get a grip on) or constative (hold on as a single decisive effort). See present imperative \kratei in 3:11 (keep on holding). {Till I come} (\achri hou an h^{\text{x}}). Indefinite temporal clause with \achri hou (until which time) with modal \an and either the future active indicative or the first aorist active subjunctive of \h^{\text{k}} (usual idiom with \achri\ in Revelation as in 7:3; 15:8; 20:3,5).

2:26 {He that overcometh and he that keepeth} (\ho nik^{\text{n}} kai ho t^{\text{r}}^{\text{n}}). Present active articular participles of \nika^{\text{}} and \t^{\text{re}} in the nominative absolute (_nominativus pendens_) as in 3:12,21, resumed by the dative \aut^{\text{i}} (to him), as in verses 7,17. {Unto the end} (\achri telous). That is, \achri hou an h^{\text{xo}} above. {Authority over the nations} (\exousian epi t^{\text{n}} ethn^{\text{n}}). From Ps 2:8f. The followers of the Messiah will share in his victory over his enemies (1:6; 12:5; 19:15).

2:27 {He shall rule} (\poimanei). Future active of \poimain^{\text{}}, to shepherd (from \poim^{\text{n}}, shepherd), also from Ps 2:8f. See again Re 7:17; 12:5; 19:15. {With a rod of iron} (\en rabd^{\text{i}} sid^{\text{r}}fi). Continuing the quotation. Instrumental use of \en. \Rabdos (feminine) is the royal sceptre and indicates rigorous rule. {The vessels of the potter} (\ta skeu^{\text{ta}} keramika). Old adjective, belonging to a potter (\kerameus, keramos), here only in N.T. {Are broken to shivers} (\suntribetai). Present passive indicative of \suntrib^{\text{}}, old verb, to rub together, to break in pieces (Mr 14:3).

2:28 {As I also have received} (\h^{\text{s}} kag^{\text{e}} il^{\text{pha}}). Perfect active indicative of \lamban^{\text{}}. Christ still possesses the power from the Father (Ac 2:33; Ps 2:7). {The morning star} (\ton astra ton pr^{\text{inon}}). "The star the morning one." In 22:16 Christ is the bright morning star. The victor will have Christ himself.

3:1 {In Sardis} (\en Sardesin\). Some thirty miles south-east of Thyatira, old capital of Lydia, wealthy and the home of Croesus, conquered by Cyrus and then by Alexander the Great, in B.C. 214 by Antiochus the Great, at the crossing of Roman roads, in a plain watered by the river Pactolus, according to Pliny the place where the dyeing of wool was discovered, seat of the licentious worship of Cybele and the ruins of the temple still there, called by Ramsay (op. cit., p. 354) "the city of Death," city of softness and luxury, of apathy and immorality, "a contrast of past splendour and present unrelenting decline" (Charles). Along with Laodicea it was blamed most of all the seven churches. {That hath the seven Spirits of God} (\ho ech"n ta hepta pneumata tou theou\). For which picture of the Holy Spirit see 1:4. {And the seven stars} (\kai tous hepta asteras\). As in 1:16,20. {A name that thou livest} (\onoma hoti z'is\). A name in contrast with reality. The \hoti\ clause in apposition with \onoma\ {And thou art dead} (\kai nekros ei\). "The paradox of death under the name of life" (Swete). Not complete (a nucleus of life) death (verse 2), but rapidly dying. See the picture in Jas 2:17; 2Co 6:9; 2Ti 3:5.

3:2 {Be thou watchful} (\ginou gr'gor"n\). Periphrastic imperative with present middle of \ginomai\ (keep on becoming) and present active participle of \gr'gore" (\late present from perfect \egr'gora\ and that from \egeir", as in Mt 24:42) and see 16:15 for \gr'gore" also. He does not say "Arise from the dead" (Eph 5:14), for there are vestiges of life. Those still alive are addressed through the angel of the church. {Stablish the things that remain} (\st'risson ta loipa\). First aorist active imperative of \st'riz", to make stable. Those not actually dead, but in grave peril. See a like command to Titus in Crete (Tit 1:5). Every new pastor faces such a problem. {Which were ready to die} (\ha emellon apothanein\). Imperfect active plural because the individuals, though neuter plural, are regarded as living realities. The imperfect looking on the situation "with a delicate optimism" (Swete) as having passed the crisis, a sort of epistolary imperfect. {For I have found no works of thine} (\ou gar heur'ka sou erga\). "For I have not found any works of thine." Perfect active indicative of \heurisk˘\, "The church as a whole represented by \sou\ (thy). {Fulfilled} (\pepl˘r˘˘mena\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \pl˘ro˘\, "Their works have not measured up to God's standard (\en˘˘pion tou theou mou\).

3:3 {Remember} (\mn˘moneue\). "Keep in mind," as in 2:5. {Therefore} (\oun\). Resumptive and coordinating as in 1:19; 2:5. {Thou hast received} (\eil˘phas\). Perfect active indicative of \lamban˘\, "as a permanent deposit" (Vincent). {Didst hear} (\˘kousas\). First aorist active indicative, the act of hearing at the time. {And keep it} (\kai t˘rei\). Present active imperative of \t˘re˘\, "hold on to what thou hast." {And repent} (\kai metano˘son\). First aorist active imperative of \metanoē˘\, "Turn at once." {If therefore thou shalt not watch} (\ean oun m˘gr˘gor˘s˘is\). Condition of third class with \ean m˘\ and the first aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \gr˘gore˘\, "if then thou do not wake up." {I will come} (\h˘x˘\). Certainly future active here, though probably aorist subjunctive in 2:25. {As a thief} (\h˘˘s klept˘s\). As Jesus had already said (Mt 24:43; Lu 12:39), as Paul had said (1Th 5:2), as Peter had said (2Pe 3:10), as Jesus will say again (Re 16:15). {Thou shalt not know} (\ou m˘gn˘is\). Strong double negative \ou m˘\ with second aorist active subjunctive of \gin˘sk˘\, though some MSS. have the future middle indicative \gn˘s˘i\, "What hour" (\poian h˘˘ran\). A rare classical idiom (accusative) surviving in the _Koin_, rather than the genitive of time, somewhat like Joh 4:52; Ac 20:16 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 470f.). Indirect question with \poian\.

3:4 {A few names} (\oliga onomata\). This use of \onoma\ for persons is seen in the _Koin_, (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 196f.) as in Ac 1:15; Re 11:13. {Did not defile} (\ouk emolunan\). First aorist active indicative of \molun˘\ (1Co 8:7; 1Pe 1:4), pollution. {They shall walk} (\peripat˘sousin\). Future active of \peripate˘\, promise of fellowship with Christ (\met˘ emou\, with me) "in white" (\en leukois\), as symbols of purity (7:9,13) like the angel (Mt 28:3), with possibly a reference to Enoch (Ge 5:22). For they are worthy (\hoti axioi eisin\). To walk with Christ, not worthy in the same sense as God and Christ (4:11; 5:9), but in a relative sense. See Re 16:6 for bad sense of \axios\.

3:5 {Shall be arrayed} (\peribaleitai\). Future middle indicative of \periball“\, to fling around one, here and in 4:4 with \en\ and the locative, but usually in this book with the accusative of the thing, retained in the passive or with the middle (7:9,13; 10:1; 11:3; 12:1; 17:4; 18:16; 19:8,13). {In white garments} (\en himatiois leukois\). Apparently the spiritual bodies in the risen life as in 2Co 5:1,4 and often in Revelation (3:4,5; 6:11; 7:9,13f.; 19:8). {I will in no wise blot out} (\ou m[^] exaleips“\). Strong double negative \ou m[^]\ and the first aorist active (or future) of \exaleiph“\, old word, to wipe out (Ac 3:19). {Of the book of life} (\ek t[^]s biblou t[^]s z“[^]s\). Ablative case with \ek\. This divine register first occurs in Ex 32:32f. and often in the O.T. See Lu 10:20; Php 4:3; Re 13:8; 20:15; 21:27. The book is in Christ's hands (13:8; 21:27). {His name} (\to onoma autou\). The name of the one who overcomes (\ho nik“n\). Clear reminiscence of the words of Christ about confessing to the Father those who confess him here (Mt 10:32; Mr 8:38; Lu 9:26; 12:8). Whether John knew the Synoptic Gospels (and why not?) he certainly knew such sayings of Jesus.

3:7 {In Philadelphia} (\en Philadelphifi\). Some twenty-eight miles south-east of Sardis, in Lydia, subject to earthquakes, rebuilt by Tiberius after the great earthquake of A.D. 17, for a time called in coins Neo-Caesarea, in wine-growing district with Bacchus (Dionysos) as the chief deity, on fine Roman roads and of commercial importance, though not a large city, called by Ramsay (_op. cit._, p. 392) "the Missionary City" to promote the spread of the Graeco-Roman civilization and then of Christianity, later offering stubborn resistance to the Turks (1379-90 A.D.) and now called Ala-Sheher (reddish city, Charles, from the red hills behind it). The chief opposition to the faithful little church is from the Jews (cf. Ro 9-11). There are some 1,000 Christians there today. {The holy, he that is true} (\ho hagios, ho al[^]thinos\). Separate articles (four in all) for each item in this description. "The holy, the genuine." Asyndeton in the Greek. Latin Vulgate, _Sanctus et Verus_. \Ho hagios\ is ascribed to God in 4:8; 6:10 (both \hagios\ and \al[^]thinos\ as here), but to Christ in Mr 1:24; Lu 4:34; Joh 6:69; Ac 4:27,30; 1Jo 2:20, a recognized title of the Messiah as the consecrated one set apart. Swete notes that \al[^]thinos\ is _verus_ as distinguished from _verax_ (\al[^]th[^]s\). So it is applied to God in 6:10 and to Christ in 3:14; 19:11 as in Joh 1:9; 6:32; 15:1. {He that hath the key of David} (\ho ech“n t[^]n klein Daueid\). This epithet comes from Isa 22:22, where Eliakim as the chief steward of the royal household holds the keys of power. Christ as the Messiah (Re 5:5; 22:16) has exclusive power in heaven, on earth, and in Hades (Mt 16:19; 28:18; Ro 14:9; Php 2:9f.; Re 1:18). Christ has power to admit and exclude of his own will (Mt 25:10f.; Eph 1:22; Re 3:21; 19:11-16; 20:4; 22:16). {And none shall shut} (\kai oudeis kleisei\). Charles calls the structure Hebrew (future active indicative of \klei“), and not Greek because it does not correspond to the present articular participle just before \ho anoig“n\ (the one opening), but it occurs often in this book as in the very next clause, "and none openeth" (\kai oudeis anoigei\) over against \klei“n\ (present active participle, opening) though here some MSS. read \kleiei\ (present active indicative, open).

3:8 {I have set} (\ded“ka\). Perfect active indicative of \did“mi\, "I have given" (a gift of Christ, this open door). See Lu 12:51 for a like use of \did“mi\. {A door opened} (\thuran^ne“igmen^n\). Perfect (triple reduplication) passive predicate participle of \anoig“\ (verse 7) accusative feminine singular. The metaphor of the open door was a common one (Joh 10:7-9; Ac 14:27; 1Co 16:9; 2Co 2:12; Col 4:3; Re 3:20; 4:1). Probably it means here a good opportunity for missionary effort in spite of the Jewish hostility. {Which} (\h^n--aut^n\). Pleonastic vernacular and Hebrew repetition of the personal pronoun \aut^n\ (it) after the relative \h^n\ (which). Direct reference to the statement in verse 7. {That} (\hoti\). This conjunction resumes the construction of \oida sou ta erga\ (I know thy works) after the parenthesis (\idou--aut^n\, Behold--shut). {A little power} (\mikran dunamin\). Probably "little power," little influence or weight in Philadelphia, the members probably from the lower classes (1Co 1:26f.). {And didst keep} (\kai et^r^sas\). "And yet (adversative use of \kai) didst keep" (first aorist active indicative of \t^re“) my word in some crisis of trial. See Joh 17:6 for the phrase "keeping the word." {Didst not deny} (\ouk^rn^s“\). First aorist middle indicative second person singular of \arneomai\. The issue was probably forced by the Jews (cf. 2:9), but they stood true.

3:9 {I give} (\did“\). Late omega form for \did“mi\, but the \-mi\ form in 17:13 (\didoasin\). These Jewish converts are a gift from Christ. For this use of \did“mi\ see Ac 2:27; 10:40; 14:3. There is ellipse of \tinaz\ before \ek\ as in 2:10 (\ex hum“n\) and see 2:9 for "the synagogue of Satan." {Of them which say } (t^h“n legont^h“n). Ablative plural in apposition with \sunag^h“g^hs. On the construction of \heautous Ioudaious einai see on 2:9 (Ioudaious einai heautous, the order of words being immaterial). {But do lie} (alla pseudontai). Present middle indicative of \pseudomai, explanatory positive, addition here to \kai ouk eisin of 2:9, in contrast also with \ho al^hthinos of verse 7 and in Johannine style (Joh 8:44; 1Jo 1:10; 2:4). {I will make them} (poi^hs^h“ autous). Future active indicative of \poie^h“, resuming the prophecy after the parenthesis (t^h“n--pseudontai, which say--but do lie). {To come and worship} (hina h^hxousin kai proskun^hsousin). "That they come and worship" (final clause, like _facio ut_ in Latin, with \hina and the future active of h^hk^h“ and \proskune^h“). The language is based on Isa 45:14; 60:14. The Jews expected homage (not worship in the strict sense) from the Gentiles, but it will come to the Christians at last (1Co 14:24). Later Ignatius (_Philad_. 6) warns this church against Judaizing Christians, perhaps one result of an influx of Jews. {And to know} (kai gn^h“sin). Continuation of the purpose clause with \hina, but with the second aorist active subjunctive rather than the less usual future indicative. See both constructions also with \hina in 22:14. Probably a reminiscence of Isa 43:4 in \eg^h“ ^gap^hsa se (I loved thee), first aorist active indicative.

3:10 {Patience} (hupomen^hs). "Endurance" as in 13:10; 14:12 as also in 2Th 3:5. {Thou didst keep} (et^hr^hsas) {--I also will keep} (kag^h“ t^hr^hs^h“). Aorist active indicative and future active corresponding to each other. For a like play on the tenses of this verb by Christ see Joh 17:6 (tet^hr^hkan), Joh 17:11 (t^hr^hson), Joh 17:12 (et^hroun). {From the hour of trial} (ek t^hs h^h“ras tou peirasmou). This use of \ek after t^hre^h“ in Joh 17:15, \apo in Jas 1:27. Trial brings temptation often (Jas 1:2,13). Jesus endured (Heb 12:1f.) and he will help them. There is still a church in Philadelphia in spite of the Turks. {Which is to come} (t^hs mellous^hs erchesthai). Agreeing with h^h“ras (feminine), not with \peirasmou (masculine). {Upon the whole world} (epi t^hs epoikoumen^hs hol^hs). The inhabited earth (g^hs) as in Re 12:19; Lu 2:1; Ac 16:6, etc.), not the physical earth, but the world of men as explained by the next clause. {To try} (peirasai). First aorist active infinitive of purpose from \peiraz^h“, probably to tempt (cf. the demons in 9:1-21), not merely to afflict (2:10). {That dwell upon the earth} (tous katoikountas epi t^hs g^hs). Present active articular participle of \katoike“, explaining "the whole world" just before.

3:11 {I come quickly} (\erchomai tachu\). As in 2:16; 22:7,12,20. "The keynote of the book" (Beckwith). But allow the author's own meaning of "quickly." {Hold fast that which thou hast} (\kratei ho echeis\). Sort of motto for each church (2:25). {That no one take} (\hina m^deis lab^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban“. Here to take away "thy crown" (2:10) which will be thine if really won and not forfeited by failure (2Ti 4:8). In that case it will go to another (Mt 25:28; Ro 11:17f.).

3:12 {He that overcometh} (\ho nik“n\). Nominative absolute as in 2:26, resumed by the accusative \auton\ (him). {A pillar} (\stulon\). Old word for column, in N.T. only here, 10:1; Ga 2:9; 1Ti 3:15. Metaphorical and personal use with a double significance of being firmly fixed and giving stability to the building. Philadelphia was a city of earthquakes. "Temple" (\naos\) here is also metaphorical (7:15), as in 1Ti 3:15 for the people of God. In 21:22 we read that there is no temple in the heavenly Jerusalem (21:10-22:5) descending as the new Jerusalem with God himself as the temple, though the metaphorical temple is mentioned in 7:15. {He shall go out thence no more} (\ex“ou m^elth^i\). Strong double negative \ou m^ with the second aorist active subjunctive of \erchomai\. The subject is \ho nik“n\ (the one overcoming). "Fixity of character is at last achieved" (Charles). He, like the \stulos\ (pillar), remains in place. {Upon him} (\ep' auton\). Upon \ho nik“n\ (the victor), not upon the pillar (\stulos\). He receives this triple name (of God, of the city of God, of Christ) on his forehead (14:1; 7:3; 17:5; 22:4) just as the high-priest wore the name of Jehovah upon his forehead (Ex 28:36,38), the new name (2:17), without any magical or talismanic power, but as proof of ownership by God, as a citizen of the New Jerusalem, with the new symbol of the glorious personality of Christ (Re 19:12), in contrast with the mark of the beast on others (13:17; 14:17). For citizenship in God's city see Ga 4:26; Php 3:20; Heb 11:10; 12:22; 13:14. {The new Jerusalem} (\t^s kain^s Ierousal^m\). Not \neas\ (young), but \kain^s\ (fresh). See also 21:2,10 and already Ga 4:26; Heb 12:22. Charles distinguishes between the Jerusalem before the final judgment and this new Jerusalem after that event. Perhaps so! In the Apocalypse always this form

\Ierousal^m\ (3:12; 21:2,10), but in John's Gospel \Hierosoluma\ (1:19, etc.). {Which cometh down} (\h^ katabainousa). Nominative case in apposition with the preceding genitive \pole^s\ as in 1:5; 2:20, etc. {Mine own new name} (\to onoma mou to kainon\). For which see 2:17; 19:12,16.
 Christ himself will receive a new name along with all else in the future world (Gressmann).

3:14 {In Laodicea} (\en Laodikifi\). Forty miles south-east of Philadelphia and some forty miles east of Ephesus, the last of the seven churches addressed with special messages, on the river Lycus on the border of Phrygia, near Colossae and Hierapolis, recipient of two letters by Paul (Col 4:16), on the great trade-route from Ephesus to the east and seat of large manufacturing and banking operations (*especially of woollen carpets and clothing, Ramsay, _Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia_,
 p. 40ff.*), centre of the worship of Asklepios and seat of a medical school and also of a provincial court where Cicero lived and wrote many of his letters, home of many Jews, called by Ramsay (_op. cit., p. 413) "the City of Compromise," the church here founded apparently by Epaphras (Col 1:7; 4:12f.), now a deserted ruin, one of six cities with this name (meaning justice of the people). No praise is bestowed on this church, but only blame for its lukewarmness. {The Amen} (\ho Am^n\). Personal (masculine article) name here alone, though in Isa 65:16 we have "the God of Amen" understood in the LXX as "the God of truth" (\ton theon ton al^thinon\). Here applied to Christ. See 1:5 for \ho martus ho pistos\ (the faithful witness) and 3:7
 for \ho al^thinos\ (the genuine), "whose testimony never falls short of the truth" (Swete). {The beginning of the creation of God} (\h^ arch^ t^s ktise^s tou theou\). Not the first of creatures as the Arians held and Unitarians do now, but the originating source of creation through whom God works (Col
 1:15,18, a passage probably known to the Laodiceans, Joh 1:3; Heb 1:2, as is made clear by 1:18; 2:8; 3:21; 5:13).

3:15 {Neither cold} (\oute psuchros\). Old word from \psuch^, to grow cold (Mt 24:12), in N.T. only Mt 10:42 and this passage.
 {Nor hot} (\oute zestos\). Late verbal from \ze^, to boil, (Ro 12:11), boiling hot, here only in N.T. {I would thou wert} (\ophelon ^s\). Wish about the present with \ophelon\ (really \^phelon\, second aorist active indicative of \opheil^, without augment) with the imperfect \^s\ (instead of the infinitive) as in 2Co 11:1, when the old Greek used \eithe\ or \ei gar\. See 1Co 4:8 for the aorist indicative and Ga 5:12 for the future.

3:16 {Lukewarm} (\chliaros\). Tepid. Old adjective from \chli“, to liquefy, to melt, here alone in N.T. {I will} (\mell“\). "I am about to," on the point of. {Spew thee} (\se emesai\). First aorist active infinitive of \eme“, old verb to vomit, to reject with extreme disgust, here alone in N.T.

3:17 {I am rich} (\hoti plousios eimi\). Recitative \hoti\ like quotation marks before direct quotation. Old adjective from \ploutos\, riches, wealth. Laodicea was a wealthy city and the church "carried the pride of wealth into its spiritual life" (Swete). {Have gotten riches} (\peploutˆka\). Perfect active indicative of \ploute“, old verb from \ploutos\, used here of imagined spiritual riches which the church did not possess, just the opposite of church in Smyrna (poor in wealth, rich in grace). This church was in a rich city and was rich in pride and conceit, but poor in grace and ignorant of its spiritual poverty (\ouk oidas\, knowest not). {The wretched one} (\ho talaipˆros\). Old adjective from \tla“, to endure, and \pˆros\, a callus, afflicted, in N.T. only here and Ro 7:24. Note the one article in the predicate with all these five adjectives unifying the picture of sharp emphasis on "thou" (\su\), "thou that boastest." {Miserable} (\eleeinos\). Pitiably as in 1Co 15:19. {Poor} (\ptˆchos\). See 2:9 for spiritual poverty. Perhaps some local example of self-complacency is in mind. {Blind} (\tuphlos\). Spiritual blindness as often (Mt 23:17), and note "eye-salve" in verse 18. {Naked} (\gumnos\). "The figure completes the picture of actual poverty" (Beckwith). See 15,16.

3:18 {I counsel} (\sumbouleu“\). Present active indicative, old compound from \sumboulos\, counsellor (Ro 11:34), as in Joh 18:14. Almost ironical in tone. {To buy} (\agorasai\). First aorist active infinitive of \agoraz“\ (from \agora\, market-place), rich as they think themselves to be. {From me} (\par' emou\). From my side, emphatic. {Refined by fire} (\pepurˆmenon ek puros\). Perfect passive participle of \puro“, (as in 1:15) and the metaphor carried on by \ek puros\, "fired by fire." Purity by removing dross (Ps 66:10) like 1Pe 1:7. {That thou mayest become rich} (\hina ploutˆsˆis\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the ingressive first aorist active of \ploute“, spiritual riches. {That thou mayest clothe thyself} (\hina peribalˆi\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist middle (direct) subjunctive of \periball“\, to fling round one as in 3:5. {Be not made manifest} (\m^phaner“th^i\). Continued purpose clause with negative \m^ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \phanero“\, {Nakedness} (\gumnot^tos\). Late and rare word from \gumnos\, naked, in N.T. only here, 2Co 11:27; Ro 8:35. Cf. Re 16:15; 20:13; 2Co 5:2f. {Eye-salve} (\kollourion\). Diminutive of \kollura\ (coarse bread of cylindrical shape), object of \agorasai\, name for a famous Phrygian powder for the eyes made in Laodicea (Charles), Latin _collyrium_ (used for eye-salve by Horace and Juvenal). {To anoint} (\egchrisai\). First aorist active infinitive (epexegetic) of \egchri“\, late compound (\en, chri“\, Strabo, Epictetus), to rub in, here only in N.T. {That thou mayest see} (\hina blep^is\). Another purpose clause with \hina\ and the present active subjunctive (keep on seeing).

3:19 Free rendering of Pr 3:12 (in Heb 12:6), but with \hous ean\ (indefinite relative plural) for \hon\ (definite relative singular), with \phil“\ instead of \agapfi\ and with the first person \paideu“\ for \paideuei\ (the Lord chastens, from \pais\, child, training a child) and with \elegch“\ (reprove) added. {Be zealous} (\z^leue\). Present active imperative of \z^leu“\, in good sense (from \z^los, ze“\, to boil), in opposition to their lukewarmness, here only in N.T. (elsewhere \z^lo“\, "keep on being zealous.") {Repent} (\metano^son\). Ingressive first aorist active imperative of \metanoe“\.

3:20 {I stand at the door} (\hest^ka epi t^n thuran\). Perfect active of \hist^mi\ (intransitive). Picture of the Lord's advent as in Mt 24:33; Jas 5:9, but true also of the individual response to Christ's call (Lu 12:36) as shown in Holman Hunt's great picture. Some see a use also of So 5:2. {If any man hear--and open} (\ean tis akous^i kai anoix^i\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and first aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \akou“\ and \anoig“\, See Joh 10:3; 18:37. See the picture reversed (Swete) in Lu 13:25; Mt 25:10. {I will come in to him} (\eiseleusomai\). Future middle of \eiserchomai\, See Mr 15:43; Ac 11:3 for \eiserchomai pros\, to go into a man's house. Cf. Joh 14:23. {Will sup} (\deipn^s“\). Future active of \deipne“\, old verb, from \deipnon\ (supper), as in Lu 17:8. Fellowship in the Messianic kingdom (Lu 22:30; Mr 14:25; Mt 26:29). Purely metaphorical, as is plain from 1Co 6:13.

3:21 {He that overcometh} (\ho nik“n\). Absolute nominative again as in 3:12, but resumed this time by the dative \aut“i\ as in 2:26. {To sit} (\kathisai\). First aorist active infinitive of \kathiz“\ . This promise grows out of the prophecy that the saints will share in the Messiah's rule, made to the twelve (Mt 19:28; Lu 22:29f.), repeated by Paul (1Co 6:2f.), enlarged in Re 22:1-5 (to last forever, 2Ti 2:11f.). James and John took this hope and promise literally (Mr 10:40) not metaphorically. {As I also overcame} (\h“s kag“ enik^sa\). First aorist active indicative of \nika“\, looking back on the victory as over in the past. In Joh 16:33 before the Cross Jesus says \Eg“ nenik^ka ton kosmon\ (perfect active), emphasizing the abiding effect of the victory. {Sat down} (\ekathisa\). "I took my seat" (Heb 1:3) where Christ is now (Re 22:3; Col 3:1). Cf. 1Jo 5:4; Re 2:27f. Each of these seven messages begins alike and ends alike. Each is the message of the Christ and of the Holy Spirit to the angel of the church. Each has a special message suited to the actual condition of each church. In each case the individual who overcomes has a promise of blessing. Christ the Shepherd knows his sheep and lays bare the particular peril in each case.

4:1 {After these things} (\meta tauta\). Change in the panorama, not chronology (7:1,9; 15:5; 18:1; 19:1). This vision is of heaven, not of earth as was true of chapters Re 1; 2. The first vision of Christ and the messages to the seven churches began in 1:12f. This new vision of the throne in heaven (4:1-11) succeeds that to which it here alludes. {I saw} (\eidon\). Second aorist active indicative of \hora\ "I saw". {Behold} (\idou\). Exclamation of vivid emotion as John looked. No effect on the structure and nominative case \thura\ (door) follows it. {Opened} (\^ne"igmen^). Perfect (triple reduplication) passive participle of \anoig\ as in 3:8 (door of opportunity) and 3:20 (door of the heart), here the door of revelation (Swete). {In heaven} (\en t"i ouran"i\). As in Eze 1:1; Mr 1:10; Joh 1:51. In Revelation always in singular except 12:12. {The first} (\h^ pr"t\). Reference is to 1:10. {Speaking} (\lalous^s\). From \lale\, rather \legous^s\ of 1:10 from \leg\, both agreeing with \salpiggos\ (trumpet). {Saying} (\leg"n\). Present active participle of \leg\ repeating the idea of \lalous^s\, but in the nominative masculine singular construed with \ph"n^ (feminine singular), construction according to sense because of the person behind the voice as in 11:15; 19:14. {Come up} (\anaba\). Short _Koin,_ form for \anab^thi\ (second aorist active imperative second person singular of anabain). {Hither} (\h"de\). Originally "here," but vernacular use (Joh 6:25; 10:27). {I will show} (\deix\). Future active of \deiknumi\ in same sense in 1:1. {Hereafter} (\meta tauta\). Some editors (Westcott and Hort) connect these words with the beginning of verse 2.

4:2 {Straightway I was in the Spirit} (\euthe"s egenom^n en pneumatì\). But John had already "come to be in the Spirit" (1:10, the very same phrase). Perhaps here effective aorist middle indicative while ingressive aorist in 1:10 (sequel or result, not entrance), "At once I found myself in the Spirit" (Swete), not "I came to be in the Spirit" as in 1:10. {Was set} (\ekeito\). Imperfect middle of \keimai\, old verb, used as passive of \tith^mi\). As the vision opens John sees the throne already in place as the first thing in heaven. This bold imagery comes chiefly from 1Ki 22:19; Isa 6:1ff.; Eze 1:26-28; Da 7:9f.

One should not forget that this language is glorious imagery, not actual objects in heaven. God is spirit. The picture of God on the throne is common in the O.T. and the N.T. (Mt 5:34f.; 23:22; Heb 1:3 and in nearly every chapter in the Revelation, 1:4, etc.). The use of \kath^{menos} (sitting) for the name of God is like the Hebrew avoidance of the name _Jahweh_ and is distinguished from the Son in 6:16; 7:10. {Upon the throne} (\epi ton thronon). \Epi\ with the accusative, as in 4:4; 6:2,4f.; 11:16; 20:4, but in verses 9,10, 4:1,7,13; 6:16; 7:15 we have \epi tou thronou\ (genitive), while in 7:10; 19:14; 21:5 we have \epi tⁱ thronⁱ\ (locative) with no great distinction in the resultant idea.

4:3 {To look upon} (\horasei). Locative case of \horasis\, old word (from \hora^u, to see) for appearance (in appearance) as in Eze 1:5,26. {Like a jasper stone} (\homoios iaspidi). Associative-instrumental case of \iaspis\, old word (Persian), used for stones of different colors, one opaque like opal, one translucent (21:11,18f., possibly here, only N.T. examples), one a red or yellow stone (Isa 54:12). Some even take it for the diamond. Certainly not our cheap modern jasper. {A sardius} (\sardiⁱ). Old word, in N.T. only here and 21:20. The carnelian or other red stone, derived from Sardis (Pliny). {Rainbow} (\iris). Old word, in N.T. only here and 10:1. From Eze 1:28. {An emerald} (\smaragdinⁱ). Adjective (from \smaragdos, Re 21:19), of emerald (supply \lithⁱ), in associative instrumental case after \homoios\. John sees no form for God (Ex 24:10), but only the brilliant flashing gems. "In the vision the flashing lustre of the \iaspis\ and the fiery red of the \sard\ are relieved by the halo (\iris) of emerald which encircled the Throne" (Swete). A complete circle.

4:4 {Round about the throne} (\kuklothen tou thronou). Here as a preposition with the genitive, though only adverb in 4:8 (only N.T. examples save Textus Rec. in 5:11). {Four and twenty thrones} (\thronoi eikosi tessares). So P Q, but Aleph A have accusative \thronous\ (supply \eidon\ from 4:1) and \tessares\ (late accusative in -es). This further circle of thrones beyond the great throne. {I saw four and twenty elders} (\eikosi tessaras presbuterous). No \eidon\ in the text, but the accusative case calls for it. Twenty-four as a symbolic number occurs only in this book and only for these elders (4:4,10; 5:8; 11:16; 19:4). We do not really know why this number is chosen, perhaps two elders for each tribe, perhaps the twelve tribes and the twelve apostles (Judaism and Christianity), perhaps the twenty-four courses of the sons of Aaron (1Ch 24:1-19), perhaps some angelic rank (Col 1:16) of which we know nothing. Cf. Eph 2:6. {Sitting} (\kath^menous). Upon their thrones. {Arrayed} (\peribeb^l^menous). Perfect passive participle of \periball^“ (to throw around). {In white garments} (\himatiois leukois). Locative case here as in 3:5 (with \en), though accusative in 7:9,13. {Crowns of gold} (\stephanous chrusous). Accusative case again like \presbuterous after \eidon (4:1), not \idou. In 19:14 \ech^“n (having) is added. John uses \diad^ma (diadem) for the kingly crown in 12:3; 13:1; 19:12, but it is not certain that the old distinction between \diadem as the kingly crown and \stephanos as the victor's wreath is always observed in late Greek.

4:5 {Out of the throne} (\ek tou thronou). Back to the throne itself. The imagery is kin to that in Ex 19:16; 24:9f.; Eze 1:22,27. {Proceed} (\ekporeuontai). Graphic historical present. {Lightnings and voices and thunders} (\astrapai kai ph^“nai kai brontai). So exactly in 11:19; 16:18, but in 8:5 with \brontai first, \astrapai last, all old and common words. "The thunderstorm is in Hebrew poetry a familiar symbol of the Divine power: cf., e.g., 1Sa 2:10; Ps 18:9f.; Job 37:4f." (Swete). {Seven lamps of fire} (\hepta lampades purois). Return to the nominative (\idou, not \eidon) with \^san (were) understood. Metaphor drawn from Eze 1:13; Zec 4:12ff. Our word "lamp," but here a torch as in 8:10, identified with the Holy Spirit (the Seven Spirits of God) as in 1:4; 3:1, not \luchniai (lampstands) as in 1:12,20, nor \luchnos a hand-lamp with oil (Mt 5:15). "These torches blaze perpetually before the throne of God" (Swete).

4:6 {As it were a glassy sea} (\h^“s thalassa hualin^“). Old adjective (from \hualos, glass, 21:18,21), in N.T. only here and 15:2. Possibly from \huei (it rains), like a raindrop. At any rate here it is the appearance, not the material. Glass was made in Egypt 4,000 years ago. In Ex 24:10 the elders see under the feet of God in the theophany a paved work of sapphire stone (cf. Eze 1:26). The likeness of the appearance of sky to sea suggests the metaphor here (Beckwith). {Like crystal} (\homoia krustall^“i). Associative-instrumental case after \homoia. Old word, from \kruos (ice and sometimes used for ice), in N.T. only here and 22:1, not semi-opaque, but clear like rock-crystal.

{In the midst of the throne} (\en mes“i tou thronou\). As one looks from the front, really before. {Round about the throne} (\kukl“i tou thronou\). Merely an adverb in the locative case (Ro 15:19), as a preposition in N.T. only here, 5:11; 7:11. This seems to mean that on each of the four sides of the throne was one of the four living creatures either stationary or moving rapidly round (Eze 1:12f.). {Four living creatures} (\tessera z“a\). Not \th^ria\ (beasts), but living creatures. Certainly kin to the \z“a\ of Eze 1; 2 which are cherubim (Eze 10:2,20), though here the details vary as to faces and wings with a significance of John's own, probably representing creation in contrast with the redeemed (the elders). {Full of eyes} (\gemonta ophthalm“n\). Present active participle of \gem“\, to be full of, with the genitive, signifying here unlimited intelligence (Beckwith), the ceaseless vigilance of nature (Swete).

4:7 {Like a lion} (\homoion leonti\). Associative-instrumental case again. In Eze (1:6,10) each \z“on\ has four faces, but here each has a different face. "The four forms represent whatever is noblest, strongest, wisest, and swiftest in nature" (Swete). But it is not necessary to try to find a symbolism in each face here like the early baseless identification with the Four Evangelists (the lion for Mark, the man for Matthew, the calf for Luke, the eagle for John). \Moschos\ is first a sprout, then the young of animals, then a calf (bullock or heifer) as in Lu 15:23, 27,30, or a full-grown ox (Eze 1:10). {Had} (\ech“n\). Masculine singular (some MSS. \echon\ neuter singular agreeing with \z“on\) present active participle of \ech“\, changing the construction with the \triton z“on\ almost like a finite verb as in verse 8. {A face as of a man} (\pros“pon h“s anthr“pou\). Shows that the likeness in each instance extended only to the face. {Like an eagle flying} (\homoion aet“i petomen“i\). Present middle participle of \petomai\, to fly, old verb, in N.T. only in Re 4:7; 8:13; 12:14; 14:6; 19:17. The \aetos\ in Mt 24:28; Lu 17:37 may be a form of vulture going after carrion, but not in Re 8:13; 12:14.

4:8 {Each one of them} (\hen kath' hen aut“n\). "One by one of them," a vernacular idiom like \heis kata heis\ in Mr 14:19. {Having} (\ech“n\). Masculine participle again as in verse 7, though \z“on\ neuter. {Six wings} (\ana pterugas hex\). Distributive use of \ana\, "six wings apiece" as in Lu 10:1

(\ana duo\, by twos). Like Isa 6:2, not like Eze 1:6, where only four wings are given apiece. {Are full of} (\gemousin\). Plural verb, though \z“a\ neuter, to individualize each one. {Round about and within} (\kuklothen kai es“then\). Perhaps before and behind (4:6) and under the wings, "pointing to the secret energies of nature" (Swete). {Rest} (\anapausin\). See also 14:11. Old word (from \anapau“\, to relax), as in Mt 11:29. God and Christ cease not their activity (Joh 5:17). "This ceaseless activity of nature under the hand of God is a ceaseless tribute of praise" (Swete). {Day and night} (\h^meras kai nuktos\). Genitive of time, by day and by night. {Holy, holy, holy} (\hagios, hagios, hagios\). "The task of the Cherubim together with the Seraphim and Ophannim is to sing the praises of God" (Charles) in the \trisagion\ (triple repetition of \hagios\). {Is the Lord God} (\Kurios ho theos\). See Isa 6:3. The copula \estin\ (is) is not expressed, but is implied. {The Almighty} (\ho pantokrat“r\). See on 1:8. {Which was and which is and which is to come} (\ho ^n kai ho “n kai ho erchomenos\). Just as in 1:4,8, but with the order changed.

4:9 {When the living creatures shall give} (\hotan d“sousin ta z“a\). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the future active indicative (\d“sousin\) rather than the more common second aorist active subjunctive (\d“sin\) with the notion of repetition rather than unbroken continuance, "whenever they give." The giving of praise and glory to God by the four living creatures (representatives of nature) is met by corresponding worship by the redeemed (the four and twenty elders). "Created life adores the Uncreated" (Swete), "to the one living for ages of ages."

4:10 {Shall fall down} (\pesountai\, future middle of \pipt“\), {shall worship} (\proskun^sousin\, future active of \proskune“\), {shall cast their crowns} (\balousin tous stephanous\, future active of \ball“\). The two actions by the two groups (living creatures, elders) are coordinated (simultaneous in the repetition). They thus acknowledge that all this kingly dignity comes from God, who is King of kings and Lord of lords. Charles takes the elders, however, to be angels, not redeemed men.

4:11 {Our Lord and our God} (\ho kurios kai ho theos h^m“n\). The nominative form here used as vocative as in Joh 20:28 and often. {To receive} (\labein\). Epexegetic second aorist active infinitive of \lamban“\ with \axios\ (worthy). {The glory} (\t^n doxan\). The article referring to \doxan\ in verse 9 and so with \t^{\n} tim^{\n}\ (the honour), though \t^{\n} dunamin\ (the power) is not in verse 9, but is the power due to be ascribed to God. {Thou didst create} (\su ektisas\). Emphasis on \su\ (thou), first aorist active indicative of \ktiz^{\n}\, the verb used about the act of creation by Paul in Col 1:16 (\ektisth^{\n}, ektistai\), constative aorist giving a summary picture of the whole (not as a process). {Because of thy will} (\dia to the^{\n}ma sou\). Reason for creation of the universe as in Heb 2:10 (\di' hon\). {They were} (\^{\n}san\). Imperfect tense with a cursory glance at the universe as a fact, possibly a potential existence in God's purpose in the eternal past before the actual creation in time. {And were created} (\kai ektisth^{\n}san\). First aorist passive indicative of the same verb, \ktiz^{\n}\, just used and in the plural, while Paul (Col 1:16) uses the singular \ektisth^{\n}\. See 1Co 8:6. God's will wrought through the Logos (Christ).

5:1 {In the right hand} (\epi tⁿ dexian\). "Upon the right hand" (\epi\, not \en\), the open palm. Anthropomorphic language drawn from Eze 2:9f. {A book} (\biblion\). Diminutive of \biblos\, but no longer so used, \biblaridion\ occurring instead (10:2). {Written} (\gegrammenon\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \graph\“. {Within and on the back} (\es“then kai opisthen\). "Within and behind." Description of a roll like that in Lu 4:17, not a codex as some scholars think. Usually these papyrus rolls were written only on the inside, but this one was so full of matter that it was written also on the back side (\opisthen\), and so was an \opisthographon\ like that in Eze 2:10. There are many allegorical interpretations of this fact which are all beside the point. {Sealed} (\katesphragismenon\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \katasphragiz\“, old compound (perfective use of \kata\), to seal up (down), here only in N.T. {With seven seals} (\sphragisin hepta\). Instrumental case of \sphragis\, old word used in various senses, proof or authentication (1Co 9:2; Ro 4:11), signet-ring (Re 7:2), impression made by the seal (Re 9:4; 2Ti 2:19), the seal on books closing the book (Re 5:1,2,5,9; 6:1,3,5,7,9,12; 8:1). "A will in Roman law bore the seven seals of the seven witnesses" (Charles). But this sealed book of doom calls for no witnesses beyond God's own will. Alford sees in the number seven merely the completeness of God's purposes.

5:2 {A strong angel} (\aggelon ischuron\). One needed (10:1; 18:21) "whose call could reach to the farthest limits of the universe" (Beckwith) and so "with a great voice" (\en ph“nⁱ megalⁱ\, in a great voice, as in 14:7,9,15, and without \en\ 5:12; 6:10; 7:2,10; 8:13; 10:3, etc.). See \en ischurfⁱ ph“nⁱ\ (18:2). {Proclaiming} (\k^hrussonta\). Present active predicate participle of \k^hruss\“, to herald, to preach. {Worthy to open and to loose} (\axios anoixai kai lusai\). Worthy by rank and character (cf. Joh 1:27) as well as by ability (\edunato\, verse 3), followed by two infinitives (first aorist active) of \anoig\“ and \lu\“, though \hina\ and the subjunctive can be used after \axios\ as in Joh 1:27. Here \axios\ is like \hikanos\ (capable, qualified) as in Mt 8:8. The articles here (\to, tas) refer to the book and the seals in verse 1. It is a husteron-proteron, since the loosing of the seals precedes the opening of the book.

5:3 \En\ (in) with locative (\ouranⁱ), \epi\ (upon) with genitive (\g^s), \hupokat\ (under) with ablative (\g^s), as in verse 13, including the whole universe, as in Ex 20:4 (Php 2:10). The MSS. vary in the negative conjunctions after \oudeis\ (no one) between \oude--oude\ (continuative, and not--nor) and \oute--oute\ (disjunctive, neither--nor). {To look thereon} (\blepein auto\). Into the contents of the book. The universe declines the challenge.

5:4 {I wept much} (\eg^{eklaion} polu\). Imperfect active of \klai^{ai}, picturesque, descriptive, I kept on weeping much; natural tense in these vivid visions (1:12; 2:14; 5:4,14; 6:8,9; 10:10; 19:14; 21:15). Perhaps weeping aloud. {Was found} (\heureth^{ai}). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk^{ai}. {Worthy} (\axios\). Predicative nominative after \heureth^{ai}.

5:5 {One of the elders} (\heis ek tⁿ presbuterⁿ). "One from among the elders" of 4:4,10 (\ek\ with the ablative 8 times in the Apocalypse, 12 in the Fourth Gospel, 10 in rest of the N.T., in place of the mere partitive genitive). No particular reason for one elder as the agent over another (7:13). {Saith} (\legei\). Dramatic vivid present. {Weep not} (\m^{ai} klaie\). "Cease weeping" (prohibition with m^{ai} and the present active imperative of klai^{ai}). {The Lion} (\ho leⁿ). Satan is called a lion by Peter (1Pe 5:8), but the metaphor belongs to Jesus also. Judah is called a lion in the blessing of Jacob (Ge 49:9) and Jesus as the greatest of the tribe of Judah, "the Root of David" (\h^u riza Daueid\, Isa 11:1,10) or the Branch from this root (the Messiah). {Hath overcome} (\enik^{ai} sen\). First aorist active indicative of \nika^{ai}, "did overcome," coming first in the sentence as "the great historical fact of the victory of the Christ" (Swete).

5:6 {And I saw} (\kai eidon\). Stirred by the words of the elder in verse 5 (\idou\, behold). "I beheld." {In the midst} (\en mesⁱ). See 4:6 for this idiom. It is not quite clear where the Lamb was standing in the vision, whether close to the throne or in the space between the throne and the elders (perhaps implied by "came" in verse 7, but nearness to the throne is implied by 14:1; Ac 7:56; Heb 10:11). {A Lamb} (\arnion\).

Elsewhere in the N.T. \ho amnos\ is used of Christ (Joh 1:29,36; Acts 8:32; 1Pe 1:19 like Isa 53:7), but in the Apocalypse \to arnion\ occurs for the Crucified Christ 29 times in twelve chapters. {Standing} (\hest^ˆkos\). Second perfect active (intransitive of \hist^ˆmi\) neuter accusative singular (grammatical gender like \arnion\), though some MSS. read \hest^ˆk^ˆs\ (natural gender masculine and nominative in spite of \eidon\ construction according to sense). {As though it had been slain} (\h^ˆs esphagmenon\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \sphaz^ˆ\, old word, in N.T. only in Re 5:6,9,12; 6:4,9; 13:3; 18:24; 1Jo 3:12. \H^ˆs\ (as if) is used because the Lamb is now alive, but (in appearance) with the marks of the sacrifice. The Christ as the Lamb is both sacrifice and Priest (Heb 9:12f.; 10:11). {Having} (\ech^ˆn\). Construction according to sense again with masculine nominative participle instead of \echonta\ (masculine accusative singular) or \echon\ (neuter accusative singular). Seven horns (\keras\) is a common symbol in the O.T. for strength and kingly power (1Sa 2:10; 1Ki 22:11; Ps 112:9; Da 7:7,20ff.) and often in Rev. (Re 12:3; 13:1; 17:3,12). Fulness of power (the All-powerful one) is symbolized by seven. {Seven eyes} (\ophthalmous hepta\). Like Zec 3:9; 4:10 and denotes here, as there, omniscience. Here they are identified with the seven Spirits of Christ, while in 1:4 the seven Spirits are clearly the Holy Spirit of God (3:1), and blaze like torches (4:5), like the eyes of Christ (1:14). The Holy Spirit is both Spirit of God and of Christ (Ro 8:9). {Sent forth} (\apestalmenoi\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \apostell^ˆ\, masculine plural (agreeing with \hoi\ and \ophthalmous\ in gender), but some MSS. have \apestalmena\ agreeing with the nearer \pneumata\.

5:7 {He taketh} (\eil^ˆphen\). Perfect active indicative of \lamban^ˆ\, not used for the aorist (cf. \lthen\, he came), but vivid dramatic picture of the actual scene, "he has taken it."

5:8 {He had taken} (\elaben\). Here John drops back to the narrative tense (the second aorist active indicative of \lamban^ˆ\), not the past perfect as the English rendering might indicate, merely "when he took." For like vivid variation (not confusion) of tenses with \eil^ˆphen\ see 3:3; 8:5; 11:17 and with \eir^ˆka\ in 7:13f.; 19:3. {Fell down} (\epesan\). Second aorist active indicative of \pipt^ˆ\ with first aorist (\-an\) ending, just "fell." {Having} (\echontes\). "Holding." {A harp}

(\kitharan\). Old word, the traditional instrument (lyre or zithern) for psalmody (Ps 33:2; 98:5, etc.). {Golden bowls} (\phialas chrusfs\). Broad shallow saucers, old word, in N.T. only in Re 5:8; 15:7; 16:1-4,8,10,12,17; 17:1; 21:9. {Of incense} (\thumiamat“n\). Old word from \thumia“, to burn incense (Lu 1:9), as in Lu 1:10. {Which are} (\hai eisin\). "Which (these bowls of incense) symbolize the prayers of the saints as in Ps 140:2; Lu 1:10.

5:9 {They sing} (\fidousin\). Present active indicative of \fid“. Old verb, to chant with lyrical emotion (Col 3:16). {A new song} (\“id^n kain^n\). Cognate accusative for \oide\ (\“id“, song) is \foide\ from \feid“, that is \fid“ (the verb used), old word already used (Col 3:16; Eph 5:19), called \kain^n\ because a fresh song for new mercies (Isa 42:10; Ps 33:3; 40:3, etc.), here in praise of redemption to Christ (14:3) like the new name (2:17; 3:12), the new Jerusalem (3:12; 21:2), the new heaven and the new earth (21:1), not the old song of creation (4:8,11) to God. {For thou wast slain} (\hoti esphag^s\). Second aorist passive indicative of \sphaz“. \Agoraz“\ used by Paul and Peter of our purchase from sin by Christ (1Co 6:20; 7:23; Ga 3:13; 4:5; 2Pe 2:1; cf. 1Pe 1:18f.). {Unto God} (\t“i the“i\). Dative case of advantage as also in verse 10. {With thy blood} (\en t“i haimati sou\). Instrumental use of \en\ as in 1:5. The blood of Christ as the price of our redemption runs all through the Apocalypse. This is the reason why Christ is worthy to "take the book and open its seals." That is, he is worthy to receive adoration and worship (4:11) as the Father does. {Men of every} (\ek pas^s\). No \anthr“pous\ (men) or \tinaz\ (some) before \ek\ in the Greek. See a like ellipsis in 11:9 with a like grouping of words for all mankind, representatives of all races and nations (7:9; 13:7; 14:6).

5:10 {Madest} (\epoi^sas\). First aorist active indicative of \poie“, a prophetic use anticipating the final result. {A kingdom and priests} (\basileian kai hiereis\). As the correct text in 1:6. {They reign} (\basileuousin\). Present active indicative, futuristic use, though Aleph P have the future \basileusousin\ (shall reign) as in 20:6.

5:11 {And I saw} (\kai eidon\). A new feature introduced by the outer and vaster circle (\kukl“i\) of angels who catch up the new song of redemption in antiphonal singing, answering the song of the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders. Some MSS. read \h“s\ (as if) before \ph“n^n\ (voice). Ten thousand times ten thousand (\muriades muriad“n kai chiliades chiliad“n\). Literally, "myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands," a mild husteron-proteron. The regular order in I Enoch 40:I. See Da 7:10 for \chiliai chiliades\ (thousand thousands) and \muriadi muriades\ (countless myriads). They are all efforts to express the innumerable hosts of the angels.

5:12 {Worthy} (\axion\). Agreeing in gender (grammatical neuter) with \arnion\, but some MSS. have \axios\ (masculine, natural gender). Note change to third person \estin\ instead of second \ei\. The point of the song is the same as that in verses 9,10, but the language differs. Note the repeated article \to\ (the lamb the slain) referring to verses 6,9. Note also the one article \t^n\ before \dunamin\ for all the seven grounds of praise (\dunamin\, power, \plouton\, wealth, \sophian\, wisdom, \ischun\, strength, \tim^n\, honor, \doxan\, glory, \eulogian\, blessing), though \plouton\ is masculine, in contrast with separate article for each item (all three feminine) in 4:11, here grouping them all together, "a heptad of praise" (Swete).

5:13 {Every created thing} (\pfn ktisma\). Every creature in a still wider antiphonal circle beyond the circle of angels (from ktiz“\, for which see 1Ti 4:4; Jas 1:18), from all the four great fields of life (in heaven, upon the earth, under the earth as in verse 3, with on the sea epi t^s thalass^s\ added). No created thing is left out. This universal chorus of praise to Christ from all created life reminds one of the profound mystical passage in Ro 8:20-22 concerning the sympathetic agony of creation (\ktisis\) in hope of freedom from the bondage of corruption. If the trail of the serpent is on all creation, it will be ultimately thrown off. {Saying} (\legontas\). Masculine (construction according to sense, personifying the created things) if genuine, though some MSS. have \legonta\ (grammatical gender agreeing with panta) present active participle of \leg“\, to say. {And to the Lamb} (\kai t“i arni“i\). Dative case. Praise and worship are rendered to the Lamb precisely as to God on the throne. Note separate articles here in the doxology as in 4:11 and the addition of \to kratos\ (active power) in place of \ischus\ (reserve of strength) in 5:12.

5:14 {Amen} (\Am^n\). The four living creatures give their approval to the doxology after the antiphonal songs. {Fell down and worshipped} (\epesan kai prosekun^san\). In silent adoration that closes the whole service of praise to the One upon the throne and to the Lamb. As in 4:10 so here the representatives of the redeemed bow in silent worship. Pliny says that the Christians sing a song to Christ as to God. He is here worshipped by the universe (Php 2:10f.).

6:1 {And I saw} (\kai eidon\). As in 4:1; 5:1. The vision unfolds without anything being said about opening the book and reading from it. In a more vivid and dramatic fashion the Lamb breaks the seals one by one and reveals the contents and the symbolism. The first four seals have a common note from one of the four \z“a\ and the appearance of a horse. No effort will be made here to interpret these seals as referring to persons or historical events in the past, present, or future, but simply to relate the symbolism to the other symbols in the book. It is possible that there is some allusion here to the symbolism in the so-called "Little Apocalypse" of Mr 13; Mt 24f.; Lu 21. The imagery of the four horses is similar to that in Zec 1:7-11; 6:1-8 (cf. Jer 14:12; 24:10; 42:17). In the Old Testament the horse is often the emblem of war (Job 39:25; Ps 76:6; Pr 21:31; Eze 26:10). "Homer pictures the horses of Rhesus as whiter than snow, and swift as the wind" (Vincent). {When the Lamb opened} (\hote ^noixen to arnion\). First aorist active indicative of \anoig“\ . This same phrase recurs in rhythmical order at the opening of each seal (6:1,3,5,7,9,12) till the last (8:1), where we have \hotan ^noixen\ (hotan\ rather than hote\ calling particular attention to it). {One} (\mian\). Probably used here as an ordinal (the first) as in Mt 28:1. See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 671f. {Of} (\ek\). This use of \ek\ with the ablative in the partitive sense is common in the Apocalypse, as twice in this verse (\ek t“n\, etc.). So \henos ek t“n\ (one of the four living creatures) is "the first of," etc. {In a voice of thunder} (\en ph“n^i bront^s\). Old word used of John and James (Mr 3:17) and elsewhere in N.T. only Joh 12:29 and a dozen times in the Apocalypse. {Come} (\Erchou\). Present middle imperative of \erchomai\, but with exclamatory force (not strictly linear). The command is not addressed to the Lamb nor to John (the correct text omits kai ide\ "and see") as in 17:1; 21:9, but to one of the four horsemen each time. Swete takes it as a call to Christ because \erchou\ is so used in 22:17,20, but that is not conclusive.

6:2 {And I saw and behold} (\kai eidon kai idou\). This combination is frequent in the Apocalypse (4:1; 6:2,5,8; 14:1,14; 19:11). {A white horse} (\hippos leukos). In Zec 6:1-8 we have red, black, white, and grizzled bay horses like the four winds of heaven, ministers to do God's will. White seems to be the colour of victory (cf. the white horse of the Persian Kings) like the white horse ridden by the Roman conqueror in a triumphant procession. {Had} (\ech“n). Agreeing in gender and case with \ho kath^menos. {A bow} (\toxon). Old word (Zec 9:13f. of a great bow), here only in N.T. {Was given} (\edoth^{\}). First aorist passive indicative of \did“mi. {A crown} (\stephanos). See on 4:4 for this word. {He came forth} (\ex^lthen). Second aorist active indicative of \exerchomai, either to come out or to go out (went forth). {Conquering} (\nik“n). Present active participle of \nika“. {And to conquer} (\kai hina nik^s^i). Purpose clause with \hina and the first aorist active subjunctive of \nika“. Here \h“s nik^s“n (future active participle with h“s) could have been used. The aorist tense here points to ultimate victory. Commentators have been busy identifying the rider of the white horse according to their various theories. "It is tempting to identify him with the Rider on the white horse in 19:11f., whose name is 'the Word of God'" (Swete). Tempting, "but the two riders have nothing in common beyond the white horse."

6:3 {The second seal} (\t^{\h}n sphragida t^{\h}n deuteran). "The seal the second." The white horse with his rider vanished from the scene bent on his conquering career.

6:4 {A red horse} (\hippos purros). Old adjective from \pur (fire), flame-coloured, blood-red (2Ki 3:22), in N.T. only here and 12:3, like Zec 1:8; 6:2 (roan horse). {To take peace from the earth} (\labein t^{\h}n eir^{\h}n^{\h} ek t^{\h}s g^{\h}s). Second aorist active infinitive of \lamban“, and here the nominative case, the subject of \edoth^{\} (see verse 2), "to take peace out of the earth." Alas, how many red horses have been ridden through the ages. {And that they should slay one another} (\kai hina all^{\h}lous sphaxousin). Epexegetical explanatory purpose clause with \hina and the future active of \sphaz“ (5:6) instead of the more usual subjunctive (verse 2). Cf. Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 998f. This is what war does to perfection, makes cannon fodder (cf. Joh 14:27) of men. {A great sword} (\machaira megal^{\h}). \Machaira may be a knife carried in a sheath at the girdle (Joh 18:10) or a long sword in battle as here. \Romphaia, also a large sword, is the only other word for sword in the N.T. (Re

1:16; 2:12,16; 6:8; 19:15,21).

6:5 {A black horse} (\hippos melas\). Lust of conquest brings bloodshed, but also famine and hunger. "The colour of mourning and famine. See Jer 4:28; 8:21; Mal 3:14, where _mournfully_ is, literally, in black" (Vincent). {Had} (\ech"n\ as in verse 2. {A balance} (\zugon\). Literally, a yoke (old word from \zeugnumi\, to join), of slavery (Ac 15:10; Ga 5:1), of teaching (Mt 11:29), of weight or measure like a pair of scales evenly balancing as here (Eze 5:1; 45:10). The rider of this black horse, like the spectral figure of hunger, carries in his hand a pair of scales. This is also one of the fruits of war.

6:6 {As it were a voice} (\h"s ph"n^n\). "This use of \h"s\, giving a certain vagueness or mysteriousness to a phrase, is one of the characteristics of the writer's style, e.g., 8:1; 14:3; 19:1,6" (Beckwith). This voice comes from the midst of the four living creatures, "the protest of nature against the horrors of famine" (Swete). {A measure} (\choinix\). Old word for less than a quart with us, here only in N.T. {Of wheat} (\sitou\). Old word for wheat, a number of times in N.T., in Rev. only here and 18:13. This was enough wheat to keep a man of moderate appetite alive for a day. {For a penny} (\d^nariou\). Genitive of price, the wages of a day laborer (Mt 20:2), about eighteen cents in our money today. {Of barley} (\krith"n\). Old word \krith^\, usually in plural as here. Barley was the food of the poor and it was cheaper even in the famine and it took more of it to support life. Here the proportion is three to one (cf. 2Ki 7:18). The proclamation forbids famine prices for food (solid and liquid). {Hurt thou not} (\m^ adik^s^is\). Prohibition with \m^\ and the ingressive first aorist active subjunctive of \adike"\". See 7:3; 9:4 for \adike"\" for injury to vegetable life. "The prohibition is addressed to the nameless rider who represents Dearth" (Swete). Wheat and barley, oil and the vine, were the staple foods in Palestine and Asia Minor.

6:8 {A pale horse} (\hippos chl"ros\). Old adjective. Contracted from \chloeros\ (from \chlo^\, tender green grass) used of green grass (Mr 6:39; Re 8:7; 9:4), here for yellowish, common in both senses in old Greek, though here only in N.T. in this sense, greenish yellow. We speak of a sorrel horse, never of a green horse. Zechariah (Zec 6:3) uses \poikilos\ (grizzled or variegated). Homer used \chl"ros\ of the ashen colour of a face blanched by fear (pallid) and so the pale horse is a symbol of death and of terror. {His name was Death} (\onoma aut“i ho thanatos). Anacoluthon in grammatical structure like that in Joh 3:1 (cf. Re 2:26) and common enough. Death is the name of this fourth rider (so personified) and there is with Death "his inseparable comrade, Hades (1:16; 20:13f.)" (Swete). Hades (\hfidˆs\, alpha privative, and \idein\, to see, the unseen) is the abode of the dead, the keys of which Christ holds (Re 1:18). {Followed} (\kolouthēi). Imperfect active of \akolouthē, kept step with death, whether on the same horse or on another horse by his side or on foot John does not say. {Over the fourth part of the earth} (\epi to tetarton tˆs gˆs). Partitive genitive \gˆs after \tetarton. Wider authority (\exousia) was given to this rider than to the others, though what part of the earth is included in the fourth part is not indicated. {To kill} (\apokteinai). First aorist active infinitive of \apoktein, explanation of the \exousia (authority). The four scourges of Eze 14:21 are here reproduced with instrumental \en with the inanimate things (\romphaifi, lim“i thanat“i) and \hupo for the beasts (\thˆri“n). Death here (\thanat“i) seems to mean pestilence as the Hebrew does (\loimos\ -- cf. \limos\ famine). Cf. the "black death" for a plague.

6:9 {Under the altar} (\hupokat“ tou thusiastˆriou). "Under" (\hupokat“), for the blood of the sacrifices was poured at the bottom of the altar (Le 4:7). The altar of sacrifice (Ex 39:39; 40:29), not of incense. The imagery, as in Hebrews, is from the tabernacle. For the word see Mt 5:23f., often in Rev. (Re 8:3,5; 9:13; 11:1; 14:18; 16:7). This altar in heaven is symbolic, of course, the antitype for the tabernacle altar (Heb 8:5). The Lamb was slain (5:6,9,12) and these martyrs have followed the example of their Lord. {The souls} (\tas psuchas). The lives, for the life is in the blood (Le 17:11), were given for Christ (Php 2:17; 2Ti 4:6). {Of the slain} (\t“n esphagmen“n). See 5:6. Christians were slain during the Neronian persecution and now again under Domitian. A long line of martyrs has followed. {For the word of God} (\dia ton logon tou theou). As in 1:9, the confession of loyalty to Christ as opposed to emperor-worship. {And for the testimony which they held} (\kai dia tˆn marturian hˆn eichon). See also 1:9. Probably \kai equals "even" here, explaining the preceding. The imperfect tense \eichon suits the repetition of the witness to Christ and the consequent death.

6:10 {How long} (\he“s pote\). "Until when." Cf. Mt 7:17; Joh 10:24. {O Master} (\ho despot^s\). Nominative articular form, but used as vocative (\despota\) as in 4:11 (Joh 20:28). On \despot^s\ (correlative of \doulos) see Lu 2:29. Here (alone in the Apocalypse) it is applied to God as in Lu 2:29; Ac 4:24, but to Christ in Jude 1:4; 2Pe 2:1. {The holy and true} (\ho hagios kai al^thinol\). See 3:7 for these attributes of God. {Avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth} (\ekdikeis to haima h^m“n ek t^“n katoikount^“n epi t^s g^s\). This same idiom in 19:2 and see it also in Lu 18:7f., "a passage which goes far to answer many questions in theodicy" (Swete). We find \ekdike“, late compound, used with \ek\ as here in De 18:19; 1Sa 24:13, but with \apo\ in Lu 18:3. For \epi t^s g^s\ (upon the earth) see 3:10.

6:11 {A white robe} (\stol^ leuk^). Old word from \stell“, to equip, an equipment in clothes, a flowing robe (Mr 12:38). For the white robe for martyrs see 3:4f.; 4:4; 7:9,13; 19:14. {That they should rest} (\hina anapausontai\). Sub-final clause with \hina\ and the future indicative (as in 3:9; 6:4) middle rather than the aorist middle subjunctive \anapaus^ntai\ of Aleph C. {Yet for a little time} (\eti chronon mikron\). Accusative of extension of time as in 20:3. Perhaps rest from their cry for vengeance and also rest in peace (14:13). For the verb \anapau“\ see on ^Mt 11:28. {Until should be fulfilled} (\he“s pl^r^“th^sin\). Future indefinite temporal clause with \he“s\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \pl^ro“, to fill full (Mt 23:32; Col 2:10), "until be filled full" (the number of), regular Greek idiom. {Which should be killed} (\hoi mellontes apoktennesthai\). Regular construction of articular present active participle of \mell^“\ (about to be, going to be) with the present passive infinitive of \apoktenn^“, Aeolic and late form for \apoktein^“, to kill (also in Mr 12:5). John foresees more persecution coming (2:10; 3:10).

6:12 {There was a great earthquake} (\seismos megas egeneto\). "There came a great earthquake." Jesus spoke of earthquakes in his great eschatological discourse (Mr 13:8). In Mt 24:29 the powers of the heavens will be shaken. \Seismos\ is from \sei“, to shake, and occurs also in Re 8:5; 11:13,19; 16:18. The reference is not a local earthquake like those so common in Asia Minor. {As sackcloth of hair} (\h^s sakkos trichinos\). \Sakkos\ (Attic \sakos), Latin _saccus_, English _sack_, originally a bag for holding things (Ge 42:25,35), then coarse garment of hair (\trichinos, old word from \thrix, here only in N.T.) clinging to one like a sack, of mourners, suppliants, prophets leading austere lives (Mt 3:4; 11:21; Lu 10:13). Here the hair is that of the black goat (Isa 50:3). Cf. Joe 2:10; Eze 32:7f.; Isa 13:10; Mr 13:24f. See Ec 12:2 for eclipses treated as symbols of old age. Apocalyptic pictures all have celestial phenomena following earthquakes. {As blood} (\h“s haima). In Ac 2:20 we find Peter interpreting the apocalyptic eschatological language of Joe 2:31 about the sun being turned into darkness and the moon into blood as pointing to the events of the day of Pentecost as also "the great day of the Lord." Peter's interpretation of Joel should make us cautious about too literal an exegesis of these grand symbols.

6:13 {Her unripe figs} (\tous olunthous aut^s). An old word (Latin _grossi_) for figs that grow in winter and fall off in the spring without getting ripe (So 2:11f.), here only in N.T. Jesus used the fig tree (Mr 13:28) as a sign of the "end of the world's long winter" (Swete). Cf. Isa 34:4; Na 3:12. {When she is shaken of a great wind} (*\hupo anemou megalou seiomen^ *). Present passive participle of \sei“, "being shaken by a great wind." See Mt 11:7 for the reed so shaken.

6:14 {Was removed} (*\apech“risth^ *). First aorist passive indicative of \apoch“riz“, to separate, to part (Ac 15:39). "The heaven was parted." {As a scroll when it is rolled up} (\h“s biblion helissomenon). Present passive participle of \heliss“, old verb, to roll up, in N.T. only here (from Isa 34:4) and Heb 1:12 (from Ps 102:27). Vivid picture of the expanse of the sky rolled up and away as a papyrus roll (Lu 4:17). {Were moved} (\ekin^th^san). First aorist passive indicative of \kine“, to move. {Out of their places} (\ek t“n top“n aut“n). See also 16:20 for these violent displacements in the earth's crust. Cf. Na 1:5; Jer 4:24. Jesus spoke of faith removing mountains (of difficulty) as in Mr 11:23 (cf. 1Co 13:2).

6:15 {The princes} (\hoi megistfnes). Late word from the superlative \megistos, in LXX, Josephus, papyri, in N.T. only in Mr 6:21; Re 6:15; 18:23, for the grandees, the persecuting proconsuls (Swete). {The chief captains} (\hoi chiliarchoi). The commanders of thousands, the military tribunes (Mr 6:21; 19:18). {The rich} (\hoi plousioi). Not merely those in civil and military authority will be terror-stricken, but the self-satisfied and complacent rich (Jas 5:4f.). {The strong} (\hoi ischuroi). Who usually scoff at fear. See the list in 13:16; 19:18. Cf. Lu 21:26. {Every bondman} (\pfs doulos) {and freeman} (\kai eleutheros). The two extremes of society. {Hid themselves in the caves and in the rocks of the mountains} (\ekrupsan heautous eis ta sp^laia kai eis tas petras t^"n ore^"n). Based on Isa 2:10,18f. First aorist active indicative of *\krupt^" * with the reflexive pronoun. For the old word \sp^laion see Mt 21:13; Heb 11:38. \Ore^"n is the uncontracted Ionic form (for \or^"n) of the genitive plural of \oros (mountain).

6:16 {They say} (\legousin). Vivid dramatic present active indicative, as is natural here. {Fall on us} (\Pesate eph' h^mfs). Second aorist (first aorist ending) imperative of *\pipt^" , tense of urgency, do it now. {And hide us} (\kai krupsate h^mfs*). Same tense of urgency again from *\krupt^" * (verb in verse 15). Both imperatives come in inverted order from Ho 10:8 with \kalupsate (cover) in place of \krupsate (hide), quoted by Jesus on the way to the Cross (Lu 23:30) in the order here, but with \kalupsate, not \krupsate. {From the face of him that} (\apo pros^"pou tou, etc.). "What sinners dread most is not death, but the revealed Presence of God" (Swete). Cf. Ge 3:8. {And from the wrath of the Lamb} (\kai apo t^s org^s tou arniou). Repetition of "the grave irony" (Swete) of 5:5f. The Lamb is the Lion again in the terribleness of his wrath. Recall the mourning in 1:7. See Mt 25:41ff. where Jesus pronounces the woes on the wicked.

6:17 {The great day} (*\h^ h^mera h^ megal^ *). The phrase occurs in the O.T. prophets (Joe 2:11,31; Zep 1:14. Cf. Jude 1:6) and is here combined with "of their wrath" (\t^s org^s aut^"n) as in Zep 1:15,18; 2:3; Rom 2:5. "Their" (\aut^"n) means the wrath of God and of the Lamb put here on an equality as in 1:17f., 22:3,13; 1Th 3:11; 2Th 2:16. Beckwith holds that this language about the great day having come "is the mistaken cry of men in terror caused by the portents which are bursting upon them." There is something, to be sure, to be said for this view which denies that John commits himself to the position that this is the end of the ages. {And who is able to stand?} (\kai tis dunatai stath^nai?). Very much like the words in Na 1:6; Mal 3:2. First aorist passive infinitive of \hist^mi. It is a rhetorical question, apparently by the frightened crowds of verse 15.

Swete observes that the only possible answer to that cry is the command of Jesus in Lu 21:36: "Keep awake on every occasion, praying that ye may get strength to stand (\stath^nai, the very form) before the Son of Man."

7:1 {After this} (\meta touto). Instead of the seventh seal (8:1) being opened, two other episodes or preliminary visions occupy chapter 7 (the sealing of the servants of God 7:1-8 and the vision of the redeemed before the throne 7:9-17). {Standing} (\hest“tas). Second perfect predicate participle of \hist^mi, intransitive and followed by \epi and the accusative case \g“nias as already in 3:20 (\epi thurian) and often again (8:3 some MSS., others genitive; 11:11; 12:18; 14:1; 15:2), but note \epi with genitive \thalass^s in the next clause, like \epi kephal^s in 12:1; 7:3. {Corners} (\g“nias). Old word for angle (Mt 6:5), also in 20:8. {Holding} (\kratountas). Present active participle of \krate“, to hold fast (Mr 7:3; Joh 20:23). The four winds (cf. Mt 24:31) are held prisoner by angels at each of the four corners. Some Jews held the winds from due north, south, east, west to be favourable, while those from the angles (see Ac 27:14) were unfavourable (Charles). There is an angel of the fire (14:18) and an angel of the waters (16:5). {That no wind should blow} (\hina m^ pne^i anemos). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^ and the present active subjunctive, "lest a wind keep on blowing." {Upon any tree} (\epi pan dendron). Accusative case here with \epi rather than the preceding genitives (\g^s, thalass^s), "upon the land or upon the sea," but "against any tree" (picture of attack on the tree like a tornado's path).

7:2 {Ascend} (\anabainonta). Present active participle of \anabain“, "ascending," "going up," picturing the process. {From the sun-rising} (\apo anatol^s h^liou). Same phrase in 16:12. From the east, though why is not told. Swete suggests it is because Palestine is east of Patmos. The plural \apo anatol“n occurs in Mt 2:1 without \h^liou (sun). {The seal of the living God} (\sphragida theou z“ntos). Here the signet ring, like that used by an Oriental monarch, to give validity to the official documents. The use of \z“ntos with \theou accents the eternal life of God (1:18; 10:6; 15:7) as opposed to the ephemeral pagan gods. {To whom it was given} (\hois edoth^ autois). For \edoth^ see on 6:2,4, etc. The repetition of \autois in addition to \hois (both dative) is a redundant

Hebraism (in vernacular _Koin, to some extent) often in the Apocalypse (3:8). The angels are here identified with the winds as the angels of the churches with the churches (1:20). {To hurt} (\adik^ˆsai\). First aorist active infinitive of \adike^ˆ\, subject of \edoth^ˆ\, common use of \adike^ˆ\ in this sense of to hurt in the Apocalypse (2:11; 6:6 already), in Lu 10:19 also. The injury is to come by letting loose the winds, not by withholding them.

7:3 {Hurt not} (\m^ˆ adik^ˆs^ˆte\). Prohibition with \m^ˆ\ and the ingressive aorist active subjunctive of \adike^ˆ\, not to begin to hurt. {Till we shall have sealed} (\achri sphragis^ˆmen\). Temporal clause of indefinite action for the future with \achri\ (sometimes \achris hou\ or \achris hou an\) and the aorist subjunctive as in 15:8; 20:3,5 or the future indicative (17:7), usually with the notion of ascent (up to) rather than extent like \mechri\. {An} (modal) sometimes occurs, but it is not necessary. But there is no _futurum exactum_ idea in the aorist subjunctive, simply "till we seal," not "till we shall have sealed." {Upon their foreheads} (\epi t^ˆn met^ˆp^ˆn\). From Eze 9:4. Old word (\meta, ˆps\, after the eye, above the eye, the space above or between the eyes), in N.T. only in the Apocalypse (7:3; 9:4; 13:16; 14:1,9; 17:5; 20:4; 22:4). For "the servants of God" (\tous doulous tou theou\) who are to be thus marked linked with angels in the service of God see Re 1:1; 2:20; 19:2,5; 22:3,6.

7:4 {The number of the sealed} (\ton arithmon t^ˆn esphragismen^ˆn\). Accusative case object of \^ˆkousa\ and genitive of the perfect passive articular participle of \sphragiz^ˆ\. He did not see the sealing or count them himself, but only heard. {A hundred and forty and four thousand} (\hekaton tesseraconta tessares chiliades\). Symbolical, of course, and not meant to be a complete number of the sealed (or saved) even in that generation, let alone for all time. The number connotes perfection (Alford), 12x12x1000 = a hundred and forty-four thousands (\chiliades\, 5:11). Nominative absolute, not agreeing in case either with \arithmon\ (accusative) or \esphragismen^ˆn\ (genitive). So as to the case of \esphragismenoi\. {Out of every tribe of the children of Israel} (\ek pfs^ˆs phul^ˆs hui^ˆn Isra^ˆl\). There are two opposite views here, one taking the sealed as referring only to Jews (either actual Jews as a remnant or just Jewish Christians), the other including Gentiles as well as Jewish Christians, that is the true Israel as in 2:9; 3:9ff. and like Paul in Galatians and Romans. This is the more probable view and it takes the twelve tribes in a spiritual sense. But in either view there remains the difficulty about names of the tribes. The list is not geographical, since Levi is included, but Dan is omitted and Manasseh put in his place, though he as the son of Joseph is included in Joseph. Irenaeus suggested that Antichrist was expected to come from the tribe of Dan and hence the omission here. There are various lists of the tribes in the O.T. (Ge 35:22f.; 46:8ff.,49; Ex 1:1ff.; Nu 1:2; 13:4ff; 26:34; De 27:11f.; 33:6ff.; Jos 13-22; Jud 5; 1Ch 2-8; 12:24ff.; 27:16ff.; Eze 48) and given in various orders. In 1Ch 7:12 both Dan and Zebulon are omitted. Joseph is given here in place of Ephraim. The distribution is equal (12,000) to each tribe.

7:9 {Which no man could number} (\hon arithm^sai auton oudeis edunato). Redundant repetition of the pronoun \auton after the relative \hon as in 7:5; 3:8. \Edunato imperfect indicative and \arithm^sai first aorist active infinitive of \arithme^{, old verb, in N.T. only here, Mt 10:30; Lu 12:7. See 5:9 (also 11:9; 13:7; 14:10; 17:15) for the list of words after \ek (the spiritual Israel carried on all over the world), "a polyglott cosmopolitan crowd" (Swete). {Standing} (\hest^tes). Same form in 7:1, only nominative masculine plural referring to \ochlos (masculine singular), construction according to sense like the plural \legont^{ with \ochlou in 19:1. {Arrayed} (\peribeb^menous). Perfect passive participle of \periball^{, but in the accusative plural (not nominative like \hest^tes), a common variation in this book when preceded by \eidon and \idou as in 4:4 (\thronoi, presbuterous). Charles regards this as a mere slip which would have been changed to \peribeb^menoi if John had read the MS. over. {In white robes} (\stolas leukas). Predicate accusative retained with this passive verb of clothing as in 7:13; 10:1; 11:3; 12:1; 17:4; 18:16; 19:13. {Palms} (\phoinikes). Nominative again, back to construction with \idou, not \eidon. Old word, in N.T. only here for palm branches and Joh 12:13 for palm trees. Both these and the white robes are signs of victory and joy.

7:10 {They cry} (\krazousi). Vivid dramatic present. {With a great voice} (\ph^{ n^i megal^i). As in 6:10; 7:2. "The polyglott multitude shouts its praises as with one voice"

(Swete). {Salvation} (\h^s^t^ria\). As in 12:10; 19:1. Nominative absolute. Salvation here is regarded as an accomplished act on the part of those coming out of the great tribulation (verse 14) and the praise for it is given to God (\t^i the^i\, dative case) and to the Lamb (\t^i arni^i\, dative also). Both God and Christ are thus called \s^t^r\ as in the Pastoral Epistles, as to God (1Ti 1:1; 2:3; Tit 1:3; 3:4) and to Christ (Tit 1:4; 2:13; 3:6). For \h^s^t^ria\ see Joh 4:22; Ac 4:12; Jude 1:3.

7:11 {Were standing} (\hist^keisan\). Past perfect active of \hist^mi\ intransitive and used like an imperfect as in Joh 19:25. {Round about} (\kukl^i\). Preposition (in a circle) with genitive as in 4:6; 5:11. The angels here rejoice in the salvation of men (Lu 15:7,10; 1Pe 1:12). {Upon their faces} (\epi ta pros^pa aut^n\). In reverential worship of God as in 11:16. For this worship (fell and worshipped) see also 4:10; 5:14; 11:16; 19:4,10; 22:8. The dative \t^i the^i\ (God) with \proskune^ (to worship) is the usual construction for that meaning. When it means merely to do homage the accusative case is usual in this book (Charles). But in the Fourth Gospel the reverse order is true as to the cases with \proskune^ (Abbott, Joh. Vocab. pp. 138-142).

7:12 Note \am^n\ at the beginning and the close of the doxology. Note also separate feminine article with each of the seven attributes given God, as in 4:11; 5:12,13.

7:13 {Answered} (\apekrith^). First aorist passive (deponent) of \apokrinomai\ with \leg^n\ (saying), a common (only here in the Apocalypse) Hebrew redundancy in the Gospels (Mr 9:5). An elder intervenes, though no question has been asked to interpret the vision (Swete). {These} (\houtoi\). Prophetic predicate nominative put before \tines eisin\ (who are they). Note article repeated with \stolas\ pointing to verse 9, and accusative also retained after \peribebh^menoi\ as there. Both "who" and "whence" as in Jos 9:8.

7:14 {I say} (\eir^ka\). Perfect active indicative of \eipon\, "I have said." "To the Seer's mind the whole scene was still fresh and vivid" (Swete) like \kekragen\ in Joh 1:15 and \eil^phen\ in Re 5:7, not the so-called "aoristic perfect" which even Moulton (Prol. p. 145) is disposed to admit. {My lord} (\Kurie mou\). "An address of reverence to a heavenly being" (Vincent), not an act of worship on John's part. {Thou knowest} (\su oidas\). "At once a confession of ignorance, and an appeal for information" (Swete), not of full confidence like \su oidas\ in Joh 21:15ff. {They which come out of the great tribulation} (\hoi erchomenoi ek t^s thlipse^s t^s megal^s\). Present middle participle with the idea of continued repetition. "The martyrs are still arriving from the scene of the great tribulation" (Charles). Apparently some great crisis is contemplated (Mt 13:19ff.; 24:21; Mr 13:10), though the whole series may be in mind and so may anticipate final judgment. {And they washed} (\kai eplunan\). First aorist active indicative of \plun^a\, old verb, to wash, in N.T. only Lu 5:2; Re 7:14; 22:14. This change of construction after \hoi erchomenoi\ from \hoi plun^asantes\ to \kai eplunan\ is common in the Apocalypse, one of Charles's Hebraisms, like \kai epoi^asen\ in 1:6 and \kai planfi\ in 2:20. {Made them white} (\eleukanan\). First aorist active indicative of \leukain^a\, to whiten, old verb from \leukos\ (verse 13), in N.T. only here and Mr 9:3. "Milligan remarks that _robes_ are the expression of character and compares the word _habit_ used of dress" (Vincent). The language here comes partly from Ge 49:11 and partly from Ex 19:10,14. For the cleansing power of Christ's blood see also Ro 3:25; 5:9; Col 1:20; Eph 1:7; 1Pe 1:2; Heb 9:14; 1Jo 1:7; Re 1:5; 5:9; 22:14. "The aorists look back to the life on earth when the cleansing was effected" (Swete). See Php 2:12f. for both divine and human aspects of salvation. {In the blood of the Lamb} (\en t^ai haimati tou arniou\). There is power alone in the blood of Christ to cleanse from sin (1Jo 1:7), not in the blood of the martyrs themselves. The result is "white," not "red," as one might imagine.

7:15 {Therefore} (\dia touto\). Because of the washing described in verse 14. {They serve him} (\latreuousin aut^ai\). Dative case with \latreu^a\ (present active indicative, old verb, originally to serve for hire \latron\, then service in general, then religious service to God, Mt 4:10, then in particular ritual worship of the priests, Heb 8:5). All the redeemed are priests (Re 16:5,10) in the heavenly temple (6:9) as here. But this service is that of spiritual worship, not of external rites (Ro 12:1; Php 3:3). {Day and night} (\h^ameras kai nuktos\). Genitive of time, "by day and night," as in 4:8 of the praise of the four living creatures. {Shall spread his tabernacle over them} (\sk^an^asei ep' autous\). Future (change of tense from present in \latreuousin) active of \sk^no^, old verb from \sk^nos\ (tent, tabernacle), used in Joh 1:14 of the earthly life of Christ, elsewhere in N.T. only in Rev. (7:14; 12:12; 13:6; 21:3). In 12:12; 13:6 of those who dwell in tents, here of God spreading his tent "over" (\ep' autous\ the redeemed in heaven, in 21:3 of God tabernacling "with" (\met' aut^n\ the redeemed, in both instances a picture of sacred fellowship, and "the further idea of God's Presence as a protection from all fear of evil" (Swete) like the overshadowing of Israel by the Shekinah and a possible allusion also to the tents (\sk^nai\ of the feast of tabernacles and to the tent of meeting where God met Moses (Ex 33:7-11).

7:16 {They shall hunger no more} (\ou peinasousin eti\). Future tense of \peina^, old verb with late form instead of \pein^sousin\ like Lu 6:25. It is a free translation of Isa 49:10 (not quotation from the LXX). {Neither thirst any more} (\oude dipsa^sousin eti\). Future tense of \dipsa^, the two strong human appetites will be gone, a clear refutation of a gross materialistic or sensual conception of the future life. Cf. Joh 6:35. {Neither shall strike} (\oude m^ pes^i\). Strong double negative \oude m^ with second aorist active subjunctive of \pipt^, to fall. They will no longer be under the rays of the sun as upon earth. {Nor any heat} (\oude pfn kauma\). Old word from \kai^, to burn, painful and burning heat, in N.T. only here and 16:9 (picture of the opposite condition). The use of the negative with \pfn\ (all) for "not any" is common in N.T. Cf. Ps 121:6.

7:17 {In the midst} (\ana meson\). In 5:6 we have \en mes^i tou thronou\ as the position of the Lamb, and so that is apparently the sense of \ana meson\ here as in Mt 13:25, though it can mean "between," as clearly so in 1Co 6:5. {Shall be their shepherd} (\paimanei autous\). "Shall shepherd them," future active of \poimain^ (from \poim^n, shepherd), in Joh 21:16; Ac 20:28; 1Pe 5:2; Re 2:27; 7:17; 12:5; 19:15. Jesus is still the Good Shepherd of his sheep (Joh 10:11,14ff.). Cf. Ps 23:1. {Shall guide them} (\hod^ g^sei autous\). Future active of \hod^ge^, old word (from \hod^gos, guide, Mt 15:14), used of God's guidance of Israel (Ex 15:13), of God's guidance of individual lives (Ps 5:9), of the guidance of the Holy Spirit (Joh 16:13), of Christ's own guidance here (cf. Joh 14:4; Re 14:4). {Unto fountains of waters of life} (\epi z^s p^gas hudat“n”). The language is like that in Isa 49:10; Jer 2:13. Note the order, "to life's water springs" (Swete) like the Vulgate _ad vitae fontes aquarum_, with emphasis on \z“s” (life's). For this idea see also Joh 4:12,14; 7:38f.; Re 21:6; 22:1,17. No special emphasis on the plural here or in 8:10; 14:7; 16:4. {And God shall wipe away} (kai exaleipsei ho theos). Repeated in 21:4 from Isa 25:8. Future active of \exaleiph“, old compound, to wipe out (ex), off, away, already in 3:5 for erasing a name and in Ac 3:19 for removing the stain (guilt) of sin. {Every tear} (pfn dakruon). Old word, with other form, \dakru, in Lu 7:38,44. Note repetition of \ek with \ophthalm“n” (out of their eyes). "Words like these of vv. 15-17 must sound as a divine music in the ears of the persecuted. God will comfort as a mother comforts" (Baljon).

8:1 {And when he opened} (\kai hotan ^noixen\). Here modal \an\ is used with \hote\ (used about the opening of the preceding six seals), but \hotan\ is not here rendered more indefinite, as is sometimes true (Mr 3:11; Re 4:9), but here and possibly (can be repetition) in Mr 11:19 it is a particular instance, not a general rule (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 973). {There followed a silence} (\egeneto sig^). Second aorist middle of \ginomai\.
"There came silence." Dramatic effect by this profound stillness with no elder or angel speaking, no chorus of praise nor cry of adoration, no thunder from the throne (Swete), but a temporary cessation in the revelations. See 10:4. {About the space of half an hour} (\h^s h^mi^ron\). Late and rare word (\h^mi\, half, \h^ra\, hour), here only in N.T. Accusative of extent of time.

8:2 {Stand} (\hest^kasin\). Perfect active of \hist^mi\ (intransitive). Another "hebdomad" so frequent in the Apocalypse. The article (the seven angels) seems to point to seven well-known angels. In Enoch 20:7 the names of seven archangels are given (Uriel, Raphael, Raguel, Michael, Sariel, Gabriel, Remiel) and "angels of the Presence" is an idea like that in Isa 63:9. We do not know precisely what is John's idea here. {Seven trumpets} (\hepta salpigges\). We see trumpets assigned to angels in Mt 24:31; 1Th 4:16; 1Co 15:52; Re 4:1,4. See also the use of trumpets in Jos 6:13; Joe 2:1. These seven trumpets are soon to break the half hour of silence. Thus the seven trumpets grow out of the opening of the seventh seal, however that fact is to be interpreted.

8:3 {Another angel} (\allos aggelos\). Not one of the seven of verse 2 and before they began to sound the trumpets. This preliminary incident of the offering of incense on the altar covers verses 3-6. {Stood} (\estath^). Ingressive first aorist passive of \hist^mi\ (intransitive), "took his place." {Over the altar} (\epi tou thusiast^riou\). See 6:9 for the word for the burnt-offering, here apparently the altar of incense (clearly so in Lu 1:11; possibly also Re 9:13), but it is not clear that in apocalyptic the distinction between the two altars of the tabernacle and temple is preserved. Aleph C Q have the genitive, while A P have the accusative \epi to thusiast^rion\. {A golden censer} (\liban“ton chrusoun\). Old word for frankincense (from libanos, Mt 2:11; Re 18:13), but here alone in N.T. and for censer, as is plain by the use of \chrusoun\ (golden) with it. Cf. 1Ki 7:50. {Much incense} (\thumiamata polla\). See 5:8 for \thumiamata\ (the aromatic substance burnt, also in 18:13), but here for the live coals on which the incense falls. {That he should add} (\hina d“sei\). Sub-final clause (subject of edoth^), was given, singular because \thumiamata\ neuter plural) with \hina\ and the future active indicative of \did“mi\, to give, instead of \d“i\, the second aorist subjunctive. {Unto the prayers} (\tais proseuchais\). Dative case. In 5:18 the \thumiamata\ are the prayers. {Upon the golden altar} (\epi to thusiast^rion to chrusoun to\). Accusative case here, not genitive as above, and apparently the altar of incense as indicated by the word golden (Ex 30:1ff.; Le 4:17). Note triple article here \to\ (once before the substantive, once before the adjective, once before the adjunct "the one before the throne").

8:4 {The smoke} (\ho kapnos\). Old word, in N.T. only Ac 2:19; Re 8:4; 9:2f., 17f.; 14:11; 15:8; 18:9,18; 19:3. Here from the incense in the angel's hand. {With the prayers} (\tais proseuchais\). So associative-instrumental case, but it may be dative as in verse 3 (for).

8:5 {Taketh} (\eil^phen\). Vivid dramatic perfect active indicative of \lamban“\ as in 5:7, "has taken." The angel had apparently laid aside the censer. Hardly merely the pleonastic use of \lamban“\ (Joh 19:23). John pictures the scene for us. {Filled} (\egemisen\). He drops back to the narrative use of the first aorist active indicative of \gemiz“\, {With the fire} (\ek tou puros\), live coals from the altar (cf. Isa 6:6). {Cast} (\ebalen\). Second aorist active indicative of \ball“\, See Ge 19:24 (Sodom); Eze 10:2 and Christ's bold metaphor in Lu 12:49. See this use of \ball“\ also in Re 8:7; 12:4,9,13; 14:19. {Followed} (\egenonto\). Came to pass naturally after the casting of fire on the earth. Same three elements in 4:5, but in different order (lightnings, voices, thunders), lightning naturally preceding thunder as some MSS. have it here. Perhaps \ph“nai\, the voices of the storm (wind, etc.).

8:6 {Prepared themselves} (\h^toimasan hautous\). First aorist active indicative of \hetoimaz“\, They knew the signal and got ready. {To sound} (\hina salpis“sin\). Sub-final (object) clause with \hina\ and the first aorist ingressive active subjunctive of \salpiz“. The infinitive could have been used.

8:7 {Sounded} (\esalpisen\). First aorist active indicative of \salpiz“, repeated with each angel in turn (8:8,10,12; 9:1,13; 11:15). {Hail and fire mingled with blood} (\chalaza kai pur memigmena en haimati\). Like the plague of hail and fire in Ex 9:24. The first four trumpets are very much like the plagues in Egypt, this one like a semitropical thunderstorm (Swete) with blood like the first plague (Ex 7:17ff.; Ps 106:35). The old feminine word \chalaza\ (hail) is from the verb \chala“, to let down (Mr 2:4), in N.T. only in Re 8:7; 11:19; 16:21. The perfect passive participle \memigmena\ (from \mignumi\, to mix) is neuter plural because of \pur\ (fire). {Were cast} (\eblth\). First aorist passive singular because \chalaza\ and \pur\ treated as neuter plural. "The storm flung itself on the earth" (Swete). {Was burnt up} (\kateka^). Second aorist (effective) passive indicative of \katakai“, old verb to burn down (effective use of \kata\, up, we say). Repeated here three times for dramatic effect. See 7:1-3 about the trees and 9:4 where the locusts are forbidden to injure the grass.

8:8 {As it were} (\h“s\). "As if," not a great mountain, but a blazing mass as large as a mountain. {Burning with fire} (\puri kaiomenon\). Present middle participle of \kai“. Somewhat like Enoch 18:13, but perhaps with the picture of a great volcanic eruption like that of Vesuvius in A.D. 79. Strabo tells of an eruption B.C. 196 which made a new island (Palaea Kaumene). {Became blood} (\egeneto haima\). Like the Nile in the first plague (Ex 7:20ff.). Cf. also 16:3.

8:9 {Of the creatures} (\t“n ktismat“n\). See 5:13 for this word \ktisma\. Even they that had life (\ta echonta psuchas\). Here the nominative articular participle is in apposition with the genitive \ktismat“n\, as often in this book. See Ex 7:20 for the destruction of fish, and Zep 1:3. {Was destroyed} (\diephthar^san\). Second aorist passive indicative of \diaphtheir“, old compound, to corrupt, to consume, to destroy (perfective use of \dia), also 11:18. The plural \ploion\ just before the verb makes the idea plural.

8:10 {Burning as a torch} (\kaiomenos h“s lampas\). See 4:5; Mt 2:2, perhaps a meteor, striking at the fresh-water supply (rivers \potam“n\, springs \p^gas) as in the first Egyptian plague also.

8:11 {Wormwood} (\ho Apsinthos\). Absinthe. Usually feminine (\h^), but masculine here probably because \ast^r\ is masculine. Only here in N.T. and not in LXX (\pikria\, bitterness, \chol^, gall, etc.) except by Aquila in Pr 5:4; Jer 9:15; 23:15. There are several varieties of the plant in Palestine. {Became wormwood} (\egeneto eis apsinthon\). This use of \eis\ in the predicate with \ginomai\ is common in the LXX and the N.T. (16:19; Joh 16:20; Ac 5:36). {Of the waters} (\ek t^“n hudat^“n\). As a result of (\ek\ the use of the poisoned waters. {Were made bitter} (\epikranth^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \pikrain^“. Old verb (from \pikros\, bitter), as in 10:9f. In a metaphorical sense to embitter in Col 3:19.

8:12 {Was smitten} (\epl^g^). Second aorist passive indicative of \pl^ss^“, old verb (like \pl^g^ \i plague), here only in N.T. {That should be darkened} (\hina skotisth^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \skotiz^“, from \skotos\ (darkness) as in Mt 24:29, but \skoto^“\ in Re 9:2. {And the day should not shine} (\kai h^ h^mera m^ phan^i\). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \phain^“, to shed light upon, as in 18:23, not the second aorist passive subjunctive \phan^i\ with different accent. The eclipse here is only partial and is kin to the ninth Egyptian plague (Ex 10:21).

8:13 {An eagle} (\henos aetou\). "One eagle," perhaps \henos\ (\heis\ used as an indefinite article (9:13; 18:21; 19:17). See 4:7 also for the flying eagle, the strongest of birds, sometimes a symbol of vengeance (De 28:49; Ho 8:1; Hab 1:8). {Flying in mid-heaven} (\petomenou en mesouran^mati\). Like the angel in 14:6 and the birds in 19:17. \Mesouran^ma\ (from \mesourane^“\ to be in mid-heaven) is a late word (Plutarch, papyri) for the sun at noon, in N.T. only these three examples. This eagle is flying where all can see, and crying so that all can hear. {Woe, woe, woe} (\ouai, ouai, ouai\). Triple because three trumpets yet to come. In 18:10,16,19 the double \ouai\ is merely for emphasis. {For them that dwell on the earth} (\tous katoikountas\). Accusative of the articular present active participle of \katoike^“, is unusual (Aleph Q here and also in 12:12) as in Mt 11:21. There is even a nominative in 18:10. {By reason of the other voices} (\ek t^“n loip^“n ph^“n^“n\). "As a result of (\ek\ the rest of the voices." There is more and worse to come, "of the three angels who are yet to sound" (τῶν τριῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν μέλλοντων σαλπίζειν).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

9:1 {Fallen} (\pept^ˆˆkota\). Perfect active participle of \pipt^ˆˆ\, already down. In Lu 10:18 note \pesonta\ (constative aorist active, like a flash of lightning) after \ethe^ˆˆroun\ and in Re 7:2 note \anabainonta\ (present active and linear, coming up, picturing the process) after \eidon\. {Of the pit of the abyss} (\tou phreatos t^ˆs abussou\). \Abussos\ is an old adjective (alpha privative and \buthos\, depth, without depth), but \h^ˆ abussos\ (supply \ch^ˆˆˆra\ place), the bottomless place. It occurs in Ro 10:7 for the common receptacle of the dead for Hades (Sheol), but in Lu 8:31 a lower depth is sounded (Swete), for the abode of demons, and in this sense it occurs in Re 9:1,2,11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1,3. \Phrear\ is an old word for well or cistern (Lu 14:5; Joh 4:11f.) and it occurs in Re 9:1f. for the mouth of the abyss which is pictured as a cistern with a narrow orifice at the entrance and this fifth angel holds the key to it.

9:2 {Opened} (\noixen\). First aorist active indicative of \anoignumi\. With the "key" (\kleis\). {As the smoke of a great furnace} (\h^ˆˆs kapnos kaminou megal^ˆs\). The plague of demonic locusts is here turned loose. \Kaminos\ is old word for a smelting-furnace, already in 1:15. {Were darkened} (\eskot^ˆˆth\). First aorist passive indicative of \skoto^ˆˆ\, old causative verb from \skotos\, in N.T. only here, 16:10; Eph 4:18. {By reason of} (\ek\). "Out of," as a result of (8:13).

9:3 {Locusts} (\akrides\). Also verse 7 and already in Mt 3:4; Mr 1:6 (diet of the Baptist). The Israelites were permitted to eat them, but when the swarms came like the eighth Egyptian plague (Ex 10:13ff.) they devoured every green thing. The smoke was worse than the fallen star and the locusts that came out of the smoke were worse still, "a swarm of hellish locusts" (Swete). {The scorpions} (\hoi skorpioi\). Old name for a little animal somewhat like a lobster that lurks in stone walls in warm regions, with a venomous sting in its tail, in N.T. in Lu 10:19; 11:12; Re 9:3,5,10. The scorpion ranks with the snake as hostile to man.

9:4 {It was said} (\erreth\). First aorist passive indicative of \eipon\}. {That they should not hurt} (\hina m^ adik^sousin\}). Sub-final (object clause subject of \erreth^\) with \hina m^ and the future active of \adike^ as in 3:9; 8:3. Vegetation had been hurt sufficiently by the hail (8:7). {But only such men as} (\ei m^ tous anthr^pous hoitines\}). "Except (elliptical use of \ei m^, if not, unless) the men who (the very ones who)." For this use of \hostis\ see 1:7; 2:24; 20:4. {The seal of God upon their foreheads} (\t^n sphragida tou theou epi t^"n met^p^"n\}). Provided for in 7:3ff. "As Israel in Egypt escaped the plagues which punished their neighbours, so the new Israel is exempted from the attack of the locusts of the Abyss" (Swete).

9:5 {That they should not kill them} (\hina m^ apoktein^sin autous\}). Sub-final object clause (subject of \edoth^\) with \hina m^ and the subjunctive of \apoktein^ either present (continued action) or aorist (constative, form the same), the usual construction with \hina\}. The locusts are charged to injure men, but not to kill them. {But that they should be tormented} (\all' hina basanisth^sontai\}). Sub-final clause again with \hina\}, but this time with the first future passive indicative (like 3:9; 6:4; 8:3; 13:12) of \basaniz^, old verb, to test metals (from \basanos\, Mt 4:24) by touchstone, then to torture like Mt 8:29, further in Re 11:10; 12:2; 14:10; 20:10. {Five months} (\m^nas pente\}). Accusative of extent of time. The actual locust is born in the spring and dies at the end of summer (about five months). {Torment} (\basanismos\}). Late word for torture, from \basaniz^, in N.T. only in Re 9:5; 14:11; 18:7,10,15. The wound of the scorpion was not usually fatal, though exceedingly painful. {When it striketh a man} (\hotan pais^i anthr^pon\}). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \pai^ (\i Mt 26:51), old verb, to smite, "whenever it smites a man."

9:6 {Men} (\hoi anthr^poi\}). Generic use of the article (men as a class). {Shall not find it} (\ou m^ heur^sousin auton\}). Strong double negative \ou m^ with the future active indicative according to Aleph Q, but \heur^sin\ (second aorist active subjunctive) according to A P (either construction regular). The idea here is found in Job 3:21; Jer 8:3. "Such a death as they desire, a death which will end their sufferings, is impossible; physical death is no remedy for the \basanismos\ of an evil conscience" (Swete). {They shall desire to die} (\epithum^sousin apothanein\}). Future active of \epithume^, a climax to \z^t^sousin\ (they shall seek), to desire vehemently. Paul in Php 1:23 shows a preference for death if his work is done, in order to be with Christ, a very different feeling from what we have here. {Fleeth} (\p^heu^geⁱ\). Vivid futuristic present active indicative of \p^heu^g\. Even death does not come to their relief.

9:7 {The shapes} (\ta homoi^ma\). Old word from \homoio^, to make like (from \homoios\, like), likeness, in N.T. only here, Ro 5:14; Php 2:7, "the likenesses were like" (\homoia\). \Homoi^ma\ is "midway between \morph^ and \sch^ma\" (Lightfoot). {Unto horses} (\hippois\). Associative-instrumental case, as is the rule with \homoios\ (1:15; 2:18; 4:6ff.; 9:10,19; 11:1; 13:2,11), but with the accusative in 1:13; 14:14. So also \homoioi chrus^i\ (like gold) in this same verse. {Prepared for war} (\h^toimasm^enois eis polemon\). Perfect passive participle of \hetoimaz^\. This imagery of war-horses is like that in Joe 2:4f. "The likeness of a locust to a horse, especially to a horse equipped with armour, is so striking that the insect is named in German _Heupferd_ (hay horse), and in Italian _cavalett_ a little horse" (Vincent). {As it were crowns} (\hos stephanoⁱ\). Not actual crowns, but what looked like crowns of gold, as conquerors, as indeed they were (4:4; 6:2; 12:1; 14:14). These locusts of the abyss have another peculiar feature. {As men's faces} (\h^s pros^pa anthr^p^an\). Human-looking faces in these demonic locusts to give added terror, "suggesting the intelligence and capacity of man" (Swete). Vincent actually sees "a distinct resemblance to the human countenance in the face of the locust."

9:8 {They had} (\eichan\). Imperfect active, late form as in Mr 8:7 in place of the usual \eichon\. {As hair of women} (\h^s trichas gunaⁱk^an\). That is long hair (1Co 11:15), with no reference to matters of sex at all, for \anthr^p^an\ just before is used, not \andr^an\ (men as distinct from women). Perhaps the antennae of the locust were unusually long. {As the teeth of lions} (\h^s leont^an\). Supply \hoi odontes\ (the teeth) before \leont^an\. See Joe 1:6. The locust is voracious.

9:9 {As it were breastplates of iron} (\h^s th^rakas siderous\). The \th^rax\ was originally the breast (from the neck to the navel), then the breastplate, only N.T. usage (Re 9:9,17; 1Th 5:8; Eph 6:14). The armour for the breastplate was usually of iron (\siderous\, Re 2:27), but with the locusts it only seemed to be so (\h^s\). However, the scaly backs and flanks of the locusts do resemble coats of mail. "The locusts of the Abyss may be the memories of the past brought home at times of Divine visitation" (Swete). {The sound of their wings} (\h^ph^"n^t^"n pterug^"n\). Graphic picture of the onrush of the swarms of demonic locusts and the hopelessness of resisting them. {As the sound of chariots, of many horses rushing to war} (\h^s ph^"n^ harmat^"n hipp^"n poll^"n trechont^"n eis polemon\). Both metaphors here, the clatter and clangour of the chariot wheels and the prancing of the horses are found in Joe 2:4f. \Trechont^"n\ is present active predicate participle of \trech^"\, to run. Cf. 2Ki 7:6; Jer 47:3.

9:10 {Tails} (\ouras\). Old word, in N.T. only in Re 9:10,19; 12:4. {Like unto scorpions} (\homoias skorpiois\). Aleph A wrongly have \homoiois\ (agreeing with \skorpiois\ instead of with \ouras\). It is a condensed idiom for "like unto the tails of the scorpions" as we have it in 13:11 (cf. Mt 5:20; 1Jo 2:2). {Stings} (\kentra\). Old word from \kentre^"\ (to prick, to sting), in N.T. only here, Ac 26:14 (about Paul); 1Co 15:55 (about death). It is used "of the spur of a cock, the quill of the porcupine, and the stings of insects" (Vincent). It was the goad used for oxen (Pr 26:3; Ac 26:14). {In their tails} (\en tais ourais aut^"n\). This locates "their power to hurt" (\h^ exousia aut^"n adik^sai\, infinitive here, \hina adik^sousin\ in 9:4) in their tails. It might have been in other organs.

9:11 {As king} (\basilea\). Predicate accusative and anarthrous. In Pr 30:27 it is stated that the locust has no king, but this is not true of these demonic locusts. Their king is "the angel of the abyss (verse 1) whose orders they obey." {His name is} (\onoma aut^"i\). "Name to him" (nominative absolute and dative, as in 6:8). {In Hebrew} (\Ebraisti\). Adverb as in 16:16; Joh 5:2; 19:13,17,20; 20:16. \Abadd^"n\). A word almost confined to the Wisdom books (Job 26:6; Ps 88:11; Pr 15:11). It is rendered in the LXX by \Ap^"leia\, destruction. {In the Greek tongue} (\en t^i Hell^nik^i\). With \gl^"ss^i\ or \dialekt^"i\ understood. As usual, John gives both the Hebrew and the Greek. {Apollyon} (\Apollu^"n\). Present active masculine singular participle of \apollu^"\, meaning "destroying," used here as a name and so "Destroyer," with the nominative case retained though in apposition with the accusative \onoma\). The personification of Abaddon occurs in the Talmud also. It is not clear whether by Apollyon John means Death or Satan. Bousset even finds in the name Apollyon an indirect allusion to Apollo, one of whose symbols was the locust, a doubtful point assuredly.

9:12 {The first woe} (\h^ ouai h^ mia). Note feminine gender ascribed to the interjection \ouai as in 11:14, perhaps because \thlipsis is feminine, though we really do not know. Note also the ordinal use of \mia (one) like \pr^t^ (first) as in 6:1; Mr 16:2. {There come yet two Woes} (\erchetai eti duo Ouai). Singular number \erchetai instead of \erchontai, though \duo ouai. It is true that \ouai is an interjection and indeclinable, but it is here used with \duo and is feminine just before, and not neuter.

9:13 {A voice} (\ph^ n^ n mian). For \mian as indefinite article see 8:13. Accusative case here after \^kousa, though genitive in 8:13, a distinction between sound and sense sometimes exists (Ac 9:7; 22:9), but not here as the words are clearly heard in both instances. {From} (\ek). "Out of the horns." Note triple use of the genitive article here as of the accusative article with this identical phrase in 8:3 ("the altar the golden the one before the throne").

9:14 {One saying to the sixth angel} (\legonta t^i hekt^i). Accusative masculine singular active participle of \leg^, personifying \ph^ n^ n and agreeing with it in case, though not in gender. This voice speaks to the sixth angel (dative case). {Which had the trumpet} (\ho ech^ n t^ n salpigga). Nominative case in apposition with \aggel^i (dative), the same anomalous phenomenon in 2:20; 3:12; 14:12. Swete treats it as a parenthesis, like 4:1; 11:15. {Loose} (\luson). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative of \lu^, "let loose." Another group of four angels (7:1) like Ac 12:4, described here "which are bound" (\tous dedemenous). Perfect passive articular participle of \de^, evidently the leaders of the demonic horsemen (9:15ff.) as the four angels let loose the demonic locusts (7:1ff.), both quaternions agents of God's wrath. {At the great river Euphrates} (\epi t^i potam^i t^i megal^i Euphrat^i). A regular epithet of the Euphrates (16:12; Ge 15:18; De 1:7). It rises in Armenia and joins the Tigris in lower Babylonia, a total length of nearly 1800 miles, the eastern boundary of the Roman Empire next to Parthia.

9:15 {Were loosed} (\eluth^ san). First aorist (ingressive) passive indicative of \lu^, "were let loose." {Which had been prepared} (\hoi h^ˆtoimasmenoi\). Perfect passive articular participle of \hetoimaz“, to make ready (\hetoimos\), in a state of readiness prepared by God (12:6; 16:12; Mt 25:34). {For the hour and day and month and year} (\eis t^ˆn h^ˆ“ran kai h^ˆmeran kai m^ˆna kai eniauton\). For this use of \eis\ with \h^ˆtoimasmenon\ see 2Ti 2:21. All preparation over, the angels are waiting for the signal to begin. {That they should kill} (\hina apoktein“sin\). The same idiom in verse 5 about the fifth trumpet, which brought torture. This one brings death.

9:16 {Of the horsemen} (\tou hippikou\). Old adjective \hippikos\ from \hippos\ (horse), equestrian. The neuter articular singular \to hippikon\, the horse or the cavalry in contrast with \to pezikon\ (the infantry), here only in N.T. For the numbers here see on 5:11; 7:4.

9:17 {And thus I saw in the vision} (\kai hout“s eidon en t^ˆi horasei\). Nowhere else does John allude to his own vision, though often in Dan. (Da 7:2; 8:2,15; 9:21). {Having} (\echontas\). Accusative masculine plural of \ech“, probably referring to the riders (\tous kath^ˆmenous ep' aut“n\ rather than to the horses (\tous hippous\). {Breastplates as of fire and of hyacinth and of brimstone} (\th“rakas purinous kai huakinthinous kai thei“deis\). There is no \h“s\ (as) in the Greek, but that is the idea of these three adjectives which are only metaphors. \Purinos\ is an old adjective (from \pur\, fire), here only in N.T. \Huakinthos\ is also an old word (from \huakinthos\, hyacinth, then of a sapphire stone Re 21:20), of a red color bordering on black, here only in the N.T. \Thei“d“s\ is a late word (from \theion\, brimstone), sulphurous, here only in N.T. {As the heads of lions} (\h“s kephalai leont“n\). This of the horses, war-horses as always in the Bible except in Isa 28:28. These horses likewise have "fire and smoke and brimstone" (\theion\, brimstone, is old word, in N.T. only in Rev. and Lu 17:29) proceeding (\ekporeuetai\, singular because it comes first and the subjects afterwards) out of their mouths. Both rider and horse are terrible.

9:18 {By these three plagues} (\apo t“n tri“n pl“g“n tout“n\). Our "plague" or stroke from \pl“ss“, as in Lu 10:30 and often in Rev. (9:20; 11:6; 15:1,6,8; 16:9; 18:4,8; 22:18). It is used in Ex 11:1ff. for the plagues in Egypt. The three plagues here are the fire, smoke, and brimstone which proceed from the mouths of the horses. {Was killed} (\apektanth^ˆsan\). First aorist passive indicative of \apoktein“\, to kill, third person plural, though \to triton\ is neuter singular because a collective idea. See same form in verse 20.

9:19 {The power} (\h[^] exousia\). As in 2:26; 6:8. This power of the horses is both in their mouths (because of the fire, smoke, brimstone) and in their tails, "for their tails are like unto serpents" (\hai gar ourai aut“n homoiai ophesin\).

Associative-instrumental case \ophesin\ after \homoiai\, \Ophis\ is old word for snake (Mt 7:10). {Having heads} (\echousai kephalas\). Feminine present active participle of \ech“\, agreeing with \ourai\ (tails). {With them} (\en autais\). Instrumental use of \en\, Surely dreadful monsters.

9:20 {Repented not} (\ou meteno[^]san\). First aorist active indicative of \metanoe“\, The two-thirds of mankind still spared did not change their creed or their conduct. {Of the works} (\ek t“n erg“n\). For this use of \ek\ after \metanoe“\ see 2:21; 9:21; 16:11. By "works" (\erg“n\ here idolatries are meant, as the next verse shows. {That they should not worship} (\hina m[^]proskun[^]sousin\). Negative purpose clause with \hina m[^]\ and the future active of \proskune“\ as in 9:5. {Devils} (\ta daimonia\). Both in the O.T. (De 32:17; Ps 96:5; 106:37) and in the N.T. (1Co 10:21) the worship of idols is called the worship of unclean spirits. Perhaps this is one explanation of the hideous faces given these images. "The idols" (\ta eid“la\ 1Jo 5:21, from \eidōs\, form, appearance) represented "demons," whether made of gold (\ta chrusf\) or of silver (\ta argurf\) or of brass (\ta chalkf\) or of stone (\ta lithina\) or of wood (\ta xulina\). See Da 5:23 for this picture of heathen idols. The helplessness of these idols, "which can neither see nor hear nor walk" (\ha oute blepein dunantai oute akoueiv oute peripateiv\), is often presented in the O.T. (Ps 113:12ff.; 115:4).

9:21 {Of their murders} (\ek t“n phon“n aut“n\). Heads the list, but "sorceries" (\ek t“n pharmak“n\ comes next. \Pharmakon\ was originally enchantment, as also in Re 21:8, then drug. For \pharmakia\ see Re 18:34; Ga 5:20. The two other items are fornication (\porneias\) and thefts (\klemmat“n\, old word from \klept“\, here alone in N.T.), all four characteristic of demonic worship and idolatry. See other lists of vices in Mr 7:21; Ga 5:20; Re 21:8; 22:15. Our word "pharmacy" as applied to drugs and medicine has certainly come a long way out of a bad environment, but there is still a bad odour about "patent medicines."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

10:1 {Another strong angel} (\allon aggelon ischuron\). But the seventh trumpet does not sound till 11:15. This angel is not one of the seven or of the four, but like the other strong angel in 5:2; 18:21 or the other angel in 14:6,15. The sixth trumpet of 9:13 ends in 9:21. The opening of the seventh seal was preceded by two visions (chapter Re 7) and so here the sounding of the seventh trumpet (11:15) is preceded by a new series of visions (10:1-11:14). {Coming down out of heaven} (\katabainonta ek tou ouranou\). Present active participle of \katabain\ picturing the process of the descent as in 20:1 (cf. 3:12). {Arrayed with a cloud} (\peribebhl^menon nephel^n\). Perfect passive participle of \periball\ with accusative case retained as in 7:9,13. Not proof that this angel is Christ, though Christ will come on the clouds (1:7) as he ascended on a cloud (Ac 1:9). God's chariot is in the clouds (Ps 104:3), but this angel is a special messenger of God's. {The rainbow} (\h^iris\). See 4:3 for this word. The construction here is changed from the accusative to the nominative. {As the sun} (\h^s ho h^lios\). The very metaphor applied to Christ in 1:16. {As pillars of fire} (\h^s stuloi puros\). Somewhat like the metaphor of Christ in 1:15, but still no proof that this angel is Christ. On \stulos\ see 3:12; Ga 2:9.

10:2 {And he had} (\kai ech^n\). This use of the participle in place of \eichen\ (imperfect) is like that in 4:7f.; 12:2; 19:12; 21:12,14, a Semitic idiom (Charles), or as if \katabain^n\ (nominative) had preceded in place of \katabainonta\. {A little book} (\biblaridion\). A diminutive of \biblarion\ (papyri), itself a diminutive of \biblion\ (5:1) and perhaps in contrast with it, a rare form in Hermas and Re 10:2,9,10. In 10:8 Tischendorf reads \biblidarion\, diminutive of \biblidion\ (Aristophanes) instead of \biblion\ (Westcott and Hort). The contents of this little book are found in 11:1-13. {Open} (\^ne^igmenon\). See Eze 2:9f. Perfect (triple reduplication) passive participle of \anoig^, in contrast to the closed book in 5:1. There also we have \epi\ (upon) \t^n dexian\ (the right hand), for it was a large roll, but here the little open roll is held in the hand (\en t^i cheiri\), apparently the left hand (verse 5). {He set} (\eth^ken\). First aorist active indicative of \tith^mi\. The size of the angel is colossal, for he bestrides both land and sea. Apparently there is no special point in the right foot (\ton poda ton dexion\) being on the sea (\epi t^s thalass^s\)) and the left (\ton eu^numon\) upon the land (\epi t^s g^s\). It makes a bold and graphic picture. {As a lion roareth} (\h^sper le^"n mukftai\). Only instance of \h^sper\ in the Apocalypse, but \h^s\ in the same sense several times. Present middle indicative of \mukaomai\, an old onomatopoetic word from \mu\ or \moo\ (the sound which a cow utters), common for the lowing and bellowing of cattle, Latin _mugire_, but in Theocritus for the roaring of a lion as here, though in 1Pe 5:8 we have \^ruomai\. Homer uses \mukaomai\ for the clangour of the shield and Aristophanes for thunder. It occurs here alone in the N.T. It does not mean that what the angel said was unintelligible, only loud. Cf. 1:10; 5:2,12; 6:10; 7:2,10, etc.

10:3 {The seven thunders} (\hai hepta brontai\). A recognized group, but not explained here, perhaps John assuming them to be known. For \brontai\ see already 4:5; 6:1; 8:5. In Ps 29 the Lord speaks in the sevenfold voice of the thunderstorm upon the sea. {Their voices} (\tas heaut^"n ph^"nas\). Cognate accusative with \elal^san\ and \heaut^"n\ (reflexive) means "their own." In Joh 12:28 the voice of the Father to Christ was thought by some to be thunder.

10:4 {I was about to write} (\^mellon graphein\). Imperfect active of \mell^" (\i double augment as in Joh 4:47; 12:33; 18:32) and the present (inchoative) active infinitive of \graph^", "I was on the point of beginning to write," as commanded in 1:11,19. {Seal up} (\sphragison\). Aorist active imperative of \sphragiz^", tense of urgency, "seal up at once." {And write them not} (\kai m^auta graps^is\). Prohibition with \m^ and the ingressive aorist active subjunctive of \graph^", "Do not begin to write." It is idle to conjecture what was in the utterances. Compare Paul's silence in 2Co 12:4.

10:5 {Standing} (\hest^"ta\). Second perfect active participle of \hist^mi\ (intransitive). John resumes the picture in verse 2. {Lifted up} (\^ren\). First aorist active indicative of \air^", to lift up. {To heaven} (\eis ton ouranon\). Toward heaven, the customary gesture in taking a solemn oath (Ge 14:22; De 32:40; Da 12:7).

10:6 {Sware} (\“mosen\). First aorist indicative of \omnu“\ to swear. {By him that liveth} (en t“i z“nti\). This use of \en\ after \omnu“\ instead of the usual accusative (Jas 5:12) is like the Hebrew (Mt 5:34,36). "The living one for ages of ages" is a common phrase in the Apocalypse for God as eternally existing (1:18; 4:9,10; 15:7). This oath proves that this angel is not Christ. {Who created} (hos ektisen\). First aorist active indicative of \ktiz“\, a reference to God's creative activity as seen in Ge 1:1ff.; Ex 20:11; Isa 37:16; 42:5; Ps 33:6; 145:6, etc. {That there shall be time no longer} (hoti chronos ouketi estai\). Future indicative indirect discourse with \hoti\. But this does not mean that \chronos\ (time), Einstein's "fourth dimension" (added to length, breadth, height), will cease to exist, but only that there will be no more delay in the fulfillment of the seventh trumpet (verse 7), in answer to the question, "How long?" (6:10).

10:7 {When he is about to sound} (hotan mell^i salpizein\). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the present active subjunctive of \mell“\ and the present (inchoative) active infinitive of \salpiz“\, "whenever he is about to begin to sound" (in contrast to the aorist in 11:15). {Then} (kai\). So in apodosis often (14:10). {Is finished} (etelesth^\). First aorist passive indicative of \tele“\, proleptic or futuristic use of the aorist as in 1Co 7:28. So also 15:1. {The mystery of God} (to must^rion tou theou\). This same phrase by Paul in 1Co 2:1; Col 2:2. Here apparently the whole purpose of God in human history is meant. {According to the good tidings which he declared} (h“s eu^ggelisen\). "As he gospelized to," first aorist active indicative of \euaggeliz“\, a rare use of the active as in 14:6 with the accusative. See the middle so used in Ga 1:9; 1Pe 1:12. See Am 3:7; Jer 7:25; 25:4 for this idea in the O.T. prophets who hoped for a cleaning up of all mysteries in the last days.

10:8 {Again speaking and saying} (palin lalousan kai legousan\). Present active predicate participles feminine accusative singular agreeing with \h^n\ (object of \^kousa\), not with \ph“n^\
(nominative) as most of the cursives have it (lalousa kai legousa\). Ordinarily it would be \elalei kai elegen\. See 4:1 for like idiom. This is the voice mentioned in verse 4. No great distinction is to be made here between \lale“\ and \leg“\.
{Go, take} (Hupage labe\). Present active imperative of \hupag“\ and second aorist active imperative of \lamban“\ . The use of \hupage\ (exclamation like \ide) is common in N.T. (Mt 5:24; 8:4; 19:21; Joh 4:16; 9:7). Charles calls it a Hebraism (16:1). Note the repeated article here (\to\) referring to the open book in the hand of the angel (verse 2), only here \biblion\ is used, not the diminutive of \biblaridion\ of verses 2,9,10.

10:9 {I went} (\ap^ltha\). Second aorist active indicative (\-a\ form), "I went away" (\ap-\) to the angel. John left his position by the door of heaven (4:1). {That he should give} (\dounai\). Second aorist active infinitive of \did“mi\ , indirect command after \leg“n\ (bidding) for \dos\ in the direct discourse (second aorist active imperative second person singular). This use of \leg“\ to bid occurs in 13:14; Ac 21:21. {He saith} (\legei\). Dramatic vivid present active indicative of \leg“\ . {Take it and eat it up} (\labe kai kataphage auto\). Second aorist (effective) active imperatives of \lamban“\ and \katesthi“\ (perfective use of \kata\ , "eat down," we say "eat up"). See the same metaphor in Eze 3:1-3; Jer 15:6f. The book was already open and was not to be read aloud, but to be digested mentally by John. {It shall make thy belly bitter} (\pikranei sou tⁿ koilian\). Future active of \pikrain“\ , for which verb see 8:11; 10:10; Col 3:19. There is no reference in Ezekiel or Jeremiah to the bitterness here mentioned. {Sweet as honey} (\gluku h“s meli\). For the sweetness of the roll see Ps 19:10f.; 119:103. "Every revelation of God's purposes, even though a mere fragment, a \biblaridion\ , is 'bitter-sweet,' disclosing judgement as well as mercy" (Swete). Deep and bitter sorrows confront John as he comes to understand God's will and way.

10:10 {I took--and ate it up} (\elabon--kai katephagon auto\). Second aorist active indicatives of the same verbs to show John's prompt obedience to the command. The order of the results is here changed to the actual experience (sweet in the mouth, bitter in the belly). The simplex verb \ephagon\ (I ate) is now used, not the compound \katephagon\ (I ate up).

10:11 {They say} (\legousin\). Present active of vivid dramatic action and the indefinite statement in the plural as in 13:16; 16:15. It is possible that the allusion is to the heavenly voice (10:4,8) and to the angel (10:9). {Thou must prophesy again} (\dei se palin proph^hteusai\). Not a new commission (1:19), though now renewed. C.f. Eze 4:7; 6:2; Jer 1:10. The \palin\

(again) points to what has preceded and also to what is to come in 11:15. Here it is predictive prophecy (proph^teusai), first aorist active infinitive of proph^teu“\). {Over} (epi\). In the case, in regard to as in Joh 12:16 (with graph“\), not in the presence of (epi\ with genitive, Mr 13:9) nor against (epi\ with the accusative, Lu 22:53). For this list of peoples see 5:9, occurring seven times in the Apocalypse.

11:1 {A reed} (\kalamos\). Old word for a growing reed (Mt 11:7) which grew in immense brakes in the Jordan valley, a writer's reed (3Jo 1:7), a measuring-rod (here, 21:15f.; Eze 40:3-6; 42:16-19). {Like a rod} (\homoios rabd"i\). See 2:27; Mr 6:8 for \rabdos\. {And one said} (\leg"n\). "Saying" (present active masculine participle of \leg") is all that the Greek has. The participle implies \ed"ken\ (he gave), not \edoth^, a harsh construction seen in Ge 22:20; 38:24, etc. {Rise and measure} (\egeire kai metr^son\). Present active imperative of \egeir" (intransitive, exclamatory use as in Mr 2:11) and first aorist active imperative of \metre". In Eze 42:2ff. the prophet measures the temple and that passage is probably in mind here. But modern scholars do not know how to interpret this interlude (11:1-13) before the seventh trumpet (11:15). Some (Wellhausen) take it to be a scrap from the Zealot party before the destruction of Jerusalem, which event Christ also foretold (Mr 13:2; Mt 24:2; Lu 21:6) and which was also attributed to Stephen (Ac 6:14). Charles denies any possible literal interpretation and takes the language in a wholly eschatological sense. There are three points in the interlude, however understood: the chastisement of Jerusalem or Israel (verses 1,2), the mission of the two witnesses (3-12), the rescue of the remnant (13). There is a heavenly sanctuary (7:15; 11:19; 14:15, etc.), but here \naos\ is on earth and yet not the actual temple in Jerusalem (unless so interpreted). Perhaps here it is the spiritual (3:12; 2Th 2:4; 1Co 3:16f.; 2Co 6:16; Eph 2:19ff.). For altar (\thusiast^rion\) see 8:3. Perhaps measuring as applied to "them that worship therein" (\tous proskunountas en aut"i\)) implies a word like numbering, with an allusion to the 144,000 in chapter 7 (a zeugma).

11:2 {The court} (\t^n aul^n\). The uncovered yard outside the house. There were usually two, one between the door and the street, the outer court, the other the inner court surrounded by the buildings (Mr 14:66). This is here the outer court, "which is without the temple" (\t^n ex"then tou naou\), outside of the sanctuary, but within the \hieron\ where the Gentiles could go (carrying out the imagery of the Jerusalem temple). {Leave without} (\ekbale ex“then\). Literally, "cast without" (second aorist active imperative of \ekball“). {Do not measure it} (\m^ aut^ n metr^ s^ is\). Prohibition with \m^ and the first aorist active (ingressive) subjunctive of \metre“\ . This outer court is left to its fate. In Herod's temple the outer court was marked off from the inner by "the middle wall of partition" (\to mesoitoichon tou phragmou\, Eph 2:15), beyond which a Gentile could not go. In this outer court was a house of prayer for the Gentiles (Mr 11:17), but now John is to cast it out and leave to its fate (given to the Gentiles in another sense) to be profaned by them. {They shall tread under foot} (\pat^ sousin\). Future active of \pate“\, here to trample with contempt as in Lu 21:24, even the holy city (Mt 4:5; Isa 48:2; Ne 11:1). Charles thinks that only the heavenly city can be so called here (21:2,10; 22:19) because of 11:8 (Sodom and Gomorrah). But the language may be merely symbolical. See Da 9:24. {Forty and two months} (\m^ nas tesserakonta kai duo\). Accusative of extent of time. This period in Da 7:25; 12:7. It occurs in three forms in the Apocalypse (forty-two months, here and 13:5; 1260 days, 11:3; 12:6; time, times and half a time or 3 1/2 years, 12:14 and so in Daniel). This period, however its length may be construed, covers the duration of the triumph of the Gentiles, of the prophesying of the two witnesses, of the sojourn of the woman in the wilderness.

11:3 {I will give} (\d“s“\). Future active of \did“mi\ . The speaker may be God (Beckwith) or Christ (Swete) as in 2:13; 21:6 or his angel representative (22:7,12ff.). The idiom that follows is Hebraic instead of either the infinitive after \did“mi\ as in 2:7; 3:21; 6:4; 7:2; 13:7,15; 16:8 or \hina\ with the subjunctive (9:5; 19:8) we have \kai proph^ teusousin\ (and they shall prophesy). {Unto my two witnesses} (\tois dusin martusin mou\). Dative case after \d“s“\ . The article seems to point to two well-known characters, like Elijah, Elisha, but there is no possible way to determine who they are. All sorts of identifications have been attempted. {Clothed} (\peribl^ menous\). Perfect passive participle of \periball“\ as often before (7:9,13; 10:1, etc.). But Aleph A P Q here read the accusative plural in \-ous\, while C has the nominative in \-oi\ . Charles suggests a mere slip for the nominative, but Hort suggests a primitive error in early MSS. for the dative \periblemenois\ agreeing with \martusin\ . {In sackcloth} (\sakkous\). Accusative retained with this passive verb as in 7:9,13. See 6:12 for 11:4 {The two olive trees} (\hai duo elai\). The article seems to point to what is known. For this original use of \elaia\ see Ro 11:17,24. In Zec 4:2,3,14 the lampstand or candlestick (\luchnia\) is Israel, and the two olive trees apparently Joshua and Zerubbabel, but John makes his own use of this symbolism. Here the two olive trees and the candlesticks are identical. {Standing} (\hest“tes\). Masculine perfect active participle agreeing with \houtoi\ instead of \hest“sai\ (read by P and cursives) agreeing with \elai\ kai luchniai\, even though \hai\ (feminine plural article) be accepted before \en“pion tou kuriou\ (before the Lord).

11:5 {If any man desireth to hurt them} (\ei tis autous thelei adik^sai\). Condition of first class, assumed to be true, with \ei\ and present active indicative (\thelei\) "if any one wants to hurt" (\adik^sai\ first aorist active infinitive). It is impossible to hurt these two witnesses till they do their work. The fire proceeding out of the mouths of the witnesses is like Elijah's experience (2Ki 1:10). {Devoureth} (\katesthie\). "Eats up (down)," present active indicative of \katesthi“\ {If any man shall desire} (\ei tis thel^s^i\). Condition of third class with \ei\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \thel“\ as in Lu 9:13; Php 3:12, but MSS. also read either \thelei\ (present active indicative) or \thel^sei\ (future active, condition of the first class like the preceding one. The condition is repeated in this changed form, as less likely to happen and with inevitable death) (\dei auton apoktanth^nai\, must be killed, first aorist passive infinitive of \apoktein“\ with \dei\).

11:6 {To shut the heaven} (\kleisai ton ouranon\). First aorist active infinitive of \klei“\ As Elijah did by prayer (1Ki 17:1; Lu 4:25; Jas 5:17). {That it rain not} (\hina m^ huetos brech^i\). Sub-final use of \hina m^ with the present active subjunctive of \brech“\, old verb to rain (Mt 5:45), here with \huetos\ as subject. {During the days} (\tas h^meras\). Accusative of extent of time. In Lu 4:25; Jas 5:17 the period of the drouth in Elijah's time was three and a half years, just the period here. {Of their prophecy} (\t^s proph^teias aut“n\). Not here the gift of prophecy (1Co 12:10) or a particular prophecy or collection of prophecies (Re 1:3; 22:7f.), but "the execution of the prophetic office" (Swete). {Over the waters} (\epi t'“n hudat“n). "Upon the waters." As Moses had (Ex 7:20). {Into blood} (\eis haima). As already stated in 8:8 about the third trumpet and now again here. {To smite} (\pataxai). First aorist active infinitive of \patass“, used here with \exousian echousin (they have power), as is \strephein (to turn). {With every plague} (\en pas^i pl'g^i). In 1Ki 4:8, but with reference to the plagues in Egypt. {As often as they shall desire} (\hosakis ean thel's“sin). Indefinite temporal clause with \hosakis and modal \ean (= \an) and the first aorist active subjunctive of \thel“, "as often as they will."

11:7 {When they shall have finished} (\hotan teles“sin). Merely the first aorist active subjunctive of \tele“ with \hotan in an indefinite temporal clause with no _futurum exactum_ (future perfect), "whenever they finish." {The beast} (\to th^rion). "The wild beast comes out of the abyss" of 9:1f. He reappears in 13:1; 17:8. In Da 7:3 \th^ria occurs. Nothing less than antichrist will satisfy the picture here. Some see the abomination of Da 7:7; Mt 24:15. Some see Nero _redivivus_. {He shall make war with them} (\poi^sei met' aut“n polemon). This same phrase occurs in 12:17 about the dragon's attack on the woman. It is more the picture of single combat (2:16). {He shall overcome them} (\nik^sei autous). Future active of \nika“. The victory of the beast over the two witnesses is certain, as in Da 7:21. {And kill them} (\kai apoktenei). Future active of \apoktein“. Without attempting to apply this prophecy to specific individuals or times, one can agree with these words of Swete: "But his words cover in effect all the martyrdoms and massacres of history in which brute force has seemed to triumph over truth and righteousness."

11:8 {Their dead bodies lie} (\to pt“ma aut“n). Old word from \pipt“ (to fall), a fall, especially of bodies slain in battle, a corpse, a carcass (Mt 14:12), here the singular (some MSS. \pt“mata\, plural) as belonging to each of the \aut“n (their) like \stomatos aut“n (their mouth) in verse 5. So also in verse 9. No word in the Greek for "lie." {In} (\epi). "Upon," as in verse 6, with genitive (\t^s plateias), the broad way (\hodou\ understood), from \platus (broad) as in Mt 6:5, old word (Re 21:21; 22:2). {Of the great city} (\t^s pole“s t^s megal^s). Clearly Jerusalem in view of the closing clause (\hopou--estaur“th^), though not here called "the holy city" as in verse 2, and though elsewhere in the Apocalypse Babylon (Rome) is so described (14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2,10,16,18,19,21). {Which} (ĥtis). Which very city, not "whichever." {Spiritually} (pneumatik“s”). This late adverb from pneumatikos (spiritual) occurs in the N.T. only twice, in 1Co 2:14 for the help of the Holy Spirit in interpreting God's message and here in a hidden or mystical (allegorical sense). For this use of pneumatikos see 1Co 10:3f. Judah is called Sodom in Isa 1:9f.; Eze 16:46,55. See also Mt 10:15; 11:23. Egypt is not applied to Israel in the O.T., but is "an obvious symbol of oppression and slavery" (Swete). {Where also their Lord was crucified} (hopou kai ho kurios aut“n estaur“th”). First aorist passive indicative of stauro“, to crucify, a reference to the fact of Christ's crucifixion in Jerusalem. This item is one of the sins of Jerusalem and the disciple is not greater than the Master (Joh 15:20).

11:9 {Men from among} (ek t“n etc.). No word for "men" (anthr“poi or polloi) before ek t“n, but it is implied (partitive use of ek) as in 2:10 and often. See also 5:9; 7:9 for this enumeration of races and nations. {Do look upon} (blepousin). Present (vivid dramatic) active indicative of blep“. {Three days and a half} (ĥmeras treis kai ĥmisu). Accusative of extent of time. Ĥmisu is neuter singular though ĥmeras (days) is feminine as in Mr 6:23; Re 12:14. The days of the gloating over the dead bodies are as many as the years of the prophesying by the witnesses (11:3), but there is no necessary correspondence (day for a year). This delight of the spectators "is represented as at once fiendish and childish" (Swete). {Suffer not} (ouk aphiousin). Present active indicative of aphi“, late form for aphi^mi, as in Mr 1:34 (cf. apheis in Re 2:20). This use of aphi^mi with the infinitive is here alone in the Apocalypse, though common elsewhere (Joh 11:44,48; 12:7; 18:8). {Their dead bodies} (ta pt“mata aut”n). "Their corpses," plural here, though singular just before and in verse 8. {To be laid in a tomb} (teth^nai eis mn^ma). First aorist passive of tith^mi, to place. Mn^ma (old word from mimn^sk“, to remind) is a memorial, a monument, a sepulchre, a tomb (Mr 5:3). "In a country where burial regularly took place on the day of death the time of exposure and indignity would be regarded long" (Beckwith). See Tobit 1:18ff.

11:10 {They that dwell upon the earth} (hoi katoikountes epi t^s g^s\). Present active articular participle of \katoike“, "an Apocalyptic formula" (Swete) for the non-Christian world (3:10; 6:10; 8:13; 13:8,12,14; 17:8). {Rejoice} (\chairousin\). Present active indicative of \chair“. {Over them} (\ep' autois\). Locative (or dative) case with \epi\ as in 10:11. {Make merry} (\euphrainontai\). Present middle indicative of \euphrain“, old verb (\eu, phrⁿ\, jolly mind), as in Lu 15:32; Re 12:12; 18:20. Jubilant jollification over the cessation of the activity of the two prophets. {They shall send gifts to one another} (\d“ra pempsousin all^{lois}\). Future active of \pemp“\ with dative \all^{lois}\. Just as we see it done in Es 9:19,22; Ne 8:10,12. {Tormented} (\ebasanisan\). First aorist active indicative of \basaniz“, for which see 9:5. This is the reason (\hoti\) of the fiendish glee of Jew and Gentile, who no longer will have to endure the prophecies (11:3f.) and dread miracles (11:5f.) of these two prophets. "Such a sense of relief is perhaps not seldom felt today by bad men when a preacher of righteousness or a signal example of goodness is removed" (Swete).

11:11 {After the} (\meta tas\ etc.). The article \tas\ (the) points back to 11:9. {The breath of life from God} (\pneuma z“^s ek tou theou\). This phrase (\pneuma z“^s\) occurs in Ge 6:17; 7:15,22 of the lower animals, but here there is clearly an allusion to Eze 37:5,10 (also 2Ki 13:21), where the dead bones lived again. {Entered into them} (\eis^{lthen} en autois\). Second aorist active indicative of \eiserchomai\ with \en\ rather than \eis\ after it (cf. Lu 9:46). The prophecy has here become fact (change from future \pempsousin\ to aorist \eis^{lthen}). {They stood upon their feet} (\est^{san} epi tous podas aut“ⁿ\). Ingressive second aorist active indicative of \hist^{mi}\ (intransitive). Reference to Eze 37:10, but with the accusative in place of genitive there after \epi\ as in 2Ki 13:21. {Fell upon} (\epepesen epi\). Second aorist active indicative of \epipipt“\ with repetition of \epi\. The same prophetic use of the aorist as in \eis^{lthen}\ and \est^{san}\. {Beheld} (\the“rountas\). Present active articular participle of \the“re“. "The spectators were panic-stricken" (Swete).

11:12 {Saying} (\legous^s\). Present active predicate participle of \leg“, feminine genitive agreeing with \ph“ⁿs\, though some MSS. have the accusative \ph“ⁿn legousan\, either construction being proper after \kousan\ (they heard). There is a little evidence for \`kousa\ like 12:10 (24 times in the book). Cf. Joh 5:28. {Come up hither} (\anabate h“de\). Second aorist active imperative of \anabain“\. The ascension of these two witnesses is in full view of their enemies, not just in the presence of a few friends as with Christ (Ac 1:9). {They went up} (\aneb^san\). Second aorist active indicative of \anabain“\. {In the cloud} (\en t^i nephel^i\). As Jesus did (Ac 1:9) and like Elijah (2Ki 2:11). Their triumph is openly celebrated before their enemies and is like the rapture described by Paul in 1Th 4:17.

11:13 {There was} (\egeneto\). "There came to pass" (second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai). Earthquakes are often given as a symbol of great upheavals in social and spiritual order (Swete) as in Eze 37:7; 38:19; Hag 2:6; Mr 13:8; Heb 12:26f.; Re 6:12; 16:18. {Fell} (\epesen\). Second aorist active indicative of \pipt“\, to fall. Only the tenth (\to dekatan\) of the city fell. Cf. \to triton\ (the third) in 8:7-12, perhaps a conventional number. {Were killed} (\apektanth^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \apoktein“\ as in 9:18. {Seven thousand persons} (\onomata anthr“p“n chiliades hepta\). This use of \onomata\ (names of men here) is like that in 3:4; Ac 1:15 and occurs in the papyri (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 196f.). {Were affrighted} (\emphoboi egenonto\). "Became terrified," old adjective (\en, phobos\, fear) as in Lu 24:5; Ac 10:4; 24:5. "A general movement toward Christianity, induced by fear or despair--a prediction fulfilled more than once in ecclesiastical history" (Swete). {Gave glory} (\ed“kan doxan\). First aorist active indicative of \did“mi\, when they saw the effect of the earthquake, recognition of God's power (Joh 9:24; Ac 12:23; Ro 4:20).

11:14 {Is past} (\ap^lthen\). Second aorist active indicative of \aperchomai\. See 9:12 for this use and 21:1,4. The second woe (\h^ ouai h^ deutera\) is the sixth trumpet (9:12) with the two episodes attached (10:1-11:13). {The third woe} (\h^ ouai h^ trit^, feminine as in 9:12) is the seventh trumpet, which now "cometh quickly" (\erchetai tachu\), for which phrase see 2:16; 3:11; 22:7,12,20. Usually pointing to the Parousia.

11:15 {There followed} (\egenonto\). "There came to pass." There was silence in heaven upon the opening of the seventh seal (8:1), but here "great voices." Perhaps the great voices are the \z“a\ of 4:6ff.; 5:8. {Saying} (\legontes\). Construction according to sense; \legontes\, masculine participle (not \legousai\), though \ph“nai\, feminine. John understood what was said. {Is become} (\egeneto\). "Did become," prophetic use of the aorist participle, already a fact. See \egeneto\ in Lu 19:9.

{The kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ} (\tou kuriou h^m“n kai tou Christou autou\). Repeat \h^ basileia\ from the preceding. God the Father is meant here by \kuriou\ (Lord), as \autou\ (his) shows. This is the certain and glorious outcome of the age-long struggle against Satan, who wields the kingdom of the world which he offered to Christ on the mountain for one act of worship. But Jesus scorned partnership with Satan in the rule of the world, and chose war, war up to the hilt and to the end. Now the climax has come with Christ as Conqueror of the kingdom of this world for his Father. This is the crowning lesson of the Apocalypse. {He shall reign} (\basileusei\). Future active of \basileu“\, God shall reign, but the rule of God and of Christ is one as the kingdom is one (1Co 15:27). Jesus is the Lord's Anointed (Lu 2:26; 9:20).

11:16 {The four and twenty elders} (\hoi eikosi tessares presbuteroi\). They follow the living creatures (verse 15, if correctly interpreted) in their adoration, as in 4:9ff. Though seated on thrones of their own (4:4), yet they fall upon their faces in every act of worship to God and Christ (4:10; 5:8,14; 19:4). Here \epi ta pros“pa aut“n\ (upon their faces) is added as in 7:11 about the angels. The elders here again represent the redeemed, as the four living creatures the forces of nature, in the great thanksgiving here (\eucharistoumen\, present active indicative of \euchariste“).

11:17 {O Lord God} (\Kurie ho theos\). Vocative form \kurie\ and nominative form \ho theos\ (vocative in use). See 1:8; 4:8 for this combination with \ho pantokrat“r\ (the Almighty). For \ho “n kai ho ^n\ (which art and which wast) see 1:4,8; 4:8; 16:5.

{Thou hast taken} (\eil^phes\). Perfect active indicative of \lamban“\, emphasizing the permanence of God's rule, "Thou hast assumed thy power." {Didst reign} (\ebasileusas\). Ingressive first aorist active indicative of \basileu“\, "Didst begin to reign." See this combination of tenses (perfect and aorist) without confusion in 3:3; 5:7; 8:5.

11:18 {Were wroth} (\“rgisth^san\). Ingressive first aorist active indicative of \orgizomai\, "became angry." The culmination of wrath against God (16:13ff.; 20:8f.). Cf. Ps 2:1,5,12;

99:1; Ac 4:25ff. John sees the hostility of the world against Christ. {Thy wrath came} (lthen h^org^sou\). Second aorist active indicative of \erchomai\, the prophetic aorist again. The _Dies Irae_ is conceived as already come. {The time of the dead to be judged} (ho kairos t^"n nekr^"n krith^nai\). For this use of \kairos\ see Mr 11:13; Lu 21:24. By "the dead" John apparently means both good and bad (Joh 5:25; Ac 24:21), coincident with the resurrection and judgment (Mr 4:29; Re 14:15ff.; 20:1-15). The infinitive \krith^nai\ is the first aorist passive of \krin^"\, epexegetic use with the preceding clause, as is true also of \dounai\ (second aorist active infinitive of \did^"mi\), to give. {Their reward} (ton misthon\). This will come in the end of the day (Mt 20:8), from God (Mt 6:1), at the Lord's return (Re 22:12), according to each one's work (1Co 3:8). {The small and the great} (tous mikrous kai tous megalous\). The accusative here is an anacoluthon and fails to agree in case with the preceding datives after \dounai ton misthon\, though some MSS. have the dative \tois mikrois\, etc. John is fond of this phrase "the small and the great" (13:16; 19:5,18; 20:12). {To destroy} (diaphtheirai\). First aorist active infinitive of \diaphtheir^"\, carrying on the construction with \kairos\. Note \tous diaphtheirontas\, "those destroying" the earth (corrupting the earth). There is a double sense in \diaphtheir^"\ that justifies this play on the word. See 19:2. In 1Ti 6:5 we have those "corrupted in mind" (diaphtharmenoi ton noun\). God will destroy the destroyers (1Co 3:16f.).

11:19 {Was opened} (^noig^\). Second aorist passive indicative of \anoig^"\, with augment on the preposition as in 15:5. For the sanctuary (naos\) of God in heaven see 3:12; 7:15; 15:5ff.; 21:22. {Was seen} (^phth^\). First aorist passive indicative of \hora^"\. {The ark of his covenant} (h^ kib^"tos t^s diath^k^s autou\). The sacred ark within the second veil of the tabernacle (Heb 9:4) and in the inner chamber of Solomon's temple (1Ki 8:6) which probably perished when Nebuchadrezzar burnt the temple (2Ki 25:9; Jer 3:16). For the symbols of majesty and power in nature here see also 6:12; 8:5; 11:13; 16:18,21.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

12:1 {A great sign} (\s^meion mega). The first of the visions to be so described (13:3; 15:1), and it is introduced by \“phth^ as in 11:19; 12:3, not by \meta tauto\ or by \eidon\ or by \eidon kai idou\ as heretofore. This "sign" is really a \teras\ (wonder), as it is so by association in Mt 24:24; Joh 4:48; Ac 2:22; 5:12. The element of wonder is not in the word \s^meion\ as in \teras\, but often in the thing itself as in Lu 21:11; Joh 9:16; Re 13:13ff.; 15:1; 16:14; 19:20. {A woman} (\gun^). Nominative case in apposition with \s^meion\. "The first 'sign in heaven' is a Woman--the earliest appearance of a female figure in the Apocalyptic vision" (Swete). {Arrayed with the sun} (\peribeb^l^men^ ton h^lion). Perfect passive participle of \periball^, with the accusative retained as so often (9 times) in the Apocalypse. Both Charles and Moffatt see mythological ideas and sources behind the bold imagery here that leave us all at sea. Swete understands the Woman to be "the church of the Old Testament" as "the Mother of whom Christ came after the flesh. But here, as everywhere in the Book, no sharp dividing line is drawn between the Church of the Old Testament and the Christian Society." Certainly she is not the Virgin Mary, as verse 17 makes clear. Beckwith takes her to be "the heavenly representative of the people of God, the _ideal_ Zion, which, so far as it is embodied in concrete realities, is represented alike by the people of the Old and the New Covenants." John may have in mind Isa 7:14 (Mt 1:23; Lu 1:31) as well as Mic 4:10; Isa 26:17f.; 66:7 without a definite picture of Mary. The metaphor of childbirth is common enough (Joh 16:21; Ga 4:19). The figure is a bold one with the moon "under her feet" (\hupokat^ t^“n pod^“n aut^s) and "a crown of twelve stars" (\stephanos aster^“n d^“deka), a possible allusion to the twelve tribes (Jas 1:1; Re 21:12) or to the twelve apostles (Re 21:14).

12:2 {And she was with child} (\kai en gastri echousa). Perhaps \estin\ to be supplied or the participle used as a finite verb as in 10:2. This is the technical idiom for pregnancy as in Mt 1:18,23, etc. {Travailing in birth} (\“dinousa). Present active participle of \“din^, old verb (from \“din\ birth-pangs 1Th 5:3), in N.T. only here and Ga 4:27. {And in pain} (\kai basanizomen^). "And tormented" (present passive participle of \basaniz^, for which see already 9:5; 11:10), only here in N.T. in sense of childbirth. {To be delivered} (\tekein). Second aorist active infinitive of \tik^, to give birth, exegetical use. Also in verse 4.

12:3 {Another sign} (\allo s^meion). "A second tableau following close upon the first and inseparable from it" (Swete). {And behold} (\kai idou). As often (4:1; 6:2,5,8, etc.). {A great red dragon} (\drak^n megas purros). Homer uses this old word (probably from \derkomai, to see clearly) for a great monster with three heads coiled like a serpent that ate poisonous herbs. The word occurs also in Hesiod, Pindar, Eschylus. The Babylonians feared a seven-headed hydra and Typhon was the Egyptian dragon who persecuted Osiris. One wonders if these and the Chinese dragons are not race memories of conflicts with the diplodocus and like monsters before their disappearance. Charles notes in the O.T. this monster as the chief enemy of God under such title as Rahab (Isa 51:9f.; Job 26:12f.), Behemoth (Job 40:15-24), Leviathan (Isa 27:1), the Serpent (Am 9:2ff.). In Ps 74:13 we read of "the heads of the dragons." On \purros (red) see 6:4. Here (12:9) and in 20:2 the great dragon is identified with Satan. See Da 7 for many of the items here, like the ten horns (Da 7:7) and hurling the stars (Da 8:10). The word occurs in the Apocalypse alone in the N.T. {Seven diadems} (\hepta diad^mata). Old word from \diade^ (to bind around), the blue band marked with white with which Persian kings used to bind on the tiara, so a royal crown in contrast with \stephanos (chaplet or wreath like the Latin _corona_ as in 2:10), in N.T. only here, 13:1; 19:12. If Christ as Conqueror has "many diadems," it is not strange that Satan should wear seven (ten in 13:1).

12:4 {His tail} (\h^ oura autou). See 9:10,19. {Draweth} (\surei). Present active indicative of \sur^, old verb, to drag, here alone in the Apocalypse, but see Joh 21:8. {The third part of the stars} (\to triton t^"n aster^n). Like a great comet is this monster. See Da 8:10. Perhaps only the third is meant to soften the picture as in Re 8:7f. {Did cast them} (\ebalen autous). Second aorist active indicative. Charles takes this to refer to a war in heaven between the good angels and Satan, with the fall of some angels (Jude 1:6). But John may have in mind the martyrs before Christ (Heb 11:32f.) and after Christ's ascension (Mt 23:35). {Stood} (\est^ken\). Imperfect active of a late verb, \st^k^, from the perfect \hest^ka\ of \hist^mi\, graphic picture of the dragon's challenge of the woman who is about to give birth. {When she was delivered} (\hotan tek^i\). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \tik^, "whenever she gives birth." {That he might devour} (\hina kataphag^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \katesthi^, to eat up (down). Cf. Jer 28:34. This is what Pharaoh did to Israel (Ex 1:15-22; Ps 85:13; Isa 27:1; 51:9; Eze 29:3). Precisely so the devil tried to destroy the child Jesus on his birth.

12:5 {She was delivered of a son} (\eteken huion\). Literally, "she bore a son" (second aorist active indicative of \tik^). {A man child} (\arsen\). So A C with the neuter \teknon\ or \paidion\ in mind, as often in O.T. (\eteken arsen\, Ex 1:16ff.; 2:2; Le 12:2,7; Isa 66:7; Jer 20:15, etc.), but P and some cursives read \arsena\ (masculine accusative), as in verse 13 (\ton arsena\), while Aleph Q have \arrena\). The word is old (either \ars^en\ or \arr^en), as in Mt 19:4, only in this chapter in the Apocalypse. It is really redundant after \huion\ (son), as in Tob. 6:12 (Aleph). {Who is to rule all the nations with a rod of iron} (\hos mellei poimainein panta ta ethn^ en rabd^i sid^rfi\). See 2:27 for these words (from Ps 2:9) applied there to victorious Christians also, and in 19:15 to the triumphant Christian. His rule will go beyond the Jews (Mt 2:6). There is here, of course, direct reference to the birth of Jesus from Mary, who thus represented in her person this "ideal woman" (God's people). {Was caught unto God} (\h^rpasth^). First aorist passive indicative of \harpaz^, old verb for seizing or snatching away, as in Joh 10:12, here alone in the Apocalypse. Reference to the ascension of Christ, with omission of the ministry, crucifixion, and resurrection of Christ because he is here simply showing that "the Dragon's vigilance was futile" (Swete). "The Messiah, so far from being destroyed, is caught up to a share in God's throne" (Beckwith).

12:6 {Fled into the wilderness} (\ephugen eis t^en er^mon\). Second aorist active indicative of \pheug^, Here, of course, not Mary, but "the ideal woman" (God's people) of the preceding verses, who fled under persecution of the dragon. God's people do not at once share the rapture of Christ, but the dragon is unable to destroy them completely. The phrases used here seem to be reminiscent of De 8:2ff. (wanderings of Israel in the wilderness), 1Ki 17:2f. and 19:3f. (Elijah's flight), I Macc. 2:29 (flight of the Jews from Antiochus Epiphanes), Mt 2:13 (flight of Joseph and Mary to Egypt), Mr 13:14 (the flight of Christians at the destruction of Jerusalem). {Where} (\hopou--ekei\). Hebrew redundancy (where--there) as in 3:8; 8:9,9; 13:8,12; 17:9; 20:8. {Prepared} (\h^toimasmemon\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \hetoimaz\, for which verb see Mt 20:23; Re 8:6; 9:7,15; 16:12; 19:7; 21:2, and for its use with \topos\ Joh 14:2f. and for the kind of fellowship meant by it (Ps 31:21; 2Co 13:13; Col 3:3; 1Jo 1:3). {Of God} (\apo tou theou\). "From (by) God," marking the source as God (9:18; Jas 1:13). This anticipatory symbolism is repeated in 12:13f. {That there they may nourish her} (\hina ekei treph^sin aut^n\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the present for continued action: active subjunctive according to A P though C reads \trephousin\, present active indicative, as is possible also in 13:17 and certainly so in 1Jo 5:20 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 984), a solecism in late vernacular Greek. The plural is indefinite "they" as in 10:11; 11:9. One MSS. has \trephetai\ (is nourished). The stereotyped phrase occurs here, as in 11:2f., for the length of the dragon's power, repeated in 12:14 in more general terms and again in 13:5.

12:7 {There was war in heaven} (\egeneto polemos en t^i ouran^i\). "There came to be war in heaven" (\egeneto\, not \^n\). "Another \tableau\, not a \s^meion\ (vv. 1,3), but consequent upon the two \s^meia\ which precede it. The birth and rapture of the Woman's Son issue in a war which invades the \epourania\" (Swete). The reference is not to the original rebellion of Satan, as Andreas held. As the coming of Christ brought on fresh manifestations of diabolic power (Mr 1:13; Lu 22:3,31; Joh 12:31; 14:30; 16:11), just so Christ's return to heaven is pictured as being the occasion of renewed attacks there. We are not to visualize it too literally, but certainly modern airplanes help us to grasp the notion of battles in the sky even more than the phalanxes of storm-clouds (Swete). John even describes this last conflict as in heaven itself. Cf. Lu 10:18; 1Ki 22:1ff.; Job 1; 2; Zec 3:1ff. {Michael and his angels} (\ho Micha^l kai hoi aggeloi autou\). The nominative here may be in apposition with \polemos\, but it is an abnormal construction with no verb, though \egeneto\ (arose) can be understood as repeated. Michael is the champion of the Jewish people (Da 10:13,21; 12:1) and is called the archangel in Jude 9. {Going forth to war} (\(tou polem^sai\)). This genitive articular infinitive is another grammatical problem in this sentence. If \egeneto\ (arose) is repeated as above, then we have the infinitive for purpose, a common enough idiom. Otherwise it is anomalous, not even like Ac 10:25. {With the dragon} (\(meta tou drakontos\)). On the use of \meta\ with \poleme“\ see 2:16; 13:4; 17:14 (nowhere else in N.T.). The devil has angels under his command (Mt 25:41) and preachers also (2Co 11:14f.). {Warred} (\(epolem^sen\)). Constative aorist active indicative of \poleme“, picturing the whole battle in one glimpse.

12:8 {And they prevailed not} (\(kai ouk ischusan\)). Here \kai\ equals "and yet" or "but." A few MSS. read the singular \ischusen\ like \epolem^sen\, but wrongly so. {Neither was their place found any more} (\(oude topos heureth^ aut^“n eti\)). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk“, to find. Probably \aut^“n\ is the objective genitive (place for them), just as in 20:11 \autois\ (dative, for them) is used with \topos ouch heureth“. The phrase occurs in Da 2:35 Theod. and Zec 10:10. The dragon is finally expelled from heaven (cf. Job 1:6), though to us it seems a difficult conception to think of Satan having had access to heaven.

12:9 {Was cast down} (\(ebli^th^\)). Effective first aorist passive indicative of \ball“, cast down for good and all, a glorious consummation. This vision of final victory over Satan is given by Jesus in Lu 10:18; Joh 12:31. It has not come yet, but it is coming, and the hope of it should be a spur to missionary activity and zeal. The word meas (great) occurs here with \drak^“n\ as in 12:3, and the whole picture is repeated in 20:2. The dragon in both places is identified with the old serpent (Ge 3:1ff.) and called \archaios\ (from \arch“, beginning), as Jesus said that the devil was a murderer "from the beginning" (Joh 8:44). Both \diabolos\ (slanderer) and Satan (\(Satanfs\)) are common in N.T. for this great dragon and old serpent, the chief enemy of mankind. See on Mt 4:1; Re 2:10 for \diabolos\ and Lu 10:18 for \Satanfs“. {The deceiver of the whole world} (\(ho plan^“n t^“n oikoumen^“n hol^“n\)). This is his aim and his occupation, pictured here by the nominative articular present active participle of \plana“, to lead astray. For "the inhabited world" see Lu 2:1; Re 3:10; 16:14. Satan can almost "lead astray" the very elect of God (Mt 24:24), so artful is he in his beguilings as he teaches us how to deceive ourselves (1Jo 1:8). {He was cast down to the earth} (\ebl^th^ eis t^ n g^ n). Effective aorist repeated from the beginning of the verse. "The earth was no new sphere of Satan's working" (Swete). {Were cast down} (\ebl^th^ san). Triple use of the same verb applied to Satan's minions. The expulsion is complete.

12:10 {A great voice saying} (\ph^ "n^ n megal^ n legousan). Accusative after \^kousa in this phrase as in 5:11; 10:4; 14:2; 18:4, but the genitive \ph^ "n^ s legous^ s in 11:12; 14:13. We are not told whence this voice or song comes, possibly from one of the twenty-four elders (Swete) or some other heavenly beings (11:15) who can sympathize with human beings (19:10), the martyrs in heaven (Charles). {Now is come} (\arti egeneto). \Arti (Joh 13:33) shows how recent the downfall of Satan here proleptically pictured as behind us in time (aorist tense egeneto). {The salvation} (\h^ s^ "t^ ria). Here "the victory" as in 7:10; 19:1. {The power} (\h^ dunamis). Gods power over the dragon (cf. 7:12; 11:17; 19:1). {The kingdom} (\h^ basileia). "The empire of God" as in 11:15. {The authority of his Christ} (\h^ exousia tou Christou autou). Which Christ received from the Father (Mt 28:18; Joh 17:2). See 11:15 (Ps 2:2) for "his Anointed." {The accuser} (\ho kat^ g^ "r). The regular form, \kat^ goros, occurs in Joh 8:10; Ac 23:30,35; 25:16,18 and in many MSS. here in Re 12:10, but A reads \kat^ g^ "r, which Westcott and Hort accept. It was once considered a Greek transliteration of a Hebrew word, but Deissmann (_Light_, etc., p. 93f.) quotes it from a vernacular magical papyrus of the fourth century A.D. with no sign of Jewish or Christian influence, just as \diak^ n appears as a vernacular form of \diakonos. Only here is the word applied to Satan in the N.T. In late Judaism Satan is the accuser, and Michael the defender, of the faithful. {Of our brethren} (\t^ "n adelph^ "n h^ m^ "n). The saints still on earth battling with Satan and his devices. {Which accuseth them} (\ho kat^ gor^ "n autous). Articular present active participle of \kat^ gore^ ", old verb, to accuse, usually with the genitive of the person (Joh 5:45), but here with the accusative. This is the devil's constant occupation (Job 1:6f.). {Day and night} (\h^ meras kai nuktos). Genitive of time. "By day and by night."

12:11 {They overcame him} (\autoi enik^ san). First aorist active indicative of \nika“, the verb used by Jesus of his own victory (Joh 16:33) and about him (Re 3:21; 5:5). "The victory of the martyrs marks the failure of Satan's endeavours" (Swete). {Because of the blood of the Lamb} (\dia to haima tou arniou\). As in 1:5; 5:6,9; 7:14. The blood of Christ is here presented by \dia\ as the ground for the victory and not the means, as by \en\ in 1:5; 5:9. Both ideas are true, but \dia\ with the accusative gives only the reason. The blood of Christ does cleanse us from sin (Joh 1:29; 1Jo 1:7). Christ conquered Satan, and so makes our victory possible (Lu 11:21f.; Heb 2:18). "Thus the Lamb is the true \sun^goros\ (like Michael) of the New Israel, its \parakl^tos pros ton patera\ (1Jo 2:1)" (Swete). {Because of the Word of their testimony} (\dia ton logon t^s marturias aut^n\). The same use of \dia\, "because of their testimony to Jesus" as in John's own case in 1:9. These martyrs have been true to their part. {They loved not their life even unto death} (\ouk ^gap^san ten psuch^n aut^n achri thanatou\). First aorist active indicative of \agapa“. They did resist "unto blood" (\mechris haimatos\ Heb 12:4) and did not put their own lives before loyalty to Christ. There is a direct reference to the words of Jesus in Joh 12:25 as illustrated also in Mr 8:35; Mt 10:39; 16:25; Lu 9:24; 17:33. Paul's own example is pertinent (Ac 21:13; Php 1:20ff.). Jesus himself had been "obedient unto death" (Php 2:8). These martyrs seem to be still alive on earth, but their heroism is proleptically pictured.

12:12 {Therefore} (\dia touto\). "For this reason" as in 7:15; 18:8 (15 times in John's Gospel, Charles notes). It points back to verse 10. {Rejoice} (\euphrainesthe\). Present middle imperative of \euphrain“\ as in 11:10; 18:20. {O heavens} (\hoi ouranoi\). Plural here alone in the Apocalypse, though common elsewhere in the N.T. Satan is no longer in the heavens. {They that dwell therein} (\hoi en autois sk^nountes\). Present active articular participle of \sk^no“\ (see 7:15; 13:6) to dwell (tabernacle) as of Christ in Joh 1:14 and of God in Re 21:3. The inhabitants of heaven (angels and saints) have cause to rejoice, and earth reason to mourn. {Woe for the earth and for the sea} (\ouai t^n g^n kai t^n thalassan\). The accusative after \ouai\ as in 8:13, but nominative in 18:10,16,19 in place of the usual dative (Mt 11:21; 18:7, etc.). {Is gone down} (\kateb^). Second aorist (effective) active indicative of \katabain“\, "did go down." {But a short time} (\oligon kairon\). Accusative of extent of time, "a little time." The devil's departure from his warfare in the heavens reveals (\eid“s, knowing, perfect active participle) to him that his time for doing harm to men is limited, and hence his great wrath (\thumon, boiling rage).

12:13 {He persecuted} (\edi“xen). First aorist active participle of \di“k“, to pursue, to chase, hostile pursuit here as in Mt 5:10f.; 10:23, etc. John now, after the "voice" in 10-13, returns to the narrative in verse 9. The child was caught away in verse 5, and now the woman (the true Israel on earth) is given deadly persecution. Perhaps events since A.D. 64 (burning of Rome by Nero) amply illustrated this vision, and they still do so. {Which} (\h^tis). "Which very one."

12:14 {There were given} (\edoth^san). As in 8:2; 9:1,3. {The two wings of the great eagle} (\hai duo pteruges tou aetou tou megalou). Not the eagle of 8:13, but the generic use of the article. Every eagle had two wings. Probably here, as in Mt 24:28, the griffon or vulture rather than the true eagle is pictured. For the eagle in the O.T. see Ex 19:4; Isa 40:31; Job 9:26; Pr 24:54. {That she might fly} (\hina pet^tai). Purpose clause with \hina and present middle subjunctive of \petomai, old verb, to fly, in N.T. only in the Apocalypse (4:7; 8:13; 12:14; 14:6; 19:17). Resumption of the details in verse 6 (which see) about the "wilderness," her "place," the redundant \ekei with \hopou, the "time and times, and half a time" (\kairon kai kairous kai h^misu), 1260 days, but with \trephetai (present passive indicative) instead of \treph“sin (general plural of the present active subjunctive), and with the addition of "from the face of the serpent" (\apo pros“pou tou ophe“s), because the serpent rules the earth for that period. "To the end of the present order the Church dwells in the wilderness" (Swete), and yet we must carry on for Christ.

12:15 {Water as a flood} (\hud“r h“s potamon). "Water as a river," accusative case after \ebalen (cast). The serpent could not follow the woman or stop her flight and so sought to drown her. {That he might cause her to be carried away by the stream} (\hina aut^n potamophor^ton poi^s^i). Purpose clause with \hina and the first aorist active subjunctive of \poie“. For this use of \poie“ see 17:16. This compound verbal \potamophor^ton in the predicate accusative (\potamos, river, \phor^ton\ from phore“, to bear) was not coined by John, but occurs in a papyrus of B.C. 110 and in several others after N.T. times. It means simply "carried away by the river."

12:16 {Helped the woman} (ebothsen tⁱ gunaiki\). First aorist active indicative of \bo^{the}\, old verb with the dative as in Heb 2:18, which see. Herodotus tells of the Lycus disappearing underground near Colossae. But this vivid symbol is not dependent on historical examples. {Swallowed up} (katapien\). Second aorist active indicative of \katapin\, literally "drank down."

12:17 {Waxed wroth} (rgisth^h\). First aorist (ingressive) passive indicative of \orgizomai\, "became angry." {With the woman} (epi tⁱ gunaiki\). "At the woman," "because of the woman." {Went away} (ap^lthen\). "Went off" in his rage to make war with the scattered followers of the Lamb not in the wilderness, perhaps an allusion to Ge 3:15. The devil carries on relentless war with all those "which keep the commandments of God and hold the testimony of Jesus" (tⁿ t^hrountⁿ tas entolas tou theou kai echontⁿ tⁿ marturian I^{sou}\). These two marks excite the wrath of the devil then and always. Cf. 1:9; 6:9; 14:12; 19:10; 20:4.

(Revelation: Chapter 12)

13:1 {He stood} (\estath^). First aorist passive indicative of \hist^mi (intransitive), as in 8:3. "He stopped" on his way to war with the rest of the woman's seed. P Q read here \estath^n (I stood) when it has to be connected with chapter Re 13. {Upon the sand} (\epi t^n ammon). The accusative case as in 7:1; 8:3, etc. \Ammos is an old word for sand, for innumerable multitude in 20:8.

{Out of the sea} (\ek t^s thalass^s). See 11:7 for "the beast coming up out of the abyss." The imagery comes from Da 7:3. See also Re 17:8. This "wild beast from the sea," as in Da 7:17,23, is a vast empire used in the interest of brute force. This beast, like the dragon (12:3), has ten horns and seven heads, but the horns are crowned, not the heads. The Roman Empire seems to be meant here (17:9,12). On "diadems" (\diad^mata) see 12:3, only ten here, not seven as there. {Names of blasphemy} (\onomata blasph^mias). See 17:3 for this same phrase. The meaning is made plain by the blasphemous titles assumed by the Roman emperors in the first and second centuries, as shown by the inscriptions in Ephesus, which have \theos constantly applied to them.

13:2 {Like unto a leopard} (\homoion pardalei). Associative-instrumental case of \pardalis, old word for panther, leopard, here only in N.T. The leopard (\leo, pard) was considered a cross between a panther and a lioness. {As the feet of a bear} (\h^s arkou). Old word, also spelled \arktos, here only in N.T. From Da 7:4. No word in the Greek for "feet" before "bear." {As the mouth of a lion} (\h^s stoma leontos). From Da 7:4. This beast combines features of the first three beasts in Da 7:2ff. The strength and brutality of the Babylonian, Median, and Persian empires appeared in the Roman Empire. The catlike vigilance of the leopard, the slow and crushing power of the bear, and the roar of the lion were all familiar features to the shepherds in Palestine (Swete). {The dragon gave him} (\ed^ken aut^i ho drak^n). First aorist active indicative of \did^mi (to give) and dative case \aut^i (the beast). The dragon works through this beast. The beast is simply Satan's agent. Satan claimed this power to Christ (Mt 4:9; Lu 4:6) and Christ called Satan the prince of this world (Joh 12:31; 14:30; 16:11). So the war is on.

13:3 {And I saw} (\kai). No verb (\eidon) in the old MSS., but clearly understood from verse 2. {As though it had been smitten} (\h"s esphagmen^n). Perfect passive participle of \sphaz", as in 5:6, accusative singular agreeing with \mian (one of the heads), object of \eidon understood, "as though slain" (so the word means in seven other instances in the book). There is a reference to the death and new life of the Lamb in 5:6. {And his death-stroke was healed} (\kai h^ pl^g^ autou etherapeuth^). First aorist passive indicative of \therapeu". "The stroke of death" (that led to death). Apparently refers to the death of Nero in June 68 A.D. by his own hand. But after his death pretenders arose claiming to be Nero _redivivus_ even as late as 89 (Tacitus, _Hist_. i. 78, ii. 8, etc.). John seems to regard Domitian as Nero over again in the persecutions carried on by him. The distinction is not always preserved between the beast (Roman Empire) and the seven heads (emperors), but in 17:10 the beast survives the loss of five heads. Here it is the death-stroke of one head, while in verses 12,14 the beast himself receives a mortal wound. {Wondered after the beast} (\ethaumasth^ opis" tou th^riou). First aorist passive (deponent) indicative of \thaumaz", to wonder at, to admire, as in 17:8. For this pregnant use of \opis" see Joh 12:9; Ac 5:37; 20:30; 1Ti 5:15. "All the earth wondered at and followed after the beast," that is Antichrist as represented by Domitian as Nero _redivivus_. But Charles champions the view that Caligula, not Nero, is the head that received the death-stroke and recovered and set up statues of himself for worship, even trying to do it in Jerusalem.

13:4 {They worshipped the dragon} (\prosekun^san t^i drakonti). First aorist active indicative of \proskune", with dative case \drakonti (from \drak^n). They really worshipped Satan (the dragon) when "they worshipped the beast" (\prosekun^san t^i th^ri"i) or any one of the heads (like Caligula, Nero, Domitian) of the beast. The beast is merely the tool of the devil for worship. Recall the fact that the devil even proposed that Jesus worship him. Emperor-worship, like all idolatry, was devil-worship. The same thing is true today about self-worship

(humanism or any other form of it). {Who is like unto the beast?} (tis homoios t' i th' ri' i;|). Associative-instrumental case after \homoios|. An echo, perhaps parody, of like language about God in Ex 15:11; Ps 35:10; 113:5. "The worship of such a monster as Nero was indeed a travesty of the worship of God" (Swete). {And who is able to war with him?} (kai tis dunatai polem' sai met' autou;|). Worship of the devil and the devil's agent is justified purely on the ground of brute force. It is the doctrine of Nietzsche that might makes right.

13:5 {There was given to him} (edoth' aut' i|). First aorist passive indicative of \did' mi|, to give, as in next line and verse 7. Perhaps a reference to \ed' ken| (he gave) in verse 4, where the dragon (Satan) gave the beast his power. The ultimate source of power is God, but the reference seems to be Satan here. {Speaking great things and blasphemies} (laloun megala kai blasph' mias|). Present active participle of \lale' |, agreeing with \stoma| (nominative neuter singular and subject of edoth'|). The words are like Daniel's description of the Little Horn (7:8,20,25) and like the description of Antiochus Epiphanes (I Macc. 1:24). Cf. 2Pe 2:11. {To continue} (poi' sai|). First aorist active infinitive (epexegetic use) of \poie' |, either in the sense of working (signs), as in Da 8:12-14, with the accusative of duration of time (m' nas| months), or more likely in the sense of doing time, with \m' nas| as the direct object as in Mt 20:12; Ac 20:3; Jas 4:13.

13:6 {For blasphemies} (eis blasph' mias|). "For the purpose of blasphemies." {Against God} (pros ton theon|). "Face to face with God" in sheer defiance, like Milton's picture of Satan in Paradise Lost. See Da 7:25; 8:10. The aorist \noixen| is probably constative, for he repeated the blasphemies, though the phrase (anoig' | to stoma, to open the mouth) is normally ingressive of the beginning of an utterance (Mt 5:2; Ac 8:35). This verse explains verse 5. The Roman emperors blasphemously assumed divine names in public documents. They directed their blasphemy against heaven itself ("his tabernacle," t' n sk' n' n autou |, 7:15; 12:12; 21:3) and against "them that dwell in the heaven" (tous en t' i ouran' i sk' nountas|), the same phrase of 12:12 (either angels or the redeemed or both).

13:7 {To make war with the saints and to overcome them} (poi' sai polemon meta t' n hagi' n kai nik' sai autous|). This clause with two epexegetical first aorist active infinitives (polem' sai| and \nik^sai\) is omitted in A C P, but probably by \homoeoteleuton\ (like ending) because of the repetition of \edoth^. The words seem to come from Da 7:21,23. There was no escape from the beast's rule in the Mediterranean world. See 5:9 for the phrases here used, there for praise to the Lamb.

13:8 {Shall worship him} (\proskun^sousin auton\). Future active of \proskune^ with the accusative here as some MSS. in 13:4 (\to th^rion\), both constructions in this book. {Whose} (\hou--autou\). Redundant use of genitive \autou\ (his) with \hou\ (whose) as common in this book, and singular instead of plural \h^n\ with antecedent \pantes\ (all, plural), thus calling attention to the responsibility of the individual in emperor-worship. {Hath not been written} (\ou gegraptai\). Perfect passive indicative of \graph^, permanent state, stands written. {In the book of life of the Lamb} (\en t^i bibli^i t^s z^s tou arniou\). See 3:5 for this phrase and the O.T. references. It occurs again in 17:8; 20:12,15; 21:27. "Here and in 21:27, the Divine Register is represented as belonging to 'the Lamb that was slain'" (Swete). {That hath been slain from the foundation of the world} (\tou esphagmenou\ (for which see 5:6) \apo katabol^s kosmou\). For the phrase \apo katabol^s kosmou\ (not in the LXX) there are six other N.T. uses (Mt 13:35 without \kosmou\; 25:34; Lu 11:50; Heb 4:3; 9:26; Re 17:8), and for \pro katabol^s kosmou\ three (Joh 17:24; Eph 1:4; 1Pe 1:20). It is doubtful here whether it is to be taken with \tou esphagmenou\ (cf. 1Pe 1:20) or with \gegraptai\ as in Re 17:8. Either makes sense, and here the most natural use is with \esphagmenou\. At any rate the death of Christ lies in the purpose of God, as in Joh 3:16.

13:9 {If any one hath an ear} (\ei tis echei ous\). Condition of first class, repetition of the saying in 2:7,11,17,29, etc.

13:10 {If any man is for captivity} (\ei tis eis aichmal^sian\). Condition of first class, but with no copula (\estin\ expressed. For \aichmal^sian\ (from \aichmal^tos\ captive) see Eph 4:8, only other N.T. example. Apparently John means this as a warning to the Christians not to resist force with force, but to accept captivity as he had done as a means of grace. Cf. Jer 15:2. The text is not certain, however. {If any man shall kill with the sword} (\ei tis en machair^i apoktenei\). First-class condition with future active of \apoktein^, not future passive, for it is a picture of the persecutor drawn here like that by Jesus in Mt

26:52. {Must he be killed} (\dei auton en machairⁱ apoktanth^{nai}\). First aorist passive infinitive of \apoktein“\.

The inevitable conclusion (\dei) of such conduct. The killer is killed. {Here} (\h“de\). In this attitude of submission to the inevitable. For \h“de\ see 13:18; 14:12; 17:9. "Faith" (\pistis\) here is more like faithfulness, fidelity.

13:11 {Another beast} (\allo th^{rion}\). Like the first beast (verse 1), not a \heteron th^{rion} (\a different beast). {Out of the earth} (\ek t^s g^s\). Not "out of the sea" as the first (verse 1), perhaps locating him in Asia Minor without world-wide scope, but plainly the agent of the first beast and so of the dragon. {He had} (\eichen\). Imperfect active of \ech“\.

Only two horns (not ten like the first, verse 1). {Like unto a lamb} (\homoia arniⁱ\). Usual construction. Only the two horns of a young lamb and without the ferocity of the other beast, but "he spake as a dragon" (\elalei h“s drak“n\). Gunkel and Charles confess their inability to make anything out of this item. But Swete thinks that he had the roar of a dragon with all the looks of a lamb (weakness and innocence). Cf. the wolves in sheep's clothing (Mt 7:15).

13:12 {He exerciseth} (\poiei\). Present active dramatic present of \poie“\.

In his sight (\en“pion autou\). In the eye of the first beast who gets his authority from the dragon (13:2). The second beast carries on the succession of authority from the dragon and the first beast. It has been a common Protestant interpretation since the Reformation of Luther to see in the first beast Pagan Rome and in the second beast Papal Rome. There is undoubted verisimilitude in this interpretation, but it is more than doubtful if any such view comes within the horizon of the imagery here. Ramsay takes the first beast to be the power of imperial Rome and the second beast to be the provincial power which imitated Rome in the persecutions. {To worship the first beast} (\hina proskun^{sousin} to th^{rion} to pr“ton\). Sub-final clause with \hina\ after \poiei\ seen in Joh 11:37; Col 4:16; Re 3:9, usually with the subjunctive, but here with the future indicative as in 3:9. Note the accusative after \proskune“\ as in verse 8. Here the death-stroke of one of the heads (verse 3) is ascribed to the beast. Clearly the delegated authority of the provincial priests of the emperor-worship is rigorously enforced, if this is the correct interpretation.

13:13 {That he should even make fire come down out of heaven}

(\hina kai pur poi'i ek tou ouranou katabainein\). Purpose clause again with \hina\ and the present active subjunctive of \poie“\ and the object infinitive of \katabain“\ after \poiei\). Christ promised great signs to the disciples (Joh 14:12), but he also warned them against false prophets and false christs with their signs and wonders (Mr 13:22). So also Paul had pictured the power of the man of sin (2Th 2:9). Elijah had called down fire from heaven (1Ki 18:38; 2Ki 1:10) and James and John had once even urged Jesus to do this miracle (Lu 9:54).

13:14 {And he deceiveth} (\kai planfi\). Present active (dramatic) indicative of \plana“\, the very thing that Jesus had said would happen (Mt 24:24, "So as to lead astray" \h“ste planfsthai\, the word used here, if possible the very elect). It is a constant cause for wonder, the gullibility of the public at the hands of new charlatans who continually bob up with their pipe-dreams. {That they should make an image to the beast} (\poi'sai eikona t'i th'ri“i\). Indirect command (this first aorist active infinitive of \poie“) after \leg“n\ as in Ac 21:21, not indirect assertion. This "image" (\eik“n\, for which word see Mt 22:20; Col 1:15) of the emperor could be his head upon a coin (Mr 12:16), an _imago_ painted or woven upon a standard, a bust in metal or stone, a statue, anything that people could be asked to bow down before and worship. This test the priests in the provinces pressed as it was done in Rome itself. The phrase "the image of the beast," occurs ten times in this book (13:14,15 _ter_ ; 14:9,11; 15:2; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4). Emperor-worship is the issue and that involves worship of the devil. {The stroke of the sword} (\t^n pl^g^n t's machair^s\). This language can refer to the death of Nero by his own sword. {And lived} (\kai ez^sen\). "And he came to life" (ingressive first aorist active indicative of \za“). Perhaps a reference to Domitian as a second Nero in his persecution of Christians.

13:15 {To give breath to it} (\dounai pneuma aut^i\). This second beast, probably a system like the first (not a mere person), was endowed with the power to work magical tricks, as was true of Simon Magus and Apollonius of Tyana and many workers of legerdemain since. \Pneuma\ here has its original meaning of breath or wind like \pneuma z“s\ (breath of life) in 11:11. {Even to the image} (\t^i eikoni\). No "even" in the Greek, just apposition with \aut^i\ (her). {That should both speak and cause} (\hina kai lal^s^i kai poi^s^i\). Final clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \lale“\ and \poie“\.

Ventriloquism like that in Ac 16:16. {That should be killed} (\hina apoktanth“sin\). Sub-final clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \apoktein“\, after \poi^s^i\, as in verse 12 (future indicative). {As many as should not worship} (\hosoi ean m^proskun^s“sin\). Indefinite relative clause with modal \ean\ (= \an\) and the first aorist active subjunctive of \proskune“\ with the accusative \t^n eikona\ (some MSS. the dative). Note the triple use of "the image of the beast" in this sentence. "That refusal to worship the image of the emperor carried with it capital punishment in Trajan's time is clear from Pliny's letter to Trajan (X. 96)" (Charles).

13:16 {He causeth all} (same use of \poie“\ as in 12,15). Note article here with each class (the small and the great, etc.). {That there be given them} (\hina d“sin autois\). Same use of \hina\ after \poie“\ as in 12,15, only here with indefinite plural \d“sin\ (second aorist active subjunctive), "that they give themselves," as in 10:11; 12:6; 16:15. {A mark} (\charagma\). Old word from \charass“\, to engrave, in Ac 17:29 of idolatrous images, but in Rev. (Re 13:16,17; 14:9,11; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4) of the brand of the beast on the right hand or on the forehead or on both. Deissmann (Bible Studies, pp. 240ff.) shows that in the papyri official business documents often have the name and image of the emperor, with the date as the official stamp or seal and with \charagma\ as the name of this seal. Animals and slaves were often branded with the owner's name, as Paul (Ga 6:17) bore the stigmata of Christ. Ptolemy Philadelphus compelled some Alexandrian Jews to receive the mark of Dionysus as his devotees (III Macc. 3:29). The servants of God receive on their foreheads the stamp of the divine seal (Re 7:3). Charles is certain that John gets his metaphor from the \tephillin\ (phylacteries) which the Jew wore on his left hand and on his forehead. At any rate, this "mark of the beast" was necessary for life and all social and business relations. On the right hand, that is in plain sight. {Upon their forehead} (\epi to met“pon aut“n\). Accusative with \epi\, though genitive just before with \cheiros\ (hand). See already 7:3; 9:4 (genitive \epi t“n met“p“n). Only in the Apocalypse in N.T.

13:17 {That no man should be able to buy or to sell} (\hina m^tis dun^tai agorasai ^p“t^sai\). Final clause with \hina\ and present middle subjunctive of \dunamai\ with aorist active infinitives. This is a regular boycott (Ramsay, _Seven Letters_, p. 106f.) against all not worshippers of the emperor. {Save} (ei m^). "If not," "except." {Even the name} (to onoma). No "even," just apposition with \charagma\ (the mark). {Or the number} (ton arithmon). The stamp (the mark) may bear either the name or the number of the beast. The name and the number are one and the same. They could write the name in numerals, for numbers were given by letters. Swete suggests that it was "according to a sort of \gematria\ known to the Apocalyptist and his Asian readers, but not generally intelligible."

13:18 {Here is wisdom} (h^de h^ sophia). The puzzle that follows as in 17:9. See Eph 1:17 for "a spirit of wisdom and of understanding." {He that understands} (ho ech^ n noun). "The one having intelligence" in such matters. Cf. the adverb \nounech^s\ (discreetly) in Mr 12:34. {Let him count} (ps^phisat^). First active imperative of \ps^phiz^, old verb (from ps^phos\ pebble), to count, in N.T. only here and Lu 14:28. {The number of a man} (arithmos anthr^ pou). "A man's number." But what man and what name? {Six hundred and sixty-six} (hexakosioi hex^konta hex). Unfortunately some MSS. here read 616 instead of 666. All sorts of solutions are offered for this conundrum. Charles is satisfied with the Hebrew letters for Nero Caesar, which give 666, and with the Latin form of Nero (without the final n), which makes 616. Surely this is ingenious and it may be correct. But who can really tell?

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

14:1 {The Lamb} (\to arnion\). See 5:6; 7:17; 12:11; 13:8 and is in contrast with the anarthrous \arnion\ in 13:11. This proleptic vision of the Lamb "standing on the mount Zion" (\hestos epi to oros Siⁿ\, second perfect active participle neuter of \hist^{mi}\ with \epi\ and accusative) is reasoning after the visions of the two beasts. Mount Zion is the site of the new city of God (Heb 12:22), the Jerusalem above (Ga 4:26), the seat of the Messianic Kingdom whether heaven or the new earth (Re 21; 22). These victors have the name of the Lamb and God upon their foreheads as in 3:12; 22:4, in place of the mark of the beast above (13:16; 14:11). This seal protects them (9:4). {A hundred and forty and four thousand} (\hekaton tesserakonta tessares chiliades\). "Thousands" literally (\chilias\ feminine word for a thousand and so \echousai\ feminine plural). For the 144,000 see 7:5,8, though some scholars seek a distinction somehow.

14:2 {As a voice of many waters} (\h^s phⁿ hudatⁿ pollⁿ\). For which see 1:15. {Of a great thunder} (\bront^s megal^s\). For which see 6:1; 19:6. For this voice out of heaven see 10:4; 14:15; 18:4 and note accusative with \^{kousa}\. {As the voice of harpers harping with their harps} (\h^s kithar^{id} n kitharizontⁿ en tais kitharais autⁿ\). Triple use of \kithara\ (5:8), \kithar^{id} n\ (18:22), \kitharizontⁿ (old verb \kitharizⁿ\, in N.T. only here and 1Co 14:7). Wonderful melody in this chorus by the angels, not by the 144,000.

14:3 {They sing as it were a new song} (\aidousin h^s idⁿ kainⁿ\). See 5:9 for this phrase (cognate accusative) save that here \h^s (as if) is added. There the new song was sung by the four living creatures and the elders, but here "before" (\en^{pion}\) them and so apparently by the throng who were themselves redeemed by the Lamb. {No man could learn the song save} (\oudeis edunato mathein tⁿ idⁿ ei mⁿ\). Imperfect (\edunato\ of \dunamai\ and second aorist (ingressive) active infinitive of \manthanⁿ\. In 5:9-12 the angels join in the song. In 15:3 it is the Song of Moses and the Lamb. {Even they that had been purchased out of the earth} (\hoi gorasmenoi apo t's g's). Perfect passive articular participle of \agoraz“, purchased by the blood of the Lamb (5:9), masculine plural in apposition with \chiliades (thousands) feminine plural (7:5,8; 14:1). \Apo (from) here, though \ek (out of) in 5:9. The 144,000 are not yet separated from the earth (Joh 17:15). Whether the 144,000 here are identical with that number in 7:4-8 or not, they must embrace both men and women.

14:4 {Were not defiled with women} (\meta gunaik“n ouk emolunth^san). First aorist passive indicative of \molun“, old verb, to stain, already in 3:4, which see. The use of this word rules out marriage, which was not considered sinful. {For they are virgins} (\parthenoi gar eisin). \Parthenos can be applied to men as well as women. Swete takes this language "metaphorically, as the symbolical character of the Book suggests." Charles considers it an interpolation in the interest of celibacy for both men and women. If taken literally, the words can refer only to adultery or fornication (Beckwith). Jesus recognised abstinence only for those able to receive it (Mt 19:12), as did Paul (1Co 7:1,8,32,36). Marriage is approved by Paul in 1Ti 4:3 and by Heb 13:4. The New Testament exalts marriage and this passage should not be construed as degrading it. {Whithersoever he goeth} (\hopou an hupagei). Indefinite local clause with modal \an and the present active indicative of \hupag“. The Christian life is following the Lamb of God as Jesus taught (Mr 2:14; 10:21; Lu 9:59; Joh 1:43; 21:19, etc.) and as Peter taught (1Pe 2:21) and John (1Jo 2:6). {Were purchased from among men} (\^gorasth^san apo t“n anthr“p“n). First aorist passive indicative of \agoraz“, repeating the close of verse 3. {First fruits} (\aparch^). See for this word 1Co 16:15; Ro 11:16; 16:5. This seems to mean that the 144,000 represent not the whole, but only a portion of the great harvest to come (Mt 9:37), not only the first installment, but those marked by high spiritual service to God and the Lamb (Ro 12:1; Heb 13:15; 1Pe 2:5).

14:5 {Was found no lie} (\ouch heureth^ pseudos). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk“. In 1Pe 2:23 this passage (Isa 53:9) is quoted with \dolos (deceit, guile) instead of \pseudos (lie), but the difference is not great. {Without blemish} (\am“moi). Alpha privative and \m“mos (blemish, spot). As Christ the Paschal Lamb is (1Pe 1:19; Heb 9:14), so the followers of the Lamb are to be in the end (Php 2:15).

14:6 {Another angel} (\allon aggelon\). A new turn in the drama comes with each angel (7:2; 8:3,13; 10:1). Here the angel is seen "flying in mid heaven" (\petomenon en mesouran^{mati}\), while in 8:13 John heard him "flying in mid heaven" (genitive case of same participle, which see). This one is in the sight and hearing of all. {Having} (\echonta\). Accusative singular agreeing with \aggelon\ like \petomenon\ (flying), but \legⁿ\ in verse 7 is nominative, as if a new sentence like \legⁿ\ in 4:1. {An eternal gospel} (\euaggelion ai^{nion}\). The only use of \euaggelion\ in John's writings, though the verb \euaggelisai\ (first aorist active infinitive epexegetical with \echonta\ like Joh 16:12) occurs here and in 10:7. Here it is not \to euaggelion\ (the gospel), but merely a proclamation of God's eternal (\ai^{nios}\ here alone in the Apocalypse, though common in the Fourth Gospel and I John) purpose. Origen even took this "eternal gospel" to be another book to be written! Note the double use of \epi\ (with accusative after \euaggelisai\ and the genitive with \g^s). See 5:9 for the races, etc.

14:7 {And he saith} (\legⁿ\). See above. {Fear God} (\phobthte ton theon\). First aorist passive (deponent) imperative of \phobeomai\, here transitive with the accusative as in Lu 12:5. It is a call to judgment with no hope offered except by implication (Ac 14:15ff.). {Give him glory} (\dote autⁱ doxan\). Second aorist active indicative of \did^{mi}\. For the phrase see 11:13. {The hour is come} (\h^hra^{lthen}\). Second aorist (prophetic use) active indicative of \erchomai\. Common idiom in John's Gospel (2:4; 4:21,23; 5:25,28; 7:30, etc.). {Worship} (\proskun^{sate}\). First aorist active imperative of \proskune^{ai}\ with the dative case. Solemn call to the pagan world to worship God as Creator (4:11; 10:6), as in Ps 96:6; Ac 14:15. For "the fountains of waters" see 8:10.

14:8 {Another, a second angel} (\allos deuterios aggelos\). This second angel "followed" (\kolouth^{sen}\, first aorist active indicative of \akolouth^e) and interpreted in part the first one. {Fallen, fallen} (\epesen, epesen\). Prophetic aorist active indicative of \pipt^e\, repeated as a solemn dirge announcing the certainty of the fall. The English participle "fallen, fallen" is more musical and rhythmical than the literal rendering "fell, fell." The language is an echo of Isa 21:9, though B in the LXX has \pept^{ken}, pept^{ken}\ (perfect). {Babylon the great} (\Babulⁿ h^{magal}\). The adjective \megal^e\ occurs with \Babulⁿ\ each time in the Apocalypse (14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2,10,21) as a reminder of Nebuchadrezzar. There is no doubt that Rome is meant by Babylon, as is probably seen already in 1Pe 5:13. As a prisoner in Patmos John can speak his mind by this symbolism. {Hath made to drink} (\pepotiken). Perfect active indicative of \potiz, old causative verb (from \potos\ drinking, 1Pe 4:3), as in Mt 25:35. The remarkable phrase that follows seems based on Jer 51:8 (Jer 25:15). It is a combination also of Re 14:10 (the wine of God's wrath, also in 16:19; 19:15) and 17:2. There is no doubt of the dissoluteness of the old Babylon of Jeremiah's day as of the Rome of John's time. Rome is pictured as the great courtesan who intoxicates and beguiles the nations to fornication (17:2,4,6), but the cup of God's wrath for her and her paramours is full (14:10; 16:19; 18:2).

14:9 {A third} (\tritos). "The third of this succession of herald angels denounces the Caesar-worshippers" (Swete). Cf. 13:12ff. This counter proclamation (verses 9-12) warns those tempted to yield to the threats of the second beast about boycott and death (13:11-17). {If any man worshippeth the beast and his image} (\ei tis proskunei to th^rion kai t^n eikona autou). Condition of first class challenging those afraid of the beast. Note accusative (\th^rion) after \proskunei, not dative as in verse 7. {And receiveth a mark} (\kai lambanei charagma). Carries on the same condition and picks up the very language of 13:16. These Caesar-worshippers are guilty of an "eternal sin" (Mr 3:29).

14:10 {He also shall drink} (\kai autos pietai). Future middle of \pin. Certainty for him as for Babylon and her paramours (16:17). {Of the wine of the wrath of God} (\ek tou oinou tou thumou tou theou). Note \ek (partitive) after \pietai. In 16:19; 19:15 we have both \thumou and \org^s (wrath of the anger of God). The white heat of God's anger, held back through the ages, will be turned loose. {Prepared unmixed} (\tou kekerasmenou akratou). A bold and powerful oxymoron, "the mixed unmixed." \Akratos is an old adjective (alpha privative and \kerannumi\ to mix) used of wine unmixed with water (usually so mixed), here only in N.T. So it is strong wine mixed (perfect passive participle of \kerannumi) with spices to make it still stronger (cf. Ps 75:9). {In the cup of his anger} (\en t^i pot^ri^i t^s org^s autou). Both \thumos (vehement fury) and \org^s (settled indignation). {He shall be tormented}

(\basanisth^{setai}\). Future passive of \basaniz^{ai}\. See 9:5; 11:10. {With fire and brimstone} (\en puri kai thei^{ai}\). See 9:17 for fire and brimstone and also 19:20; 20:10; 21:8. The imagery is already in Ge 19:24; Isa 30:33; Eze 38:22. {In the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb} (\en^{ai} pion aggel^{ai} n hagi^{ai} n kai en^{ai} pion tou arniou\). This holy environment adds to the punishment.

14:11 {The smoke of their torment} (\ho kapnos tou basanismou aut^{ai} n\). See 9:5 for \basanismos\, only there it was a limited penalty, here it is "for ever and ever" (\eis ai^{ai} nas ai^{ai} n^{ai} n\, unto ages of ages). See also 18:9; 19:3; 20:10. {They have no rest} (\ouk echousin anapausin\). The very language used in 4:8 of the four living creatures in praising God. "Those who desert Christ for Caesar will be the victims of a remorse that never dies or sleeps" (Swete). The rest of the verse repeats the solemn challenge of verse 9.

14:12 {Here is the patience of the saints} (\H^{ai} de h^{ai} hupomon^{ai} t^{ai} n hagi^{ai} n estin\). John's own comment as in 13:10; 17:9. In this struggle against emperor worship lay their opportunity (Ro 5:3). It was a test of loyalty to Christ. {They that keep} (\hoi t^{ai} rountes\). In apposition with t^{ai} n hagi^{ai} n\ (genitive), though nominative, a frequent anacoluthon in this book (2:20, etc.). Cf. 12:17. {The faith of Jesus} (\t^{ai} n pistin I^{ai} sou\). "The faith in Jesus" (objective genitive) as in 2:13; Mr 11:22; Jas 2:1.

14:13 {Write} (\Grapson\). First aorist active imperative of \graph^{ai}\ as in 1:11. John's meditation is broken by this command. This new beatitude (\makarioi, Blessed) for the Christian dead goes farther than Paul's words (1Th 4:14-16; 1Co 15:18). Probably "from henceforth" (\ap^{ai} arti\) goes with "those who die in the Lord," giving comfort to those facing persecution and death. {That they may rest} (\hina anapa^{ai} sontai\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second future passive of \anapau^{ai}\. {From their labours} (\ek t^{ai} n kop^{ai} n aut^{ai} n\). From the toils, the wearinesses, but not from the activities (\erga\), for these "follow with them." There is this to comfort us for all our growth here. Even if cut short, it can be utilized in heaven, which is not a place of idleness, but of the highest form of spiritual service.

14:14 {A white cloud} (\nephel^{ai} leuk^{ai}\). Like the "bright cloud" of Mt 17:5 (Transfiguration), a familiar object in the Mediterranean lands. See Da 7:13; Mt 24:30; 26:64; Ac 1:9,11 for the picture of Christ's return. {I saw one sitting} (\kath^menon). No \eidon here, but the accusative follows the \eidon at the beginning, as \nephel^ is nominative after \idou, as in 4:1,4. {Like unto a son of man} (\homoion huion anthr^pou). Accusative here after \homoion as in 1:13, instead of the usual associative instrumental (13:4). {Having} (\ech^n). Nominative again after the \idou construction, just before, not after, \eidon. {A golden crown} (\stephanon chrusoun). Here a golden wreath, not the diadems of 19:12. {A sharp sickle} (\drepanon oxu). Old form \drepan^ (from \drep^, to pluck), pruning-hook, in N.T. only in this chapter and Mr 4:29. Christ is come for reaping this time (Heb 9:28) for the harvesting of earth (verses 15-17). The priesthood of Christ is the chief idea in 1:12-20 and "as the true _Imperator_" (Swete) in chapter Re 19.

14:15 {Send forth} (\pempson). First aorist (urgency) active imperative of \pemp^. "Thrust in thy sickle now," this angel urges Christ. {And reap} (\kai therison). First aorist (urgency) active imperative of \theriz^, old verb (from \theros\, summer), as in Mt 6:26. See verse 7 for "the hour is come." \Therisai (to reap) is epexegetical infinitive (first aorist active of \theriz^). {The harvest} (\ho therismos). Old, but rare word (from \theriz^, to harvest), as in Mt 13:30; Joh 4:35, here only in Revelation. {Is over-ripe} (\ex^ranth^). First aorist (prophetic as in 10:17; 15:1) passive of \x^rain^ (cf. Jas 1:11), to wither, to dry up. Perhaps just "ripe," not "over-ripe." Cf. Joe 1:17.

14:16 {Cast} (\ebalen). Second aorist active indicative of \ball^. No violence by the use of \ebalen as is seen in Mt 10:34 (\balein eir^h^h^, to bring peace). {Was reaped} (\etheristh^). First aorist passive indicative of \theriz^. Both prophetic aorists again. Christ puts in the sickle as he wills with his own agents (Mt 9:37f.; 13:39,41).

14:17 {He also} (\kai autos). As well as the Reaper on the cloud. This is the fifth angel who is God's messenger from heaven (temple where God dwells). This fifth angel with his sharp sickle is to gather the vintage (18-20) as Christ did the wheat.

14:18 {Another angel} (\allos aggelos). The fifth angel above

Swete terms "the Angel of vengeance." He responds to the call of the sixth angel here as Christ does to the call of the fourth angel in verse 15. {Out from the altar} (\ek tou thusiast^{riou}). From the altar of incense where he is in charge of the fire (\exousian epi tou puros). If it is the altar of burnt offering (6:9; 11:1), we are reminded of the blood of the martyrs (Swete), but if the altar of incense (8:3,5; 9:13; 16:7), then of the prayers of the saints. {The sharp sickle} (\to drepanon to oxu). Useful for vintage as for harvesting. So "send forth" (\pempson) as in verse 15. {Gather} (\trug^{son}). First aorist active imperative of \truga^{an}, old verb (from \trug^{an} dryness, ripeness), in N.T. only Re 15:18f. and Lu 6:44. {The clusters} (\tous botruas). Old word \botrus, here only in N.T. (Ge 40:10). {Her grapes} (\hai staphulai aut^{as}). Old word again for grapes, bunch of grapes, in N.T. only here, Mt 7:16; Lu 6:44. {Are fully ripe} (\k^{masan}). Old and common verb (from \akm^{an}, Mt 15:16), to come to maturity, to reach its acme, here only in N.T.

14:19 {Cast} (\ebalen). As in verse 16. {Gathered} (\etrug^{sen}). Like \etheristh^{an} in verse 16, in obedience to the instructions in verse 18 (\trug^{son}). {The vintage of the earth} (\tⁿ ampelon t^{as} g^{as}). "The vine of the earth." Here \ampelos is used for the enemies of Christ collectively pictured. {And cast it} (\ebalen). Repeating \ebalen and referring to \ampelon (vintage) just before. {Into the winepress the great winepress} (\eis tⁿ l^{non} ton megan). \L^{nos} is either feminine as in verse 20; 19:15, or masculine sometimes in ancient Greek. Here we have both genders, a solecism frequent in the Apocalypse (21:14 \to teichos ech^{an}). See Mt 21:33. For this metaphor of God's wrath see 14:10; 15:1,7; 16:1,19; 19:15.

14:20 {Was trodden} (\epatth). First aorist passive indicative of \pate^{an}, to tread. The image of treading out the grapes is a familiar one in the East. Perhaps Isa 63:3 is in mind. {Without the city} (\ex^{an} then t^{as} pole^{as}). Ablative case with \ex^{an} then (like \ex^{an}). This was the usual place (Heb 13:12). See \ex^{an} then in 11:2. Joel (Joe 3:12) pictures the valley of Jehoshaphat as the place of the slaughter of God's enemies. Cf. Zec 14:4. {Blood from the winepress} (\haima ek t^{as} l^{nou}). Bold imagery suggested by the colour of the grapes. {Unto the bridles} (\achri t^{an} chalin^{an}). Old word (from \chala^{an} to slacken), in N.T. only here and Jas 3:3. Bold picture. {As far as a thousand and six hundred furlongs} (\apo stadi“n chili“n hexakosi“n\). A peculiar use of \apo\, for "distance from (of)" as also in Joh 11:18; 21:8, somewhat like the use of \pro\ in Joh 12:1. The distance itself covers the length of Palestine, but it is more likely that "the metaphor is worked out with the exuberance of apocalyptic symbolism" (Swete) for the whole earth.

15:1 {Another sign in heaven} (\allo s^hmeion en t^hi ouran^hi\). Looking back to 12:1,3, after the series intervening. The Seven Bowls are parallel with the Seven Seals (ch. Re 6) and the Seven Trumpets (chapters Re 8-11), but there is an even closer connection with chapters Re 12-14, "the drama of the long conflict between the church and the world" (Swete). {Great and marvellous} (\mega kai thaumaston\). \Thaumastos\ is an old verbal adjective (from \thaumaz^hai, to wonder) and is already in Mt 21:42. The wonder extends to the end of this vision or sign (16:21). {Seven angels} (\aggelous hepta\). Accusative case in apposition with \s^hmeion\ after \eidon\. Cf. 8:2. {Which are the last} (\tas eschatas\). "Seven plagues the last." As in 21:9, "the final cycle of such visitations" (Swete). {Is finished} (\etelest^hai\). Proleptic prophetic first aorist passive indicative of \tele^ho\ as in 10:7. The number seven seems particularly appropriate here for finality and completeness.

15:2 {As it were a glassy sea} (\h^hs thalassan hualin^hn\). Accusative case after \eidon\ and \h^hs\ here, not in 4:6, which see for the symbol. {Mingled with fire} (\memigmen^hn puri\). Perfect passive participle of \mignumi\, to mix, and the associative instrumental case \puri\. This item not in 4:6 (a vision of peace), but here it adds to the splendour of the vision. This parenthesis (2-4) gives a picture of the martyrs in their state of bliss. {Them that come off victorious} (\tous nik^hntas\). Present active articular participle of \nika^ho\, accusative after \eidon\, "those that come off victorious" (14:4). {From the beast and from his image} (\ek tou th^hriou kai ek t^hs eikonos autou\). This use of \ek\ after \nika^ho\ is unusual, also with \ek tou arithmou\. For these items see 13:1,14,17; 14:9,11; 19:20; 20:4. {By the glassy sea} (\epi t^hn thalassan t^hn hualin^hn\). Or "upon" more likely (4:6) with the accusative as in Mt 14:25ff. {Harps of God} (\kitharas tou theou\). Objective genitive, for the worship of God (5:8; 14:2; 1Ch 16:42).

15:3 {The song of Moses} (\t^hn "id^hn tou M^huse^hs\). Ex 14:31; 15:1-19. A song of victory like that of Moses after crossing the Red Sea. {And the song of the Lamb} (\t^n "id^n tou arniou\). A separate note of victory like that of Moses, though one song, not two. Charles finds it impossible to reconcile the two expressions, if genuine, but it is a needless objection. The words come from the O.T.: "great" (\megala\) from Ps 111:2, "wonderful" (\thaumasta\) from Ps 139:14, "O Lord God the Almighty" (\Kurie ho theos ho pantokrat^r\) from Am 4:13 (Re 4:8), "righteous and true" (\dikaiai kai al^thinai\) from De 32:4, "Thou King of the ages" (\ho basileus t^n ai^n^n\ like Jer 10:10; 1Ti 1:17. Some MSS. have "the king of the saints" and some "the king of the nations," like Jer 10:7. John thus combines in Hebraic tone the expressions of the old and the new in the song to the Glorified Messiah.

15:4 {Who shall not fear?} (\tis ou m^ phob^th^i;\). Rhetorical question with \ou m^ (double negative) and first aorist passive subjunctive of \phobeomai\ future passive in Jer 10:7). {And glorify} (\kai doxasei\). Change here to the future indicative instead of the aorist subjunctive, as often. Cf. Ps 86:9. {Thou only art holy} (\monos hosios\). Both predicate adjectives, "Thou art alone holy." God alone is perfectly holy (16:5). {Shall come} (\h^xousin\). Future active of \h^k^\. {And worship} (\kai proskun^sousin\). Future active of \proskune^\. Both from Ps 86:9. {Have been made manifest} (\ephaner^th^san\). Prophetic first aorist passive indicative of \phanero^\. This martyr's song has the ring of great poetry.

15:5 {The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony} (\ho naos t^s sk^n^s tou marturiou\). Charles calls this "strange" language. Probably the tabernacle or tent of witness (Nu 9:15; 17:7) is in mind and the tent of meeting (Ex 27:21 rather than the temple in Jerusalem). {Was opened} (\^noig^\. Second aorist passive indicative of \anoig^\. as in 11:19. For \naos\ see 3:12; 7:15; 14:15,17; 16:1,17.

15:6 {There came out} (\ex^lthan\). Second aorist active indicative of \exerchomai\ with \-an\ rather than \-on\. Proleptic and prophetic aorist. {The seven angels} (\hoi hepta aggeloi\). Those in verse 1. {The seven plagues} (\tas hepta pl^gas\). The bowls are not given them till verse 7. {Arrayed} (\endedumenoi\). Perfect passive participle of \endu^\. {With precious stone pure and bright} (\lithon katharon lampron\). Accusative case retained with verb of clothing as so often, literally "with a stone pure bright." For both adjectives together see 19:8,14. Some MSS. read \linon\ (linen). For \lithon\ see 17:4; 18:16; Eze 28:13. {Girt} (\periez“smenoi\). Perfect passive participle of \periz“nnu“. See 1:13 for both participles. For \st^thos\ (breast) see Lu 18:13. {With golden girdles} (\z“nas chrusfs\). Accusative case after the perfect passive participle \periez“smenoi\ as in 1:13.

15:7 {Seven golden bowls} (\hepta phialas chrusfs\). Golden saucers, but not full of incense as in 5:8, but "full (\gemousas\ for which see 5:8) of the wrath of God who liveth for ever and ever" (\tou thumou tou theou tou z“ntos eis tous ai“nas t“n ai“n“n\). Portents of dreadful events.

15:8 {Was filled with smoke} (\egemisth^ kapnou\). First aorist passive indicative of \gemiz“\ (from \gem“\), to fill full, and with the genitive \kapnou\ (smoke). Smoke is here the symbol of God's presence (Ex 19:18; Isa 6:5). {Till should be finished} (\achri telesth“sin\). Temporal clause for future time with \achri\ (equal to \he“s\ in import) and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \tele“, a metaphorical and symbolic "smoke screen" to keep all out of the sanctuary for the time being.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

16:1 {A great voice} (\megal's phⁿs\). Not an angel as in 5:2; 7:2; 10:3; 14:7,9,15,18, but of God as 15:8 shows, since no one could enter the \naos\. {Pour out} (\ekcheete\). Second aorist active imperative of \ekche\ (same form as present active imperative). Blass would change to \ekcheate\ (clearly aorist) as in verse 6. {The seven bowls} (\tas hepta phialas\). The article points to verse 7.

16:2 {Went and poured out} (\ap^lthen kai execheen\). Second aorist active indicative of \aperchomai\ (redundant use like \hupagete\ with \ekcheete\, "go and pour out," in verse 1) and of \ekche\). Each angel "went off" to perform his task. For \execheen\ see it repeated in verses 3,4,8,10,12,17. {Into the earth} (\eis tⁿ gⁿ\). This same use of \eis\ after \execheen\ in verses 3,4. {It became} (\egeneto\). "There came" (second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai). {A noisome and grievous sore} (\helkos kakon kai pon^{ron}\). "Bad and malignant sore." \Helkos\ is old word for a suppurated wound (Latin _ulcus_), here, verse 11; Lu 16:21. See the sixth Egyptian plague (Ex 9:10; De 28:27,35) and Job 2:7. The magicians were attacked in Egypt and the worshippers of Caesar here (13:17; 14:9,11; 19:20).

16:3 {Into the sea} (\eis tⁿ thalassan\). Like the first Egyptian plague (Ex 7:12-41) though only the Nile affected then. {Blood as of a dead man} (\haima h^s nekrou\). At the trumpet (8:11) the water becomes wormwood. Here \h^s nekrou\ is added to Ex 7:19, "the picture of a murdered man weltering in his blood" (Swete). "Coagulated blood, fatal to animal life" (Moffatt). {Every living soul} (\pfsa psuch^zs\). "Every soul of life" (Hebraism, Ge 1:21, marked by life). {Even the things that were in the sea} (\ta en tⁱ thalassⁱ\). "The things in the sea," in apposition with \psuch^z\. Complete destruction, not partial as in 8:9.

16:4 {Into the rivers and the fountains of waters} (\eis tous potamous kai tas p^{gas} tⁿ hudatⁿ\). See 8:10 for this phrase. Contamination of the fresh-water supply by blood follows that of the sea. Complete again.

16:5 {The angel of the waters} (\tou aggelou ton hudat“n). Genitive case object of \`kousa. See 7:1 for the four angels in control of the winds and 14:18 for the angel with power over fire. The rabbis spoke also of an angel with power over the earth and another over the sea. {Which art and which wast} (\ho “n kai ho ^n). See this peculiar idiom for God's eternity with \ho as relative before \`n in 1:4,8; 4:8, but without \ho erchomenos (the coming on, the one who is to be) there for the future as in 11:17. {Thou Holy One} (\ho hosios). Nominative form, but vocative case, as often. Note both \dikaio and \hosios applied to God as in 3:1; 15:3f. {Because thou didst thus judge} (\hoti tauta ekrinas). Reason for calling God \dikaio and \hosios. The punishment on the waters is deserved. First aorist active indicative of \krin“, to judge.

16:6 {For} (\hoti). Second causal conjunction (\hoti) explanatory of the first \hoti, like the two cases of \hoti in 15:4. {They poured out} (\exechean). Second aorist active indicative of \ekche“ with \-an instead of \-on. {Blood hast thou given them to drink} (\haima autois ded“kas pein). \Haima (blood) is the emphatic word, measure for measure for shedding the blood of saints and prophets (11:18; 18:24). Perfect active indicative of \did“mi, and so a permanent and just punishment. \Pein is the abbreviated second aorist active infinitive of \pin“ for \piein (\epion). It is the epexegetical infinitive after \ded“kas. There was no more drinking-water, but only this coagulated blood. {They are worthy} (\axioi eisin). "Terrible antithesis" (Swete) to 3:4. The asyndeton adds to it (Alford).

16:7 {O Lord God, the Almighty} (\Kurie ho theos ho pantokrat“r). Just as in 15:3 in the Song of Moses and of the Lamb, vocative with the article \ho. "Judgments" (\kriseis) here instead of "ways" (\hodoi) there, and with the order of the adjectives reversed (\al`thinai kai dikaiai, true and righteous).

16:8 {Upon the sun} (\epi ton h`lion). Not \eis (into) as in verses 2,3,4. The fourth trumpet (8:12) affected a third of the sun, moon, and stars with a plague of darkness, but here it is a plague of extreme heat. {To scorch with fire} (\kaumatisai en puri). First aorist active infinitive of \kaumatiz“, late (Plutarch, Epictetus) causative verb (from \kauma, heat), in N.T. only here and verse 9; Mt 13:6; Mr 4:6. The addition of \en puri\ (in fire, with fire) intensifies the picture.

16:9 {Were scorched} (\ekaumatisth^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative of same verb. {With great heat} (\kauma mega\). Cognate accusative retained with the passive verb. Old word (from \kai^{ai}\ to burn), in N.T. only 7:16 and here. For blaspheming the name of God see 13:6; Jas 2:7; Ro 2:24; 1Ti 6:1. They blamed God for the plagues. {They repented not} (\ou meteno^{san}\). This solemn negative aorist of \metanoe^{ai}\ is a refrain like a funeral dirge (9:20f.; 16:11). In 11:13 some did repent because of the earthquake. Even deserved punishment may harden the heart. {To give him glory} (\dounai autⁱ doxan\). Second aorist active infinitive of \did^{mi}\, almost result. For the phrase see 11:13; 14:7; 19:7.

16:10 {Upon the throne of the beast} (\epi ton thronon tou th^{riou}\). That is Rome (13:2). The dragon gave the beast his throne (2:13). {Was darkened} (\egeneto eskot^{men}\). Periphrastic past perfect passive with \ginomai\ and \skoto^{ai}\ (9:2). Like the darkness of the Egyptian plague (Ex 10:22) and worse, for the effects of the previous plagues continue. {They gnawed their tongues} (\emas^{nto tas gl^{ssas} autⁿ}\). Imperfect middle of \masaomai\, old verb (to chew), from \ma^{ai}\ (to knead), only here in N.T. {For pain} (\ek tou ponou\). "Out of distress" (cf. ek in 8:13), rare sense of old word (from penomai to work for one's living), in N.T. only here, 21:4; Col 4:13. See Mt 8:12.

16:11 {They blasphemed} (\eblasph^msan\) {and they repented not} (\kai ou meteno^{san}\). Precisely as in verse 9, which see. Not just because of the supernatural darkness, but also "because of their pains" (\ek tⁿ ponⁿ autⁿ\, plural here and same use of ek) and their sores (\kai ek tⁿ helkⁿ autⁿ\, as in verse 2, only plural, and same use of ek). {Of their works} (\ek tⁿ ergⁿ autⁿ\). "Out of their deeds," and addition to verse 9. {The God of heaven} (\ton theon tou ouranou\). As in Da 2:44. Like the pride of Nebuchadrezzar against Jehovah.

16:12 {Upon the great river, the river Euphrates} (\epi ton potamon ton Megan ton Euphratⁿ\). The sixth trumpet brings up the river Euphrates also (9:14), only there \epi\ with the locative, while here \epi\ with the accusative. Note triple use of the article \ton\ here. {Was dried up} (\ex^{ranth}\). First aorist (prophetic) passive of \x^rain“\ (14:15). Cf. Zec 10:11. {That may be made ready} (\hina hetoimasth^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist passive of \hetoimaz“\.

 Common verb in Rev. (8:6; 9:7,15; 12:6; 19:7; 21:2). {The way for the kings} (\h^ hodos t^“n basile“n\). Objective genitive \basile“n\. {That come from the sunrising} (\t^“n apo anatol^s heliou\). "Those from the rising of the sun," the kings from the east (cf. Mt 2:2) in their march against Rome. Parthia in particular resisted Rome before Trajan's day.

16:13 {Coming out of} (\ek\ alone, no participle \erchomena\). {Of the dragon} (\tou drakontos\). That is Satan (12:3,9). {Of the beast} (\tou th^riou\). The first beast (13:1,12) and then just the beast (13:14ff.; 14:9,11; 15:2; 16:2,10), the brute force of the World-power represented by the Roman Empire" (Swete). {Of the false prophet} (\tou pseudoproph^tou\). Cf. Mt 7:15; Ac 13:6; 1Jo 2:22; 4:3; 2Jo 1:7. Identified with the second beast (13:11-14) in 19:20; 20:10. So the sixth bowl introduces the dragon and his two subalterns of chapters Re 12; 13 (the two beasts). {Three unclean spirits} (\pneumata tria akatharta\). Out of the mouths of each of the three evil powers (the dragon and the two beasts) comes an evil spirit. See the use of mouth in 1:16 (9:17f.; 11:5; 12:15; 19:15,21) as a chief seat of influence. In 2Th 2:8 we have "the breath of his mouth" (the other sense of \pneuma\). For \akatharton\ (unclean) with \pneuma\ see Mr 1:23f.; 3:11; 5:2ff.; Ac 5:16; 8:7. Christ expelled unclean spirits, but His enemies send them forth" (Swete). See Zec 13:2 "the false prophets and the unclean spirits." {As it were frogs} (\h^“s batrachoi\). Cf. Ex 8:5; Le 11:10ff. Old word, here alone in N.T. Like loathsome frogs in form.

16:14 {Spirits of devils} (\pneumata daimoni“n\). "Spirits of demons." Explanation of the simile \h^“s batrachoi\. See 1Ti 4:1 about "deceiving spirits and teachings of demons." {Working signs} (\poiounta s^meia\). "Doing signs" (present active participle of \poie“\). The Egyptian magicians wrought "signs" (tricks), as did Simon Magus and later Apollonius of Tyana. Houdini claimed that he could reproduce every trick of the spiritualistic mediums. {Which go forth} (\ha ekporeuetai\). Singular verb with neuter plural (collective) subject. {Unto the kings} (\epi tous basileis\). The three evil spirits (dragon and the two beasts) spur on the kings of the whole world to a real world war. "There have been times when nations have been seized by a passion for war which the historian can but imperfectly explain" (Swete). {To gather them together} (\sunagagein). Second aorist active infinitive of \sunag“, to express purpose (that of the unclean spirits). {Unto the war of the great day of God, the Almighty} (\eis ton polemon t^s h^meras t^s megal^s tou theou tou pantokratoros). Some take this to be war between nations, like Mr 13:8, but it is more likely war against God (Ps 2:2) and probably the battle pictured in 17:14; 19:19. Cf. 2Pe 3:12, "the day of God," his reckoning with the nations. See Joe 2:11; 3:4. Paul uses "that day" for the day of the Lord Jesus (the Parousia) as in 1Th 5:2; 2Th 1:10; 2:2; 1Co 1:8; 2Co 1:14; Php 1:6; 2:16; 2Ti 1:12,18; 4:8.

16:15 {Behold, I come as a thief} (\idou erchomai h“s klept^s). The voice of Christ breaks in with the same metaphor as in 3:3, which see. There comes one of seven beatitudes in Rev. (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7,14). For \gr^gor“n (watching) see 3:2, and for \t^r“n (keeping), 1:3. {Lest he walk naked} (\hina m^ gumnos peripat^i). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^ and the present active subjunctive of \peripate“, and note predicate nominative \gumnos (naked). {And they see his shame} (\kai blep“sin t^n asch^mosun^n autou). Continuation of the final clause with present active subjunctive of \blep“. \Asch^mosun^n is old word (from \asch^m“n, indecent, 1Co 12:23), in N.T. only here and Ro 1:27, a euphemism for \t^n aischun^n (Re 3:18).

16:16 {They gathered} (\sun^gagen). Second aorist active indicative of \sunag“, singular (the three unclean spirits), like \ekporeuetai in verse 14. {Har-Magedon} (\Har-Maged“n). John proceeds now after the interruption in verse 15. Perhaps "the mountains of Megiddo" though not certain. Megiddo is in the valley of Esdraelon, and by the waters of Megiddo (the Kishon) Israel gained a decisive victory over Sisera (Jud 5:19), celebrated in Deborah's song. See also Re 20:8ff. and Eze 39:2,4.

16:17 {Upon the air} (\epi ton aera). All men breathe the air and this is worse than the smiting of the earth (verse 2), the sea (3), the fresh waters (4), the sun (8). {A great voice} (\ph“n^ megal^). The voice of God as in 16:1. {It is done} (\Gegonen). Perfect active indicative of \ginomai. Like \Gegonan in 21:6. The whole series of plagues is now complete.

16:18 {And there were} (\kai egenonto\). "And there came" (same verb ginomai). See 8:5; 11:19 for this list of terrible sounds and lightnings, and for the great earthquake (\seismos megas\ see 6:12; 11:13 (cf. Lu 21:11). {Such as was not} (\hoios ouk egeneto\). Qualitative relative with \ginomai\ again, "such as came not." {Since there were men} (\aph' hou anthr'poi egenonto\). "Since which time (\chronou\ understood) men came." {So great an earthquake, so mighty} (\t^likoutos seismos hout' megas\). Quantitative correlative \t^likoutos\ rather than the qualitative \toioutos\, to correspond with \hoios\ (not hosos). And then \hout' megas\ repeats (redundant) \t^likoutos\. Cf. Mr 13:19 for \hoia--toiaut\ about like tribulation (\thlipsis\).

16:19 {Was divided into three parts} (\egeneto eis tria mer^). "Came into three parts" (\ginomai\ again). In 11:3 a tenth part of the city fell. Babylon (Rome) is meant (17:18). {Fell} (\epesan\). Second aorist active indicative of \pipt' (\-an\ form in place of -on). {Was remembered} (\emn^sth^). First aorist (prophetic) passive indicative of \mimn^sk'. Babylon (Rome) had not been overlooked. God was simply biding his time with Rome. {To give unto her} (\dounai aut'i\). Second aorist active infinitive of \did'mi\, exegetical use as in 11:18; 16:9. {The cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath} (\to pot^rion tou oinou tou thumou t^s org^s autou\). "The cup of the wine of the wrath of his anger," using both \thumos\ (boiling rage) and \org^ (\i>settled anger). See both in Jer 30:24.

16:20 {Fled} (\ephugen\). Second aorist active indicative of \pheug'. Islands sometimes sink in the sea in earthquakes (6:14). {Were not found} (\ouch heureth^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk'. See 20:11 for the same idea.

16:21 {Hail} (\chalaza\). As in 8:17; 11:19. {Every stone about the weight of a talent} (\h's talantiaia\). Old adjective (from talanton), here only in N.T., but in Polybius and Josephus. See Ex 9:24 for the great hail in Egypt and also Jos 10:11; Isa 28:2; Eze 38:22 for hail as the symbol of God's wrath. In the LXX a \talanton\ ranged in weight from 108 to 130 pounds. {Because of the plague of hail} (\ek t^s pl^g^s t^s chalaz^s\). "As a result of the plague of hail." This punishment had the same effect as in verses 9,11. {Exceeding great} (\Megal^--sphrodra\). Emphatic positions at ends of the clause (great--exceedingly).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

17:1 {I will show thee} (\deix“ soi\). Future active of \deiknumi\. It is fitting that one of the seven angels that had the seven bowls should explain the judgment on Babylon (16:19) already pronounced (14:8). That is now done in chapters Re 17; 18. {The judgment of the great harlot} (\to krima t^s porn[^]s t[^]s megal[^]s\). The word \krima\ is the one used about the doom of Babylon in Jer 51:9. Already in 14:8 Babylon is called the harlot. \Porn[^]s\ is the objective genitive, "the judgment on the great harlot." {That sitteth upon many waters} (\t[^]s kath[^]men[^]s epi hudat[^]n poll[^]n\). Note triple use of the article \t[^]s\. In Jer 51:13 we have \eph' hudasi pollois\ (locative in place of genitive as here). Babylon got its wealth by means of the Euphrates and the numerous canals for irrigation. Rome does not have such a system of canals, but this item is taken and applied to the New Babylon in 17:15. Nahum (Na 3:4) calls Nineveh a harlot, as Isaiah (Isa 23:16f.) does Tyre.

17:2 {The kings of the earth} (\hoi basileis t^s g[^]s\). Repeated in 1:5; 6:15; 17:18; 18:3,9; 19:19; 21:24 and "the kings of the inhabited earth" (16:14) either for human rulers in general or the vassal kings absorbed by the Roman Empire. {Committed fornication} (\eporneusan\). First aorist active indicative of \porneu“. "In purchasing the favour of Rome by accepting her suzerainty and with it her vices and idolatries" (Swete). {Were made drunken} (\emethusth[^]san\). First aorist passive indicative of \methusk“, old verb (from \methu\), as in Lu 12:45, here only in the Apocalypse. Cf. Isa 51:7 and \pepotiken\ in Re 14:8. See 18:3.

17:3 {He carried me away} (\ap[^]negken me\). Second aorist active indicative of \apopher“, to bear away, prophetic aorist. This verb is used of angels at death (Lu 16:22) or in an ecstasy (Re 21:10 and here). {In the Spirit} (\en pneumatⁱ\). Probably his own spirit, though the Holy Spirit is possible (1:10; 4:2; 21:10), without Paul's uncertainty (2Co 12:2). Cf. Eze 3:14f.; 8:3; 11:24. {Into a wilderness} (\eis er[^]mon\). In Isa 21:1 there is \to horama t[^]s er[^]mou\ (the vision of the deserted one, Babylon), and in Isa 14:23 Babylon is called \er[^]mon\.

John may here picture this to be the fate of Rome or it may be that he himself, in the wilderness (desert) this side of Babylon, sees her fate. In 21:10 he sees the New Jerusalem from a high mountain. {Sitting} (\kath^men^n\). Present middle participle of \kath^mai\ as in verse 1. "To manage and guide the beast" (Vincent). {Upon a scarlet-coloured beast} (\epi th^rion kokkinon\). Accusative with \epi\ here, though genitive in verse 1. Late adjective (from \kokkos\, a parasite of the _ilex coccifera_), a crimson tint for splendour, in Re 17:3,4; 18:12,16; Mt 27:28; Heb 9:19. {Full of names of blasphemy} (\gemonta onomata blasph^mias\). See 13:1 for "names of blasphemy" on the seven heads of the beast, but here they cover the whole body of the beast (the first beast of 13:1; 19:20). The harlot city (Rome) sits astride this beast with seven heads and ten horns (Roman world power). The beast is here personified with masculine participles instead of neuter, like \th^rion\ (\gemonta\ accusative singular, \ech^"n\ nominative singular, though some MSS. read \echonta\), construction according to sense in both instances. The verb \gem^"\ always has the genitive after it in the Apocalypse (4:6,8; 5:8; 15:7; 17:4; 21:9) save here and apparently once in 17:4.

17:4 {Was arrayed} (\^n peribebhl^men^)\. Periphrastic past perfect indicative of \periball^"\, to fling round one. {In purple and scarlet} (\porphuroun kai kokkinon\). Accusative retained after this passive verb of clothing, as so often. \Porphurous\ is old adjective for purple (from \porphura\), in N.T. only here and Joh 19:2,5. See preceding verse for \kokkinos\. {Decked} (\kechrus^"men^)\. Perfect passive participle of \chruso^"\, old verb, to gild, to adorn with gold, here alone in N.T. {With gold and precious stone and pearls} (\chrusi^"i kai lith^"i timi^"i kai margaritais\). Instrumental case. \Chrusi^"i\ is cognate with the participle. \Lith^"i timi^"i\ is collective (18:12,16; 21:19). There is a \zeugma\ also with \margaritais\ (18:12,16; 21:21), for which word see Mt 7:6. Probably John is thinking of the finery of the temple prostitutes in Asia Minor. {Full of abominations} (\gemon bdelugmat^"n\). Agreeing with \pot^rion\, "cup" (neuter singular accusative). Some MSS. read \gem^"n\ (nominative masculine like \ech^"n\ in verse 3, quite irregular). For \bdelugmat^"n\ (genitive after \gemon\) see Mt 24:15; (Mr 13:14), common in the LXX for idol worship and its defilements (from \bdeluss^"\, to render foul), both ceremonial and moral. See Jer 15:7. {Even the unclean things of her fornication} (\kai ta akatharta t[^]s porneias aut[^]s\). Either the accusative after \gemon\ as in verse 3 (and full of the unclean things of her fornication) or the object of \echousa\, like \pot[^]rion\.

17:5 {Upon her forehead a name written} (\epi to met[^]pon aut[^]s onoma gegrammenon\). Roman harlots wore a label with their names on their brows (Seneca, _Rhet_. I. 2. 7; Juvenal VI. 122f.), and so here. In 19:16 Christ has a name on his garments and on his thigh, while in 14:1; 22:4 the redeemed have the name of God on their foreheads. There is undoubtedly a contrast between this woman here and the woman in chapter Re 12. {Mystery} (\must[^]rion\). Either in apposition with \onoma\ or as part of the inscription on her forehead. In either case the meaning is the same, that the name Babylon is to be interpreted mystically or spiritually (cf. \pneumatik[^]s\ 11:8) for Rome. {The Mother of the Harlots and of the Abominations of the Earth} (\H[^] M[^]t[^]r t[^]n Porn[^]n kai t[^]n Bdelugmat[^]n t[^]s G[^]s\). The Metropolis of the Empire is the mother of harlotry and of the world's idolatries. Charles quotes Tacitus (_Ann_. XV. 44) about Rome as the city "quo cuncta undique atrocia aut pudenda confluunt celebranturque_."

17:6 {Drunken with the blood of the saints} (\methuouan ek tou haimatos t[^]n hagi[^]n\). Present active feminine accusative singular participle of \methu[^]\, old verb, to be drunk (Mt 24:49). {Of the martyrs of Jesus} (\t[^]n martur[^]n I[^]sou\). "Witnesses" (2:13) for Jesus (objective genitive) unto blood (16:6; 18:24) and so martyrs in the modern sense of the word. "Drunk with blood" is a common idea with the ancients (Euripides, Josephus, Philo, Cicero, Pliny). {With a great wonder} (\thauma mega\). Cognate accusative with \ethaumasa\.

17:7 {I will tell thee the mystery} (\eg[^] er[^] soi to must[^]rion\). The angel gives his interpretation of the woman and the beast (17:7-18). \Er[^]\ is the future active of \eipon\ (defective verb), to tell, to say.

17:8 {Was and is not} (\[^]n kai ouk estin\). Imperfect and present of \eimi\, an apparent antithesis to \ho [^]n kai ho [^]n\ of 1:4. This is a picture of the beast of 13:1ff. which the woman is riding, but no longer just the empire, but one of the emperors who died (\ouk estin\, is not). {And is about to come up out of the abyss} (\kai mellei anabainein ek t[^]s abussou\). That is, he is going to come to life again. {And to go into perdition} (\kai eis ap'leian hupagei\). So (and he goes into perdition) the best MSS. read rather than the infinitive \hupagein\. Most interpreters see here an allusion to the "Nero _redivivus_" expectancy realized in Domitian, who was ruling when John wrote and who was called Nero _redivivus_. {Shall wonder} (\thaumasth^sontai\). First future passive (deponent) of \thaumaz'\, with which compare \ethaumasth^ in 13:3. John had wondered (\ethaumasa\) in verse 6 "with the amazement of a horrible surprise; the world will wonder and admire" (Swete). {Whose name} (\h'n onoma\). Singular \onoma\, like \pt'ma\ in 11:8. See 13:8 for the same description of those who worship the beast and for discussion of details. {When they behold} (\blepont'n\). Genitive plural of the present active participle of \blep'\, agreeing with \h'n\ (genitive relative) rather than with \hoi katoikountes\ (nominative just before h'n). {How that} (\hoti\). "Namely that." {He was, and is not, and shall come} (\^n kai ouk estin kai parestai\). Repetition of what is in verse 7 with \parestai\ (future of pareimi\, from which parousia\ comes) in place of \mellei\, "parody of the divine name" (Charles) in 1:4,8; 4:8, "as the hellish antitype of Christ." The Neronic Antichrist has also a \parousia\.

17:9 {Here is the mind which hath wisdom} (\H'de ho nous ho ech'n sophian\). "Here is the intelligence which has wisdom" (Charles).

A variation of 13:18, but the same idea. {Seven mountains} (\hepta or^). Rome was known as the city on seven hills (Vergil, Horace, Ovid, Cicero, etc.). {On which} (\hopou--ep' aut'n\). "Where--upon them." Pleonasm like \hopou--ekei\ in 12:6. In 13:1ff. it is the beast that has the seven heads, while here the woman riding the beast has seven heads, a slight change in the symbolism, and the heads are further identified as kings.

17:10 {Seven kings} (\basileis hepta\). This is another change in the symbolism. The identification of these seven kings is one of the puzzles of the book. {The five are fallen} (\hoi pente epesan\). Second aorist active indicative of \pipt'\ with the \-an\ ending. Common for the downfall of kings (Eze 29:5; 30:6; Isa 21:9, etc.). See 2Sa 3:38. {The one is} (\ho heis estin\).

The one when this vision is dated. {The other is not yet come} (\ho allos oup' ^lthen\). Prophetic second aorist active of \erchomai\. Charles takes this as the date of this "source" or part of the Apocalypse. But John could himself have used this language in the time of Domitian even if he was the one who had not yet come. The difficulty about counting these emperors is that Galba, Otho, Vitellius reigned so briefly that they hardly merit being included. {When he cometh} (\hotan elth^i\). Indefinite temporal clause for the future, with \hotan\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \erchomai\, "whenever he comes." {He must continue a little while} (\oligon auton dei meinai\). Swete takes this to be Titus, who died September 13, 81, after a short reign.

17:11 {Is himself also an eighth and is of the seven} (\kai autos ogdoos kai ek t^"n hepta\). This is the angel's interpretation and it looks like a reference to Domitian as the eighth, who is regarded as one of the seven because he was considered a second Nero (Nero _redivivus_). For \ek t^"n hepta\ see Ac 21:8. John may have used \ek t^"n\ instead of \heis ek t^"n\ to avoid absolute identity between Domitian and Nero (Beckwith). {And he goeth unto perdition} (\kai eis ap^"leian hupagei\). As in verse 8. "Domitian was assassinated (September 18, 96), after a terrible struggle with his murderers. The tyrant's end was a symbol of the end to which the Beast which he personated was hastening" (Swete). Cf. 19:11-21.

17:12 {Which have received no kingdom as yet} (\hoitines basileian oup^" elabon\). Second aorist (proleptic and prophetic) active indicative of \lamban^"\. The heads are emperors and the horns are kings (both called \basileis\). {As kings} (\h^"s basileis\). Compared to kings (see \h^"s\ in 1:10; 4:6; 9:7; 13:3; 14:3; 16:21) without identification with the emperors, though succeeding them with "quasi-imperial powers" with the beast. {For one hour} (\mian h^"ran\). Accusative of extent of time, and that a brief time (18:10,16,19) in comparison with the beast (13:2).

17:13 {Have one mind} (\mian gn^"m^"n echousin\). "One purpose" (\gn^"m^" from \gin^"sk^"\) as in Ac 20:3; 1Co 1:10. The new powers are allies of the beast. {They give their power and authority unto the beast} (\t^"n dunamin kai t^"n exousian aut^"n t^"i th^"ri^"i didoasin\). Present active indicative of \did^"mi\. Just as the dragon gave both power and authority to the beast (13:2), so they are wholly at the service of the beast.

17:14 {These} (\houtoi\). These ten kings. {Shall war against the Lamb} (\meta tou th^"riou polem^"sousin\). Future active of \polemeo\, to war. As allies of the beast (the servant of the dragon, 12:7) they will wage war with the Lamb (the enemy of the dragon). These kings gather for battle as in 16:13f. {And the Lamb shall overcome them} (\kai to arnion nik^{sei} autous\). Future active of \nika^{ai}\. This is the glorious outcome, victory by the Lamb over the coalition of kings as against the beast before. {For he is Lord of lords and King of kings} (\hoti Kurios kuriⁿ estin kai Basileus basileⁿ\). The same words are again descriptive of Christ in 19:16, as of God in De 10:17 (God of gods and Lord of lords) and Da 10:17 (God of gods and Lord of kings). Cf. also 1Ti 6:15; Re 1:5. Crowned heads are Christ's subjects. {And they also shall overcome that are with him} (\kai hoi met' autou\). "And those with him shall also overcome" (supply \nik^{sousin}\, not \eisin\). They will share in the triumph of the Lamb, as they shared in the conflict. Cf. \meta tou th^{riou}\ in verse 12. {Called and chosen and faithful} (\kl^{toi} kai eklektoi kai pistoi\). These are the three notes of those who share in the victory. For \kl^{tos}\ and \eklektos\ see Mt 22:14 (contrasted); Ro 8:28ff.; 2Pe 1:10; Re 2:10,13. The elect are called and prove faithful.

17:15 {Where the harlot sitteth} (\hou h ^{pornos} kath^{tai}\). Relative adverb \hou\ (where) referring to the waters (\hudata\) of verse 1 on which the harlot sits. Present middle indicative of \kath^{mai}\. {Are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues} (\laoi kai ochloi eisin kai ethn^{ai} kai gl^{ssai}\). The O.T. uses "waters" as symbol for "peoples" (Isa 8:7; Jer 47:2; Ps 29:10, etc.). "Rome's greatest danger lay in the multitudes which were under her sway" (Swete).

17:16 {These shall hate the harlot} (\houtoi mis^{sousin} tⁿ pornⁿ\). Future active of \mise^{ai}\. \Houtoi\ is resumptive demonstrative pronoun (masculine) referring to the ten horns and the beast (neuter); construction according to sense. The downfall of Rome will come from the sudden change in subject peoples. {Shall make her desolate and naked} (\r^m menⁿ poi^{sousin} autⁿ kai gumnⁿ\). Future active of \poie^{ai}\ and perfect passive predicate accusative participle of \er^{mo}\, old verb (from \er^{mos}\ desolate), again in 18:16,19. \Gumnⁿ\ (naked) is predicate adjective. {Shall eat her flesh} (\tas sarkas aut^s phagontai\). Future middle of the defective verb \esthi^{ai}\, to eat. Note plural \sarkas\, portions of flesh (Jas 5:3) as in Ps 27:2; Mic 3:3. {Shall burn her utterly with fire} (\autⁿ katakausousin en puri\). Future active of \katakai“, to burn down (perfective use of \kai“\). John wrote before the days of Alaric, Genseric, Ricimer, Totila, with their hordes which devastated Rome and the west in the fifth and sixth centuries. "No reader of the _Decline and Fall_ can be at a loss for materials which will at once illustrate and justify the general trend of St. John's prophecy" (Swete).

17:17 {Did put} (\ed“ken\). "Did give" (first aorist active of \did“mi\). {To do his mind} (\poi^sai t^n gn“m^n autou\). Epexegetic first aorist active infinitive of \poie“\ after \ed“ken\, as often in this book. They are of one mind (verse 13) because God put them up to it, clear statement of God's over-ruling hand among the nations. {Until the words of God should be accomplished} (\achri telesth^sontai hoi logoi tou theou\). Temporal clause about the future with \achri\ (like \he“s\), with the future indicative of \tele“, but with aorist passive subjunctive \telesth“sin\ in 15:8. For \tele“\ see also 10:7. For "the words of God" see 19:9. They will be fulfilled.

17:18 {The woman} (\h^ gun^). She is now explained after the beast has been interpreted. Verse 9 made it plain enough, but this verse demonstrates that the woman is the city of Rome "which reigneth (\h^ echousa basileian\, the one having a kingdom) over the kings of the earth (\epi t“n basile“n t^s g^s\)." Rome followed Babylon, and other cities may follow in their train.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

18:1 {Coming down out of heaven} (\katabainonta ek tou ouranou\). Present active predicate participle. Not the angel of 17:1,7,15 (John's guide), but one announcing the doom of Babylon (Rome). As in 10:1; 20:1. {Was lightened} (\eph"tisth^\). First aorist passive of \ph"tiz^\, old causative verb (from \ph"s^\, light), common in N.T. as in Re 18:1; 21:23; 22:5. {With his glory} (\ek t's dox's autou\). "By reason of (\ek\ as in 8:13; 16:10) his glory." "So recently has he come from the Presence that in passing he flings a broad belt of light across the dark earth" (Swete).

18:2 {Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great} (\epesen, epesen Babul"n h^ megal^\). The very words of 14:8: "Did fall, did fall Babylon the great." Prophetic aorists of \pipt^\ repeated like a solemn dirge of the damned. {Is become} (\egeneto\). Prophetic aorist middle. {A habitation of devils} (\katoik^t'rion\). Late word (from \katoike^\, to dwell), in N.T. only here and Eph 2:22. Devils should be demons, of course. So Isaiah prophesied of Babylon (Isa 12:21f.) and also Jeremiah (Jer 50:39) and Zephaniah of Nineveh (Zep 2:14). Both Babylon and Nineveh are ruins. {A hold of every unclean spirit} (\phulak^ pantos pneumatou akathartou\). \Phulak^\ is garrison or watch-tower as in Hab 2:1, rather than a prison (20:7). {A hold of every unclean and hateful bird} (\phulak^ pantos orneou akathartou kai memis^menou\). \Orneou^\ is old word for bird, in N.T. only Re 18:2; 19:17,21. "The evil spirits, watching over fallen Rome like night-birds or harpies that wait for their prey, build their eyries in the broken towers which rise from the ashes of the city" (Swete). Long ago true of Babylon and Nineveh, some day to be true of Rome.

18:3 {By} (\ek\). "As a result of." Some MSS. omit "of the wine" (\tou oinou\). Cf. 14:10; 16:10. {Have fallen} (\pept^kan\). Perfect active third personal of \pipt^\ for usual \pept^kasi^\. Some MSS. read \pep^kan^\ (have drunk), from \pin^\ like the metaphor in 14:8,10; 16:19; 17:2. See 17:2 for the same charge about the kings of the earth. {The merchants of the earth} (\hoi emporoi t's g^s\). Old word for one on a journey for trade

(from \en, poros\), like drummers, in N.T. only Mt 13:45; Re 18:3,11,15,23. Like \emporion\ (Joh 2:16) and \emporeuomai\ (Jas 4:13). {Waxed rich} (\eplout^san\). First ingressive aorist active indicative of \ploute^, to be rich (cf. 3:17). Here alone in the N.T. do we catch a glimpse of the vast traffic between east and west that made Rome rich. {Of her wantonness} (\tou str^nous aut^s\). Late word for arrogance, luxury, here alone in N.T. See \str^nia^ in verses 7,9, to live wantonly.

18:4 {Come forth, my people, out of her} (\exelthate, ho laos mou, ex aut^s\). Second aorist (urgency) active imperative (\-a\ form) of \exerchomai\. Like Isa 48:20; 52:11; Jer 50:8; 51:6, (about Babylon). See also the call of Abram (Ge 12:1). the rescue of Lot (Ge 19:12ff.). In the N.T. see Mr 13:4; 2Co 6:14; Eph 5:11; 1Ti 5:11. \Ho laos\ is vocative with the form of the nominative. {That ye have no fellowship with her sins} (\hina m^ sunkoin^ "n^s^te tais hamartiais aut^s\). Purpose clause with \hina m^ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \sunkoin^ "ne^, old compound (\sun, together, \koin^ "nos, partner), in N.T. only here, Php 4:14; Eph 5:11. With associative instrumental case \hamartiais\. {And that ye receive not of her plagues} (\kai ek t^ "n pl^g^ "n aut^s hina m^ lab^te\). Another purpose clause dependent on the preceding, with \hina m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban^, and with proleptic emphatic position of \ek t^ "n pl^g^ "n aut^s before \hina m^.

18:5 {Have reached} (\ekoll^th^san\). First aorist passive (deponent) indicative of \kolla^, old verb (from \kolla, gluten, glue), to cleave to, to join one another in a mass "up to heaven" (\achri tou ouranou). Cf. Jer 51:9; Zec 14:5. {Hath remembered} (\emn^moneusen\). First aorist (prophetic) active indicative of \mn^moneu^, here with the accusative (\adik^mata, iniquities) instead of the genitive (Col 4:18).

18:6 {Render as she rendered} (\apodote h^ "s aped^ "ken\). Second aorist (effective) active imperative and first aorist (effective) active of \apodid^ "mi, old and common verb for requital, to give back, the _lex talionis_ which is in the O.T. (Jer 50:15,29; 51:24,56; Ps 137:8), and in the N.T. also (Mt 7:2). Here the reference is to persecutions by Rome, particularly the martyrdom of the saints (18:24; 19:2). {Double the double} (\dipl^ "sate ta dipla\). First aorist imperative of \diplo^, old verb (from \diploos, double, Mt 23:15), here only in N.T. \Diplf\ is simply the neuter plural accusative (cognate) contract form for \diplōa\ (not \diplōa\). Requite here in double measure, a full requital (Ex 22:4,7,9; Isa 40:2; Jer 16:18; 17:18; Zec 9:12). The double recompense was according to the Levitical law. {Which she mingled} (\h*“i ekerasen*). First aorist active indicative of \kerannumi\. The relative \h*“i* is attracted to the locative case of its antecedent \pot*“ri“i* (cup), for which see 14:8,10; 17:4; 18:3. {Mingle unto her double} (\kerasate aut*“i diploun*). First aorist active imperative of the same verb \kerannumi\, with the same idea of double punishment.

18:7 {How much soever} (\hosa\). Indefinite quantitative relative pronoun \hosos\ in the accusative (cognate) neuter plural object of \edoxasen\ (first aorist active indicative of \doxaz*““). {Herself} (\haut“n*). Reflexive pronoun, accusative also with \edoxasen\. {Waxed wanton} (\estr*“niasen*). First aorist (ingressive) active indicative of \str*“nia““* (to live luxuriously), verb in late comedy instead of \trupha*““* (Jas 5:5), from \str*“nos* (Re 18:3), only here in N.T. {So much give her of torment and mourning} (\tosouton dote aut*“i basanismon kai penthos*). Second aorist active imperative of \did*“mi*, to give. The correlative pronoun \tosouton\ is masculine singular accusative, agreeing with \basanismon\, for which see 9:5; 14:11, and is understood with the neuter word \penthos\ (mourning), in N.T. only in Jas 4:9; Re 18:7ff.; 21:4 (kin to \pathos, penomai\). {I sit a queen} (\kath*“mai basilissa*). Predicate nominative for the old form \basileia\ (\basilis\), as in Mt 12:42. Babylon and Tyre had preceded Rome in such boasting (Isa 47:7-9; Eze 27:3; 28:2; Zep 2:15). {And am no widow} (\kai ch*“ra ouk eimi*). Feminine of the adjective \ch*“ros* (barren), old word (Mr 12:40). {Shall in no wise see mourning} (\penthos ou m*“id““*). Confident boast of security with emphatic position of \penthos\ (see above) and double negative \ou m*“* with the second aorist active subjunctive of \hora*““* (defective verb).

18:8 {Therefore} (\dia touto\). Because of her presumption added to her crimes. {In one day} (\en mifi h*“merfi*). Symbolical term for suddenness like \mifi h*“rfi*, in one hour (18:10,16,19). John has in mind still Isa 47:7-9. {Shall come} (\h*“xousin*). Future active of \h*“k““*. Her plagues are named (death, mourning, famine). {She shall be utterly burned} (\katakauth*“setai*). Future passive of \katakai*““* (perfective use of \kata\). {With fire} (\en puri\). "In fire," as in 17:16. {Which judged her} (\ho krinas aut^n\). Articular first aorist active participle of \krin^{\referring to \kuriōs ho theos\ (the Lord God). The doom of Babylon is certain because of the power of God.

18:9 {Shall weep} (\klausousin\). Future active of \klai^{\, middle \klausontai\ in Attic, as in Joh 16:20. {And wail over her} (\kai kopsontai ep' aut^n\). Future direct middle of \kopt^{\, old verb, to beat, to cut, middle to beat oneself (Re 1:7). For combination with \klai^{\ as here see Lu 8:52. See 17:2; 18:3,7 for \hoi porneusantes kai str^niasantes\). {When they look upon} (\hotan blep^{\sin\). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the present active subjunctive of \blep^{\. {The smoke of her burning} (\ton kapnon t^s pur^{\se^{\s aut^s\). \Pur^{\sis\ is an old word (from \puro^{\ to burn), in N.T. only 1Pe 4:12; Re 18:9,18. See verse 8 for other plagues on Rome, but fire seems to be the worst (17:16; 18:8,9,17; 19:3).

18:10 {Standing afar off} (\apo makrothen hest^kotes\). Perfect active (intransitive) participle of \hist^mi\. Vivid picture of the terrible scene, fascinated by the lurid blaze (cf. Nero's delight in the burning of Rome in A.D. 64), and yet afraid to draw near. On \apo makrothen\ see Mr 5:6. There is a weird charm in a burning city. They feared the same fate (cf. verse 7 for \basanismou\, torment). {Woe, woe, the great city} (\ouai, ouai, h^polis h^megal^{\). Only example in the Apocalypse of the nominative with \ouai\ except verses 16,19, though in Lu 6:25 and common in LXX (Isa 5:7,11, etc.). For the dative see Re 8:13, once so "strong" (\h^ischura\)! {In one hour} (\mifi h^rfi\). Repeated in verses 16,19, and like \mifi h^merfi\ (in one day) in verse 8. Some MSS. have here \mian h^{\ran\, like \poian h^{\ran\ (accusative of extent of time) in 3:3. See verse 8 (\ho krinas\ for \h^{\krisis sou\ (thy judgment). This is the dirge of the kings.

18:11 {The merchants} (\hoi emporoi\). As in 18:3,15,23. The dirge of the merchants follows the wail of the kings. {Weep and mourn} (\klaiousin kai penthousin\). Present active indicatives of \klai^{\ and \penthe^{\ as in verses 9 (for \klai^{), 15,19. {For no man buyeth their merchandise any more} (\hoti ton gomon aut^{\n oudeis agorazei ouketi\). Reason enough for their sorrow over Rome's fall. \Gomos\ is old word (from \gem^{\ to be full) for a ship's cargo (Ac 21:3) and then any merchandise (Re 18:11f.). Galen, Pliny, Aristides tell of the vastness of the commerce and luxury of Rome, the world's chief market. Many of the items here are like those in the picture of the destruction of Tyre in Eze 26; 27. There are twenty-nine items singled out in verses 12,13 of this merchandise or cargo (\gomon), imports into the port of Rome. Only a few need any comment.

18:12 {Of fine linen} (\bussinou). Genitive case after \gomon, as are all the items to \kokkinou. Old adjective from \bussos (linen, Lu 16:19), here a garment of linen, in N.T. only Re 18:12,16; 19:8,14. {Purple} (\porphuras). Fabric colored with purple dye (\porphureos\, 17:4; 18:16), as in Mr 15:17,20; Lu 16:19. {Silk} (\sirikou). So the uncials here. \To s^rikon (the silken fabric) occurs in Plutarch, Strabo, Arrian, Lucian, only here in N.T. Probably from the name of the Indian or Chinese people (\hoi S^res) from whom the fabric came after Alexander invaded India. Silk was a costly article among the Romans, and for women as a rule. {Scarlet} (\kokkinou). See 17:4; 18:16. {All thiyne wood} (\pan xulon thuinon). Now accusative again without \gomon dependence. An odoriferous North African citrus tree, prized for the colouring of the wood for dining-tables, like a peacock's tail or the stripes of a tiger or panther. Here only in N.T. {Of ivory} (\elephantinon). Old adjective (from \elephas\ elephant) agreeing with \skeuos\ (vessel), here only in N.T. Cf. Ahab's ivory palace (IKi 22:39). {Of marble} (\marmarou). Old word (from \marmair^, to glisten), genitive after \skeuos\ (vessel), here only in N.T.

18:13 {Cinnamon} (\kinnam^mon). Old word transliterated into English, here only in N.T. Of Phoenician origin (Herodotus) as to name and possibly from South China. {Spice} (\am^mon). A fragrant plant of India, \amomum, for perfume. {Incense} (\thumiamata). See 5:8; 8:3. {Ointment} (\muron). See Mt 26:7. {Frankincense} (\libanon). See 8:3. {Fine flour} (\semidalin). Old word for finest wheaten flour, here only in N.T. {Of horses} (\hipp^n). Here then is a return to the construction of the genitive after \gomon in verse 12, though not used here, an anomalous genitive construction (Charles). {Of chariots} (\red^n). A Gallic word for a vehicle with four wheels, here only in N.T. {Of slaves} (\somat^n). "Of bodies," treated as animals or implements, like the horses and the chariots (cf. _rickshaw_ men in China). This use of \s^ma for slave occurs in Ge 34:29; Tob 10:11 (\s^mata kai kt^n^, slaves and cattle); II Macc. 8:11. {Souls of men} (\psuchas anthr^p^n).

Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 160) finds this use of \s“ma\ for slave in the Egyptian Delta. Return to the accusative \psuchas\. From Nu 31:35; 1Ch 5:21; Eze 27:13. This addition is an explanation of the use of \s“mata\ for slaves, "human live stock" (Swete), but slaves all the same. Perhaps \kai\ here should be rendered "even," not "and": "bodies even souls of men." The slave merchant was called \s“matemporos\ (body merchant).

18:14 {The fruits} (\h^op“ra\). The ripe autumn fruit (Jer 40:10,12). Here only in N.T. Of uncertain etymology (possibly \opos\, sap, \h“ra\, hour, time for juicy sap). See Jude 1:12 for \dendra phthinop“rinos\ (autumn trees). {Which thy soul lusteth after} (\sou t^s epithumias t^s psuch^s\). "Of the lusting of thy soul." {Are gone from thee} (\ap^lthen apo sou\). Prophetic aorist active indicative of \aperchomai\ with repetition of \apo\. {All things that were dainty and sumptuous} (\panta ta lipara kai ta lampra\). "All the dainty and the gorgeous things." \Liparos\ is from \lipos\ (grease) and so fat, about food (here only in N.T.), while \lampros\ is bright and shining (Jas 2:2f.), about clothing. {Are perished from thee} (\ap“leto apo sou\). Prophetic second aorist middle indicative of \apollumi\ (intransitive). {Shall find them no more at all} (\ouketi ou m^h auta heur^sousin\). Doubled double negative with future active, as emphatic a negation as the Greek can make.

18:15 {Of these things} (\tout“n\). Listed above in verses 12-14. {Who were made rich by her} (\hoi plout^ssantes ap' aut^s\). "Those who grew rich (ingressive aorist active participle of \ploute“, for which see verses 3,13) from her." {Shall stand afar off} (\apo makrothen st^ssontai\). Future middle of \hist^{mi}\. Repeating the picture in verse 10. Again in verse 17. See verse 11 for the two participles \klaiontes kai penthountes\.

18:16 For the Woe see verses 10,19. For the next clause see 17:4 with the addition here of \bussinon\ (18:12). {For in one hour so great riches is made desolate} (\hoti mifi h“r^{fi} r^m“th^h ho tosoutos ploutos\). The reason (\hoti\) for the "woe." First aorist passive indicative of \er^{mo}“, for which verb see 17:16; 18:19. This is the dirge of the merchants.

18:17 {Shipmaster} (\kubern^ts\). Old word (from \kuberna“, to steer), helmsman, sailing-master, in N.T. only here and Ac 27:11. Subordinate to the \naukl^{ros}\ (supreme commander). {That saieth any whither} (\ho epi topon ple“n). "The one sailing to a place." See Ac 27:2, \tous kata t^n Asian pleontas\ (those sailing down along Asia). Nestle suggests \ponton\ (sea) here for \topon\ (place), but it makes sense as it is. {Mariners} (\nautai). Old word (from \naus\, ship), in N.T. only here and Ac 27:27,30. {Gain their living by the sea} (t^n thalassan ergazontai). "Work the sea." This idiom is as old as Hesiod for sailors, fishermen, etc. See verses 10,15.

18:18 {As they looked} (\blepontes). Present active participle of \blep“\ . See \hotan blep“sin\ in verse 10. {What city is like the great city?} (\tis homoia t^i polei t^i megal^i;). No \polis\ with \tis\, but implied. Associative instrumental case, as usual, with \homoia\ . "The eternal city" is eternal no longer.

18:19 {They cast dust} (\ebalon choun). Second aorist active of \ball“\ . \Chous\ is old word (from \che“\ to pour) for heap of earth, dust, in N.T. only here and Mr 6:11. Cf. Eze 27:30; Lu 10:13. This is the dirge of the sea-folk (cf. verses 10,16).

Occasionally in later literary Greek, though here only in N.T.

and not in LXX. The same use of \tim^ \ appears in 1Pe 2:7.

Common in the papyri as a title like "Your Honor" (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_).

18:20 {Rejoice over her} (\Euphrainou ep' aut^i). Present middle imperative of \euphrain“\ , for which verb see 11:10, used there of the joy of the wicked over the death of the two witnesses, just the opposite picture to this. "The song of doom" (Charles) here seems to be voiced by John himself. {God hath judged your judgment} (\ekrinen ho theos to krima). First aorist (prophetic) active of \krin“\ and cognate accusative \krima\ , here a case for trial (Ex 18:22; 1Co 6:7), not a sentence as in 17:1. God has approved the case of heaven.

18:21 {A strong angel} (\heis aggelos ischuros). Here \heis\ = a, just an indefinite article, not "one" as a numeral. {Took up} (\^ren). First aorist active indicative of \air“\ . {As it were a great millstone} (h“s mulinon Megan). Late adjective, in inscriptions, here only in N.T., made of millstone (\mulos\, Mt 18:6; Re 18:22), while \mulikos\ (Lu 17:2) means belonging to a mill. This is not a small millstone turned by women (Mt 24:41), but one requiring an ass to turn it (Mr 9:42), and so "a great" one. {Cast} (\ebalen). Second aorist active of \ball“\, to hurl. {With a mighty fall} (horm^mati\). Instrumental case (manner) of \horm^ma\, a rush, old word from \horma“\, to rush (Mt 8:32), here only in N.T. {Shall be cast down} (bleth^setai\). Future (first) passive of \ball“\, the same verb (ebalen\), effective punctiliar future. Like a boulder hurled into the sea. {Shall be found no more at all} (ou m^heureth^i eti\). Double negative with first aorist passive subjunctive of \heurisk“\ . See 9:6 for \ou m^ with the active voice of \heurisk“\ . Already the old Babylon was a desert waste (Strabo, XVI. 1073).

18:22 {The voice} (ph^“n^\). Cf. Eze 26:13. Or "sound" as in 1Co 14:8 with \salpigx\ (trumpet). For this song of judgment see Jer 25:10. {Of harpers} (kithar^“id^“n^\). Old word (from kithara\, harp, and \^“idos\, singer) as in 14:2. {Of minstrels} (mousik^“n^\). Old word (from mousa\, music), here only in N.T., one playing on musical instruments. {Of flute-players} (aul^t^“n^\). Old word (from aule“\, to play on a flute, Mt 11:17, \aulos\, flute, 1Co 14:7), in N.T. only here and Mt 9:23. {Of trumpeters} (salpist^“n^\). Late form for the earlier \salpigkt^s\ (from salpiz“\), here only in N.T. {Shall be heard no more at all} (ou m^ akousth^i\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \akou“\ with the double negative as below, with \ph^“n^ mulou\ (sound of the millstone), and as in verse 21 with \ou me heureth^i\ and again with \pfs technit^s\ (craftsman). This old word is from \techn^, art, as here in some MSS. ("of whatsoever craft," \pas^s techn^s\). \Technit^s\ occurs also in this sense in Ac 19:24,38; and in Heb 11:10 of God as the Architect. There is power in this four-fold sonorous repetition of \ou m^ and the subjunctive with two more examples in verse 23.

18:23 {Of a lamp} (luchnou\). Old word (Mt 5:15), again in Re 22:5. {Shall shine no more at all} (ou m^ phan^i\). Fifth instance in these verses of \ou m^ with the aorist subjunctive, here the active of \phain“\ as in Re 8:12. It is not known whether Rome had street lights or not. {The voice of the bridegroom and of the bride} (ph^“n^ numphiou kai numph^s\). See Joh 3:29; Jer 7:34; 16:9. "Even the occasional flash of the torches carried by bridal processions (Mt 25:1ff.) is seen no more" (Swete). The sixth instance of \ou m^, in verses 21-23, occurs with \akousth^i\ (third instance of \akousth^i, two in verse 22). {Were the princes of the earth} (^san hoi megistfnēs tēs gēs). For megistfn see Re 6:15; Mr 6:21. "Thy merchants were the grandees" once, but now these merchant princes are gone. {With thy sorcery} (en tēi pharmakifi sou). En (instrumental use) and the locative case of pharmakia, old word (from pharmakeu "to prepare drugs, from pharmakon, sorcery, Re 9:21), in N.T. only here and Ga 5:20 for sorcery and magical arts. If one is puzzled over the connection between medicine and sorcery as illustrated by this word (our pharmacy), he has only to recall quackery today in medicine (patent medicines and cure-alls), witch-doctors, professional faith-healers, medicine-men in Africa. True medical science has had a hard fight to shake off chicanery and charlatanry. {Were deceived} (eplan thēsan). First aorist passive indicative of plana. These charlatans always find plenty of victims. See Mr 12:24.

18:24 {In her} (en autēi). In Rome. {Was found} (heurethē). First aorist passive indicative of heurisk. See 16:6; 17:6 for the blood already shed by Rome. Rome "butchered to make a Roman holiday" (Dill, Roman Society, p. 242) not merely gladiators, but prophets and saints from Nero's massacre A.D. 64 to Domitian and beyond. {Of all that have been slain} (pantēs tēs esphagmenēs). Perfect passive articular participle genitive plural of sphaz, the verb used of the Lamb slain (5:9,12; 13:8). Cf. Mt 23:35 about Jerusalem.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

19:1 {After these things} (\meta tauta\). Often when a turn comes in this book. But Beckwith is probably correct in seeing in 19:1-5 the climax of chapter Re 18. This first voice (verses 1,2) \h"s ph"n^ n megal^ n ouchlou pollou\ (as it were great voice of much multitude) is probably the response of the angelic host (Re 5:11; Heb 12:22). There is responsive singing (grand chorus) as in chapters Re 4; 5. {Saying} (\legont"n\). Present active participle of \leg" , genitive plural, though \ochlou\ is genitive singular (collective substantive, agreement in sense). {Hallelujah} (\All^louia\). Transliteration of the Hebrew seen often in the Psalms (LXX) and in III. Macc. 7:13, in N.T. only in Re 19:1,3,4,6. It means, "Praise ye the Lord." Fifteen of the Psalms begin or end with this word. The Great Hallel (a title for Ps 104-109) is sung chiefly at the feasts of the passover and tabernacles. This psalm of praise uses language already in 12:10.

19:2 {For} (\hoti\). Because. The reason for God's judgments is given in 15:3; 16:7. The doom of Babylon seen in 14:7 is now realized. {For} (\hoti\). Second use of \hoti\, explaining the first. {He hath judged} (\ekrinen\). First aorist (prophetic and climacteric, effective) active indicative of \krin" . {Which} (\h^tis\). The very one which. {Did corrupt} (\ephtheiren\). This is the terrible fact. First aorist active indicative of \phtheir" . Cf. 11:18; 14:8; 17:2; 18:3. {And he hath avenged} (\kai exedik^sen\). God has exacted vengeance for the blood of his servants from (\ek\ her. Prophetic aorist again of \ekdike" with accusative and \ek\ with ablative as in 6:10.

19:3 {A second time} (\deuteron\). Adverbial accusative, a heavenly encore. {They say} (\eir^kan\). Perfect active indicative of \eipon\ . "They have said," not an "aoristic" perfect for "they say," but vivid dramatic perfect as in 5:7 and the form in \-an\ instead of \-asin\ as in 18:3; 21:6. {Goeth up} (\anabainei\). Linear present active indicative of \anabain" , "keeps on going up," "a last touch to the description already given (18:21ff.) of Babylon's utter collapse" (Swete). The smoke of the city's ruin (14:11; 18:8f.,18) instead of incense (8:4). Cf. Isa 34:9f.

19:4 {Fell down and worshipped God} (\epesan kai prosekun^{san} tⁱ theⁱ). Precisely as in 7:11, which see. The twenty-four elders and the four living creatures take up the antiphonal chorus of the angels.

19:5 {A voice from the throne} (\phⁿ apo tou thronou). Not the voice of God, nor of the Lamb, nor \ek tou naou (16:17), but from an angel of the Presence. This angel summons all the servants of God to join in the antiphonal praise to God. {Give praise to our God} (\aineite tⁱ theⁱ h^mⁿ). Present active imperative of \aine^o, old verb, with the accusative elsewhere in N.T., but here with the dative as occasionally in the LXX (1Ch 16:36, etc.).

19:6 {As it were the voice} (\h^s phⁿⁿ). Used here three times, as once in verse 1: once of a second great multitude (\ochlou pollou), not of angels as in verse 1, but the innumerable multitude of the redeemed of 7:9; then "of many waters" (\hudatⁿ pollⁿ) as in 1:15; 14:2 like "the roar of a cataract" (Swete); and once more "the voice of mighty thunders" (\brontⁿ ischurⁿ) as in 6:1; 10:3ff. {Saying} (\legontⁿ). The best attested reading, genitive plural of \leg^o, agreeing with \ochlou (genitive singular), for roll of the waters and the roar of the thunders were not articulate. Some MSS. have \legontes (nominative plural) referring also to \ochlou, though nominative instead of genitive. The fourth "Hallelujah" comes from this vast multitude. {The Lord our God, the Almighty} (\Kurios, ho theos, ho pantokrat^r). For this designation of God see also 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7,14; 19:15; 21:22. Cf. _deus et dominus noster_ used of the Roman emperor. {Reigneth} (\ebasileusen). First aorist active of \basileu^o. Probably ingressive prophetic aorist, "God became king" in fulness of power on earth with the fall of the world power.

19:7 {Let us rejoice and be exceeding glad} (\chairⁿ kai agalliⁿmen). Present active subjunctive (volitive) of \chair^o and \agallia^o (elsewhere in N.T. in the middle except Lu 1:47; 1Pe 1:8). For both verbs together see Mt 5:12. {Let us give} (\dⁿmen). Second aorist active subjunctive of \did^o^{mi}, but A reads \d^osomen (future active) and P \d^osⁿmen. If the future indicative is read, the tone is changed from exhortation to declaration (we shall give glory unto him). {The marriage of the Lamb} (\ho gamos tou arniou). In the O.T. God is the Bridegroom of Israel (Hos 2:16; Isa 54:6; Eze 16:7ff.). In the N.T. Christ is the Bridegroom of the Kingdom (the universal spiritual church as seen by Paul, 2Co 11:2; Eph 5:25ff., and by John in Re 3:20; 19:7,9; 21:2,9; 22:17). In the Gospels Christ appears as the Bridegroom (Mr 2:19f.; Mt 9:15; Lu 5:34f.; Joh 3:29). The figure of \gamos occurs in Mt 22:2-14. Three metaphors of women appear in the Apocalypse (the Mother in chapter Re 12, the Harlot in Re 17-19, and the Bride of Christ here to the end). "The first and third present the Church under two different aspects of her life, while the second answers to her great rival and enemy" (Swete). {Is come} (\lthen). Prophetic aorist, come at last. {Made herself ready} (\h^toimasen heaut^{\n}). First aorist active indicative of \hetoimaz^{\n} and the reflexive pronoun. See 22:2 for \h^toimasmen^{\n} h^{\n}s numph^{\n} (prepared as a bride). There is something for her to do (1Jo 3:3; Jude 1:21; 2Co 7:1), but the chief preparation is the act of Christ (Eph 5:25ff.).

19:8 {That she should array herself} (\hina peribal^{\tai}). Sub-final object clause subject of \edoth^{\n} (was given to her) with \hina and the second aorist middle (direct) of \periball^{\n} to fling around. This bridal dress is a gift from Christ. This form, \edoth^{\n} (it was given), occurs some 20 times in this book. {In fine linen, bright and pure} (\bussinon lampron katharon). See 19:14 for the same raiment on those accompanying "The Word of God" and for the seven angels in 15:6. See by contrast the garments of the harlot (17:4; 18:16). For \bussinon see 18:16. {The righteous acts of the saints} (\ta dikai^{\n} mata t^{\n} hagi^{\n}). This is the explanation (\gar) of the bridal dress and explains why there is work for the Bride as well as for Christ (Php 2:12f.). See 15:4 for \dikai^{\n}ma (also Ro 5:18).

19:9 {Write} (\Grapson). First aorist active imperative of \graph^{\n} as in 1:11; 14:13. The speaker may be the angel guide of 17:1. {It is another beatitude} (\makarioi, Blessed) like that in 14:13 (fourth of the seven in the book). {They which are bidden} (\hoi kekl^{\n}menoi). Articular perfect passive participle of \kale^{\n}, like Mt 22:3; Lu 14:17. Cf. Re 17:14. This beatitude reminds us of that in Lu 14:15. (Cf. Mt 8:11; 26:29.) {These are true words of God} (\Houtoi hoi logoi al^{\n}thinoi tou theou eisin). Undoubtedly, but one should bear in mind that apocalyptic symbolism "has its own methods and laws of interpretation, and by these the student must be guided" (Swete).

19:10 {To worship him} (\proskun[^]sai aut[^]i\). First aorist active infinitive of purpose. John either felt that the angel represented God or he was beside himself with excitement over the glorious consummation. He was tempted to worship an angel (Col 2:18). {See thou do it not} (\hora m[^]\). Repeated in 22:9. Here there is no verb after \m[^] (ellipse of \poi[^]s[^]is touto) as in Mr 1:44; 1Th 5:15, the aorist subjunctive of negative purpose with \m[^] after \hora\ (present active imperative of \hora[^]), a common enough idiom. {Fellow-servant} (\sundoulos\). The angel refuses worship from John on this ground. All Christians are \sundouloi\ (fellow-servants) as Christ taught (Mt 18:28ff.; 24:49) and as Paul (Col 1:7; 4:7) and John (Re 6:11) taught. Angels are God's servants also (Heb 1:4-14). For "the testimony of Jesus see 1:2,9; 6:9; 12:17; 22:4. {Worship God} (\t[^]i the[^]i proskun[^]son\). And Christ, who is the Son of God (5:13f.). {The spirit of prophecy} (\to pneuma t[^]s proph[^]teias\). Explanatory use of \gar\ (for) here as in 8. The possession of the prophetic spirit shows itself in witness to Jesus. In illustration see Mr 1:10; Mt 3:16; Lu 3:21; Joh 1:51; Re 4:1; 10:1; 11:19; 14:17; 15:5; 18:1; 19:1,7-9.

19:11 {The heaven opened} (\ton ouranon [^]ne[^]igmenon\). Perfect passive participle (triple reduplication) of \anoig[^]\. Accusative case after \eidon\. So Ezekiel (1:1) begins his prophecy. See also the baptism of Jesus (Mt 3:16; Lu 3:21, but \schizomenous\ in Mr 1:10). Jesus predicted the opened heavens to Nathanael (Joh 1:51). In Re 4:1 a door is opened in heaven, the sanctuary is opened (11:19; 15:5), angels come out of heaven (10:1; 14:17; 18:1), and sounds come from heaven (19:1). {Behold, a white horse} (\idou hippos leukos\). Nominative case because of \idou\, not \eidon\. Cf. 6:2 for \hippos leukos\). The emblem of victory in both cases, but the riders are very different. Here it is the Messiah who is the Warrior, as is made plain by "Faithful and True" (\pistos kai al[^]thinol), epithets already applied to Christ (1:5; 3:7,14). Cf. also 22:6. {In righteousness he doth judge and make war} (\en dikaiosun[^]i krinei kai polemei\). See Isa 11:3ff. The Messiah is both Judge and Warrior, but he does both in righteousness (15:3; 16:5,7; 19:2). He passes judgment on the beast (antichrist) and makes war on him. Satan had offered Christ a victory of compromise which was rejected.

19:12 {A flame of fire} (\phlox puros\). As in the opening vision of Christ in 1:14 (2:18). {Many diadems} (\diad^mata polla\). A new feature, but the dragon has a diadem on each of his seven heads (12:3) and the first beast one upon each of his ten horns (13:1). So the victorious Messiah will wear many royal diadems and not mere crowns, because he is King of kings (19:16). {And he hath} (\kai ech^n\). Nominative active present participle of \ech^\" either used absolutely as an independent verb (like indicative) or in an anacoluthon, though \autou\ (his) is genitive. {A name written} (\onoma gegrammenon\). Perfect passive participle of \graph^\" as in 2:17 (cf. 3:12). {But he himself} (\ei m^ autos\). "Except himself" (common ellipsis of the verb after \ei m^, "if not"). See 2:17; 3:12 for the new name there described. See 14:1 for the name of Christ on the forehead of the 144,000, and 17:5 for the name on the forehead of the harlot. This word here supplements what Jesus says in Mt 11:27.

19:13 {Arrayed} (\peribeb^menos\). Perfect passive participle of \periball^\", to clothe, often in this book. {In a garment} (\himation\). Accusative case after the passive participle \peribeb^menos\). {Sprinkled} (\rerantismenon\). Perfect passive participle of \rantiz^\", in the predicate accusative case agreeing with \himation\. A Q here read \bebammenon\ (perfect passive participle of \bapt^\", to dip). Probably \rerantismenon\ (sprinkled) is correct, because the picture comes from Isa 63:3, where Aquila and Symmachus use \rantiz^\". The use of \bebammenon\ (dipped) is a bolder figure and Charles considers it correct. In either case it is the blood of Christ's enemies with which his raiment (\himation\, perhaps a \chlamus\ Mt 27:28,31) is sprinkled or dipped as the case may be, not his own blood on Calvary (1:5; 5:9; 7:14; 12:11), but proleptically and prophetically the blood of Christ's enemies. \Haimati\ can be either locative case with \bebammenon\ (dipped in blood) or instrumental with \rerantismenon\ (sprinkled with blood). {The Word of God} (\ho Logos tou theou\). Some scholars hold this addition inconsistent with verse 12, but it may be merely the explanation of the secret name or still another name besides that known only to himself. The personal use of the Logos applied to Christ occurs only in the Johannine writings unless that is the idea in Heb 4:12. In Joh 1:1,14 it is merely \ho Logos\ (the Word), in 1Jo 1:1 \ho Logos t^s z^s\ (the Word of Life), while here it is \ho Logos tou theou\ (the Word of God), one of the strongest arguments for identity of authorship. The idiom here is one common in Luke and Paul for the teaching of Christ (Lu 5:1; 8:11, etc.; 1Co 14:36; 2Co 2:17, etc.). Jesus is himself the final and perfect revelation of God to men (Heb 1:1f.).

19:14 {The armies which are in heaven} (\ta strateumata ta en tⁱ ouranⁱ\). See 12:7 for Michael and angels warring with the dragon, and also Mt 26:53 for the angels at Christ's call, not to say Heb 1:6f., 14; Mt 13:41; Re 5:11f. {Followed} (\kolouthei\). Imperfect active and singular (\strateumata\, neuter plural) of \akolouthe^a\, graphic picture of the celestial Warrior with his angelic hosts "upon white horses" (\eph' hippos leukois\ like the Leader and, like him "clothed in fine linen white and pure" (\endedumenoι bussinon leukon katharon\ like the Leader again (19:8). Note \endedumenoι\ here as in 1:13; 15:6.

19:15 {A sharp sword} (\romphaia oxeia\). As in 1:16; 2:12, 15. {That he should smite} (\hina pataxⁱ\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \patass^a\, old verb already in 11:6 and like Isa 11:4, a figure here for forensic and judicial condemnation. {And he shall rule them} (\kai autos poimanei\). Emphatic use of \autos\ twice (he himself). Future active of \poimain^a\, to shepherd as in 2:27; 12:5 "with a rod of iron" (\en rabdⁱ sid^rfi\ as there. See 1Pe 2:25; Heb 13:20 for Christ as Shepherd. {And he treadeth} (\kai autos patei\). Change to present tense of \pate^a\, to tread (here transitive), with solemn repetition of \kai autos\ {The winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God} (\tⁿ lⁿon tou oinou tou thumou t^s org^s tou theou tou pantokratoros\). Literally, "the winepress of the wine of the wrath of the anger of God the Almighty" (four genitives dependent on one another and on lⁿon). These images are here combined from 14:8, 10, 19f.; 16:19. The fact is already in 19:13 after Isa 63:1ff.

19:16 {And on his thigh} (\kai epi ton m^hron autou\). "Even upon his thigh." Old word, here alone in N.T. {King of kings, and Lord of lords} (\Basileus basileⁿ kai Kurios kuriⁿ\). The title already given to the Lamb in 17:14, but in reverse order. See the same idea in 1Ti 6:15.

19:17 {An angel} (\hena aggelon\). Like \heis\ in 18:21, just "an," not "one." {Standing in the sun} (\hest“ta en t“i h“li“i). Second perfect active participle of \hist^mi\ (intransitive). "Where all the birds of prey would behold him" (Beckwith). For \orneois\ (birds) see 18:2 and for \en mesouran^mati\ (in mid heaven) see 18:13; 14:6. {Come and be gathered together} (\Deute sunachth^te\). \Deute\ is the adverb \deur“\ (hither), used when two or more are addressed, possibly from \deuro ite\ (come here). Asyndeton also without \kai\ (and). First aorist passive imperative of \sunag“\. The metaphor is drawn from Eze 39:17. {Unto the great supper of God} (\eis to deipnon to mega tou theou\). The habits of vultures are described by Christ in Mt 24:28. This is a bold and powerful picture of the battlefield after the victory of the Messiah, "a sacrificial feast spread on God's table for all the vultures of the sky" (Swete). Is this battle the same as that of Har Magedon (16:16) and that of Gog and Magog (20:8ff.) mentioned after the thousand years? The language in 20:8ff. seems like this derived from Eze 39:17ff., and "in the Apocalypse priority in the order of sequence does not always imply priority in time" (Swete). There seems no way to decide this point save that the end seems to be at hand.

19:18 {That ye may eat} (\hina phag^te\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \esthi“\. {The flesh of kings} (\sarkas basile“n\). "Pieces of flesh" (plural of sarx\, flesh) and of all classes and conditions of men who fell in the battle (6:18; 11:13; 13:16; 19:5; 20:12). War is no respecter of persons.

19:19 {Gathered together} (\sun^gmena\). Perfect passive participle of \sunag“\. In battle array. {To make war against} (\poi^sai polemon meta\). First aorist active infinitive of \poie“\, to express purpose. See \poleme“ meta\ in 12:7 and the use of \sunag“ eis polemon\ in 16:14; 20:8. The beast (for his army see 16:13f.) led a league of ten kings against Babylon in 17:16f., but with the purpose also of fighting the Lamb (17:14).

19:20 {Was taken} (\epiasth^\. First aorist (prophetic) passive indicative of the Doric \piaz“\ (Attic piez“). Cf. 2Th 2:8. {The false prophet} (\ho pseudoproph^t^s\). Possibly the second beast of 13:11-17; 16:13; 20:10. Charles takes him to be "the priesthood of the Imperial cult, which practised all kinds of magic and imposture to beguile men to worship the Beast." {That wrought the signs in his sight} (\ho poiesas ta s^{meia} en^{pion} autou). As in 13:14. {Wherewith} (\en hois). "In which" signs. {He deceived} (\eplan^{sen}). First aorist active indicative of \plana^{an}. He was only able to deceive "them that had received" (\tous labontas, articular second aorist active participle of \lamban^{an}, "those receiving") "the mark of the beast" (13:16; 14:9ff.; 16:2; 20:4) "and them that worshipped his image" (\tous proskunountas tⁱ eikoni autou) as in 13:15. {They twain} (\hoi duo). "The two." {Were cast} (\eblthsan). First aorist passive Indicative of \ball^{an}. They fall together as they fought together. "The day that sees the end of a false statecraft will see also that of a false priestcraft" (Swete). {Alive} (\z^{antes}). Present active participle of \za^{an}, predicative nominative, "living." {Into the lake of fire} (\eis tⁿ limnⁿ tou puros). Genitive \puros describes this \limnⁿ (lake, cf. Lu 5:1) as it does \gehenna in Mt 5:22. See also 20:10; 21:8. It is a different figure from the "abyss" in 9:1ff; 20:1ff. This is the final abode of Satan, the beast, the false prophet, and wicked men. {That burneth with brimstone} (\t^s kaiomen^s en theiⁱ). Note the genitive here in place of the accusative \limnⁿ, perhaps because of the intervening genitive \puros (neuter, not feminine). The agreement is regular in 21:8. For \en theiⁱ (with brimstone) see 14:10; 20:10; 21:8. The fact of hell is clearly taught here, but the imagery is not to be taken literally any more than that of heaven in chapters Re 4; 5; 21; 22 is to be so understood. Both fall short of the reality.

19:21 {The rest} (\hoi loipoi). Of the enemy (the kings and their hosts of verse 19). {Were killed} (\apektanth^{san}). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of \apoktein^{an}. Those affected by the Caesar-worship (14:9ff.) were not at once cast into the lake with the two beasts. {Were filled} (\echortasth^{san}). First aorist (effective) passive of \chortaz^{an}. As they had been invited to do in verse 17.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

20:1 {Coming down out of heaven} (\katabainonta ek tou ouranou\).

As in 10:1; 18:1. {The key of the abyss} (\t^{\hat{n}} klein t^{\hat{s}} abussou\). As in 9:1. {A great chain} (\halusin megal^{\hat{n}}\). Paul wore a \halusis\ (alpha privative and lu^{\hat{a}}, to loose) in Rome (2Ti 1:16; as did Peter in prison in Jerusalem (Ac 12:6). {In his hand} (\epi t^{\hat{n}} cheira autou\). "Upon his hand," ready for use. See \epi\ with the genitive in 1:20.

20:2 {He laid hold on} (\ekrat^{\hat{sen}}\). First aorist active indicative of \krate^{\hat{a}}\, to seize. {The dragon} (\ton drakonta\). Accusative after \ekrat^{\hat{sen}}\ instead of the genitive as in 2:1. He has been behind the beast and the false prophet from the start. Now he is seized. {The old serpent} (\ho ophis ho archaios\). Precisely the description in 12:9, only the nominative is here retained, though in apposition with the accusative \ton drakonta\, a frequent anacoluthon in the Apocalypse (1:5, etc.). Swete calls it a parenthesis. {Which is} (\hos estin\). The relative here relieves the construction and takes the place of \ho kaloumenos\ in 12:9 before \Diabolos kai ho Satanfs\, {And bound him} (\kai ed^{\hat{sen}} auton\). First aorist active indicative of \de^{\hat{a}}\, {For a thousand years} (\chilia et^{\hat{a}}\). Accusative of extent of time. Here we confront the same problem found in the 1260 days. In this book of symbols how long is a thousand years? All sorts of theories are proposed, none of which fully satisfy one. Perhaps Peter has given us the only solution open to us in 2Pe 3:8 when he argues that "one day with the Lord is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day." It will help us all to remember that God's clock does not run by ours and that times and seasons and programs are with him. This wonderful book was written to comfort the saints in a time of great trial, not to create strife among them.

20:3 {Into the abyss} (\eis t^{\hat{n}} abusson\). The one in 9:1f. and the one spoken of by the legion of demons in Lu 8:31 under the charge of the angel of the abyss (Apollyon, Re 9:11) who is either Satan himself or a kindred power. "Already he has been cast out of Heaven (12:9), now he is cast out of the earth, and returns to his own place" (Swete). {Shut it and sealed it} (\ekleisen kai esphragisen\). Effective first aorists active indicative of \klei“\ and \sphragiz“\, {That he should deceive no more} (\hina m^plan^s^i\). Negative purpose clause with \hina m^ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \plana“\, Glorious relief after the strain of the previous visions of conflict. Small wonder that Christians today cherish this blessed hope whatever the actual meaning may be. {Until should be finished} (\achri telesth^i\). Temporal clause of future purpose with \achri\ (as a conjunction like \he“s\ and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \tele“\, Repeated in verse 5 and see \achri\ and the subjunctive in 7:3; 15:8. {He must be loosed} (\dei luth^nai\). Sad necessity, alas, with \dei\ and the first aorist passive infinitive of \lu“\, {For a little time} (\mikron chronon\). Accusative of time. Whatever the thousand years means, it is here said plainly that after it is over the devil will again have power on earth "for a little time."

20:4 {And they sat upon them} (\kai ekathisan ep' autous\). First aorist active indicative of \kathiz“\, Another period here apparently synchronous (verse 7) with the confinement of Satan in the abyss. No subject is given for this plural verb. Apparently Christ and the Apostles (Mt 19:28; Lu 22:30) and some of the saints (1Co 6:3), martyrs some hold. {Judgment was given unto them} (\krima edoth^ autois\). First aorist passive of \did“mi\, Picture of the heavenly court of assizes. {The souls} (\tas psuchas\). Accusative after \eidon\ at the beginning of the verse. {Of them that had been beheaded} (\t^“n pepelekismen^“n\). Genitive of the articular perfect passive participle of \pelekiz“\, old word (from \pelekus\ an axe, the traditional instrument for execution in republican Rome, but later supplanted by the sword), to cut off with an axe, here only in N.T. See 6:9; 18:24; 19:2 for previous mention of these martyrs for the witness of Jesus (1:9; 12:17; 19:10). Others also besides martyrs shared in Christ's victory, those who refused to worship the beast or wear his mark as in 13:15; 14:9ff.; 16:2; 19:20. {And they lived} (\kai ez^san\). First aorist active indicative of \za“\, If the ingressive aorist, it means "came to life" or "lived again" as in 2:8 and so as to verse 5. If it is the constative aorist here and in verse 5, then it could mean increased spiritual life. See Joh 5:21-29 for the double sense of life and death (now literal, now spiritual) precisely as we have the second death in Re 2:11; 20:6,14. {And reigned with Christ} (\kai ebasileusan meta tou Christou\). Same use of the first aorist active indicative of \basileu“, but more clearly constative. Beckwith and Swete take this to apply solely to the martyrs, the martyrs' reign with Christ.

20:5 {The rest of the dead} (hoi loipoi t“n nekr“n\). "All except the martyrs, both the righteous and the unrighteous" (Beckwith). But some take this to mean only the wicked. {Lived not until the thousand years should be finished} (ouk ez^san achri telesth^i ta chilia et^\). See verse 4 for the items here. "To infer from this statement, as many expositors have done, that the \ez^san\ of v. 4 must be understood of bodily resurrection, is to interpret apocalyptic prophecy by methods of exegesis which are proper to ordinary narrative" (Swete). I sympathize wholly with that comment and confess my own ignorance therefore as to the meaning of the symbolism without any predilections for post-millennialism or premillennialism. {This is the first resurrection} (haut^ h^ anastasis h^ pr“t^\). Scholars differ as to the genuineness of this phrase. Accepting it as genuine, Swete applies it to "the return of the martyrs and confessors to life at the beginning of the Thousand Years." According to this view the first resurrection is a special incident in the present life before the Parousia. It has no parallel with 1Th 4:16, where the dead in Christ are raised before those living are changed. Some think that John here pictures the "Regeneration" (palingenesia\) of Mt 19:28 and the "Restoration" (apokatastasis\) of Ac 3:21. No effort is here made to solve this problem, save to call attention to the general judgment out of the books in 20:12 and to the general resurrection in Joh 5:29; Ac 24:15.

20:6 {Blessed and holy} (makarios kai hagios\). A fifth beatitude (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9) already and two more to come (22:7,14, seven in all). Here \hagios\ is added to the usual \makarios\. The second death (ho deuterios thanatos\). The spiritual death of 2:11; 20:14; 21:8 in contrast to the first or physical death. This language raises a question about the interpretation of the first and the second resurrections, whether both are of the body or one of the spirit. There seems no way to reach a solid conception about it. In 1Co 15:23 there is no mention of the resurrection of any save "those of Christ" (hoi tou Christou\), though the end follows (verse 24). However, Paul elsewhere (Ac 24:15) speaks of the resurrection of the just and of the unjust as if one event. {Priests of God and of Christ} (\hiereis tou theou kai tou Christou). As in 1:6; 5:10; 22:3,5. {Shall reign with him} (\basileusousin met' autou). As promised in the same passages. The servants of God are to be priests with Christ and to reign with him (Mt 19:28). In 5:10 \epi t's g's (upon earth) occurs, but this item does not appear here. "No hint is given as to where this service is to be rendered and this royalty to be exercised" (Swete).

20:7 {When are finished} (\hotan telesth' i). Indefinite future temporal clause with \hotan and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \tele'\', "when ever are finished." {Shall be loosed} (\luth' setai). Future passive of \lu'\', no longer bound as in 20:2f. He uses the future as a prophet in verses 7,8, but in 9,10 he uses the aorist as a seer. {Out of his prison} (\ek t's phulak's autou). For \phulak' in this sense see 2:10. Out of the abyss of verses 2,3.

20:8 {To deceive the nations} (\plan' sai ta ethn'). First aorist active infinitive of purpose of \plana'\', Satan's chief task (chapters 12 to 18, in particular 12:9; 13:14; 19:20; 20:3,10). {Which are in the four corners of the earth} (\ta en tais tessarsi g' "niais t's g's). Clearly the reign with Christ, if on earth, was not shared in by all on earth, for Satan finds a large and ready following on his release. See 7:1 (Isa 11:12) for "the four corners of the earth." {Gog and Magog} (\ton G' g kai Mag' g). Accusative in explanatory apposition with \ta ethn' (the nations). Magog is first mentioned in Ge 10:2. The reference here seems to be Eze 38:2, where both are mentioned. Josephus (_Ant_. I. 6. 1) identifies Magog with the Scythians, with Gog as their prince. In the rabbinical writings Gog and Magog appear as the enemies of the Messiah. Some early Christian writers thought of the Goths and Huns, but Augustine refuses to narrow the imagery and sees only the final protest of the world against Christianity. {To gather them together to the war} (\sunagagein autous eis ton polemon). Second aorist active infinitive of purpose of \sunag'\', a congenial task for Satan after his confinement. See 16:14 for this very phrase and also 17:14; 19:19. {Of whom} (\h' "n--aut' "n). Pleonasm or redundant pronoun as in 3:8 and often (of whom--of them). {As the sand of the sea} (\h' s h' ammos t's thalass's). Already in 12:18. Clearly then the millennium, whatever it is, does not mean a period when Satan has no following on earth, for this vast host rallies at once to his standard.

20:9 {They went up} (aneb^san\). Second aorist active indicative of \anabain^, a return to the manner of the seer as in verses 4,5. {Over the breadth of the earth} (epi to platos t^s g^s\). \Platos\ is old word, in N.T. only here, 21:16; Eph 3:18. The hosts of Satan spread over the earth. {Compassed} (ekukleusan\). First aorist (prophetic) active indicative of \kukleu^, to encircle, late verb (Strabo) from \kuklos\ (circle), in N.T. only here and margin in Joh 10:24 (for \ekukl^san\ from \kuklo^). {The camp of the saints} (t^n parembol^ n t^"n hagi^"n\). \Parembol^ (para, en, ball^) is common late word for military camp, in LXX for the Israelites in the desert (Ex 29:14, etc.), in N.T. for Roman barracks (Ac 24:34,37) and for an army in line of battle (Heb 11:34; Re 20:9). {The beloved city} (t^n polin t^"n gap^men^"n\). Perfect passive participle of \agapa^, "the city the beloved." See Ps 78:68; 87:2 for Jerusalem so described. So Charles takes it here, but Swete holds it to be "the Church the New Zion" that is meant. {And fire came down out of heaven} (kai kateb^ pur ek tou ouranou\). Second aorist (prophetic) active indicative of \katabain^, Cf. Ge 19:24; 39:6; Eze 38:22; 2Ki 1:10,12; Lu 9:54 (about John). {Devoured them} (katephagen autous\). Second aorist (prophetic) active of \katesthi^, to eat up (down). Vivid climax to this last great battle with Satan.

20:10 {Was cast} (ebli^th^\). First aorist (prophetic, affective) passive indicative of \ball^ (verse 3). {Into the lake of fire and brimstone} (eis t^"n limn^"n tou puros kai theiou\). As in 19:20 with the two beasts, as he adds, "where are also the beast and the false prophet" (hopou kai to th^rion kai ho pseudoproph^t^s\). {They shall be tormented} (basanisth^sontai\). Return to the prophetic future of verses 7,8. For \basaniz^ see 9:5; 14:10. For "day and night" (h^meras kai nuktos\) see 4:8; 7:15; 12:10; 14:11. For "for ever and ever" (eis tous ai^"nas ton ai^"n^"n\) see 1:6,18; 4:9,10; 5:13; 7:12; 10:6; 11:15, etc. The devil was cast down from heaven (12:9), then imprisoned (20:2ff.), now he received his final doom.

20:11 {A great white throne} (thronon megan leukon\). Here \megan\ (great) is added to the throne pictures in 4:4; 20:4. The scene is prepared for the last judgment often mentioned in the N.T. (Mt 25:31-46; Ro 14:10; 2Co 5:10). "The absolute purity of this Supreme Court is symbolized by the colour of the Throne" (Swete) as in Da 7:9; Ps 9:1; 97:2. The name of God is not mentioned, but the Almighty Father sits upon the throne (4:2f,9; 5:1,7,13; 6:16; 7:10,15; 19:4; 21:5), and the Son sits there with him (Heb 1:3) and works with the Father (Joh 5:19-21; 10:30; Mt 25:31ff.; Ac 17:31; 2Co 5:10; 2Ti 4:1). {From whose face the earth and the heaven fled away} (\hou apo pros“pou ephugen h^ ge kai ho ouranos\). Second aorist (prophetic) active of \pheug“\ . See 16:20. The non-eternity of matter is a common teaching in the O.T. (Ps 97:5; 102:27; Isa 51:6) as in the N.T. (Mr 13:31; 2Pe 3:10). {Was found} (\heureth^ \). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk“\ . All is now spiritual. Even scientists today are speaking of the non-eternity of the universe.

20:12 {The dead, the great and the small} (\tous nekrous tous megalous kai tous mikrous\). The general resurrection of verse 13 is pictured by anticipation as already over. No living are mentioned after the battle of verses 7-10, though some will be living when Jesus comes to judge the quick and the dead (2Ti 4:1; 1Th 4:13ff.). All classes and conditions (11:18; 13:16; 19:5,18) John saw "standing before the throne" (\hest“tas en“pion tou thronou\). {Books were opened} (\biblia^noichth^san\). First aorist passive of \anoig“\ . Like Da 7:10. The record of each human being has been kept in God's books. {Were judged} (\ekrith^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \krin“\ . The sentence upon each rests upon written evidence. {Another book which is the book of life} (\allo biblion ho estin t^s z“^s\). This book has already been mentioned (3:5; 13:8; 17:8). "It is the roll of living citizens of Jerusalem" (Swete), "the church of the first born enrolled in heaven" (Heb 12:23). The books are "the vouchers for the book of life" (Alford). We are saved by grace, but character at last (according to their works) is the test as the fruit of the tree (Mt 7:16,20; 10:32f.; 25:31-46; Joh 15:6; 2Co 5:10; Ro 2:10; Re 2:23; 20:12; 22:12).

20:13 {Gave up} (\ed“ken\). Just "gave" (first aorist active indicative of \did“mi), but for the sea to give is to give up (effective aorist). Sea as well as land delivers its dead (all kinds of dead, good and bad). Swete notes that accidental deaths will not prevent any from appearing. Milligan is sure that the sea here means "the sea of the troubled and sinful world." {Death and Hades} (\ho thanatos kai ho hfid^s\). "An inseparable pair"

(Swete) as in 1:18; 6:8; 20:14. So in Mt 16:18 "the gates of Hades" means the power of death. Etymologically Hades is the unseen world where all who die are as opposed to this visible world, but in actual use Hades is sometimes treated as the abode of the unrighteous (Lu 16:23). Charles thinks that this is true here, though there is nothing to show it apart from the personification of death and Hades and the casting of both into the lake of fire in verse 14. Here again "each man" (\hekastos) receives judgment according to his deeds (Mt 16:27; 1Co 3:13; 2Co 5:10; Ro 2:6; 14:12; 1Pe 1:17; Re 2:23).

20:14 {Were cast} (\ebl^th^san). As the devil (20:10) followed the two beasts (19:20) into the same dread lake of fire. Death is personified and is disposed of, "the last enemy" (1Co 15:26) and Paul sings the paean of victory over death (1Co 15:54f., from Ho 13:14). Hades has no more terrors, for the saints are in heaven. There is no more fear of death (Heb 2:15), for death is no more (Re 21:4). The second death (2:11; 20:6; 21:8) is here identified as in 21:8 with the lake of fire.

20:15 {If any was not found written in the book of life} (\ei tis ouch heureth^ en t^i bibl^i t^s z^s). Condition of first class with \ei and the first aorist passive indicative of \heurisk^. In this short sentence the doom is told of all who are out of Christ, for they too follow the devil and the two beasts into the lake of fire (the counterpart of the Gehenna of fire, Mt 5:22). There is no room here for soul sleeping, for an intermediate state, for a second chance, or for annihilation of the wicked. In Da 12:2 there is a resurrection to death as well as to life and so in Joh 5:29; Ac 24:15.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

21:1 {A new heaven and a new earth} (\ouranon kainon kai gⁿ kainⁿ\). This new vision (\eidon\) is the picture of the bliss of the saints. {The first heaven and the first earth} (\ho pr^{tos} ouranos kai h ^{pr^{tos} gⁿ}\) {are passed away} (\ap^lthan\, went away, second aorist active indicative of \aperchomai\). "Fled away" (\ephugen\) in 20:11. {And the sea is no more} (\kai h ^{thalassa ouk estin eti}\). The sea had given up its dead (20:13). There were great risks on the sea (18:17ff.). The old physical world is gone in this vision. It is not a picture of renovation of this earth, but of the disappearance of this earth and sky (not heaven where God dwells). It is a glorious picture here in 21:1-8 in sharp contrast to the lake of fire in 20:11-15. The symbolism in neither case is to be pressed too literally, but a stern and a glorious reality exists behind it all.

21:2 {The holy city, new Jerusalem} (\tⁿ polin tⁿ hagian Ierousal^m kainⁿ\). "The New Earth must have a new metropolis, not another Babylon, but another and greater Jerusalem" (Swete), and not the old Jerusalem which was destroyed A.D. 70. It was called the Holy City in a conventional way (Mt 4:5; 27:53), but now in reality because it is new and fresh (\kainⁿ\), this heavenly Jerusalem of hope (Heb 12:22), this Jerusalem above (Ga 4:26ff.) where our real citizenship is (Php 3:20). {Coming down out of heaven from God} (\katabainousan ek tou ouranou apo tou theou\). Glorious picture caught by John and repeated from 3:12 and again in 21:10. But Charles distinguishes this new city of God from that in 21:9-22:2 because there is no tree of life in this one. But one shrinks from too much manipulation of this symbolism. It is better to see the glorious picture with John and let it tell its own story. {Made ready} (\h^{toimasmenⁿ}\). Perfect passive participle of \hetoimaz^{as}\ as in 19:7. The Wife of the Lamb made herself ready in her bridal attire. {As a bride adorned} (\h^{s numphⁿ kekosm^{menⁿ}}\). Perfect passive participle of \kosme^{as}\, old verb (from \kosmos\ ornament like our cosmetics), as in 21:19. Only here the figure of bride is not the people of God as in 19:7, but the abode of the people of God (the New Jerusalem). {For her husband} (\t*“i andri aut*ˆs\). Dative case of personal interest.

21:3 {The tabernacle of God is with men} (\h*ˆ sk*ˆn*ˆ tou theou meta t*ˆ“n anthr*“p*ˆ“n\). It is one of the angels of the Presence (16:17; 19:5) speaking. {And he shall dwell with them} (\kai sk*ˆn*ˆ“*sei met' aut*ˆ“n\). Future active of \sk*ˆno*ˆ“, already in 7:15 from Eze 37:27; Zec 2:10; 8:8 and used of the Incarnate Christ on earth by John (Joh 1:14), now a blessed reality of the Father. The metaphor stands for the Shekinah Glory of God in the old tabernacle (7:15; 13:6; 15:5), the true tabernacle of which it was a picture (Heb 8:2; 9:11). God is now Immanuel in fact, as was true of Christ (Mt 1:23).

21:4 {Shall wipe away every tear from their eyes} (\exaleipsei pfn dakruon ek t*ˆ“n ophthalm*ˆ“n aut*ˆ“n*\). More exactly, "shall wipe out every tear out of their eyes" (repetition of \ex\) like a tender mother as in 7:17 (Isa 25:8). There is no more that ought to cause a tear, for death (\thanatos\) is no more, mourning (\penthos\), associated with death and crying (\kraug*ˆ*\, wailing), and pain (\ponos\ as in 16:10) are all gone. There is peace and bliss.

21:5 {Behold, I make all things new} (\Idou kaina poi*ˆ“ panta*\). The first time since 1:8 that God has been represented as speaking directly, though voices have come out of the throne before (21:3) and out of the sanctuary (16:1,17), which may be from God himself, though more likely from one of the angels of the Presence. This message is not addressed to John (7:14; 17:7; 21:6; 22:6), but to the entire world of the blessed. See Isa 43:18f. for the words (\Idou eg*ˆ“ poi*ˆ“ kaina\). The idea of a new heaven and a new earth is in Isa 65:17; 66:22; Ps 102:25f. For the locative here with \epi\ (\epi t*ˆ“i thron*ˆ“i\ see 7:10; 19:4 (genitive more usual, 4:9f.; 5:1,7,13, etc.). See 20:11 for the picture. {And he saith} (\kai legei\). Probably this means a change of speakers, made plain by \moi\ (to me) in many MSS. An angel apparently (as in 14:13; 19:9f.) assures John and urges him to write (\grapson\ as in 1:11; 2:1,8,12,18; 3:1,7,14; 14:3). The reason given (\hoti\, for) is precisely the saying in 22:6 and he uses the two adjectives (\pisto*i kai al*ˆthinoi\ employed in 19:11 about God himself, and 3:14 about Christ. In 19:9 \alˆthinoi\ occurs also about "the words of God" as here. They are reliable and genuine.

21:6 {They are come to pass} (\Gegonan\). Second perfect active indicative of \ginomai\ with \-an\ for \-asi\. See 16:17 for a like use of \gegonen\, "They have come to pass." Here again it is the voice of God because, as in 1:8, He says: {I am the Alpha and the Omega} (\Eg“to Alpha kai to O\) with the addition "the beginning and the end" (\h[^] arch[^] kai to telos\), the whole used in 22:13 of Christ. In Isa 44:6 there is something like the addition, and in Col 1:18; Re 3:14 \h[^] arch[^]\ is applied to Christ, while here God is the First Cause (\arch[^]\) and the Finality (\telos\) as in Ro 11:36; Eph 4:6. But God works through Christ (Joh 1:3; Heb 1:2f.; Col 1:12-20). God is the bountiful Giver (Jas 1:5,17) of the Water of Life. See 7:17; 22:1,17 for this metaphor, which is based on Isa 55:1. It is God's own promise (\Eg“d“s“\), "I will give." {Of the fountain} (\ek t[^]s p[^]g[^]s\). For this partitive use of \ek\ see Mt 25:8, without \ek\ Re 2:17. {Freely} (\d“rean\). See Mt 10:8; Joh 4:10; Ro 3:24; Ac 8:20; Re 22:17.

21:7 {He that overcometh} (\ho nik“n\). Recalls the promises at the close of each of the Seven Letters in chapters 2 and 3. {Shall inherit} (\kl[^]ronom[^]sei\). Future active of \kl[^]ronome“\, word with great history (Mr 10:17; 1Pe 1:4; Ga 4:7; Ro 8:17), here interpreted for the benefit of these who share in Christ's victory. {I will be his God} (\Esomai aut“i theos\). Repeated Old Testament promise (first to Abraham, Ge 17:7f.). Cf. Re 21:3. {He shall be my son} (\autos estai moi huios\). Made first of Solomon (2Sa 7:14) and applied to David later in Ps 89:26f.

21:8 {Their part shall be} (\to meros aut“n\). In contrast to the state of the blessed (verses 3-7) the state of "those who have disfranchised themselves from the Kingdom of God" (Charles) is given. They are with Satan and the two beasts, and are the same with those not in the book of life (20:15) in the lake of fire and brimstone (19:20; 20:10,14f.), that is the second death (2:11; 20:6,14). See also 14:10. There are eight epithets here used which apply to various sections of this direful list of the doomed and the damned, all in the dative (case of personal interest). {For the fearful} (\tois deilois\). Old word (from \deid“\, to fear) for the cowardly, who recanted under persecution, in N.T. only here, Mt 8:26; Mr 4:40. {Unbelieving} (\apistois\). "Faithless," "untrustworthy," in contrast with Christ "\ho pistos\" (1:5). Cf. 2:10,13; 3:14; 17:14. Disloyalty is close kin to cowardice. {Abominable} (\ebdelugmeno\). Perfect passive participle of \bdeluss“\, old verb, in N.T. only here and Ro 2:22, common in LXX, to pollute (Ex 5:21). Those who have become defiled by the impurities of emperor-worship (7:4f.; 21:27; Ro 2:22; Tit 1:16). {Murderers} (\phoneusin\). As a matter of course and all too common always (Mr 7:21; Ro 1:29; Re 9:21). {Fornicators} (\pornois\). Again all too common always, then and now (1Co 5:10; 1Ti 1:9f.). These two crimes often go together. {Sorcerers} (\pharmakois\). Old word, in N.T. only here and 22:15. Closely connected with idolatry and magic (9:21; 13:13f.). {Idolaters} (\eid“lolatrais\). See 1Co 5:10f.; 10:7; Eph 5:5; Re 22:15. With a powerful grip on men's lives then and now. {All liars} (\pasi tois pseudesin\). Repeated in 22:15 and stigmatized often (2:2; 3:9; 14:5; 21:8,27; 22:15). Not a "light" sin.

21:9 {One of the seven angels} (\heis ek t“n hepta aggel“n\). As in 17:1 with the same introduction when the angel made the announcement about the harlot city (Babylon), so here the description of the heavenly city, the New Jerusalem, is given by one of the same group of angels who had the seven bowls. Thus the \numph^ (Bride) is placed in sharp contrast with the \porn^ (Harlot). The New Jerusalem was briefly presented in verse 2, but now is pictured at length (21:9-22:5) in a nearer and clearer vision. {The bride the wife of the Lamb} (\t^ n numph^ n t^ n gunaika tou arniou\). Twice already the metaphor of the Bride has been used (19:7; 21:2), here termed "wife" (\gunaika\), mentioned proleptically as in 19:7 if the marriage is not yet a reality. For the use of the same metaphor elsewhere in the N.T. see on 19:7.

21:10 {He carried me away in the Spirit} (\ap^negken me en pneumatì\). See same language in 17:7 when John received a vision of the Harlot City in a wilderness. Here it is "to a mountain great and high" (\epi oros mega kai hups^lon\). So it was with Ezekiel (Eze 40:2) and so the devil took Jesus (Mt 4:8). It was apparently not Mount Zion (14:1), for the New Jerusalem is seen from this mountain. "The Seer is carried thither 'in spirit' (cf. 1:10; 4:1); the Angel's \deuro\ is a _sursum cor_ to which his spirit under the influence of the 'Spirit of revelation' (Eph 1:17) at once responds" (Swete). {And he shewed me} (\kai edeixen moi\). First aorist active indicative of \deiknumi\, just as he had said he would do in verse 9 (\deix“ soi\, I will shew thee). Precisely the same words about Jerusalem as in verse 2, save the absence of Syntactically this clause goes with verse 10, the feminine accusative singular participle \echousan\ agreeing with \polin\, the radiance of the dazzling splendour of God as seen in Isa 60:1; Eze 43:5. God's very presence is in the Holy City (the Bride). {Light} (\ph"st^r\). "Luminary," late word (in LXX, papyri), in N.T. only here and Php 2:15. Christ is the light (\ph"s\ of the world (Joh 8:12) and so are Christians (Mt 5:14) who have received the illumination (\ph"tismos\ of God in the face of Christ (2Co 4:6) and who radiate it to men (Php 2:15). See both words in Ge 1:3,14. "The 'luminary' of the Holy City is her witness to Christ" (Swete). {Like unto a stone most precious} (\homoios lith"i timi"tat"i\). Associative instrumental case after \homoios\. \Timi"tat"i\ is the elative superlative. {As it were a jasper stone} (\h"s lith"i iaspidi\). As in 4:3, which see. {Clear as crystal} (\krustallizonti\). Verb not found elsewhere from \krustallos\ (old word, 4:6; 22:1), "of crystalline brightness and transparency" (Thayer), "transparent and gleaming as rock-crystal" (Moffatt).

21:11 {Having the glory of God} (\echousan t^n doxan tou theou\).

21:12 {Having a wall great and high} (\echousa teichos mega kai hups^lon\). John returns, after the parenthesis in verse 11, to the structure in verse 10, only to use the accusative \echousan\ as before to agree with \polin\, but the nominative \echousa\ as again with "twelve gates" (\pul"nas d"deka\). \Pul"n\ is an old word (from \pul^\ gate) for a large gate as in Lu 16:20 and six times in Rev. for the gate tower of a city wall (Re 21:12,13,15,21,25; 22:14) as in 1Ki 17:10; Ac 14:13. See Eze 48:31ff. for these twelve gates, one for each tribe (cf. Re 7:1-8). {At the gates} (\epi tois pul"sin\). "Upon the gate towers." {Twelve angels} (\aggelous d"deka\). As \pul"roi\ or \phulakes\ according to Isa 62:6; 2Ch 8:14. {Names written thereon} (\onomata epigegrammena\). Perfect passive participle of \epigraph"\". {Which are the names} (\ha estin\). Just as in Ezekiel's vision (48:31ff.), so here the names of the twelve tribes of Israel appear, one on each gate.

21:13 {Three gates} (\pul"nes treis\ on each of the four sides as in Eze 42:16ff.; "on the east" (\apo anatol^s\, as in 16:12, starting from the east), "on the north" (\apo borrf\, from the north, as in Lu 13:29), "on the south" (\apo notou\, from the south, as in Lu 13:29), "on the west" (\apo dusem"n\, from the west, as in Mt 8:11).

21:14 {Had} (\ech“n\). Masculine present active participle of \ech“\ instead of \echon\ (neuter like to \teichos), and the participle occurs independently as if a principal verb (\eichen\) as often in this book. {Twelve foundations} (\themelious d“deka\). Foundation stones, old adjective (from \thema\, from \tith^mi), here as in 1Co 3:11ff.; 2Ti 2:19, with \lithous\ (stones understood), though often neuter substantive to \themelion\ (Lu 6:48f.; Ac 16:26). See Isa 28:16; Heb 11:10. Twelve because of the twelve apostles as foundation stones (Eph 2:20). {On them} (\ep' aut“n\). On the twelve foundation stones. {Names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb} (\onomata t“n d“deka apostol“n tou arniou\). Jesus had spoken of twelve thrones for the apostles (Mt 19:28); names of all twelve are here written, not just that of Peter, as some would argue from Mt 16:18. As a matter of fact, Christ is the corner stone or \akrog“niaion\ (1Pe 2:6; 1Co 3:10; Eph 2:20), though rejected by the Sanhedrin (Mt 21:42ff.). One may wonder if the name of Judas is on that stone or that of Matthias.

21:15 {Had} (\eichen\). Regular imperfect here, no longer \ech“n\. {For a measure a golden reed} (\metron kalamon chrusoun\). See 11:1 for \kalamos\ (reed). \Metron\ is an old word, kin to \m^t^r\ (mother, moulder, manager), an instrument for measuring (\metre“) as in Mt 7:2, here in the predicate accusative. {To measure} (\hina metr^s^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \metre“. The rod of gold was in keeping with the dignity of the service of God (1:12; 5:8; 8:3; 9:13; 15:7).

21:16 {Lieth foursquare} (\tetrag“nos keitai\). Present middle indicative of \keimai\. The predicate adjective is from \tetra\ (Aeolic for \tessares\ four) and \g“nos\ (\g“nia\ corner, Mt 6:5) here only in N.T. As in Eze 48:16,20. It is a tetragon or quadrilateral quadrangle (21:12f.). {The length thereof is as great as the breadth} (\to m^kos aut^s hoson to platos\). It is rectangular, both walls and city within. Babylon, according to Herodotus, was a square, each side being 120 stadia. Diodorus Siculus says that Nineveh was also foursquare. {With the reed} (\t“i kalam“i\). Instrumental case (cf. verse 15 for \kalamos) and for \metre“\ (aorist active indicative here) {Twelve thousand furlongs} (\epi stadi“n d“deka chiliad“n\). This use of the genitive \stadi“n\ with \epi\ is probably correct (reading of Aleph P), though A Q have \stadious\ (more usual, but confusing here with \chiliad“n). Thucydides and Xenophon use \epi\ with the genitive in a like idiom (in the matter of). It is not clear whether the 1500 miles (12,000 furlongs) is the measurement of each of the four sides or the sum total. Some of the rabbis argued that the walls of the New Jerusalem of Ezekiel would reach to Damascus and the height would be 1500 miles high. {Equal} (\isa\). That is, it is a perfect cube like the Holy of Holies in Solomon's temple (1Ki 6:19f.). This same measurement (\platos, m^kos, hupsos\ is applied to Christ's love in Eph 3:18, with \bathos\ (depth) added. It is useless to try to reduce the measurements or to put literal interpretations upon this highly wrought symbolic language. Surely the meaning is that heaven will be large enough for all, as Jesus said (Joh 14:1ff.) without insisting on the materialistic measurement of a gorgeous apartment house full of inside rooms.

21:17 {A hundred and forty and four cubits} (\hekaton tessarakonta tessar“n p^ch“n\). Another multiple of 12 (12x12=144) as in 7:4; 14:1. It is not clear whether it is the height or the breadth of the wall that is meant, though \hupsos\ (height) comes just before. That would be 216 feet high (cf. verse 12), not enormous in comparison with the 7,000,000 feet (1500 miles) height of the city. {According to the measure of a man, that is, of an angel} (\metron anthr“pou, ho estin aggelou\). No preposition for "according to," just the accusative case of general reference in apposition with the verb \emetr^sen\. Though measured by an angel, a human standard was employed, man's measure which is angel's (Bengel).

21:18 {The building of the wall} (\h^end“m^sis tou teichous\). Or \endom^sis\, elsewhere so far only in Josephus (_Ant_. XV. 9. 6, a mole or breakwater) and in an inscription (_Syll_. 583 31), apparently from \endome“, to build in, and so the fact of building in. The wall had jasper (verse 11) built into it. {Was pure gold} (\chrusion katharon\). No copula \^n\ (was) expressed. The city shone like a mass of gold in contrast with the jasper lustre of the wall. {Pure glass} (\hual“i kathar“i\). Associative instrumental case after \homoion\. \Hualos\ (apparently from \huei, it rains, and so raindrop) in N.T. only Re 21:18,21.

21:19 {Were adorned} (\kekosm^menoi\). Perfect passive participle of \kosme“\ as in verse 2, but without the copula \^san\ (were), followed by instrumental case \lith“i\ (stone). {With all manner of precious stones} (\panti lith“i timi“i). "With every precious stone." The list of the twelve stones in verses 19,20 has no necessary mystical meaning. "The writer is simply trying to convey the impression of a radiant and superb structure" (Moffatt). The twelve gems do correspond closely (only eight in common) with the twelve stones on the high priest's breastplate (Ex 28:17-20; 39:10ff.; Eze 28:13; Isa 54:11f.). Charles identifies them with the signs of zodiac in reverse order, a needless performance here. See the stones in Re 4:3. These foundation stones are visible. For jasper (\iaspis) see 4:3; 21:11,18; Isa 54:12; sapphire (\sappheiros) see Ex 24:10;. Isa 54:11 (possibly the \lapis lazuli\ of Turkestan); chalcedony (\chalk^d“n) we have no other reference in N.T. or LXX (described by Pliny, H.N. XXXIII.21), possibly a green silicate of copper from near Chalcedon; emerald (\smaragdos) here only in N.T., see 4:3 \smaragdinós, and like it a green stone.

21:20 Sardonyx (\sardonux), here only in N.T., white with layers of red, from sardion (red carnelian) and onyx (white); for sardius (\sardion) see 4:3; chrysolite (\chrusolithos), here only in N.T. (Ex 28:20), stone of a golden colour like our topaz or amber or a yellow beryl or golden jasper; beryl (\b^rullos), again here only in N.T. (Ex 28:20), note the difficulty of identification, much like the emerald according to Pliny; for topaz (\topazion), here only in N.T. (Ex 28:17), a golden-greenish stone; chrysoprase (\chrusoprasos), here only in N.T. (not in LXX), in colour like a teak, translucent golden-green; jacinth (\huakinthos), of the colour of the hyacinth, a violet colour (Pliny), already in 9:17 like blue smoke, like achates in LXX; amethyst (\amethystos), only here in N.T. (Ex 28:19), of a violet and purple colour, more brilliant than the \huakinthos. Swete sums up the colours thus: blue (sapphire, jacinth, amethyst), green (jasper, chalcedony, emerald, beryl, topaz, chrysoprase), red (sardonyx, sardius), yellow (chrysolite). But even so there is great variety in hue and brilliancy and in the reaction on each other. Clement of Alexandria argues that this variety illustrates the variety of gifts and graces in the twelve apostles. Possibly so.

21:21 {Twelve pearls} (\d“deka margaritai). These gate towers (\pul“nes) were mentioned in verses 12f. Each of these (cf. Isa 54:12) is a pearl, one of the commonest of jewels (Mt 7:6; 13:46; 1Ti 2:9). {Each one} (\ana heis hekastos). Distributive use of \ana\, but with the nominative (used as adverb, not preposition) rather than the accusative (as a preposition) as appears also in Mr 14:19; Joh 8:9; with \kata\ in Ro 12:5, "a barbaric construction" according to Charles. {Street} (\plateia\). For which word (broad way, \hodos\ understood) see Mt 6:5, here the singular, but includes all the streets. {Transparent} (\diaug^s\). Old word (from \dia\, through, \aug^\", ray, shining through), here alone in N.T.

21:22 {I saw no temple therein} (\naon ouk eidon en aut^i\). "Temple I did not see in it." The whole city is a temple in one sense (verse 16), but it is something more than a temple even with its sanctuary and Shekinah Glory in the Holy of Holies. {For the Lord God the Almighty, and the Lamb are the temple thereof} (\ho gar Kurios ho theos ho pantokrat^r, naos aut^s estin kai to arnion\). "For the Lord God, the Almighty, is the sanctuary of it and the Lamb." The Eternal Presence is the Shekinah Glory of God (verse 3). In 2Co 6:16 we are the sanctuary of God here, but now God is our Sanctuary, and so is the Lamb as in chapters Re 4; 5. See 1:8 and often for the description of God here.

21:23 {To shine upon it} (\hina phain^sin aut^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the present active subjunctive of \phain^\", to keep on shining. Light is always a problem in our cities. See Isa 60:19ff. {Did lighten it} (\eph^tisen aut^n\). First aorist active indicative of \ph^tiz^\", to illumine, old verb from \ph^s\ (Lu 11:36). If the sun and moon did shine, they would give no added light in the presence of the Shekinah Glory of God. See verse 11 for "the glory of God." Cf. 18:1; 21:3. "Their splendour is simply put to shame by the glory of God Himself" (Charles). {And the lamp thereof is the Lamb} (\kai ho luchnos aut^s to arnion\). Charles takes \ho luchnos\ as predicate, "and the Lamb is the lamp thereof." Bousset thinks that John means to compare Christ to the moon the lesser light (Ge 1:16), but that contrast is not necessary. Swete sees Christ as the one lamp for all in contrast with the many \luchniai\ of the churches on earth (1:12,20). "No words could more clearly demonstrate the purely spiritual character of St. John's conception of the New Jerusalem" (Swete).

21:24 {Amidst the light thereof} (\dia tou ph^tos aut^s\). Rather "by the light thereof." From Isa 60:3,11,20. All the moral and spiritual progress of moderns is due to Christ, and the nations of earth will be represented, including "the kings" (\hoi basileis), mentioned also in Isa 60:3, "do bring their glory into it" (\pherousin t^n doxan aut^"n eis aut^n). Present active indicative of \pher". Swete is uncertain whether this is a picture of heaven itself or "some gracious purpose of God towards humanity which has not yet been revealed" and he cites 22:2 in illustration. The picture is beautiful and glorious even if not realized here, but only in heaven.

21:25 {Shall in no wise be shut} (\ou m^ kleisth^sin). Double negative with the first aorist passive subjunctive of \klei". {By day} (\h^meras). Genitive of time. Mentioned alone without \nuktos (by night), "for there shall be no night there" (\nux gar ouk estai ekei). This looks like a continued picture of heaven.

21:26 {They shall bring} (\oisousin). Future active indicative of \pher". Rome gathered the merchandise of the world (18:11ff.). The City of God will have the best of all the nations (Isa 60:5,11), an expansion of verse 24.

21:27 {There shall in no wise enter into it} (\ou m^ eiselth^i eis aut^n). Double negative again with the second aorist active subjunctive of \eiserchomai with \eis repeated. Like Isa 52:1; Eze 44:9. {Anything unclean} (\pfn koinon). Common use of \pfn with negative like \ouden, and the use of \koinos for defiled or profane as in Mr 7:2; Ac 10:14, not just what is common to all (Tit 1:4). {Or he that} (\kai ho). "And he that." {Maketh an abomination and a lie} (\poi^"n bdelugma kai pseudos). Like Babylon (17:4 which see for \bdelugma) and 21:8 for those in the lake of fire and brimstone, and 22:15 for "every one loving and doing a lie." These recurrent glimpses of pagan life on earth and of hell in contrast to heaven in this picture raise the question already mentioned whether John is just running parallel pictures of heaven and hell after the judgment or whether, as Charles says: "The unclean and the abominable and the liars are still on earth, but, though the gates are open day and night, they cannot enter." In apocalyptic writing literalism and chronology cannot be insisted on as in ordinary books. The series of panoramas continue to the end. {But only they which are written} (\ei m^ hoi gegrammenoi). "Except those written." For "the book of life" see 3:5; 13:8; 20:15. Cf. Da 12:1.

[\[Previous\]](#)

22:1 {He shewed me} (\edeixen moi). The angel as in 21:9,10 (cf. 1:1; 4:1). Now the interior of the city. {A river of water of life} (\potamon hudatos z“^s). For \hud“r z“^s (water of life) see 7:17; 21:6; 22:17; Joh 4:14. There was a river in the Garden of Eden (Ge 2:10). The metaphor of river reappears in Zec 14:8; Eze 47:9, and the fountain of life in Joe 3:18; Jer 2:13; Pr 10:11; 13:14; 14:27; 16:22; Ps 36:10. {Bright as crystal} (\lampron h“s krustallon). See 4:6 for \krustallon and 15:6; 19:8; 22:16 for \lampron. "Sparkling like rock crystal" (Swete), shimmering like mountain water over the rocks. {Proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb} (\ekporeuomenon ek tou thronou tou theou kai tou arniou). Cf. Eze 47:1; Zec 14:8. Already in 3:21 Christ is pictured as sharing the Father's throne as in Heb 1:3. See also 22:3. This phrase has no bearing on the doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit.

22:2 {In the midst of the street thereof} (\en mes“i t“s plateias aut“s). Connected probably with the river in verse 1, though many connect it with verse 2. Only one street mentioned here as in 21:21. {On this side of the river and on that} (\tou potamou enteuthen kai ekeithen). \Enteuthen occurs as a preposition in Da 12:5 (Theodoret) and may be so here (post-positive), purely adverbial in Joh 19:18. {The tree of life} (\xulon z“^s). For the metaphor see Ge 1:11f. and Re 2:7; 22:14. \Xulon is used for a green tree in Lu 23:31; Eze 47:12. {Bearing} (\poioun). Neuter active participle of \poie“ (making, producing, as in Mt 7:17). Some MSS. have \poi“n (masculine), though \xulon is neuter. {Twelve manner of fruits} (\karpous d“deka). "Twelve fruits." {Yielding} (\apodidoun). Neuter active participle of \apodid“mi, to give back, but some MSS. have \apodidous (masculine) like \poi“n. {For the healing of the nations} (\eis therapeian t“n ethn“n). Spiritual healing, of course, as leaves (\phulla) are often used for obtaining medicines. Here again the problem occurs whether this picture is heaven before the judgment or afterwards. Charles distinguishes sharply between the Heavenly City for the millennial reign and the New Jerusalem that descends from heaven after the judgment. Charles rearranges these chapters to suit his theory. But chronology is precarious here.

22:3 {There shall be no curse any more} (\pan katathema ouk estai eti). No other example of \katathema has been found outside of the _Didache_ XVI. 5, though the verb \katathematiz occurs in Mt 26:74, meaning to curse, while we have \anathematiz in Mr 14:71 in the same sense. It may be a syncopated form of \katanathema. The usual \anathema (curse) occurs in 1Co 16:22; Ga 1:8; Ro 9:3. For \pan with \ouk=ouden see 21:27. {Shall do him service} (\latreousousin aut\i). Future active of \latreu, linear idea, "shall keep on serving." See 7:15 for present active indicative of this same verb with the dative \aut\i as here, picturing the worship of God in heaven. See 27:1 for "the throne of God and of the Lamb."

22:4 {They shall see his face} (\opsontai to pros\pon autou). Future active of \hora. This vision of God was withheld from Moses (Ex 33:20,23), but promised by Jesus to the pure in heart (Mt 5:8) and mentioned in Heb 12:14 as possible only to the holy, and promised in Ps 17:15. Even here on earth we can see God in the face of Christ (2Co 4:6), but now in the New Jerusalem we can see Christ face to face (1Co 13:12), even as he is after we are made really like him (2Co 3:18; Ro 8:29; 1Jo 3:2). It is anthropomorphic language, to be sure, but it touches the essential reality of religion. "The supreme felicity is reached, immediate presence with God and the Lamb" (Beckwith). {His name on their foreheads} (\to onoma autou epi t\i\ n met\p\i\ n aut\i). As in 3:12; 7:3; 14:1.

22:5 {Shall be night no more} (\nux ouk estai eti). As in 21:25. {They need} (\echousin chreian). Present active indicative, "They have need," though A has \hexousin (shall have), future like \estai. Here again there is repetition of part of 21:23, but for the purpose of showing the delightsomeness of the New Jerusalem with no need of lamp or sun (change to \ph\i\ s\ with \h\liou\ instead of \ph\i\ tos\, 'they have no light of sun'). {Shall give them light} (\ph\i\ tisei). Future active of \ph\i\ tiz, while aorist \eph\i\ tisen in 21:23. {They shall reign} (\basileousousin). Future active of \basileu. Reign eternally in contrast with the limited millennial reign of 20:4,6. This glorious eternal reign with Christ occurs repeatedly in the book (1:6; 3:21; 5:10) as in Lu 22:30. Christ's Kingdom is spiritual (Joh 18:36f.). "The visions of the Apocalypse are now ended; they have reached their climax in the New Jerusalem" (Swete). Now John gives the parting utterances of some of the speakers, and it is not always clear who is speaking.

22:6 {He said unto me} (\eipen moi). Apparently the same angel as in 22:1 (21:9,15). {These words} (\houtoi hoi logoi). The same words used in 21:5 by the angel there. Whatever the application there, here the angel seems to endorse as "faithful and true" (\pistoi kai al`thinoi) not merely the preceding vision (21:9-22:5), but the revelations of the entire book. The language added proves this: "Sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly come to pass" (\apesteilen ton aggelon autou deixai tois doulois autou ha dei genesthai en tachei), a direct reference to 1:1 concerning the purpose of Christ's revelation to John in this book. For "the God of the spirits of the prophets" (\ho theos t`n pneumat`n t`n proph`t`n) see 19:10; 1Co 14:32. Probably the prophets' own spirits enlightened by the Holy Spirit (10:7; 11:8; 22:9).

22:7 {And behold, I come quickly} (\kai idou erchomai tachu). Christ is the speaker, either through this angel or more probably directly from Christ without introduction as in verses 12,16. About Christ coming quickly see 2:5,16; 3:11; 16:15, and already in 1:2f. Once more we must recall that \tachu and \en tachei are according to God's time, not ours (2Pe 3:8). {Blessed} (\makarios). This beatitude is like in substance the first (1:3) and is in Christ's own words like the one in 16:15. This book is here called a "prophecy" (\proph`teias) as in verses 10,18,19. It is Christ's revelation from God, a direct message from God. Part of it is prediction of doom on Christ's enemies, but most of it is a comforting picture of final triumph and bliss for the faithful in a time of great distress and persecution.

22:8 {And I John} (\Kag` I`ann`s). Here John the Seer is the speaker. He had already given his name (1:1,4,9). Here he claims to be the "one who hears and sees these things" (\ho akou`n kai blep`n tauta). {I fell down to worship} (\epesa proskun`sai). Second aorist active indicative of \pipt`- (with -a\ form) and the first aorist active infinitive of purpose of \proskune`-. It was a natural, though a wrong, thing to do, especially after Christ's own voice followed that of the angel "which shewed me these things" (\tou deiknuontos tauta). Genitive singular of the articular present active participle of 22:9 {See thou do it not} (Hora m^). The angel promptly interposes (legei^, dramatic present). See 19:10 for discussion of this same phrase \hora m^ when John had once before started to worship the angel in his excitement. Here we have added to the words in 19:10 "the prophets (\t^“n proph^t^“n) and also "them which keep the words of this book" (\t^“n t^rout^“n tous logous tou bibliou toutou^), the last a repetition from 22:7. In both places we have "Worship God" (\t^“i the^“i proskun^son). And not an angel.

22:10 {And he saith unto me} (kai legei moi^). The angel resumes as in 19:9. {Seal not up} (m^ sphragis^is). Prohibition with \m^ and the ingressive first aorist active subjunctive of \sphragiz“. Charles takes this to be the command of Christ because in verses 7,18 "the words of the prophecy of this book" come from Christ. But that is not a conclusive argument, though Charles, as already stated, rearranges these chapters to suit his own notion. Once only (10:4) was John directed to seal and not to write. See there for discussion of \sphragiz“. This book is to be left open for all to read (1:3; 13:18; 17:9; 22:7,18). {At hand} (eggus^). As in 1:3.

22:11 {Let him do unrighteousness still} (adik^sat^“eti^). First aorist (constative) active imperative of \adike“, viewed here as a whole. The language is probably ironical, with a reminder of Da 12:10, in no sense a commendation of their lost estate. Charles rejects this verse as not like John. It is the hopelessness of the final state of the wicked which is here pictured. So as to "Let him be made filthy still" (rupanth^t^“eti^). First aorist (constative) passive imperative of \rupain“, old verb, to make foul or filthy (from \rupos^, filth, 1Pe 3:21, as is \ruparos^, filthy), here only in N.T. The use of \eti^ is not perfectly clear, whether "still" or "yet more." It is the time when Christ has shut the door to those outside who are now without hope (Mt 25:10; Lu 13:25). \Ruparos^ occurs elsewhere in N.T. only in Jas 2:2, and \ruparia^ (filthiness) only in Jas 1:21. So then "the righteous" (ho dikaios^) is to do righteousness still (dikaiousun^n poi^sat^“eti^, first constative aorist active imperative of \poie^“) and "the holy" (ho hagios^) to be made holy still (hagiasth^t^“eti^, first constative aorist passive imperative of \hagiaz^“). The states of both the evil and the good are now fixed forever. There is no word here about a "second chance" hereafter.

22:12 {My reward is with me} (\(ho misthos mou met' emou\)). It is Christ speaking again and he repeats his promise of coming quickly as in verse 7. He speaks now as the Rewarder (\(ho misthapodot^s\)) of Heb 11:6. Cf. Re 11:18; Isa 40:10; 62:11. {To render} (\(apodounai\)). Second aorist active infinitive of purpose of \apodid^mi\, to give back. Each will receive the reward according to his own work (Re 2:23; 2Co 5:10; Ro 2:26).

22:13 {I am the Alpha and the Omega} (\(Eg^ to Alpha kai to O\)). Applied to God in 1:8; 21:6, and here alone to Christ, crowning proof in this book of Christ's deity. So in 21:6 God is termed, as Christ is here, \h^ arch^ kai to telos\ (the beginning and the end), while \ho pr^tos kai ho eschatos\ (the first and the last) is applied only to Christ (1:17; 2:8). Solemn assurance is thus given that Christ is qualified to be the Judge of verse 12 (cf. Mt 25:31-46). In Heb 12:2 Jesus is the \arch^gos kai telei^t^s t^s piste^s\ (the author and finisher of faith). Christ was the Creator of the universe for the Father. So now he is the Consummation of redemption.

22:14 {Blessed} (\(makarioi\)). This is the last beatitude of the book and "deals with the issues of the higher life" (Swete). {They that wash their robes} (\(hoi plunontes tas stolas aut^n\)). Present active articular participle of \plun^\. See 7:14 for this very verb with \stolas\, while in 3:4 the negative statement occurs. Cf. 1Co 6:11. {That they may have the right} (\(hina estai h^ exousia aut^n\)). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the future middle of \eimi\ (a common construction in this book, 6:4,11; 9:5,20; 13:12; 14:13), that there may be their right. {To come to the tree of life} (\(epi to xulon t^s z^s\)). "Over the tree of life." On \exousia epi\ = "power over" see 6:8; 13:7; 16:9; Lu 9:1. On "the tree of life" see 2:7; 22:2. {May enter in} (\(eiselth^sin\)). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \eiserchomai\ parallel with \hina estai\ (future). {By the gates} (\(tois pul^sin\)). Associative instrumental case of \pul^n\ (21:12), "by the gate towers."

22:15 {Without} (\(ex^\)). Outside the holy city, with which compare 21:8,27. Dustierdieck supplies an imperative: "Out, ye dogs." {The dogs} (\(hoi kunes\)). Not literal dogs, but the morally impure (De 23:18; 2Ki 8:13; Ps 22:17,21; Mt 7:6; Mr

7:27; Php 3:3). Dogs in the Oriental cities are the scavengers and excite unspeakable contempt. {The sorcerers} (hoi pharmakoi\). As in 21:8, where are listed "the fornicators and the murderers and the idolaters," all "outside" the holy city here as there "in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, the second death." Both are pictures (symbolic language) of hell, the eternal absence from fellowship with God. Another time Jesus spoke of "the outer darkness" (eis to skotos to ex“teron\, Mt 8:12; 22:13; 25:30), outside of lighted house, as the abode of the damned. Another symbol is the worm that dies not (Mr 9:48). {Every one that loveth and maketh a lie} (pfs phil“n kai poi“n pseudos\). An interpretation of \pfsin tois pseudesin\ (all liars) of 21:8 and of \poi“n pseudos\ (doing a lie) of 21:27. Satan is the father of lying (Joh 8:44) and Satan's home is a congenial place for those who love and practise lying (2Th 2:12). See 1Jo 1:6 for not doing the truth and see also Ro 1:25; Eph 4:25.

22:16 {I Jesus} (Eg“ I’sous\). The last and most solemn attestation to the book that from Jesus (the historic Jesus known to the churches), in harmony with 1:1f. {Have sent} (epempsa\). First aorist active indicative of \pemp“\, used here in the same sense as \aposteilas\ in 1:1 as his personal messenger. It is the Jesus of history here speaking, who is also the Christ of theology and the Lamb of God. {For the churches} (epi tais ekkl’siais\). For this use of \epi\ see 10:11; Joh 12:16. It is not just for the seven churches (1:4), but for all the churches in the world then and now. {I am the root and the offspring of David} (Eg“ eimi h^ riza kai to genos Daueid\). See 5:5 for "the root of David," to which John now adds \to genos\ in the sense of "offspring" (Ac 17:28f.), not of family or race (Ac 4:6; 7:13). Cf. Mt 22:42-45. {The bright, the morning star} (ho ast^r ho lampros ho pr“inos\). The Davidic King is called a star in Nu 24:17; Lu 1:78. This "day-star" (ph“sphoros\) is interpreted as Christ (2Pe 1:19). In Re 2:28 the phrase "the morning star" occurs in Christ's words, which is here interpreted. Christ is the Light that was coming into the world (Joh 1:9; 8:12).

22:17 {The Spirit and the bride} (to pneuma kai h^ numph^\). The Holy Spirit, speaking through the prophets or the Spirit of prophecy (2:7; 16:4; 18:24), joins with the bride (21:2), the people of God, in a response to the voice of Jesus just heard.

After the picture of heaven in 22:1-5 there is intense longing (19:7) of God's people for the consummation of the marriage of the Lamb and the Bride. So now "the prophets and the saints" (Swete) make a common plea to the Lord Jesus to "come" (\Erchou\, present middle imperative of \erchomai\, Come on) as he has just said twice that he would do (22:1,12). The call for Christ is to be repeated by every hearer (\ho akou"n\) as in 1:3. {Let him come} (\erchesth""). Change of person and this verb applied not to Christ as just before, but to the one who wishes to greet Christ. The thirsty man is bidden to come himself before it is too late. See 5:6 for \dipsa"", used for spiritual thirst, and in particular Joh 6:35; 7:37 for one thirsting for the water of life (21:6; 22:1). Cf. Isa 55:1. {He that will} (\ho thel"n\). Even if not yet eagerly thirsting. This one is welcome also. For this use of \thel"" see Php 2:13. {Let him take} (\labet""). Second ingressive aorist active imperative of \lamban"". In accordance with the free promise in 21:6, "freely" (\d""rean\) here as there. This gracious and wide invitation is cheering after the gloomy picture of the doomed and the damned. The warnings against the dragon and the two beasts with all their dreadful consequences are meant to deter men from falling victims to all the devil's devices then and now. The door of mercy still stands wide open today, for the end has not yet come. The series of panoramas is over, with the consummation pictured as a reality. Now we drop back to the standpoint before we saw the visions through John's eyes. In verse 17 we hear the voice of the Spirit of God inviting all who hear and see to heed and to come and drink of the water of life freely offered by the Lamb of God.

22:18 {I testify} (\Eg"" martur""). Commentators disagree keenly about the words in verses 18,19. Charles rejects them as an interpolation and out of harmony with the rest of the book. Beckwith takes them to be John's own warning, drawn from De 4:2 "to every man that heareth" (\panti t""i akouonti\, dative of the articular present active participle of \akou"", which compare 1:3). Swete properly holds these verses to be from Jesus himself, still bearing solemn witness to this book, with warning against wilful perversion of its teachings. {If any man shall add} (\ean tis epith"i\). Condition of the third class with \ean\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \epitith"mi\, with \epi\ added with \auta\, as also in the conclusion \epith"sei ep' auton\ (future active). This warning is directed against perversions of this book, not about the New Testament or the Bible as a whole, though it may be true there also. Surely no warning was more needed when we consider the treatment accorded the Apocalypse, so that Dr. Robert South said that the Apocalypse either found one crazy or left him so.

22:19 {If any man shall take away} (\ean tis aphelⁱ). Also condition of the third class with \ean and second aorist active subjunctive of \aphaire^α, with \apo repeated both in the condition and in the conclusion (\aphelei apo\, future active indicative of \aphaire^α\ for the more usual \aphair^{αι}sei). {Which are written in this book} (\t^ηn gegrammen^η en t^ηi bibli^ηi tout^η). Ablative neuter plural articular perfect passive participle in apposition with \ek tou xulou t^{ης} z^ωης (from the tree of life) and \ek t^{ης} pole^{ως} t^{ης} hagias (out of the holy city). Such a man is unworthy of his inheritance.

22:20 {He which testifieth} (\ho martur^ηn). That is Jesus (1:2) who has just spoken (22:18). {Yea: I come quickly} (\Nai, erchomai tachu). Affirmation again of the promise in 22:7,12. On \Nai (Yes) see 1:7 for the Lord's assent to the call. Then John expresses his absolute belief in the Lord's promise: "Amen: come, Lord Jesus" (\Am^ηn, erchou, Kurie I^ηsou). On \Am^ηn see 1:7. On \erchou see 22:17. Note \Kurie with \I^ηsou. As in 1Co 12:3; Php 2:11. For Paul's confidence in the deity of Christ and the certainty of his second coming see Tit 2:13; 2Ti 4:8. \Marana tha (1Co 16:22).

22:21 {The grace of the Lord Jesus be with the saints} (\h^η charis tou Kuriou I^ηsou meta t^ηn hagi^ηn). John's own benediction, an unusual ending for an apocalypse, but suitable for one meant to be read in the churches (1:3f.). Grace is Paul's unvarying word in conclusion of his letters, as is true of Heb 13:25. "The saints" or the consecrated (\hoi hagioi) is John's constant word for believers in Christ (8:3f.; 11:18; 13:7,10; 14:12; 16:6; 17:6; 18:20,24; 19:8; 20:9). It is a good word for the close of this marvellous picture of God's gracious provision for his people in earth and heaven.

===== Corrections to the printed edition =====

Mt 8:7 refers to 'etherapeuonto' in Ac 28:10. It is actually

Ac 28:9. (changed)

Mt 13:21 appears twice on the printed page. Removed second reference to v.21 and let it fall as a new paragraph under the existing v.21.

Mt 17:2 a reference to 'morphe' in '16:12'. This reference seems to be either 1Co (as cited in the sentence), or to the current book (Mt).

It is actually Mr 16:12. (changed)

Mt 18:18 a ref to Mt 16:19 mentions 'finding and loosing'. Changed to 'binding and loosing'.

Mt 27:43 a ref to 'Ps 21 (22):9'. I changed this to 'Ps 21; 22:8' (*the vs 9 must be a typo, and I am unsure how ch. 21 fits into this*)

Mr 5:17 ref to "Mt 13:3-4-58", with respect to Jesus be run out.

Based on parrallel ref of Mr 6:1-6, and the same Mt ref given at Mr 6:1-6 -- I have determined this ref is a typo and should be "Mt 13:54-58". The ref at Mr 6:1 gives Mt 13:54. verses, as printed, 3-4-58 make no sense. 34-58 makes little sense. 54-58 matches other parallel references. (changed)

Mr 8:17-20 uses 1 note for 4 verses. I added a one line 'go to' for each individual verse -- pointing to v.17 with the note.

Mr 10:39-45 also uses 1 note for 7 verses. I added a 'go to' for each individual verse -- pointing to v.39 with the note.

Lu 20:1 compared 19 verses in Lu to "Mr 27-12:12". This obviously was meant to be "Mr 11:27-12:12".

Lu 20:45 gives comparisons as "Matt. 6:12; Luke 11:12, 15-18".

These verses do not compare. The closest thing is Mt 16:12;

Lu 11:37-54; 12:1. This is a major typo. (changed).

Joh 6:34 refers to Rabbi in "26". This is actually "25". Changed.

Joh 8:33 refers to '(3:7; Rom. 9:6f.)' unsure if the 3:7 refers to the preceeding reference to Matt. It could also apply to Joh 3:7, but 3:6f. would make more sense. I made it 'Mt 3:7' to apply to the previous Matt. reference.

Joh 8:34 refers to Joh 3:30. This should be 3:21. Changed.

Ac 13:42 gives reference to "Ac 2:11 (10)" for _proselutoi_. this word is in 10, not 11. unsure what 11 has to do with it, and changed the reference to "Ac 2:10".

Ac 20:30 gives reference for word 'pervert' in 'ac 13:8 10.' This is

Ac 13:8,10. (changed)

1Co 7:17 Changed the word "believer" to "unbeliever" Based on the context of the note, and the preceeding note -- this must have been a typo.

We are to remain where we are called, unless the unbeliever wants out.

1Co 7:21 There seems to be a misplaced ')'. I think it should appear after 'chresai' to make the question outside the parenthesis. (changed)

Heb 11:38 has {Wondering}. This must be a typo. Changed to {Wandering}.

1Th 1:4 refers to 'Jude 1'. Usually with one chapter books, verses are referred to this way (without chapter). But Jude 1:1 does not seem to correlate to this note. Jude 1:3 does. Changed.

Ro 12:4 contains ref to "Tim. 8:13". regarding word "office", this word is in "Ro 8:13". changed.

1Ti 1:2 refers to '2Co 8:9; Tit 1:3; 2'. Something is really wrong here.

2Co 8:8 is correct, Tit 1:4 is correct, and '2' may refer to this verse.

Fixed, and removed '2' as being extraneous. I have never seen this form of self-reference, and with the two other errors, it is suspect.

Col 2:7 refers to 'rooted' in 'Eph 3:17 (18)'. Verse 18 has nothing to do with it and may be Robertson's own belief in an alternate verse break. Removed '18'.

1Pe 1:22 gives ref to '1:2, 2:14'. I would expect to see a ';' seperating the refs to different chapters. 2:14 does not fit into anything here, but 1:14 does, as does 1:2. I would expect to find a ',' seperating refs to different verses. changed to 1:2,14.

1:Pe 2:3 gives ref to 'Ps. 33(34):9'. Must be a LXX ref, changed to 34:8.

2Pe 1:13 gives ref to 2Ti 15. This is 2Ti 1:5. changed.

1Jo 1:6 says '... fellowship with God involves walking in the light with God and in the darkness.' This must be 'not in the darkenss'. (changed).

3Jo 1:15 This is a note attributed to verse 15. The KJV verse numbering stops at verse 14, and what Robertson shows as 15 is part of 14.

Removed the verse number and let the note fall under verse 14.

===== Unresolved questions of integrity (unchanged) =====

Joh 10:29 has 'meizon' with no accented 'o', unlike 2 others in the same note.

1Pe 1:1 makes ref to LXX "23:4; 38 or 39 12". unsure how to handle "38 or 39 12".

1Pe 2:4 gives ref to Isa 28:6 for elect and proved. This verse does not seem to relate. later, 1pe 2:6 gives a correct ref to isa 28:16.

Re 2:13 refers to as v. 2:13; 6:11; 5:9, 13; 13:10, 15;
18, 20; 19:21. Much of this does not relate to the word.

===== October 10, 1993

Mt 1:22 has a cxref to Mt 2:15,35, with 35 being invlaid. It should be verse 23. Changed to Mt 2:15,23.

Mt 1:22 has a cxref to Joh 28:36. This should be verses 28 and 36 for the preceeding cxref to Joh 19:24. Changed to Joh 19:24,28,36.
