21:17 {Lovest thou me?} (\phileis me;|). This time Jesus picks up the word \phile“\ used by Peter and challenges that. These two words are often interchanged in the N.T., but here the distinction is preserved. Peter was cut to the heart (\elup^th^, first aorist passive of \lupe“\, to grieve) because Jesus challenges this very verb, and no doubt the third question vividly reminds him of the three denials in the early morning by the fire. He repeats his love for Jesus with the plea: "Thou knowest all things." {Feed my sheep} (\boske ta probatia). Many MSS. both here and in verse 16 read \probata\ (sheep) instead of \probatia\ (little sheep or lambs).

21:18 {Thou girdest thyself} (\ez“nnues seauton|). Imperfect active of customary action of \z“nnu“, old verb, in N.T. only here and Ac 12:8. So as to \periepateis\ (walkedst) and \^theles\ (wouldest), two other imperfects of customary action. {When thou shalt be old} (\hotan g^ras^is|). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \g^rask“, old verb to grow old, in N.T. only here and Heb 8:13, "whenever thou growest old."

21:19 {By what manner of death} (\poi“i thanat“i|). Undoubtedly John, who is writing long after Peter's death, seems to mean that Peter was to die (and did die) a martyr's death. "Whither thou wouldest not." There is a tradition that Peter met death by crucifixion and asked to be crucified head downwards, but that is not made plain here.

21:20 {Turning about} (\epistrapheis|). Second aorist passive participle of \epistreph“, old verb, here a sudden turning round (ingressive aorist). For the simplex verb \streph“\ see 20:14,16. {Following} (\akolouthounta|). Following both Jesus and Peter, perhaps having heard the graphic dialogue above.

21:21 {And what shall this man do?} (\houtos de ti;). Literally, "But this one ... what?" The abrupt ellipsis is intelligible.

21:22 {If I will} (\ean thel'). Condition of the third class with \ean and the present active subjunctive of \thel'. {Till I come} (\he's erchomai). Literally, "while I am coming" (\he's and the present indicative, not \he's elth' (second aorist active subjunctive). {What is that to thee?} (\ti pros se;). A sharp rebuke to Peter's keen curiosity. {Follow thou me} (\su moi akolouthai). "Do thou me keep on following." That lesson Peter needed.

21:23 {That that disciple should not die} (\hoti ho math' t's ekeinos ouk apothn'skei) (present active indicative), because Peter or others misunderstood what Jesus meant as John now carefully explains. He was rebuking Peter's curiosity, not affirming that John would live on till the Master returned. John is anxious to set this matter right.

21:24 {That is} (\houtos estin). The one just mentioned in verse 20, "the disciple whom Jesus loved." {And wrote these things} (\kai ho grapsas tauta). Here there is a definite statement that the Beloved Disciple wrote this book. {We know} (\oidamen). The plural here seems intentional as the identification and endorsement of a group of disciples who know the author and wish to vouch for his identity and for the truthfulness of his witness. Probably we see here a verse added by a group of elders in Ephesus where John had long laboured.

21:25 {If they should be written every one} (\ean graph'tai kath' hen). Condition of the third class with \ean and present passive subjunctive of \graph', "If they should be written one by one" (in full detail). {I suppose} (\oimai). Note change back to the first person singular by the author. {Would not contain} (\oud' auton ton kosmon ch'r'sein). Future active infinitive in indirect discourse after \oimai. This is, of course, natural hyperbole, but graphically pictures for us the vastness of the work and words of Jesus from which the author has made a small selection (20:30f.) and by which he has produced what is, all things considered, the greatest of all the books produced by man, the eternal gospel from the eagle who soars to the very heavens and gives us a glimpse of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

1:1 _The Title_ is simply _Acts_ (\Praxeis) in Aleph, Origen, Tertullian, Didymus, Hilary, Eusebius, Epiphanius. _The Acts of the Apostles_ (\Praxeis apostol“n) is the reading of B D (Aleph in subscription) Athanasius, Origen, Tertullian, Cyprian, Eusebius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Theodoret, Hilary. _The Acts of the Holy Apostles_ (\Praxeis t“n hagi“n apostol“n) is read by A2 E G H A K Chrysostom. It is possible that the book was given no title at all by Luke, for it is plain that usage varied greatly even in the same writers. The long title as found in the Textus Receptus (Authorized Version) is undoubtedly wrong with the adjective "Holy." The reading of B D, "_The Acts of the Apostles_," may be accepted as probably correct.

{The former treatise} (\ton men pr“ton). Literally, the first treatise. The use of the superlative is common enough and by no means implies, though it allows, a third volume. This use of \pr“tos\ where only two are compared is seen between the Baptist and Jesus (Joh 1:15), John and Peter (Joh 20:4). The idiom is common in the papyri (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 662, 669). The use of \men solitarium\ here, as Hackett notes, is common in Acts. It is by no means true that \men\ requires a following \de\ by contrast. The word is merely a weakened form of \m^n\=surely, indeed. The reference is to the "first treatise" and merely emphasizes that. The use of \logos\ (word) for treatise or historical narrative is common in ancient Greek as in Herodotus 6 and 9. Plato (_Phaedo_, p. 61 B) makes a contrast between \muthos\ and \logos\. {I made} (\epoi^sam^n). Aorist middle indicative, the middle being the usual construction for mental acts with \poie“\. {O Theophilus} (\O Theophile). The interjection \O\ here as is common, though not in Lu 1:3. But the adjective \kratiste\ (most excellent) is wanting here. See remarks on Theophilus on Lu 1:3. Hackett thinks that he lived at Rome because of the way Acts ends. He was a man of rank. He may have defrayed the expense of publishing both Luke and Acts. Perhaps by this time Luke may have reached a less ceremonious acquaintance with Theophilus. {Which Jesus began} (\h“n ^rxato I^sous). The relative is attracted from the accusative \ha\ to the genitive \h“n\ because of the antecedent \pant“n\ (all). The language of Luke here is not merely pleonastic as Winer held. Jesus "began" "both to do and to teach" (\poiein te kai didaskein). Note present infinitives, linear action, still going on, and the use of \te--kai binds together the life and teachings of Jesus, as if to say that Jesus is still carrying on from heaven the work and teaching of the disciples which he started while on earth before his ascension. The record which Luke now records is really the Acts of Jesus as much as the Acts of the Apostles. Dr. A. T. Pierson called it "The Acts of the Holy Spirit," and that is true also. The Acts, according to Luke, is a continuation of the doings and teachings of Jesus. "The following writings appear intended to give us, and do, in fact, profess to give us, that which Jesus _continued_ to do and teach after the day in which he was taken up" (Bernard, _Progress of Doctrine in the N.T._).

1:2 {Until the day in which} (\achri h^s h^{meras}). Incorporation of the antecedent into the relative clause and the change of case \hⁱ (locative) to \h^s (genitive). {Was received up} (\anel^{mpth}). First aorist passive indicative of \analamban^{ai}. Common verb to lift anything up (Ac 10:16) or person as Paul (Ac 20:13). Several times of the Ascension of Jesus to heaven (Mr 16:19; Ac 1:2,11,22; 1Ti 3:16) with or without "into heaven" (\eis ton ouranon). This same verb is used of Elijah's translation to heaven in the LXX (2Ki 2:11). The same idea, though not this word, is in Lu 24:51. See Lu 9:51 for \anal^{mpsis} of the Ascension. {Had given commandment} (\enteilamenos). First aorist middle participle of \entell^{ai} (from \en\ and \tell^{ai}, to accomplish), usually in the middle, old verb, to enjoin. This special commandment refers directly to what we call the commission given the apostles before Christ ascended on high (Joh 20:21-23; Mt 28:16-20; Mr 16:15-18; 1Co 15:6; Lu 24:44-49). He had given commands to them when they were first chosen and when they were sent out on the tour of Galilee, but the immediate reference is as above. {Through the Holy Spirit} (\dia pneumat^{os} hagiou). In his human life Jesus was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. This applies to the choice of the apostles (Lu 6:13) and to these special commands before the Ascension. {Whom he had chosen} (\hous exelexato). Aorist middle indicative, not past perfect. The same verb (\eklexamenos) was used by Luke in describing the choice of the twelve by Jesus (Lu 6:13). But the aorist does not stand "for" our English pluperfect as Hackett says. That is explaining Greek by English. The Western text here adds: "And ordered to proclaim the gospel."

1:3 {To whom also} (\hois kai\). He chose them and then also manifested himself to these very same men that they might have personal witness to give. {Shewed himself alive} (\parest^sen heauton z^nta\). To the disciples the first Sunday evening (Mr 16:14; Lu 24:36-43; Joh 20:19-25), the second Sunday evening (Joh 20:26-29), at the Sea of Tiberias (Joh 21:1-23), on the mountain in Galilee (Mt 28:16-20; Mr 16:15-18; 1Co 15:6), to the disciples in Jerusalem and Olivet (Lu 24:44-53; Mr 16-19f.; Ac 1:1-11). Luke uses this verb \parist^mi\ 13 times in the Acts both transitively and intransitively. It is rendered by various English words (present, furnish, provide, assist, commend). The early disciples including Paul never doubted the fact of the Resurrection, once they were convinced by personal experience. At first some doubted like Thomas (Mr 16:14; Lu 24:41; Joh 20:24f.; Mt 28:17). But after that they never wavered in their testimony to their own experience with the Risen Christ, "whereof we are witnesses" Peter said (Ac 3:15). They doubted at first, that we may believe, but at last they risked life itself in defence of this firm faith. {After his passion} (\meta to pathein auton\). Neat Greek idiom, \meta\ with the articular infinitive (second aorist active of \pasch^) and the accusative of general reference, "after the suffering as to him." For \pathein\ used absolutely of Christ's suffering see also Ac 17:3; 26:23. {By many proofs} (\en pollois tekma^riois\). Literally, "in many proofs." \Tekma^rion\ is only here in the N.T., though an old and common word in ancient Greek and occurring in the _Koin, _ (papyri, etc.). The verb \tekmair^, to prove by sure signs, is from \tekmar, a sign. Luke does not hesitate to apply the definite word "proofs" to the evidence for the Resurrection of Christ after full investigation on the part of this scientific historian. Aristotle makes a distinction between \tekma^rion\ (proof) and \s^meion\ (sign) as does Galen the medical writer. {Appearing} (\optanomenos\). Present middle participle from late verb \optan^, late _Koin, _ verb from root \opt^ seen in \opsomai, "phth^n\). In LXX, papyri of second century B.C. (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 83). Only here in the N.T. For \optasia\ for vision see Ac 26:19; Lu 1:22; 24:23. {By the space of forty days} (\di' h^mer^ n tesseraconta\). At intervals (\dia, between) during the forty days, ten appearances being known to us. Jesus was not with them continually now in bodily presence. The period of forty days is given here alone. The Ascension was thus ten days before Pentecost when the Holy Spirit came. Moses was in the mount forty days (Ex 24:18) and Jesus fasted forty days (Mt 4:2). In the Gospel of Luke 24 this separation of forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension is not drawn. {The things concerning the Kingdom of God} (\ta peri t's basileias tou theou\). This phrase appears 33 times in Luke's Gospel, 15 times in Mark, 4 times in Matthew who elsewhere has "the kingdom of heaven," once in John, and 6 times in Acts. No essential distinction is to be drawn between the two for the Jews often used "heaven" rather than "God" to avoid using the Tetragrammaton. But it is noticeable how the word kingdom drops out of Acts. Other words like gospel (\euaggelion\) take the place of "kingdom." Jesus was fond of the word "kingdom" and Luke is fond of the idiom "the things concerning" (\ta peri\). Certainly with Jesus the term "kingdom" applies to the present and the future and covers so much that it is not strange that the disciples with their notions of a political Messianic kingdom (Ac 1:6) were slow to comprehend the spiritual nature of the reign of God.

1:4 {Being assembled together with them} (\sunalizomenos\). Present passive participle from \sunaliz“, an old verb in Herodotus, Xenophon, etc., from sun, with, and \haliz“, from \hal's\, crowded. The margin of both the Authorized and the Revised Versions has "eating with them" as if from \sun\ and \hals\ (salt). Salt was the mark of hospitality. There is the verb \halisth'te en aut“i\ used by Ignatius _Ad Magnes_. X, "Be ye salted in him." But it is more than doubtful if that is the idea here though the Vulgate does have _convescens illis_ "eating with them," as if that was the common habit of Jesus during the forty days (Wendt, Feine, etc.). Jesus did on occasion eat with the disciples (Lu 24:41-43; Mr 16:14). {To wait for the promise of the Father} (\perimenein t'n epaggelion tou patros\). Note present active infinitive, to keep on waiting for (around, peri\). In the Great Commission on the mountain in Galilee this item was not given (Mt 28:16-20). It is the subjective genitive, the promise given by the Father (note this Johannine use of the word), that is the Holy Spirit ("the promise of the Holy Spirit," objective genitive). {Which ye heard from me} (\h'n kousate mou\). Change from indirect discourse (command), infinitives \ch“rizesthai\ and \perimenein\ after \par^ggeilen\ to direct discourse without any \eph^ (said he) as the English (Italics). Luke often does this (_oratio ariata_). Note also the ablative case of \mou\ (from me). Luke continues in verse 5 with the direct discourse giving the words of Jesus.

1:5 {Baptized with water} (\ebaptisen hudati\) {and with the Holy Ghost} (\en pneumatih baptisth^sesthe hagi^i\). The margin has "in the Holy Ghost" (Spirit, it should be). The American Standard Version renders "in" both with "water" and "Holy Spirit" as do Goodspeed (American Translation) and Mrs. Montgomery (Centenary Translation). John's own words (Mt 3:11) to which Jesus apparently refers use \en\ (in) both with water and Spirit. There is a so-called instrumental use of \en\ where we in English have to say "with" (Re 13:10 \en machair^i\, like \machair^i\, Ac 12:2). That is to say \en\ with the locative presents the act as located in a certain instrument like a sword (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 589f.). But the instrumental case is more common without \en\ (the locative and instrumental cases having the same form). So it is often a matter of indifference which idiom is used as in Joh 21:8 we have \t^i ploiar^i\ (locative without en). They came {in} (locative case without en) the boat. So in Joh 1:31 \en hudati baptiz^an\ baptizing in water. No distinction therefore can be insisted on here between the construction \hudati\ and \en pneumatih\ (both being in the locative case, one without, one with en). Note unusual position of the verb \baptisth^sesthe\ (future passive indicative) between \pneumati\ and \hagi^i\). This baptism of the Holy Spirit was predicted by John (Mt 3:11) as the characteristic of the Messiah's work. Now the Messiah himself in his last message before his Ascension proclaims that in a few days the fulfilment of that prophecy will come to pass. The Codex Bezae adds here "which ye are about to receive" and "until the Pentecost" to verse 5. {Not many days hence} (\ou meta pollas tautas h^meras\). A neat Greek idiom difficult to render smoothly into English: "Not after many days these." The litotes (not many=few) is common in Luke (Lu 7:6; 15:13; Ac 17:27; 19:11; 20:12; 21:39; 28:14; 28:2). The predicate use of \tautas\ (without article) is to be noted. "These" really means as a starting point, "from these" (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 702). It was ten days hence. This idiom occurs several times in Luke (Lu 24:21; Ac 24:21), as elsewhere (Joh 4:18; 2Pe 3:1). In Lu 2:12 the copula is easily supplied as it exists in Lu 1:36; 2:2.

1:6 {They therefore} (\hoi men oun\). Demonstrative use of \hoi\ with \men oun\ without any corresponding \de\ just as in 1:1 \men\ occurs alone. The combination \men oun\ is common in Acts (27 times). Cf. Lu 3:18. The \oun\ is resumptive and refers to the introductory verses (1:1-5), which served to connect the Acts with the preceding Gospel. The narrative now begins. {Asked} (\r^t^"n\). Imperfect active, repeatedly asked before Jesus answered. {Lord} (\kurie\). Here not in the sense of "sir" (Mt 21:30), but to Jesus as Lord and Master as often in Acts (19:5,10, etc.) and in prayer to Jesus (7:59). {Dost thou restore} (\ei apokathistaneis\). The use of \ei\ in an indirect question is common. We have already seen its use in direct questions (Mt 12:10; Lu 13:23 which see for discussion), possibly in imitation of the Hebrew (frequent in the LXX) or as a partial condition without conclusion. See also Ac 7:1; 19:2; 21:37; 22:25. The form of the verb \apokathistan^"\ is late (also \apokathista^"\) omega form for the old and common \apokathist^mi\, double compound, to restore to its former state. As a matter of fact the Messianic kingdom for which they are asking is a political kingdom that would throw off the hated Roman yoke. It is a futuristic present and they are uneasy that Jesus may yet fail to fulfil their hopes. Surely here is proof that the eleven apostles needed the promise of the Father before they began to spread the message of the Risen Christ. They still yearn for a political kingdom for Israel even after faith and hope have come back. They need the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit (Joh 14-16) and the power of the Holy Spirit (Ac 1:4f.).

1:7 {Times or seasons} (\chronous ^ kairous\). "Periods" and "points" of time sometimes and probably so here, but such a distinction is not always maintained. See Ac 17:26 for \kairous\ in the same sense as \chronous\ for long periods of time. But here some distinction seems to be called for. It is curious how eager people have always been to fix definite dates about the second coming of Christ as the apostles were about the political Messianic kingdom which they were expecting. {Hath set} (\etheto\). Second aorist middle indicative, emphasizing the sovereignty of the Father in keeping all such matters to himself, a gentle hint to people today about the limits of curiosity. Note also "his own" (\idifi\) "authority" (\exousifi\).

1:8 {Power} (\dunamin\). Not the "power" about which they were concerned (political organization and equipments for empire on the order of Rome). Their very question was ample proof of their need of this new "power" (\dunamin), to enable them (from \dunamai\, to be able), to grapple with the spread of the gospel in the world. {When the Holy Ghost is come upon you} (\epelthontos tou hagiou pneumatou eph' humas). Genitive absolute and is simultaneous in time with the preceding verb "shall receive" (\l^mpsesthe). The Holy Spirit will give them the "power" as he comes upon them. This is the baptism of the Holy Spirit referred to in verse 5. {My witnesses} (\mou martures). Correct text. "Royal words of magnificent and Divine assurance" (Furneaux). Our word martyrs is this word \martures. In Lu 24:48 Jesus calls the disciples "witnesses to these things" (\martures tout^“n\, objective genitive). In Ac 1:22 an apostle has to be a "witness to the Resurrection" of Christ and in 10:39 to the life and work of Jesus. Hence there could be no "apostles" in this sense after the first generation. But here the apostles are called "my witnesses." "His by a direct personal relationship" (Knowling). The expanding sphere of their witness when the Holy Spirit comes upon them is "unto the uttermost part of the earth" (\he^“s eschatou t^s g^s). Once they had been commanded to avoid Samaria (Mt 10:5), but now it is included in the world program as already outlined on the mountain in Galilee (Mt 28:19; Mr 16:15). Jesus is on Olivet as he points to Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, the uttermost (last, \eschatou) part of the earth. The program still beckons us on to world conquest for Christ. "The Acts themselves form the best commentary on these words, and the words themselves might be given as the best summary of the Acts" (Page). The events follow this outline (Jerusalem till the end of chapter 7, with the martyrdom of Stephen, the scattering of the saints through Judea and Samaria in chapter 8, the conversion of Saul, chapter 9, the spread of the gospel to Romans in Caesarea by Peter (chapter 10), to Greeks in Antioch (chapter 11), finally Paul's world tours and arrest and arrival in Rome(chapters 11 to 28)).

1:9 {As they were looking} (\blepont^“n aut^“n). Genitive absolute. The present participle accents the fact that they were looking directly at Jesus. {He was taken up} (ep^rth^). First aorist passive indicative of \epair^“, old and common verb meaning to lift up. In Lu 24:51 we have "he was borne up" (\anephereto) and in Ac 1:2, 1:11; 1Ti 3:6 "was received up" (\anel^mpth^). {Received} (\hupelaben). Second aorist active indicative of \hupolamban^“, literally here "took under him." He seemed to be supported by the cloud. "In glory" Paul adds in 1Ti 3:16. {Out of their sight} (\apo t' "n ophthalm' "n aut' "n\). From their eyes (\apo\ with ablative case).

1:10 {Were looking steadfastly} (\atenizontes ^san\).

Periphrastic imperfect active of \ateniz' \, a late intensive verb (intensive \a\ and \tein' \, to stretch). Common in Acts and also in Lu 4:20; 22:56 as well as Ac 10:4, which see. {As he went} (\poreuomenou autou\). Genitive absolute of present middle participle. They saw him slipping away from their eyes as the cloud bore him away. {Stood by them} (\pareist' keisan autois\). Past perfect active indicative of \parist' mi\ and intransitive (note |i| in B instead of |ei| for augment, mere itacism).

1:11 {Who also} (\hoi kai\). Common use of \kai\ pleonastic to show that the two events were parallel. This is the simplest way from Homer on to narrate two parallel events. {Why?} (\ti\). Jesus had told them of his coming Ascension (Joh 6:62; 20:17) so that they should have been prepared. {This Jesus} (\houtos ho I'sous\). _Qui vobis fuit eritque semper Jesus, id est, Salvator_ (Corn. a Lapide). The personal name assures them that Jesus will always be in heaven a personal friend and divine Saviour (Knowing). {So in like manner} (\hout' s hon tropon\). Same idea twice. "So in which manner" (incorporation of antecedent and accusative of general reference). The fact of his second coming and the manner of it also described by this emphatic repetition.

1:12 {Olivet} (\Elai' "nos\). Genitive singular. Vulgate _Olivetum_. Made like \ampel' "n\. Here only in the N.T., usually \to oros t' "n Elai' "n\ (the Mount of Olives), though some MSS. have Olivet in Lu 19:29; 21:37. Josephus (_Ant_. VII. 9, 2) has it also and the papyri (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 170). {A sabbath day's journey off} (\Sabbatou ech' "n hodon\). Luke only says here that Olivet is a Sabbath day's journey from Jerusalem, not that Jesus was precisely that distance when he ascended. In the Gospel Luke (24:50) states that Jesus led them "over against" (\he' s pros\) Bethany (about two miles or fifteen furlongs). The top of Olivet is six furlongs or three-fourths of a mile. The Greek idiom here is "having a journey of a Sabbath" after "which is nigh unto Jerusalem" (\ho estin eggus Ierousal' m\), note the periphrastic construction. Why Luke mentions this item for Gentile readers in this form is not known, unless it was in his Jewish source. See Ex 16:29; Nu 35:5; Jos 3:4. But it does not contradict what he says in Lu 24:50, where he does not say that Jesus led them all the way to Bethany.

1:13 {Into the upper chamber} (\eis to huper“ion\). The upstairs or upper room (\huper\ is upper or over, the adjective huper“ios\), the room upstairs where the women staid in Homer, then a room up under the flat roof for retirement or prayer (Ac 9:37,39), sometimes a large third story room suitable for gatherings (Ac 20:9). It is possible, even probable, that this is the "large upper room" (\an“geon mega\) of Mr 14:15; Lu 22:12. The Vulgate has _coenaculum_ for both words. The word is used in the N.T. only in Acts. It was in a private house as in Lu 22:11 and not in the temple as Lu 24:53 might imply, "continually" (\dia pantos\) these words probably meaning on proper occasions. {They were abiding} (\^san katamenontes\). Periphrastic imperfect active. Perfective use of \kata\, to abide permanently. It is possible that this is the house of Mary the mother of John Mark where the disciples later met for prayer (Ac 12:12). Here alone in the N.T., though old compound. Some MSS. here read \paramenontes\. This could mean constant residence, but most likely frequent resort for prayer during these days, some being on hand all the time as they came and went. {Simon the Zealot} (\Simon ho Z^l“t^s\). Called Simon the Cananaean (\ho Cananaios\) in Mt 10:4, Mr 3:18, but Zealot in Lu 6:16 as here giving the Greek equivalent of the Aramaic word because Luke has Gentiles in mind. The epithet (member of the party of Zealots) clung to him after he became an apostle and distinguishes him from Simon Peter. See Vol. I on the Gospel of Matthew for discussion of the four lists of the apostles. {Judas the son of James} (\Joudas Iak“bou\). Literally, Judas of James, whether son or brother (cf. Jude 1:1) we do not really know. "Of James" is added to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot (Joh 14:22). However we take it, he must be identified with the Thaddaeus (=Lebbaeus) of Mark and Matthew to make the list in the third group identical. No name appears in Acts for that of Judas Iscariot.

1:14 {With one accord} (\homothumadon\). Old adverb in \-don\ from adjective \homothumos\ and that from \homos\, same, and \thumos\, mind or spirit, with the same mind or spirit. Common in ancient Greek and papyri. In the N.T. eleven times in Acts and nowhere else save Ro 15:6. See Mt 18:19. {Continued} (\^san proskarterountes\). Periphrastic imperfect active of \proskartere“\, old verb from \pros\ (perfective use) and \kartere“\ from \karteros\, strong, steadfast, like the English "carry on." Already in Mr 3:9 which see and several times in Acts and Paul's Epistles. They "stuck to" the praying (\tî proseuchî\, note article) for the promise of the Father till the answer came. {With the women} (\sun gunaixin\). Associative instrumental case plural of \gun^\ after \sun\. As one would expect when praying was the chief work on hand. More women certainly included than in Lu 8:2; Mr 15:40f.; Mt 27:55f.; Lu 23:49; Mr 15:47; Mt 27:61; Lu 23:55f.; Mr 16:1; Mt 28:1; Lu 24:1f.; Joh 20:1, 11-18; Mt 28:9f. There were probably other women also whose testimony was no longer scouted as it had been at first. Codex Bezae adds here "and children." {And Mary the mother of Jesus} (\kai Mariam tî mîtri tou I'sou\). A delicate touch by Luke that shows Mary with her crown of glory at last. She had come out of the shadow of death with the song in her heart and with the realization of the angel's promise and the prophecy of Simeon. It was a blessed time for Mary. {With his brethren} (\sun tois adelphois autou\). With his brothers, it should be translated. They had once disbelieved in him (Joh 7:5). Jesus had appeared to James (1Co 15:7) and now it is a happy family of believers including the mother and brothers (half-brothers, literally) of Jesus. They continue in prayer for the power from on high.

1:15 {Brethren} (\adelph“n\). Codex Bezae has "disciples." {Multitude of persons} (\ochlos onomat“n\). Literally, multitude of names. This Hebraistic use of \onoma\=person occurs in the LXX (Nu 1:2; 18:20; 3:40,43; 26:53) and in Re 3:4; 11:13. {Together} (\epi to auto\). The word "gathered" is not in the Greek here, but it does occur in Mt 22:34 and that is undoubtedly the idea in Lu 17:35 as in Ac 2:1,44,47; 1Co 11:20; 14:23. So also here. They were in the same place (\to auto\). {About a hundred and twenty} (\h“s hekatôn eikosi\). A crowd for "the upper room." No special significance in the number 120, just the number there.

1:16 {Brethren} (\andres adelphoi\). Literally, men, brethren or brother men. More dignified and respectful than just "brethren." Demosthenes sometimes said \Andres Ath^naioi\. Cf. our "gentlemen and fellow-citizens." Women are included in this address though \andres\ refers only to men. {It was needful} (\edei\). Imperfect tense of the impersonal \dei\ with the infinitive clause (first aorist passive) and the accusative of general reference as a loose subject. Peter here assumes that Jesus is the Messiah and finds scripture illustrative of the treachery of Judas. He applies it to Judas and quotes the two passages in verse 20 (Ps 69:25; 109:8). The Holy Spirit has not yet come upon them, but Peter feels moved to interpret the situation. He feels that his mind is opened by Jesus (Lu 24:45). It is a logical, not a moral, necessity that Peter points out. Peter here claims the Holy Spirit as speaking in the scriptures as he does in 2Pe 1:21. His description of Judas as "guide" (hōd'gou) to those who seized (sullabousin) Jesus is that of the base traitor that he was. This very verb occurs in Lu 22:54 of the arrest of Jesus.

1:17 {Was numbered} (kat'arithmenos n). Periphrastic past perfect passive indicative of katarithme“, old verb, but here only in the N.T. (perfective use of kata). {Received his portion} (elachen ton kl'ron). Second aorist active indicative of lagchan“, old verb, to obtain by lot as in Lu 1:9; Joh 19:24, especially by divine appointment as here and 2Pe 2:1. Kl'ros also means lot, an object used in casting lots (Ac 1:26), or what is obtained by lot as here and 8:21, of eternal salvation (Ac 26:18; Col 1:12), of persons chosen by divine appointment (1Pe 5:3). From this latter usage the Latin _cleros, clericus_, our clergy, one chosen by divine lot. So Peter says that Judas "obtained by lot the lot of this ministry" (diakonias) which he had when he betrayed Jesus. The Master chose him and gave him his opportunity.

1:18 {Now this man} (Houtos men oun). Note men oun again without a corresponding de as in 1:6. Verses 18,19 are a long parenthesis of Luke by way of explanation of the fate of Judas. In verse 20 Peter resumes and quotes the scripture to which he referred in verse 16. {Obtained} (ekt'sato). First aorist middle indicative of ктаομαι, to acquire, only in the middle, to get for oneself. With the covenant money for the betrayal, acquired it indirectly apparently according to Mt 26:14-16; 27:3-8 which see. {Falling headlong} (pr'n's genomenos). Attic form usually pran's. The word means, not "headlong," but "flat on the face" as opposed to huptios on the back (Hackett). Hackett observes that the place suits admirably the idea that Judas hung himself (Mt 27:5) and, the rope breaking, fell flat on his face and {burst asunder in the midst} (elak'sen mesos). First aorist active indicative of lask“ old verb (here only in the N.T.), to clang, to crack, to crash, like a falling tree. Aristophanes uses it of crashing bones. \Mesos\ is predicate nominative referring to Judas. {Gushed out} (\exechuth^). First aorist passive indicative of \ekche^, to pour out.

1:19 {Language} (\dialekt^i). Not a dialect of the Greek, but a different language, the Aramaic. So also in 2:6; 21:40. \Dialektos\ is from \dialegomai, to converse, to speak between two (\dia). {Akeldama} (\Hakeldamach). This Aramaic word Peter explains as "the field of blood." Two traditions are preserved: one in Mt 27:7 which explains that the priests purchased this potter's field with the money which Judas flung down as the price of the blood of Jesus. The other in Acts describes it as the field of blood because Judas poured out his blood there. Hackett and Knowling argue that both views can be true. "The ill-omened name could be used with a double emphasis" (Hackett).

1:20 {For it is written} (\gegraptai gar). Luke here returns to the address of Peter interrupted by verses 18,19. Perfect passive indicative, the usual idiom in quoting scripture, stands written. Ps 69 is often quoted as Messianic in Matthew and John. {His habitation} (\h^ epaulis autou). Only here in the N.T., a country house, cottage, cabin. {His office} (\t^ n episkop^ n autou). Our word bishopric (Authorized Version) is from this word, office of bishop (\episcopos). Only that is not the idea here, but over-seership (\epi, skope^) or office as in 1Pe 2:12. It means to visit and to inspect, to look over. The ecclesiastical sense comes later (1Ti 3:1).

1:21 {Must} (\dei). Present necessity corresponding to the old necessity (\edei) about Judas (verse 16). This sentence in verses 21,22 begins with \dei. {That} (\h^ i). Locative case of the relative attracted to the case of the antecedent. {Went in and went out} (\eis^ lthen kai ex^ lthen). Constative aorist active. {With us} (\eph' h^ mas). {Over us}, the margin has it. But the full phrase would be \eph' h^ mas kai aph' h^ m^ n. He came to us and went from us (Knowling).

1:22 {Beginning} (\arxamenos). Aorist middle participle of \arch^, agreeing (nominative) with \ho kurios I^ sous (the Lord Jesus). The ministry of Jesus began with the ministry of John. Strictly speaking \arxamenos\ should be the accusative and agree with \martura\ (witness) in verse 22, but the construction is a bit free. The ministry of Jesus began with the baptism of John and lasted until the Ascension. {A witness with us of his resurrection} (\martura t^s anastase“s autou sun h^{min}\). This Peter considers the essential thing in a successor to Judas. The one chosen should be a personal witness who can speak from his own experience of the ministry, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus. One can easily see that this qualification will soon put an end to those who bear such personal testimony.

1:23 {They put forward two} (\est^{san duo}\). First aorist active indicative (transitive) of \hist^{mi}\ (not intransitive second aorist, though same form in the third person plural). Somebody nominated two names, Justus and Matthias.

1:24 {Show us the one whom thou hast chosen} (\anadeixon hon exelex“\). First aorist active imperative of \anadeiknumi\, to show up, make plain. First aorist middle indicative second person singular of \ekleg“\, to pick out, choose, select. In this prayer they assume that God has made a choice. They only wish to know his will. They call God the {heart-searcher} or {heart-knower} (\kardiogn“sta\, vocative singular), a late word, here and Ac 15:8 only in the N.T. Modern physicians have delicate apparatus for studying the human heart.

1:25 {Apostleship} (\apostol^s\). Jesus had called the twelve apostles. An old word for sending away, then for a release, then the office and dignity of an apostle (Ac 1:25; Ro 1:5; 1Co 9:2; Gal 2:8). {To his own place} (\eis ton topon ton idion\). A bold and picturesque description of the destiny of Judas worthy of Dante's _Inferno_. There is no doubt in Peter's mind of the destiny of Judas nor of his own guilt. He made ready his own berth and went to it.

1:26 {He was numbered} (\sunkateps^{phisth}\). To the Jews the lot did not suggest gambling, but "the O.T. method of learning the will of Jehovah" (Furneaux). The two nominations made a decision necessary and they appealed to God in this way. This double compound \sunkataps^{phiz}“\ occurs here alone in the N.T. and elsewhere only in Plutarch (_Them_, 21) in the middle voice for condemning with others. \Sunps^{phiz}“\ occurs in the middle voice in Ac 19:19 for counting up money and also in Aristophanes. \Ps^{phiz}“\ with \dapanⁿ\ occurs in Lu 14:28 for counting the cost and in Re 13:18 for "counting" the number of the beast. The ancients used pebbles (\ps^{phoi}\) in voting, black for condemning, white (Re 2:17) in acquitting. Here it is used in much the same sense as \katarithme“\ in verse 17.

2:1 {Was now come} (\en t'“i sunpl^{rousthai}\). Luke's favourite idiom of \en\ with the articular present infinitive passive and the accusative of general reference, "in the being fulfilled completely (perfective use of \sun-\) as to the day of Pentecost." Common verb, but only in Luke in N.T. In literal sense of filling a boat in Lu 8:23, about days in Lu 9:51 as here. Whether the disciples expected the coming of the Holy Spirit on this day we do not know. Blass holds that the present tense shows that the day had not yet come. It is a Hebrew idiom (Ex 7:25) and Luke may mean that the day of Pentecost was not yet over, was still going on, though Hackett takes it for the interval (fifty days) between Passover and Pentecost. Apparently this day of Pentecost fell on the Jewish Sabbath (our Saturday). It was the feast of first fruits. {All together in one place} (\pantes homou epi to auto\). All together in the same place. Note \homou\ here (correct text), not \homothumadon\ as in 1:14, and so a bit of tautology.

2:2 {Suddenly} (\aphn[“]\). Old adverb, but in the N.T. only in Acts (2:2; 16:26; 28:6). Kin to \exaiphn^{^s}\ (Ac 22:61). {A sound} (\[^]chos\). Our \echo\. Old word, already in Lu 4:37 for rumour and Lu 21:25 for the roar of the sea. It was not wind, but a roar or reverberation "as of the rushing of a mighty wind" (\h[“]sper pheromen^{^s} pno^{^s} biaias\). This is not a strict translation nor is it the genitive absolute. It was "an echoing sound as of a mighty wind borne violently" (or rushing along like the whirr of a tornado). \Pno[^]\ (wind) is used here (in the N.T. only here and 17:25 though old word) probably because of the use of \pneuma\ in verse 4 of the Holy Spirit. In Joh 3:5-8 \pneuma\ occurs for both wind and Spirit. {Filled} (\epl^r“sen\). "As a bath is filled with water, that they might be baptized with the Holy Ghost, in fulfilment of Ac 1:5" (Canon Cook). {They were sitting} (\[^]san kath[^]menoi\). Periphrastic imperfect middle of \kath[^]mai\.

2:3 {Parting asunder} (\diamerizomenai\). Present middle (or passive) participle of \diameriz[“]\, old verb, to cleave asunder, to cut in pieces as a butcher does meat (aorist passive in Lu

11:17f.). So middle here would mean, parting themselves asunder or distributing themselves. The passive voice would be "being distributed." The middle is probably correct and means that "the fire-like appearance presented itself at first, as it were, in a single body, and then suddenly parted in this direction and that; so that a portion of it rested on each of those present" (Hackett). The idea is not that each tongue was cloven, but each separate tongue looked like fire, not real fire, but looking like (h"sei", as if) fire. The audible sign is followed by a visible one (Knowing). "Fire had always been, with the Jews, the symbol of the Divine presence (cf. Ex 3:2; De 5:4). No symbol could be more fitting to express the Spirit's purifying energy and refining energy" (Furneaux). The Baptist had predicted a baptizing by the Messiah in the Holy Spirit and in fire (Mt 3:11). {It sat} (ekathisen). Singular verb here, though plural *"pth[^]san" with tongues (gl"ssai"). A tongue that looked like fire sat upon each one.

2:4 {With other tongues} (heterais gl"ssais"). Other than their native tongues. Each one began to speak in a language that he had not acquired and yet it was a real language and understood by those from various lands familiar with them. It was not jargon, but intelligible language. Jesus had said that the gospel was to go to all the nations and here the various tongues of earth were spoken. One might conclude that this was the way in which the message was to be carried to the nations, but future developments disprove it. This is a third miracle (the sound, the tongues like fire, the untaught languages). There is no blinking the fact that Luke so pictures them. One need not be surprised if this occasion marks the fulfilment of the Promise of the Father. But one is not to confound these miraculous signs with the Holy Spirit. They are merely proof that he has come to carry on the work of his dispensation. The gift of tongues came also on the house of Cornelius at Caesarea (Ac 10:44-47; 11:15-17), the disciples of John at Ephesus (Ac 19:6), the disciples at Corinth (1Co 14:1-33). It is possible that the gift appeared also at Samaria (Ac 8:18). But it was not a general or a permanent gift. Paul explains in 1Co 14:22 that "tongues" were a sign to unbelievers and were not to be exercised unless one was present who understood them and could translate them. This restriction disposes at once of the modern so-called tongues which are nothing but jargon and hysteria. It so happened that here on this occasion at Pentecost there were Jews from all parts of the world, so that some one would understand one tongue and some another without an interpreter such as was needed at Corinth. The experience is identical in all four instances and they are not for edification or instruction, but for adoration and wonder and worship. {As the Spirit gave them utterance} (\kath“s to pneuma edidou apophtheggesthai autois). This is precisely what Paul claims in 1Co 12:10,28, but all the same without an interpreter the gift was not to be exercised (1Co 14:6-19). Paul had the gift of tongues, but refused to exercise it except as it would be understood. Note the imperfect tense here (\edidou). Perhaps they did not all speak at once, but one after another.

\Apophtheggesthai is a late verb (LXX of prophesying, papyri). Lucian uses it of the ring of a vessel when it strikes a reef. It is used of eager, elevated, impassioned utterance. In the N.T. only here, verse 14; 26:25. \Apophthegm is from this verb.

2:5 {Were dwelling} (\^san katoikountes). Periphrastic imperfect active indicative. Usually \katoike“ means residence in a place (4:16; 7:24; 9:22,32) as in verse 14 (Luke 13:4). Perhaps some had come to Jerusalem to live while others were here only temporarily, for the same word occurs in verse 9 of those who dwell in Mesopotamia, etc. {Devout} (\eulabeis). Reverent (\eu\, well, \lamban“\, to take). See on Lu 2:25 like Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel or hoping to die and be buried in the Holy City and also Ac 8:2.

2:6 {When this sound was heard} (\genomen^s t^s ph“n^s taut^s). Genitive absolute with aorist middle participle. Note \ph“n^ this time, not \^cho as in verse 1. \Ph“n^ originally meant sound as of the wind (Joh 3:8) or an instrument (1Co 14:7,8,10), then voice of men. The meaning seems to be that the excited "other tongues" of verse 4 were so loud that the noise drew the crowd together. The house where the 120 were may have been (Hackett) on one of the avenues leading to the temple. {Were confounded} (\sunechuth^). First aorist passive indicative of \sunche“ or \sunchun“, to pour together precisely like the Latin _confundo_, to confound. The Vulgate has it _mente confusa est_. It is an old verb, but in the N.T. only in Acts five times (2:6; 9:22; 19:32; 21:27,31). {In his own language} (\t^i idi fi dialekt“i). Locative case. Each one could understand his own language when he heard that. Every one that came heard somebody speaking in his native tongue.

2:7 {Were amazed} (\existanto). Imperfect middle of \exist^mi, to stand out of themselves, wide-open astonishment. {Marvelled} (\ethaumazon). Imperfect active. The wonder grew and grew. {Galileans} (\Galilaioi). There were few followers of Jesus as yet from Jerusalem. The Galileans spoke a rude Aramaic (Mr 14:70) and probably crude Greek vernacular also. They were not strong on language and yet these are the very people who now show such remarkable linguistic powers. These people who have come together are all Jews and therefore know Aramaic and the vernacular _Koin,_, but there were various local tongues "wherein we were born" (en hⁱ egennthmen). An example is the Lycaonian (Ac 14:11). These Galilean Christians are now heard speaking these various local tongues. The lists in verses 9-11 are not linguistic, but geographical and merely illustrate how widespread the Dispersion (\Diaspora) of the Jews was as represented on this occasion. Jews were everywhere, these "Jews among the nations" (Ac 21:21). Page notes four main divisions here: (1) The Eastern or Babylonian, like the Parthians, Medes, Elamites, Mesopotamians. (2) The Syrian like Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia. (3) The Egyptian like Egypt, Libya, Cyrene. (4) The Roman. {Jews and proselytes} (\pros^{lutoi}). These last from \proserchomai, to come to, to join, Gentile converts to Judaism (circumcision, baptism, sacrifice). This proselyte baptism was immersion as is shown by I. Abrahams (_Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels_, p. 38). Many remained uncircumcised and were called proselytes of the gate.

2:11 {Cretes and Arabians}. These two groups "seem to have been added to the list as an afterthought" (Knowling). Crete is an island to itself and Arabia was separate also though near Judea and full of Jews. The point is not that each one of these groups of Jews spoke a different language, but that wherever there was a local tongue they heard men speaking in it. {We do hear them speaking} (akouomen lalountⁿ autⁿ). Genitive case \autⁿ with \akouⁿ the participle \lalountⁿ agreeing with \autⁿ, a sort of participial idiom of indirect discourse (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1040ff.). {The mighty works} (ta megaleia). Old adjective for magnificent. In LXX, but only here (not genuine in Lu 1:49) in the N.T. Cf. 2Pe 1:16 for \megaleiot^s (majesty).

2:12 {Were perplexed} (di^{porounto}). Imperfect middle of \diaporeⁿ (\dia\, |a\ privative, \poros) to be wholly at a loss. Old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke and Acts. They continued amazed (\existanto) and puzzled. {What meaneth this?} (\Ti thelei touto einai). Literally, what does this wish to be?

2:13 {Mocking} (\diachleuazontes). Old verb, but only here in the N.T., though the simple verb (without \dia) in 17:32. \Chleu^ means a joke. {With new wine} (\gleukous). Sweet wine, but intoxicating. Sweet wine kept a year was very intoxicating. Genitive case here after \memest "menoi eisin" (periphrastic perfect passive indicative), old verb \mesto "\, only here in the N.T. Tanked up with new wine, state of fulness.

2:14 {Standing up with the eleven} (\statheis sun tois hendeka). Took his stand with the eleven including Matthias, who also rose up with them, and spoke as their spokesman, a formal and impressive beginning. The Codex Bezae has "ten apostles." Luke is fond of this pictorial use of \statheis (first aorist passive participle of \hist^mi) as seen nowhere else in the N.T. (Lu 18:11,40; 19:8; Ac 5:20; 17:22; 27:21). {Lifted up his voice} (\ep^ren t^ n ph^ n^ n autou). This phrase only in Luke in the N.T. (Lu 11:29; Ac 2:14; 14:11; 22:22), but is common in the old writers. First aorist active indicative of \epair "\. The large crowd and the confusion of tongues demanded loud speaking. "This most solemn, earnest, yet sober speech" (Bengel). Codex Bezae adds "first" after "voice." Peter did it to win and hold attention. {Give ear unto my words} (\en^tisasthe ta rh^mata mou). Late verb in LXX and only here in the N.T. First aorist middle from \en^tizomai (\en, ous\, ear) to give ear to, receive into the ear. People's ears differ greatly, but in public speech they have to be reached through the ear. That puts an obligation on the speaker and also on the auditors who should sit where they can hear with the ears which they have, an obligation often overlooked.

2:15 {As ye suppose} (\h^s humeis hupolambanete). Note use of \humeis (ye) for decided emphasis. {The third hour} (*\h^ra trit^ *). Three o'clock in the day Jewish time, nine Roman. Drunkenness belongs to the night (1Th 5:7). It was a quick, common sense reply, and complete answer to their suspicion.

2:16 {This is that which hath been spoken by the prophet Joel} (\touto estin to eir^menon dia tou proph^tou I^ l). Positive interpretation of the supernatural phenomena in the light of the Messianic prophecy of Joe 2:28-32. Peter's mind is now opened by the Holy Spirit to understand the Messianic prophecy and the fulfilment right before their eyes. Peter now has spiritual insight and moral courage. The {power} (\dunamis) of the Holy Spirit has come upon him as he proceeds to give the first interpretation of the life and work of Jesus Christ since his Ascension. It is also the first formal apology for Christianity to a public audience. Peter rises to the height of his powers in this remarkable sermon. Jesus had foretold that he would be a Rock and now he is no longer shale, but a solid force for aggressive Christianity. He follows here in verses 17-21 closely the LXX text of Joel and then applies the passage to the present emergency (22-24).

2:17 {In the last days} (\en tais eschatais h^merais). Joel does not have precisely these words, but he defines "those days" as being "the day of the Lord" (cf. Isa 2:2; Mic 4:1). {I will pour forth} (\ekche). Future active indicative of \ekche. This future like \edomai and \piomai is without tense sign, probably like the present in the futuristic sense (Robertson, Grammar, p. 354). Westcott and Hort put a different accent on the future, but the old Greek had no accent. The old Greek had \ekcheus. This verb means to pour out. {Of my Spirit} (\apo tou pneumatos). This use of \apo (of) is either because of the variety in the manifestations of the Spirit (1Co 12) or because the Spirit in his entirety remains with God (Holtzmann, Wendt). But the Hebrew has it: "I will pour out my Spirit" without the partitive idea in the LXX. {And your daughters} (\kai hai thugateres h-m^n). Anna is called a prophetess in Lu 2:36 and the daughters of Philip prophesy (Ac 21:9) and verse 18 (handmaidens). See also 1Co 11:5 (\proph^tousa). {Visions} (\horaseis). Late word for the more common \horama, both from \hora, to see. In Re 4:3 it means appearance, but in Re 9:17 as here an ecstatic revelation or vision. {Dream dreams} (\enupniois enupniasth^sontai). Shall dream with (instrumental case) dreams. First future passive of \enupniaz from \enupnios (\en and \hupnos, in sleep), a common late word. Only here in the N.T. (this from Joel as all these verses 17-21 are) and Jude 1:8. {Yea and} (\kai ge). Intensive particle \ge added to \kai (and), an emphatic addition (=Hebrew _vegam_). {Servants} (\doulous), {handmaidens} (\doulas). Slaves, actual slaves of men. The humblest classes will receive the Spirit of God (cf. 1Co 1:26-31). But the word "prophecy" here is not in the LXX (or the Hebrew).

2:19 {Wonders} (\terata). Apparently akin to the verb \t^re^“, to watch like a wonder in the sky, {miracle} (\miraculum), marvel, portent. In the New Testament the word occurs only in the plural and only in connection with \s^meia (signs) as here and in verse 43. But {signs} (\s^meia) here is not in the LXX. See on Mt 11:20. In verse 22 all three words occur together: powers, wonders, signs (\dunamesi, terasi, s^meiois). {As above} (\an^“). This word is not in the LXX nor is "beneath" (\kat^“), both probably being added to make clearer the contrast between heaven and earth. {Blood and fire and vapour of smoke} (\haima kai pur kai atmida kapnou). A chiasm as these words illustrate bloodshed and destruction by fire as signs here on earth.

2:20 {Shall be turned} (\metastroph^setai). Second future passive of \metastreph^“, common verb, but only three times in the N.T. (Ac 2:20 from Joel; Jas 4:9; Ga 1:7). These are the "wonders" or portents of verse 19. It is worth noting that Peter interprets these "portents" as fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost, though no such change of the sun into darkness or of the moon into blood is recorded. Clearly Peter does not interpret the symbolism of Joel in literal terms. This method of Peter may be of some service in the Book of Revelation where so many apocalyptic symbols occur as well as in the great Eschatological Discourse of Jesus in Mt 24,25. In Mt 24:6,29 Jesus had spoken of wars on earth and wonders in heaven. {Before the day of the Lord come, that great and notable day} (*\prin elthein h^meran kuriou t^ n megal^ n kai epiphan^ *). The use of \prin with the infinitive and the accusative of general reference is a regular Greek idiom. The use of the adjectives with the article is also good Greek, though the article is not here repeated as in 1:25. The Day of the Lord is a definite conception without the article. {Notable} (*\epiphan^ ) is the same root as epiphany (\epiphaneia*) used of the Second Coming of Christ (2Th 2:8; 1Ti 6:14; 2Ti 4:1; Tit 2:13). It translates here the Hebrew word for "terrible." In the Epistles the Day of the Lord is applied (Knowling) to the Coming of Christ for judgment (1Th 5:2; 1Co 1:8; 2Co 1:14; Php 1:10).

2:21 {Shall call on} (\epikales^tai). First aorist middle subjunctive of \epikale^“, common verb, to call to, middle voice for oneself in need. Indefinite relative clause with \ean and so subjunctive, punctiliar idea, in any single case, and so aorist.

2:22 {Hear these words} (\akousate tous logous toutous). Do it now (aorist tense). With unerring aim Peter has found the solution for the phenomena. He has found the key to God's work on this day in his words through Joel. {as ye yourselves know} (\kath“s autoi oidate). Note \autoi for emphasis. Peter calls the audience to witness that his statements are true concerning "Jesus the Nazarene." He wrought his miracles by the power of God in the midst of these very people here present.

2:23 {Him} (\touton). "This one," resumptive and emphatic object of "did crucify and slay." {Being delivered up} (\ekdoton). Verbal adjective from \ekdid“mi, to give out or over. Old word, but here only in the N.T. Delivered up by Judas, Peter means. {By the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God} (\t“i h“rismen“i boul“i kai progn“s“i tou theou). Instrumental case. Note both purpose (\boul“) and foreknowledge (\progn“sis) of God and "determined" (\h“rismen“, perfect passive participle, state of completion). God had willed the death of Jesus (Joh 3:16) and the death of Judas (Ac 1:16), but that fact did not absolve Judas from his responsibility and guilt (Lu 22:22). He acted as a free moral agent. {By the hand} (\dia cheiros). Luke is fond of these figures (hand, face, etc.) very much like the Hebrew though the vernacular of all languages uses them. {Lawless men} (\anom“n). Men without law, who recognize no law for their conduct, like men in high and low stations today who defy the laws of God and man. Old word, very common in the LXX. {Ye did crucify} (\prosp“xantes). First aorist active participle of \prosp“gnumi, rare compound word in Dio Cassius and here only in the N.T. One must supply \t“i staur“i and so it means "fastened to the cross," a graphic picture like Paul's "nailed to the cross" (\pros“l“sas t“i staur“i) in Col 2:14. {Did slay} (\aneilate). Second aorist active indicative with first aorist vowel \a instead of \o as is common in the _Koin, _. This verb \anaire“, to take up, is often used for kill as in Ac 12:2. Note Peter's boldness now under the power of the Holy Spirit. He charges the people to their faces with the death of Christ.

2:24 {God raised up} (\ho theos anest“sen). _Est hoc summum orationis_ (Blass). Apparently this is the first public proclamation to others than believers of the fact of the Resurrection of Jesus. "At a time it was still possible to test the statement, to examine witnesses, to expose fraud, the Apostle openly proclaimed the Resurrection as a fact, needing no evidence, but known to his hearers" (Furneaux). {The pangs of death} (\tas “dinas tou thanatou\). Codex Bezae has "Hades" instead of death. The LXX has \“dinas thanatou\ in Ps 18:4, but the Hebrew original means "snares" or "traps" or "cords" of death where sheol and death are personified as hunters laying snares for prey. How Peter or Luke came to use the old Greek word \“dinas\ (birth pangs) we do not know. Early Christian writers interpreted the Resurrection of Christ as a birth out of death. "Loosing" (lusas\) suits better the notion of "snares" held a prisoner by death, but birth pangs do bring deliverance to the mother also. {Because} (kathoti\). This old conjunction (kata, hoti\) occurs in the N.T. only in Luke's writings. {That he should be holden} (krateisthai auton\). Infinitive present passive with accusative of general reference and subject of \^n adunaton\. The figure goes with "loosed" (lusas\) above.

2:25 {Concerning him} (eis auton\). Peter interprets Ps 16:8-11 as written by David and with reference to the Messiah. There is but one speaker in this Psalm and both Peter here and Paul in Ac 13:36 make it the Messiah. David is giving his own experience which is typical of the Messiah (Knowling). {I beheld} (proora“m^n\). Imperfect middle without augment of \proora“, common verb, but only twice in the N.T., to see beforehand (Ac 21:29) or to see right before one as here. This idea of \pro- is made plainer by "before my face" (en“pion mou\). {On my right hand} (ek dexi“n mou\). The Lord Jehovah like a defender or advocate stands at David's right hand as in trials in court (Ps 109:31). {That} (hina\) here is almost result. {Moved} (saleuth“\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \saleu“, to shake like an earthquake.

2:26 {Was glad} (\^uphranth^). First aorist (timeless here like the Hebrew perfect) passive indicative of \euphrain“\ (cf. Lu 15:32). Timeless also is "rejoiced" (\^galliasato\). {Shall dwell} (katask^n“sei\). Shall tabernacle, pitch a tent, make one's abode (cf. Mt 13:32). See on ^Mt 8:20 about \katask^n“seis\ (nests) {In hope} (ep' elpidi\). On hope, the hope of the resurrection.

2:27 {In Hades} (eis Hfid^n\). Hades is the unseen world, Hebrew Sheol, but here it is viewed as death itself "considered as a rapacious destroyer" (Hackett). It does not mean the place of punishment, though both heaven and the place of torment are in Hades (Lu 16:23). "Death and Hades are strictly parallel terms:

he who is dead is in Hades" (Page). The use of \eis\ here=en\ is common enough. The Textus Receptus here reads \eis Hfidou\ (genitive case) like the Attic idiom with \domon\ (abode) understood. "Hades" in English is not translation, but transliteration. The phrase in the Apostles' Creed, "descended into hell" is from this passage in Acts (Hades, not Gehenna). The English word "hell" is Anglo-Saxon from \helan\, to hide, and was used in the Authorized Version to translate both Hades as here and Gehenna as in Mt 5:22. {Thy Holy One} (\ton hosion sou\). Peter applies these words to the Messiah. {Corruption} (\diaphthoran\). The word can mean destruction or putrefaction from \diaphtheir"\, old word, but in N.T. only here and Ac 13:34-37. The Hebrew word in Ps 16 can mean also the pit or the deep.

2:28 {The ways of life} (\hodous z""s\). Though dead God will show him the ways back to life.

2:29 {I may say} (\exon eipein\). Supply \estin\ before \exon\, periphrastic present indicative of \exeimi\, to allow, permit. The Authorized Version has "Let me speak," supplying \esto\ present imperative. {Freely} (\meta parr^sias\). Telling it all (\pan, rh^sia\ from \eipon\, to speak), with fulness, with boldness. Luke is fond of the phrase (as in 4:13). It is a new start for Simon Peter, full of boldness and courage. {The patriarch} (\tou patriarchou\). Transliteration of the word, from \patria\, family, and \arch"\, to rule, the founder of a family. Late word in LXX. Used of Abraham (Heb 7:4), of the twelve sons of Jacob as founders of the several tribes (Ac 7:8), and here of David as head of the family from whom the Messiah comes. {Was buried} (\etaph^). Second aorist passive indicative of \thapt"\. His tomb was on Mt. Zion where most of the kings were buried. The tomb was said to have fallen into ruins in the time of the Emperor Hadrian. Josephus (_Ant_. XVI. 7, 1) attributes most of the misfortunes of Herod's family to the fact that he tried to rifle the tomb of David.

2:31 {Foreseeing} (\proid^"n\). Second aorist active participle. Did it as a prophet. {Of the Christ} (\tou Christou\). Of the Messiah. See under verse 32. This is a definite statement by Peter that David knew that in Ps 16 he was describing the resurrection of the Messiah.

2:32 {This Jesus} (\touton ton I^soun\). Many of the name

"Jesus," but he means the one already called "the Nazarene" (verse 22) and foretold as the Messiah in Ps 16 and raised from the dead by God in proof that he is the Messiah (2:24,32), "this Jesus whom ye crucified" (verse 36). Other terms used of him in the Acts are the Messiah, verse 31, the one whom God "anointed" (Ac 10:38), as in Joh 1:41, Jesus Christ (9:34). In 2:36 God made this Jesus Messiah, in 3:20 the Messiah Jesus, in 17:3 Jesus is the Messiah, in 18:5 the Messiah is Jesus, in 24:24 Christ Jesus. {Whereof} (\hou). Or "of whom." Either makes sense and both are true. Peter claims the whole 120 as personal witnesses to the fact of the Resurrection of Jesus from the dead and they are all present as Peter calls them to witness on the point. In Galilee over 500 had seen the Risen Christ at one time (1Co 15:6) most of whom were still living when Paul wrote. Thus the direct evidence for the resurrection of Jesus piles up in cumulative force.

2:33 {By the right hand of God} (\t^i dexifi tou theou). This translation makes it the instrumental case. The margin has it "at" instead of "by," that is the locative case. And it will make sense in the true dative case, "to the right hand of God." These three cases came to have the same form in Greek. Ro 8:24 furnishes another illustration of like ambiguity (\t^i elpidi), saved by hope, in hope, or for hope. Usually it is quite easy to tell the case when the form is identical. {Exalted} (\hups"theis). First aorist passive participle of \hupso", to lift up. Here both the literal and tropical sense occurs. Cf. Joh 12:32. {The promise of the Holy Spirit} (\t^n epaggelian tou pneumatou tou hagiou). The promise mentioned in 1:4 and now come true, consisting in the Holy Spirit "from the Father" (\para tou patros), sent by the Father and by the Son (Joh 15:26; 16:7). See also Ga 3:14. {He hath poured forth} (\execheen). Aorist active indicative of \ekche" the verb used by Joel and quoted by Peter already in verses 17,18. Jesus has fulfilled his promise. {This which ye see and hear} (\touto ho humeis kai blepete kai akouete). This includes the sound like the rushing wind, the tongues like fire on each of them, the different languages spoken by the 120. "The proof was before their eyes in this new energy from heaven" (Furneaux), a culminating demonstration that Jesus was the Messiah.

2:34 {Ascended not} (\ou--aneb^). It is more emphatic than that: For not David ascended into the heavens. Peter quotes Ps 110:1

as proof. No passage in the O.T. is so constantly quoted as Messianic as this. "St. Peter does not demand belief upon his own assertion, but he again appeals to the Scriptures, and to words which could not have received a fulfilment in the case of David" (Knowing). {Sit thou} (\kathou\). Late _Koin,_ form for earlier \kath^so\, present middle imperative second singular of \kath^mai\.

2:35 {Till I make} (\he"s an th"). Second aorist active subjunctive of \tith^mi\ with \an\ after \he"s\ for the future, a common Greek idiom. This dominion of Christ as Mediator will last till the plan of the kingdom is carried out (1Co 15:23-28).

Complete subjugation will come, perhaps referring to the custom of victorious kings placing their feet upon the necks of their enemies (Jos 10:24). {Therefore assuredly} (\Asphal"s oun\). Assuredly therefore, without any slip or trip (\asphal^s\ from a\ privative and sphall", to trip, to slip. Peter draws a powerfully pungent conclusion by the use of the adverb \asphal"s\ and the inferential conjunction \oun\.) Peter's closing sentence drives home the point of his sermon: "This very Jesus whom ye crucified (note \humeis\, strongly emphatic {ye}), him God made both Lord and Messiah" (\kai kurion kai Christon\), as David foretold in Ps 110 and as the events of this day have confirmed. The critics are disturbed over how Luke could have gotten the substance of this masterful address spoken on the spur of the moment with passion and power. They even say that Luke composed it for Peter and put the words in his mouth. If so, he made a good job of it. But Peter could have written out the notes of the address afterwards. Luke had plenty of chances to get hold of it from Peter or from others.

2:37 {They were pricked in their heart} (\katenug^san t^n kardian\). Second aorist indicative of \katanuss", a rare verb (LXX) to pierce, to sting sharply, to stun, to smite. Homer used it of horses dinting the earth with their hoofs. The substantive \katanuxis\ occurs in Ro 11:8. Here only in the N.T. It is followed here by the accusative of the part affected, the heart. {What shall we do?} (\Ti poi^s"men\). Deliberative subjunctive first aorist active. The sermon went home, they felt the sting of Peter's words, compunction (\compungo\). Codex Bezae adds: "Show us."

2:38 {Repent ye} (\metano^sate\). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative. Change your mind and your life. Turn right about and do it now. You crucified this Jesus. Now crown him in your hearts as Lord and Christ. This first. {And be baptized every one of you} (\kai baptisthēte hekastos hēmōn). Rather, "And let each one of you be baptized." Change of number from plural to singular and of person from second to third. This change marks a break in the thought here that the English translation does not preserve. The first thing to do is make a radical and complete change of heart and life. Then let each one be baptized after this change has taken place, and the act of baptism be performed "in the name of Jesus Christ" (\en tōi onomati Iēsou Christou). In accordance with the command of Jesus in Mt 28:19 (\eis to onoma). No distinction is to be insisted on between \eis to onoma and \en tōi onomati with \baptizēte since \eis and \en are really the same word in origin. In Ac 10:48 \en tōi onomati Iēsou Christou occurs, but \eis to \onoma in 8:16; 19:5. The use of \onoma means in the name or with the authority of one as \eis onoma prophētou (Mt 10:41) as a prophet, in the name of a prophet. In the Acts the full name of the Trinity does not occur in baptism as in Mt 28:19, but this does not show that it was not used. The name of Jesus Christ is the distinctive one in Christian baptism and really involves the Father and the Spirit. See on Mt 28:19 for discussion of this point. "Luke does not give the form of words used in baptism by the Apostles, but merely states the fact that they baptized those who acknowledged Jesus as Messiah or as Lord" (Page). {Unto the remission of your sins} (\eis aphesin tōn hamartiōn hēmōn). This phrase is the subject of endless controversy as men look at it from the standpoint of sacramental or of evangelical theology. In themselves the words can express aim or purpose for that use of \eis does exist as in 1Co 2:7 \eis doxan hēmōn (for our glory). But then another usage exists which is just as good Greek as the use of \eis for aim or purpose. It is seen in Mt 10:41 in three examples \eis onoma prophētou, dikaiou, mathētou where it cannot be purpose or aim, but rather the basis or ground, on the basis of the name of prophet, righteous man, disciple, because one is, etc. It is seen again in Mt 12:41 about the preaching of Jonah (\eis to kērugma Iēna). They repented because of (or at) the preaching of Jonah. The illustrations of both usages are numerous in the N.T. and the Koin. generally (Robertson, Grammar, p. 592). One will decide the use here according as he believes that baptism is essential to the remission of sins or not. My view is decidedly against the idea that Peter, Paul, or any one in the New Testament taught baptism as essential to the remission of sins or the means of securing such remission. So I understand Peter to be urging baptism on each of them who had already turned (repented) and for it to be done in the name of Jesus Christ on the basis of the forgiveness of sins which they had already received. {The gift of the Holy Ghost} (\t^n d^rean tou hagiou pneumatos). The gift consists (Ac 8:17) in the Holy Spirit (genitive of identification).

2:39 {The promise} (\h^ epaggelia). The promise made by Jesus (1:4) and foretold by Joel (verse 18). {To you} (\humin). You Jews. To your descendants, sons and daughters of verse 17. {To all that are afar off} (\pfsin tois eis makran.) The horizon widens and includes the Gentiles. Those "afar off" from the Jews were the heathen (Isa 49:1; 57:19; Eph 2:13,17). The rabbis so used it. {Shall call} (\an proskales^tai). First aorist middle subjunctive with \an in an indefinite relative clause, a perfectly regular construction. The Lord God calls men of every nation anywhere whether Jews or Gentiles. It may be doubted how clearly Peter grasped the significance of these words for he will have trouble over this very matter on the housetop in Joppa and in Caesarea, but he will see before long the full sweep of the great truth that he here proclaims under the impulse of the Holy Spirit. It was a great moment that Peter here reaches.

2:40 {With many other words} (\heterois logois pleiosin). Instrumental case. Not necessarily "different" (\heterois), but "further," showing that Luke does not pretend to give all that Peter said. This idea is also brought out clearly by \pleiosin ("more," not "many"), more than these given by Luke. {He testified} (\diemarturato). First aorist middle of \diamarturomai, old verb, to make solemn attestation or call to witness (perfective use of \dia), while \marture^a is to bear witness. Page insists that here it should be translated "protested solemnly" to the Jews as it seems to mean in Lu 16:28; Ac 20:23; 1Ti 5:21; 2Ti 2:14; 4:1. {And exhorted} (\kai parekalei). Imperfect active, kept on exhorting. {Save yourselves} (\s^th^te). First aorist passive of \s^z^a. Literally, Be ye saved. {Crooked} (\skolias). Old word, opposite of \orthos, straight. _Pravus_ the opposite of _rectus_, a perversity for turning off from the truth. Cf. Lu 9:41; Php 2:15.

2:41 {They then} (\Hoi men oun). A common phrase in Acts either without antithesis as in 1:6; 5:41; 8:4,25; 9:31; 11:19; 16:5; or with it as here, 8:25; 13:4; 14:3; 17:17; 23:31; 25:4. \Oun\ connects with what precedes as the result of Peter's sermon while \men\ points forward to what is to follow. {Were baptized} (ebaptisth^san\). First aorist passive indicative, constative aorist. Note that only those who had already received the word and were converted were baptized. {There were added} (proseteth^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \prostith^mi\, old verb to add, to join to. Luke means that the 3,000 were added to the 120 already enlisted. It is not stated they were all baptized by Peter or the twelve or all on the same day, though that is the natural implication of the language. The numerous pools in Jerusalem afforded ample opportunity for such wholesale baptizing and Hackett notes that the habit of orientals would place no obstacle in the way of the use of the public reservoirs. Furneaux warns us that all the 3,000 may not have been genuine converts and that many of them were pilgrims at the passover who returned home. {Souls} (psuchai\). Persons as in verse 43.

2:42 {They continued steadfastly} (^san proskarturountes\). Periphrastic active imperfect of \proskarture“\ as in Ac 1:14 (same participle in verse 46). {Fellowship} (koin“nifi\). Old word from \koin“nos\ (partner, sharer in common interest) and this from \koinos\ what is common to all. This partnership involves participation in, as the blood of Christ (Php 2:1) or co-operation in the work of the gospel (Php 1:5) or contribution for those in need (2Co 8:4; 9:13). Hence there is wide diversity of opinion concerning the precise meaning of \koin“nia\ in this verse. It may refer to the distribution of funds in verse 44 or to the oneness of spirit in the community of believers or to the Lord's Supper (as in 1Co 10:16) in the sense of communion or to the fellowship in the common meals or \agapae\ (love-feasts). {The breaking of bread} (t^i klasei tou artou\). The word \klasis\ is an old word, but used only by Luke in the N.T. (Lu 24:35; Ac 2:42), though the verb \kla“\ occurs in other parts of the N.T. as in verse 46. The problem here is whether Luke refers to the ordinary meal as in Lu 24:35 or to the Lord's Supper. The same verb \kla“\ is used of breaking bread at the ordinary meal (Lu 24:30) or the Lord's Supper (Lu 22:19). It is generally supposed that the early disciples attached so much significance to the breaking of bread at the ordinary meals, more than our saying grace, that they followed the meal with the Lord's Supper at first, a combination called \agapai\ or love-feasts. "There can be no doubt that the Eucharist at this period was preceded uniformly by a common repast, as was the case when the ordinance was instituted" (Hackett). This led to some abuses as in 1Co 11:20. Hence it is possible that what is referred to here is the Lord's Supper following the ordinary meal. "To simply explain \tⁱ klasei tou artou\ as='The Holy Communion' is to pervert the plain meaning of words, and to mar the picture of family life, which the text places before us as the ideal of the early believers" (Page). But in Ac 20:7 they seem to have come together especially for the observance of the Lord's Supper. Perhaps there is no way to settle the point conclusively here. {The prayers} (\tais proseuchais\). Services where they prayed as in 1:14, in the temple (Ac 3:1), in their homes (4:23).

2:43 {Came} (\egineto\). Imperfect middle, kept on coming. {Were done} (\egineto\). Same tense. Awe kept on coming on all and signs and wonders kept on coming through the apostles. The two things went on \pari passu\, the more wonders the more fear.

2:44 {Were together} (\^{san epi to auto}\). Some MSS. \^{san kai}\ (were and). But they were together in the same place as in 2:1. {And had} (\kai eichon\). Imperfect active, kept on having, a habit in the present emergency. {Common} (\koina\). It was not actual communism, but they held all their property ready for use for the common good as it was needed (4:32). This situation appears nowhere else except in Jerusalem and was evidently due to special conditions there which did not survive permanently. Later Paul will take a special collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem.

2:45 {Sold} (\epipraskon\). Imperfect active, a habit or custom from time to time. Old and common verb, \piprask“. {Parted} (\diemerizon\). Imperfect again of \diameriz“, old verb for dividing or distributing between (\dia\) people. {According as any man had need} (\kathoti an tis chreian eichen\). Regular Greek idiom for comparative clause with \an\ and imperfect indicative corresponding precisely with the three preceding imperfects (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 967).

2:46 {With one accord in the temple} (\homothumadon en tⁱ hierⁱ\). See on 1:14 for \homothumadon\. They were still worshipping in the temple for no breach had yet come between Christians and Jews. Daily they were here and daily breaking bread at home (\kat' oikon) which looks like the regular meal. {They did take their food} (\metelambanon troph^s). Imperfect tense again and clearly referring to the regular meals at home. Does it refer also to the possible \agapai or to the Lord's Supper afterwards as they had common meals "from house to house" (\kat' oikon)? We know there were local churches in the homes where they had "worship rooms," the church in the house. At any rate it was "with singleness" (\aphelot^ti) of heart. The word occurs only here in the N.T., though a late _Koin,_ word (papyri). It comes from \aphel^s, free from rock (\phelleus\ is stony ground), smooth. The old form was \apheleia.

2:47 {Having favor} (\echontes charin). Cf. Lu 2:52 of the Boy Jesus. {Added} (\prosetitheî). Imperfect active, kept on adding. If the Lord only always "added" those who join our churches. Note verse 41 where same verb is used of the 3,000. {To them} (\epi to auto). Literally, "together." Why not leave it so? "To the church" (\t^i ekkl^sifi) is not genuine. Codex Bezae has "in the church." {Those that were being saved} (\tous s^zomenous). Present passive participle. Probably for repetition like the imperfect \prosetitheî. Better translate it "those saved from time to time." It was a continuous revival, day by day. \S^z^ like \s^t^ria is used for "save" in three senses (beginning, process, conclusion), but here repetition is clearly the point of the present tense.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

3:1 {Were going up} (anebainon\). Descriptive imperfect active. They were ascending the terraces to the temple courts. {The ninth} (tⁿ enatⁿ\). Our three o'clock in the afternoon, the time of the evening sacrifice. Peter and John like Paul later kept up the Jewish worship, but not as a means of sacramental redemption. There were three hours of prayer (third, sixth, ninth).

3:2 {Was carried} (ebastazeto\). Imperfect passive, picturing the process as in verse 1. {Laid daily} (etithoun kath' h^hmeran\). Imperfect again describing their custom with this man. {Beautiful} (H^hraian\). This gate is not so called elsewhere. It may have been the Gate of Nicanor on the east side looking towards Kidron described by Josephus (_Ant_. XV. 11, 3; _War_ V. 5, 3) as composed chiefly of Corinthian brass and very magnificent.

3:3 {Asked} (r^htf\). Began to ask, inchoative imperfect. It was his chance.

3:4 {Fastening his eyes} (atenisas\). First aorist (ingressive) active participle of ateniz\. For this verb see on Lu 4:20; Ac 1:10. Peter fixed his eyes on the beggar and invited him to look (blepson\) on them.

3:5 {Gave heed unto them} (epeichen autois\). Imperfect active of epech\, to hold to. For the idiom with \ton noun\ understood see 7:14; 1Ti 4:16. He held his eyes right on Peter and John with great eagerness "expecting to receive something" (prosdok^hti labein\). He took Peter's invitation as a promise of a large gift.

3:6 {In the name} (en t^hi onomati\). The healing power is in that name (Page) and Peter says so. Cf. Lu 9:49; 10:17; Ac 4:7,10; 19:27; 16:18. {Walk} (peripatei\). Present imperative, inchoative idea, begin to walk and then go on walking. But the beggar does not budge. He knows that he cannot walk.

3:7 {Took him by the right hand} (piasas auton t^hs dexifs cheiros\). Doric form \piaz“\ for \piez“\. Genitive of the part affected. Peter had to pull him up on his feet before he would try to walk.

3:8 {Leaping up} (\exallomenos\). Present middle participle, leaping out repeatedly after Peter pulled him up. Only here in the N.T. {He stood} (\est^\. Second aorist active. {Walked} (\periepatei\). Went on walking, imperfect active. He came into the temple repeating these new exercises (walking, leaping, praising God).

3:10 {They took knowledge of him} (\epegin“skon\). Imperfect active, inchoative, began to perceive. {Were filled} (\epl^sth^san\). Effective first aorist passive. {At that which had happened} (\t“i sumbeb^koti\). Perfect active participle of \sumbain“\.

3:11 The Codex Bezae adds "as Peter and John went out." {As he held} (\kratountos autou\). Genitive absolute of \krate“\, to hold fast, with accusative rather than genitive to get hold of (Ac 27:13). Old and common verb from \kratos\ (strength, force). Perhaps out of gratitude and partly from fear (Lu 8:38). {In the porch that is called Solomon's} (\epi t^i stofi t^i kaloumen^i Solom“ntos\). The adjective Stoic (\stoikos\) is from this word \stoa\ (porch). It was on the east side of the court of the Gentiles (Josephus, _Ant_. XX. 9, 7) and was so called because it was built on a remnant of the foundations of the ancient temple. Jesus had once taught here (Joh 10:23). {Greatly wondering} (\ekthamboi\). Wondering out of (\ek\ measure, already filled with wonder (\thambous\, verse 10). Late adjective. Construction according to sense (plural, though laos\ singular) as in 5:16; 6:7; 11:1, etc.

3:12 {Answered} (\apekrinato\). First aorist middle indicative. The people looked their amazement and Peter answered that. {Ye men of Israel} (\Andres Isra^leitai\). Covenant name and so conciliatory, the stock of Israel (Php 3:5). {At this man} (\epi tout“i\). Probably so, though it could be "at this thing." {Fasten you your eyes} (\atenizete\). The very verb used about Peter in verse 4. {On us} (\h^min\). Dative case, emphatic proleptical position before \ti atenizete\. {On us why do ye fasten your eyes? As though} (\h“s\). \H“s\ with the participle gives the alleged reason, not always the true one. {Power} (\dunamei\). Instrumental case, _causa effectiva_. {Godliness}

(\eusebeifi\). _Causa meritoria_. {Had made} (\pepoi`kosin\). Perfect active participle of \poie`\ . {To walk} (\tou peripatein\). Articular infinitive in the genitive case of result, purpose easily shading off into result (ecbatic infinitive) as here as is true also of \hina\.

3:13 {His servant Jesus} (\ton paida I`soun\). This phrase occurs in Isa 42:1; 52:13 about the Messiah except the name "Jesus" which Peter adds, the first part of the quotation is from Ex 3:6; 5:30. The LXX translated the Hebrew _ebhedh_ by \pais\, the servant of Jehovah being a Messianic designation. But the phrase "servant of God" (\pais theou\) is applied also to Israel (Lu 1:54) and to David (Lu 1:69; Ac 4:25). Paul terms himself \doulos theou\ (Tit 1:1). \Pais\ is just child (boy or girl), and it was also used of a slave (Mt 8:6,8,13). But it is not here \huios\ (son) that Peter uses, but \pais\ . Luke quotes Peter as using it again in this Messianic sense in Ac 3:26; 4:27,30. {Whom ye delivered up} (\hon humeis men pared`kate\). Note emphatic use of \humeis\ (ye). No \de\ to correspond to \men\ . First aorist active (\k\ aorist) plural indicative of \paradid`mi\ (usual form \paredote\ , second aorist). {When he} (\ekeinou\). Emphatic pronoun, that one, in contrast with "ye" (\humeis\), genitive absolute with \krinantos\, here the nearest word (Pilate), the latter.

3:14 {But ye} (\humeis de\). In contrast with Pilate (\ekeinou\). {Murderer} (\andra phonea\). A man a murderer. In contrast with "the Holy and Righteous One." {To be granted} (\charisth`nai\). As a favour (\charis\). First aorist passive infinitive of \charizomai\; So also 25:11; 27:24.

3:15 {But the Prince of life ye killed} (\ton de arch`gon t`s z`^s apekteinate\). "The magnificent antithesis" (Bengel) Peter here draws between their asking for a murderer and killing the Prince (or Author) of life. Peter pictures Jesus as the source of all life as is done in Joh 1:1-18; Col 1:14-20; Heb 1:2f. \Arch`gos\ (\arch^, beginning, \ag`^, to lead) is an adjective "furnishing the first cause or occasion" in Euripides, Plato. Thence substantive, the originator, the leader, the pioneer as of Jesus both Beginner and Finisher (Heb 12:2). See also Heb 2:10; Ac 5:31 where it is applied to Jesus as "Prince and Saviour." But God raised him from the dead in contrast to what they had done. {Whereof we are witnesses} (\hou h`meis martures esmen\). Of which fact (the resurrection) or of whom as risen, \hou\ having the same form in the genitive singular for masculine or neuter. Peter had boldly claimed that all the 120 have seen the Risen Christ. There is no denial of that claim.

3:16 {By faith in his name} (\tⁱ pistei tou onomatos autou\). Instrumental case of \pistei\ (Aleph and B do not have \epi\) and objective genitive of \onomatos\. {His name} (\to onoma autou\). Repeats the word name to make the point clear. Cf. verse 6 where Peter uses "the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth" when he healed the man. {Made strong} (\estere"sen\). Same verb used in verse 7 (and 16:5). Nowhere else in the N.T. Old verb from \stereos\, firm, solid. {Through him} (\di' autou\). Through Jesus, the object of faith and the source of it. {Perfect soundness} (\holokl^{rian}\). Perfect in all its parts, complete, whole (from \holos\, whole, \kl^{ros}\, allotment). Late word (Plutarch) once in LXX (Isa 1:6) and here alone in the N.T., but adjective \holokl^{ros}\, old and common (Jas 1:4; 1Th 5:23).

3:17 {And now} (\kai nun\). Luke is fond of these particles of transition (7:34; 10:5; 20:25; 22:16) and also \kai ta nun\ (4:29; 5:38; 22:32; 27:22), and even \kai nun idou\ (13:11; 20:22). {I wot} (\oida\). Old English for "I know." {In ignorance} (\kata agnoian\). This use of \kata\ occurs in the _Koin,_. See also Phm 1:14. One may see Lu 23:34 for the words of the Saviour on the Cross. "They had sinned, but their sin was not of so deep a dye that it could not have been still more heinous" (Hackett). If they had known what they were doing, they would not knowingly have crucified the Messiah (1Co 2:8).

3:18 {Foreshewed} (\prokat^{ggeilen}\). First aorist active indicative of \prokataggell"\, late compound to announce fully beforehand. Only twice in the N.T. in the critical text (Ac 3:18; 7:52). {That his Christ should suffer} (\pathein ton Christon autou\). Accusative of general reference with the aorist active infinitive (\pathein\ of \pasch"\) in indirect discourse (predictive purpose of God). Their crime, though real, was carrying out God's purpose (2:23; Joh 3:16). See the same idea in Ac 17:3; 26:23. This "immense paradox" (Page) was a stumbling block to these Jews as it is yet (1Co 1:23). Peter discusses the sufferings of Christ in 1Pe 4:13; 5:1.

3:19 {Repent therefore} (\metano^{sate oun}\). Peter repeats to this new crowd the command made in Ac 2:38 which see. God's purpose and patience call for instant change of attitude on their part. Their guilt does not shut them out if they will turn. {And turn again} (\kai epistrepseate). Definitely turn to God in conduct as well as in mind. {That your sins may be blotted out} (\pros to exaliphth^nai hum^nas hamartias). Articular infinitive (first aorist passive of \exaleiph^{\, to wipe out, rub off, erase, smear out, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Col 2:14}) with the accusative of general reference and with \pros\ and the accusative to express purpose. {That so} (\hop^s an). Final particle with \an\ and the aorist active subjunctive \elth^sin\ (come) and not "when" as the Authorized Version has it. Some editors put this clause in verse 20 (Westcott and Hort, for instance). {Seasons of refreshing} (\kairoi anapsuxe^s). The word \anapsuxis\ (from \anapsuch^{\, to cool again or refresh, 2Ti 1:16}) is a late word (LXX) and occurs here alone in the N.T. Surely repentance will bring "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

3:20 {And that he may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus} (\kai aposteil^i ton prokecheirismenon humin Christon I^soun). First aorist active subjunctive with \hop^s an\ as in 15:17 and Lu 2:35. There is little real difference in idea between \hop^s an\ and \hina an\. There is a conditional element in all purpose clauses. The reference is naturally to the second coming of Christ as verse 21 shows. Knowling admits "that there is a spiritual presence of the enthroned Jesus which believers enjoy as a foretaste of the visible and glorious Presence of the \Parousia\." Jesus did promise to be with the disciples all the days (Mt 28:20), and certainly repentance with accompanying seasons of refreshing help get the world ready for the coming of the King. The word \prokecheirismenon\ (perfect passive participle of \procheiriz^{\, from \procheiros\, at hand, to take into one's hands, to choose}) is the correct text here, not \prokek^rugmenon\. In the N.T. only here and Ac 22:14; 26:16. It is not "Jesus Christ" here nor "Christ Jesus," but "the Messiah, Jesus," identifying Jesus with the Messiah. See the Second Epiphany of Jesus foretold also in 1Ti 6:15 and the First Epiphany described in 1Pe 1:20.

3:21 {Restoration} (\apokatastase^s). Double compound (\apo, kata, hist^mi), here only in the N.T., though common in late writers. In papyri and inscriptions for repairs to temples and this phrase occurs in Jewish apocalyptic writings, something like the new heaven and the new earth of Re 21:1. Paul has a mystical allusion also to the agony of nature in Ro 8:20-22. The verb \apokathistēmi\ is used by Jesus of the spiritual and moral restoration wrought by the Baptist as Elijah (Mt 17:11; Mr 9:12) and by the disciples to Jesus in Ac 1:6. Josephus uses the word of the return from captivity and Philo of the restitution of inheritances in the year of jubilee. As a technical medical term it means complete restoration to health. See a like idea in \palingenesia\ (renewal, new birth) in Mt 19:28; Tit 3:5. This universalism of Peter will be clearer to him after Joppa and Caesarea.

3:22 {Like unto me} (\h' s eme\). As me, literally; Moses (De 18:14-18) claims that God raised him up as a prophet and that another and greater one will come, the Messiah. The Jews understood Moses to be a type of Christ (Joh 1:21). God spoke to Moses face to face (Ex 33:11) and he was the greatest of the prophets (De 34:10).

3:23 {That prophet} (\tou prophē tou ekeinou\). Emphasizes the future prophet as on "him" (\autou\) before "hearken." They had refused to "hearken" to Moses and now, alas, many had refused to "hearken" to Christ. {Shall be utterly destroyed} (\exolethreuthēsetai\). First future passive of \exole- (\o\)\threu" , a late verb, to destroy utterly (\ex\), only here in the N.T., common in the LXX.

3:24 {From Samuel} (\apo Samou' l\). Schools of prophets arose in his time, few before him (1Sa 3:1).

3:25 {Ye} (\Humeis\). Emphatic position. {The covenant which God made} (\t' s diathēk' s h' s ho theos dietheto\). Literally, "the covenant which God covenanted." \Diathēk' and \dietheto\ (second aorist middle indicative of \diathēmi) are the same root. See on Mt 26:28. The covenant (agreement between two, \dia, tithēmi) was with Abraham (Ge 12:1-3) and repeated at various times (Ge 18:18; 22:18; 26:4, etc.). In Heb 9:15-18 the word is used both for covenant and will. The genitive relative \h' s\ attracted to case of the antecedent.

3:26 {Unto you first} (\Humin prōton\). The Jews were first in privilege and it was through the Jews that the Messiah was to come for "all the families of the earth." {His servant} (\ton paida autou\). As in verse 13, the Messiah as God's Servant. {To bless you} (\eulogounta humas\). Present active participle to express purpose, blessing you (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 991). In turning away (ἐν τῇ ἀποστρέφειν). Articular infinitive in the locative case, almost preserved in the English.

4:1 {The captain of the temple} (\ho strat^gos tou hierou). Twenty-four bands of Levites guarded the temple, one guard at a time. They watched the gates. The commander of each band was called captain (\strat^gos). Josephus names this captain of the temple police next to the high priest (_War_. VI. 5, 3). {The Sadducees} (\hoi Saddoukaioi). Most of the priests were Sadducees now and all the chief priests since John Hyrcanus I deserted the Pharisees (Josephus, _Ant_. XVII. 10, 6; XVIII. 1, 4; XX. 9, 1). The Sadducees were slow to line up with the Pharisees against Jesus, but they now take the lead against Peter and John. {Came upon them} (\epest^san autois). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive). Burst upon them suddenly or stood by them in a hostile attitude here (Lu 20:1; 24:4; Ac 6:12; 17:5; 22:20; 23:11).

4:2 {Being sore troubled} (\diaponoumenoi). Present passive participle of old verb \diapone^ (perfective use of \dia) to be worked up, indignant. In the N.T. only here and 16:8. {Because} (\dia to). The articular infinitive with two accusatives, one the object (the people), the other ("they") of general reference. {In Jesus} (\en I^sou). In the case of Jesus, an actual instance of resurrection which the Sadducees denied (Mt 22:23). This same use of \en appears in 1Co 4:6 (in us). The Sadducees were also aristocrats and political ecclesiastics who disliked popular disturbances. In particular, they resented the claim about Jesus whom they had helped crucify.

4:3 {In ward} (\eis t^r^sin). Probably in one of the chambers of the temple. In safe keeping (from \t^re^, to guard). Old word, in the N.T. only here and Ac 5:18; 1Co 7:19. So in papyri. {Now eventide} (\hespera ^d^). Hence no trial could take place before the next day, a regulation violated in the case of Jesus.

4:4 {Men} (\andr^"n). Strictly, men and not women, for \anthr^"pos is the term for both men and women. But in Lu 11:31 \andres seems to include both men and women and that is possible here, though by no means certain, for see Mt 14:21 where the women and children are expressly excepted.

4:5 {Rulers and elders and scribes} (\tous archontas kai tous presbuterous kai tous grammateis\). The three classes composing the Sanhedrin (rulers=chief priests who were Sadducees, the scribes usually Pharisees, the elders not in either class: 24 priests, 24 elders, 22 scribes). {Were gathered together} (\sunachth^{nai}\). First aorist passive infinitive of \sunag^{ai}\ with accusative of general reference and the subject of \egeneto\.

4:6 {Annas} (\Hannas\). One of the rulers or chief priests, ex-high priest (A.D. 7-14) and father-in-law of {Caiaphas} (\Kaiaphas\) who was actual high priest at that time, though the title clung to Annas as here (both so called in Lu 3:2), Caiaphas so by Roman law, Annas so in the opinion of the Jews. They with John and Alexander are the leaders among the Sadducees in pressing the case against Peter and John.

4:7 {In the midst} (\en tⁱ mesⁱ\). The Sanhedrin sat in a semicircle. {They inquired} (\epunthanonto\). Imperfect middle, began to inquire. {Or in what name} (\^en poiⁱ onomati\). As if by some magical formula such as exorcists practised (Ac 19:13) as if to catch them by (De 13:1). {Have ye done this} (\epoi^{sate} touto humeis\). Note emphatic use of \humeis\ (ye).

4:8 {Filled with the Holy Spirit} (\pl^stheis pneumatos hagiou\). For this occasion and so above all fear as in verse 31 and as in 2:4.

4:9 {Concerning a good deed done to an impotent man} (\epi euergesifi anthr^{pou asthenous}\). Objective genitive. Note \euergesia\ (old word, in the N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:2), as a benefactor, not a malefactor. Skilful turn made by Peter. {Is made whole} (\ses^{stai}\). Perfect passive indicative of \s^z\, stands whole.

4:10 {Be it known} (\gn^{ston est}\). Imperative present active third singular of \eimi\, to be, and the verbal adjective \gn^{ston}\. {Whom ye crucified} (\hon humeis estaur^{sate}\). Too good a chance to miss, and so Peter boldly charges the Sanhedrin with responsibility for the death of Jesus. Note \humeis\ (ye) again. {Whom God raised from the dead} (\hon ho theos ^{geiren} ek nekrⁿ\). Note repetition of \hon\ (whom). This is God's answer to their act of crucifixion. {In him doth this man stand} (\en tout“i houtos parest^{ken}”). Rather (note play on \houtos), "In this one (\hon, hon) this one stands (present perfect active indicative, intransitive).” In Jesus this man stands before you whole (\hugi^s). It was a centre shot.

4:11 {Of you the builders} (\huph' hum“n t“n oikodom“n). The experts, the architects, had rejected Jesus for their building (Ps 118:22) as Jesus himself had pointed out (Mt 21:42; Lu 21:17). This very Rejected Stone God had made the head of the corner (either the highest corner stone right under the roof or the corner stone under the building, Isa 28:16) as Jesus showed, as Peter here declares and repeats later (1Pe 2:6f.).

4:12 {Salvation} (\h[^] s“t[^]ria). The Messianic salvation as in 5:31; 17:11 and as Jesus meant in Joh 4:22. It is amazing to see Peter speaking thus to the Sanhedrin and proclaiming the necessity of salvation (\dei s“th[^]nai) in the name of Jesus Christ and in no other. If this was true then, it is true today. There is no second (\heteron) name to go beside that of Jesus in India, China, Japan, or America.

4:13 {The boldness} (\t[^]n parr[^]sian). Telling it all (\pan, r[^]sia). See also verses 29,31. Actually Peter had turned the table on the Sanhedrin and had arraigned them before the bar of God. {Had perceived} (\katalabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of \katalamban“, common verb to grasp strongly (\kata), literally or with the mind (especially middle voice), to comprehend. The rulers recalled Peter and John from having seen them often with Jesus, probably during the temple teaching, etc. {They were unlearned} (\agrammatoi eisin). Present indicative retained in indirect discourse. Unlettered men without technical training in the professional rabbinical schools of Hillel or Shammai. Jesus himself was so regarded (Joh 7:15, "not having learned letters"). {And ignorant} (\kai idi“tai). Old word, only here in the N.T. and 1Co 14:24; 2Co 11:6. It does not mean "ignorant," but a layman, a man not in office (a private person), a common soldier and not an officer, a man not skilled in the schools, very much like \agrammatos. It is from \idios (one's own) and our "idiosyncrasy" is one with an excess of such a trait, while "idiot" (this very word) is one who has nothing but his idiosyncrasy. Peter and John were men of ability and of courage, but they did not belong to the set of the rabbis. {They marvelled} (\ethaumazon). Imperfect (inchoative) active, began to wonder and kept it up. {Took knowledge of them}

(\epegin“skon autous\). Imperfect (inchoative) active again, they began to recognize them as men that they had seen with Jesus.

4:14 {They could say nothing against it} (\ouden eichon anteipein\). Imperfect again, they kept on having nothing to say against it. The lame man was standing there before their eyes in proof of what Peter had said.

4:15 {They conferred among themselves} (\suneballon pros all^lous\). Imperfect active again. With Peter and John and the lame man outside, they began to compare (\sun, ball“\) notes and take stock of their predicament.

4:16 {What shall we do?} (\Ti poi^s“men\). Deliberative aorist active subjunctive (ingressive and urgent aorist). {Notable miracle} (\gn“ston s^meion\). Or sign. It was useless to deny it with the man there. {We cannot deny it} (\ou dunametha arneisthai\). That is, it will do no good.

4:17 {That it spread no further} (\hina m^ epi pleion dianem^th^i\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \dianem“\, to distribute with \hina m^, negative purpose. {Let us threaten them} (\apeil^s“metha autois\). Hortatory aorist middle subjunctive of \apeile“, old verb (note middle voice). In the N.T. only here and 1Pe 2:23. {That they speak henceforth to no man in this name} (\m^keti lalein epi t^i onomati tout“i m^deni anthr“p“n\). Indirect command with the infinitive and double negative (\m^keti, m^deni\). They will not say "Jesus," but make a slur at "this name," contemptuous use of \houtos\, though they apparently do mention the name "Jesus" in verse 18.

4:18 {Not to speak at all} (\katholou m^ phtheggesthai\). Same construction as above, infinitive in indirect command with negative \m^ (and \m^de\).

4:20 {For we cannot but speak} (\ou dunametha gar h^meis--m^ lalein\). Both negatives hold here, "For we (note emphatic \h^meis\) are not able not to speak" (what we saw and heard). This is defiance of the civil and ecclesiastical authorities that was justified, for the temple authorities stepped in between the conscience and God. Peter and John were willing to pay the price of this defiance with their lives. This is the courage of martyrs through all the ages.

4:21 {When they had further threatened them} (\prosapeil^samenoì). The "further" is in "pros" (in addition), {Finding nothing how they might punish them} (\m^den heuriskontes to p^s kolas^ntai autous). Note the article "to" before \p^s (how), "the how." Aorist middle deliberative subjunctive \kolas^ntai in indirect question after \p^s from \kolaz^\", to lop (\kolos, lopped), to curb, to prune, to correct, to punish. Old verb, in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:9. {Glorified God} (\edoxazon ton theon). Imperfect active, kept on glorifying God while the Sanhedrin were threatening Peter and John. It was to laugh at the helplessness of the Sanhedrin.

4:22 {Was wrought} (\gegoneì). Second past perfect active without augment from \ginomai.

4:23 {To their own company} (\pros tous idious). Their own people as in Joh 1:11; 13:1; Ac 24:23; 1Ti 5:8; Tit 3:14, not merely the apostles (all the disciples). In spite of Peter's courageous defiance he and John told the brotherhood all that had been said by the Sanhedrin. They had real apprehension of the outcome.

4:24 {With one accord} (\homothumadon). A concert of voices as already seen by the word in 1:14; 2:46 and later in 5:12; 7:57; 15:25. {O Lord} (\Despota). Our word despot. Old word for relation of master to slaves or household servants (1Ti 6:1; 2Ti 2:21; Tit 2:9; 1Pe 2:18). Simeon thus addressed God (Lu 2:29). So in 2Pe 2:1; Jude 1:4; Re 6:10. See "slaves" in verse 29.

4:25 {By the mouth of our father David} (\tou patros h^m^n dia pneumatou hagiou stomatos Dauid). From Ps 2:1f. here ascribed to David. Baumgarten suggests that the whole company sang the second Psalm and then Peter applied it to this emergency. The Greek MSS. do not have \dia (by) here before \stomatos, but only \dia before \pneumatou hagiou (the Holy Spirit). Hort calls this a "primitive error" perhaps due to an early scribe who omitted this second \dia so close to the first \dia (Robertson, Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the N.T., p. 238). A small list of such primitive errors is there given as suggested by Dr. Hort. {Why} (\hina ti). This Greek idiom calls for \gen^tai (second aorist middle subjunctive), {That what may happen}. {The Gentiles} (\ethn^h). So always in LXX, while \laoi (peoples) can include Jews. {Did rage} (\ephruaxan). First aorist active indicative of \pneuass^\", late word, to neigh like a horse, to prance or stamp the ground, to put on lofty airs.

Only here in the N.T. in this quotation from Ps 2:1. {Imagine} (\emelet^san). First aorist active indicative of \meleta^. Old verb from \melet^ (care), to practise, to caution, as orators and rhetoricians. Only here in the N.T. in this quotation.

4:26 {Set themselves in array} (\parest^san). Literally, stood by. {Against his Anointed} (\kata tou Christou autou). Against his Messiah, his Christ.

4:27 {Both Herod and Pontios Pilate} (\H^r^'id^s te kai Pontius Peilatos). Luke alone (Lu 23:12) tells of the reconciliation between Herod and Pilate at the trial of Jesus. So Peter and the rest interpret this prophecy as directly fulfilled in their conduct towards Jesus Christ. {Whom thou didst anoint} (\hon echrisas). As in verse 26 (cf. Lu 4:18; Isa 61:1). Inaugurated as King Messiah.

4:29 {And now} (\kai ta nun). "And as to (accusative of general reference) the now things (the present situation)." Only in the Acts in the N.T. (5:38; 17:30; 20:32; 27:22). {Grant} (\dos). Second aorist active imperative of \did^mi, urgency of the aorist, Do it now. {To speak thy word with all boldness} (\meta parr^sias pas^s lalein ton logon sou). Literally, "with all boldness to go on speaking (present active infinitive) thy word." Peter and John had defied the Sanhedrin in verse 20, but all the same and all the more they pray for courage in deed to live up to their brave words. A wholesome lesson.

4:30 {While thou stretchest forth thy hand} (\en t^'i t^'n cheira ekteinein se). Luke's favourite idiom, "In the stretching out (articular present active infinitive) the hand as to thee" (accusative of general reference), the second allusion to God's "hand" in this prayer (verse 28). {To heal} (\eis iasin). For healing. See verse 22. {And that signs and wonders may be done} (\kai s^meia kai terata ginesthai). Either to be taken as in the same construction as \ekteinein with \en t^'i as Revised Version has it here or to be treated as subordinate purpose to \en t^'i ekteinein (as Knowling, Page, Wendt, Hackett). The latter most likely true. They ask for a visible sign or proof that God has heard this prayer for courage to be faithful even unto death.

4:31 {The place was shaken} (\esaleuth[^] ho topos\). By an earthquake most likely as in 16:26, but none the less a token of God's presence and power (Ps 114:7; Isa 2:19,21; Heb 12:26f.). {Were gathered together} (\[^]san sun[^]gmenoi\). Periphrastic past perfect passive of \sunag“\ . {They spake} (\elaloun\). Imperfect active indicative, began to speak, after being filled (\ep^lsth[^]san\, aorist passive indicative) with the Holy Spirit. Luke uses the very words of the prayer in verse 29 to describe their conduct.

4:32 {Of one heart and soul} (\kardia kai psuch[^] mia\). It is not possible to make sharp distinction between heart and soul here (see Mr 12:30), only that there was harmony in thought and affection. But the English translation is curiously unlike the Greek original. "There was one heart and soul (nominative case, not genitive as the English has it) in the multitude (\tou pl[^]thous\, subjective genitive) of those who believed." {Not one of them} (\oude heis\). More emphatic than \oudeis\, "not even one." {Common} (\koina\). In the use of their property, not in the possession as Luke proceeds to explain. The word \koinos\ is kin to \sun\ (together with)=\xun\ (Epic) and so \xunos=koinos\ . See this word already in 2:44. The idea of unclean (Ac 10:15) is a later development from the original notion of common to all.

4:33 {Gave their witness} (\apedidoun to marturion\). Imperfect active of \apodid“mi\, old verb to give back, to pay back a debt (Lu 7:42), but a late omega form instead of the usual \apedidosan\ . They kept on giving their witness with power after the answer to their prayer (verse 31). {Of the resurrection} (\t[^]s anastase“s\). It was on this issue that the Sadducees had arrested them (4:1-3).

4:34 {That lacked} (\ende[^]s\). Literally, in need, old adjective, here only in the N.T. {Were} (\hup[^]rchon\). Imperfect active of \huparch“\, to exist. {Sold them and brought} (\p“lountes epheron\). Present active participle and imperfect active indicative. Selling they brought from time to time, as there was occasion by reason of need. Hence the wants were kept supplied. {Laid them} (\etithoun\). Imperfect active again, _repetition_, of \tith[^]mi\, late omega form for the usual \etithesan\.

4:35 {Distribution was made} (\diedideto\). Imperfect passive of \diadid“mi\, late omega form for \diedidoto\ (the stem vowel \o\ displaced by \e\). Impersonal use of the verb here. {According as any one had need} (\kathoti an tis chreian eichen\). Imperfect active of \ech“\ with \kathoti\ and \an\ with the notion of customary repetition in a comparative clause (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 967).

4:36 {Barnabas} (\Barnabas\). His name was Joseph (correct text, and not Jesus) and he is mentioned as one illustration of those in verse 34 who selling brought the money. The apostles gave him the nickname Barnabas by which later he was known because of this noble deed. This fact argues that all did not actually sell, but were ready to do so if needed. Possibly Joseph had a larger estate than some others also. The meaning of the nickname is given by Luke as "son of consolation or exhortation" (\huios parakl^{se}“s\). Doubtless his gifts as a preacher lay along this same line. Rackham thinks that the apostles gave him this name when he was recognized as a prophet. In Ac 11:23 the very word \parekalei\ (exhorted) is used of Barnabas up at Antioch. He is the type of preacher described by Paul in 1Co 14:3. Encouragement is the chief idea in \parakl^{sis}\ though exhortation, comfort, consolation are used to render it (Ac 9:31; 13:15; 15:31). See also 16:9; 20:12. It is not necessary to think that the apostles coined the name Barnabas for Joseph which originally may have come from \Barnebous\ (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 308-10), son of Nebo, or even the Hebrew _Bar Nebi_ (son of a prophet). But, whatever the origin, the popular use is given by Luke. He was even called apostle along with Paul (Ac 14:14) in the broad sense of that word.

4:37 {Having a held} (\huparchontos aut“i agrou\). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \huparch“\ and dative of possession. {Sold it and brought} (\p“l^{sas} ^negken\). Aorist active participle of \p“le“\ and second aorist active indicative of \pher“\ because a single definite instance. So also with \eth^{ken}\ (laid), first aorist active.

5:1 {Sold} (\ep“t’sen). Aorist active indicative again, for a single case.

5:2 {Kept back} (\enosphisato). First aorist middle indicative of \nosphiz“, old verb from \nosphi, afar, apart, and so to set apart, to separate for oneself, but only here, verse 3; Tit 2:10 in the N.T. {His wife also being privy to it} (\suneidui’s kai t’s gunaikos). Genitive absolute with second perfect participle of \sunoida, to know together with one, "his wife also knowing it together with him." {Brought a certain part} (\enegkas meros ti). Aorist active participle of \pher“, for a definite act. The praise of Joseph was too much for Ananias, but he was not willing to turn over all. He wanted praise for giving all and yet he took care of himself by keeping some. Thus he started the Ananias Club that gave a new meaning to his lovely name (God is gracious).

5:3 {Filled} (\epI^r“sen). The very verb used of the filling by the Holy Spirit (4:31). Satan the adversary is the father of lies (Joh 8:44). He had entered into Judas (Lu 22:3; Joh 13:27) and now he has filled the heart of Ananias with a lie. {To lie to the Holy Spirit} (\pseusasthai se to pneuma to hagion). Infinitive (aorist middle) of purpose with accusative of general reference (\se) and the accusative of the person (object) as often in Greek writers, though here only in the N.T. with this verb. Usual dative of the person in verse 4 (\anthr“pois\, men, \t“i the“i\, God). The Holy Spirit had been given them to guide them into truth (Joh 15:13).

5:4 {Whiles it remained} (\menon). Present active participle of mend, unsold, Peter means. {After it was sold} (\prathen). First aorist passive of \piprask“, to sell. {How is that thou hast conceived} (\Ti hoti ethou). _Quid est quod_. See Lu 2:49. See also Ac 5:9. Second aorist middle indicative second person singular of \tith^mi. The devil filled his heart (verse 3), but all the same Ananias did it too and is wholly responsible.

5:5 {Hearing} (\akou“n). Present active participle of \akou“, while hearing. {Fell down} (\pes“n). Second aorist active participle of \pipt“, fell all of a sudden while listening. {Gave up the ghost} (\exepsuxen). First aorist active indicative of \ekpsuch“, late verb in LXX and Hippocrates, to breathe out, to expire. In the N.T. only here, verse 10; 12:23. It is needless to blame Peter for the death of Ananias. He had brought the end upon himself. It was the judgment of God. Physically the nervous shock could have caused the collapse.

5:6 {The young men} (\hoi ne“teroi). Literally the younger men (contrast with \hoi presbuteroi\, the elder men). Same as \neaniskoi in verse 10 and so no order in the young church. Perhaps these young men were acting as ushers or actual pallbearers. {Wrapped him round} (\sunesteilan). First aorist active indicative of \sustell“, old verb, to draw together, or contract (1Co 7:29), to roll together, to wrap with bandages, to enshroud as here. Nowhere else in the N.T. Frequent in medical writers. They may have used their own mantles. The time for burial was short in Jerusalem for sanitary reasons and to avoid ceremonial defilement.

5:7 {And it was about the space of three hours after} (\egeneto de h“s h“r“n tri“n diast^ma). Literally "Now there came an interval (\diast^ma\, distance, space between) of about (\h“s) three hours." {When} (\kai). This use of \kai after \egeneto is characteristic of Luke's style in the Gospel. {Not knowing} (\m^eiduia). Feminine singular of second perfect active participle of \oida. \M^ usual negative of the participle in the _Koin,_.

5:8 {For so much} (\tosoutou). Genitive of price. Perhaps Peter pointed to the pile of money at the feet of the apostles (verse 2). The use of \ei in direct questions appears in Luke (Lu 13:23; 22:49) as in the LXX like the Hebrew _im_ and in Ac 1:6; 19:2, etc.

5:9 {Ye have agreed together} (\suneph“n^th^humin). First aorist passive indicative of \sumph“ne“ (to voice together, symphony), impersonal with dative; It was agreed together by you (or for you). "Your souls were allured together respecting this deceit" (Vincent). {To tempt the Spirit of the Lord} (\peirasai to pneuma kuriou). Like "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." It was close to the unpardonable sin which was attributing the manifest work of the Holy Spirit to Beelzebub. {The feet} (\hoi podes\). Graphic picture by Peter as he heard the steps of the young men at the door.

5:10 {Immediately} (\parachr^{ma}\). Hence her death was regarded as supernatural like that of Ananias. {By her husband} (\pros ton andra aut^s\). Face to face to her husband.

5:11 {Upon the whole church} (\eph' holⁿ tⁿ ekkl^{sian}\). Here \ekkl^{sia}\ for the first time in Acts of the believers in Jerusalem. Twice already in the Gospels, once of the whole body of believers or the Kingdom (Mt 16:18), the other of the local body (Mt 18:17). In Ac 7:38 it is used of the whole congregation of Israel while in 19:32 it is used of a public assembly in Ephesus. But already in Ac 8:3 it is applied to the church which Saul was persecuting in their homes when not assembled. So here the etymological meaning of "assembly" disappears for "the church" were now the scattered saints hiding in their separate homes. The whole body of believers in Jerusalem and all who heard of the fate of Ananias and Sapphira (beautiful, her name means) were in awe and dread. It was already a dangerous thing to be a follower of Christ unless one was willing to walk straight.

5:12 {Were wrought} (\egineto\). Imperfect middle, wrought from time to time. {With one accord} (\homothumadon\). As already in 1:14; 2:46; 4:24 and later 7:57; 8:6; 12:20; 15:25; 18:21; 19:29, old adverb and only in Acts in the N.T. Here "all" is added. In Solomon's Porch again as in 3:11 which see.

5:13 {Durst} (\etolma\). Imperfect active of \tolma“, old verb, not to fear or shun through fear, boldly to take a stand. The fate of Ananias and Sapphira continued to hold many in check. {Join} (\kollasthai\). Present middle infinitive of \kolla“, old verb to cleave to like glue as in Lu 15:15 which see. Seven times in Acts (9:26; 10:28; 17:34). The outsiders (the rest) preferred, many of them, to remain outside for the present, especially the rulers. {Howbeit the people} (\all'--ho laos\). Probably individuals among the people, the populace as distinct from the rulers and hostile outsiders.

5:14 {Were the more added} (\mflon prosetithento\). Rather (\mflon\) instead of decrease as one might expect. Imperfect passive indicative of \prostith^{mi}\ common \mi\ verb, kept on being added. {Both of men and women} (\andrⁿ te kai gunaikⁿ\).

The distinction between \andres\ and \gunaikes\ and to be considered in connection with \andres\ in 4:4 which see.

5:15 {Insomuch that} (\h^{ste}\). With the present infinitive \ekpherein\ and \tithenai\, regular Greek idiom for result. {Into the streets} (\eis tas plateias\). Supply \hodous\ (ways), into the broad ways. {On beds and couches} (\epi klinariⁿ kai krabattⁿ\). Little beds (\klinaria\ diminutive of \klin[^]\) and camp beds or pallets (see on Mr 2:4,9,11). {As Peter came by} (\erchomenou Petrou\). Genitive absolute with present middle participle. {At the least his shadow might overshadow} (\kan h^{skia episkiasei}\). Future active indicative with \hina\ (common with \hop^s\ in ancient Greek) and \kan\ (crasis for \kai ean\=even if), even if only the shadow. The word for shadow (\skia\, like our "sky") is repeated in the verb and preserved in our "overshadow." There was, of course, no virtue or power in Peter's shadow. That was faith with superstition, of course, just as similar cases in the Gospels occur (Mt 9:20; Mr 6:56; Joh 9:5) and the use of Paul's handkerchief (Ac 19:12). God honours even superstitious faith if it is real faith in him. Few people are wholly devoid of superstition.

5:16 {Came together} (\sun^{rcheto}\). Imperfect middle, kept on coming. {Round about} (\perix\). Old adverb, strengthened form of \peri\, only here in the N.T. {Vexed} (\ochloumenous\). Present passive participle of \ochle[^]\, to excite a mob (\ochlos\) against one, to trouble, annoy. Old word, only here in the N.T., though \enochle[^]\ in Lu 6:18. {Were healed every one} (\etherapeuonto hapantes\). Imperfect passive, were healed one at a time, repetition.

5:17 {Which is the sect of the Sadducees} (\h^{ousa hairesis tⁿ Saddoukaiⁿ}\). Literally, "the existing sect of the Sadducees" or "the sect which is of the Sadducees," \h[^]\ being the article, not the relative. \Hairesis\ means a choosing, from \haireomai\, to take for oneself, to choose, then an opinion chosen or tenet (possibly 2Pe 2:1), then parties or factions (Gal 5:20; 1Co 11:19; possibly 2Pe 2:1). It is applied here to the Sadducees; to the Pharisees in Ac 15:5; 26:5; to the Christians in 24:5-14; 28:22. Already Luke has stated that the Sadducees started the persecution of Peter and John (Ac 4:1f.). Now it is extended to "the apostles" as a whole since Christianity has spread more rapidly in Jerusalem than before it began.

5:18 {With jealousy} (\z^lou\). Genitive case. Old word from ze“, to boil, our zeal. In itself it means only warmth, ardour, zeal, but for a bad cause or from a bad motive, jealousy, envy, rivalry results (Ac 13:45). Common in the epistles. {In public ward} (\en t^r^sei d^mosifi\). As in 4:3 only with \d^mosifi\ (public) added, in the public prison, perhaps not the "common" prison, but any prison is bad enough. In verse 19 it is called "the prison" (\t^s phulak^s\), the guardhouse.

5:20 {And stand} (\kai stathentes\). First aorist passive participle (intransitive, ingressive aorist), take a stand. Bold and pictorial command. {All the words of this life} (\panta ta rh^mata t^s z^“^s taut^s\). Not just a Hebraism for "all these words of life." Probably "this life" which the Sadducees deny and of which the angel is now speaking, this eternal life. (Joh 6:63,68; 1Co 15:19).

5:21 {About daybreak} (\hupo ton orthron\). From \ornumi\, to stir up, to arouse, so the dawn (Lu 24:1; Joh 8:2). Old word, but in the N.T. only these three passages. "Under the dawn" or "about dawn." _Sub lucem_. The temple doors would be open for early worshippers and traffickers (Joh 2:14). {Taught} (\edidaskon\). Imperfect active, began to teach. {The council} (\to sunedrion\). The Sanhedrin. {The senate} (\t^n gerousian\). From \ger^“n\, an old man, just as the Latin _senatus_ is from _senex_, old. Like the \gerontes\ in Homer and the Elder Statesmen in Japan. Apparently the senate of the people were also part of the Sanhedrin and the use of "and" (\kai\) is explanatory and adds this item in particular. Page thinks that this group of elders were not members of the Sanhedrin at all. {To the prison house} (\eis to desm^“t^rion\), another word for prison (\t^r^sis d^mosia\ in verse 18, \h^ phulak^ in verse 19). See also verses 22,23,25. This from \desmos\, bond, and \t^re^“, to keep, place where bound men are kept.

5:22 {The officers} (\hoi hup^retai\). Under-rowers, literally (Mt 5:25). The servants or officers who executed the orders of the Sanhedrin. {Shut} (\kekleisamenon\). Perfect passive participle of \klei^“. Shut tight. {Standing at the doors} (\hest^“tas epi t^“n thur^“n\). Graphic picture of the sentinels at the prison doors.

5:24 {They were much perplexed} (\di^poroun\). Imperfect active of \diapore^“ old verb by Luke only in the N.T. See already on

Ac 2:12. They continued puzzled. {Whereunto this would grow} (\ti an genoito touto\). More exactly, {As to what this would become}. Second aorist middle optative of \ginomai\ with \an\, the conclusion of a condition of the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of determination), the unexpressed condition being "if the thing should be allowed to go on." The indirect question simply retains the optative with \an\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1021, 1044). If they had only known how this grain of mustard seed would grow into the greatest tree on earth and how dwarfed the tree of Judaism would be beside it!

5:26 {Brought} (\^gen\). Imperfect active of \ag\, was bringing (leading), slowly no doubt, and solemnly. {But without violence} (\ou meta bias\). Literally, not with violence. {For they feared} (\ephobounto gar\). Imperfect middle, still feared, kept on fearing. {Lest they be stoned} (\m^ lithasth^sin\). Negative purpose with \m^ (like \hina m^), probably with "not with violence," though possible with "they feared." They handled the apostles gently for fear of being stoned themselves by the people. First aorist passive subjunctive of \lithaz\ (from \lithos\, stone), old verb to pelt with stones (Ac 14:19; Joh 10:31-33).

5:27 {They set them} (\est^san\). First aorist active indicative (transitive) of \hist^mi\.

5:28 {We straitly charged} (\Paraggelifi par^ggeilamen\). Like the Hebrew idiom (common in the LXX), though found in Greek, with charging (instrumental case) we charged (cf. same idiom in Lu 22:15). Somewhat like the cognate accusative. The command referred to occurs in Ac 4:17,18 and the refusal of Peter and John in 4:20. {To bring upon us} (\epagagein eph' h^mfs\). Note repetition of \epi\. Second aorist active infinitive of \epag\, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:1,5. The Sanhedrin gladly took the blood of Christ on their heads and their children to Pilate (Mt 27:25). Paul tried to save the Jews (Ac 18:6; 22:20). "{This man}" (\tou anthr^pou toutou\). Contemptuous slur and refusal to call the name of Jesus as in the Talmud later.

5:29 {We must} (\dei\). Moral necessity left them no choice. They stood precisely where Peter and John were when before the Sanhedrin before (Ac 4:20). {Obey} (\peitharchein\). Old verb from \peithomai\ and \arch^, to obey a ruler. Only by Luke and

Paul in the N.T.

5:30 {Ye slew} (\diecheirisasthe\). First aorist middle indicative of \diacheirizomai\, old verb from \dia\ and \cheir\ (hand), to take in hand, manage, to lay hands on, manhandle, kill. In the N.T. only here and Ac 26:21. {Hanging him upon a tree} (\kremasantes epi xulou\). First aorist active participle of \kremannumi\ (\kremannu“\ seen already in Mt 18:6 and Lu 23:39). Peter refers to De 21:23 as Paul does in Ga 3:13, the curse pronounced on every one who "hangs upon a tree."

5:31 {Exalt} (\ups“sen\). In contrast to their murder of Christ as in 2:23f. Peter repeats his charges with increased boldness. {With his right hand} (\t^i dexifi autou\). So instrumental case, or at his right hand (locative case), or even "to his right hand" (dative case) as in 2:33. {Prince and Saviour} (\arch^gon kai s“t^ra\). See on 3:15. Clearly "Prince" here. {To give} (\tou dounai\). Genitive of articular infinitive (second aorist active of \did“mi) of purpose.

5:32 {We are witnesses} (\h^meis esmen martures\). As in 2:32. {Things} (\rh^mat“n\). Literally, sayings, but like the Hebrew _dabhar_ for "word" it is here used for "things." {And so is the Holy Ghost} (\kai to pneuma to hagion\). The word for "is" (\estin\) is not in the Greek, but this is plainly the meaning. Peter claims the witness of the Holy Spirit to the raising of Jesus Christ, God's Son, by the Father.

5:33 {Were cut to the heart} (\dieprionto\). Imperfect passive of \diapri“\ old verb (\dia, pri“\), to saw in two (\dia\), to cut in two (to the heart). Here it is rage that cuts into their hearts, not conviction of sin as in Ac 2:37. Only here and Ac 7:54 (after Stephen's speech) in the N.T. (cf. Simeon's prophecy in Lu 2:35). {Were minded} (\eboulonto\). Imperfect middle of \boulomai\. They were plotting and planning to kill (\anelein\, as in Ac 2:23; Lu 23:33 which see) then and there. The point in 4:7 was whether the apostles deserved stoning for curing the cripple by demoniacal power, but here it was disobedience to the command of the Sanhedrin which was not a capital offence. "They were on the point of committing a grave judicial blunder" (Furneaux).

5:34 {Gamaliel} (\Gamali^l\). The grandson of Hillel, teacher of Paul (Ac 22:3), later president of the Sanhedrin, and the first of the seven rabbis termed "Rabban." It is held by some that he was one of the doctors who heard the Boy Jesus in the temple (Lu 2:47) and that he was a secret disciple like Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, but there is no evidence of either position. Besides, he appears here as a loyal Pharisee and "a doctor of the law" (\nomodidaskalos). This word appears already in Lu 5:17 of the Pharisaic doctors bent on criticizing Jesus, which see. Paul uses it of Judaizing Christians (1Ti 1:7). Like other great rabbis he had a great saying: "Procure thyself a teacher, avoid being in doubt; and do not accustom thyself to give tithes by guess." He was a man of judicial temper and not prone to go off at a tangent, though his brilliant young pupil Saul went to the limit about Stephen without any restraint on the part of Gamaliel so far as the record goes. Gamaliel champions the cause of the apostles as a Pharisee to score a point against the Sadducees. He acts as a theological opportunist, not as a disciple of Christ. He felt that a temporizing policy was best. There are difficulties in this speech of Gamaliel and it is not clear how Luke obtained the data for the address. It is, of course, possible that Saul was present and made notes of it for Luke afterwards. {Had in honour of all the people} (\timios panti t“i la“i). Ethical dative. \Timios from \tim^, old word meaning precious, dear. {The men} (\tous anthr“pous). Correct text as in verse 35, not "the apostles" as Textus Receptus.

5:35 {Take heed} (\prosechete heautois). Hold your mind (\noun, unexpressed) for or on yourselves (dative case), the usual idiom.

5:36 {Theudas} (\Theudas). Luke represents Gamaliel here about A.D. 35 as speaking of a man who led a revolt before that of Judas the Galilean in connection with the enrolment under Quirinius (Cyrenius) in A.D. 6. But Josephus (_Ant_. XX. 5, 1) tells of a Theudas who led a similar insurrection in the reign of Claudius about A.D. 44 or 45. Josephus (_Ant_. XVIII. 1, 6; XX. 5, 2; _War_ ii. 8, 1 and 17, 8) also describes Judas the Galilean or Gaulonite and places him about A.D. 6. It is not certain that Josephus and Luke (Gamaliel) refer to the same Theudas as the name is an abbreviation of Theodosus, a common name. "Josephus gives an account of four men named Simon who followed each other within forty years, and of three named Judas within ten years, who were all instigators of rebellion" (Hackett). If the same Theudas is meant, then either Josephus or Luke (Gamaliel) has the wrong historical order. In that case one will credit Luke or Josephus according to his estimate of the two as reliable historians. {To be somebody} (\einaí tina\). Indirect assertion with the infinitive and the accusative of general reference (\heauton\) and \tina\, predicate accusative. \Tina\ could be "anybody" or "somebody" according to context, clearly "somebody" of importance here. {Joined themselves} (\proseklith^). Correct text and not \prosekoll^th^ (\Textus Receptus). First aorist passive indicative of \prosklin^, old verb to lean towards, to incline towards. Here only in the N.T. {Was slain} (\an^ireth^). First aorist passive of \anaire^ (cf. verse 33). {Obeyed} (\epeithonto\). Imperfect middle, kept on obeying. {Were dispersed} (\dieluth^san\). First aorist passive indicative (effective aorist) of \dialu^, old verb to dissolve, to go to pieces. Here only in the N.T.

5:37 {Of the enrolment} (\t^s apograph^s\). Described by Josephus (_Ant_. XV. 1, 1). The same word used by Luke of the first enrolment started by Augustus B.C. 8 to 6 (Lu 2:2). See the discussion on Lu 2:2. This is the second enrolment in the fourteen year cycle carried on for centuries as shown by numerous dated papyri. Ramsay (_The Bearing of Recent Discovery on the Trustworthiness of the N.T._) has produced proof from inscriptions that Quirinius was twice in Syria as Luke reports (Robertson, _Luke the Historian in the Light of Research_). {Drew away} (\apest^se\). Causative sense of the first aorist active indicative of \aphist^mi\, made people (\laon\, no need of "some of the") to revolt (apostatize) with him. {He also} (\kakeinos\, crasis for kai ekeinos). That one, also. {Were scattered abroad} (\dieskorpisth^san\). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of \diaskorpiz^, old verb to disperse. Used of sheep (Mr 14:27), of property (Lu 15:13). Aorist here after imperfect (\epeithonto\) as in verse 36.

5:38 {Refrain from} (\apost^te apo\). Second aorist (ingressive) active imperative of \aphist^mi\ of verse 37. Do ye stand off from these men. "Hands off" was the policy of Gamaliel. {For if--be} (\hoti ean--^i\). \Hoti\ gives the reason for the advice. Gamaliel presents two alternatives in terms of two conditional clauses. The first one is stated as a condition of the third class, \ean\ with the present subjunctive ^i\, undetermined with prospect of determination. Assuming that it is from men, "it will be overthrown" (\kataluth^setai\, first future passive of katalu^, to loosen down like a falling house) as was true of the following of Theudas and Judas the Galilean.

5:39 {But if it is of God} (\ei de ek theou estin). The second alternative is a condition of the first class, determined as fulfilled, \ei with the present indicative. By the use of this idiom Gamaliel does put the case more strongly in favor of the apostles than against them. This condition _assumes_ that the thing is so without _affirming_ it to be true. On the basis of this alternative Gamaliel warns the Sanhedrin that they cannot "overthrow" (\katalusai) these men for they in that case must "overthrow" God, {lest haply ye be found} (\m^pote--hureth^te, negative purpose with first aorist passive subjunctive) {even to be fighting against God} (\kai theomachoi, late adjective from \theos\ and \machomai, in LXX and here only in the N.T.).

5:40 {To him they agreed} (\epeisth^san aut^i). First aorist passive indicative of \peith^{, to persuade, the passive to be persuaded by, to listen to, to obey. Gamaliel's shrewd advice scored as against the Sadducaic contention (verse 17). {Not to speak} (\m^lalein). The Sanhedrin repeated the prohibition of 4:18 which the apostles had steadily refused to obey. The Sanhedrin stood by their guns, but refused to shoot. It was a "draw" with Gamaliel as tactical victor over the Sadducees. Clearly now the disciples were set free because only the Sadducees had become enraged while the Pharisees held aloof.

5:41 {They therefore} (\hoi men oun). No answering \de. {They were counted worthy to suffer dishonour for the Name} (\kat^xi^th^san huper tou onomatos atimasth^nai). First aorist passive indicative of \kataxio^{, old verb to count worthy. Three times in N.T. (Lu 20:35; Ac 5:41; 2Th 1:5). First aorist passive infinitive of \atimaz^{, old verb to make one dishonoured (\atimos). Forms here an oxymoron (\oxus, sharp, \moros, foolish) pointedly foolish saying "which is witty or impressive through sheer contradiction or paradox as laborious idleness, sublime indifference" (Vincent). The apostles felt honoured by dishonour. Note the same use of "the Name" as in Jas 2:7; 3Jo 1:7. With the Jews this absolute use of "the Name" meant Jehovah. The Christians now apply it to Jesus.

5:42 {Every day} (\pfsan h^meran). Accusative of extent of time, all through every day. {In the temple and at home} (\en t^i hier^i kai kat' oikon). This was a distinct triumph to go back to the temple where they had been arrested (verse 25) and at home or from house to house, as it probably means (cf. 2:46). It was a great day for the disciples in Jerusalem. {They ceased not} (\ouk epauonto\). Imperfect middle. They kept it up. {Jesus as the Christ} (\ton Christon I'soun\). Jesus is the direct object of the participles \didaskontes\ (teaching) and \euaggelizomenoi\ (preaching or evangelizing) while "the Christ" (\ton Christon\) is the predicate accusative. These words give the substance of the early apostolic preaching as these opening chapters of Acts show, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of promise. Gamaliel had opened the prison doors for them and they took full advantage of the opportunity that now was theirs.

(Acts: Chapter 5)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

6:1 {When the number of the disciples was multiplying} (\pl^thunont^“n t^“n math^t^“n). Genitive absolute of \pl^thun^“, old verb from \pl^thos, fulness, to increase. The new freedom from the intercession of Gamaliel was bearing rich fruit. {A murmuring of the Grecian Jews} (\goggusmos t^“n Hell^nist^“n). Late onomatopoeitic word (LXX) from the late verb \gogguz^“, to mutter, to murmur. The substantive occurs also in Joh 7:12; Php 2:14; 1Pe 4:9. It is the secret grumblings that buzz away till they are heard. These "Grecian Jews" or Hellenists are members of the church in Jerusalem who are Jews from outside of Palestine like Barnabas from Cyprus. These Hellenists had points of contact with the Gentile world without having gone over to the habits of the Gentiles, the Jews of the Western Dispersion. They spoke Greek. {Against the Hebrews} (\pros tous Ebraious). The Jewish Christians from Jerusalem and Palestine. The Aramaean Jews of the Eastern Dispersion are usually classed with the Hebrew (speaking Aramaic) as distinct from the Grecian Jews or Hellenists. {Were neglected} (\parethe^“rounto). Imperfect passive of \parathe^“re^“, old verb, to examine things placed beside (\para) each other, to look beyond (\para\ also), to overlook, to neglect. Here only in the N.T. These widows may receive daily (\kath^merin^i, late adjective from \kath' h^meran, only here in the N.T.) help from the common fund provided for all who need it (Ac 4:32-37). The temple funds for widows were probably not available for those who have now become Christians. Though they were all Christians here concerned, yet the same line of cleavage existed as among the other Jews (Hebrew or Aramaean Jews and Hellenists). It is not here said that the murmuring arose among the widows, but because of them. Women and money occasion the first serious disturbance in the church life. There was evident sensitiveness that called for wisdom.

6:2 {The multitude} (\to pl^thos). The whole church, not just the 120. {Fit} (\areston). Pleasing, verbal adjective from \aresk^“, to please, old word, but in the N.T. only here and Ac 12:3; Joh 8:29; 1Jo 3:22. _Non placet_. {Should forsake} (\kataleipsantas). Late first aorist active participle for usual second aorist \katalipontas from \kataleip^“, to leave behind.

{Serve tables} (\diakonein trapezais). Present active infinitive of \diakone“ from \diakonos (\dia\ and \konis\, dust), to raise a dust in a hurry, to serve, to minister either at table (Joh 12:20), or other service (Joh 12:25f.), to serve as deacon (1Ti 3:10,13). "Tables" here hardly means money-tables as in Joh 2:15, but rather the tables used in the common daily distribution of the food (possibly including the love-feasts, Ac 2:43-47). This word is the same root as \diakonia (ministration) in verse 1 and \diakonos (deacon) in Php 1:1; 1Ti 3:8-13. It is more frequently used in the N.T. of ministers (preachers) than of deacons, but it is quite possible, even probable, that the office of deacon as separate from bishop or elder grew out of this incident in Ac 6:1-7. Furneaux is clear that these "seven" are not to be identified with the later "deacons" but why he does not make clear.

6:3 {Of good report} (\marturoumenous). Present passive participle of \marture“, to bear witness to. Men with a good reputation as well as with spiritual gifts (the Holy Spirit and wisdom). {We may appoint} (\katast^somen). Future active indicative of \kathist^mi, we shall appoint. The action of the apostles follows the choice by the church, but it is promised as a certainty, not as a possibility. The Textus Receptus has a first aorist active subjunctive here (\katast^s“men).

6:4 {But we} (\hemeis de). In contrast to the work given the seven. {The ministry of the word} (\t^i diakonifi tou logou). The same word \diakonifi employed in verse 1, but here about preaching as the special ministry with which the apostles were concerned. For "continue steadfastly" (\proskarter^somen) see on 2:42.

6:5 {Pleased} (\^resen). Aorist active indicative of \aresk“ like Latin _placuit_ when a vote was taken. The use of \en“pion before "the whole multitude" is like the LXX. {They chose} (\exelexanto). First aorist middle indicative of \ekleg“, to pick out for oneself. Each one of the seven has a Greek name and was undoubtedly a Hellenist, not an Aramaean Jew. Consummate wisdom is here displayed for the murmuring had come from the Hellenists, seven of whom were chosen to take proper care of the widows of Hellenists. This trouble was settled to stay settled so far as we know. Nothing is here told of any of the seven except Stephen who is "a man full of faith and the Holy Spirit" and Nicolas "a proselyte of Antioch" (who was not then born a Jew, but had come to the Jews from the Greek world).

6:6 {They laid their hands on them} (\epeth^{kan} autois tas cheiras\). First aorist active indicative of \epitith^{mi}\.

Probably by the apostles who ratified the choice (verse 3). The laying on of hands "was a symbol of the impartation of the gifts and graces which they needed to qualify them for the office. It was of the nature of a prayer that God would bestow the necessary gifts, rather than a pledge that they were actually conferred" (Hackett).

6:7 {Increased} (\^{uxanen}\). Imperfect active, kept on growing all the more because the apostles were now relieved from the daily ministration of the food. {Multiplied} (\epl^{thuneto}\). Imperfect passive. The two imperfects kept pace with each other. {Of the priests} (\t^{n hier}ⁿ\). Who were usually Sadducees. It was a sad day for Annas and Caiaphas and all the sect of the Sadducees (5:17). {Were obedient to} (\hup^{kouon}\). Imperfect active of \hupakou^o\, repetition, one after another. {The faith} (\t^{i pistei}\). Here meaning the gospel, the faith system as in Ro 1:5; Ga 1:23; Jude 1:3, etc. Here the word means more than individual trust in Christ.

6:8 {Wrought} (\epoiei\). Imperfect active, repeatedly wrought. Evidently a man like Stephen would not confine his "ministry" to "serving tables." He was called in verse 5 "full of faith and the Holy Spirit." Here he is termed "full of grace (so the best MSS., not faith) and power." The four words give a picture of remarkable attractiveness. The grace of God gave him the power and so "he kept on doing great wonders and signs among the people." He was a sudden whirlwind of power in the very realm of Peter and John and the rest.

6:9 {The synagogue of the Libertines} (\ek t^s sunag^gs t^s legomen^s Libertinⁿ\). The Libertines (Latin _libertinus_, a freedman or the son of a freedman) were Jews, once slaves of Rome (perhaps descendants of the Jews taken to Rome as captives by Pompey), now set free and settled in Jerusalem and numerous enough to have a synagogue of their own. Schuerer calls a Talmudic myth the statement that there were 480 synagogues in Jerusalem. There were many, no doubt, but how many no one knows. These places of worship and study were in all the cities of the later times where there were Jews enough to maintain one. Apparently Luke here speaks of five such synagogues in Jerusalem

(that of the Libertines, of the Cyrenians, of the Alexandrians, of Cilicia, and of Asia). There probably were enough Hellenists in Jerusalem to have five such synagogues. But the language of Luke is not clear on this point. He may make only two groups instead of five since he uses the article \t“n\ twice (once before \Libertin“n kai Kur^nai“n kai Alexandre“n\, again before \apo Kilikias kai Asias). He also changes from the genitive plural to \apo\ before Cilicia and Asia. But, leaving the number of the synagogues unsettled whether five or two, it is certain that in each one where Stephen appeared as a Hellenist preaching Jesus as the Messiah he met opposition. Certain of them "arose" (\anest^san\)) "stood up" after they had stood all that they could from Stephen, "disputing with Stephen" (\sunz^tountes t“i Stephan“i\)). Present active participle of \sunz^te“\, to question together as the two on the way to Emmaus did (Lu 24:15). Such interruptions were common with Jews. They give a skilled speaker great opportunity for reply if he is quick in repartee. Evidently Stephen was fully equipped for the emergency. One of their synagogues had men from Cilicia in it, making it practically certain that young Saul of Tarsus, the brilliant student of Gamaliel, was present and tried his wits with Stephen. His ignominious defeat may be one explanation of his zest in the stoning of Stephen (Ac 8:1).

6:10 {They were not able to withstand} (\ouk ischuon antist^nai\)). Imperfect active of \ischu“\, to have strength, and ingressive second aorist active (intransitive) infinitive of \anthist^mi\). They continued unable (without strength enough) to take a stand against. Stephen knocked them down, Saul included, as fast as they got up. Stephen was like a battery charged and in action. {The wisdom and spirit} (\t^i sophifi kai pneumatì\)). Dative case. They stood up against Stephen's wisdom and the Holy Spirit "by whom he spoke" (\h“i elalei\)). Instrumental case and the relative agrees with "Spirit." He kept on speaking so (\elalei\, imperfect active). It was a desperate situation.

6:11 {Then they suborned men} (\tote hupebalon andras\)). Second aorist active indicative of \hupoball“\, old verb, but here only in the N.T., to put under like a carpet, to bring men under one's control by suggestion or by money. One recalls the plight of Caiaphas in the trial of Jesus when he sought false witnesses. _Subornaverunt_. They put these men forward in an underhand way for fraud. {Blasphemous words against Moses and God} (\blasph^ma eis M'us'n kai ton theon). The punishment for blasphemy was stoning to death. See Mt 12:31 for discussion of the word \blasph'mia, blasphemē, blasphemō, all in the N.T. from \blaptō, to harm, and \ph'mō, speech, harmful speech, or \blaxō, stupid, and \ph'mō. But the charge against Stephen was untrue. Please note that Moses is here placed before God and practically on a par with God in the matter of blasphemy. The purpose of this charge is to stir the prejudices of the people in the matter of Jewish rights and privileges. It is the Pharisees who are conducting this attack on Stephen while the Sadducees had led them against Peter and John. The position of Stephen is critical in the extreme for the Sadducees will not help him as Gamaliel did the apostles.

6:12 {They stirred up the people} (\sunekin^san ton laon). They shook the people together like an earthquake. First aorist active indicative of \sunkine^“\, to throw into commotion. Old verb, but here only in the N.T. The elders and the scribes (Pharisees) are reached, but no word about the Sadducees. This is the first record of the hostility of the masses against the disciples (Vincent). {Came upon him} (\epistantes). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of \ephist^mi“\, Rushed at him. {Seized} (\sun^rpan). Effective aorist active of \sunarpaz^“\ as if they caught him after pursuit.

6:13 {False witnesses} (\marturas pseudeis). Just as Caiaphas did with Jesus. {Ceaseth not} (\ou pauetai). Wild charge just like a false witness that Stephen talks in the synagogues against the law and the holy temple.

6:14 {We have heard him say} (ak^koamen autou legontos). The only direct testimony and evidently wrong. Curiously like the charge brought against Jesus before Caiaphas that he would destroy the temple and build it again in three days. Undoubtedly Stephen had said something about Christianity before as meant for others besides Jews. He had caught the spirit of Jesus about worship as shown to the woman at Sychar in Joh 4 that God is spirit and to be worshipped by men anywhere and everywhere without having to come to the temple in Jerusalem. It was inflammable material surely and it was easy to misrepresent and hard to clear up. {This Jesus of Nazareth} (I^sous ho Naz^raios houtos). With contempt.

6:15 {As if the face of an angel} (h“sei pros“pon aggelou).

Even his enemies saw that, wicked as they were. See Ex 34:30 for the face of Moses when he came down from Sinai (2Co 3:7). Page quotes Tennyson: "God's glory smote him on the face." Where were Peter and John at this crisis? Apparently Stephen stands alone before the Sanhedrin as Jesus did. But he was not alone for he saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God (Ac 7:56). There was little that Peter and John could have done if they had been present. Gamaliel did not interpose this time for the Pharisees were behind the charges against Stephen, false though they were as Gamaliel could have found out.

(Acts: Chapter 6)

7:1 {Are these things so?} (\ei tauta hout“s echei\). On this use of \ei\ in a direct question see on 1:6. Literally "Do these things hold thus?" A formal question by the high priest like our "Do you plead guilty, or not guilty?" (Furneaux). The abrupt question of the high priest would serve to break the evident spell of the angelic look on Stephen's face. Two charges had been made against Stephen (1) speaking against the holy temple, (2) changing the customs which Moses had delivered. Stephen could not give a yes or no answer to these two charges. There was an element of truth in each of them and a large amount of error all mixed together. So he undertakes to explain his real position by the historical method, that is to say, by a rapid survey of God's dealing with the people of Israel and the Gentiles. It is the same method adopted by Paul in Pisidian Antioch (Ac 13:16ff.) after he had become the successor of Stephen in his interpretation of the universal mission of Christianity. If one is disposed to say that Luke made up this speech to suit Stephen's predicament, he has to explain how the style is less Lukan than the narrative portions of Acts with knowledge of Jewish traditions that a Greek would not be likely to know. Precisely how Luke obtained the data for the speech we do not know, but Saul heard it and Philip, one of the seven, almost certainly. Both could have given Luke help about it. It is even possible that some one took notes of this important address. We are to remember also that the speech was interrupted at the end and may not include all that Stephen meant to say. But enough is given to give us a good idea of how Stephen met the first charge "by showing that the worship of God is not confined to Jerusalem or the Jewish temple" (Page). Then he answers the second charge by proving that God had many dealings with their fathers before Moses came and that Moses foretold the coming of the Messiah who is now known to be Jesus. It is at this point (verse 51) that Stephen becomes passionate and so powerful that the wolves in the Sanhedrin lose all self-control. It is a great and masterful exposition of the worldwide mission of the gospel of Christ in full harmony with the Great Commission of Christ. The apostles had been so busy answering the Sadducees concerning the Resurrection of Christ and maintaining their freedom to teach and preach that they had not pushed the world-wide propaganda of the gospel as Jesus had commanded after they had received the Promise of the Father. But Stephen had proclaimed the same message of Christ and was now facing the same fate. Peter's mind had been enlightened by the Holy Spirit so that he could rightly interpret Joel and David in the light of Pentecost. "So Stephen read the history of the Old Testament with new eyes in the light of the life and death of Jesus" (Furneaux).

7:2 {Brethren and fathers} (\andres adelphoi kai pateres\). The spectators (brethren) and members of the Sanhedrin (fathers) as Paul in Ac 22:1. {Hearken} (\akousate\). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative, Give me your attention now. {The God of glory} (\Ho theos t's dox's\). The God characterized by glory (genitive case, genus or kind) as seen in the Shekinah, the visible radiance of God. Jesus is also called "the Glory"=the Shekinah in Jas 2:1. Cf. Ex 25:22; 40:34; Le 9:6; Heb 9:5. By these words Stephen refutes the charge of blasphemy against God in Ac 6:11. {Appeared} (\phth\). First aorist passive indicative of \hora\'. See on Lu 23:43. Before there was temple or tabernacle and away over in Mesopotamia (Ur of the Chaldees, Ge 11:31), even before (\prin ^\ with the infinitive) he dwelt in Haran (\Charran\, or Carrae not far from Edessa, where Crassus met death after his defeat by the Parthians B.C. 53).

7:3 {Which I shall shew thee} (\h^n an soi deix'\). Indefinite relative clause with \an\ and the aorist active subjunctive (same form in first person singular as the future active indicative). Abraham followed on as God led him.

7:4 {When his father was dead} (\meta to apothanein auton\). \Meta\ with the accusative of the articular infinitive and the accusative of general reference (\auton\), regular Greek idiom. In Ge 11:32 it is stated that Terah died at Haran at the age of 205. There are various explanations of the discrepancy, but no one that seems certain. It is possible (Hackett, Felten) that Abraham is mentioned first in Ge 11:26 because he became the most prominent and was really younger than Haran his brother who died before the first migration who was really sixty years older than Abraham. According to this view Terah was 130 years old at the birth of Abraham, leaving Abraham 75 at the death of Terah (205). {Wherein ye now dwell} (\eis h^n humeis nun katoikeite\). Note \eis\ in the sense of \en\ as often. Note also emphatic use of \humeis\ (ye) and now (\nun\).

7:5 {Not so much as to set his foot on} (\oude b^ma podos). From De 2:5. Old word from \bain^, to go, to step. "Stepping of a foot," only instance of this original meaning in the N.T. From this it comes to mean a platform reached by steps, official seat of a judge (Mt 27:19). The field purchased by Abraham (Ge 23:9-17) was not a gift from God. {Promised} (\ep^ggeilato). First aorist middle indicative of \epaggell^, common verb. See Ge 12:7; 17:8; 48:4 for this promise. So God appeared again to Abraham in a strange land. {In possession} (\eis kataschesin). Late word, in LXX, and in N.T. only here and verse 45. From \katech^, to hold back, then to hold fast (or down), to possess. It was fulfilled in the descendants of Abraham. {When as yet he had no child} (\ouk ontos aut^i teknou). Genitive absolute with negative \ouk rather than \m^ to emphasize actual absence of a child. He had only the promise of God about the land and the child.

7:6 {On this wise} (\hout^s). A free quotation from Ge 15:13. {Should sojourn} (\estai paroikon). Shall be a sojourner, \Paroikos (\para\, beside\, \oikos\, home), one dwelling near one's home, but not of it, so a stranger, foreigner, old word, often in LXX, temporary residence without full rights of citizenship (7:29; 13:17), and descriptive of Christians (Eph 2:19; 1Pe 1:17; 2:11). {In a strange land} (\en g^i allotrifi). In a land not one's own, that belongs to another, alien as in Mt 17:25f., which see. {Four hundred years} (\et^ tetrakosia). Accusative of duration of time. As in Ge 15:13, but a round number as in Ex 12:40 the time is 430 years. But in Ga 3:17 Paul, following the LXX in Ex 12:40, takes the 430 years to cover the period in Canaan and the stay in Egypt, cutting the sojourn in Egypt to about half. Josephus gives it both ways. Hackett suggests two solutions, one that there were two ways of reckoning the period among the Jews with no way of settling it, the other that by the 430 years in Egypt the writers meant to include Canaan also as merely the preliminary to the period in Egypt.

7:7 {Will I judge} (\krin^ eg^). Future (accent on ^) active indicative of \krin^ and \eg^ (I) expressed is emphatic. {In this place} (\en t^i top^i tout^i). Quoted from Ex 3:12 and referring to Sinai or Horeb, but Stephen applies it to the Promised Land.

7:8 {The covenant of circumcision} (\diath^k^n peritom^s\). A covenant marked by (genitive) circumcision (no article) of which circumcision is the sign (Ro 4:11) as set forth in Ge 17:9-14. In the ancient Greek \diath^k^\ was usually will (Latin, _testamentum_) and \sunth^k^\ was used for covenant (\sun\, together, rather than dia\, between). But the LXX and the N.T. use \diath^k^\ for covenant (will in Heb 9:15f.) as Lightfoot on Ga 3:16 says: "The LXX translation and New Testament writers probably preferred \diath^k^\ as better expressing the {free grace} of God than \sunth^k^\." {And so} (\kai hout^s\). After the covenant was made and as a sign and seal of it.

7:9 {Moved with jealousy} (\z^l^santes\). First aorist active participle of \z^lo^s\, old verb from \z^los\ (Ac 5:17), to burn or boil with zeal, and then with envy as here (17:5, etc.) and Ge 37:11.

7:10 {Delivered him out} (\exeilato auton ek\). First aorist middle indicative of \exaire^s\, old verb to take out, snatch out. Note repetition of ek\. {Pharaoh King of Egypt} (\Phara^basile^s Aiguptou\). Pharaoh is not a name, but a title, the Egyptian _perff_ meaning great house.

7:11 {Found no sustenance} (\ouch h^uriskon chortasmata\). Imperfect active, kept on not finding. {Chortasmata} is from {chortaz^s}, originally to feed with grass (\chortos\) or herbs. Old word, but only here in the N.T. and includes food for both men and animals. In Ge 24:25,32 it is fodder for the cattle, a first necessity for owners of herds of cattle.

7:12 {That there was corn} (\onta sitia\). Participle (present active of eimi) in indirect discourse, after \akousas\, "heard of corn being in Egypt." \Sitia\ is diminutive of \sitos\ and means grain (wheat, barley, not our maize or Indian corn), old word also for provisions, victuals, here only in the N.T. {The first time} (\pr^ton\). While Jacob himself remained in Canaan before he went down to Egypt and died there (verse 15f.).

7:13 {At the second time} (\en t^i deuter^i\). This expression only here in the N.T. This second visit is recorded in Ge 45:1ff. {Became manifest} (\phaneron egeneto\). In Ge 41:12 the fact that Joseph was a Hebrew had been incidentally mentioned to Pharaoh, but now it was made clear to him.

7:14 {Three-score and fifteen souls} (\en psuchais hebdom^{konta} pente\). Stephen follows the LXX which counts some grandchildren of Joseph and so makes it 75 whereas Ge 46:26 has 66 and then the next verse makes it 70 including Jacob and Joseph with his two sons. The use of \en\ means "consisting in."

7:16 {They were carried over unto Shechem} (\meteteth^{san eis} Suchem\). First aorist passive of \metatith^{mi}\, only here in the N.T. in this sense of changing places. Jacob was buried in the cave of Machpelah (Ge 50:13). The O.T. does not say where the sons of Jacob were buried save that Joseph was buried in Shechem (Jos 24:32). Possibly only "our fathers" without Jacob is the subject of "were carried." {Which Abraham bought} (\hⁱ "n^{sato} Abraam\). Hackett is sure that our present text is wrong. Hort notes some sixty "primitive errors" in the critical text of the N.T. It is possible that this is also one. If "Jacob" is substituted for "Abraham," the matter is cleared up. "It is quite as likely, judging a priori, that the word producing the error escaped from some early copyist as that so glaring an error was committed by Stephen" (Hackett). At any rate Abraham bought a burying-place, the cave of Machpelah, from Ephron the Hittite at Hebron (Ge 23:16), while Jacob bought a field from the sons of Hamor at Shechem (Ge 33:19; Jos 24:32). Abraham had built an altar at Shechem when he entered Canaan (Ge 12:6f.). It is possible, of course, that Abraham also bought the ground on which the altar stood. {In Shechem} (\en Suchem\). This is the reading of Aleph B C instead of the Textus Receptus \tou Suchem\ which makes it "Hamar the father of Sichem." "In Shechem" is the true reading.

7:17 {Drew nigh} (\^{ggizen}\). Imperfect active, was drawing nigh.

7:18 {Another king} (\basileus heteros\). A different kind of king also, probably a king of the new dynasty after the shepherd kings had been expelled from Egypt. {Who knew not Joseph} (\hos ouk^{idei ton I^sph}\). Second past perfect of \oida\ used like an imperfect. Joseph's history and services meant nothing to the new king. "The previous dynasty had been that of the Hyksos: the new king was Ahmes who drove out the Hyksos" (Knobel).

7:19 {Dealt subtilly} (\katasophisamenos\). First aorist middle participle of \katasophizomai\, late compound (\kata\ and \sophiz^{ai}\, old verb, to make wise, to become wise, then to play the sophist), perfective use of \kata\. In the LXX, but here only in the N.T. To use fraud, craft, deceit. {That they should cast out their babes} (\tou poiein ta breph[^] ektheta\). \Tou poiein\ (genitive of the articular present infinitive) can be either design or result. The Revised Version here takes it as purpose while the Authorized as result. In either case Pharaoh required the Israelites to expose their children to death, a possible practice done voluntarily in heathen China and by heathen in so-called Christian lands. But the Israelites fought against such an iniquity. The word \ektheta\ (exposed, cast out) is a verbal adjective from \ektith[^]mi\. It is an old word, but here only in the N.T. and not in the LXX. {To the end they might not live} (\eis to m[^]z[^]ogoneisthai\). Purpose with \eis\ and the articular infinitive (present middle). This compound verb is from \z[^]ogonos\ (from \z[^]os\, alive, and \gen[^]\, to bear) and is used by late writers and the LXX. It is three times in the N.T. (here, Lu 17:33; 1Ti 6:13) in the sense to preserve alive.

7:20 {Exceeding fair} (\asteios t[^]i the[^]i\). Ethical dative, fair to God (as God looked at him). \Asteios\ is from \astu\, city, and so means "of the city," with city manners and polish. Old word, only twice in the N.T. (here and Heb 11:23) and both times about Moses and taken from Ex 2:2. {He was nourished} (\anetrph[^]\). Second aorist passive indicative of \anatreph[^]\. He was brought up at home for three months in defiance of the new Pharaoh.

7:21 {When he was cast out} (\ektethentos autou\). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle of \ektith[^]mi\.

{Took up} (\aneilato\). Second aorist middle indicative (with first aorist vowel |a| instead of |e| as often in the _Koin,_) of \anaire[^]\, common in the N.T. in the sense of take up and make away with, to kill as in verse 28, but here only in the N.T. in the original sense of taking up from the ground and with the middle voice (for oneself). Quoted here from Ex 2:5. The word was used of old for picking up exposed children as here. Vincent quotes Aristophanes (_Clouds_, 531): "I exposed (the child), and some other women, having taken it, adopted (\aneileto\) it." Vulgate has _sustulit_. "Adopted" is the idea here. "After the birth of a child the father took it up to his bosom, if he meant to rear it; otherwise it was doomed to perish" (Hackett).

{Nourished him for her own son} (\anethrepsato auton heaut[^]i eis huion\). Literally, "she nursed him up for herself (\heaut[^]i\ besides middle voice) as a son." This use of \eis\=as occurs in the old Greek, but is very common in the LXX as a translation of the Hebrew _le_. The tradition is that she designed Moses for the throne as the Pharaoh had no son (Josephus, _Ant_. ii. 9, 7).

7:22 {Was instructed} (\epaideuth^). First aorist passive indicative of \paideu^, to train a child (\pais\), the usual idea in ancient Greek as here. The notion of chastisement (Heb 12:6) is also in the old Greek and especially in the LXX and the N.T. Here with instrumental case (\pas^i sophifi\) or the locative. The accusative would usually be retained after this verb. The priestly caste in Egypt was noted for their knowledge of science, astronomy, medicine, and mathematics. This reputation was proverbial (IKi 4:30). Modern discoveries have thrown much light on the ancient civilization of Egypt. Moses, like Paul, was a man of the schools. {Mighty in his words and works} (\dunatos en logois kai ergois autou\). The same phrase used of Jesus in Lu 24:19. The adjective \dunatos\ is employed of Apollos as an interpreter of the Scriptures (Ac 18:24). Moses did not have the rhetorical skill or eloquence of Aaron (Ex 4:10), but his words like his deeds carried weight and power.

7:23 {When he was well-nigh forty years old} (\H^s epl^routo aut^i tessarakontaet^s chronos\). A rather awkward Greek idiom for the English: "When a forty year old time (same idiom in Ac 13:18 and only twice in the N.T.) was being fulfilled (\epl^routo\, imperfect passive) for him (dative case)." The life of Moses is divided into three periods of forty years each (in Egypt 40 years, in Midian 40, governed Israel 40, 120 when he died, De 34:7). {It came into his heart} (\aneb^ epi t^n kardian autou\). Second aorist active indicative of \anabain^, common verb. Came up as if from the lower depths of his nature. This Hebrew image occurs in Jer 3:16; Isa 65:17; 1Co 2:9. {To visit} (\episkepsasthai\). First aorist middle infinitive of \episkeptomai\, old verb to go to see for oneself, with his own eyes, to help if possible. Used of God visiting his people (Lu 7:16). Our "visit" is from Latin _video_, to see, _visito_, to go to see. During the Welsh mining troubles the Prince of Wales made a sympathetic visit to see for himself the actual condition of the coal miners. Moses desired to know first hand how his kinsmen were faring.

7:24 {Suffer wrong} (\adikoumenon\). Present passive participle of \adik^o\). By blows (Ex 2:11). {Avenged} (\epoi^sen ekdik^{sin}). First aorist active indicative of \poie“. This idiom occurs in Lu 18:7 with \ekdik^{sin} (this from ekdike“ and that from ekdikos without right or law dik^ and then exacting law of right out of ek one, exacting vengeance). {Him that was oppressed} (\t“i kataponoumen“i). Present passive articular participle in the dative case of \kataponeo\, to tire down with toil, to treat roughly, common in late Greek, in the N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:7 (sore distressed). The man was on the point of being overcome. {Smiting} (\pataxas\). First aorist active participle of \patass“, in the old Greek the beat of the heart, only in the LXX and N.T. to smite a deadly blow as here like \pl^{ss}“.

7:25 {He supposed} (\enomizen\). Imperfect active of \nomiz“. He was supposing, Stephen explains, when he smote the Egyptian. {That his brethren understood} (\sunienai tous adelphous\). Present active infinitive of \suni^{mi}\, to send (put) together, to grasp, to comprehend, in indirect discourse with the accusative of general reference. {By his hand was giving them deliverance} (\dia cheiros autou did“sin sot^{rian} autois\). Picturesque use of "hand" as in 2:23, present active indicative of \did“mi\ retained in indirect discourse after imperfect \enomizen\. But they understood not (\hoi de ou sun^{kan}\). Page notes "the rhetorical power of these words" from Stephen. \Sun^{kan} (first aorist indicative, k| aorist) refers to \sunienai\ just before.

7:26 {The day following} (\tⁱ epiousⁱ h^{merfi}\). Locative case, "on the following day" (from epeimi, to come upon, to approach, present active participle epi“n -ousa, -on). Common phrase in old Greek both with \h^{mera} (day) as here and without as 16:11. Only in Acts in the N.T. {Appeared} (\“phth^). First aorist passive indicative of \hora“\ not with idea that only a vision but rather that it was sudden or unexpected. {As they strove} (\machomenois\). Present middle participle of \machomai\, actually fighting. {Would have set them at one again} (\sun^{llassen} autous eis eir^{nen}\). Better, he tried to reconcile them (or change them into peace). It is the conative imperfect active as in Mt 3:14 of \sunallass“, only here in the N.T. though common in the old Greek. Vulgate has _reconciliabat_. The usual word in the N.T. for reconcile is \katallass“. {Do ye wrong one to another} (\adikeite all^{lous}\). The same word used in verse 24 of the wrong done one of the Hebrews by the Egyptian, but here both are "brethren."

7:27 {Thrust him away} (\ap“sato auton\). First aorist middle indicative (_Koin, _for Attic \ape“sato\) of \ap“the“, to push away from oneself in middle voice as here, common in old Greek. Again in verse 39; 13:46; Ro 11:1; 1Ti 1:19. It is always the man who is doing the wrong who is hard to reconcile.

7:28 {Wouldest thou kill me?} (\m^ anelein me su theleis\). Expecting the answer no, but a thrust direct at Moses, Do you wish to kill me (note \me su\ right together, {me thou}). See Ex 2:14 quoted by Stephen.

7:29 {Sojourner} (\paroikos\). Temporary dweller (cf. Abraham in verse 6) in Midian though for forty years.

7:30 Sentence begins with genitive absolute again. {In a flame of fire in a bush} (\en phlogi puros batou\). Horeb in Ex 3:1; but Sinai and Horeb were "probably peaks of one mountain range" (Page), Horeb "the mountain of the dried-up ground," Sinai "the mountain of the thorns." Literally, "in the flame of fire of a bush" (two genitives, \puros\ and \batou\ dependent on \phlogi\, flame). Descriptive genitives as in 9:15; 2Th 1:8. \Batos\ (bush) is the wild acacia (_mimosa nilotica _). In Ex 3:20 it is Jehovah who speaks. Hence "angel" here with Stephen is understood to be the Angel of the Presence, the Eternal Logos of the Father, the Angel of Jehovah.

7:31 {The sight} (\to horama\). Used of visions in the N.T. as in Mt 17:9. {As he drew near} (\proserchomenou autou\). Genitive absolute with present middle participle of \proserchomai\. {A voice of the Lord} (\ph“n^ kuriou\). Here the angel of Jehovah of verse 30 is termed Jehovah himself. Jesus makes powerful use of these words in his reply to the Sadducees in defence of the doctrine of the resurrection and the future life (Mr 12:26; Mt 22:32; Lu 20:37f.) that God here describes himself as the God of the living. {Trembled} (\entromos genomenos\). Literally, becoming tremulous or terrified. The adjective \entromos\ (_en, tromos\ from \trem“, to tremble, to quake) occurs in Plutarch and the LXX. In the N.T. only here and Ac 16:29. {Durst not} (\ouk etolma\). Imperfect active, was not daring, negative conative imperfect.

7:33 {Holy ground} (\g^ hagia\). The priests were barefooted when they ministered in the temple. Moslems enter their mosques barefooted today. Cf. Jos 5:15. {Sandal} (\hupod^ma, bound under) is here "a distributive singular" (Hackett). Even the ground near the bush was "holy," a fine example for Stephen's argument.

7:34 {I have surely seen} (\id^"n eidon). Imitation of the Hebrew infinitive absolute, (Ex 3:7) "Seeing I saw" (cf. Heb 6:14). {The affliction} (\t^"n kak^"sin). From \kako^", to treat evilly (from \kakos, evil). Old word, here only in the N.T. and from Ex 3:7. {Groaning} (\stenagmou). Old word from \stenaz^", to sigh, to groan. In the N.T. only here and Ro 8:26. Root \sten in our word stentorian. {I am come down} (\kateb^"n). Second aorist active indicative of \katabain^", I came down. {To deliver} (\exelesthai). Second aorist middle infinitive of \exaire^", to take out for myself. {I will send} (\aposteil^"). First aorist active subjunctive (hortatory of \apostell^", "Let me send").

7:35 {This Moses} (\Touton ton M^"us^"n). Rhetorical repetition follows this description of Moses (five times, anaphora, besides the use here, six cases of \houtos\ here about Moses: verse 35 twice, 36,37,38,40). Clearly Stephen means to draw a parallel between Moses and Jesus. They in Egypt {denied} (\^"rn^"santo) Moses as now you the Jews denied (\^"rn^"sasthe, 3:13) Jesus. Those in Egypt scouted Moses as "ruler and judge" (verses 27,35, \archonta kai dikast^"n) and God "hath sent" (\apestalken, perfect active indicative, state of completion) Moses "both a ruler and a deliverer" (\archonta kai lutr^"t^"n) as Jesus was to be (Lu 1:68; 2:38; Heb 9:12; Tit 2:14). "Ransomer" or "Redeemer" (\lutr^"t^"s) is not found elsewhere, \lutron (ransom), \lutro^", to ransom, and \lutr^"sis, ransoming or redemption, are found often. In Ac 5:31 Christ is termed "Prince and Saviour." {With the hand} (\sun cheiri). So the correct text. The Pharisees had accused Stephen of blaspheming "against Moses and God" (6:11). Stephen here answers that slander by showing how Moses led the people out of Egypt in co-operation (\sun) with the hand of the Angel of Jehovah.

7:37 {Like unto me} (\h^"s eme). This same passage Peter quoted to the crowd in Solomon's Porch (Ac 3:22). Stephen undoubtedly means to argue that Moses was predicting the Messiah as a prophet like himself who is no other than Jesus so that these Pharisees are in reality opposing Moses. It was a neat turn.

7:38 {In the church in the wilderness} (\en tⁱ ekkl^hsifi en tⁱ er^m“i\). Better rendered "congregation" here as in Heb 2:12 (Ps 22:22), the people of Israel gathered at Mt. Sinai, the whole nation. Moses is here represented as receiving the law from an angel as in Heb 2:2; Ga 3:19 (De 33:2, LXX) and so was a mediator (\mesit^s\) or middle man between the angel and the people whereas Jesus is the Mediator of a better covenant (Heb 8:6). But Exodus does not speak of an angel. {Living oracles} (\logia z^h“nta\). A \logion\ is a little word (diminutive of \logos\). Common in the old Greek, LXX, Philo, in ecclesiastical writers for sayings of Christ, Papias (for instance) saying that Matthew wrote in Hebrew (Aramaic) "Logia of Jesus." Oxyrhynchus papyri fragments called "Logia of Jesus" are of much interest though only fragments. The Greeks used it of the "oracles" or brief sayings from Delphi. In the N.T. the word occurs only four times (Ac 7:38; Ro 3:2; Heb 5:12; 1Pe 4:11). Here the participle \z^h“nta\, living, is the same used by Peter (1Pe 2:4f.), stone (\lithos\) of Christ and Christians. The words from God to Moses are still "living" today. In 1Pe 4:11 the word is applied to one who speaks \logia theou\ (oracles of God). In Ro 3:2 Paul refers to the substance of the law and of prophecy. In Heb 5:12 the writer means the substance of the Christian religious teaching.

7:39 {To whom} (\h^h“i\). That is Moses, this Moses. {Would not be} (\ouk ^hthel^hsan genesthai\). Aorist active, negative aorist, were unwilling to become (\genesthai\) obedient. {Thrust him from them} (\ap^h“santo\). Indirect middle of the very verb used of the man (verse 27) who "thrust" Moses away from him. {Turned back} (\estraph^hsan\). Second aorist passive indicative of \streph^h“, to turn. They yearned after the fleshpots of Egypt and even the gods of Egypt. It is easy now to see why Stephen has patiently led his hearers through this story. He is getting ready for the home-thrust.

7:40 {Gods which shall go before us} (\theous hoi proporeusontai h^hm“n\). Ex 32:1. As guides and protectors, perhaps with some allusion to the pillar of fire and of cloud that had gone before them (Ex 13:21). The future indicative here with \hoi\ (relative) expresses purpose. {Ye wot not} (\ouk oidamen\). We do not know. How quickly they had forgotten both God and Moses while Moses was absent in the mount with God. {Become of him} (\egeneto aut^h“i\). Happened to him. "This" (\houtos\) here is a contemptuous allusion to Moses by the people.

7:41 {They made a calf} (\emoschopoi^san). First aorist active indicative of \moschopoie^{\}, here only in the N.T. and unknown elsewhere. The LXX (Ex 32:3) has \epoi^se moschon from which phrase the word is evidently made. Aaron made the calf, but so did the people (Ex 32:35). {The idol} (\t^i eid^i). Stephen calls it by the right name. The people said it was their way of worshipping Jehovah! So the Egyptians worshipped the bull Apis at Memphis as the symbol of Osiris (the sun). They had another sacred bull Mnevis at Leontopolis. \Eid^lon (from \eid^os\, form or figure) is the image or likeness of anything. The heathen worship the god through the image or idol. {Rejoiced} (\euphrainonto). Imperfect, middle, kept on rejoicing (Ex 32:6,18) or making merry.

7:42 {Gave them up} (\pared^ken). First aorist active indicative of \paradid^mi. This same form occurs three times like clods on a coffin in a grave in Ro 1:24,26,28 where Paul speaks of God giving the heathen up to their lusts. {To serve the host of heaven} (\latreuein t^i stratifi tou ouranou). The verb \latreu^{\} is used of the worship of God (Mt 4:10) as well as of idols as here (from \latron\, hire, \latris\, hireling, then to serve). But the worship of the host of heaven (De 17:3; 2Ki 17:16; 21:3; 2Ch 33:3,5; Jer 8:2; 19:13) is Sabaism or worship of the host (\stratia) of heaven (sun, moon, and stars) instead of the Lord of hosts. This star-worship greatly injured the Jews. {In the book of the prophets} (\en bibl^i t^i n proph^i n). That is the twelve minor prophets which the Jews counted as one book (cf. Ac 13:40). This quotation is from Am 5:25-27. The greater prophets were Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel. {Slain beasts} (\sphagia). Here only in the N.T. (from Am 5:25) \sphag^{\}, slaughter, \sphaz^{\}, to slay.

7:43 {The tabernacle of Moloch} (\t^i n sk^i n^i tou Moloch). Or tent of Moloch which they took up after each halt instead of the tabernacle of Jehovah. Moloch was the god of the Amorites to whom children were offered as live sacrifices, an ox-headed image with arms outstretched in which children were placed and hollow underneath so that fire could burn underneath. {The star of the god Rephan} (\to astron tou theou Rompha). Spelled also Romphan and Remphan. Supposed to be Coptic for the star Saturn to which the Egyptians, Arabs, and Phoenicians gave worship. But some scholars take the Hebrew _Kiyyoon_ to mean statues and not a proper name at all, "statues of your gods" carried in procession, making "figures" (\tupous) with both "tabernacle" and "star" which they carried in procession. {I will carry} (\metoiki). Attic future of \metoikis from \metoikiz. {Beyond Babylon} (\epekeina Babul^{nos}). The Hebrew and the LXX have "beyond Damascus." An adverbial preposition (\ep' ekeina with \mer understood) used in the old Greek and the LXX with the ablative case and meaning "beyond." Here only in the N.T. in quotation from Am 5:27.

7:44 {The tabernacle of the testimony} (\h^ sk^ n^ tou marturiou). Probably suggested by the mention of "the tabernacle of Moloch" (verse 43). See on ⁷Mt 17:4 for discussion of \sk^ n^ (from \skia, shadow, root \ska, to cover). This first sanctuary was not the temple, but the tent in the wilderness. "Stephen passes on from the conduct of the Israelites to his other argument that God is not necessarily worshipped in a particular spot" (Page). {According to the figure} (\kata ton tupon). According to the type or pattern. \Tupos is from \tupt, to strike, to smite, and is the print of the blow (Joh 20:25), then the figure formed by a blow or impression like our type, a model or example. Quoted from Ex 25:40. Common word in the old Greek. {That he had seen} (\hon he^{rakei}). Past perfect active of \hora, to see (double reduplication).

7:45 {Which} (\h^ n). Agreeing with \sk^ n^ n, not with \tupon. {In their turn} (\diadexamenoi). First aorist middle participle of \diadechomai, to receive through another, to receive in succession or in turn. Late Greek, only here in N.T. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 115) argues from a second century B.C. papyrus that \diadochos means rather deputy or court official than successor. {With Joshua} (\meta I^sou). With Jesus, the Greek form of Joshua (contracted from Jehoshua, Mt 1:21), as in Heb 4:8. {When they entered on the possession of the nations} (\en t^ i kataschesei t^ n ethn^ n). Literally "in (or at the time of) the possession of the nations." See on ⁷7:5 for the only other N.T. instance of \kataschesis. {Which} (\h^ n). The nations, genitive by attraction to case of \ethn^ n. {Thrust out} (\ex^{sen}). First aorist active indicative of \ex^{the}, to push out, common verb, here, only in N.T. save some MSS. in Ac 27:39.

7:46 {Asked} (\it^ sato). Aorist middle (indirect) indicative, asked for himself (as a favour to himself). Cf. 2Sa 7:2f. {A habitation} (\sk^n"ma\). Like Ps 132:5, but it was a house that David proposed to build (2Sa 7:2), not a tent (\sk^n^) which already existed. \Sk^n"ma\ here means a more permanent abode (\oikon\, house, in verse 47), though from the same root as \sk^n^).

7:48 {Howbeit} (\all'). By contrast with what Solomon did and David planned. Note emphatic position of "not" (\all' ouch\), "But not does the Most High dwell." The presence of the Most High is not confined in any building, even one so splendid as Solomon's Temple as Solomon himself foresaw and acknowledged in his prayer (1Ki 8:27; 2Ch 6:18). {In houses made with hands} (\en cheiropoi^tois\). No word here for "houses" or "temples" in correct text (\naois\ temples in Textus Receptus). Literally, "In things made with hands" (\cheir\, hand, \poi^tos\, verbal adjective of poie^"). It occurs in Mr 14:58 of the temple and of the sanctuary of Moab (Isa 16:12). It occurs also in Ac 7:24; Heb 9:11,24; Eph 2:11. Common in the old Greek. {The prophet} (\ho proph^t^s\). Isa 66:1. Isaiah taught plainly that heaven is God's throne.

7:49 {What manner of house} (\Poion oikon\). What sort of a house? This interrogative is sometimes scornful as in 4:7; Lu 6:32ff. (Page). So Stephen shows by Isaiah that Solomon was right that the temple was not meant to "confine" God's presence and that Jesus had rightly shown that God is a spirit and can be worshipped anywhere by any individual of any race or land. It is a tremendous argument for the universality and spirituality of Christianity free from the shackles of Jewish racial and national limitations, but its very strength only angered the Sanhedrin to desperation.

7:51 {Stiffnecked} (\skl^rotrach^loi\). From \skl^ros\ (hard) and \trach^los\, neck, both old words, but this compound only in the LXX and here alone in the N.T. Critics assume that Stephen was interrupted at this point because of the sharp tone of the speech. That may be true, but the natural climax is sufficient explanation. {Uncircumcised in heart} (\aperitm^toi kardiais\). Late adjective common in LXX and here only in the N.T. Verbal of \peritemn^"\, to cut around and \a\ privative. Both of these epithets are applied to the Jews in the O.T. (Ex 32:9; 33:3,5; 34:9; Le 26:41; De 9:6; Jer 6:10). \Kardiais\ is locative plural like \^sin\ (ears), but some MSS. have genitive singular \kardias\ (objective genitive). No epithet could have been more galling to these Pharisees than to be turned "uncircumcised in heart" (Ro 2:29). They had only the physical circumcision which was useless. {Ye always} (\humeis aei\). Emphatic position of humeis and "always" looks backward over the history of their forefathers which Stephen had reviewed. {Resist} (\antipiptete\). Old word to fall against, to rush against. Only here in the N.T., but used in the O.T. which is here quoted (Nu 27:14). Their fathers had made "external worship a substitute for spiritual obedience" (Furneaux). Stephen has shown how God had revealed himself gradually, the revelation sloping upward to Christ Jesus. "And as he saw his countrymen repeating the old mistake--clinging to the present and the material, while God was calling them to higher spiritual levels--and still, as ever, resisting the Holy Spirit, treating the Messiah as the patriarchs had treated Joseph, and the Hebrews Moses--the pity of it overwhelmed him, and his mingled grief and indignation broke out in words of fire, such as burned of old on the lips of the prophets" (Furneaux). Stephen, the accused, is now the accuser, and the situation becomes intolerable to the Sanhedrin.

7:52 {Which of the prophets} (\tina t'n proph^t'n\). Jesus (Lu 11:47; Mt 23:29-37) had charged them with this very thing. Cf. 2Ch 36:16. {Which shewed before} (\prokataggeilantas\). The very prophets who foretold the coming of the Messiah their fathers killed. {The coming} (\t's eleuse"s\). Not in ancient Greek or LXX and only here in the N.T. (in a few late writers). {Betrayers} (\prodotai\). Just like Judas Iscariot. He hurled this old biting word at them. In the N.T. only here and Lu 6:16; 2Ti 3:4. It cut like a knife. It is blunter than Peter in Ac 3:13. {Murderers} (\phoneis\). The climax with this sharp word used of Barabbas (3:14).

7:53 {Ye who} (\hoitines\). The very ones who, _quippe qui_, often in Acts when the persons are enlarged upon (8:15; 9:35; 10:41,47). {As it was ordained by angels} (\eis diatagas aggel'n\). About angels see on 7:38. \Diatag^ (\from \diatass^, to arrange, appoint) occurs in late Greek, LXX, inscriptions, papyri, Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, pp. 89ff., and in N.T. only here and Ro 13:2. At (or as) the appointment of angels (cf. Mt 10:41; 12:41 for this use of \eis). {And kept it not} (\kai ouk ephulaxate\). Like a whipcracker these words cut to the quick. They gloried in possessing the law and openly violated it (Ro 2:23).

7:54 {When they heard} (\akouontes\). Present active participle of \akou“, while hearing. {They were cut to the heart} (\dieprionto tais kardiais\). See 5:33 where the same word and form (imperfect passive of \diapri“) is used of the effect of Peter's speech on the Sadducees. Here Stephen had sent a saw through the hearts of the Pharisees that rasped them to the bone. {They gnashed on him with their teeth} (\ebruchon tous odontas ep' auton\). Imperfect (inchoative) active of \bruch“ (Attic \bruk“), to bite with loud noise, to grind or gnash the teeth. Literally, They began to gnash their teeth at (\ep'\) him (just like a pack of hungry, snarling wolves). Stephen knew that it meant death for him.

7:55 {And Jesus standing} (\kai I'soun hest“ta\). Full of the Holy Spirit, gazing steadfastly into heaven, he saw God's glory and Jesus "standing" as if he had risen to cheer the brave Stephen. Elsewhere (save verse 56 also) he is pictured as sitting at the right hand of God (the Session of Christ) as in Mt 26:64; Mr 16:19; Ac 2:34; Eph 1:20; Col 3:1; Heb 1:3.

7:56 {Opened} (\di^noigmenous\). Perfect passive predicate participle of \dianoignumi\ (cf. Mt 3:16; Lu 3:21). {The son of man} (\ton huion tou anthr“pou\). Elsewhere in the N.T. in Christ's own words. Here Stephen may refer to the words of Jesus as preserved in Mt 26:64.

7:57 {Stopped their ears} (\suneschon ta “ta aut“n\). Second aorist active of \sunech“, to hold together. They held their ears together with their hands and affected to believe Stephen guilty of blasphemy (cf. Mt 26:65). {Rushed upon him with one accord} (\h“rm^san homothumadon ep' auton\). Ingressive aorist active indicative of \horma“, to rush impetuously as the hogs did down the cliff when the demons entered them (Lu 8:33). No vote was taken by the Sanhedrin. No scruple was raised about not having the right to put him to death (Joh 8:31). It may have taken place after Pilate's recall and before his successor came or Pilate, if there, just connived at such an incident that did not concern Rome. At any rate it was mob violence like modern lynching that took the law into the hands of the Sanhedrin without further formalities. {Out of the city} (\ek t^s pole“s\). To keep from defiling the place with blood. But they sought to kill Paul as soon as they got him out of the temple area (Ac

21:30f.). {Stoned} (\elithoboloun). Imperfect active indicative of \lithobole“, began to stone, from \lithobolos (\lithos, stone, \ball“, to throw), late Greek verb, several times in the N.T. as Lu 13:34. Stoning was the Jewish punishment for blasphemy (Le 24:14-16). {The witnesses} (\hoi martures). The false testifiers against Stephen suborned by the Pharisees (Ac 6:11,13). These witnesses had the privilege of casting the first stones (De 13:10; 17:7) against the first witness for Christ with death (_martyr_ in our modern sense of the word). {At the feet of a young man named Saul} (\para tous podas neaniou kaloumenou Saulou). Beside (\para) the feet. Our first introduction to the man who became the greatest of all followers of Jesus Christ. Evidently he was not one of the "witnesses" against Stephen, for he was throwing no stones at him. But evidently he was already a leader in the group of Pharisees. We know from later hints from Saul (Paul) himself that he had been a pupil of Gamaliel (Ac 22:3). Gamaliel, as the Pharisaic leader in the Sanhedrin, was probably on hand to hear the accusations against Stephen by the Pharisees. But, if so, he does not raise his voice against this mob violence. Saul does not seem to be aware that he is going contrary to the views of his master, though pupils often go further than their teachers.

7:59 {They stoned} (\elithoboloun). Same verb and tense repeated, they kept on stoning, they kept it up as he was calling upon the Lord Jesus and making direct prayer to him as "Lord Jesus" (\Kurie I'sou). {Receive my spirit} (\dexai to pneuma mou). Aorist middle imperative, urgency, receive it now. Many have followed Stephen into death with these words upon their dying lips. See, 9:14,21; 22:16.

7:60 {Kneeled down} (\theis ta gonata). Second aorist active participle of \tith^mi, placing the knees (on the ground). This idiom is not in the old Greek for kneeling, but Luke has it five times (Lu 22:41; Ac 7:60; 9:40; 22:36; 21:5) and Mark once (15:19). Jesus was standing at the right hand of God and Stephen knelt before him in worship and called on him in prayer. {Lay not this sin to their charge} (\m^ st^s^is autois taut^n t^n hamartian). First aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive with \m^, regular Greek idiom, Place not to them or against them (dative \autois) this sin. The very spirit of Jesus towards his enemies as he died upon the Cross (Lu 23:34). {He fell asleep} (\ekoim^th^). First aorist passive indicative of \koima“, to put to sleep. Old verb and the metaphor of sleep for death is common in all languages, but it is peculiarly appropriate here as Jesus used it of Lazarus. See also Ac 13:36; 1Co 15:18, etc. Our word cemetery (koim^ht^hrion\) is the sleeping place of the dead. Knowling calls \ekoim^hth^h\ here "a picture word of rest and calmness which stands in dramatic contrast to the rage and violence of the scene."

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Acts: Chapter 7)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

8:1 {Was consenting} (\ⁿ suneudokⁿ\). Periphrastic imperfect of \suneudokeⁿ\, a late double compound (\sun, eu, dokeⁿ\) that well describes Saul's pleasure in the death (\anairesis\, taking off, only here in the N.T., though old word) of Stephen. For the verb see on ̳Lu 23:32. Paul himself will later confess that he felt so (Ac 22:20), coolly applauding the murder of Stephen, a heinous sin (Ro 1:32). It is a gruesome picture. Chapter 7 should have ended here. {On that day} (\en ekeinⁱ tⁱ h^{merfi}\). On that definite day, that same day as in 2:41. {A great persecution} (\di^{gmos} megas\). It was at first persecution from the Sadducees, but this attack on Stephen was from the Pharisees so that both parties are now united in a general persecution that deserves the adjective "great." See on ̳Mt 13:21 for the old word \di^{gmos}\ from \di^k\, to chase, hunt, pursue, persecute. {Were all scattered abroad} (\pantes diespar^{san}\). Second aorist passive indicative of \diaspeirⁿ\, to scatter like grain, to disperse, old word, in the N.T. only in Ac 8:1,4; 11:19. {Except the apostles} (\plⁿ tⁿ apostolⁿ\). Preposition \plⁿ\ (adverb from \pleon\, more) with the ablative often in Luke. It remains a bit of a puzzle why the Pharisees spared the apostles. Was it due to the advice of Gamaliel in Ac 5:34-40? Or was it the courage of the apostles? Or was it a combination of both with the popularity of the apostles in addition?

8:2 {Devout} (\eulabeis\). Only four times in the N.T. (Lu 2:25; Ac 2:5; 8:2; 22:12). Possibly some non-Christian Jews helped. The burial took place before the Christians were chiefly scattered. {Buried} (\sunekomisan\). Aorist active indicative of \sunkomizⁿ\, old verb to bring together, to collect, to join with others in carrying, to bury (the whole funeral arrangements). Only here in the N.T. {Lamentation} (\kopeton\). Late word from \koptomai\, to beat the breast, in LXX, Plutarch, etc., only here in the N.T.

8:3 {Laid waste} (\elumaineto\). Imperfect middle of \lumainomai\, old verb (from \lumⁿ\, injury), to dishonour, defile, devastate, ruin. Only here in the N.T. Like the laying waste of a vineyard by a wild boar (Ps 79:13). Picturesque description of the havoc carried on by Saul now the leader in the persecution. He is victor over Stephen now who had probably worsted him in debate in the Cilician synagogue in Jerusalem. {Into every house} (\kata tous oikous\). But Luke terms it "the church" (\t^n ekkl^sian\). Plainly not just an "assembly," but an organized body that was still "the church" when scattered in their own homes, "an unassembled assembly" according to the etymology. Words do not remain by the etymology, but travel on with usage. {Haling} (\sur^"n\). Literally, dragging forcibly (=hauling). Present active participle of \sur^", old verb. {Men and women} (\andras kai gunaikas\). A new feature of the persecution that includes the women. They met it bravely as through all the ages since (cf. 9:2; 22:4). This fact will be a bitter memory for Paul always. {Committed} (\paredidou\). Imperfect active of \paradid^mi\, old verb, kept on handing them over to prison.

8:4 {They therefore} (\hoi men oun\). Demonstrative \hoi\ as often (1:6, etc.) though it will make sense as the article with the participle \diasparentes\. The general statement is made here by \men\ and a particular instance (\de\) follows in verse 5. The inferential particle (\oun\) points back to verse 3, the persecution by young Saul and the Pharisees. Jesus had commanded the disciples not to depart from Jerusalem till they received the Promise of the Father (1:4), but they had remained long after that and were not carrying the gospel to the other peoples (1:8). Now they were pushed out by Saul and began as a result to carry out the Great Commission for world conquest, that is those "scattered abroad" (\diasparentes\, second aorist passive participle of diaspeir^"). This verb means disperse, to sow in separate or scattered places (\dia\) and so to drive people hither and thither. Old and very common verb, especially in the LXX, but in the N.T. only in Ac 8:1,4; 11:19. {Went about} (\di^lthon\). Constative second aorist active of \dierchomai\, to go through (from place to place, \dia\). Old and common verb, frequent for missionary journeys in the Acts (5:40; 8:40; 9:32; 11:19; 13:6). {Preaching the word} (\euaggelizomenoi ton logon\). Evangelizing or gospelizing the word (the truth about Christ). In 11:19 Luke explains more fully the extent of the labours of these new preachers of the gospel. They were emergency preachers, not ordained clergymen, but men stirred to activity by the zeal of Saul against them. The blood of the martyrs (Stephen) was already becoming the seed of the church. "The violent dispersion of these earnest disciples resulted in a rapid diffusion of the gospel" (Alvah Hovey).

8:5 {Philip} (Philippos\). The deacon (6:5) and evangelist (21:8), not the apostle of the same name (Mr 3:18). {To the city of Samaria} (eis tⁿ polin t^s Samarias\). Genitive of apposition. Samaria is the name of the city here. This is the first instance cited of the expansion noted in verse 4. Jesus had an early and fruitful ministry in Samaria (Joh 4), though the twelve were forbidden to go into a Samaritan city during the third tour of Galilee (Mt 10:5), a temporary prohibition withdrawn before Jesus ascended on high (Ac 1:8). {Proclaimed} (ek^russen\). Imperfect active, began to preach and kept on at it. Note \euaggelizomenoi\ in verse 4 of missionaries of good news (Page) while \ek^russen\ here presents the preacher as a herald. He is also a teacher (didaskalos\) like Jesus. Luke probably obtained valuable information from Philip and his daughters about these early days when in his home in Caesarea (Ac 21:8).

8:6 {Gave heed} (proseichon\). Imperfect active as in verses 10,11, there with dative of the person (autⁱ\), here with the dative of the thing (tois legomenois\). There is an ellipse of \noun\ (mind). They kept on giving heed or holding the mind on the things said by Philip, spell-bound, in a word. {When they heard} (en tⁱ akouein autous\). Favourite Lukan idiom, \en\ and the locative case of the articular infinitive with the accusative of general reference "in the hearing as to them." {Which he did} (ha epoiei\). Imperfect active again, which he kept on doing from time to time. Philip wrought real miracles which upset the schemes of Simon Magus.

8:7 {For many} (polloi gar\). So the correct text of the best MSS., but there is an anacoluthon as this nominative has no verb with it. It was "the unclean spirits" that "came out" (ex^rchonto\, imperfect middle). The margin of the Revised Version has it "came forth," as if they came out of a house, a rather strained translation. The loud outcry is like the demons cast out by Jesus (Mr 3:11; Lu 4:41). {Palsied} (paralelumenoi\, perfect passive participle). Luke's usual word, loosened at the side, with no power over the muscles. Furneaux notes that "the servant was reaping where the Master had sown. Samaria was the mission field white for the harvest (Joh 4:35)." The Samaritans who had been bewitched by Simon are now carried away by Philip.

8:9 {Simon} (\Sim“n\). One of the common names (Josephus, Ant. XX. 7, 2) and a number of messianic pretenders had this name. A large number of traditions in the second and third centuries gathered round this man and Baur actually proposed that the Simon of the Clementine Homilies is really the apostle Paul though Paul triumphed over the powers of magic repeatedly (Ac 13:6-12; 19:11-19), "a perfect absurdity" (Spitta, Apostelgeschichte, p. 149). One of the legends is that this Simon Magus of Acts is the father of heresy and went to Rome and was worshipped as a god (so Justin Martyr). But a stone found in the Tiber A.D. 1574 has an inscription to _Semoni Sanco Deo Fidio Sacrum_ which is (Page) clearly to Hercules, Sancus being a Sabine name for Hercules. This Simon in Samaria is simply one of the many magicians of the time before the later gnosticism had gained a foothold. "In his person Christianity was for the first time confronted with superstition and religious imposture, of which the ancient world was at this period full" (Furneaux). {Which beforetime used sorcery} (\proup^rchen mageu“n\). An ancient idiom (periphrastic), the present active participle \mageu“n\ with the imperfect active verb from \prouparch“, the idiom only here and Lu 23:12 in the N.T. Literally "Simon was existing previously practising magic." This old verb \mageu“\ is from \magos\ (a \magus\, seer, prophet, false prophet, sorcerer) and occurs here alone in the N.T. {Amazed} (existan“n). Present active participle of the verb \existan“, later form of \exist^mi\, to throw out of position, displace, upset, astonish, chiefly in the Gospels in the N.T. Same construction as \mageu“n\. {Some great one} (\tina megan\). Predicate accusative of general reference (infinitive in indirect discourse). It is amazing how gullible people are in the presence of a manifest impostor like Simon. The Magi were the priestly order in the Median and Persian empires and were supposed to have been founded by Zoroaster. The word \magoi\ (magi) has a good sense in Mt 2:1, but here and in Ac 13:6 it has the bad sense like our "magic."

8:10 {That power of God which is called Great} (\h^ Dunamis tou theou h^ kaloumen^ Megal^). Apparently here already the oriental doctrine of emanations or aeons so rampant in the second century. This "power" was considered a spark of God himself and Jerome (in Mt 24) quotes Simon (Page) as saying: _Ego sum sermo Dei, ... ego omnipotens, ego omnia Dei_. Simon claimed to _impersonate

God_.

8:11 {Because that of long time he had amazed them with his sorceries} (\dia to hikan“i chron“i tais magiais exestakenai autous\). Causal use of \dia\ with the accusative articular infinitive (perfect active _Koin, _form and transitive, \exestakenai). Same verb as in verse 9 participle \existan“n\ and in verse 13 imperfect passive \existato\ (cf. also 2:7 already). \Chron“i\ is associative instrumental and \magiais\ instrumental case.

8:12 {They were baptized} (\ebaptizonto\). Imperfect passive (repetition, from time to time), while {believed} (\episteusan\) is constative aorist antecedent to the baptism. Note dative case of Philip with \episteusan\. Note the gospel of Philip "concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ."

8:13 {And Simon also himself believed} (\Ho de Sim“n kai autos episteusen\). Note the same verb in the aorist tense \episteusen\. What did he believe? Evidently that Jesus was this "power of God" not himself (Simon). He saw that the miracles wrought by Philip in the name of Christ were genuine while he knew that his own were frauds. He wanted this power that Philip had to add to his own pretensions. "He was probably half victim of self-delusion, half conscious impostor" (Furneaux). He was determined to get this new "power," but had no sense of personal need of Jesus as Saviour for his sins. So he submitted to baptism (\baptistheis\, first aorist passive participle of \baptiz“), clear proof that baptism does not convey salvation. {He continued with Philip} (\^n proskarter“n t“i Philipp“i\). Periphrastic imperfect of the verb \proskartere“\ (see on 2:46). He stuck to Philip (dative case) to find out the secret of his power. {Beholding} (\the“r“n\). Watching the signs and miracles (powers, \dunameis\ that threw his "power" in the shade) as they were wrought (\ginomenas\, present middle participle of \ginomai). The more he watched the more the wonder grew (\existato\). He had "amazed" (verse 9) the people by his tricks and he was himself more "amazed" than they by Philip's deeds.

8:14 {That Samaria had received} (\hoti dedektai h^ Samaria\). The district here, not the city as in verse 5. Perfect middle indicative of \dechomai\ retained in indirect discourse. It was a major event for the apostles for now the gospel was going into Samaria as Jesus had predicted (1:8). Though the Samaritans were nominally Jews, they were not held so by the people. The sending of Peter and John was no reflection on Philip, but was an appropriate mission since "many Christian Jews would be scandalized by the admission of Samaritans" (Furneaux). If Peter and John sanctioned it, the situation would be improved. John had once wanted to call down fire from heaven on a Samaritan village (Lu 9:54).

8:15 {That they might receive} (\hop“s lab“sin). Second aorist active subjunctive of \lamban“, final clause with \hop“s. Did they wish the Samaritan Pentecost to prove beyond a doubt that the Samaritans were really converted when they believed? They had been baptized on the assumption that the Holy Spirit had given them new hearts. The coming of the Holy Spirit with obvious signs (cf. 10:44-48) as in Jerusalem would make it plain.

8:16 {He was fallen} (\^n epipept“kos). Periphrastic past perfect active of \epipipt“, old verb. The participle is neuter here because of the grammatical gender of \pneuma, but the translation should be "he" (natural gender), not "it." We should not use "it" for the Holy Spirit. {Only they had been baptized} (\monon de babaptismenoi hup^rchon). Periphrastic past perfect passive of \baptiz“ with \huparch“ (see verse 9 \proup^rchon), instead of \^san. {Into the name} (\eis to onoma). Better, in the name (see on 2:38).

8:17 {Laid they their hands} (\epetithesan tas cheiras). Imperfect active, repetition. The laying on of hands did not occur at the great Pentecost (2:4,33) nor in 4:31; 10:44 nor is it mentioned in 1Co 12; 14. It is mentioned in Ac 6:7 about the deacons and in 13:3 when Barnabas and Saul left Antioch. And in Saul's case it was Ananias who laid his hands on him (9:17). Hence it cannot be concluded that the Holy Spirit was received only by the laying on of the hands of the apostles or by the hands of anyone. The so-called practice of "confirmation" appeals to this passage, but inconclusively. {They received} (\elambanon). Imperfect active, repetition as before and \pari passu with the laying on of the hands.

8:18 {When Simon saw} (\Id“n de ho Sim“n). This participle (second aorist active of \hora“) shows plainly that those who received the gift of the Holy Spirit spoke with tongues. Simon now saw power transferred to others. Hence he was determined to get this new power. {He offered them money} (\pros^negken chr^mata). Second aorist active indicative of \prospher“. He took Peter to be like himself, a mountebank performer who would sell his tricks for enough money. Trafficking in things sacred like ecclesiastical preferments in England is called "Simony" because of this offer of Simon.

8:19 {Me also} (\kamoi). This is the whole point with this charlatan. He wants the power to pass on "this power." His notion of "The Holy Spirit" was on this low level. He regarded spiritual functions as a marketable commodity. Money "can buy diamonds, but not wisdom, or sympathy, or faith, or holiness" (Furneaux).

8:20 {Perish with thee} (\sun soi ei^ eis ap^leian). Literally, Be with thee for destruction. Optative for a future wish. The use of \eis\ with the accusative in the predicate is especially common in the LXX. The wish reveals Peter's indignation at the base offer of Simon. Peter was no grafter to accept money for spiritual power. He spurned the temptation. The natural meaning of Peter's language is that Simon was on the road to destruction. It is a warning and almost a curse on him, though verse 22 shows that there was still room for repentance. {To obtain} (\ktfsthai). To acquire. Usual meaning of the present tense (infinitive middle) of \ktaomai\.

8:21 {Lot} (\kl^ros). Same idea as "part" (\meris), only as a figure. {Matter} (\logoi). Literally, word or subject (as in Lu 1:4; Ac 15:6), the power of communicating the Holy Spirit. This use of \logos\ is in the ancient Greek. {Straight} (\eutheia). Quotation from Ps 78:37. Originally a mathematically straight line as in Ac 9:11, then moral rectitude as here.

8:22 {Wickedness} (\kakias). Only here in Luke's writings, though old word and in LXX (cf. 1Pe 2:1,16). {If perhaps} (\ei ara). _Si forte_. This idiom, though with the future indicative and so a condition of the first class (determined as fulfilled), yet minimizes the chance of forgiveness as in Mr 11:13. Peter may have thought that his sin was close to the unpardonable sin (Mt 12:31), but he does not close the door of hope. {The thought} (\h^ epinoia). Old Greek word from \epinoe“, to think upon, and so purpose. Only here in the N.T.

8:23 {That thou art} (\se onta). Participle in indirect discourse after \hor“ (I see). {In the gall of bitterness} (\eis chol^ n pikrias). Old word from \cholas\ either from \che“, to pour, or \chlo^, yellowish green, bile or gall. In the N.T. only in Mt 27:34 and here. In LXX in sense of wormwood as well as bile. See De 29:18; 32:32; La 3:15; Job 16:14. "Gall and bitterness" in De 29:18. Here the gall is described by the genitive \pikrias\ as consisting in "bitterness." In Heb 12:15 "a root of bitterness," a bitter root. This word \pikria\ in the N.T. only here and Heb 12:15; Ro 3:14; Eph 4:31. The "bond of iniquity" (\sundesmon adikias\) is from Isa 58:6. Paul uses this word of peace (Eph 4:3), of love (Col 3:14), of the body (Col 2:19). Peter describes Simon's offer as poison and a chain.

8:24 {Pray ye for me} (\De^th^te humeis huper emou\). Emphasis on \humeis\ (you). First aorist passive imperative. Simon is thoroughly frightened by Peter's words, but shows no sign of personal repentance or change of heart. He wants to escape the penalty for his sin and hopes that Peter can avert it. Peter had clearly diagnosed his case. He was an unconverted man in spite of his profession of faith and baptism. There is no evidence that he ever changed his life at all. {Which} (\h^"n\). Genitive by attraction of the accusative relative \ha\ to case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout^"n\ (of those things), a common Greek idiom.

8:25 {They therefore} (\hoi men oun\). Demonstrative \hoi\ with \men\ (no following de) and the inferential \oun\ (therefore) as often in Acts (1:6, etc.). {Returned} (\hupestrephon\). Imperfect active picturing the joyful journey of preaching (\eu^ggelizonto\, imperfect middle) to the Samaritan villages. Peter and John now carried on the work of Philip to the Samaritans. This issue was closed.

8:26 {Toward the South} (\kata mes^mbrian\). Old word from \mesos\ and \h^mera\, midday or noon as in Ac 22:16, the only other example in the N.T. That may be the idea here also, though "towards the South" gets support from the use of \kata liba\ in Ac 27:12. {The same is desert} (\haut^ estin er^mos\). Probably a parenthetical remark by Luke to give an idea of the way. One of the ways actually goes through a desert. Gaza itself was a strong city that resisted Alexander the Great five months. It was destroyed by the Romans after war broke out with the Jews.

8:27 {A eunuch of great authority} (\eunouchos dunast^s\). Eunuchs were often employed by oriental rulers in high posts.

Dynasty comes from this old word \dunast^s\ used of princes in Lu 1:52 and of God in 1Ti 6:15. Eunuchs were not allowed to be Jews in the full sense (De 23:1), but only proselytes of the gate. But Christianity is spreading to Samaritans and to eunuchs. {Candace} (Kandak^s\). Not a personal name, but like Pharaoh and Ptolemy, the title of the queens of Ethiopia. This eunuch apparently brought the gospel to Ethiopia. {Treasure} (gaz^s\). Persian word, common in late Greek and Latin for the royal treasure, here only in the N.T. {For to worship} (proskun^s^“n\). Future active participle expressing purpose, a common idiom in the ancient Greek, but rare in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1128).

8:28 {Was reading} (anegin^“sken\). Imperfect active descriptive, not periphrastic like the two preceding verbs (was returning and sitting). He was reading aloud as Philip "heard him reading" (kousen auton anagin^“skontos\), a common practice among orientals. He had probably purchased this roll of Isaiah in Jerusalem and was reading the LXX Greek text. See imperfect again in verse 32.

8:29 {Join thyself} (koll^th^ti\). See this vivid word (be glued to, first aorist passive imperative) already in 5:13; Lu 10:11; 15:15. Philip probably jumped on the running board on the side of the chariot.

8:30 {Understandest thou what thou readest?} (Ara ge gin^“skeis ha anagin^“skeis?\) The interrogative particle \ara\ and the intensive particle \ge\ indicate doubt on Philip's part. The play (paranomasia\) upon the words in the Greek is very neat: {Do you know what you know again (read)?} The verb for read (anagin^“sko\) means to know the letters again, recognize, read. The famous comment of Julian about the Christian writings is often quoted: \Anegn^“n, egn^“n, kategn^“n\ (I read, I understood, I condemned). The keen retort was: \Anegn^“s, all'ouk egn^“s, ei gar egn^“s, ouk an kategn^“s\ (You read, but did not understand; for if you had understood, you would not have condemned).

8:31 {How can I, except some one shall guide me?} (P^“s gar an dunaim^n ean me tis hod^g^sei me?\). This is a mixed condition, the conclusion coming first belongs to the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of being determined) with \an\ and the optative, but the condition (ean\, instead of the usual \ei\, and the future indicative) is of the first class (determined or fulfilled. Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1022), a common enough phenomenon in the _Koin,_. The eunuch felt the need of some one to guide (\hod^ge“\ from \hod^gos\, guide, and that from \hodos\, way, and \hegeomai\, to lead).

8:32 {The place} (\he perioch^). See the verb \periechei so used in 1Pe 2:6. The word is used either of the section as in Codex A before the beginning of Mark or the contents of a passage. He was here reading one particular passage (Isa 53:7f.). The quotation is from the LXX which has some variations from the Hebrew.

8:33 {Was taken away} (\^rth^). First aorist passive indicative of \air“, to take away. It is not clear what the meaning is here either in the Hebrew or the LXX. Knowling suggests that the idea is that justice was withheld, done away with, in his death, as it certainly was in the death of Christ.

8:34 {Of whom} (\peri tinos). Concerning whom, a pertinent inquiry surely and one that troubles many critics today.

8:35 {Beginning from this scripture} (\arxamenos apo t^s graph^s taut^s). As a text. Philip needed no better opening than this Messianic passage in Isaiah. {Preached unto him Jesus} (\eu^ggelisato aut^i ton I^soun). Philip had no doubt about the Messianic meaning and he knew that Jesus was the Messiah. There are scholars who do not find Jesus in the Old Testament at all, but Jesus himself did (Lu 24:27) as Philip does here. Scientific study of the Old Testament (historical research) misses its mark if it fails to find Christ the Center of all history. The knowledge of the individual prophet is not always clear, but after events throw a backward light that illumines it all (1Pe 1:11f.; 2Pe 1:19-21).

8:36 {What doth hinder me to be baptized?} (\Ti k^“luei me baptisth^nai?). Evidently Philip had said something about baptism following faith and conversion. Verse 37 is not a genuine part of Acts, a western addition. Later baptismal liturgies had it.

8:39 {Out of the water} (\ek tou hudatos). Not from the edge of the water, but up out of the water as in Mr 1:10. {Caught away} (\h^rpasen). Suddenly and miraculously, for \harpaz“, like the Latin _rapio_, means to carry off. Cf. 2Co 12:2; 1Th 4:17.

{Went on his way} (\eporeueto). Kept on going, imperfect active.

8:40 {He preached the gospel} (\eu^ggelizeto). Imperfect middle describing the evangelistic tour of Philip "till he came to Caesarea" (\he"s tou elthein auton, genitive articular infinitive with the preposition \he"s\ and the accusative of general reference) where he made his home and headquarters thereafter (Ac 21:28) and was known as the Evangelist.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Acts: Chapter 8)

9:1 {Yet} (\eti\). As if some time elapsed between the death of Stephen as is naturally implied by the progressive persecution described in 8:3. The zeal of Saul the persecutor increased with success. {Breathing threatening and slaughter} (\enpneⁿ apeil^s kai phonou\). Present active participle of old and common verb. Not "breathing out," but "breathing in" (inhaling) as in Aeschylus and Plato or "breathing on" (from Homer on). The partitive genitive of \apeil^s\ and \phonou\ means that threatening and slaughter had come to be the very breath that Saul breathed, like a warhorse who sniffed the smell of battle. He breathed on the remaining disciples the murder that he had already breathed in from the death of the others. He exhaled what he inhaled. Jacob had said that "Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf" (Ge 49:27). This greatest son of Benjamin was fulfilling this prophecy (Furneaux). The taste of blood in the death of Stephen was pleasing to young Saul (8:1) and now he revelled in the slaughter of the saints both men and women. In 26:11 Luke quotes Paul as saying that he was "exceedingly mad against them."

9:2 {Asked} (\it^sato\). First aorist middle indicative, the indirect middle, asked for himself (as a favour to himself). Felten notes that "Saul as a Pharisee makes request of a Sadducee" (the high priest) either Caiaphas if before A.D. 35, but if in 36 Jonathan, son of Caiaphas or if in 37 Theophilus, another son of Caiaphas. {Letters} (\epistolas\). Julius Ceasar and Augustus had granted the high priest and Sanhedrin jurisdiction over Jews in foreign cities, but this central ecclesiastical authority was not always recognized in every local community outside of Judea. Paul says that he received his authority to go to Damascus from the priests (Acts 26:10) and "the estate of the elders" (22:5), that is the Sanhedrin. {To Damascus} (\eis Damaskon\). As if no disciples of importance (outside the apostles in Jerusalem) were left in Judea. Damascus at this time may have been under the rule of Aretas of Arabia (tributary to Rome) as it certainly was a couple of years later when Saul escaped in a basket (2Co 11:32). This old city is the most enduring in the history of the world (Knowling). It is some 150 miles Northeast from Jerusalem and watered by the river Abana from Anti-Lebanon. Here the Jews were strong in numbers (10,000 butchered by Nero later) and here some disciples had found refuge from Saul's persecution in Judea and still worshipped in the synagogues. Paul's language in Ac 26:11 seems to mean that Damascus is merely one of other "foreign cities" to which he carried the persecution. {If he found} (\ean heurⁱ\). Third class condition with aorist subjunctive retained after secondary tense (asked). {The Way} (\t^s hodou\). A common method in the Acts for describing Christianity as the Way of life, absolutely as also in 19:9,23; 22:4; 24:14,22 or the way of salvation (16:17) or the way of the Lord (18:25). It is a Jewish definition of life as in Isa 40:3 "the way of the Lord," Ps 1:6 "the way of the righteous," "the way of the wicked." Jesus called himself "the way" (Joh 14:6), the only way to the Father. The so-called Epistle of Barnabas presents the Two Ways. The North American Indians call Christianity the Jesus Road. {That he might bring them bound} (\hop^s dedemenous agagⁱ\). Final clause with \hop^s (\less common than \hina\ and aorist (effective) subjunctive (\agagⁱ\, reduplicated aorist of \ag^s\, common verb) and perfect passive participle (\dedemenous\) of \de^s\, in a state of sheer helplessness like his other victims both men and women. Three times (8:3; 9:2; 22:4) this fact of persecuting women is mentioned as a special blot in Paul's cruelty (the third time by Paul himself) and one of the items in his being chief of sinners (1Ti 1:15).

9:3 {As he journeyed} (\en tⁱ poreuesthai\). Luke's common idiom for a temporal clause (in the journeying), \en\ with the locative articular middle infinitive. {Drew nigh} (\eggizein\). Present active infinitive, was drawing nigh. {Shone round about him} (\auton peri^sstrapsen\). First aorist (ingressive) active indicative of \periastrapt^s\, late compound verb common in LXX and Byzantine writers, here and 22:6 alone in the N.T. "A light from heaven suddenly flashed around him." It was like a flash of lightning. Paul uses the same verb in 22:5, but in 26:13 he employs \perilampsan\ (shining around). There are numerous variations in the historical narrative of Saul's conversion in 9:3-18 and Luke's report of Paul's two addresses, one on the steps of the Tower of Antonia facing the murderous mob (22:6-16), the other before Festus and Agrippa (26:12-20). A great deal of capital has been made of these variations to the discredit of Luke as a writer as if he should have made Paul's two speeches conform at every point with his own narrative. This objection has no weight except for those who hold that Luke composed Paul's speeches freely as some Greek writers used to do. But, if Luke had notes of Paul's speeches or help from Paul himself, he naturally preserved the form of the two addresses without trying to make them agree with each other in all details or with his own narrative in chapter 9. Luke evidently attached great importance to the story of Saul's conversion as the turning point not simply in the career of the man, but an epoch in the history of apostolic Christianity. In broad outline and in all essentials the three accounts agree and testify to the truthfulness of the account of the conversion of Saul. It is impossible to overestimate the worth to the student of Christianity of this event from every angle because we have in Paul's Epistles his own emphasis on the actual appearance of Jesus to him as the fact that changed his whole life (1Co 15:8; Ga 1:16f.). The variations that appear in the three accounts do not mar the story, when rightly understood, as we shall see. Here, for instance, Luke simply mentions "a light from heaven," while in 22:6 Paul calls it "a great (\hikanon) light" "about noon" and in 26:13 "above the brightness of the sun," as it would have to be "at midday" with the sun shining.

9:4 {He fell upon the earth} (\pes“n epi t^n g^n). Second aorist active participle. So in 22:7 Paul says: "I fell unto the ground" (\epesa eis to edaphos) using an old word rather than the common \g^n. In 26:14 Paul states that "we were all fallen to the earth" (\pant“n katapesont“n h^m“n eis t^n g^n, genitive absolute construction). But here in verse 7 "the men that journeyed with him stood speechless" (\hist^keisan eneoì). But surely the points of time are different. In 26:14 Paul refers to the first appearance of the vision when all fell to the earth. Here in verse 7 Luke refers to what occurred after the vision when both Saul and the men had risen from the ground. {Saul, Saul} (\Saoul, Saoul). The Hebrew form occurs also in 22:7; 26:14 where it is expressly stated that the voice was in the Hebrew (Aramaic) tongue as also in 9:17 (Ananias). Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 316) terms this use of \Saoul "the historian's sense of liturgical rhythm." For the repetition of names by Jesus note Lu 10:41 (Martha, Martha), Lu 22:31 (Simon, Simon). {Me} (\me). In persecuting the disciples, Saul was persecuting Jesus, as the words of Jesus in verse 5 made plain. Christ had already spoken of the mystic union between himself and his followers (Mt 10:40; 25:40,45; Joh 15:1-5). The proverb (Pindar) that Jesus quotes to Saul about kicking against the goad is genuine in 26:14, but not here.

9:5 {Lord} (\kurie\). It is open to question if \kurie\ should not here be translated "Sir" as in 16:30 and in Mt 21:29,30; Joh 5:7; 12:21; 20:15; and should be so in Joh 9:36. It is hardly likely that at this stage Saul recognized Jesus as Lord, though he does so greet him in 22:10 "What shall I do, Lord?" Saul may have recognized the vision as from God as Cornelius says "Lord" in 10:4. Saul surrendered instantly as Thomas did (Joh 20:28) and as little Samuel (1Sa 3:9). This surrender of the will to Christ was the conversion of Saul. He saw a real Person, the Risen Christ, to whom he surrendered his life. On this point he never wavered for a moment to the end.

9:6 The best MSS. do not have "trembling and astonished," and "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" The Textus Receptus put these words in here without the authority of a Greek codex. See 22:10 above for the genuine text. {It shall be told thee} (\lalthsetai\). Future passive indicative of \lale\ . It is hardly likely that Luke records all that Jesus said to Saul, but more was to come on his arrival in Damascus. Saul had received all that he could bear just now (Joh 16:12). {What} (\hoti\). Rare in _Koin_, use of this indefinite neuter relative in an indirect question, the only example in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 731). Human agents like Ananias can finish what Jesus by supernatural manifestation has here begun in Saul.

9:7 {That journeyed with him} (\hoi sunodeuontes autⁱ\). Not in the older Greek, but in the _Koin_, with the associative instrumental. {Speechless} (\eneoi\). Mute. Only here in N.T., though old word. {Hearing the voice, but beholding no man} (\akouontes men t^s phⁿs, m^{dena} de the^{rountes}\). Two present active participles in contrast (\men, de\). In 22:9 Paul says that the men "beheld the light" (\to men ph^s etheasant\), but evidently did not discern the person. Paul also says there, "but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me" (\tⁿ de phⁿ ouk^{kousan} tou lalountos moi\). Instead of this being a flat contradiction of what Luke says in 9:7 it is natural to take it as being likewise (as with the "light" and "no one") a distinction between the "sound" (original sense of \phⁿ as in Joh 3:8) and the separate words spoken. It so happens that \akou\ is used either with the accusative (the extent of the hearing) or the genitive (the specifying). It is possible that such a distinction here coincides with the two senses of \ph“n^\. They heard the sound (9:7), but did not understand the words (22:9). However, this distinction in case with \akou“, though possible and even probable here, is by no means a necessary one for in Joh 3:8 where \ph“n^n\ undoubtedly means "sound" the accusative occurs as Luke uses \^kousen ph“n^n\ about Saul in Ac 9:4. Besides in 22:7 Paul uses \^kousa ph“n^s\ about himself, but \^kousa ph“n^n\ about himself in 76:14, interchangeably.

9:8 {He saw nothing} (\ouden eblepen\). Imperfect active indicative, was seeing nothing. "The glory of that light" (22:11) when he saw Jesus had blinded his eyes now wide open (\ane“igmen“n\, perfect passive participle of \anoig“\ with double reduplication). The blindness was proof that something had happened to him and that it was no hallucination that he had seen the Risen Christ. Saul arose after the others were on their feet. {They led him by the hand} (\cheirag“gountes\). From \cheirag“gos\ (\cheir\, hand and \ag“\, to lead). Only here in the N.T., but in LXX and late writers though not in the old Greek. It was a pathetic picture to see the masterful Saul, victorious persecutor and conqueror of the disciples, now helpless as a child.

9:9 {Not seeing} (\m^ blep“n\). The usual negative \m^ of the participle. It was a crisis for Saul, this sudden blindness for three days (\h^meras treis\, accusative of extent of time). Later (Ga 4:15) Paul has an affection of the eyes which may have been caused by this experience on the road to Damascus or at least his eyes may have been predisposed by it to weakness in the glare of the Syrian sun in the land where today so much eye trouble exists. He neither ate nor drank anything, for his appetite had gone as often happens in a crisis of the soul. These must have been days of terrible stress and strain.

9:10 {Ananias} (\Hananias\). Name common enough (cf. 5:1 for another Ananias) and means "Jehovah is gracious." _Nomen et omen_ (Knowling). This Ananias had the respect of both Jews and Christians in Damascus (22:12). {In a vision} (\en horamati\). Zeller and others scout the idea of the historicity of this vision as supernatural. Even Furneaux holds that "it is a characteristic of the Jewish Christian sources to point out the Providential ordering of events by the literary device of a vision," as "in the early chapters of Matthew's and Luke's Gospels." He is content with this "beautiful expression of the belief" with no interest in the actual facts. But that is plain illusion, not to say delusion, and makes both Paul and Luke deceived by the story of Ananias (9:10-18; 22:12-16,26). One MS. of the old Latin Version does omit the vision to Ananias and that is basis enough for those who deny the supernatural aspects of Christianity.

9:11 {To the street} (\epi tⁿ rhumⁿ\). See on ⁷Lu 14:21. A run way (from \rheⁿ\, to run) between the houses. So were the narrow lanes or alleys called streets and finally in later Greek the word is applied to streets even when broad. {Straight} (\eutheian\). Most of the city lanes were crooked like the streets of Boston (old cow-paths, people say), but this one still runs "in a direct line from the eastern to the western gate of the city" (Vincent). Since the ancients usually rebuilt on the same sites, it is probable that the line of the street of that name today is the same, though the actual level has been much raised. Hence the identification of the house of Ananias and the house of Judas are very precarious.

9:12 {Coming in and laying} (\eiselthonta kai epithenta\). Second aorist (ingressive) active participles picturing the punctiliar act as a sort of indirect discourse after verbs of sensation (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1040-2). Some ancient documents do not have "in a vision" here. {Receive his sight} (\anablepsei\). First aorist active subjunctive with \hopⁿs\ (purpose). See again as in 9:17.

9:13 {How much evil} (\hosa kaka\). How many evil things. Saul's reputation (26:10) as a persecutor had preceded him. {To thy saints} (\tois hagiois\). Dative of disadvantage. "Used here for the first time as a name for the Christians" (Knowling), but it came to be the common and normal (Hackett) term for followers of Christ (9:32,41; 26:10; 1Co 1:2, etc.). This common word is from \to hagos\, religious awe or reverence and is applied to God's name (Lu 1:49), God's temple (Mt 24:15), God's people as set apart for God (Lu 1:70; 2:23; Ro 1:7, etc.). Ananias in his ignorance saw in Saul only the man with an evil reputation while Jesus saw in Saul the man transformed by grace to be a messenger of mercy.

9:14 {Hath authority} (\echei exousian\). Probably Ananias had received letters from the Christians left in Jerusalem warning him of the coming of Saul. The protest of Ananias to Jesus against any dealing with Saul is a fine illustration of our own narrow ignorance in our rebellious moods against the will of God.

9:15 {A chosen vessel} (\s^keuos eklog^ˆs\). A vessel of choice or selection. The genitive of quality is common in the Hebrew, as in the vernacular _Koin, _. Jesus chose Saul before Saul chose Jesus. He felt of himself that he was an earthen vessel (2Co 4:7) unworthy of so great a treasure. It was a great message that Ananias had to bear to Saul. He told it in his own way (9:17; 22:14f.) and in 26:16f. Paul blends the message of Jesus to Ananias with that to him as one. {Before the Gentiles} (\en^ˆˈpion t^ˆˈn ethn^ˆn\). This was the chief element in the call of Saul. He was to be an apostle to the Gentiles (Eph 3:6-12).

9:16 {I will shew} (\hupodeix^ˆ\). Beforehand as a warning as in Lu 3:7 and from time to time. {He must suffer} (\dei auton pathein\). Constative aorist active infinitive (\pathein\, from pasch^ˆ\) covering the whole career of Saul. Suffering is one element in the call that Saul receives. He will learn "how many things" (\hosa\) are included in this list by degrees and by experience. A glance at 2Co 10-12 will show one the fulfilment of this prophecy. But it was the "gift" of Christ to Paul to go on suffering (\paschein\, present infinitive, Php 1:39).

9:17 {Laying his hands on him} (\epitheis ep' auton tas cheiras\). As in the vision Saul saw (verse 12). {Brother Saul} (\Saoul adelphe\). All suspicion has vanished and Ananias takes Saul to his heart as a brother in Christ. It was a gracious word to Saul now under suspicion on both sides. {The Lord, even Jesus} (\ho kurios, I^ˆsous\). Undoubted use of \kurios\ as Lord and applied to Jesus. {Who appeared} (\ho ophtheis\). First aorist passive participle of \hora^ˆ\, was seen as in 26:16 and with the dative also (\soi\). {Thou camest} (\rchou\). Imperfect indicative middle, "thou wert coming." {Be filled with the Holy Spirit} (\pl^ˆstheis pneumatos hagiou\). This enduement of special power he will need as an apostle (Hackett) and as promised by Jesus (1:8; Ga 2:7).

9:18 {Fell off} (\apepesan\). Second aorist active indicative (note--an ending like first aorist) of \apopipt^ˆ\, old verb, but here alone in the N.T. {As if it were scales} (\h^ˆs lepidēs\). Chiefly late word (LXX) from \lep^ˆ\, to peel, and only here in the N.T. See Tobit 11:13, "The white film peeled from his eyes" (\elepisth^ˆ\). Luke does not say that actual "scales" fell from the eyes of Saul, but that it felt that way to him as his sight returned, "as if" (h^s). Medical writers use the word \lepis for pieces of the skin that fall off (Hobart, _Medical Language of St. Luke_, p. 39). Luke may have heard Paul tell of this vivid experience. {Was baptized} (ebaptisth[^]). First aorist passive indicative. Apparently by Ananias (22:16) as a symbol of the new life in Christ already begun, possibly in the pool in the house of Judas as today water is plentiful in Damascus or in Abana or Pharpar (Furneaux), better than all the waters of Israel according to Naaman (2Ki 5:12).

9:19 {Was strengthened} (enischuth[^]). First aorist passive indicative of \enischu[^], to receive strength (ischus[^]), comparatively late verb and here only in the N.T. save Lu 22:43 where it is doubtful. Poor verse division. This clause belongs in sense to verse 18. {Some days} (h[^]meras tinas[^]). An indefinite period, probably not long, the early period in Damascus before Saul left for Arabia (Ga 1:13-24).

9:20 {He proclaimed Jesus} (ek[^]russen ton I[^]soun[^]). Imperfect indicative, inchoative, began to preach. Jesus, not Christ, is the correct text here. He did this first preaching in the Jewish synagogues, a habit of his life when possible, and following the example of Jesus. {That he is the Son of God} (hoti houtos estin ho huios tou theou[^]). This is Paul's platform as a Christian preacher, one that he always occupied to the very end. It was a complete reversal of his previous position. Jesus had turned him completely around. It is the conclusion that Saul now drew from the vision of the Risen Christ and the message through Ananias. By "the Son of God" Saul means the Messiah of promise and hope, the Messianic sense of the Baptist (Joh 1:34) and of Nathanael (Joh 1:49) for Saul is now proclaiming his faith in Jesus in the very synagogues where he had meant to arrest those who professed their faith in him. Peter laid emphasis on the Resurrection of Jesus as a glorious fact and proclaimed Jesus as Lord and Christ. Paul boldly calls Jesus the Son of God with full acknowledgment of his deity from the very start. Thomas had come to this place slowly (Joh 20:28). Saul begins with this truth and never leaves it. With this faith he can shake the world. There is no power in any other preaching.

9:21 {Were amazed} (existanto[^]). Imperfect middle indicative of \exist[^]mi[^]. They continued to stand out of themselves in astonishment at this violent reversal in Saul the persecutor.

{Made havock} (\porthˆsas\). First aorist active participle of \portheˆ“, to lay waste, an old verb, but only here and Ga 1:13,23 by Paul, an interesting coincidence. It is the old proverb about Saul among the prophets (1Sa 10:12) revived with a new meaning (Furneaux). {Had come} (\elˆluthei\). Past perfect indicative active. {Might bring} (\agagˆi\). Second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \agˆ“ with \hina\ (purpose). {Bound} (\dedemenous\). Perfect passive participle of \deˆ“. Interesting tenses.

9:22 {Increased the more} (\mflon enedunamouto\). Imperfect passive indicative of \endunamoˆ“, to receive power (late verb), progressive increase in strength as opposition grew. Saul's recantation stirred controversy and Saul grew in power. See also Paul in Php 4:13; 1Ti 1:12; 2Ti 2:1; 4:17; Ro 4:20. Christ, the dynamo of spiritual energy, was now pouring power (Ac 1:8) into Paul who is already filled with the Holy Spirit (Ac 9:17). {Confounded} (\sunechunnen\). Imperfect active indicative of \sunchunnˆ“ (late form of \suncheˆ“, to pour together, commingle, make confusion.) The more Saul preached, the more the Jews were confused. {Proving} (\sunbibazˆn\). Present active participle of \sunbibazˆ“, old verb to make go together, to coalesce, to knit together. It is the very word that Luke will use in 16:10 of the conclusion reached at Troas concerning the vision of Paul. Here Saul took the various items in the life of Jesus of Nazareth and found in them the proof that he was in reality "the Messiah" (\ho Christos\). This method of argument Paul continued to use with the Jews (Ac 17:3). It was irresistible argument and spread consternation among the Jews. It was the most powerful piece of artillery in the Jewish camp that was suddenly turned round upon them. It is probable that at this juncture Saul went into Arabia for several years (Ga 1:12-24). Luke makes no mention of this important event, but he leaves ample room for it at this point.

9:23 {When many days were fulfilled} (\Hˆs eplˆrouto hˆmerai hikanai\). Imperfect passive indicative of \plˆroˆ“, old and common verb, were in process of being fulfilled. How "many" (considerable, \hikanai\, common word for a long period) Luke does not say nor does he say that Saul spent all of this period in Damascus, as we know from Ga 1:16-18 was not the case. Paul there states definitely that he went away from Damascus to Arabia and returned there before going back to Jerusalem and that the whole period was about "three years" which need not mean three full years, but at least portions of three. Most of the three years was probably spent in Arabia because of the two explosions in Damascus (before his departure and on his return) and because he was unknown in Jerusalem as a Christian on his arrival there. It cannot be argued from the frequent lacunae in the Acts that Luke tells all that was true or that he knew. He had his own methods and aims as every historian has. We are at perfect liberty to supplement the narrative in the Acts with items from Paul's Epistles. So we must assume the return of Saul from Arabia at this juncture, between verses 22,23, when Saul resumed his preaching in the Jewish synagogues with renewed energy and grasp after the period of mature reflection and readjustment in Arabia.

{Took counsel together} (\sunebouleusanto\). First aorist (effective) middle indicative of \sunbouleu“, old and common verb for counselling (\bouleu“) together (\sun\). Things had reached a climax. It was worse than before he left for Arabia. Paul was now seeing the fulfilment of the prophecy of Jesus about him (9:16). {To kill him} (\anelein auton\). Second aorist (effective) active infinitive of \anaire“, to take up, to make away with, to kill (Lu 23:32; Ac 12:1, etc.). The infinitive expresses purpose here as is done in verse 24 by \hop“s\ and the aorist active subjunctive of the same verb (\anel“sin\). Saul now knew what Stephen had suffered at his hands as his own life was in peril in the Jewish quarter of Damascus. It was a picture of his old self. He may even have been scourged here (2Co 11:24).

9:24 {Plot} (\epiboul^). Old word for a plan (\boul^) against (\epi) one. In the N.T. only in Acts (9:24; 20:3,19; 23:30). {They watched} (\paret^routo\). Imperfect middle indicative of \parat^re“, common verb in late Greek for watching beside (\para) or insidiously or on the sly as in Lu 6:7, they kept on watching by day and night to kill him. In 2Co 11:32 Paul says that the Ethnarch of Aretas "kept guard" (\ephrourei, imperfect active of \phroure“) to seize him. Probably the Jews obtained the consent of the Ethnarch and had him appoint some of them as guards or watchers at the gate of the city.

9:25 {Through the wall} (\dia tou teichous\). Paul in 2Co 11:33 explains \dia tou teichous\ as being \dia thuridos\ (through a window) which opened into the house on the inside of the wall as is true today in Damascus as Hackett saw there. See Jos 2:15f.

(cf. 1Sa 19:12) for the way that Rahab let out the spies "by a cord through the window." {Lowering him} (\auton chalasantes). First aorist active participle of \chala^, old and common verb in a nautical sense (Ac 27:17,30) as well as otherwise as here. Same verb used by Paul of this experience (2Co 11:33). {In a basket} (\en sphuridi). The word used when the four thousand were fed (Mr 8:8; Mt 15:37). A large basket plaited of reeds and distinguished in Mr 8:19f. (Mt 16:9f.) from the smaller \kophinos. Paul uses \sargan^, a basket made of ropes. This escape by night by the help of the men whom he had come to destroy was a shameful memory to Paul (2Co 11:33). Wendt thinks that the coincidences in language here prove that Luke had read II Corinthians. That, of course, is quite possible.

9:26 {He assayed} (\epeirazen). Imperfect active of conative action. {To join himself} (\kollasthai). Present middle (direct) infinitive of conative action again. Same word \kolla^ in Lu 15:15; Ac 10:28. See on ^Mt 19:5 for discussion. {Were all afraid of him} (\pantes ephobounto auton). They were fearing him. Imperfect middle picturing the state of mind of the disciples who had vivid recollections of his conduct when last here. What memories Saul had on this return journey to Jerusalem after three years. He had left a conquering hero of Pharisaism. He returns distrusted by the disciples and regarded by the Pharisees as a renegade and a turncoat. He made no effort to get in touch with the Sanhedrin who had sent him to Damascus. He had escaped the plots of the Jews in Damascus only to find himself the object of suspicion by the disciples in Jerusalem who had no proof of his sincerity in his alleged conversion. {Not believing} (\m^ pisteuontes). They had probably heard of his conversion, but they frankly disbelieved the reports and regarded him as a hypocrite or a spy in a new role to ruin them. {Was} (\estin). The present tense is here retained in indirect discourse according to the common Greek idiom.

9:27 {Took him} (\epilabomenos). Second aorist middle (indirect) participle of \epilamban^, common verb to lay hold of. Barnabas saw the situation and took Saul to himself and listened to his story and believed it. It is to the credit of Barnabas that he had the insight and the courage to stand by Saul at the crucial moment in his life when the evidence seemed to be against him. It is a pleasing hypothesis that this influential disciple from Cyprus had gone to the University of Tarsus where he met Saul. If so, he would know more of him than those who only knew his record as a persecutor of Christians. That fact Barnabas knew also, but he was convinced that Jesus had changed the heart of Saul and he used his great influence (Ac 4:36; 11:22) to win the favour of the apostles, Peter in particular (Ga 1:19) and James the half-brother of Jesus. The other apostles were probably out of the city as Paul says that he did not see them. {To the apostles} (\pros tous apostolous). Both Barnabas and James are termed apostles in the general sense, though not belonging to the twelve, as Paul did not, though himself later a real apostle. So Barnabas introduced Saul to Peter and vouched for his story, declared it fully (\di^g^sato, in detail) including Saul's vision of Jesus (\eiden ton kurion) as the vital thing and Christ's message to Saul (\elal^sen aut^i) and Saul's bold preaching (\^parr^siasato, first aorist middle indicative of \parr^siaz^“ from \pan--r^sia telling it all as in Ac 2:29). Peter was convinced and Saul was his guest for two weeks (Ga 1:18) with delightful fellowship (\histor^sai). He had really come to Jerusalem mainly "to visit" (to see) Peter, but not to receive a commission from him. He had that from the Lord (Ga 1:1f.). Both Peter and James could tell Saul of their special experiences with the Risen Christ. Furneaux thinks that Peter was himself staying at the home of Mary the mother of John Mark (Ac 12:12) who was a cousin of Barnabas (Col 4:10). This is quite possible. At any rate Saul is now taken into the inner circle of the disciples in Jerusalem.

9:28 {Going in and going out} (\eisporeuomenos kai ekporeuomenos). Barnabas and Peter and James opened all the doors for Saul and the fear of the disciples vanished.

9:29 {Preaching boldly} (\parr^siazomenos). For a while. Evidently Saul did not extend his preaching outside of Jerusalem (Ga 1:22) and in the city preached mainly in the synagogues of the Hellenists (\pros tous Hellenistas) as Stephen had done (Ac 8:9). As a Cilician Jew he knew how to speak to the Hellenists. {Disputed} (\sunez^tei). Imperfect active of \sunz^te^“, the very verb used in 6:9 of the disputes with Stephen in these very synagogues in one of which (Cilicia) Saul had probably joined issue with Stephen to his own discomfort. It was intolerable to these Hellenistic Jews now to hear Saul taking the place of Stephen and using the very arguments that Stephen had employed. {But they went about to kill him} (\Hoi de epecheiroun anelein auton\). Demonstrative \hoi\ with \de\ and the conative imperfect of \epicheire“\, to put the hand to, to try, an old verb used in the N.T. only three times (Lu 1:1; Ac 9:29; 19:3). They offer to Saul the same conclusive answer that he gave to Stephen, death. Paul tells how the Lord Jesus appeared to him at this juncture in a vision in the temple (Ac 22:17-21) with the distinct command to leave Jerusalem and how Paul protested that he was willing to meet the fate of Stephen in whose death he had a shameful part. That is to Saul's credit, but the Lord did not want Saul to be put to death yet. His crown of martyrdom will come later.

9:30 {Knew it} (\epignontes\). Second aorist active participle of \epigin“sk“\, to know fully. The disciples saw it clearly, so they {conducted} (\kat^gagon\, effective second aorist active indicative of \katag“\). {Sent forth} (\exapesteilan\). Double compound (\ex\, out, \apo\, away or off). Sent him out and off {to Tarsus} (\eis Tarson\). Silence is preserved by Luke. But it takes little imagination to picture the scene at home when this brilliant young rabbi, the pride of Gamaliel, returns home a preacher of the despised Jesus of Nazareth whose disciples he had so relentlessly persecuted. What will father, mother, sister think of him now?

9:31 {So the church} (\H^men oun ekkl^sia\). The singular \ekkl^sia\ is undoubtedly the true reading here (all the great documents have it so). By this time there were churches scattered over Judea, Galilee, and Samaria (Ga 1:22), but Luke either regards the disciples in Palestine as still members of the one great church in Jerusalem (instance already the work of Philip in Samaria and soon of Peter in Joppa and Caesarea) or he employs the term \ekkl^sia\ in a geographical or collective sense covering all of Palestine. The strictly local sense we have seen already in 8:1,3 (and Mt 18:17) and the general spiritual sense in Mt 16:18. But in Ac 8:3 it is plain that the term is applied to the organization of Jerusalem Christians even when scattered in their homes. The use of \men oun\ (so) is Luke's common way of gathering up the connection. The obvious meaning is that the persecution ceased because the persecutor had been converted. The wolf no longer ravined the sheep. It is true also that the effort of Caligula A.D. 39 to set up his image in the temple in Jerusalem for the Jews to worship greatly excited the Jews and gave them troubles of their own (Josephus, _Ant_. XVIII.

8, 2-9). {Had peace} (\eichen eir^{\n^{\n}}\). Imperfect active. Kept on having peace, enjoying peace, because the persecution had ceased. Many of the disciples came back to Jerusalem and the apostles began to make preaching tours out from the city. This idiom (\ech^{\n^{\n}}\) occurs again in Ro 5:1 (\eir^{\n^{\n}}ech^{\n^{\n}}\, present active subjunctive) where it has been grievously misunderstood. There it is an exhortation to keep on enjoying the peace with God already made, not to make peace with God which would be \eir^{\n^{\n}}sch^{\n^{\n}}\ (ingressive aorist subjunctive). {Edified} (\oikodomoumen^{\n^{\n}}\). Present passive participle, linear action also. One result of the enjoyment of peace after the persecution was the continued edification (Latin word _aedificatio_ for building up a house), a favourite figure with Paul (1Co 14; Eph 3) and scattered throughout the N.T., old Greek verb. In 1Pe 2:5 Peter speaks of "the spiritual house" throughout the five Roman provinces being "built up" (cf. Mt 16:18). {In the comfort of the Holy Spirit} (\t^{\i} parakl^{\n^{\n}}sei tou hagiou pneumatou\). Either locative (fin) or instrumental case (by). The Holy Spirit had been promised by Jesus as "another Paraclete" and now this is shown to be true. The only instance in Acts of the use of \parakl^{\n^{\n}}sis\ with the Holy Spirit. The word, of course, means calling to one's side (\parakale^{\n^{\n}}\) either for advice or for consolation. {Was multiplied} (\epl^{\n^{\n}}thuneto\). Imperfect middle passive. The multiplication of the disciples kept pace with the peace, the edification, the walking in the fear of the Lord, the comfort of the Holy Spirit. The blood of the martyrs was already becoming the seed of the church. Stephen had not borne his witness in vain.

9:32 {Lydda} (\Ludda\). In O.T. Lod (1Ch 8:12) and near Joppa. Later Diospolis.

9:33 {Aenias} (\Ainean\). Old Greek name and so probably a Hellenistic Jew. He was apparently a disciple already (the saint, verse 32). Luke the physician notes that he had been bed ridden for eight years. See on ^5:15 for "bed" (\krabattou\) and ^8:7; Lu 5:18 for "paralyzed" (\paralelumenos\, perfect passive participle of paralu^{\n^{\n}} with ^{\n^{\n}}\, periphrastic past perfect passive).

9:34 {Healeth} (\iftai\). Aoristic present middle indicative, heals here and now. {Make thy bed} (\str^{\n^{\n}}son seaut^{\n^{\n}}i\). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative of \str^{\n^{\n}}numi\ (\-u^{\n^{\n}}\). Old word with "bed" (\krabaton\) understood as the object.

Literally, spread thy bed for thyself (dative case), what others for eight years have done for thee.

9:35 {Sharon} (\Sar“na\). The Plain of Sharon, not a town. Thirty miles long from Joppa to Caesarea.

9:36 {At Joppa} (\En Iopp“i\). The modern Jaffa, the port of Jerusalem (2Ch 2:16). {Disciple} (\math“tria\). Feminine form of \math“t“s\, a learner from \manthan“, to learn, a late word and only here in the N.T. {Tabitha} (\Tabeitha\). Aramaic form of the Hebrew _Tsebi_ and, like the Greek word {Dorcas} (\Dorkas\), means Gazelle, "the creature with the beautiful look" (or eyes), from \derkomai\. The gazelle was a favourite type for beauty in the orient (Song of Solomon 2:9,17; 4:5; 7:3). She may have had both the Aramaic and the Greek name, Tabitha Dorcas like John Mark. There is nothing said about a husband and so she was probably unmarried. She is the second woman mentioned by name after Pentecost (Sapphira the other). She did her beautiful deeds by herself. She did not have a Dorcas society. {Did} (\epoiei\). Imperfect active, her habit.

9:37 {In an upper chamber} (\en huper“i“i\). See on 1:13. Also in verse 39. In that house. This service was rendered by the women, though Luke has \lousantes\ (masculine plural aorist active participle of \lou“), a general way of saying "they washed." The interment was not hurried as in Jerusalem (Ananias and Sapphira) and the upper room is where the body was usually placed.

9:38 {Delay not} (\m^ okn“s“is\). Ingressive aorist active subjunctive in prohibition. Direct discourse and not indirect as late MSS. have (aorist active infinitive, \okn“sai). Possibly the two messengers started before Dorcas was quite dead, though we do not know. Peter had recently healed Aeneas and the disciples may have had faith enough to believe that he could raise the dead by the power of Christ. W. M. Ramsay doubts if Dorcas was really dead, but why see legends in these supernatural events?

9:39 {Stood by him} (\parest“san aut“i\). Second aorist active indicative, intransitive, of \parist“mi\). Vivid picture of this group of widows as they stood around Peter, weeping (\klaiousai\) and showing (\epideiknumenai\, present middle as belonging to themselves, pointing with pride to) the very inner garments (\chit“nas\)) and outer garments (\himatia\), like the Latin _tunica_ and _toga_, which she made from time to time (\epoiei\, imperfect active, repeated action). It was a heart-breaking scene.

9:40 {Put them all forth} (\ekbal“n ex“ pantas\). Second aorist (effective) active participle of \ekball“\, a rather strong word, perhaps with some difficulty. Cf. Mr 5:40 which incident Peter may have recalled. The words are not genuine in Lu 8:54.

Peter's praying alone reminds one of Elijah (1Ki 17:20) and the widow's son and Elisha for the Shunammite's son (2Ki 4:33).

{Tabitha, arise} (\Tabeitha, anast^{thi}\). With sublime faith like \Taleitha koum\ of Jesus in Mr 5:41. {She sat up} (\anekathisen\). Effective aorist active indicative of \anakathiz“\. Often in medical writers, only here in the N.T. and Lu 7:15 where Westcott and Hort have in the margin the uncompounded form \ekathisen\. Vivid picture.

9:41 {Raised her up} (\anest^{sen autⁿ}\). First aorist active indicative, transitive, of \anist^{mi}\. {Presented} (\parest^{sen}\). First aorist active indicative, transitive of \parist^{mi}\ (cf. intransitive second aorist in verse 39 above). It was a joyful time for Peter, the widows, all the saints, and for Dorcas.

9:43 {Many days} (\h^{meras hikanas}\). See on verse 23. Luke is fond of the phrase and uses it for time, number, size. It might be "ten days, ten months, or ten years" (Page). {With one Simon a tanner} (\para tini Sim“ni bursei\). The use of \para\ is usual for staying with one (by his side). "The more scrupulous Jews regarded such an occupation as unclean, and avoided those who pursued it. The conduct of Peter here shows that he did not carry his prejudices to that extent" (Hackett). One of the rabbis said: "It is impossible for the world to do without tanners; but woe to him who is a tanner." A Jewess could sue for divorce if she discovered that her husband was a tanner. And yet Peter will have scruples on the housetop in the tanner's house about eating food considered unclean. "The lodging with the tanner was a step on the road to eating with a Gentile" (Furneaux).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

10:1 {Cornelius} (\Korn`lios\). The great Cornelian family of Rome may have had a freedman or descendant who is {centurion} (\hekaton-tarch`^s\, leader of a hundred, Latin _centurio_). See on Mt 8:5. These Roman centurions always appear in a favourable light in the N.T. (Mt 8:5; Lu 7:2; 23:47; Ac 10:1; 22:25; 27:3). Furneaux notes the contrasts between Joppa, the oldest town in Palestine, and Caesarea, built by Herod; the Galilean fisherman lodging with a tanner and the Roman officer in the seat of governmental authority. {Of the band called the Italian} (\ek speir`^s t`^s kaloumen`^s Italik`^s\). A legion had ten cohorts or "bands" and sixty centuries. The word \speir`^s\ (note genitive in -es\ like the Ionic instead of -as) is here equal to the Latin _cohors_. In the provinces were stationed cohorts of Italic citizens (volunteers) as an inscription at Carnuntum on the Danube (Ramsay) has shown (epitaph of an officer in the second Italic cohort). Once more Luke has been vindicated. The soldiers could, of course, be Roman citizens who lived in Caesarea. But the Italian cohorts were sent to any part of the empire as needed. The procurator at Caesarea would need a cohort whose loyalty he could trust, for the Jews were restless.

10:2 {Devout} (\euseb`^s\). Old word from \eu\ (well) and \sebomai\ (to worship, to reverence), but rare in the N.T. (Ac 10:2,7; 2Pe 2:1). It might refer to a worshipful pagan (Ac 17:23, \sebasmata\, objects of worship), but connected with "one that feared God" (\phoboumenos ton theon\). Luke describes "a God-fearing proselyte" as in 10:22,35. This is his usual term for the Gentile seekers after God (13:16, 26; 17:4,17, etc.), who had come into the worship of the synagogue without circumcision, and were not strictly proselytes, though some call such men "proselytes of the gate" (cf. Ac 13:43); but clearly Cornelius and his family were still regarded as outside the pale of Judaism (10:28,34; 11:1,8; 15:7). They had seats in the synagogue, but were not Jews. {Gave much alms} (\poi`n eleemosunas pollas\). Doing many alms (the very phrase in Mt 6:2), a characteristic mark of Jewish piety and from a Gentile to the Jewish people. {Prayed} (\deomenos\). Begging of God. Almsgiving and prayer were two of the cardinal points with the

10:3 {Coming in} (\eiselthonta\). Ingressive second aorist active participle, not present. So punctiliar, "saw come," not "saw coming." So also "say" or "speak," not "saying." Luke repeats the account of this vision to Cornelius twice (10:30; 11:13) and also the story of the vision to Peter (10:1-16,28; 11:5).

10:4 {Lord} (\kurie\). Cornelius recognizes the angel of God (verse 3) as God's messenger. {Are gone up} (\aneb^san\). Timeless second aorist active indicative of \anabain^\. Gone up like the smoke of incense in sacrifices. {For a memorial} (\eis mn^mosunon\). Old word from \mn^m^n\. The only other instance in the N.T. is by Jesus about the act of Mary of Bethany (Mt 26:13; Mr 14:9). His prayers and his alms proved his sincerity and won the ear of God.

10:5 {Fetch} (\metapempsai\). First aorist middle (indirect, for one's self) imperative of \metapemp^\. usual voice in ancient Greek with this verb in sense of sending another for one's own sake. Only in Acts in the N.T. See also 10:22.

10:6 {Lodgeth} (\xenizetai\). Present passive indicative of \xeniz^\. old verb from \xenos\, a stranger as a guest. So to entertain a guest as here or to surprise by strange acts (Ac 17:20; 1Pe 4:4). {Whose} (\h^i\). To whom, dative of possession. {By the seaside} (\para thalassan\). Along by the sea. Note accusative case. Outside the city walls because a tanner and to secure water for his trade. Some tanneries are by the seashore at Jaffa today.

10:8 {Rehearsed} (\ex^g^samenos\). See on ^Lu 24:35. All the details about the vision. The soldier was "devout" like Cornelius and would protect the two household servants (\oiket^n\).

10:9 {On the morrow} (\t^i epaurion\). Locative case of article with the compound adverb (\h^merfi\ day being understood), the second day after leaving Caesarea, 28 miles from Joppa. The third day (the next morrow, verse 23) they start back home and the fourth day (on the morrow again, verse 24) they reach Caesarea. {As they} (\ekein^n\). The party of three from Caesarea. Genitive absolute with present participle \hodoiporount^n\ (journeying) and \eggizont^n\ (drew nigh). {The housetop} (\to d^ma\). Old word and in Gospels (Lu 3:19, etc.), but only here in Acts. From \dem“, to build, and so any part of the building (hall, dining room, and then roof). The roof was nearly flat with walls around and so was a good place for meditation and prayer and naps.

10:10 {Hungry} (\prospeinos\). Only instance of the word known, a \hapax legomenon\.. Probably "very hungry" (\pros|=besides, in addition). {Desired} (\thelen\). Imperfect active. Was longing to eat. It was about twelve o'clock noon and Peter may even have smelt the savory dishes, "while they made ready" (\paraskeuazont“n\). "The natural and the supernatural border closely on one another, with no definable limits" (Furneaux). {He fell into a trance} (\egeneto ep' auton ekstasis\). More exactly, "An ecstasy came upon him," in which trance he passed out of himself (\ekstasis\, from \exist^mi\)) and from which one came to himself (12:11). Cf. also 11:5; 22:17. It is thus different from a vision (\horama\)) as in verse 3.

10:11 {Beholdeth} (\the“rei\). Vivid historical present and change from past time. {Opened} (\ane“igmenon\, perfect passive participle with double reduplication, state of completion). {Descending} (\katabainon\). Present active participle describing the process. {Sheet} (\othon^n\). Old word for linen cloth and only here in the N.T. Accusative case in apposition with \skeuos\ (vessel). {Let down} (\Kathimenon\). Present passive participle of \Kathi^mi\.. Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Lu 5:19; Ac 9:25. Linear action here picturing the process, "being let down." {By four corners} (\tessarsin archais\). Instrumental case of \arch^\", beginning. We say "end" or extremity for this use of the word. The picture is the sheet held up by four cords to which the sheet is fastened. Isa 11:12 had said that Israel would be gathered from the four corners of the earth. Knowling follows Hobart in taking the four corners of the sheet to be a medical phrase for bandage (the end of a bandage).

10:12 {Were} (\hup^rchen\). Imperfect of \huparch“\ in sense of ^n\, to exist, be. Fish are not mentioned, perhaps because the sheet had no water, though they were clean and unclean also (Le 11:9; De 14:9). {All manner of} (\panta\). Literally, all, but clearly all varieties, not all individuals. Both clean and unclean animals are in the sheet.

10:14 {Not so, Lord} (\M^dam“s, kurie\). The negative \m^dam“s\ calls for the optative \ei^\ (may it not be) or the imperative \est^\ (let it be). It is not \oudam"s^\, a blunt refusal (I shall not do it). And yet it is more than a mild protest as Page and Furneaux argue. It is a polite refusal with a reason given. Peter recognizes the invitation to slay (\thuson^\) the unclean animals as from the Lord (\kurie^\) but declines it three times. {For I have never eaten anything} (\hoti oudepote ephagon pan^\). Second aorist active indicative, I never did anything like this and I shall not do it now. The use of \pan^\ (everything) with \oudepote^\ (never) is like the Hebrew (lo--k"l) though a like idiom appears in the vernacular _Koin, (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 752). {Common and unclean} (\koinon kai akatharton^\). \Koinos^\ from epic \xunos^\ (xun, sun, together with) originally meant common to several (Latin _communis_) as in Ac 2:44; 4:32; Tit 1:4; Jude 1:3. The use seen here (also Mr 7:2,5; Ro 14:14; Heb 10:29; Re 21:27; Ac 10:28; 11:8), like Latin _vulgaris_ is unknown in ancient Greek. Here the idea is made plain by the addition of \akatharton^\ (unclean), ceremonially unclean, of course. We have the same double use in our word "common." See on Mr 7:18f. where Mark adds the remarkable participle \kathariz"n^\ (making all meats clean), evidently from Peter who recalls this vision. Peter had been reared from childhood to make the distinction between clean and unclean food and this new proposal even from the Lord runs against all his previous training. He did not see that some of God's plans for the Jews could be temporary. This symbol of the sheet was to show Peter ultimately that Gentiles could be saved without becoming Jews. At this moment he is in spiritual and intellectual turmoil.

10:15 {Make not thou common} (\su m^ koinou^\). Note emphatic position of \su^\ (thou). Do thou stop making common what God cleansed (\ekatharisen^\). The idiom of \m^\ with the present active imperative \koinou^\ means precisely this. Peter had just called "common" what God had invited him to slay and eat.

10:16 {Thrice} (\epitris^\). For three times. Peter remained unconvinced even by the prohibition of God. Here is a striking illustration of obstinacy on the part of one who acknowledges the voice of God to him when the command of the Lord crosses one's preferences and prejudices. There are abundant examples today of precisely this thing. In a real sense Peter was maintaining a pose of piety beyond the will of the Lord. Peter was defiling what God had cleansed. {Was received up} (\anel^mphth^\). First aorist passive indicative of \analamban“, to take up. The word used of the Ascension (1:22).

10:17 {Was much perplexed in himself} (\en heaut“i di^porei\). Imperfect active of \diapore“, intensive compound (\dia\, thoroughly, and \a\ privative and \poros\, way), to be completely at a loss to know what road to take. Old verb, but in N.T. only in Luke and Acts. Page notes that Luke is singularly fond of verbs compounded with \dia\. See on ˘Lu 9:7 and Ac 2:12. When out of the ecstasy he was more puzzled than ever. {Might be} (\an ei^˘\). Optative with \an\ in indirect question simply retained from the direct (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1021, 1044). See Ac 17:18, for the direct and Lu 1:62 for the indirect (\an theloi\ both times). It is the conclusion of a fourth class condition. {Having made inquiry} (\dier“t^santes\). First aorist active participle of \dier“ta“, another compound of \dia\, to ask one after another, to ask through, old verb, but only here in the N.T. It took diligent inquiry to find the obscure house of Simon the tanner. {Stood before the gate} (\epest^san epi ton pul“na\). Second aorist active indicative of \ephist^mi\, intransitive. Note repetition of \epi\. The messengers stopped right at the folding gates of the passage (\pul“na\) which led from the street to the inner court or house.

10:18 {Called} (\ph“n^santes\). In a loud voice that those inside the house might hear. {Asked} (\epunthanonto\). Imperfect middle of \punthanomai\, old verb to make inquiry especially with an indirect question as here. Kept on inquiring. Westcott and Hort follow B C here and read \eputhonto\ (second aorist middle, effective aorist). Either makes sense, though the imperfect is more picturesque. {Were lodging} (\xenizetai\). Present middle indicative retained in indirect question. See on verse ˘6 for the verb.

10:19 {Thought} (\dienthumoumenou\). Genitive absolute of present middle participle of \dienthumeomai\, a double compound (\dia\ and \en- \ with \thumos\) and another \hapax legomenon\ save in ecclesiastical writers, though \enthumeomai\ is common enough and Textus Receptus so reads here. Peter was revolving in his mind, through and through, in and out, to find the meaning of the strange vision.

10:20 {But} (\alla\). So usually, though it is open to question whether \alla\ is adversative here and not rather, "Now then."

{Get thee down} (\katab^{thi}). Second aorist active imperative, at once. {Go} (\poreuou). Present middle imperative, go on. {Nothing doubting} (\m^{den} diakrinomenos). Another compound of \dia, old and common verb for a divided mind (\dia\ like \duo\, two). Note usual negative of the present middle participle, the subjective \m^{den}. The notion of wavering (Jas 1:6) is common with this verb in the middle voice. In Ac 11:12 the aorist active (\m^{den} diakrinanta) is used perhaps with the idea of conduct towards others rather than his own internal doubt as here (Page). {For I} (\hoti eg^{ai}). The Holy Spirit assumes responsibility for the messengers from Cornelius and thus connects their mission with the vision which was still troubling Peter. Peter had heard his name called by the man (verse 19).

10:21 {Cause} (\aitia). Or reason. Common in this sense. See on Mt 19:3.

10:22 {Righteous} (\dikaios). In the Jewish sense as in Lu 1:6; 2:25. {Well reported of} (\martouroumenos). Present passive participle as in 6:3. Cf. the other centurion in Lu 7:4. {Nation} (\ethnous). Not \laou, for the speakers are Gentiles. {Was warned} (\echr^{matisth}). First aorist passive of \chr^{matiz}, old word for doing business, then consulting an oracle, and here of being divinely (word God not expressed) warned as in Mt 2:12,22; Lu 2:26; Heb 11:7. Then to be called or receive a name from one's business as in Ac 11:26; Ro 7:3.

10:23 {Lodged them} (\exenisen). Active voice here rather than passive as in 10:6. {Accompanied him} (\sun^{lthan} aut^{ai}). Associative instrumental case after verb. The wisdom of having these half dozen Jewish Christians from Joppa with Peter in the house of Cornelius in Caesarea becomes manifest in Jerusalem (11:12).

10:24 {Was waiting} (\ⁿ prosdokⁿ). Periphrastic imperfect active, in eager expectation and hope, directing the mind (\doka^{ai}) towards (\pros) anything. Old and common verb. {Near} (\anagkaious). Only instance in the N.T. of this sense of \anagkaios from \anagk^{ai}, necessity, what one cannot do without, necessary (1Co 12:22), duty (Ac 13:46), or blood relations as here. The ancient Greek writers combined these two words (\suggeneis\, kinsmen\, anagkaious\, necessary friends) as here. It was a homogeneous group of Gentiles close to Cornelius and predisposed to hear Peter favourably.

10:25 {That Peter entered} (tou eiselthein ton Petron\). This is a difficult construction, for the subject of \egeneto\ (it happened) has to be the articular genitive infinitive \tou eiselthein\ with the accusative of general reference \ton Petron\. Most commentators consider it inexplicable. It is probably an extension of the ordinary articular infinitive under the influence of the Hebrew infinitive construct without regard to the case, regarding it as a fixed case form and so using it as nominative. Precisely this construction of \tou\ and the infinitive as the subject of a verb occurs in the LXX (2Ch 6:7, etc.). See Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1067f. for full discussion of this obvious Hebraism. Somewhat similar examples appear in Ac 20:3; 27:1. But the Codex Bezae avoids this awkward idiom by the genitive absolute (\proseggizontos tou Petrou\) and some additional details (one of the servants ran forward and announced that he was come). {Worshipped him} (\prosekun^{sen}\). "Cornelius was not an idolator and would not have honoured Peter as a god" (Furneaux). The word probably means here reverence like old English usage (Wycliff) and not actual worship, though Peter took it that way (verse 26). Jesus accepted such worship (Mt 8:2; Lu 5:8 by Peter).

10:27 {As he talked with him} (\sunomil^{n aut}ⁱ\). Present active participle of \sunomile^a\, rare compound and here alone in the N.T., with associative instrumental case. The uncompounded verb is common enough though in the N.T. only in Lu 24:14 which see and Ac 20:11; 24:26. {Findeth} (\heuriskei\). Vivid historical present indicative active. {Come together} (\sunel^{luthotas}\). Second perfect active participle of \sunerchomai\. It was an expectant group of Gentiles eager for Peter's interpretation of the vision of Cornelius.

10:28 {How that it is an unlawful thing} (\h^s athemiton estin\). The conjunction \h^s\ is sometimes equivalent to \hoti\ (that). The old form of \athemitos\ was \athemistos\ from \themisto\ (\themiz^a, themis, law custom) and \a\ privative. In the N.T. only here and 1Pe 4:3 (Peter both times). But there is no O.T. regulation forbidding such social contact with Gentiles, though the rabbis had added it and had made it binding by custom. There is nothing more binding on the average person than social custom. On coming from the market an orthodox Jew was expected to immerse to avoid defilement (Edersheim, _Jewish Social Life_, pp. 26-28; Taylor's _Sayings of the Jewish Fathers_, pp. 15, 26, 137, second edition). See also Ac 11:3; Ga 2:12. It is that middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile (Eph 2:14) which Jesus broke down. {One of another nation} (\allop^{hul}“i\). Dative case of an old adjective, but only here in the N.T. (\allos\, another, \phulon\, race). Both Juvenal (Sat. XIV. 104, 105) and Tacitus (History, V. 5) speak of the Jewish exclusiveness and separation from Gentiles. {And yet unto} (\kamoi\). Dative of the emphatic pronoun (note position of prominence) with \kai\ (\crasis\) meaning here "and yet" or adversative "but" as often with \kai\ which is by no means always merely the connective "and" (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1182f.). Now Peter takes back both the adjectives used in his protest to the Lord (verse 14) "common and unclean." It is a long journey that Peter has made. He here refers to "no one" (\m^dena\), not to "things," but that is great progress.

10:29 {Without gainsaying} (\anantirrhˆtˆˈs\). \A\ privative with compound adverb from \anti\ (back, in return, against) and verbal \rhˆtos\ (from |errhˆthˆn|, to speak). Late and rare and here only in the N.T., but the adjective in 19:36. Without answering back. That is true after the Holy Spirit expressly told Peter to go with the messengers of Cornelius (10:19-23). Peter's objections were made to the Lord in the vision which he did not understand. But that vision prepared him for this great step which he had now taken. He had stepped over the line of Jewish custom. {With what intent} (\tini logˆi\). More exactly, "for what reason" as in Plato, _Gorgias_ 512 C.

10:30 {Four days ago} (\apo tetart^s h^{meras}). From the fourth day, reckoning backwards from this day. {I was keeping the ninth hour of prayer} (\mⁿ tⁿ enatⁿ proseuchomenos). Periphrastic middle imperfect and accusative of extension of time (all the ninth hour).

10:31 {Is heard} (|eis^kousth^|). Sort of timeless first aorist passive indicative as is "are had in remembrance" (|emn^sth^san|). See verse 4 "are gone up for a memorial").

10:32 {In the house of Simon} (\en oikifi Sim“nos\). See 9:43 for \para Sim“ni\ with same idea.

10:33 {And thou hast well done that thou art come} (|su te kal“s epoîˆsas paragenomenos|). "And thou didst well in coming." A regular formula for expressing thanks as in Php 4:14; 3Jo 1:6;

10:34 {Opened his mouth} (\anoixas to stoma\). Solemn formula for beginning his address (8:35; 18:14; Mt 5:2; 13:35). But also good elocution for the speaker. {I perceive} (\katalambanomai\). Aoristic present middle of \katalamban“, to take hold of, the middle noting mental action, to lay hold with the mind (Ac 4:13; 10:34; 25:25; Eph 3:18). It had been a difficult thing for Peter to grasp, but now "of a truth" (\ep' al[^]theias\) the light has cleared away the fogs. It was not until Peter had crossed the threshold of the house of Cornelius in the new environment and standpoint that he sees this new and great truth. {Respecter of persons} (\pros“pol[^]mpt^s\). This compound occurs only here and in Chrysostom. It is composed of \pros“pon\ face or person (\pros\ and \ops\, before the eye or face) and \lamban“. The abstract form \pros“pol[^]mpsia\ occurs in Jas 2:1 (also Ro 2:11; Eph 6:9; Col 3:25) and the verb \pros“polempte“\ in Jas 2:9. The separate phrase (\lambanein pros“pon\) occurs in Lu 20:21; Ga 2:6. The phrase was already in the LXX (De 10:17; 2Ch 19:7; Ps 82:6). Luke has simply combined the two words into one compound one. The idea is to pay regard to one's looks or circumstances rather than to his intrinsic character. The Jews had come to feel that they were the favourites of God and actually sons of the kingdom of heaven because they were descendants of Abraham. John the Baptist rebuked them for this fallacy.

10:35 {Acceptable to him} (\dektos aut“i\). Verbal adjective from \dechomai\. _Acceptabilis_. That is to say, a Gentile would not have to become a Jew in order to become a Christian. Evidently Peter had not before perceived this fact. On the great Day of Pentecost when he spoke of the promise "to all those afar off" (2:39) Peter understood that they must first become Jews and then Christians. The new idea that now makes a revolution in Peter's outlook is precisely this that Christ can and will save Gentiles like this Cornelius group without their becoming Jews at all.

10:36 {The word which he sent} (\ton logon hon apesteilen\). Many ancient MSS. (so Westcott and Hort) read merely \ton logon apesteilen\ (he sent the word). This reading avoids the anacoluthon and inverse attraction of \logon\ to the case of the relative \hon\ (which). {Preaching good tidings of peace through Jesus Christ} (\euaggelizomenos eir^hn^h dia I^{sou} Christou\). Gospelizing peace through Jesus Christ. There is no other way to have real peace between individuals and God, between races and nations, than by Jesus Christ. Almost this very language occurs in Eph 2:17 where Paul states that Jesus on the cross "preached (gospelized) peace to you who are afar off and peace to you who are near." Peter here sees what Paul will see later with great clearness. {He is Lord of all} (\houtos estin pant^hn kurios\). A triumphant parenthesis that Peter throws in as the reason for his new truth. Jesus Christ is Lord of all, both Jews and Gentiles.

10:37 {Ye know} (\humeis oidate\). Peter reminds his Gentile audience that the main facts concerning Jesus and the gospel were known to them. Note emphatic expression of \humeis\ (you). {Beginning} (\arxamenos\). The Textus Receptus has \arxamenon\ (accusative), but the nominative is given by Aleph A B C D E H and is certainly correct. But it makes a decided anacoluthon. The accusative would agree with \rh^hma\ used in the sense of message or story as told by the disciples. The nominative does not agree with anything in the sentence. The same phrase occurs in Lu 23:5. Here is this aorist middle participle almost used like an adverb. See a similar loose use of \arxamenos\ in the same sense by Peter in Ac 1:22. The baptism of John is given as the _terminus a quo_. The story began with a skip to Galilee after the baptism just like the Gospel of Mark. This first message of Peter to the Gentiles (10:37-44) corresponds in broad outline with Mark's Gospel. Mark heard Peter preach many times and evidently planned his Gospel (the Roman Gospel) on this same model. There is in it nothing about the birth and childhood of Jesus nor about the intervening ministry supplied by John's Gospel for the period (a year) between the baptism and the Galilean Ministry. Peter here presents an objective statement of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus with proof from the Scriptures that he is the Messiah. It is a skilful presentation.

10:38 {Jesus of Nazareth} (Iˆsoun ton apo Nazareth). Jesus the one from Nazareth, the article before the city identifying him clearly. The accusative case is here by \prolepsis\, Jesus being expressed for emphasis before the verb "anointed" and the pronoun repeated pleonastically after it. "Jesus transfers the mind from the gospel-history to the personal subject of it" (Hackett). {God anointed him} (echrisen, auton, ho theos). First aorist active of the verb \chriˆ\, to anoint, from which the verbal \Christos\ is formed (Ac 2:36). The precise event referred to by Peter could be the Incarnation (Lu 1:35f.), the Baptism (Lu 3:22), the Ministry at Nazareth (Lu 4:14). Why not to the life and work of Jesus as a whole? {Went about doing good} (diˆlthen euergetˆn). Beautiful description of Jesus. Summary (constative) aorist active of \dierehomai\, to go through (dia) or from place to place. The present active participle \euergetˆn\ is from the old verb \euergeteˆ\ (eu, well, ergon, work) and occurs only here in the N.T. The substantive \euergetˆs\ (benefactor) was often applied to kings like Ptolemy Euergetes and that is the sense in Lu 22:25 the only N.T. example. But the term applies to Jesus far more than to Ptolemy or any earthly king (Cornelius a Lapide). {And healing} (kai iˆmenos). And in particular healing. Luke does not exclude other diseases (cf. Lu 13:11,16), but he lays special emphasis on demoniacal possession (cf. Mr 1:23). {That were oppressed} (tous katadunasteuomenous). Present passive articular participle of \katadunasteuˆ\, to oppress. A late verb in LXX and papyri. In the N.T. only here and Jas 2:6 (best MSS.). One of the compounds of \kata\ made transitive. The reality of the devil (the slanderer, diabolos) is recognized by Peter. {For God was with him} (hoti ho theos ˆn met' autou). Surely this reason does not reveal "a low Christology" as some charge. Peter had used the same language in Ac 7:9 and earlier in Lu 1:28,66 as Nicodemus does in Joh 3:2.

10:39 {And we are witnesses} (kai hˆmeis martures). Compare "ye yourselves know" (verse 37). Peter thus appeals to what the audience know and to what the disciples know. He made the same claim about personal witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus at Pentecost (2:32). Here Peter affirms full knowledge of the work of Jesus in Judea (for whole country including Galilee and Perea) and Jerusalem (given mainly in John's Gospel). In the Greek \h“n\ (which) is attracted into the genitive case to agree with the antecedent \pant“n\ (all), a common enough idiom. {Whom also they slew} (\hon kai aneilan\). Second aorist active indicative of \anaire“\ with \a\ as often in Acts (2:23; 5:30). But note \kai\ (also) in the old MSS., not in the Textus Receptus. They "also" slew him, went that far, "this crowning atrocity" (Vincent), \kai\ could here be "even." {Hanging him on a tree} (\kremasantes epi xulou\). This same expression used by Peter in 5:30 which see for discussion.

10:40 {Gave him to be made manifest} (\ed“ken auton emphan^ genesthai\). Peculiar phrase, here only in the N.T. and in Ro 10:20 (quoted from Isa 65:1). \Emphan^, predicate accusative after infinitive \genesthai\ agreeing with \auton\ object of \ed“ken\.

10:41 {Chosen before} (\prokecheiroton^menois\). Perfect passive participle dative plural from \procheirotone“, to choose or designate by hand (\cheirotone“, cheir, hand, and \tein“, to stretch, as in Ac 14:23; 2Co 8:19), beforehand (\pro\), a double compound as old as Plato, but here alone in the N.T. Peter is evidently stating the thing as it happened and not trying to make a convincing story by saying that both friends and foes saw him after his resurrection. It is the "historian's candour" (Paley) in Luke here that adds to the credibility of the narrative. The sceptical Jews would not have believed and Jesus was kept from open contact with the world of sin after his Passion. {To us who did eat and drink with him} (\h^min hoitines sunephagomen kai sunepiomen aut“i\). The "who" (\hoitines\) is first person agreeing with "us" (\h^min\). Second aorist active indicative of the common verbs \sunesthi“\ and \sumpin“. \Aut“i\ is associative instrumental case. There are difficulties to us in understanding how Jesus could eat and drink after the resurrection as told here and in Lu 24:41-3, but at any rate Peter makes it clear that it was no hallucination or ghost, but Jesus himself whom they saw after he rose from the dead, "after the rising as to him" (\meta to anast^nai auton\, \meta\ with the accusative articular infinitive second aorist active and the accusative \auton\ of general reference). Furneaux dares to think that the disciples misunderstood Jesus about eating after the resurrection. But that is to deny the testimony merely because we cannot explain the transition state of the body of Jesus.

10:42 {He charged} (\par^ggeilen\). First aorist active indicative as in 1:4. There Jesus is the subject and so probably here, though Page insists that \ho theos\ (God) is here because of verse 40. {To testify} (\diamarturasthai\). First aorist middle infinitive. See on 2:40. {Ordained} (\h^rismenos\). Perfect passive participle of \horiz^, old verb, to mark out, to limit, to make a horizon. {Judge} (\krit^s\). The same point made by Peter in 1Pe 4:5. He does not use the word "Messiah" to these Gentiles though he did say "anointed" (\echrisen\)) in verse 38. Peter's claim for Jesus is that he is the Judge of Jew and Gentile (living and dead).

10:43 {Every one that believeth} (\panta ton pisteuonta\). This accusative active participle of general reference with the infinitive in indirect discourse is the usual idiom. Only \labein\ (second aorist active infinitive of lamban^) is not indirect statement so much as indirect command or arrangement. The prophets bear witness to Jesus Christ to this effect. It is God's plan and no race distinctions are drawn. Peter had already said the same thing at Pentecost (2:38), but now he sees himself that Gentiles do not have to become Jews, but have only to believe in Jesus as Messiah and Judge as foretold by the prophets. It was glorious news to Cornelius and his group. {Through his name} (\dia tou onomatos autou\), not as a _title_ or magic formula (Ac 18:13), but the power of Christ himself represented by his name.

10:44 {While Peter yet spake} (\eti lalountos tou Petrou\). Genitive absolute of present participle, still going on. {The Holy Ghost fell} (\epepesen to pneuma to hagion\). Second aorist active indicative of \epipt^, old verb to fall upon, to recline, to come upon. Used of the Holy Spirit in 8:16; 10:44; 11:15. It appears that Peter was interrupted in his sermon by this remarkable event. The Jews had received the Holy Spirit (2:4), the Samaritans (8:17), and now Gentiles. But on this occasion it was before baptism, as was apparently true in Paul's case (9:17f.). In 8:16; 19:5 the hands of the apostles were also placed after baptism on those who received the Holy Spirit. Here it was unexpected by Peter and by Cornelius and was indubitable proof of the conversion of these Gentiles who had accepted Peter's message and had believed on Jesus Christ as Saviour.

10:45 {They of the circumcision which believed} (hoi ek peritom[^]s pistoi\). The believing ones of the circumcision, more exactly. {Were amazed} (exest[^]san\). Second aorist active indicative, intransitive, of \exist[^]mi\. They stood out of themselves. {On the Gentiles also} (kai epi ta ethn[^]\). Or, even upon the Gentiles. {Was poured out} (ekkechutai\). Present perfect passive retained in indirect discourse of \ekche“\ or \ekchun“, old verb, used metaphorically of the Holy Spirit also in 2:17 (from Joe 2:28f.), Ac 2:33.

10:46 {They heard} (kouon\). Imperfect active, were hearing, kept on hearing. {Speak} (lalount[^]n\). Present active participle, speaking, for they kept it up. {With tongues} (gl[^]ssais\). Instrumental case as in 2:4,11 which see. The fuller statement there makes it clear that here it was new and strange tongues also as in 19:6; 1Co 14:4-19. This sudden manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power on uncircumcised Gentiles was probably necessary to convince Peter and the six brethren of the circumcision that God had opened the door wide to Gentiles. It was proof that a Gentile Pentecost had come and Peter used it effectively in his defence in Jerusalem (Ac 11:15).

10:47 {Can any man forbid the water?} (M[^]ti to hud[^]r dunatai k[^]l-sai tis?\). The negative \m[^]ti\ expects the answer _No_. The evidence was indisputable that these Gentiles were converted and so were entitled to be baptized. See the similar idiom in Lu 6:39. Note the article with "water." Here the baptism of the Holy Spirit had preceded the baptism of water (Ac 1:5; 11:16). "The greater had been bestowed; could the lesser be withheld?" (Knowing). {That these should not be baptized} (tou m[^]baptisth[^]nai toutous\). Ablative case of the articular first aorist passive infinitive of \baptiz“\ with the redundant negative after the verb of hindering (k[^]l-sai\) and the accusative of general reference (toutous\). The redundant negative after the verb of hindering is not necessary though often used in ancient Greek and in the _Koin_, (papyri). Without it see Mt 19:14; Ac 8:36 and with it see Lu 4:42; 24:16; Ac 14:18. Cf. Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1061, 1094, 1171. The triple negatives here are a bit confusing to the modern mind (m[^]ti in the question, k[^]l-sai, to hinder or to cut off, m[^] with baptisth[^]nai\). Literally, Can any one cut off the water from the being baptized as to these? Meyer: "The water is in this animated language conceived as the element offering itself for the baptism." {As well as we} (\h"s kai h^meis\). The argument was conclusive. God had spoken. Note the query of the eunuch to Philip (Ac 8:36).

10:48 {Commanded} (\prosetaxen\). First aorist active indicative. Peter himself abstained from baptizing on this occasion (cf. Paul in 1Co 1:14). Evidently it was done by the six Jewish brethren. {Them to be baptized} (\autous baptisth^nai\). Accusative of general reference with the first aorist passive infinitive. {In the name of Jesus Christ} (\en t"i onomati I^sou Christou\). The essential name in Christian baptism as in 2:38; 19:5. But these passages give the authority for the act, not the formula that was employed (Alvah Hovey in Hackett's _Commentary_. See also chapter on the Baptismal Formula in my _The Christ of the Logia_). "Golden days" (\aurei dies\, Bengel) were these for the whole group.

(Acts: Chapter 10)

11:1 {In Judea} (\kata tⁿ Ioudaia\). Throughout Judea (probably all Palestine), distributive use of \kata\. The news from Caesarea spread like wildfire among the Jewish Christians. The case of the Samaritans was different, for they were half Jews, though disliked. But here were real Romans even if with Jewish affinities. {Had received} (\edexanto\). First aorist middle indicative. The English idiom requires "had" received, the Greek has simply "received."

11:2 {They that were of the circumcision} (\hoi ek peritom^s\). Literally, those of circumcision (on the side of circumcision, of the circumcision party). The phrase in 10:46 is confined to the six brethren with Peter in Caesarea (11:12). That can hardly be the meaning here for it would mean that they were the ones who brought the charge against Peter though Hort takes this view. All the disciples in Jerusalem were Jews so that it can hardly mean the whole body. In Ga 2:12 the phrase has the narrower sense of the Judaizing or Pharisaic wing of the disciples (Ac 15:5) who made circumcision necessary for all Gentile converts. Probably here by anticipation Luke so describes the beginning of that great controversy. The objectors probably did not know of Peter's vision at Joppa, but only of the revolutionary conduct of Peter in Caesarea. These extremists who spoke probably had abundant sympathy in their protest. The apostles are mentioned in verse 1, but are not referred to in verse 2. Apparently they are in contrast with the circumcision party in the church. {Contended} (\diekrinonto\). Imperfect middle of the common verb \diakrin\, to {separate}. Here to separate oneself apart (\dia\), to take sides against, to make a cleavage (\dia\, two, in two) as in Jude 1:9. So Peter is at once put on the defensive as the contention went on. It is plain that Peter was not regarded as any kind of pope or overlord.

11:3 {Thou wentest in} (\eis^lthes\). Direct form, but Westcott and Hort have it \eis^lthen\ (he went in), indirect form. So with \sunephages\ (didst eat) and \sunephagen\ (did eat). The direct is more vivid. {Men uncircumcised} (\andras akrobustian echontas\). "Men having uncircumcision." It is a contemptuous expression. They did not object to Peter's preaching to the Gentiles, but to his going into the house of Cornelius and eating with them, violating his supposed obligations as a Jew (Hackett). It was the same complaint in principle that the Pharisees had made against Jesus when he ate with publicans and sinners (Lu 15:12). The Jews had not merely the Mosaic regulations about clean and unclean food, but also the fact that at a Gentile table some of the meat may have been an idol sacrifice. And Peter himself had similar scruples when the vision came to him at Joppa and when he entered the house of Cornelius in Caesarea 10:28). Peter had been led beyond the circumcision party.

11:4 {Began} (\arxamenos). Not pleonastic here, but graphically showing how Peter began at the beginning and gave the full story of God's dealings with him in Joppa and Caesarea. {Expounded} (\exetitheto). Imperfect middle of \ektith^mi, to set forth, old verb, but in the N.T. only in Acts (7:21; 11:4; 18:26; 28:23), a deliberate and detailed narrative "in order" (\kathex^s). Old word for in succession. In the N.T. only in Lu 1:2; 8:1; Ac 3:24; 11:14; 18:23. Luke evidently considered this defence of Peter important and he preserves the marks of authenticity. It came originally from Peter himself (verses 5,6,15,16). "The case of Cornelius was a test case of primary importance" (Page), "the first great difficulty of the early Church." Part of the story Luke gives three times (10:3-6,30-32; 11:13f.). See the discussion chapter 10 for details given here.

11:5 {Let down} (\kathienen^n). Here agreeing with the "sheet" (\othon^n, feminine), not with "vessel" (\skeuos, neuter) as in 10:11. {Even unto me} (\achri emou). Vivid detail added here by Peter.

11:6 {When I had fastened my eyes} (\atenisas). This personal touch Peter adds from his own experience. See on Lu 4:20; Ac 3:4,12 for this striking verb \ateniz^s, to stretch the eyes towards, first aorist active participle here. {I considered} (\katanoe^s). Imperfect active of \kataneo^s to put the mind down on, to ponder, I was pondering. {And saw} (\kai eidon). Second aorist active indicative, saw in a flash.

11:7 {A voice saying} (\ph^s legous^s). Genitive case after \^kousa (cf. 9:7 and accusative 9:4 which see for discussion). Participle \legous^s (present active of \leg^s) agreeing with \ph^s, a kind of indirect discourse use of the participle.

11:8 {Came into my mouth} (\eis^lthen eis to stoma mou). Instead of \ephagon\ (I ate) in 10:14. Different phrase for the same idea.

11:10 {Was drawn up} (\anespsth^). Instead of \anel^mpth^ (was taken up) in 10:16. First aorist passive indicative of \anaspa^, old verb, but in N.T. only in Lu 14:5 and here.

11:12 {Making no distinction} (\m^den diakrinanta). So Westcott and Hort (first aorist active participle) instead of \m^den diakrinomenon "nothing doubting" (present middle participle) like 10:20. The difference in voice shows the distinction in meaning. {We entered into the man's house} (\eis^lthomen eis ton oikon tou andros). Peter confesses it, but shows that the other six went in also. He avoids mention of Cornelius's name and office.

11:13 {Standing and saying} (\stathenta kai eiponta). More precisely, "stand and say" (punctiliar act, first aorist passive and second aorist active participles). {Fetch Simon} (\metapempsai Sim^na). First aorist middle imperative. Third time mentioned (10:5,22; 11:13). Perhaps Peter is anxious to make it plain that he did not go of his own initiative into the house of Cornelius. He went under God's direct orders.

11:14 {Whereby thou shalt be saved, thou and all thy house} (\en hois s^th^s^i su kai pfs ho oikos sou). Future passive indicative of \s^z^, to save. Clearly Cornelius was unsaved in spite of his interest in Jewish worship. Clearly also the household of Cornelius would likewise be won to Christ by the words of Simon Peter. This is household conversion before the household baptism (10:48; 11:17).

11:15 {As I began to speak} (\en t^i arxasthai me lalein). \En with the locative of the articular aorist infinitive \arxasthai\ (punctiliar action simply) and the accusative of general reference. The second infinitive \lalein\ (to speak) is dependent on \arxasthai, "In the beginning to speak as to me." {Even as on us at the beginning} (\h^sper kai eph' h^mfs en arch^i). Peter recalls vividly the events at Pentecost, the speaking with tongues and all. It is noteworthy that Peter does not here repeat his sermon. "He rests his defence, not on what he said, but on what God did" (Furneaux).

11:16 {I remembered} (\emn^sth^{\n}). First aorist passive indicative of the common verb \mimn^sk^{\n}, to remind. Peter recalls the very words of Jesus as reported in Ac 1:5. Peter now understands this saying of Jesus as he had not done before. That is a common experience with us all as new experiences of grace open richer veins in God's truth (Joh 12:16). Peter clearly sees that the water baptism is merely the symbol or picture of the spiritual baptism in the heart.

11:17 {The like gift} (\t^{\n} is^{\n} d^{\n} rean^{\n}). The equal gift, equal in quality, rank, or measure. Common word. {When we believed} (\pisteusas^{\n}). First aorist active participle of \pisteu^{\n} in the dative case. It agrees both with \h^{\min} (unto us) and with \autois^{\n} (unto them), "having believed on the Lord Jesus Christ." Both classes (Gentiles and Jews) trusted in Christ, and both received the Holy Spirit. {Who was I} (\eg^{\n} tis^{\n} m^{\n}). Note order, "_I_, who was I." "{That I could withstand God}" (\dunatos^{\n} k^{\n} l^{\n} sai^{\n} ton^{\n} theon^{\n}). Literally, "able to withstand or hinder God." It is a rhetorical question, really two questions. Who was I? Was I able to hinder God? Peter's statement of the facts made an unanswerable defence. And yet Peter (Ga 2:11) will later in Antioch play the coward before emissaries from Jerusalem on this very point of eating with Gentile Christians.

11:18 {Held their peace} (\h^{\n} suchasan^{\n}). Ingressive aorist active indicative of \h^{\n} suchaz^{\n}, old verb to be quiet, to keep quiet. The wrangling (verse 2) ceased. The critics even "glorified God" (\edoxasan^{\n}, ingressive aorist again). {Then to the Gentiles also} (\Ara kai tois^{\n} ethnesin^{\n}). \Ergo^{\n} as in Lu 11:20,48 and like \ara^{\n} oun^{\n} in Ro 5:18. In ancient Greek inferential \ara^{\n} cannot come at the beginning of a clause as here. It was reluctant acquiescence in the undoubted fact that God had "granted repentance unto life" to these Gentiles in Caesarea, but the circumcision party undoubtedly looked on it as an exceptional case and not to be regarded as a precedent to follow with other Gentiles. Peter will see in this incident (Ac 15:8) the same principle for which Paul contends at the Jerusalem Conference. Furneaux suggests that this conduct of Peter in Caesarea, though grudgingly acquiesced in after his skilful defence, decreased his influence in Jerusalem where he had been leader and helped open the way for the leadership of James the Lord's brother.

11:19 {They therefore that were scattered abroad} (\hoi men oun diasparentes). Precisely the same words used in 8:4 about those scattered by Saul (which see) and a direct reference to it is made by the next words, "upon the tribulation that arose about Stephen" (\apo t^s thlipse"s t^s genomen^s epi Stephan"i). As a result of (\apo), in the case of (\epi) Stephen. From that event Luke followed Saul through his conversion and back to Jerusalem and to Tarsus. Then he showed the activity of Peter outside of Jerusalem as a result of the cessation of the persecution from the conversion of Saul with the Gentile Pentecost in Caesarea and the outcome in Jerusalem. Now Luke starts over again from the same persecution by Saul and runs a new line of events up to Antioch parallel to the other, probably partly following. {Except to Jews only} (\ei m^ monon Ioudaiois). Clearly these disciples did not know anything about the events in Caesarea and at first their flight preceded that time. But it was a wonderful episode, the eager and loyal preaching of the fleeing disciples. The culmination in Antioch was probably after the report of Peter about Caesarea. This Antioch by the Orontes was founded 300 B.C. by Seleucus Nicator and was one of five cities so named by the Seleucides. It became the metropolis of Syria though the Arabs held Damascus first. Antioch ranked next to Rome and Alexandria in size, wealth, power, and vice. There were many Jews in the cosmopolitan population of half a million. It was destined to supplant Jerusalem as the centre of Christian activity.

11:20 {Spake} (\elaloun). Inchoative imperfect active, began to speak. For them it was an experiment. {Unto the Greeks also} (\kai pros tous Hell^nas). This is undoubtedly the correct reading in spite of Hellenists (\Hell^nistas) or Grecian Jews in B E H L P. \Hell^nas\ is read by A and D and a corrector of Aleph. The presence of "also" or "even" (\kai) in Aleph A B makes no sense unless "Greeks" is correct. Hellenists or Grecian Jews as Christians were common enough as is seen in Ac 2; 6. Saul also had preached to the Hellenists in Jerusalem (9:29). Hellenists were merely one kind of Jews in contrast with those who spoke Aramaic (Ac 6). It is true that the case of Cornelius was first in importance, but it is not clear that it was before the work in Antioch. Probably the report of the work among the Greeks in Antioch reached Jerusalem after Peter's defence in 11:1-18. That explains the calm tone about it and also why Barnabas and not Peter was sent to investigate. Peter and John (Ac 8) had condoned Philip's work in Samaria and Peter was the agent in the work among the Romans in Caesarea. His position was now well-known and his services discounted for this new crisis. These Greeks in Antioch were apparently in part pure heathen and not "God-fearers" like Cornelius. A man of wisdom was called for. These preachers were themselves Hellenists (verse 19) and open to the lessons from their environment without a vision such as Peter had at Joppa. "It was a departure of startling boldness" (Furneaux) by laymen outside of the circle of official leaders.

11:21 {The hand of the Lord was with them} (\^n cheir kuriou met' aut"n\). This O.T. phrase (Ex 9:3; Isa 59:1) is used by Luke (Lu 1:66; Ac 4:28,30; 13:11). It was proof of God's approval of their course in preaching the Lord Jesus to Greeks. {Turned unto the Lord} (\epestrepsen epi ton kurion\). First aorist active indicative of \epistreph" , common verb to turn. The usual expression for Gentiles turning to the true God (14:15; 15:3,19; 26:18,20; 1Th 1:9). Here "Lord" refers to "the Lord Jesus" as in verse 20, though "the hand of the Lord" is the hand of Jehovah, clearly showing that the early disciples put Jesus on a par with Jehovah. His deity was not a late development read back into the early history.

11:22 {Came to the ears} (\^kousth^ eis ta "ta\). First aorist passive indicative of \akou" , was heard in the ears. {Of the church which was in Jerusalem} (\t^s ekkl^sias t^s en Ierousal^m\). Not yet was the term "church" applied to the group of disciples in Antioch as it is in 11:26; 13:1. {They sent forth} (\exapesteilan\). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb \ex-apo-stell" , to send out and away. The choice of Barnabas was eminently wise. He already had a position of leadership in Jerusalem because of his generosity (4:36f.) and his championship of Saul after his conversion (9:27). He was originally from Cyprus and probably had personal friends among some of the leaders in this new movement. He was to investigate the work of the travelling preachers (verse 19) all the way to Antioch (\he"s Antiocheias\).

11:23 {The grace of God, was glad} (\t^n charin t^n tou theou echar^). Note repetition of the article, "the grace that of God." The verb (second aorist passive indicative of \chair") has the same root as \charis\ . See the same _suavis paronomasia_ in Lu 1:28. "Grace brings gladness" (Page). "A smaller man would have raised difficulties as to circumcision or baptism"

(Furneaux). {He exhorted} (\parekalei\). Imperfect active, picturing the continuous encouragement from Barnabas. {With purpose of heart} (\t^i prothesei t^s kardias\). Placing before (from \pro-tith^mi\), old word for set plan as in Ac 27:13; Ro 8:28. The glow of the first enthusiasm might pass as often happens after a revival. Barnabas had a special gift (4:36) for work like this. {Cleave unto the Lord} (\prosmenein [en] t^i kuri^i\). Dative case (locative if \en\ is genuine) of \kurios\ (here Jesus again) after \prosemenein\ to keep on remaining loyal to (present active infinitive). Persistence was needed in such a pagan city.

11:24 {For} (\hoti\). Because. This is the explanation of the conduct of Barnabas. The facts were opposed to the natural prejudices of a Jew like Barnabas, but he rose above such racial narrowness. He was a really good man (\agathos\). See Ro 5:7 for distinction between \agathos\ and \dikaios\, righteous, where \agathos\ ranks higher than \dikaios\. Besides, Barnabas was full of the Holy Spirit (like Peter) and of faith and so willing to follow the leading of God's Spirit and take some risks. This is a noble tribute paid by Luke. One wonders if Barnabas was still living when he wrote this. Certainly he was not prejudiced against Barnabas though he will follow the fortunes of Paul after the separation (15:36; 41). {Was added unto the Lord} (\proseteth^ t^i kuri^i\). First aorist passive indicative of \prostith^mi\, common verb to add to. These people were added to the Lord Jesus before they were added to the church. If that were always true, what a difference it would make in our churches.

11:25 {To seek for Saul} (\anaz^t^sai Saulon\). First aorist (effective) active infinitive of purpose. \Anaz^te^ is a common verb since Plato, but in the N.T. only here and Lu 2:44,45, to seek up and down (\ana\), back and forth, to hunt up, to make a thorough search till success comes. It is plain from Ga 1:21 that Saul had not been idle in Cilicia. Tarsus was not very far from Antioch. Barnabas probably knew that Saul was a vessel of choice (Ac 9:15) by Christ for the work among the Gentiles. He knew, of course, of Saul's work with the Hellenists in Jerusalem (9:29) and echoes of his work in Cilicia and Syria had probably come to him. So to Tarsus he goes when he saw the need for help. "He had none of the littleness which cannot bear the presence of a possible rival" (Furneaux). Barnabas knew his own limitations and knew where the man of destiny for this crisis was, the man who already had the seal of God upon him. The hour and the man met when Barnabas brought Saul to Antioch. The door was open and the man was ready, far more ready than when Jesus called him on the road to Damascus. The years in Cilicia and Syria were not wasted for they had not been idle. If we only knew the facts, it is probable that Saul also had been preaching to Hellenes as well as to Hellenists. Jesus had definitely called him to work among the Gentiles (9:15). In his own way he had come to the same place that Peter reached in Caesarea and that Barnabas now holds in Antioch. God always has a man prepared for a great emergency in the kingdom. The call of Barnabas was simply the repetition of the call of Christ. So Saul came.

11:26 {Even for a whole year} (\kai eniauton holon). Accusative of extent of time, probably the year A.D. 44, the year preceding the visit to Jerusalem (11:30), the year of the famine. The preceding years with Tarsus as headquarters covered A.D. 37 (39) to 44. {They were gathered together with the church} (\sunachth^nai en t^i ekkl^sifi). First aorist passive infinitive of \sunag^, old verb, probably here to meet together as in Mt 28:12. In Ac 14:27 the verb is used of gathering together the church, but here \en t^i ekkl^sifi excludes that idea. Barnabas met together "in the church" (note first use of the word for the disciples at Antioch). This peculiar phrase accents the leadership and co-operation of Barnabas and Saul in teaching (\didaxai, first aorist active infinitive) much people. Both infinitives are in the nominative case, the subject of \egeneto (it came to pass). {And that the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch} (\chr^matisai te pr^t^s en Antiocheifi tous math^tas Christianous). This first active infinitive \chr^matisai is also a subject of \egeneto and is added as a separate item by the use of \te rather than \kai. For the word itself in the sense of divine command see on ⁷Mt 2:12,22; Lu 2:26; Ac 10:22. Here and in Ro 7:3 it means to be called or named (assuming a name from one's business, \chr^ma, from \chraomai, to use or to do business). Polybius uses it in this sense as here. \Tous math^tas (the disciples) is in the accusative of general reference with the infinitive. \Christianous (Christians) is simply predicate accusative. This word is made after the pattern of \Herodianus (Mt 22:16, \Her^idianoì, followers of Herod), \Caesarianus, a follower of Caesar (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 377, gives papyri examples of the genitive \Kaisaros\ meaning also "belonging to Caesar" like the common adjective \Caesarianus\).

It is made thus like a Latin adjective, though it is a Greek word, and it refers to the Hebrew belief in a Messiah (Page). The name was evidently given to the followers of Christ by the Gentiles to distinguish them from the Jews since they were Greeks, not Grecian Jews. The Jews would not call them Christians because of their own use of \Christos\ the Messiah. The Jews termed them Galileans or Nazarenes. The followers of Christ called themselves disciples (learners), believers, brethren, saints, those of the Way. The three uses of Christian in the N.T. are from the heathen standpoint (here), Ac 26:28 (a term of contempt in the mouth of Agrippa), and 1Pe 4:16 (persecution from the Roman government). It is a clear distinction from both Jews and Gentiles and it is not strange that it came into use first here in Antioch when the large Greek church gave occasion for it. Later Ignatius was bishop in Antioch and was given to the lions in Rome, and John Chrysostom preached here his wonderful sermons.

11:27 {Prophets} (proph^htai\). Christian prophets these were (cf. 13:1) who came from Jerusalem (the headquarters, 8:15). Judas and Silas are called prophets (14:4; 15:32). They were not just fore-tellers, but forth-tellers. The prophet had inspiration and was superior to the speaker with tongues (1Co 14:3). John was a prophet (Lu 7:26). We need prophets in the ministry today.

11:28 {Signified} (es^hmainen\). Imperfect active in Westcott and Hort, but aorist active es^hmfnen\ in the margin. The verb is an old one from s^hma\ (s^hmeion\) a sign (cf. the symbolic sign in 21:11). Here Agabus (also in 21:10) does predict a famine through the Holy Spirit. {Should be} (mellein esesthai\). \Mell“\ occurs either with the present infinitive (16:27), the aorist infinitive (12:6), or the future as here and 24:15; 27:10. {Over all the world} (eph' holⁿ tⁿ oikoumenⁿ\). Over all the inhabited earth (gⁿ\, understood). Probably a common hyperbole for the Roman empire as in Lu 2:1. Josephus (_Ant_. VIII. 13, 4) appears to restrict it to Palestine. {In the days of Claudius} (epi Klaudiou\). He was Roman Emperor A.D. 41-44. The Roman writers (Suetonius, Dio Cassius, Tacitus) all tell of dearths (_assiduae sterilitates_) during the brief reign of Claudius who was preceded by Caligula and followed by Nero.

11:29 {Every man according to his ability} (kath^s euporeito tis\). Imperfect middle of \eupore“, to be well off (from euporos\), old verb, but here alone in the N.T., "as any one was well off." The sentence is a bit tangled in the Greek from Luke's rush of ideas. Literally, "Of the disciples, as any one was able (or well off), they determined (h“risan\, marked off the horizon) each of them to send relief (eis diakonian\, for ministry) to the brethren who dwelt in Judaea." The worst of the famine came A.D. 45. The warning by Agabus stirred the brethren in Antioch to send the collection on ahead.

11:30 {Sending} (\aposteilantes\). First aorist active participle of \apostell“, coincident action with \epoi^san\ (did). {To the elders} (\pros tous presbuterous\). The first use of that term for the Christian preachers. In 20:17,28 "elders" and "bishops" are used interchangeably as in Tit 1:5,7. The term probably arose gradually and holds a position in the church similar to the same term in the synagogue. The apostles were apparently absent from Jerusalem at this time and they were no longer concerned with serving tables. In 21:18 Paul presented the later collection also to the elders. Since Peter and James (till his death) were in Jerusalem during the persecution in chapter 12 it is probable that the visit of Barnabas and Saul to Jerusalem came really after that persecution for Peter left Jerusalem (12:17). The elders here mentioned may include the preachers in Judea also outside of Jerusalem (26:20).

12:1 {About that time} (\kat' ekeinon ton kairon\). Same phrase in Ro 9:9. That is, the early part of A.D. 44 since that is the date of Herod's death. As already suggested, Barnabas and Saul came down from Antioch to Jerusalem after the persecution by Herod at the end of 44 or the beginning of 45. {Herod the king} (\H^r“id^s ho basileus\). Accurate title at this particular time. Herod Agrippa I, grandson of Herod the Great, was King of Palestine A.D. 42 to 44; only for these three years was a Herod king over Palestine since the death of Herod the Great and never afterwards. Archelaus never actually became king though he had the popular title at first (Mt 2:22). {Put forth his hands} (\epebalen tas cheiras\). Second aorist active indicative of \epiball^, old verb, to cast upon or against. The same idiom with \tas cheiras\ (the hands, common Greek idiom with article rather than possessive pronoun) in 4:3; 5:18. {To afflict} (\kak“sai\). First aorist active infinitive of \kako^, old word to do harm or evil to (\kakos\), already in 7:6,19. Outside of Acts in the N.T. only 1Pe 5:13. Infinitive of purpose. Probably the first who were afflicted were scourged or imprisoned, not put to death. It had been eight years or more since the persecution over the death of Stephen ceased with the conversion of Saul. But the disciples were not popular in Jerusalem with either Sadducees or Pharisees. The overtures to the Gentiles in Caesarea and Antioch may have stirred up the Pharisees afresh (cf. 6:14). Herod Agrippa I was an Idumean through his grandfather Herod the Great and a grandson of Mariamne the Maccabean princess. He was a favourite of Caligula the Roman Emperor and was anxious to placate his Jewish subjects while retaining the favour of the Romans. So he built theatres and held games for the Romans and Greeks and slew the Christians to please the Jews. Josephus (_Ant_. XIX. 7, 3) calls him a pleasant vain man scrupulously observing Jewish rites. Here we have for the first time political power (after Pilate) used against the disciples.

12:2 {James the brother of John} (\Iak“bon ton adelphon I“anou\). He had been called by Jesus a son of thunder along with his brother John. Jesus had predicted a bloody death for both of them (Mr 10:38ff.; Mt 20:23). James is the first of the apostles to die and John probably the last. He is not James the Lord's brother (Ga 1:19). We do not know why Luke tells so little about the death of James and so much about the death of Stephen nor do we know why Herod selected him as a victim. Eusebius (H.E., ii. 9) quotes Clement of Alexandria as saying that a Jew made accusations against James and was converted and beheaded at the same time with him. {Killed with the sword} (\aneilen machair^i). The verb is a favourite one with Luke (Ac 2:33; 5:33,36; 7:28; 9:23-29; 10:39, etc.). Instrumental case and Ionic form of \machaira. The Jews considered beheading a shameful death as in the case of the Baptist (Mt 14:10).

12:3 {That it pleased the Jews} (\hoti areston estin tois Ioudaiois). Indirect assertion with the present tense \estin retained. \Areston is the verbal adjective from \aresk^i followed by the dative as in Joh 8:29. {Proceeded to seize} (\prosetheto sullabein). A patent Hebraism in Lu 20:11f. already, and nowhere else in the N.T. It occurs in the LXX (Ge 4:2; 8:12; 18:29, etc.). Second aorist middle indicative of \prostith^mi and the second aorist active infinitive of \sullamban^i. Literally, he added to seize, he seized Peter in addition to James. {The days of unleavened bread} (\h^merai t^i n azum^i n). By this parenthesis Luke locates the time of the year when Peter was arrested, the passover. It was a fine occasion for Agrippa to increase his favour among the crowds of Jews there by extra zeal against the Christians. It is possible that Luke obtained his information about this incident from John Mark for at his Mother's house the disciples gathered (12:12).

12:4 {When he had taken him} (\piasas). See on 3:7 for same form. {He put him in prison} (\etheto eis phulak^i n). Second aorist middle indicative of \tith^mi, common verb. This is the third imprisonment of Peter (4:3; 5:18). {To four quaternions of soldiers} (\tessarsin tetradiis strati^i t^i n). Four soldiers in each quaternion (\tetradion\ from \tetras\, four), two on the inside with the prisoner (chained to him) and two on the outside, in shifts of six hours each, sixteen soldiers in all, the usual Roman custom. Probably Agrippa had heard of Peter's previous escape (5:19) and so took no chances for connivance of the jailors. {After the passover} (\meta to pascha). The passover feast of eight days. "The stricter Jews regarded it as a profanation to put a person to death during a religious festival" (Hackett). So Agrippa is more scrupulous than the Sanhedrin was about Jesus. {To bring him forth} (\anagagein auton). Second aorist active infinitive of \anag“, to lead up, old verb, used literally here. Peter was in the inner prison or lower ward and so would be led up to the judgment seat where Herod Agrippa would sit (cf. Joh 19:13). {To the people} (\t“i la“i). Ethical dative, in the presence of and for the pleasure of the Jewish people.

12:5 {Therefore} (\men oun). Because of the preceding situation. {Was kept} (\et^reito). Imperfect passive, continuously guarded, waiting for the feast to be over. {But prayer was made earnestly} (\proseuch^ de ^n ekten“s ginomen^). Probably \de here is not adversative (but), merely parallel (and) as Page argues. It was a crisis for the Jerusalem church. James had been slain and Peter was to be the next victim. Hence "earnestly" (late adverb from \ekten^s\, strained, from \ektein“\, to stretch. In the N.T. only here, Lu 22:44; 1Pe 1:22) prayer was {going up} (\ginomen^, present middle participle, periphrastic imperfect with \^n). It looked like a desperate case for Peter. Hence the disciples prayed the more earnestly.

12:6 {Was about to bring him forth} (\^mellen prosagagein\ or \proagagein). The MSS. vary, but not \anagagein of verse 4. {The same night} (\t^i nukti ekein^i). Locative case, {on that (very) night}. {Was sleeping} (\^n koim“menos). Periphrastic middle imperfect. {Bound with two chains} (\dedemenos halusesin dusin). Perfect passive participle of \de“, to bind, followed by instrumental case. One chain was fastened to each soldier (one on each side of Peter). {Kept} (\et^roun). Imperfect active, were keeping. Two guards outside before the door and two inside, according to Roman rule. Did Peter recall the prophecy of Jesus that he should be put to death in his old age (Joh 21:18)? Jesus had not said, as Furneaux does, that he would die by crucifixion.

12:7 {Stood by him} (*\epest^ *). Ingressive second aorist active indicative of \ephist^mi, intransitive. This very form occurs in Lu 2:9 of the sudden appearance of the angel of the Lord to the shepherds. Page notes that this second aorist of \ephist^mi occurs seven times in the Gospel of Luke, eight times in the Acts, and nowhere else in the N.T. Note also the same form *\apest^ * (departed from, from \aphist^mi\, stood off from) of the disappearance of the angel in verse 10. {In the cell} (\en t“i oik^mati). Literally, a dwelling place or habitation (from \oike“\, to dwell, \oikos\, house), but here not the prison as a whole as in Thucydides, but the room in the prison (cell) where Peter was chained to the two guards. Old word, but only here in the N.T. {He smote Peter on the side} (\pataxas tⁿ pleuran tou Petrou\). More exactly, "smote the side of Peter." Strongly enough to wake Peter up who was sound asleep and yet not rouse the two guards. It was probably between 3 A.M. and 6 A.M., hours when changes in the guards were made. {Rise up} (\anasta\). Short form (_Koin,_) of \anast^{hi}\, second aorist active imperative of \anist^{mi}\, intransitive. So also Ac 9:11 (Westcott and Hort text); Eph 5:14. {Fell off} (\exepesan\). Second aorist active with \a\ ending like first aorist of \expipt“\, old verb. This miracle was necessary if Peter was to escape without rousing the two guards.

12:8 {Gird thyself} (\z“sai\). Direct middle first aorist (ingressive) imperative (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 806f.) from \z“nnumi\ (\z“nnu“\). Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Joh 21:18 (twice to Peter) where the active voice and the reflexive pronoun occur in the first example. The girdle was worn round the \chit“n\ or undergarment. {Bind on} (\hupod^{sai}\). Indirect middle (by yourself or for yourself) first aorist imperative of \hupode“\, to bind under, old verb, only three times in the N.T. (Mr 6:9; Ac 12:8; Eph 6:15 (middle)). {Sandals} (\sandalia\). Persian word common from Herodotus on, a sole made of wood or leather covering the bottom of the foot and bound on with thongs. In the N.T. only here and Mr 6:9. In the LXX used indiscriminately with \hupod^{ma}\. {Cast about thee} (\peribalou\). Second aorist middle (indirect) imperative of \periball“\, old and common verb to throw around, especially clothing around the body as here. The \himation\ (outer garment) was put over the \chit“n\. It was not a hurried flight. {Follow me} (\akolouthei moi\). Present (linear) active imperative, keep on following me (associative instrumental case).

12:9 {Wist not} (\ouk ^{idei}\). Past perfect of \oida\ used as imperfect, did not know. {Followed} (\^{kolouthei}\). Imperfect active, kept on following as the angel had directed (verse 8). That it was true (\hoti al^{thes} estin\). Indirect assertion and so present tense retained. Note "true" (\al^{thes}\) in the sense of reality or actuality. {Which was done} (\to ginomenon\). Present middle participle, that which was happening. {Thought he saw a vision} (\edokei horama blepein\). Imperfect active, kept on thinking, puzzled as he was. \Blepein\ is the infinitive in indirect assertion without the pronoun (he) expressed which could be either nominative in apposition with the subject as in Ro 1:22 or accusative of general reference as in Ac 5:36; 8:9 (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1036-40). Peter had had a vision in Joppa (10:10) which Luke describes as an "ecstasy," but here is objective fact, at least Luke thought so and makes that distinction. Peter will soon know whether he is still in the cell or not as we find out that a dream is only a dream when we wake up.

12:10 {When they were past} (\dielthontes\). Second aorist active participle of \dierchomai\, transitive with \dia\ in composition. {The first and the second ward} (\pr“tˆn phulakˆn kai deuteran\). It is not clear to what this language refers. Some take it to mean single soldiers, using \phulakˆn\ in the sense of a guard (one before the door, one at the iron gate). But it seems hardly likely that the two soldiers with whom Peter had been stationed are meant. Probably the "first ward" means the two soldiers of the quaternion stationed by the door and the second ward some other soldiers, not part of the sixteen, further on in the prison by the iron gate. However understood, the difficulties of escape are made plain. {Unto the iron gate that leadeth into the city} (\epi tˆn pulˆn tˆn sidˆrfn tˆn pherousan eis tˆn polin\). Note the triple use of the article (the gate the iron one the one leading into the city). For this resumptive use of the article see Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 762, 764. This iron gate may have opened from a court out into the street and effectually barred escape. {Opened to them} (\ˆnoigˆ autois\). Second aorist passive indicative of \anoigˆ\, the usual later form though \ˆnoichthˆ\ (first aorist passive) occurs also, was opened. {Of its own accord} (\automatˆ\). Old compound adjective (\autos\, self, obsolete \maˆ\, to desire eagerly, feminine form though masculine \automatos\ also used as feminine). In the N.T. only here and Mr 4:28. It was a strange experience for Peter. The Codex Bezae adds here "went down the seven steps" (\katebˆsan tous hepta bathmous\), an interesting detail that adds to the picture. {One street} (\rhumˆn mian\). The angel saw Peter through one of the narrow streets and then left him. We have no means of knowing precisely the location of the prison in the city. On "departed" (\apestˆ\) see on verse ˆ7.

12:11 {Was come to himself} (\en heaut“i genomenos\). Second aorist middle participle of \ginomai\ with \en\ and the locative case, "becoming at himself." In Lu 15:17 we have \eis heauton elth"n\ (coming to himself, as if he had been on a trip away from himself). {Now I know of a truth} (\nun oida al"th"s\). There was no further confusion of mind that it was an ecstasy as in 10:10. But he was in peril for the soldiers would soon learn of his escape, when the change of guards came at 6 A.M. {Delivered me} (\exeilato me\). Second aorist middle indicative of \exaire"\. The Lord rescued me of himself by his angel. {Expectation} (\prosdokias\). Old word from \prosdoka"\, to look for. In the N.T. only here and Lu 21:26. James had been put to death and the Jewish people were eagerly waiting for the execution of Peter like hungry wolves.

12:12 {When he had considered} (\sunid"n\). Second aorist active participle of \suneidon\ (for the defective verb \sunora"), to see together, to grasp as a whole, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 14:6, save the perfect indicative \sunoida\ (1Co 4:4) and participle (Ac 5:2). It is the word from which \suneid"sis\ (conscience) comes (Ro 2:15). Peter's mind worked rapidly and he decided what to do. He took in his situation clearly. {To the house of Mary} (\epi t"n oikian t"s Marias\). Another Mary (the others were Mary the mother of Jesus, Mary of Bethany, Mary Magdalene, Mary wife of Cleopas, Mary the mother of James and Joses). She may have been a widow and was possessed of some means since her house was large enough to hold the large group of disciples there. Barnabas, cousin of John Mark her son (Col 4:10), was also a man of property or had been (Ac 4:36f.). It is probable that the disciples had been in the habit of meeting in her house, a fact known to Peter and he was evidently fond of John Mark whom he afterwards calls "my son" (1Pe 5:13) and whom he had met here. The upper room of Ac 1:13 may have been in Mary's house and Mark may have been the man bearing a pitcher of water (Lu 22:10) and the young man who fled in the Garden of Gethsemane (Mr 14:51f.). There was a gate and portress here as in the house of the highpriest (Joh 18:16). Peter knew where to go and even at this early hour hoped to find some of the disciples. Mary is one of the many mothers who have become famous by reason of their sons, though she was undoubtedly a woman of high character herself. {Were gathered together and were praying} (\^san sun"throismenoi kai proseuchomenoi\). Note difference in the tenses, one periphrastic past perfect passive (\sunathroiz" old verb, in the N.T. here and the periphrastic imperfect. The praying apparently had been going on all night and a large number (many, \hikanoi\) of the disciples were there. One recalls the time when they had gathered to pray (4:31) after Peter had told the disciples of the threats of the Sanhedrin (4:23). God had rescued Peter then. Would he let him be put to death now as James had been?

12:13 {When he knocked at the door of the gate} (\krousantos autou t^n thuran tou pul“nos\). Genitive absolute with aorist active participle of \krou“\, common verb to knock or knock at. So from the outside (Lu 13:25). \Pul“n\ here is the gateway or passageway from the door (\thura\) that leads to the house. In verse 14 it is still the passageway without the use of \thura\ (door, so for both door and passageway). {To answer} (\hupakousai\). To listen under before opening. First aorist active infinitive of \hupakou“\, common verb to obey, to hearken. {A maid} (\paidisk^). Portress as in Joh 18:17. A diminutive of \pais\, a female slave (so on an ostrakon of second century A.D., Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 200). {Rhoda}. A rose. Women can have such beautiful names like Dorcas (Gazelle), Euodia (Sweet Aroma), Syntyche (Good Luck). Mark or Peter could tell Luke her name.

12:14 {When she knew} (\epignousa\). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of \epigin“sk“\, to know fully or in addition (\epi\), to recognize. She knew Peter and his voice from his frequent visits there. {For joy} (\apo t^s charfs\). From her joy (ablative case), life-like picture of the maid who left Peter standing outside with the door to the passageway unopened. Note the aorist tenses for quick action (\ouk ^noixen\), \eisdramousa\ (from \eistrech“\, defective verb, only here in the N.T.), \ap^ggeilen\). {Stood} (\hestanai\). Second perfect active infinitive of \hist^mi\, intransitive, in indirect assertion with \ton Petron\ (Peter) accusative of general reference. The slave girl acted as if she were a member of the family (Furneaux), but she left Peter in peril.

12:15 {Thou art mad} (\main^i\). Present middle indicative second person singular. Old verb, only in the middle voice. Festus used the same word to Paul (26:24). The maid was undoubtedly excited, but it was a curious rebuff from those who had been praying all night for Peter's release. In their defence it may be said that Stephen and James had been put to death and many others by Saul's persecution. {She confidently affirmed} (\diischurizeto). Imperfect middle of \diischurizomai, an old word of vigorous and confident assertion, originally to lean upon. Only here in the N.T. The girl stuck to her statement. {It is his angel} (\Ho aggelos estin autou). This was the second alternative of the disciples. It was a popular Jewish belief that each man had a guardian angel. Luke takes no position about it. No scripture teaches it.

12:16 {Continued knocking} (\epemenen krou“n). Imperfect active and present participle. Now all heard the knocking. {When they had opened} (\anoixantes). First aorist active participle of \anoig“ or \-numi. The whole group rushed out to the courtyard this time to make sure. {They were amazed} (\exest^san). The frequent second aorist active (intransitive) indicative of \exist^mi.

12:17 There were probably loud exclamations of astonishment and joy. {Beckoning with the hand} (\kataseisas t^i cheiri). First aorist active participle of \katasei“, old verb to signal or shake down with the hand (instrumental case \cheiri). In the N.T. only in Ac 12:17; 13:16; 19:33; 21:40. The speaker indicates by a downward movement of the hand his desire for silence (to hold their peace, \sigfin\, present active infinitive, to keep silent). Peter was anxious for every precaution and he wanted their instant attention. {Declared} (\di^g^sato). First aorist middle of \di^geomai, old verb to carry through a narrative, give a full story. See also Ac 9:27 of Barnabas in his defence of Saul. Peter told them the wonderful story. {Unto James and the brethren} (\Iak“b“i kai tois adelphois). Dative case after \apaggeilate (first aorist active imperative). Evidently "James and the brethren" were not at this meeting, probably meeting elsewhere. There was no place where all the thousands of disciples in Jerusalem could meet. This gathering in the house of Mary may have been of women only or a meeting of the Hellenists. It is plain that this James the Lord's brother, is now the leading presbyter or elder in Jerusalem though there were a number (11:30; 21:18). Paul even terms him apostle (Gal 1:19), though certainly not one of the twelve. The twelve apostles probably were engaged elsewhere in mission work save James now dead (Ac 12:2) and Peter. The leadership of James is here recognized by Peter and is due, partly to the absence of the twelve, but mainly to his own force of character.

He will preside over the Jerusalem Conference (Ac 15:13). {To another place} (\(eis heteron topon\). Probably Luke did not know the place and certainly it was prudent for Peter to conceal it from Herod Agrippa. Probably Peter left the city. He is back in Jerusalem at the Conference a few years later (Ac 15:7) and after the death of Herod Agrippa. Whether Peter went to Rome during these years we do not know. He was recognized later as the apostle to the circumcision (Gal 2:7; 1Pe 1:1) and apparently was in Rome with John Mark when he wrote the First Epistle (1Pe 5:13), unless it is the real Babylon. But, even if Peter went to Rome during this early period, there is no evidence that he founded the church there. If he had done so, in the light of 2Co 10:16 it would be strange that Paul had not mentioned it in writing to Rome, for he was anxious not to build on another man's foundation (Ro 15:20). Paul felt sure that he himself had a work to do in Rome. Unfortunately Luke has not followed the ministry of Peter after this period as he does Paul (appearing again only in chapter Ac 15). If Peter really left Jerusalem at this time instead of hiding in the city, he probably did some mission work as Paul says that he did (1Co 9:5).

12:18 {As soon as it was day} (\(Genomen^s h^meras\). Genitive absolute, day having come. {No small stir} (\(tarachos ouk oligos\). Litotes (\(ouk oligos\), occurs eight times in the Acts as in 15:2, and nowhere else in the N.T. \Tarachos\ (stir) is an old word from \tarass^, to agitate. In the N.T. only here and 19:23. Probably all sixteen soldiers were agitated over this remarkable escape. They were responsible for the prisoner with their lives (cf. Ac 16:27; 27:42). Furneaux suggests that Manaen, the king's foster-brother and a Christian (13:1), was the "angel" who rescued Peter from the prison. That is not the way that Peter looked at it. {What was become of Peter} (\(ti ara ho Petros egeneto\). An indirect question with the aorist indicative retained. \Ara\ adds a syllogism (therefore) to the problem as in Lu 1:66. The use of the neuter \ti\ (as in Ac 13:25) is different from \tis\, though nominative like \Petros\, literally, "what then Peter had become," "what had happened to Peter" (in one idiom). See the same idiom in Joh 21:21 (\(houtos de ti\). {But this one what} (verb \gen^setai\ not used).

12:19 {He examined} (\(anakrinas\). First aorist active participle of \anakrin^, old verb to sift up and down, to question thoroughly, in a forensic sense (Lu 23:14; Ac 4:9; 12:19; 28:18). {That they should be put to death} (\apachth^{nai}\).

First aorist passive infinitive (indirect command) of \apag[“]\, old verb to lead away, especially to execution as in Mt 27:31.

Here it is used absolutely. This was the ordinary Roman routine and not a proof of special cruelty on the part of Herod Agrippa.

{Tarried} (\dietriben\). Imperfect active. Herod Agrippa made his home in Jerusalem, but he went to Caesarea to the public games in honour of Emperor Claudius.

12:20 {Was highly displeased} (\ⁿ thumomach^{“n}\). Periphrastic imperfect active of \thumomache[“]\, late compound of \thumos\

(passionate heat) and \machomai\, to fight. Only here in the N.T., to fight desperately, to have a hot quarrel. Whether it was open war with the Phoenicians or just violent hostility we do not know, save that Phoenicia belonged to Syria and Herod Agrippa had no authority there. The quarrel may have been over commercial matters. {They came with one accord} (\homothumadon par^{san}\).

The representatives of Tyre and Sidon. See on 1:14 for \homothumadon\. Tyre was a colony of Sidon and had become one of the chief commercial cities of the world by reason of the Phoenician ships. {The king's chamberlain} (\ton epi tou koit^{“nos}

tou basileos\). The one over the bedchamber (\koit^{“nos}\, late word from \koit[“]\, bed, here only in the N.T.). {Made their friend} (\peisantes\). First aorist active participle of \peith[“]\, to persuade. Having persuaded (probably with bribes as in Mt 28:14). {They asked for peace} (\^{itounto eirⁿⁿ}\).

Imperfect middle of \aite[“]\, kept on asking for peace. {Because their country was fed} (\dia to trephesthai aut^{“n tⁿ choran\).}

Causal sentence with \dia\ and the articular infinitive (present passive of \treph[“]\, to nourish or feed) and the accusative of general reference, "because of the being fed as to their country." Tyre and Sidon as large commercial cities on the coast received large supplies of grain and fruits from Palestine. Herod had cut off the supplies and that brought the two cities to action.

12:21 {Upon a set day} (\taktⁱ h^{merfi}\). Locative case and the verbal adjective of \tass[“]\, to arrange, appoint, old word, here only in the N.T. Josephus (Ant. XVII. 6, 8; XIX. 8, 2) gives a full account of the occasion and the death of Herod Agrippa. It was the second day of the festival in honour of the Emperor

Claudius, possibly his birthday rather than the Quinquennalia.

The two accounts of Luke and Josephus supplement each other with no contradiction. Josephus does not mention the name of Blastus. {Arrayed himself in royal apparel} (\endusamenos esth^ta basilik^n). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of \endun^{\} or \endu^{\}, common verb to put on. Literally, having put royal apparel on himself (a robe of silver tissue, Josephus says). The rays of the sun shone on this brilliant apparel and the vast crowd in the open amphitheatre became excited as Herod began to speak. {Made an oration} (\ed^m^gorei). Imperfect active of \d^m^gore^{\}, old verb from \d^m^goros (haranguer of the people), and that from \d^mos (people) and \agoreu^{\}, to harangue or address the people. Only here in the N.T. He kept it up.

12:22 {Shouted} (\epeph^nei). Imperfect active, kept on shouting, calling out to him. Old verb, but only four times in the N.T. and all by Luke. The heathen crowd (\d^mos) repeated their flattering adulation to gain Herod's favour. {The voice of a god} (\theou ph^n^{\}). In the pagan sense of emperor worship, not as the Supreme Being. But it was pleasing to Herod Agrippa's vanity.

12:23 {Smote him} (\epataxen auton). Effective aorist active indicative of \patass^{\}, old verb, used already in verse 7 of gentle smiting of the angel of the Lord, here of a severe stroke of affliction. Like Nebuchadnezzar (Da 4:30) pride went before a fall. He was struck down in the very zenith of his glory. {Because} (\anth' h^{\}). \Anti with the genitive of the relative pronoun, "in return for which things." He accepted the impious flattery (Hackett) instead of giving God the glory. He was a nominal Jew. {He was eaten of worms} (\genomenos sk^l^kobr^tos). Ingressive aorist middle participle, "becoming worm-eaten." The compound verbal adjective (\sk^l^x, worm, \br^tos, eaten, from \bibr^sk^{\}) is a late word (II Macc. 9:9) of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, used also of a tree (Theophrastus), here only in the N.T. The word \sk^l^x was used of intestinal worms and Herodotus (IV. 205) describes Pheretima, Queen of Cyrene, as having swarms of worms which ate her flesh while still alive. Josephus (_Ant_. XIX. 8, 2) says that Herod Agrippa lingered for five days and says that the rotting of his flesh produced worms, an item in harmony with the narrative in Luke. Josephus gives further details, one a superstitious sight of an owl sitting on one of the ropes of the awning of the theatre while the people flattered him, an omen of his death to him. Luke puts it simply that God smote him. {Gave up the ghost} (\exepsuxen\). Effective aorist active of \ekpsuch“, to breathe out, late verb, medical term in Hippocrates, in the N.T. only in Ac 5:5,10; 12:23. Herod was carried out of the theatre a dying man and lingered only five days.

12:24 {Grew and multiplied} (\uxanen kai epl^thuneto\). Imperfect active and passive. Cf. 6:1. The reaction from the death of James and the imprisonment of Peter.

12:25 {From Jerusalem} (\ex Ierousal^m\). Probably correct text, though D has \apo\. Westcott and Hort follow Aleph B in reading \eis\ (to) Jerusalem, an impossible reading contradicted by 11:29f.; 13:1. The ministration (\diakonian\) referred to is that in 11:29f. which may have taken place, in point of time, after the death of Herod. {Taking with them} (\sunparalabontes\). Taking along (\para\) with (\sun\) them, John Mark from Jerusalem (12:12) to Antioch (13:1). The aorist participle does not express subsequent action as Rackham here argues (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 861-863).

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Acts: Chapter 12)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

13:1 {In the church that was there} (\kata tⁿ ousan ekkl^{sian}\). Possibly distributed throughout the church (note "in the church" 11:26). Now a strong organization there. Luke here begins the second part of Acts with Antioch as the centre of operations, no longer Jerusalem. Paul is now the central figure instead of Peter. Jerusalem had hesitated too long to carry out the command of Jesus to take the gospel to the whole world. That glory will now belong to Antioch. {Prophets and teachers} (\proph^{tai} kai didaskaloi\). All prophets were teachers, but not all teachers were prophets who were for-speakers of God, sometimes fore-speakers like Agabus in 11:28. The double use of \te\ here makes three prophets (Barnabas, Symeon, Lucius) and two teachers (Manaen and Saul). Barnabas heads the list (11:22) and Saul comes last. Symeon Niger may be the Simon of Cyrene who carried the Saviour's cross. Lucius of Cyrene was probably one of the original evangelists (11:20). The name is one of the forms of Luke, but it is certainly not Luke the Physician. Manaen shows how the gospel was reaching some of the higher classes (home of Herod Antipas). {Foster-brother} (\suntrophos\). Old word for nourished with or brought up with one _collactaneus_ (Vulgate). These are clearly the outstanding men in the great Greek church in Antioch.

13:2 {As they ministered to the Lord} (\leitourgountⁿ autⁿ toi kuriⁱ\). Genitive absolute of \leitourgeⁿ\, old verb, used of the Attic orators who served the state at their own cost \le^s\ or \laos\, people, and \ergon\, work or service). Common in the LXX of the priests who served in the tabernacle (Ex 28:31,39) like \leitourgia\ (Lu 1:23) which see. So in Heb 10:11. In Ro 15:27 of aiding others in poverty. Here of worship (prayer, exhortation, fasting). The word liturgy grows out of this use. {And fasted} (\kai nⁿ steuontⁿ\). Genitive absolute also. Christian Jews were keeping up the Jewish fast (Lu 18:12). Note fasting also in the choice of elders for the Mission Churches (Ac 14:23). Fasting was not obligatory on the Christians, but they were facing a great emergency in giving the gospel to the Gentile world. {Separate me} (\aphorizate dⁿ moi\). First aorist active imperative of \aphorizⁿ\, old verb to mark off boundaries or horizon, used by Paul of his call (Ro 1:1; Ga 1:15). The Greek has \d^, a shortened form of \d^ and like Latin _jam_ and German _doch_, now therefore. It ought to be preserved in the translation. Cf. Lu 2:15; Ac 15:36; 1Co 6:20. \Moi\ is the ethical dative. As in verse 1 Barnabas is named before Saul. Both had been called to ministry long ago, but now this call is to the special campaign among the Gentiles. Both had been active and useful in such work. {Whereunto} (\ho\). Here \eis\ has to be repeated from \eis to ergon\ just before, "for which" as Jesus sent the twelve and the seventy in pairs, so here. Paul nearly always had one or more companions.

13:3 {When they had fasted} (\n^steusantes\). Either finishing the same fast in verse 2 or another one (Hackett), but clearly a voluntary fast. {Laid their hands upon them} (\epithentes tas cheiras autois\). Second aorist active participle of \epitith^mi\. Not ordination to the ministry, but a solemn consecration to the great missionary task to which the Holy Spirit had called them. Whether the whole church took part in this ceremony is not clear, though in 15:40 "the brethren" did commend Paul and Silas. Perhaps some of them here acted for the whole church, all of whom approved the enterprise. But Paul makes it plain in Php 4:15 that the church in Antioch did not make financial contribution to the campaign, but only goodwill. But that was more than the church at Jerusalem would have done as a whole since Peter had been arraigned there for his activities in Caesarea (Ac 11:1-18). Clearly Barnabas and Saul had to finance the tour themselves. It was Philippi that first gave money to Paul's campaigns. There were still heathen enough in Antioch, but the church approved the going of Barnabas and Saul, their very best.

13:4 {So they} (\autoi men oun\). They themselves indeed therefore. No contrast is necessary, though there is a slight one in verses 5,6. Luke again refers to the Holy Spirit as the source of their authority for this campaign rather than the church at Antioch. {Sent forth} (\ekpempthentes\). Old verb from \ekpemp^ and first aorist passive participle, but in the N.T. only here and Ac 17:10. {Sailed} (\apepleusan\). Effective aorist active indicative of \apople^, old verb to sail away, depart from. In the N.T. only here and 14:26; 20:15; 27:1. Barnabas was from Cyprus where there were many Jews.

13:5 {Proclaimed} (\kat^ggellon\). Imperfect active of \kataggell“\, inchoative, began to proclaim. This was Paul's rule of procedure, "to the Jew first" (Ro 1:16; Ac 13:46; 17:2; 18:4,19; 19:8). {They had also} (\eichon de kai\). Imperfect active, descriptive. {As their attendant} (\hup^ret^n\). Literally, "under-rower" (\hupo, ^ret^s\) in the trireme. Probably here minister (\chazzan\) or assistant in the synagogue as in Lu 4:20. Cf. Mt 5:25. It is not clear what John Mark did, though he was evidently selected by Barnabas as his cousin. He may have helped in the baptizing. There were probably others also in the company (verse 13). The "also" may mean that Mark did some preaching. Barnabas was probably the leader in the work in these Jewish synagogues.

13:6 {Unto Paphos} (\achri Paphou\). The new Paphos at the other end of the island, reached by a fine Roman road, some eight miles north of the old Paphos famous for the worship of Venus. {A certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew} (\andra tina magon pseudoproph^t^n Ioudaion\). Literally, "a certain man" (\andra tina\) with various descriptive epithets. The word \magon\ does not necessarily mean "sorcerer," but only a \magus\ (Mt 2:1,7,10 which see). The bad sense occurs in Ac 8:9,11 (Simon Magus) and is made plain here by "false prophet." In verse 8 here Barjesus (Son of Jesus) is called "Elymas the sorcerer (or Magian)," probably his professional title, as Luke interprets the Arabic or Aramaic word Elymas. These Jewish mountebanks were numerous and had great influence with the uneducated. In Ac 19:13 the seven sons of Sceva, Jewish exorcists, tried to imitate Paul. If one is surprised that a man like Sergius Paulus should fall under the influence of this fraud, he should recall what Juvenal says of the Emperor Tiberius "sitting on the rock of Capri with his flock of Chaldaeans around him."

13:7 {With the proconsul Sergius Paulus} (\sun t^i anthupat^i Sergi^i Paul^i\). Luke used to be sharply criticized for applying this term to Sergius Paulus on the ground that Cyprus was a province under the appointment of the emperor with the title of proprætor and not under the control of the senate with the title of proconsul. That was true B.C. 30, but five years later it was changed to proconsul by Augustus and put under the control of the Senate. Two inscriptions have been found with the date A.D. 51 and 52 with the names of proconsuls of Cyprus and one is in the Cesnola Collection, an inscription found at Soli with the name of Paulus as Proconsul, undoubtedly this very man, though no date occurs. {A man of understanding} (\andri sunet“i\). All the more amazing that he should be a victim of Barjesus. He had given up idolatry at any rate and was eager to hear Barnabas and Saul.

13:8 {Withstood them} (\anthistato autois\). Imperfect middle of \anthist^mi\, to stand against (face to face). Dative case (\autois\). He persisted in his opposition and was unwilling to lose his great prize. There may have been a public discussion between Elymas and Saul. {To turn aside} (\diastrepsai\). First aorist active infinitive of \diastreph“\, old verb to turn or twist in two, to distort, to pervert (cf. Mt 17:17; Lu 23:2).

13:9 {But Saul, who is also called Paul} (\Saulos de, ho kai Paulos\). By this remarkably brief phrase Luke presents this epoch in the life of Saul Paul. The "also" (\kai\) does not mean that the name Paul was given now for the first time, rather than he had always had it. As a Jew and a Roman citizen, he undoubtedly had both names all the time (cf. John Mark, Symeon Niger, Barsabbas Justus). Jerome held that the name of Sergius Paulus was adopted by Saul because of his conversion at this time, but this is a wholly unlikely explanation, "an element of vulgarity impossible to St. Paul " (Farrar). Augustine thought that the meaning of the Latin _paulus_ (little) would incline Saul to adopt, "but as a proper name the word rather suggested the glories of the Aemilian family, and even to us recalls the name of another Paulus, who was 'lavish of his noble life'" (Page). Among the Jews the name Saul was naturally used up to this point, but from now on Luke employs Paul save when there is a reference to his previous life (Ac 22:7; 26:14). His real career is work among the Gentiles and Paul is the name used by them. There is a striking similarity in sound between the Hebrew Saul and the Roman Paul. Paul was proud of his tribe of Benjamin and so of King Saul (Php 3:5). {Filled with the Holy Spirit} (\pl^stheis pneumatos hagiou\). First aorist (ingressive) passive participle of \pimpl^mi\ with the genitive case. A special influx of power to meet this emergency. Here was a cultured heathen, typical of the best in Roman life, who called forth all the powers of Paul plus the special help of the Holy Spirit to expose the wickedness of Elymas Barjesus. If one wonders why the Holy Spirit filled Paul for this emergency rather than Barnabas, when Barnabas was named first in 13:2, he can recall the sovereignty of the Holy Spirit in his choice of agents (1Co 12:4-11) and also the special call of Paul by Christ (Ac 9:15; 26:17f.).

{Fastened his eyes} (\atenisas). As already in Lu 4:20; 22:56; Ac 3:4,12; 6:15; 10:4.

13:10 {Of all guile} (\pantos dolou). From \del“, to catch with bait, old word, already seen in Mt 26:4; Mr 7:22; 14:1. Paul denounces Elymas as a trickster. {All villainy} (\pfs^s rhfidiourgias). Late compound from \rhfidiourgos (\rhfidios, easy, facile, \ergon, deed, one who does a thing adroitly and with ease). So levity in Xenophon and unscrupulousness in Polybius, Plutarch, and the papyri. Only here in the N.T., though the kindred word \rhfidiourg^ma occurs in Ac 18:14. With deadly accuracy Paul pictured this slick rascal. {Thou son of the devil} (\huie diabolou). Damning phrase like that used by Jesus of the Pharisees in Joh 8:44, a slanderer like the \diabolos. This use of son (\huios) for characteristic occurs in Ac 3:25; 4:36, a common Hebrew idiom, and may be used purposely by Paul in contrast with the name Barjesus (son of Jesus) that Elymas bore (13:6). {Enemy of all righteousness} (\echthre pfs^s dikaiosun^s). Personal enemy to all justice, sums up all the rest. Note triple use of "all" (\pantos, pfs^s, pfs^s), total depravity in every sense. {Wilt thou not cease?} (\ou paus^i). An impatient rhetorical question, almost volitive in force (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 874). Note \ou, not \m^, {To pervert} (\diastreph“n). Present active participle describing the actual work of Elymas as a perverter or distorter (see verse 8). More exactly, Wilt thou not cease perverting? {The right ways of the Lord} (\tas hodous tou kuriou tas eutheias). The ways of the Lord the straight ones as opposed to the crooked ways of men (Isa 40:4; 42:16; Lu 3:5). The task of John the Baptist as of all prophets and preachers is to make crooked paths straight and to get men to walk in them. This false prophet was making even the Lord's straight ways crooked. Elymas has many successors.

13:11 {Upon thee} (\epi se). The use of \epi with the accusative is rich and varied, the precise shade of meaning depending on the content. The "hand of the Lord" might be kindly (Ac 11:21) or hostile (Heb 10:31), but when God's hand touches one's life (Job 19:21) it may be in judgment as here with Elymas. He has not humbled himself under the mighty hand of God (1Pe 5:6). {Not seeing} (\m^ blep“n). Repeating with negative participle the negative idea in "blind" (\tuphlos). "It was a judicial infliction; blindness for blindness, darkness without for wilful darkness within" (Furneaux). He was an example of the blind leading the blind that was to cease and Sergius Paulus was to be led into the light. The blindness was to be "for a season" (\achri kairou), Lu 4:13), if it should please God to restore his sight. Paul apparently recalls his own blindness as he entered Damascus. {A mist} (\achlus). Especially a dimness of the eyes, old poetic word and late prose, in LXX, only here in N.T. Galen uses it of the opacity of the eye caused by a wound. {He went about seeking some one to lead him by the hand} (\periag“n ez^tei cheirag“gous). A rather free rendering. Literally, "going about (\periag“n), present active participle of \periag“) he was seeking (\ez^tei), imperfect active of \z^te“) guides (\cheirag“gous), from \cheir, hand, and \ag“gos, guide, from \ag“, one who leads by the hand)." The very verb \cheirag“ge“, to lead by the hand, Luke uses of Paul in 9:8, as he entered Damascus.

13:12 {Believed} (\episteusen). Ingressive aorist active indicative. Renan considers it impossible that a Roman proconsul could be converted by a miracle. But it was the teaching about the Lord (\tou kuriou), objective genitive) by which he was astonished (\ekpl^ssomenos), present passive participle of \ekpl^ss“, see on Mt 7:28) or struck out as well as by the miracle. The blindness came "immediately" (\paraehr^ma) upon the judgment pronounced by Paul. It is possible that Sergius Paulus was converted to Christ without openly identifying himself with the Christians as his baptism is not mentioned as in the case of Cornelius. But, even if he was baptized, he need not have been deposed from his proconsulship as Furneaux and Rackham argue because his office called for "official patronage of idolatrous worship." But that could have been merely perfunctory as it probably was already. He had been a disciple of the Jewish magician, Elymas Barjesus, without losing his position. Imperial persecution against Christianity had not yet begun. Furneaux even suggests that the conversion of a proconsul to Christianity at this stage would have called for mention by the Roman and Greek historians. There is the name Sergia Paullina in a Christian cemetery in Rome which shows that one of his family was a Christian later. One will believe what he wills about Sergius Paulus, but I do not see that Luke leaves him in the category of Simon Magus who "believed" (8:13) for revenue only.

13:13 {Paul and his company} (\hoi peri Paulon). Neat Greek idiom as in Plato, Cratylus 440 C \hoi peri Herakleiton. On this idiom see Gildersleeve, _Syntax_, p. 264. It means a man and his followers, "those around Paul." Now Paul ranks first always in Acts save in 14:2; 15:12,25 for special reasons. Heretofore Saul (Paul) held a secondary position (9:27; 11:30; 13:1f.). "In nothing is the greatness of Barnabas more manifest than in his recognition of the superiority of Paul and acceptance of a secondary position for himself" (Furneaux). {Set sail} (\anachthentes). First aorist passive participle of \anag. Thirteen times in the Acts and Lu 8:22 which see. They sailed up to sea and came down (\katalog\, katabain) to land. So it looks. {Departed from them} (\apoch\`r^sas ap' aut\`n). First aorist active participle of \apoch\`re, old verb to withdraw, go away from. In the N.T. only here and Mt 7:23; Lu 9:39. He is called John there as in verse 5 and Mark in 15:39, though John Mark in 12:12,25. This may be accidental or on purpose (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 317). Luke is silent on John's reasons for leaving Paul and Barnabas. He was the cousin of Barnabas and may not have relished the change in leadership. There may have been change in plans also now that Paul is in command. Barnabas had chosen Cyprus and Paul has led them to Perga in Pamphylia and means to go on into the highlands to Antioch in Pisidia. There were perils of many sorts around them and ahead (2Co 11:26), perils to which John Mark was unwilling to be exposed. Paul will specifically charge him at Antioch with desertion of his post (Ac 15:39). It is possible, as Ramsay suggests, that the mosquitoes at Perga gave John malaria. If so, they bit Paul and Barnabas also. He may not have liked Paul's aggressive attitude towards the heathen. At any rate he went home to Jerusalem instead of to Antioch, _zu seiner Mutter_ (Holtzmann). It was a serious breach in the work, but Paul and Barnabas stuck to the work.

13:14 {Passing through} (\dielthontes). It is not clear why Paul and Barnabas left Perga so soon nor why they went to Antioch in Pisidia. Ramsay suggests malaria that spurred them on to the hills after the desertion of John Mark. They preached at Perga on the return (14:25) and apparently hurried away now. Farrar thinks that the hot weather had driven the population to the hills. At any rate it is not difficult to imagine the perils of this climb over the rough mountain way from Perga to Pisidian Antioch to which Paul apparently refers in 2Co 11:26. {Sat down} (\ekathisan). Ingressive aorist active indicative, took their seats as visiting Jews, possibly in the seats of the rabbis

(J. Lightfoot). Whether they expected to be called on or not, they were given the opportunity as prominent visitors. The Pisidian Antioch was really in Phrygia, but towards Pisidia to distinguish it from Antioch on the Maeander (Ramsay, Church in the Roman Empire, p. 25). It was a colony like Philippi and so a free city. If Paul is referring to South Galatia and not North Galatia in Ga 4:13 when he says that his preaching in Galatia at first was due to illness, then it was probably here at Pisidian Antioch. What it was we have no means of knowing, though it was a temptation in his flesh to them so severe that they were willing to pluck out their eyes for him (Ga 4:14f.). Ophthalmia, malaria, epilepsy have all been suggested as this stake in the flesh (2Co 12:7). But Paul was able to preach with power whatever his actual physical condition was.

13:15 {After the reading of the law and the prophets} (\meta tⁿ anagn^{“sin tou nomou kai tⁿ proph^t“n}\). The law was first read in the synagogues till B.C. 163 when Antiochus Epiphanes prohibited it. Then the reading of the prophets was substituted for it. The Maccabees restored both. There was a reading from the law and one from the prophets in Hebrew which was interpreted into the Aramaic or the Greek _Koin, for the people. The reading was followed by the sermon as when Jesus was invited to read and to preach in Nazareth (Lu 4:16f.). For the service in the synagogue see Schuerer, _History of the Jewish People, Div. II, Vol. II, pp. 79ff. It was the duty of the rulers of the synagogue (\archisunag^{“goi}\) to select the readers and the speakers for the service (Mr 5:22,35-38; Lu 8:49; 13:14; Ac 13:15; 18:8,17). Any rabbi or distinguished stranger could be called on to speak. {If ye have any word of exhortation for the people} (\ei tis estin en humin logos parakl^{se}^{“s pros ton laon}\). Literally, if there is among you any word of exhortation for the people. It is a condition of the first class and assumed to be true, a polite invitation. On "exhortation" (\parakl^{sis}\) see 9:31. It may be a technical phrase used in the synagogue (Heb 13:22; 1Ti 4:13).

13:16 {Paul stood up} (\anastas Paulos\). The Jewish custom was to sit while speaking (Lu 4:20), but the Greek and Roman was to stand (Ac 17:22). It is possible as Lewin (_Life of St. Paul, Vol. 1, p. 141) suggests that here Paul stepped upon the platform and then took his seat as he began to speak or he may have followed the Greek and Roman custom. Paul is the leader now and the more gifted speaker (Ac 14:12), so that he responds to the courteous invitation of the rulers. {Beckoning} (\kataseisas). First aorist active participle of \katasei“, old verb to shake down, a dramatic gesture for quiet and order like Peter in 12:17 and Paul on the steps of the tower of Antonia (21:40). {And ye that fear God} (\kai hoi phoboumenoi ton theon). Evidently large numbers of these Gentiles like Cornelius in Caesarea were present. They offered Paul a great opportunity for reaching the purely pagan Gentiles. This (verses 16-41) is the first full report of a sermon of Paul's that Luke has preserved for us. He is now a practised preacher of the gospel that he began proclaiming at Damascus, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of promise and the Saviour of the whole world both Jew and Gentile if they will only believe on him and be saved. It is possible that Paul here based his sermon on the passages of the law and the prophets that had just been read. He uses two words from the LXX, one in verse 19 from De 1:31 \etrophophor^sen (as a nursing-father bare he them), the reading of many old MSS. and the one preferred by the American Committee, the other in verse 17 from Isa 1:2 \hups“sen (exalted). At any rate it is clear that Paul spoke in Greek so that all could understand his sermon. He may have written out notes of this sermon afterwards for Luke. The keynotes of Paul's theology as found in his Epistles appear in this sermon. It is interesting to observe the steady growth of Paul's Christology as he faced the great problems of his day. Here we see Paul's gospel for the Jews and the God-fearers (Gentiles friendly to the Jews).

13:17 {Chose} (\exelexato). First aorist middle (indirect), selected for himself. Israel was the chosen people. {Exalted} (\hups“sen). From \hupso“, late verb from \hupsos so often used of Christ. {When they sojourned} (\en t^i paroikifi). In the sojourn. Late word from \paroikos (sojourner, dweller, Ac 7:6) common in LXX. In N.T. only here and 1Pe 1:17. {With a high arm} (\meta brachionos hups^lou). Vivid picture from the LXX (Ex 6:1,6; De 5:15; Ps 136:12).

13:18 {Suffered he their manners} (\etropophor^sen). First aorist active indicative of \tropophore“, late word from \tropos, manner, and \pher“, reading of Aleph B D and accepted by Westcott and Hort. But A C Sahidic Bohairic read \etrophophor^sen from \trophophore“ (trophos\, a nurse, and pher“), late word (II Macc. 7:27), probably correct word here and De 1:31.

13:19 {When he had destroyed} (kathel“n\). Second aorist active participle of \kathaire“, to tear down, old verb. {He gave them for an inheritance} (katekl“ronom“sen\). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb \kata-kl“ro-nome“, late verb in LXX (Nu 34:18; De 3:28; Jos 14:1) and only here in the N.T., to distribute by lot, to distribute as an inheritance. This is the correct reading and not \katekl“rodote“ from \katakl“rodote“ of the Textus Receptus. These two verbs were confused in the MSS. of the LXX as well as here. {For about four hundred and fifty years} (h“s etesin tetrakosiois kai pent“konta\). Associative instrumental case with an expression of time as in 8:11; Lu 8:29 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 527). The oldest MSS. (Aleph A B C Vg Sah Boh) place these figures before "after these things" and so in verse 19. This is the true reading and is in agreement with the notation in 1Ki 6:1. The difficulty found in the Textus Receptus (King James Version) thus disappears with the true text. The four hundred and fifty years runs therefore from the birth of Isaac to the actual conquest of Canaan and does not cover the period of the Judges. See on Ac 7:6.

13:20 {And after these things} (kai meta tauta\). That is, the time of the Judges then began. Cf. Jud 2:16. {Until Samuel the prophet} (he“s Samou“l proph“tou\). The _terminus ad quem_. He was the last of the judges and the first of the prophets who selected the first king (Saul) under God's guidance. Note the absence of the Greek article with \proph“tou\.

13:21 {They asked} (it“santo\). First aorist indirect middle indicative, they asked for themselves. They were tired of a theocracy. Cf. 1Sa 8:5; 10:1. Paul mentions with pride that Benjamin was the tribe of Saul (his name also), but he does not allude to Saul's sin (Furneaux). {For the space of forty years} (et“tesserakonta\). Accusative of extent of time. Not in the O.T., but in Josephus, _Ant_. VI. 14, 9.

13:22 {When he had removed him} (metast“sas auton\). First aorist active participle of \methist“mi\, old verb to transfer, to transpose (note force of meta\). This verb occurs in Lu 16:4 by the unjust steward about his removal from office. Cf. 1Sa 15:16. {To be} (eis\). As or for, Greek idiom like the Hebrew _le_, common in the LXX. {A man after my heart} (andra kata t“n kardian mou\). The words quoted by Paul as a direct saying of God are a combination of Ps 89:20, 21; 1Sa 13:14 (the word of the Lord to Samuel about David). Knowling thinks that this free and rather loose quotation of the substance argues for the genuineness of the report of Paul's sermon. Hackett observes that the commendation of David is not absolute, but, as compared with the disobedient Saul, he was a man who did God's will in spite of the gross sin of which he repented (Ps 51). Note "wills" (thel^mata\), plural, of God.

13:23 {Of this man's seed} (toutou apo tou spermatos\). Emphatic position of toutou\. Of this one from the (his) seed. {According to promise} (kat' epaggelian\). This phrase in Ga 3:29; 2Ti 1:1. See the promise in 2Sa 7:2; Ps 132:11; Isa 11:1,10; Jer 23:5f.; Zec 3:8. In Zec 3:8 the verb \ag^ is used of the sending of the Messiah as here. {A Saviour Jesus} (S^t^ra I^soun\). Jesus is in apposition with Saviour (accusative case) and comes at the end of the sentence in contrast with "this man" (David) at the beginning. Paul goes no further than David because he suggests to him Jesus, descendant in the flesh from David. By "Israel" here Paul means the Jewish people, though he will later enlarge this promise to include the spiritual Israel both Gentile and Jew (Ro 9:6f.).

13:24 {When John had first preached} (prok^ruxantos I^anou\). Literally, John heralding beforehand, as a herald before the king (Lu 3:3). Genitive absolute of first aorist active participle of \prok^russ^, old verb to herald beforehand, here alone in the N.T., though Textus Receptus has it also in Ac 3:20. {Before his coming} (pro pros^ pou t^s eisodou autou\). Literally, before the face of his entering in (here act of entrance as 1Th 1:9, not the gate as in Heb 10:19). See Mal 3:1 quoted in Mt 11:10 (Lu 7:27) for this Hebrew phrase and also Lu 1:76. {The baptism of repentance} (baptisma metanoias\). Baptism marked by, characterized by (genitive case, case of kind or species) repentance (change of mind and life). The very phrase used of John's preaching in Mr 1:4; Lu 3:3. It is clear therefore that Paul understood John's ministry and message as did Peter (Ac 2:38; 10:37).

13:25 {As John was fulfilling his course} (h^s epl^rou I^an^s ton dromon\). Imperfect active of \pl^ro^, describing his vivid ministry without defining the precise period when John asked the question. Paul uses this word \dromos\ (course) of his own race (Ac 20:24; 2Ti 4:7). {What suppose ye that I am?} (Ti eme huponoeite einai?) Note \ti\ (neuter), not \tina\ (masculine), {what} not {who}, character, not identity. It is indirect discourse (the infinitive \einai\ and the accusative of general reference). {Huponoe} (\hupo, noe) is to think secretly, to suspect, to conjecture. {I am not he} (\ouk eimi eg). These precise words are not given in the Gospels, but the idea is the same as the disclaimers by the Baptist in Joh 1:19-27 (cf. also Mt 3:11; Mr 1:7; Lu 3:16). Paul had a true grasp of the message of the Baptist. He uses the very form \l-sai\ (first aorist active infinitive of \lu) found in Mr 1:7; Lu 3:16 and the word for shoes (\hupod^ma\, singular) in all three. His quotation is remarkably true to the words in the Synoptic Gospels. How did Paul get hold of the words of the Baptist so clearly?

13:26 {To us} (\h^min\). Both Jews and Gentiles, both classes in Paul's audience, dative of advantage. {Is sent forth} (\exapestal^). Second aorist passive indicative of the double compound verb \exapostell^, common verb to send out (\ex\ and forth (\apo\). It is a climacteric or culminative aorist tense. It has come to us in one day, this glorious promise. {The word of this salvation} (\ho logos t^s s^t^rias taut^s\). The message of Jesus as Saviour (verse 23), long ago promised and now come to us as Saviour.

13:27 {Because they knew him not} (\touton agno^santes\). First aorist active participle (causal) of \agnoe^, old verb, not to know. Peter gives "ignorance" (\agnoia\) as the excuse of the Jews in the death of Christ (3:17) and Paul does the same about his conduct before his conversion (1Ti 1:13). This ignorance mitigated the degree of their guilt, but it did not remove it, for it was willing ignorance and prejudice. {The voices of the prophets which are read} (\tas ph^nas t^n proph^t^n tas anagin^skomenas\). Object also of \agno^santes\, though it could be the object of \epl^r^san\ (fulfilled) if \kai\ is taken as "also". The "voices" were heard as they were read aloud each Sabbath in the synagogue. In their ignorant condemnation they fulfilled the prophecies about the suffering Messiah.

13:28 {Though they found no cause of death} (\m^demian aitian thanatou heurontes\). Second aorist active with usual negative of the participle. As a matter of fact the Sanhedrin did charge Jesus with blasphemy, but could not prove it (Mt 26:65; 27:24; Lu 23:22). At this time no Gospel had probably been written, but Paul knew that Jesus was innocent. He uses this same idiom about his own innocence (Ac 28:18). {That he should be slain} (\anaireth^nai auton). First aorist passive infinitive, the accusative case, the direct object of \it^santo (first aorist middle indicative, asked as a favour to themselves).

13:29 {From the tree} (\apo tou xulou). Not here strictly a tree, but wood as already in 5:30; 10:29 and later in Ga 3:13. Strictly speaking, it was Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus who took the body of Jesus down from the cross, though the Jews had asked Pilate to have the bones of Jesus broken that his body should not remain on the cross during the Sabbath (Joh 19:31). Paul does not distinguish the details here. {Laid} (\eth^kan). First (kappa) aorist active indicative third plural of \tith^mi in place of \ethesan the usual second aorist active plural form. {Tomb} (\mn^meion). Memorial, common in the Gospels.

13:30 {But God raised him from the dead} (\ho de theos ^geiren ek nekr^“n). This crucial fact Paul puts sharply as he always did.

13:31 {Was seen for many days} (\“phth^ epi h^meras pleious). The common verb (first aorist passive indicative of \hora^“\, to see) for the appearance of the Risen Christ, the one used by Paul of his own vision of Christ (1Co 15:8), which is not reported by Luke here. For more days (than a few), the language means, forty in all (1:3). {Of them that came up with him} (\tois sunanabfsin aut^“i). Dative (after \“phth^) articular participle (second aorist active of \sunanabain^“) with associative instrumental case (\aut^“i), the very men who knew him best and who could not be easily deceived about the reality of his resurrection. But this fact rules Paul out on this point, for he had not fellowshiped with Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem. {Who are now his witnesses} (\hoitines nun eisin martures autou). The very point that Peter used to clinch his argument with such powerful effect (2:32; 3:15).

13:32 {We bring you good tidings of the promise} (\h^meis humfs euaggelizometha t^“n epaggelian). Two accusatives here (person and thing), old Greek did not use accusative of the person with this verb as in 16:10; Lu 3:18. Note "we you" together. Here the heart of Paul's message on this occasion.

13:33 {Hath fulfilled} (\ekpepl^r^“ken). Hath filled out (\ek). {Unto our children} (\tois teknois h^m^“n). The MSS. vary greatly here about \h^m^“n\ (our), some have \aut^“n\, some \aut^“n h^min\. Westcott and Hort consider these readings "a primitive error" for \h^min\ (to us) taken with \anast^sas I^soun\ (having for us raised up Jesus). This raising up (from \anist^mi\, set up) as in 3:22; 7:37 refers not to resurrection (verse 34), but to the sending of Jesus (two raisings up). {In the second psalm} (\en t^“i psalm^“i t^“i deuter^“i\). Ps 2:7. D has \pr^“t^“i\ because the first psalm was often counted as merely introductory.

13:34 {Now no more to return to corruption} (\m^keti mellonta hupostrephain eis diaphthoran\). No longer about to return as Lazarus did. Jesus did not die again and so is the first fruits of the resurrection (1Co 15:23; Ro 6:9). {He hath spoken} (\eir^ken\). Present perfect active indicative, common way of referring to the permanent utterances of God which are on record in the Scriptures. {The holy and sure blessings of David} (\ta hosia Daueid ta pista\). See 2Sa 7:13. Literally, "the holy things of David the trustworthy things." He explains "the holy things" at once.

13:35 {Because} (\dioti\). Compound conjunction (\dia, hoti\) like our "because that." The reason for the previous statement about "the holy things." {Thou wilt not give thy holy one to see corruption} (\ou d^“seis ton hosion sou idein diaphthoran\). Quotation from Ps 16:10 to show that Jesus did not see corruption in his body, a flat contradiction for those who deny the bodily resurrection of Jesus.

13:36 {His own generation} (\idifi genefi\). Either locative case, "in his own generation" or dative object of \hup^ret^sas\ (served). {The counsel of God} (\t^i tou theou boul^i\). So here, either the dative, the object of \hup^ret^sas\ if \genefi\ is locative, or the instrumental case "by the counsel of God" which again may be construed either with \hup^ret^sas\ (having served) or after \ekoim^th^ (fell on sleep). Either of the three ways is grammatical and makes good sense. \Koimaomai\ for death we have already had (Ac 7:60). So Jesus (Joh 11:11) and Paul (1Co 15:6,51). {Was laid} (\proseteth^). Was added unto (first aorist passive indicative of \prostith^mi\). See the verb in 2:47; 5:14. This figure for death probably arose from the custom of burying families together (Ge 15:15; Jud 2:10). {Saw corruption} (\eiden diaphthoran\). As Jesus did not (Ac 2:31) as he shows in verse 37.

13:38 {Through this man} (\(dia toutou\)). This very man whom the Jews had crucified and whom God had raised from the dead. Remission of sins (\(aphesis hamarti“n\)) is proclaimed (\(kataggelletai\)) to you. This is the keynote of Paul's message as it had been that of Peter at Pentecost (2:38; 5:31; 10:43). Cf. 26:18. This glorious message Paul now presses home in his exhortation.

13:39 {And by him every one that believeth is justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses} (\(kai apo pant“n h“n ouk ^dun^th^te en nom“i M“use“s dikaioth^nai en tout“i pfs ho pisteu“n dikaioutai\)). This is a characteristic Greek sentence with the principal clause at the end and Pauline to the core. A literal rendering as to the order would be: "And from all the things from (\(apo\) not repeated in the Greek, but understood, the ablative case being repeated) which ye were not able to be justified in this one every one who believes is justified." The climax is at the close and gives us the heart of Paul's teaching about Christ. "We have here the germ of all that is most characteristic in Paul's later teaching. It is the argument of the Epistle to Galatians and Romans in a sentence" (Furneaux). The failure of the Mosaic law to bring the kind of righteousness that God demands is stated. This is made possible in and by (\(en\)) Christ alone. Paul's favourite words occur here, \pisteu“\, believe, with which \pistis\, faith, is allied, \dikaio“\, to set right with God on the basis of faith. In Ro 6:7 Paul uses \apo\ also after \dikaio“\ . These are key words (\(pisteu“\ and \(dikaio“\)) in Paul's theology and call for prolonged and careful study if one is to grasp the Pauline teaching. \Dikaio“\ primarily means to make righteous, to declare righteous like \axio“\, to deem worthy (\(axios\)). But in the end Paul holds that real righteousness will come (Ro 6-8) to those whom God treats as righteous (Ro 3-5) though both Gentile and Jew fall short without Christ (Ro 1-3). This is the doctrine of grace that will prove a stumbling block to the Jews with their ceremonial works and foolishness to the Greeks with their abstract philosophical ethics (1Co 1:23-25). It is a new and strange doctrine to the people of Antioch.

13:40 {Beware therefore} (\(blepete oun\)). The warning is pertinent. Perhaps Paul noticed anger on the faces of some of the rabbis. {Lest there come upon you} (\(m^ epelth^i\)). Second aorist active subjunctive with the negative final conjunction \m^\. {In the prophets} (\en tois proph^tais). The quotation is from the LXX text of Hab 1:5. The plural here refers to the prophetic collection (Lu 24:44; Ac 24:14). "The Jews of Habakkuk's day had refused to believe in the impending invasion by the Chaldeans, and yet it had come" (Furneaux).

13:41 {Ye despisers} (\hoi kataphron^tai). Not in the Hebrew, but in the LXX. It is pertinent for Paul's purpose. {Perish} (\aphanisth^te). Or vanish away. First aorist passive imperative. Added by the LXX to the Hebrew. {If one declare it unto you} (\ean tis ekdi^g^tai humin). Condition of third class with present middle subjunctive, if one keep on outlining (double compound, \ek-di-^geomai) it unto you. Paul has hurled a thunderbolt at the close.

13:42 {And as they went out} (\Exiont^“n de aut^“n). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \exeimi, to go out, old verb, in the N.T. only in Ac 12:42; 17:15; 20:7; 27:43. As they (Paul and Barnabas) were going out with all the excitement and hubbub created by the sermon. {They besought} (\parekaloun). Imperfect active, inchoative, began to beseech. The Textus Receptus inserts wrongly \ta ethn^ (the Gentiles) as if the Jews were opposed to Paul from the first as some doubtless were. But both Jews and Gentiles asked for the repetition of the sermon (\lal^th^nai, first aorist passive infinitive object of \parekaloun\ with accusative of general reference). {The next Sabbath} (\eis to metaxu sabbaton). Late use (Josephus, Plutarch, etc.) of \metaxu (\meta\ and \xun\=|sun) in sense of after or next instead of between (sense of \meta\ prevailing). Note use of \eis for "on" or "by."

13:43 {When the synagogue broke up} (\lutheis^s t^s sunag^g^s). Genitive absolute of first aorist passive participle of \lu^“. Apparently Paul and Barnabas had gone out before the synagogue was formally dismissed. {Of the devout proselytes} (\t^“n sebomen^“n pros^lut^“n). Of the worshipping proselytes described in verses 16,25 as "those who fear God" (cf. 16:14) employed usually of the uncircumcised Gentiles who yet attended the synagogue worship, but the word \pros^lutoi (\pros, ^lutos\ verbal from \erchomai\, a new-comer) means usually those who had become circumcised (proselytes of righteousness). Yet the rabbis used it also of proselytes of the gate who had not yet become circumcised, probably the idea here. In the N.T. the word occurs only in Mt 23:15; Ac 2:10; 6:5; 13:43. Many (both Jews and proselytes) followed (\kolouth^san), ingressive aorist active indicative of \akolouthē) Paul and Barnabas to hear more without waiting till the next Sabbath. So we are to picture Paul and Barnabas speaking (\proslalountes), late compound, in N.T. only here and 28:20 to eager groups. {Urged} (\epeithon). Imperfect active of \peithō, either descriptive (were persuading) or conative (were trying to persuade). Paul had great powers of persuasion (18:4; 19:8,26; 26:28; 28:23; 2Co 5:11; Ga 1:10). These Jews "were beginning to understand for the first time the true meaning of their national history" (Furneaux), "the grace of God" to them.

13:44 {The next Sabbath} (\t^i erchomen^i sabbat^i). Locative case, on the coming (\erchomen^i), present middle participle of \erchomai) Sabbath. So the best MSS., though some have \echomen^i (present middle participle of \echō in sense of near, bordering, following as in Lu 13:33; Ac 29:15). {Almost} (\schedon). Old word, but in N.T. only here, Ac 19:26; Heb 9:22. {Was gathered together} (\sun^chthē). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of \sunagō, old and common verb. The "whole city" could hardly all gather in the synagogue. Perhaps Paul spoke in the synagogue and Barnabas to the overflow outside (see verse 46). It was an eager and earnest gathering "to hear (\akousai), first aorist active infinitive of purpose) the word of God" and a great opportunity for Paul and Barnabas. The Codex Bezae has it "to hear Paul." It was the new preacher (Paul) that drew the big crowd. It was a crowd such as will later hang on the words of John Wesley and George Whitfield when they preach Jesus Christ.

13:45 {The Jews} (\hoi Ioudaioi). Certainly not the proselytes of verse 43. Probably many of the Jews that were then favourably disposed to Paul's message had reacted against him under the influence of the rabbis during the week and evidently on this Sabbath very many Gentiles ("almost the whole city," "the multitudes" \tous ochlous) had gathered, to the disgust of the stricter Jews. Nothing is specifically stated here about the rabbis, but they were beyond doubt the instigators of, and the ringleaders in, the opposition as in Thessalonica (17:5). No such crowds (\ochlous) came to the synagogue when they were the speakers. {With jealousy} (\z^lou). Genitive case of \zēlos (from \zeō, to boil) after \epi^sth^san (effective first aorist passive indicative of \pimplēmi). Envy and jealousy arise between people of the same calling (doctors towards doctors, lawyers towards lawyers, preachers towards preachers). So these rabbis boiled with jealousy when they saw the crowds gathered to hear Paul and Barnabas. {Contradicted} (\antelegon\). Imperfect active of \antileg“, old verb to speak against, to say a word in opposition to (\anti\, face to face). It was interruption of the service and open opposition in the public meeting. Paul and Barnabas were guests by courtesy and, of course, could not proceed further, when denied that privilege. {Blasphemed} (\blasph^{mountes}\). Blaspheming. So the correct text without the addition \antilegontes\ (repeated from \antelegon\ above). Common verb in the Gospels for saying injurious and harmful things. Doubtless these rabbis indulged in unkind personalities and made it plain that Paul and Barnabas were going beyond the limitations of pure Judaism in their contacts with Gentiles.

13:46 {Spake out boldly} (\parr^{siasamenoi}\). First aorist middle participle of \parr^{siazomai}\, to use freedom in speaking, to assume boldness. Both Paul and Barnabas accepted the challenge of the rabbis. They would leave their synagogue, but not without a word of explanation. {It was necessary to you first} (\Huminⁿ anagkaion pr^{ton}\). They had done their duty and had followed the command of Jesus (1:8). They use the very language of Peter in 3:26 (\humin pr^{ton}\) "to you first." This position Paul as the apostle to the Gentiles will always hold, the Jew first in privilege and penalty (Ro 1:16; 2:9,10). {Ye thrust it from you} (\ap^{theisthe auton}\). Present middle (indirect, from yourselves) indicative of \ap^{the}\, to push from. Vigorous verb seen already in Ac 7:27,39 which see. {Judge yourselves unworthy} (\ouk axios krinete heautous\). Present active indicative of the common verb \krin“, to judge or decide with the reflexive pronoun expressed. Literally, Do not judge yourselves worthy. By their action and their words they had taken a violent and definite stand. {Lo, we turn to the Gentiles} (\idou strephometha eis ta ethnⁿ\). It is a crisis (\idou\, lo): "Lo, we turn ourselves to the Gentiles." Probably also aoristic present, we now turn (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 864-70). \Strephometha\ is probably the direct middle (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 806-08) though the aorist passive \estraphⁿ\ is so used also (7:39). It is a dramatic moment as Paul and Barnabas turn from the Jews to the Gentiles, a prophecy of the future history of Christianity. In Ro 9-11 Paul will discuss at length the rejection of Christ by the Jews and the calling of the Gentiles to be the real (the spiritual) Israel.

13:47 {For so hath the Lord commanded us} (\hout“s gar entetaltai h[^]min ho kurios\). Perfect middle indicative of \entell“\, poetic (Pindar) and late verb to enjoin (I:2). The command of the Lord Paul finds in Isa 49:6 quoted by Simeon also (Lu 2:32). The conviction of Paul's mind was now made clear by the fact of the rejection by the Jews. He could now see more clearly the words of the prophet about the Gentiles: The Messiah is declared by God in Isaiah to be "a light to the Gentiles" (\ethn“n\, objective genitive), "a light for revelation to the Gentiles" (\ph“s eis apokalupsin ethn“n\, Lu 2:32). So Paul is carrying out the will of God in turning to the Gentiles. He will still appeal to the Jews elsewhere as they allow him to do so, but not here. {That thou shouldest be} (\tou einai se\). Genitive articular infinitive of purpose with the accusative of general reference. This is all according to God's fixed purpose (\tetheika\, perfect active indicative of tith[^]mi\). {Unto the uttermost part of the earth} (\he“s eschatou t[^]s g[^]s\). Unto the last portion (genitive neuter, not feminine) of the earth. It is a long time from Paul to now, not to say from Isaiah to now, and not yet has the gospel been carried to half of the people of earth. God's people are slow in carrying out God's plans for salvation.

13:48 {As the Gentiles heard this they were glad} (\akouonta ta ethn[^] echairon\). Present active participle of \akou“\ and imperfect active of \chair“\, linear action descriptive of the joy of the Gentiles. {Glorified the word of God} (\edoxazon ton logon tou theou\). Imperfect active again. The joy of the Gentiles increased the fury of the Jews. "The synagogue became a scene of excitement which must have been something like the original speaking with tongues" (Rackham). The joy of the Gentiles was to see how they could receive the higher blessing of Judaism without circumcision and other repellent features of Jewish ceremonialism. It was the gospel of grace and liberty from legalism that Paul had proclaimed. Whether Ga 4:13 describes this incident or not (the South Galatian theory), it illustrates it when Gentiles received Paul as if he were Christ Jesus himself. It was triumph with the Gentiles, but defeat with the Jews. {As many as were ordained to eternal life} (\hosoi [^]san tetagmenoi eis z““n ai“nion\). Periphrastic past perfect passive indicative of \tass“\, a military term to place in orderly arrangement. The word "ordain" is not the best translation here.

"Appointed," as Hackett shows, is better. The Jews here had voluntarily rejected the word of God. On the other side were those Gentiles who gladly accepted what the Jews had rejected, not all the Gentiles. Why these Gentiles here ranged themselves on God's side as opposed to the Jews Luke does not tell us. This verse does not solve the vexed problem of divine sovereignty and human free agency. There is no evidence that Luke had in mind an _absolutum decretum_ of personal salvation. Paul had shown that God's plan extended to and included Gentiles. Certainly the Spirit of God does move upon the human heart to which some respond, as here, while others push him away. {Believed} (\episteusan). Summary or constative first aorist active indicative of \pisteu. The subject of this verb is the relative clause. By no manner of legerdemain can it be made to mean "those who believe were appointed." It was saving faith that was exercised only by those who were appointed unto eternal life, who were ranged on the side of eternal life, who were thus revealed as the subjects of God's grace by the stand that they took on this day for the Lord. It was a great day for the kingdom of God.

13:49 {Was spread abroad} (\diephereto). Imperfect passive of \diapher, to carry in different directions (\dia). By the recent converts as well as by Paul and Barnabas. This would seem to indicate a stay of some months with active work among the Gentiles that bore rich fruit. {Throughout all the region} (\di' hol's t's ch'ras). Antioch in Pisidia as a Roman colony would be the natural centre of a Roman _Regio_, an important element in Roman imperial administration. There were probably other _Regiones_ in South Galatia (Ramsay, _St. Paul the Traveller and Roman Citizen_, pp. 102-12).

13:50 {Urged on} (\par'trunan). First aorist (effective) active of \par-otrun, old verb, but here alone in the N.T., to incite, to stir up. The Jews were apparently not numerous in this city as they had only one synagogue, but they had influence with people of prominence, like "the devout women of honourable estate" (\tas sebomenas gunaikas tas eusch'monas), the female proselytes of high station, a late use of an old word used about Joseph of Arimathea (Mr 15:43). The rabbis went after these Gentile women who had embraced Judaism (cf. Ac 17:4 in Thessalonica) as Paul had made an appeal to them. The prominence of women in public life here at Antioch is quite in accord with what we know of conditions in the cities of Asia Minor. "Thus women were appointed under the empire as magistrates, as presidents of the games, and even the Jews elected a woman as Archisynagogos, at least in one instance at Smyrna" (Knowling). In Damascus Josephus (War II. 20, 21) says that a majority of the married women were proselytes. Strabo (VIII. 2) and Juvenal (VI. 542) speak of the addition of women to the Jewish religion. {The chief men of the city} (\tous pr“tous t’s pole“s). Probably city officials (the Duumviri, the Praetors, the First Ten in the Greek Cities of the east) or other "foremost" men, not officials. The rabbis were shrewd enough to reach these men (not proselytes) through the women who were proselytes of distinction. {Stirred up a persecution} (\ep^geiran di“gmon). First aorist active indicative of \epegeir“, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 14:2. Paul seems to allude to this persecution in 2Ti 3:11 "persecutions, sufferings, what things befell me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, what persecutions I endured." Here Paul had perils from his own countrymen and perils from the Gentiles after the perils of rivers and perils of robbers on the way from Perga (2Co 11:26). He was thrice beaten with rods (\tris erhabdisth^n\, 2Co 11:25) by Roman lictors in some Roman colony. If that was here, then Paul and Barnabas were publicly scourged by the lictors before they left. Probably the Jews succeeded in making the Roman officials look on Paul and Barnabas as disturbers of the public peace. So "they cast them out of their borders" (\exebalon autous apo t“n hori“n aut“n). Second aorist active indicative of \ekball“, forcible expulsion plainly as public nuisances. Just a few days before they were the heroes of the city and now!

13:51 {But they shook off the dust of their feet against them} (\Hoi de ektinaxamenoi ton koniorton t“n pod“n ep' autous). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of \ektinass“, to shake out or off. Homer uses it for knocking out teeth. In the papyri. The middle aorist participle occurs again in 18:6 and the active imperative with the dust of the feet in Mr 6:11 (Lu 10:11 has \apomassometha). and Mt 10:14 (command of Jesus). It is a dramatic gesture that forbids further intercourse. "As a protest against the injustice which cast them out. The sandal was taken off and the dust shaken out as a symbolic token that the very soil of the country was defiling" (Furneaux). {Unto Iconium} (\eis Ikonion). About 45 miles southeast from Antioch in Pisidia, at the foot of the Taurus mountains. At various times it was reckoned also in Pisidia or Phrygia as well as Lycaonia, Phrygian in population and distinguished by Luke (Ac 14:6) from Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. As compared with Antioch (a Roman colony) it was a native Phrygian town. When the province of Galatia was divided, Iconium became the capital of Lycaonia and eclipsed Antioch in Pisidia. Strictly speaking at this time Lystra and Derbe were cities of Lycaonia-Galatica while Iconium was in Phrygia-Galatica (all three in the Roman Province of Galatia). It was at the meeting place of several Roman roads and on the highway from east to west. It is still a large town Konieh with 30,000 population.

13:52 {And the disciples} (\hoi te\ or \hoi de math^tai). The Gentile Christians in Antioch in Pisidia. Persecution had precisely the opposite effect to the intention of the Jews for they "were filled with joy and the Holy Spirit" (\epl^rounto charas kai pneumatos hagiou). Imperfect passive, they kept on being filled. It had been so before (Ac 4:31; 8:4; 9:31; 12:24). The blood of the martyrs is still the seed of the church.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Acts: Chapter 13)

14:1 {They entered together} (\kata to auto eiselthein). Like \epi to auto in 3:1. The infinitive \eiselthein is the subject of \egeneto. {So spake that} (\lal^sai hout^s h^ste). Infinitive again parallel to \eiselthein. With the result that, actual result here stated with \h^ste and the aorist infinitive \pisteusai (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 999f.) rather than \h^ste and the indicative like Joh 3:16. It was a tremendous first meeting.

14:2 {That were disobedient} (\hoi apeith^santes). First aorist active articular participle, not the present \apeithountes as the Textus Receptus has it. But the meaning is probably the Jews that disbelieved, rather than that disobeyed. Strictly \apeithe^s does mean to disobey and \apistes^s to disbelieve, but that distinction is not observed in Joh 3:36 nor in Ac 19:9; 28:24. The word \apeithe^s means to be \apeith^s, to be unwilling to be persuaded or to withhold belief and then also to withhold obedience. The two meanings run into one another. To disbelieve the word of God is to disobey God. {Made them evil affected} (\ekak^san). First aorist active indicative of \kako^s, old verb from \kakos, to do evil to, to ill-treat, then in later Greek as here to embitter, to exasperate as in Ps 105:32 and in Josephus. In this sense only here in the N.T. Evidently Paul preached the same message as in Antioch for it won both Jews and Gentiles, and displeased the rabbis. Codex Bezae adds here that "the chiefs of the synagogue and the rulers" brought persecution upon Paul and Barnabas just as was argued about Antioch. Outside the synagogue the Jews would poison the minds of the Gentiles against Paul and Barnabas. "The story of Thecla suggests a means, and perhaps the apostles were brought before the magistrates on some charge of interference with family life. The magistrates however must have seen at once that there was no legal case against them; and by a sentence of acquittal or in some other way the Lord gave peace" (Rackham). As we have it, the story of Paul and Thecla undoubtedly has apocryphal features, though Thecla may very well be an historical character here at Iconium where the story is located. Certainly the picture of Paul herein drawn cannot be considered authentic though a true tradition may underlie it: "bald, bowlegged, strongly built, small in stature, with large eyes and meeting eyebrows and longish nose; full of grace; sometimes looking like a man, sometimes having the face of an angel."

14:3 {Long time therefore} (\hikanon men oun chronon\).

Accusative of duration of time (possibly six months) and note \men oun\. There is an antithesis in \eschisth^ de\ (verse 4) and in verse 5 (\egeneto de\). After the persecution and vindication there was a season of great opportunity which Paul and Barnabas used to the full, "speaking boldly" (\parr^siazomenoi\ as in 13:46 at Antioch in Pisidia, "in the Lord" (\epi t^i kuri^i\), upon the basis of the Lord Jesus as in 4:17f. And the Lord Jesus "bore witness to the word of his grace" as he always does, "granting signs and wonders to be done by their hands" (\didonti s^meia kai terata ginesthai dia t^n cheir^n aut^n\). Present participle (\didonti\) and present infinitive (\ginesthai\) repetition of both signs and wonders (note both words) just as had happened with Peter and John and the other apostles (2:43; 4:29f.; 5:12; cf. Heb 2:4). The time of peace could not last forever with such a work of grace as this. A second explosion of persecution was bound to come and some of the MSS. actually have \ek deuteron\ (a second time).

14:4 {But the multitude of the city was divided} (\eschisth^ de to pl^thos t^s pole^s\). First aorist passive indicative of \schiz^, old verb to split, to make a schism or factions as Sadducees and Pharisees (23:7). This division was within the Gentile populace. Part held (\hoi men ^san\), literally "some were with the Jews" (\sun tois Ioudaiois\), part with the apostles (\hoi de sun tois apostolois\). Common demonstrative of contrast (\hoi men, hoi de\, Robertson, Grammar, p. 694). The Jewish leaders made some impression on the Gentiles as at Antioch in Pisidia and later at Thessalonica (17:4f.). This is the first time in the Acts that Paul and Barnabas are termed "apostles" (see also verse 14). Elsewhere in the Acts the word is restricted to the twelve. Certainly Luke does not here employ it in that technical sense. To have followed Jesus in his ministry and to have seen the Risen Christ was essential to the technical use (1:22f.). Whether Barnabas had seen the Risen Christ we do not know, but certainly Paul had (1Co 9:1f.; 15:8). Paul claimed to be an apostle on a par with the twelve (Ga 1:1,16-18). The word originally means simply one sent (Joh 13:16) like messengers of the churches with the collection (2Co 8:23). The Jews used it of those sent from Jerusalem to collect the temple tribute. Paul applies the word to James the Lord's brother (Ga 1:19), to Epaphroditus (Php 2:25) as the messenger of the church in Philippi, to Silvanus and Timothy (1Th 2:6; Ac 18:5), apparently to Apollos (1Co 4:9), and to Andronicus and Junias (Ro 16:6f.). He even calls the Judaizers "false apostles" (2Co 11:13).

14:5 {An onset} (\horm^). A rush or impulse as in Jas 3:4. Old word, but only twice in the N.T. (here and James). It probably denotes not an actual attack so much as the open start, the co-operation of both Jews and Gentiles (the disaffected portion), "with their rulers" (\sun tois archousin aut^n), that is the rulers of the Jewish synagogue (13:27). The city officials would hardly join in a mob like this, though Hackett and Rackham think that the city magistrates were also involved as in Antioch in Pisidia (13:50). {To entreat them shamefully} (\hubrisai). First aorist active infinitive of \hubriz^, old verb to insult insolently. See on Mt 22:6; Lu 18:32. {To stone} (\lithobol^sai). First aorist active infinitive of \lithobole^, late verb from \lithobolos (\lithos, stone, ball^, to throw) to pelt with stones, the verb used of the stoning of Stephen (7:58). See on Mt 21:35. The plan to stone them shows that the Jews were in the lead and followed by the Gentile rabble. "Legal proceedings having failed the only resource left for the Jews was illegal violence" (Rackham).

14:6 {They became aware of it} (\sunidontes). Second aorist (ingressive) active participle of \sunora^ (\suneidon), old word to see together, to become conscious of as already in 12:12. In the N.T. only by Luke and Paul. {Fled} (\kataphugon). Second aorist (effective) active indicative of \katapheug^, old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Heb 6:18. Paul and Barnabas had no idea of remaining to be stoned (lynched) by this mob. It is a wise preacher who always knows when to stand his ground and when to leave for the glory of God. Paul and Barnabas were following the directions of the Lord Jesus given to the twelve on their special tour of Galilee (Mt 10:23). Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia (still part of the Province of Galatia, though in another Regio), not far from the base of the Black Mountain. Professor Sterrett has apparently identified Lystra by an inscription about six hours (18 miles) south-southwest from Iconium near the village Khatyn Serai and Derbe probably near the village Losta or Zosta though its location is really not known. Lystra had been made a colony in B.C. 6 and Derbe was the frontier city of the Roman empire in the southeast. These are the only cities mentioned, but they were of importance and show that Paul kept to his plan of going to centres of influence. The new imperial road from Antioch and Iconium reached these cities. {The region round about} (\t^np^{erich}ron) was "a high table land, ill-watered, bleak, but suited for sheep pasture" (Page).

14:7 {And there they preached the gospel} (\kakei euaggelizomenoi^{san}). Periphrastic imperfect middle. We are to think of extensive evangelistic work perhaps with the assistance of disciples from Antioch and Iconium since Paul and Barnabas could not speak Lycaonian. \Kakei is crasis for \kai ekei.

14:8 {At Lystra} (\en Lustrois). Neuter plural as in 16:2; 2Ti 3:11 while feminine singular in 14:6,21; 16:1. There was apparently no synagogue in Lystra and so not many Jews. Paul and Barnabas had to do open-air preaching and probably had difficulty in being understood by the natives though both Greek and Latin inscriptions were discovered here by Professor Sterrett in 1885. The incident narrated here (verses 8-18) shows how they got a real hearing among these rude heathen. {There sat} (\ekath^to). Imperfect middle of \kath^mai. Was sitting. This case is very much like that in 3:1-11, healed by Peter. Possibly outside the gate (verse 13) or some public place. {Impotent in his feet} (\adunatos tois posin). Old verbal, but only here in the N.T. in this sense except figuratively in Ro 15:1. Elsewhere it means "impossible" (Mt 19:26). Locative case. Common in medical writers in the sense of "impotent." So Tobit 2:10; 5:9. {Had walked} (\periepat^sen). So best MSS., first aorist active indicative "walked," not \periepepat^kei, "had walked" (past perfect active).

14:9 {The same} (\houtos). Just "this one." {Heard} (\^kouen). Imperfect active, was listening to Paul speaking (\lalountos). Either at the gate or in the market place (17:17) Paul was preaching to such as would listen or could understand his Greek (_Koin, _). Ramsay (_St. Paul the Traveller_, pp. 114, 116) thinks that the cripple was a proselyte. At any rate he may have heard of the miracles wrought at Iconium (verse 3) and Paul may have spoken of the work of healing wrought by Jesus. This man was "no mendicant pretender," for his history was known from his birth. {Fastening his eyes upon him} (\atenisas aut“i). Just as in 13:9 of Paul and 1:10 which see. Paul saw a new hope in the man's eyes and face. {He had faith} (\echei pistin). Present active indicative retained in indirect discourse. {To be made whole} (\tou s“thˆnai). Genitive of articular first aorist passive infinitive (purpose and result combined) of \s“z“, to make sound and also to save. Here clearly to make whole or well as in Lu 7:50 (cf. Ac 3:16; 4:10).

14:10 {Upright} (\orthos). Predicate adjective. In this sense Galen and Hippocrates frequently use \orthos (erect, straight). Paul spoke in a loud (\megalˆi) voice so that all could hear and know. {He leaped up and walked} (\hˆlato kai periepatei). Rather, He leaped up with a single bound and began to walk. The second aorist middle indicative (with first aorist vowel \a) of \hallomai (late verb, in papyri) and inchoative imperfect active of \peripate“, common verb to walk around. This graphic picture is concealed by the usual English rendering. It is possible that Luke obtained the vivid report of this incident from Timothy who may have witnessed it and who was probably converted during Paul's stay here (16:3). His father was a prominent Greek and his mother Eunice, possibly a widow, may have lived here with her mother Lois (2Ti 1:5).

14:11 {Lifted up their voice} (\epˆran tˆn ph“nˆn aut“n). First aorist active of \epair“. In their excitement they elevated their voices. {In the speech of Lycaonia} (\Lukaonisti). Adverb from verb \lukaoniz“, to use the language of Lycaonia found here alone, but formed regularly like \Ebraisti (Joh 5:2), \Hellˆnisti (Ac 21:37), \R“maisti (Joh 19:20). Paul was speaking in Greek, of course, but the excitement of the crowd over the miracle made them cry out in their native tongue which Paul and Barnabas did not understand. Hence it was not till preparations for offering sacrifice to them had begun that Paul understood the new role in which he and Barnabas were held. {In the likeness of men} (\homoi“thentes anthr“pois). First aorist passive participle of \homoi“, to liken, with the associative instrumental case. In this primitive state the people hold to the old Graeco-Roman mythology. The story of Baucis and Philemon tells how Jupiter (Zeus) and Mercury (Hermes) visited in human form the neighbouring region of Phrygia (Ovid, _Meta_. VIII. 626). Jupiter (Zeus) had a temple in Lystra.

14:12 {They called} (\ekaloun\). Inchoative imperfect began to call. {Barnabas, Jupiter} (\ton Barnaban Dia\). Because Barnabas was the older and the more imposing in appearance. Paul admits that he was not impressive in looks (2Co 10:10). {And Paul, Mercury} (\ton de Paulon Herm^n\). Mercury (\Herm^s\ was the messenger of the gods, and the spokesman of Zeus. \Herm^s\ was of beautiful appearance and eloquent in speech, the inventor of speech in legend. Our word hermeneutics or science of interpretation comes from this word (Heb 7:2; Joh 1:38). {Because he was the chief speaker} (\epeid^ autos ^n ho h^goumenos tou logou\). Paul was clearly "the leader of the talk." So it seemed a clear case to the natives. If preachers always knew what people really think of them! Whether Paul was alluding to his experience in Lystra or not in Ga 4:14, certainly they did receive him as an angel of God, as if "Mercury" in reality.

14:13 {Whose temple was before the city} (\tou ontos pro t^s p^le^s\). The god (Zeus) is identified with his temple. He had a statue and temple there. {Oxen and garlands} (\taurous kai stemmata\). Probably garlands to put on the oxen before they were slain. It was common to sacrifice bullocks to Jupiter and Mercury. {Would have done sacrifice} (\^thelen thuein\). Imperfect indicative, wanted to offer sacrifice. He was planning to do it, and his purpose now became plain to Paul and Barnabas.

14:14 {Having heard} (\akousantes\). Such elaborate preparation "with the multitudes" (\sun tois ochlois\ spread rumours and some who spoke Greek told Paul and Barnabas. It is possible that the priest of Jupiter may have sent a formal request that the visiting "gods" might come out to the statue by the temple gates to make it a grand occasion. They rent their garments (\diarr^xantes\). First aorist active participle from \diarr^gnumi\, old verb to rend in two. Like the high priest in Mt 26:65 as if an act of sacrilege was about to be committed. It was strange conduct for the supposed gods! {Sprang forth} (\exep^d^san\). First aorist (ingressive) active indicative of \ekp^da^ (\note \ek\), old verb, here only in the N.T. It was all a sign of grief and horror with loud outcries (\krazontes\).

14:15 {Sirs} (\andres\). Literally, Men. Abrupt, but courteous. {We also are men of like passions with you} (\kai h^meis homoiopatheis esmen humin anthr^poi\). Old adjective from \homoios\ (like) and \pasch\, to experience. In the N.T. only here and Jas 5:17. It means "of like nature" more exactly and affected by like sensations, not "gods" at all. Their conduct was more serious than the obeisance of Cornelius to Peter (10:25f.). \Humin\ is associative instrumental case. {And bring you good tidings} (\euaggelizomenoi\). No "and" in the Greek, just the present middle participle, "gospelizing you." They are not gods, but evangelists. Here we have Paul's message to a pagan audience without the Jewish environment and he makes the same line of argument seen in Ac 17:21-32; Ro 1:18-23. At Antioch in Pisidia we saw Paul's line of approach to Jews and proselytes (Ac 13:16-41). {That ye should turn from these vain things} (\apo toutⁿ tⁿ mataiⁿ epistrephein\). He boldly calls the worship of Jupiter and Mercury and all idols "vain" or empty things, pointing to the statues and the temple. {Unto the living God} (\epi theon zⁿta\). They must go the whole way. Our God is a live God, not a dead statue. Paul is fond of this phrase (2Co 6:16; Ro 9:26). {Who made} (\hos epoi^{sen}\). The one God is alive and is the Creator of the Universe just as Paul will argue in Athens (Ac 17:24). Paul here quotes Ps 146:6 and has Ge 1:1 in mind. See also 1Th 1:9 where a new allegiance is also claimed as here.

14:16 {In the generations gone by} (\en tais par^{ich}menais geneais\). Perfect middle participle from \paroichomai\, to go by, old verb, here alone in the N.T. {Suffered} (\eiasen\). Constative aorist active indicative of \ea\ (note syllabic augment). Paul here touches God in history as he did just before in creation. God's hand is on the history of all the nations (Gentile and Jew), only with the Gentiles he withdrew the restraints of his grace in large measure (Ac 17:30; Ro 1:24,26,28), judgment enough for their sins. {To walk in their ways} (\poreuesthai tais hodois autⁿ\). Present middle infinitive, to go on walking, with locative case without \en\.

This philosophy of history does not mean that God was ignorant or unconcerned. He was biding his time in patience.

14:17 {And yet} (\kaitoi\). Old Greek compound particle (\kai toi\). In the N.T. twice only, once with finite verb as here, once with the participle (Heb 4:3). {Without witness} (\amarturon\). Old adjective (\a\ privative and \martus\, witness), only here in the N.T. {Left} (\aph^{ken}\). First aorist active (\k\ aorist indicative of \aphi^{mi}\). {In that he did good} (\agathourgⁿ\). Present active causal participle of \agathourgeⁿ\, late and rare verb (also \agathoergeⁿ\ 1Ti 6:18), reading of the oldest MSS. here for \agathopoieⁿ\, to do good. Note two other causal participles here parallel with \agathourgⁿ\, viz., \didous\ ("giving you") present active of \did^{mi}\, empiplⁿ\ ("filling") present active of \empimplaⁿ\ (late form of \empimpl^{mi}\). This witness to God (his doing good, giving rains and fruitful seasons, filling your hearts with food and gladness) they could receive without the help of the Old Testament revelation (Ro 1:20). Zeus was regarded as the god of rain (Jupiter Pluvius) and Paul claims the rain and the fruitful (\karpophorous, karpos\, and \pherⁿ\, fruit bearing, old word, here alone in N.T.) seasons as coming from God. Lycaonia was often dry and it would be an appropriate item. "Mercury, as the God of merchandise, was also the dispenser of food" (Vincent). Paul does not talk about laws of nature as if they governed themselves, but he sees the living God "behind the drama of the physical world" (Furneaux). These simple country people could grasp his ideas as he claims everything for the one true God. {Gladness} (\euphrosun^s\). Old word from \euphrⁿ\ (\eu\ and \phrⁿ\), good cheer. In the N.T. only Ac 2:28 and here. Cheerfulness should be our normal attitude when we consider God's goodness. Paul does not here mention Christ because he had the single definite purpose to dissuade them from worshipping Barnabas and himself.

14:18 {Scarce} (\molis\). Adverb in same sense as old \mogis\, from \molos\, toil. {Restrained} (\katepausan\). Effective first aorist active indicative of \katapauⁿ\, old verb in causative sense to make abstain from. {From doing sacrifice unto them} (\tou m^{thuein autois}\). Ablative case of the articular infinitive with redundant negative after \katepausan\, regular Greek idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1094, 1171). It had been a harrowing and well-nigh a horrible ordeal, but finally Paul had won. If only nobody else had interposed!

14:19 {But there came thither Jews from Antioch and Iconium} (\Ep^{lthan de apo Antiocheias kai Ikoniou Ioudaioi}\). Came to or upon them, \ep^{lthan}\, second aorist (ingressive) indicative of \eperchomai\. Whether news of the miracle had reached those cities we do not know. These may have been travelling grain merchants. At any rate there was an interval in which Paul and Barnabas won some disciples (verse 22). There would be a natural reaction, even revulsion, in the minds of many who had come so near to worshipping Paul and Barnabas. The pendulum swings easily from one extreme to the other. The hostile Jews from Antioch and Iconium may even have followed Paul and Barnabas along the fine Roman road on purpose to keep them on the run. They had driven them out of Antioch and out of Iconium and now appear at Lystra at an opportune moment for their work. {Having persuaded the multitudes} (\peisantes tous ochlous). First aorist (effective) active participle of \peith“. They had complete success with many and struck at the psychological moment. {They stoned Paul} (\lithasantes ton Paulon). First aorist active participle of \lithaz“, late verb from \lithos for throwing stones (used by Paul referring to this one incident when alone he was stoned, 2Co 11:25). The wounds inflicted may have left some of the scars (\stigmata) mentioned in Ga 6:17. They stoned Paul as the chief speaker (Mercury) and passed by Barnabas (Jupiter). It was a Jewish mode of punishment as against Stephen and these Jews knew that Paul was the man that they had to deal with. Hackett notes that the Jews with two exceptions incited the persecutions which Paul endured. The exceptions were in Philippi (16:16-40) and Ephesus (19:23-41). {Dragged him out of the city} (\esuron ex“ t^s pole“s). They hurled Stephen outside of the city before stoning him (\7:58). It was a hurried and irregular proceeding, but they were dragging (imperfect active of \sur“, old verb) Paul out now. {Supposing that he were dead} (\nomizontes auton tethn^kenai). Present active participle with infinitive (second perfect active of \thn^sk“) in indirect discourse with accusative of general reference. The Jews are jubilant this time with memories of Paul's escape at Antioch and Iconium. The pagan mob feel that they have settled accounts for their narrow escape from worshipping two Jewish renegade preachers. It was a good day's work for them all. Luke does not say that Paul was actually dead.

14:20 {Stood round about him} (\kukl“sant“n auton). Genitive absolute with first aorist active participle of \kuklo“, old verb from \kuklos (circle, cycle) to make a circle round, to encircle. The would-be murderers left and a group of disciples gathered round to see if Paul was dead or alive and, if dead, to bury him. In that group Timothy may very well have been along with Eunice and Barnabas. Timothy, a lad of about fifteen, would not soon forget that solemn scene (2Ti 3:11). But Paul suddenly (apparently a miraculous recovery) rose up (\anastas) and entered the city to the surprise and joy of the disciples who were willing to brave persecution with Paul. {With Barnabas} (\sun t“i Barnabfi). With the assistance of Barnabas. It was plainly unwise to continue in Lystra so that they set out on the next day (t“i epaurion, ten times in Acts), shaken and bruised as Paul was. Derbe was some forty miles distant, near the pass to the Cilician Gates.

14:21 {When they had preached the gospel to that city} (\euaggelisamenoi t“n polin ekein“n). Having evangelized (first aorist middle participle) that city, a smaller city and apparently with no trouble from the Jews. {Had made many disciples} (\math^teusantes hikanous). First aorist active participle of \math^teu“ from \math^t“s, a learner or disciple. Late verb in Plutarch, to be a disciple (Mt 27:57 like Joh 19:38) and then to disciple (old English, Spenser), to make a disciple as in Mt 28:19 and here. Paul and Barnabas were literally here obeying the command of Jesus in discipling people in this heathen city. {They returned to Lystra and to Iconium, and to Antioch} (\hupestrepsan eis t“n Lustran kai eis Ikonion kai eis Antiocheian). Derbe was the frontier city of the Roman empire. The quickest way to return to Antioch in Syria would have been by the Cilician Gates or by the pass over Mt. Taurus by which Paul and Silas will come to Derbe in the second tour (Ac 15:41-16:1), but difficult to travel in winter. But it was necessary to revisit the churches in Lystra, Iconium, Antioch in Pisidia and to see that they were able to withstand persecution. Paul was a Roman citizen though he had not made use of this privilege as yet for his own protection. Against mob violence it would count for little, but he did not hesitate. Paul had been stoned in Lystra, threatened in Iconium, expelled in Antioch. He shows his wisdom in conserving his work.

14:22 {Confirming} (\epist“rizontes). Late verb (in LXX), in N.T. only in Ac 14:22; 15:32,41, to make more firm, to give additional (\epi) strength. Each time in Acts the word is used concerning these churches. {To continue in the faith} (\emmenein t“i pistei). To remain in with locative, old verb. It is possible that \pistis here has the notion of creed as Paul uses it later (Col 1:23 with \epimen“; 1Ti 5:8). It seems to be here more than trust or belief. These recent converts from heathenism were ill-informed, were persecuted, had broken family and social ties, greatly needed encouragement if they were to hold out. {We must} (\dei h^mfs\). It does not follow from this use of "we" that Luke was present, since it is a general proposition applying to all Christians at all times (2Ti 3:12). Luke, of course, approved this principle. Knowling asks why Timothy may not have told Luke about Paul's work. It all sounds like quotation of Paul's very language. Note the change of construction here after \parakalountes\ (infinitive of indirect command, \emmenein\, but \hoti dei\, indirect assertion). They needed the right understanding of persecution as we all do. Paul frankly warned these new converts in this heathen environment of the many tribulations through which they must enter the Kingdom of God (the culmination at last) as he did at Ephesus (Ac 20:20) and as Jesus had done (Joh 16:33). These saints were already converted.

14:23 {And when they had appointed for them elders in every church} (\cheiroton^santes de autois kat' ekkl^sian presbuterous\). They needed also some form of organization, though already churches. Note distributive use of \kata\ with \ekkl^sian\ (2:46; 5:42; Tit 1:5). \Cheirotone^{\ (from \cheirotonos\, extending the hand, \cheir\, hand, and \tein^{\, to stretch) is an old verb that originally meant to vote by show of the hands, finally to appoint with the approval of an assembly that chooses as in 2Co 8:19, and then to appoint without regard to choice as in Josephus (_Ant_. XIII. 2, 2) of the appointment of Jonathan as high priest by Alexander. So in Ac 10:41 the compound \procheiratone^{\ is used of witnesses appointed by God. But the seven (deacons) were first selected by the Jerusalem church and then appointed (\katast^somen\) by the apostles. That is probably the plan contemplated by Paul in his directions to Titus (Tit 1:5) about the choice of elders. It is most likely that this plan was the one pursued by Paul and Barnabas with these churches. They selected the elders in each instance and Paul and Barnabas "ordained" them as we say, though the word \cheirotone^{\ does not mean that. "Elders" were mentioned first in 11:30. Later Paul will give the requirements expected in these "elders" or "bishops" (Php 1:1) as in 1Ti 3:1-7; Tit 1:5-9. It is fairly certain that these elders were chosen to correspond in a general way with the elders in the Jewish synagogue after which the local church was largely copied as to organization and worship. Paul, like Jesus, constantly worshipped and spoke in the synagogues. Already it is plain, as at Antioch in Syria (11:26), that the Christians can no longer count on the use of the Jewish synagogue. They must have an organization of their own. The use of the plural here implies what was true at Philippi (Php 1:1) and Ephesus (Ac 20:17,28) that each church (one in each city) "had its college of elders" (Hackett) as in Jerusalem (21:18). Elder (\presbuteros) was the Jewish name and bishop (\episkopos) the Greek name for the same office. "Those who are called elders in speaking of Jewish communities are called bishops in speaking of Gentile communities" (Hackett). Hovey rightly holds against Hackett that teaching was a normal function of these elders, pastors or bishops as they were variously called (1Ti 3:2; Tit 1:9; 1Co 12:28,30; Eph 4:11). {Had prayed with fasting} (\proseuxamenoi meta n^stei^'n). It was a serious matter, this formal setting apart of these "elders" in the churches. So it was done in a public meeting with prayer and fasting as when Paul and Barnabas were sent forth from Antioch in Syria (13:3) on this mission tour. {They commended them to the Lord} (\parethento autous t^'i kuri^'i). Second aorist middle indicative of \paratith^mi. Old and solemn word, to entrust, to deposit as in a bank (1Ti 1:18; 2Ti 2:2). Cf. \parath^k^ in 1Ti 6:20; 2Ti 1:12,14. It was all that they could now do, to commit them to the Lord Jesus. Jesus used this word on the cross (Lu 22:32). {On whom they had believed} (\eis hon pepisteukeisan). Past perfect indicative (without augment) of \pisteu^'\'. They had "trusted" in Jesus (2Ti 1:12) and Paul now "entrusts" them to him with confidence. It was a solemn and serious occasion in each instance as it always is to set apart men for the ministry. These men may not have been ideal men for this service, but they were the only ones available and they were chosen from the actual membership in each instance, men who knew local conditions and problems.

14:24 {When they had spoken the word in Perga} (\lal^santes en Perg^'i ton logon). Now they stopped and preached in Perga which they had apparently not done before (see 13:13f.). After leaving Antioch they passed on through Pisidia, as if Antioch was not strictly in Pisidia (see on 13:14) and into Pamphylia. They crossed from Perga to Attaleia, the port of Perga, sixteen miles down the Cestus, and capital of Pamphylia, to find a ship for Antioch in Syria. It is now called Adala and for long was the chief harbour of the south coast of Asia Minor. We do not know why they did not revisit Cyprus, perhaps because no permanent Gentile churches were founded there.

14:26 {They sailed away to Antioch} (\apepleusan eis Antiocheian). Effective aorist active indicative of \apople“, to sail off. They had been gone some eighteen months. {They had been committed} (\^san paradedomenoi). Periphrastic past perfect passive of \paradid“mi, old and common verb. High and serious thoughts filled the hearts of these first returned missionaries as they neared home. The grace of God had been with them. They had fulfilled (\epI^r“san) the work to which they had been set apart by the Holy Spirit with the prayers of the Antioch church. They now had a wondrous story to tell.

14:27 {Gathered the church together} (\sunagagontes t^nekkl^sian). Second aorist active participle of \sunag“. It "was the first missionary meeting in history" (Furneaux). It was not hard to get the church together when the news spread that Paul and Barnabas had returned. "The suitability of the Gospel to become the religion of the world had not before been put to the test" (Furneaux). Doubtless many "wise-acres" had predicted failure as they did for William Carey and for Adoniram Judson and Luther Rice. {Rehearsed} (\an^ggellon). Imperfect active. It was a long story for they had many things to tell of God's dealings "with them" (\met' aut“n) for God had been "with them" all the while as Jesus had said he would be (Mt 28:20, \meth' h-m“n). Paul could recount some of the details given later in 2Co 11. {And how} (\kai hoti). Or "and that" in particular, as the upshot of it all. {He had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles} (\^noixen tois ethnesin thuran piste“s). Three times in Paul's Epistles (1Co 16:9; 2Co 2:12; Col 4:3) he employed the metaphor of "door," perhaps a reminiscence of the very language of Paul here. This work in Galatia gained a large place in Paul's heart (Ga 4:14f.). The Gentiles now, it was plain, could enter the kingdom of God (verse 22) through the door of faith, not by law or by circumcision or by heathen philosophy or mythology.

14:28 {And they tarried no little time} (\diatribon de chronon ouk oligon). Imperfect active of \diatrib“, old verb to rub hard, to consume, with accusative of extent of time. It was a happy time of fellowship. The experiment entered upon by the church of Antioch was now a pronounced success. It was at the direct command of the Holy Spirit, but they had prayed for the absent missionaries and rejoiced at their signal success. There is no sign of jealousy on the part of Barnabas when Paul returns as the chief hero of the expedition. A new corner has been turned in the history of Christianity. There is a new centre of Christian activity. What will Jerusalem think of the new developments at Antioch? Paul and Barnabas made no report to Jerusalem.

(Acts: Chapter 14)

15:1 {And certain men came down from Judea} (kai tines katelthontes apo t^hs Ioudaias\). Evidently the party of the circumcision in the church in Jerusalem (11:2) had heard of the spread of the gospel among the Gentiles in Cyprus, Pamphylia, and South Galatia (Phrygia, Pisidia, Lycaonia). Possibly John Mark after his desertion at Perga (13:13) told of this as one of his reasons for coming home. At any rate echoes of the jubilation in Antioch in Syria would be certain to reach Jerusalem. The Judaizers in Jerusalem, who insisted that all the Gentile Christians must become Jews also, had acquiesced in the case of Cornelius and his group (11:1-18) after plain proof by Peter that it was the Lord's doing. But they had not agreed to a formal campaign to turn the exception into the rule and to make Christianity mainly Gentile with a few Jews instead of mainly Jewish with a few Gentiles. Since Paul and Barnabas did not come up to Jerusalem, the leaders among the Judaizers decided to go down to Antioch and attack Paul and Barnabas there. They had volunteered to go without church action in Jerusalem for their activity is disclaimed by the conference (Ac 15:24). In Ga 2:4 Paul with some heat describes these Judaizers as "false brethren, secretly introduced who sneaked in to spy out our liberty." It is reasonably certain that this visit to Jerusalem described in Ga 2:1-10 is the same one as the Jerusalem Conference in Acts 15:5-29 in spite of the effort of Ramsay to identify it with that in 11:29f. Paul in Galatians is not giving a list of his visits to Jerusalem. He is showing his independence of the twelve apostles and his equality with them. He did not see them in 11:29f., but only "the elders." In Ac 15 Luke gives the outward narrative of events, in Ga 2:1-10 Paul shows us the private interview with the apostles when they agreed on their line of conduct toward the Judaizers. In Ga 2:2 by the use of "them" (autois\) Paul seems to refer to the first public meeting in Acts before the private interview that came in between verses 15:5-6. If we recall the difficulty that Peter had on the subject of preaching the gospel to the heathen (10:1-11:18), we can the better understand the attitude of the Judaizers. They were men of sincere convictions without a doubt, but they were obscurantists and unable and unwilling to receive new light from the Lord on a matter that involved their racial and social prejudices. They recalled that Jesus himself had been circumcised and that he had said to the Syro-Phoenician woman that he had come only save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (Mt 15:24ff.). They argued that Christ had not repealed circumcision. So one of the great religious controversies of all time was begun, that between spiritual religion and ritualistic or ceremonial religion. It is with us yet with baptism taking the place of circumcision. These self-appointed champions of circumcision for Gentile Christians were deeply in earnest. {Taught the brethren} (\edidaskon tous adelphous). Inchoative imperfect active, began to teach and kept it up. Their attitude was one of supercilious superiority. They probably resented the conduct of Barnabas, who, when sent by the Church in Jerusalem to investigate the conversion of the Greeks in Antioch (11:20-26), did not return and report till a strong church had been established there with the help of Saul and only then with a big collection to confuse the issue. Paul and Barnabas were on hand, but the Judaizers persisted in their efforts to force their views on the church in Antioch. It was a crisis. {Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses, ye cannot be saved} (\ean me peritm^th^te t^i ethei M^use^s, ou dunasthe s^th^nai). There was the dictum of the Judaizers to the Gentiles. Paul and Barnabas had been circumcised. This is probably the precise language employed, for they spoke in Greek to these Greeks. It is a condition of the third class (undetermined, but with prospect of being determined, \ean\ plus the first aorist passive subjunctive of \peritemn^{\}). There was thus hope held out for them, but only on condition that they be circumcised. The issue was sharply drawn. The associative instrumental case (\t^i ethei) is customary. "Saved" (\s^th^nai) here is the Messianic salvation. This doctrine denied the efficacy of the work of Christ.

15:2 {When Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and questioning with them} (\Genomen^s stase^s kai z^t^se^s ouk olig^s t^i Paul^i kai Barnabfi pros autous). Genitive absolute of second aorist middle participle of \ginomai, genitive singular agreeing with first substantive \stase^s. Literally, "No little (litotes for much) strife and questioning coming to Paul and Barnabas (dative case) with them " (\pros autous\, face to face with them). Paul and Barnabas were not willing to see this Gentile church brow-beaten and treated as heretics by these self-appointed regulators of Christian orthodoxy from Jerusalem. The work had developed under the leadership of Paul and Barnabas and they accepted full responsibility for it and stoutly resisted these Judaizers to the point of sedition (riot, outbreak in Lu 23:25; Ac 19:40) as in 23:7. There is no evidence that the Judaizers had any supporters in the Antioch church so that they failed utterly to make any impression. Probably these Judaizers compelled Paul to think through afresh his whole gospel of grace and so they did Paul and the world a real service. If the Jews like Paul had to believe, it was plain that there was no virtue in circumcision (Ga 2:15-21). It is not true that the early Christians had no disagreements. They had selfish avarice with Ananias and Sapphira, murmuring over the gifts to the widows, simony in the case of Simon Magus, violent objection to work in Caesarea, and now open strife over a great doctrine (grace vs. legalism). {The brethren appointed} (\etaxan). "The brethren" can be supplied from verse 1 and means the church in Antioch. The church clearly saw that the way to remove this deadlock between the Judaizers and Paul and Barnabas was to consult the church in Jerusalem to which the Judaizers belonged. Paul and Barnabas had won in Antioch. If they can win in Jerusalem, that will settle the matter. The Judaizers will be answered in their own church for which they are presuming to speak. The verb \etaxan (\tass, to arrange) suggests a formal appointment by the church in regular assembly. Paul (Ga 2:2) says that he went up by revelation (\kat' apokalupsin), but surely that is not contradictory to the action of the church. {Certain others of them} (\tinas allous). Certainly Titus (Ga 2:1,3), a Greek and probably a brother of Luke who is not mentioned in Acts. Rackham thinks that Luke was in the number. {The apostles and elders} (\tous apostolous kai presbuterous). Note one article for both (cf. "the apostles and the brethren" in 11:1). "Elders" now (11:30) in full force. The apostles have evidently returned now to the city after the death of Herod Agrippa I stopped the persecution.

15:3 {They therefore} (\hoi men oun). Luke's favourite method of resumptive narrative as we have seen (11:19, etc.), demonstrative \hoi with \men (indeed) and \oun (therefore). {Being brought on their way by the church} (\propemphentes hupo t's ekkl^sias). First aorist passive participle of \propemp, old verb, to send forward under escort as a mark of honour as in 20:38; 21:5; 3Jo 1:6. They were given a grand send-off by the church in Antioch. {Passed through} (\di^rchonto). Imperfect middle describing the triumphal procession through both (\te kai) Phoenicia and Samaria. {The conversion} (\t^nepistroph^n). The turning. {They caused great joy} (\epoioun charan megal^n). Imperfect active. They were raising a constant paean of praise as they proceeded toward Jerusalem. Probably the Judaizers had gone on or kept still.

15:4 {Were received} (\paredechth^san). First aorist passive indicative of \paradechomai, old verb, to receive, to welcome. Here it was a public reception for Paul and Barnabas provided by the whole church including the apostles and elders, at which an opportunity was given to hear the story of Paul and Barnabas about God's dealings with them among the Gentiles. This first public meeting is referred to by Paul in Ga 2:2 "I set before them (\autois) the gospel, etc."

15:5 {But there rose up} (\exanest^san de). Second aorist active indicative (\intransitive). Note both \ex and \an. These men rose up out of the crowd at a critical moment. They were believers in Christ (\pepisteukotes, having believed), but were still members of "the sect of the Pharisees" (\t^s haireses t^"n Pharisai^"n). Evidently they still held to the Pharisaic narrowness shown in the attack on Peter (11:2f.). Note the dogmatism of their "must" (\dei) after the opposition of Paul and Barnabas to their "except" (\ean me) at Antioch (15:1). They are unconvinced and expected to carry the elders with them. Codex Bezae says that they had appealed to the elders (15:2,5). At any rate they have made the issue in open meeting at the height of the jubilation. It is plain from verse 6 that this meeting was adjourned, for another gathering came together then. It is here that the private conference of which Paul speaks in Ga 2:1-10 took place. It was Paul's chance to see the leaders in Jerusalem (Peter, James, and John) and he won them over to his view of Gentile liberty from the Mosaic law so that the next public conference (Ac 15:6-29) ratified heartily the views of Paul, Barnabas, Peter, James, and John. It was a diplomatic triumph of the first order and saved Christianity from the bondage of Jewish ceremonial sacramentalism. So far as we know this is the only time that Paul and John met face to face, the great spirits in Christian history after Jesus our Lord. It is a bit curious to see men saying today that Paul surrendered about Titus and had him circumcised for the sake of peace, the very opposite of what he says in Galatians, "to whom I yielded, no not for an hour." Titus as a Greek was a red flag to the Judaizers and to the compromisers, but Paul stood his ground.

15:6 {Were gathered together} (\sun^chth^san). First aorist (effective) passive indicative. The church is not named here as in verse 4, but we know from verses 12-22 that the whole church came together this time also along with the apostles and elders. {Of this matter} (\peri tou logou toutou). Same idiom in 8:21; 19:38. They realized the importance of the issue.

15:7 {When there had been much questioning} (\poll^s z^t^se^s genomen^s). Genitive absolute with second aorist middle participle of \ginomai. Evidently the Judaizers were given full opportunity to air all their grievances and objections. They were allowed plenty of time and there was no effort to shut off debate or to rush anything through the meeting. {Peter rose up} (\anastas Petros). The wonder was that he had waited so long. Probably Paul asked him to do so. He was the usual spokesman for the apostles and his activities in Jerusalem were well-known. In particular his experience at Caesarea (Ac 10) had caused trouble here in Jerusalem from this very same party of the circumcision (Ac 11:1-18). It was fitting that Peter should speak. This is the last time that Peter appears in the Acts. {A good while ago} (\aph' h^mer^"n archai^"n). From ancient days. The adjective \archaios is from \arch^, beginning, and its actual age is a matter of relativity. So Mnason (Ac 21:16) is termed "an ancient disciple." It was probably a dozen years since God "made choice" (\exelexato) to speak by Peter's mouth to Cornelius and the other Gentiles in Caesarea. His point is that what Paul and Barnabas have reported is nothing new. The Judaizers made objection then as they are doing now.

15:8 {Which knoweth the heart} (\kardiogn^"st^s). Late word from \kardia (heart) and \gn^"st^s (known, \gin^"sk^"). In the N.T. only here and 1:24 which see. {Giving them the Holy Spirit} (\dous to pneuma to hagion). And before their baptism. This was the Lord's doing. They had accepted (11:18) this witness of God then and it was true now of these other Gentile converts.

15:9 {He made no distinction between us and them} (\outhen diekrinen metaxu h^m^"n te kai aut^"n). He distinguished nothing (first aorist active ind.) between (both \dia and \metaxu) both (te kai) us and them. In the matter of faith and conversion God treated us Jews as heathen and the heathen as Jews. {Cleansing their hearts by faith} (\t^i pistei katharisas tas kardias aut^“n). Not by works nor by ceremonies. Peter here has a thoroughly Pauline and Johannine idea of salvation for all both Jew and Greek. Cf. 10:15.

15:10 {Why tempt ye God?} (\ti peirazete ton theon;). By implying that God had made a mistake this time, though right about Cornelius. It is a home-thrust. They were refusing to follow the guidance of God like the Israelites at Massah and Meribah (Ex 17:7; De 6:16; 1Co 10:9). {That ye should put} (\epitheinai). Second aorist active infinitive of \epitith^mi, epexegetic, explaining the tempting. {A yoke upon the neck} (\zugon epi ton trach^lon). Familiar image of oxen with yokes upon the necks. Paul's very image for the yoke of bondage of the Mosaic law in Ga 5:1. It had probably been used in the private interview. Cf. the words of Jesus about the Pharisees (Mt 23:4) and how easy and light his own yoke is (Mt 11:30). {Were able to bear} (\ischusamen bastasai). Neither our fathers nor we had strength (\ischu^“) to carry this yoke which the Judaizers wish to put on the necks of the Gentiles. Peter speaks as the spiritual emancipator. He had been slow to see the meaning of God's dealings with him at Joppa and Caesarea, but he has seen clearly by now. He takes his stand boldly with Paul and Barnabas for Gentile freedom.

15:11 {That we shall be saved} (\s^“th^nai). First aorist passive infinitive in indirect discourse after \pisteuomen. More exactly, "We believe that we are saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus in like manner as they also." This thoroughly Pauline note shows that whatever hopes the Judaizers had about Peter were false. His doctrine of grace is as clear as a bell. He has lifted his voice against salvation by ceremony and ritualism. It was a great deliverance.

15:12 {Kept silence} (\esig^sen). Ingressive first aorist active of \siga^“, old verb, to hold one's peace. All the multitude became silent after Peter's speech and because of it. {Hearkened} (\^kouon). Imperfect active of \akou^“, descriptive of the rapt attention, were listening. {Unto Barnabas and Paul} (\Barnaba kai Paulou). Note placing Barnabas before Paul as in verse 25, possibly because in Jerusalem Barnabas was still better known than Paul. {Rehearsing} (\ex^goumen^“n). Present middle participle of \ex^geomai, old verb, to go through or lead out a narrative of events as in Lu 24:35; Ac 10:8 which see. Three times (14:27; 15:4,12) Paul is described as telling the facts about their mission work, facts more eloquent than argument (Page). One of the crying needs in the churches is fuller knowledge of the facts of mission work and progress with enough detail to give life and interest. The signs and wonders which God had wrought among the Gentiles set the seal of approval on the work done through (\dia) Barnabas and Paul. This had been Peter's argument about Cornelius (11:17). This same verb (\ex^g^sato) is used by James in verse 14 referring to Peter's speech.

15:13 {After they had held their peace} (\meta to sig^sai autous). Literally, "after the becoming silent (ingressive aorist active of the articular infinitive) as to them (Barnabas and Paul, accusative of general reference)." {James answered} (\apekrith^ Iak^bos). First aorist passive (deponent) indicative. It was expected that James, as President of the Conference, would speak last. But he wisely waited to give every one an opportunity to speak. The challenge of the Judaizers called for an opinion from James. Furneaux thinks that he may have been elected one of the twelve to take the place of James the brother of John since Paul (Ga 1:19) calls him apostle. More likely he was asked to preside because of his great gifts and character as chief of the elders.

15:14 {Hearken unto me} (\akousate mou). Usual appeal for attention. James was termed James the Just and was considered a representative of the Hebraic as opposed to the Hellenistic wing of the Jewish Christians (Ac 6:1). The Judaizers had doubtless counted on him as a champion of their view and did later wrongfully make use of his name against Peter at Antioch (Ga 2:12). There was instant attention when James began to speak. {Symeon} (\Sume^'n). The Aramaic form of Simon as in 2Pe 2:1. This little touch would show his affinities with the Jewish Christians (not the Judaizers). This Aramaic form is used also in Lu 2:25,34 of the old prophet in the temple. Possibly both forms (Symeon, Aramaic, and Simon, Greek) were current in Jerusalem. {How} (\kath^'s). Strictly, "according as," here like \hos in indirect discourse somewhat like the epexegetic or explanatory use in 3Jo 1:3. {First} (\pr^'ton). Told by Peter in verse 7. James notes, as Peter did, that this experience of Barnabas and Paul is not the beginning of work among the Gentiles. {Did visit} (\epeskepsato\). First aorist middle indicative of \episkeptomai\, old verb to look upon, to look after, provide for. This same verb occurs in Jas 1:27 and is one of various points of similarity between this speech of James in Acts and the Epistle of James as shown by Mayor in his _Commentary on James_. Somehow Luke may have obtained notes of these various addresses. {To take from the Gentiles a people for his name} (\labein ex ethn“n laon t“i onomati autou\). Bengel calls this _egregium paradoxon_, a chosen people (\laon\) out of the Gentiles (\ethn“n\). This is what is really involved in what took place at Caesarea at the hands of Peter and the campaign of Barnabas and Paul from Antioch. But such a claim of God's purpose called for proof from Scripture to convince Jews and this is precisely what James undertakes to give. This new Israel from among the Gentiles is one of Paul's great doctrines as set forth in Ga 3; Ro 9-11. Note the use of God's "name" here for "the Israel of God" (Ga 6:16).

15:15 {To this agree} (\tout“i sumph“nousin\). Associative instrumental case (\tout“i\) after \sumph“nousin\ (voice together with, symphony with, harmonize with), from \sumph“ne“, old verb seen already in Mt 18:19; Lu 5:36; Ac 5:9 which see. James cites only Am 9:11,12 from the LXX as an example of "the words of the prophets" (\hoi logoi t“n proph“t“n\) to which he refers on this point. The somewhat free quotation runs here through verses 16-18 of Ac 15 and is exceedingly pertinent. The Jewish rabbis often failed to understand the prophets as Jesus showed. The passage in Amos refers primarily to the restoration of the Davidic empire, but also the Messiah's Kingdom (the throne of David his father, " Lu 1:32).

15:16 {I will build again} (\anoikodom“s“\). Here LXX has \anast“s“. Compound (\ana\, up or again) of \oikodome“, the verb used by Jesus in Mt 16:18 of the general church or kingdom as here which see. {The tabernacle of David} (\t“n sk“n“n Daueid\), a poetical figure of the throne of David (2Sa 7:12) now "the fallen tent" (\t“n pept“kuian\), perfect active participle of \pipt“, state of completion. {The ruins thereof} (\ta katestrammena aut“s\). Literally, "the ruined portions of it." Perfect passive participle of \katastreph“, to turn down. It is a desolate picture of the fallen, torn down tent of David. {I will let it up} (\anorth“s“\). Old verb from \anortho“ (\ana, orthos\), to set upright. See on Lu 3:13 of the old woman whose crooked back was set straight.

15:17 {That the residue of men may seek after the Lord} (\hop“s an ekzˆtˆs“sin hoi kataloipoi tˆn anthr“pˆn ton kurion\). The use of \hop“s\ with the subjunctive (effective aorist active) to express purpose is common enough and note \an\ for an additional tone of uncertainty. On the rarity of \an\ with \hop“s\ in the _Koin,_ see Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 986. Here the Gentiles are referred to. The Hebrew text is quite different, "that they may possess the remnant of Edom." Certainly the LXX suits best the point that James is making. But the closing words of this verse point definitely to the Gentiles both in the Hebrew and the LXX, "all the Gentiles" (\panta ta ethn^). Another item of similarity between this speech and the Epistle of James is in the phrase "my name is called" (\epikeklˆtai to onoma mou) and Jas 2:7. The purpose of God, though future, is expressed by this perfect passive indicative \epikeklˆtai\ from \epi-kale“\, to call on. It is a Jewish way of speaking of those who worship God.

15:18 {From the beginning of the world} (\ap' ai“nos\). Or, "from of old." James adds these words, perhaps with a reminiscence of Isa 45:21. His point is that this purpose of God, as set forth in Amos, is an old one. God has an Israel outside of and beyond the Jewish race, whom he will make his true "Israel" and so there is no occasion for surprise in the story of God's dealings with the Gentiles as told by Barnabas and Paul. God's eternal purpose of grace includes all who call upon his name in every land and people (Isa 2:1; Mic 4:1). This larger and richer purpose and plan of God was one of the mysteries which Paul will unfold in the future (Ro 16:25; Eph 3:9). James sees it clearly now. God is making it known (\poi“n tauta gn“sta\), if they will only be willing to see and understand. It was a great deliverance that James had made and it exerted a profound influence on the assembly.

15:19 {Wherefore} (\dio\). "Because of which," this plain purpose of God as shown by Amos and Isaiah. {My judgment is} (\eg“krin“\). Note expression of \eg“\, {I give my judgment}. (\Ego censeo\). James sums up the case as President of the Conference in a masterly fashion and with that consummate wisdom for which he is noted. It amounts to a resolution for the adoption by the assembly as happened (verse 33). {That we trouble not} (\m^ parenochlein\). Present active infinitive with \m^ in an indirect command (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1046) of \parenochle“, a common late verb, occurring here alone in the N.T. This double compound (\para, en\) is from the old compound \enochle“\ (\en\ and \ochlos\, crowd, annoyance) seen in Lu 6:18; Heb 12:15, and means to cause trouble beside (\para\) one or in a matter. This is the general point of James which he explains further concerning "those who are turning from the Gentiles unto God," the very kind of people referred to in Amos.

15:20 {But that we write unto them} (\alla episteilai autois\).

By way of contrast (\alla\). First aorist active infinitive of \epistell“\, old verb to send to one (message, letter, etc.). Our word \epistle\ (\epistol“\ as in verse 30) comes from this verb. In the N.T. only here, He 13:22, and possibly Ac 21:25.

{That they abstain from} (\tou apechesthai\). The genitive of the articular infinitive of purpose, present middle (direct) of \apech“\, old verb, to hold oneself back from. The best old MSS. do not have \apo\, but the ablative is clear enough in what follows. James agrees with Peter in his support of Paul and Barnabas in their contention for Gentile freedom from the Mosaic ceremonial law. The restrictions named by James affect the moral code that applies to all (idolatry, fornication, murder).

Idolatry, fornication and murder were the outstanding sins of paganism then and now (Re 22:15). Harnack argues ably against the genuineness of the word \pniktou\ (strangled) which is absent from D Irenaeus, Tertullian, Cyprian. It is a nice point, though the best MSS. have it in accord with Le 17:10-16. The problem is whether the words were added because "blood" was understood as not "murder," but a reference to the Mosaic regulation or whether it was omitted to remove the ceremonial aspect and make it all moral and ethical. The Western text omits the word also in verse 29. But with the word retained here and in verse 29 the solution of James is not a compromise, though there is a wise concession to Jewish feeling. {Pollutions of idols}

(\alig^{mat}“n\). From \aligē“\ only in the LXX and this substantive nowhere else. The word refers to idolatrous practices (pollutions) and things sacrificed to idols (\eid“luth“n\) in verse 29, not to sacrificial meat sold in the market (1Co 10:27), a matter not referred to here. Cf. Le 17:1-9. All the four items in the position of James (accepting \pniktou\) are mentioned in Le 17,18.

15:21 {For Moses} (\M“us’s gar\). A reason why these four necessary things (verse 28) are named. In every city are synagogues where rabbis proclaim (k^h russontas) these matters. Hence the Gentile Christians would be giving constant offence to neglect them. The only point where modern Christian sentiment would object would be about "things strangled" and "blood" in the sense of any blood left in the animals, though most Christians probably agree with the feeling of James in objecting to blood in the food. If "blood" is taken to be "murder," that difficulty vanishes. Moses will suffer no loss for these Gentile Christians are not adherents of Judaism.

15:22 {Then it seemed good} (Tote edoxen). First aorist active indicative of \doke“\ . A regular idiom at the beginning of decrees. This Eirenicon of James commended itself to the whole assembly. Apparently a vote was taken which was unanimous, the Judaizers probably not voting. The apostles and the elders (tois apostolois kai tois presbuterois, article with each, dative case) probably all vocally expressed their position. {With the whole church} (sun holei tⁱ ekkl^sifi). Probably by acclamation. It was a great victory. But James was a practical leader and he did not stop with speeches and a vote. {To choose men out of their company} (eklezamenous andras ex autⁿ). Accusative case, though dative just before (tois apostolois, etc.), of first aorist middle participle of \ekleg“\, to select. This loose case agreement appears also in \grapsantes in verse 23 and in MSS. in verse 25. It is a common thing in all Greek writers (Paul, for instance), especially in the papyri and in the Apocalypse of John. {Judas called Barsabbas} (Ioudan ton kaloumenon Barsabban). Not otherwise known unless he is a brother of Joseph Barsabbas of 1:23, an early follower of Jesus. The other, Silas, is probably a shortened form of Silvanus (Silouanos, 1Pe 5:12), the companion of Paul in his second mission tour (Ac 15:32,41; 16:25). {Chief men} (h^goumenous). Leaders, leading men (participle from h^ggeomai, to lead).

15:23 {And they wrote} (grapsantes). First aorist active participle of \graph“\ and the nominative as if a principal verb \epempsan had been used instead of \pempasai, the first aorist active infinitive (anacoluthon). This committee of four (Judas, Silas, Barnabas, Paul) carried the letter which embodied the decision of the Conference. This letter is the writing out of the judgment of James and apparently written by him as the President. {The apostles and the elders, brethren} (hoi apostoloi kai hoi presbuteroi, adelphoi). So the oldest and best MSS. without \kai\ (and) before "brethren." This punctuation is probably correct and not "elder brethren." The inquiry had been sent to the apostles and elders (verse 2) though the whole church joined in the welcome (verse 4) and in the decision (verse 22). The apostles and elders send the epistle, but call themselves "brothers to brothers," _Fratres Fratibus Salutem_. "The brothers" (\tois adelphois) addressed (dative case) are of the Gentiles (\ex ethn“n) and those in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, because they were immediately involved. But the decision of this Conference was meant for Gentile Christians everywhere (16:4). {Greeting} (\Chairein). The customary formula in the beginning of letters, the absolute infinitive (usually \chairein) with the nominative absolute also as in Jas 1:1; Ac 23:26 and innumerable papyri (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1902f.).

15:24 {Certain which went from us} (\tines ex h^m“n, Aleph B omit \exelthontes). A direct blow at the Judaizers, put in delicate language (we heard \^kousamen) as if only at Antioch (15:1), and not also in Jerusalem in open meeting (15:5). {Have troubled you with words} (\etaraxan humas logos). What a picture of turmoil in the church in Antioch, words, words, words. Aorist tense of the common verb \tarass“, to agitate, to make the heart palpitate (Joh 14:1,27) and instrumental case of \logos. {Subverting your souls} (\anaskeuazontes tas psuchas hum“n). Present active participle of \anaskeuaz“, old verb (\ana\ and \skeuos, baggage) to pack up baggage, to plunder, to ravage. Powerful picture of the havoc wrought by the Judaizers among the simple-minded Greek Christians in Antioch. {To whom we gave no commandment} (\hois ou diesteilametha). First aorist middle indicative of \diastell“, old verb to draw asunder, to distinguish, to set forth distinctly, to command. This is a flat disclaimer of the whole conduct of the Judaizers in Antioch and in Jerusalem, a complete repudiation of their effort to impose the Mosaic ceremonial law upon the Gentile Christians.

15:25 {It seemed good unto us} (\edoxen h^min). See statement by Luke in verse 22, and now this definite decision is in the epistle itself. It is repeated in verse 28. {Having come to one accord} (\genomenois homothumadon). On this adverb, common in Acts, see on 1:14. But \genomenois clearly means that the final unity was the result of the Conference (private and public talks). The Judaizers are here brushed to one side as the defeated disturbers that they really were who had lacked the courage to vote against the majority. {To choose out men and send them} (\eklexamenois andras pempesai\ A B L, though Aleph C D read \eklexamenous\ as in verse 22). Precisely the same idiom as in verse 22, "having chosen out to send." {With our beloved Barnabas and Paul} (\sun tois agap^tois h^m^"n Barnabfi kai Paul^"i). The verbal adjective \agap^tois (common in the N.T.) definitely sets the seal of warm approval on Barnabas and Paul. Paul (Ga 2:9) confirms this by his statement concerning the right hand of fellowship given.

15:26 {Have hazarded their lives} (\paraded^"kosi tas psuchas aut^"n). Perfect active participle dative plural of \paradid^"mi, old word, to hand over to another, and with \psuchas, to hand over to another their lives. The sufferings of Paul and Barnabas in Pisidia and Lycaonia were plainly well-known just as the story of Judson in Burmah is today. On the use of "name" here see on 3:6.

15:27 {Who themselves also shall tell you the same things by word of mouth} (\kai autous dia logou apaggellontas ta auta). Literally, "they themselves also by speech announcing the same things." The present participle, as here, sometimes is used like the future to express purpose as in 3:26 \eulogounta after \apesteilen and so here \apaggellontas after \apestalkamen (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1128). Judas and Silas are specifically endorsed (perfect active indicative of \apostell^"i) as bearers of the epistle who will also verbally confirm the contents of the letter.

15:28 {To the Holy Spirit and to us} (\t^"i pneumati t^"i hagi^"i kai h^min). Dative case after \edoxen (third example, verses 22,25,28). Definite claim that the church in this action had the guidance of the Holy Spirit. That fact was plain to the church from what had taken place in Caesarea and in this campaign of Paul and Barnabas (verse 8). Jesus had promised that the Holy Spirit would guide them into all truth (Joh 16:13). Even so the church deliberated carefully before deciding. What a blessing it would be if this were always true! But even so the Judaizers are only silenced for the present, not convinced and only waiting for a better day to start over again. {No greater burden} (\m^den pleon baros). The restrictions named did constitute some burden (cf. Mt 20:12), for the old word \baros means weight or heaviness. Morality itself is a restraint upon one's impulses as is all law a prohibition against license.

15:29 {Than these necessary things} (\pl^n tout^n t^n epanagkes\). This old adverb (from \epi\ and \anagk^\) means on compulsion, of necessity. Here only in the N.T. For discussion of these items see on verses 20,21. In comparison with the freedom won this "burden" is light and not to be regarded as a compromise in spite of the arguments of Lightfoot and Ramsay. It was such a concession as any converted Gentile would be glad to make even if "things strangled" be included. This "necessity" was not a matter of salvation but only for fellowship between Jews and Gentiles. The Judaizers made the law of Moses essential to salvation (15:16). {It shall be well with you} (\eu praxete\). Ye shall fare well. A classical idiom used here effectively. The peace and concord in the fellowship of Jews and Gentiles will justify any slight concession on the part of the Gentiles. This letter is not laid down as a law, but it is the judgment of the Jerusalem Christians for the guidance of the Gentiles (16:4) and it had a fine effect at once (15:30-35). Trouble did come later from the Judaizers who were really hostile to the agreement in Jerusalem, but that opposition in no way discredits the worth of the work of this Conference. No sane agreement will silence perpetual and professional disturbers like these Judaizers who will seek to unsettle Paul's work in Antioch, in Corinth, in Galatia, in Jerusalem, in Rome. {Fare ye well} (\Err^*s*the\). _Valete_. Perfect passive imperative of \rh^*n*numi\, to make strong. Common at the close of letters. Be made strong, keep well, fare well. Here alone in the N.T. though some MSS. have it in 23:30.

15:30 {So they} (\hoi men oun\). As in verse 3. {When they were dismissed} (\apoluthentes\). First aorist passive participle of \apolu^n\, common verb to loosen, to dismiss. Possibly (Hackett) religious services were held as in verse 33 (cf. 13:3) and perhaps an escort for part of the way as in verse 3. {The multitude} (\to pl^thos\). Public meeting of the church as in verses 1-3. Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 232) gives illustrations from the inscriptions of the use of \pl^thos\ for official, political, and religious gatherings. The committee formally "delivered" (\eped^kan\) the epistle to the church authorities.

15:31 {When they had read it} (\anagnontes\). Second aorist active participle of \anagin^sk^\. Public reading, of course, to the church. {They rejoiced} (\echar^san\). Second aorist (ingressive) passive indicative of \chair^n^. They burst into exultant joy showing clearly that they did not consider it a weak compromise, but a glorious victory of Gentile liberty. {For the consolation} (\epi t'i parakl'sei\). The encouragement, the cheer in the letter. See \parekalesan\ in verse 32. Consolation and exhortation run into one another in this word.

15:32 {Being themselves also prophets} (\kai autoi proph'tai ontes\). As well as Paul and Barnabas and like Agabus (11:27-30), for-speakers for Christ who justify the commendation in the letter (verse 27) "with many words" (\dia logou pollou\), "with much talk," and no doubt with kindly words concerning the part played at the Conference by Paul and Barnabas. {Confirmed} (\epest'rixan\). See on 14:22. It was a glorious time with no Judaizers to disturb their fellowship as in 1-3.

15:33 {Some time} (\chronon\). Accusative after \poi'santes\, "having done time." How long we do not know.

15:34 {But it seemed good unto Silas to abide there} (\edoxe de Silfi epimeinai autou\). This verse is not in the Revised Version or in the text of Westcott and Hort, being absent from Aleph A B Vulgate, etc. It is clearly an addition to help explain the fact that Silas is back in Antioch in verse 40. But the "some days" of verse 36 afforded abundant time for him to return from Jerusalem. He and Judas went first to Jerusalem to make a report of their mission.

15:35 {Tarried} (\dietribon\). Imperfect active of \diatrib'~, old verb to pass time, seen already in 12:19; 14:3,28. {With many others also} (\meta kai heter'~n poll'~n\). A time of general revival and naturally so after the victory at Jerusalem. It is at this point that it is probable that the sad incident took place told by Paul in Ga 2:11-21. Peter came up to see how things were going in Antioch after Paul's victory in Jerusalem. At first Peter mingled freely with the Greek Christians without the compunctions shown at Caesarea and for which he had to answer in Jerusalem (Ac 11:1-18). Rumours of Peter's conduct reached Jerusalem and the Judaizers saw a chance to reopen the controversy on the line of social customs, a matter not passed on at the Jerusalem Conference. These Judaizers threaten Peter with a new trial and he surrenders and is followed by Barnabas and all the Jewish brethren in Antioch to the dismay of Paul who boldly rebuked Peter and Barnabas and won them back to his view. It was a crisis. Some would even date the Epistle to the Galatians at this time also, an unlikely hypothesis.

15:36 {Let us return now and visit the brethren} (\epistrepsantes de episkeps“metha tous adelphous). Paul takes the initiative as the leader, all the more so if the rebuke to Peter and Barnabas in Ga 2:11-21 had already taken place. Paul is anxious, like a true missionary, to go back to the fields where he has planted the gospel. He uses the hortatory subjunctive (\episkeps“metha) for the proposal (see on 15:14 for this verb). Note the repeated \epi (\epi-strepsantes\ and \episkeps“metha). There is special point in the use of \d^ (shortened form of \^d^), now at this juncture of affairs (cf. 13:2). {How they fare} (\p“s echousin). Indirect question, "how they have it." The precariousness of the life of new converts in pagan lands is shown in all of Paul's Epistles (Furneaux). So he wanted to go city by city (\kata polin pfsan).

15:37 {Was minded to take with them} (\ebouletō sunparalabein). Imperfect middle (\ebouletō), not aorist middle \ebouleusato of the Textus Receptus. Barnabas willed, wished and stuck to it (imperfect tense). \Sunparalabein is second aorist active infinitive of the double compound \sunparalamban“, old verb to take along together with, used already about John Mark in 12:25 and by Paul in Ga 2:1 about Titus. Nowhere else in the N.T. Barnabas used the ingressive aorist in his suggestion.

15:38 {But Paul thought not good to take with them} (\Paulos de ^xiou--m^ sunparalambanein touton). The Greek is far more effective than this English rendering. It is the imperfect active of \axio“, old verb to think meet or right and the present active infinitive of the same verb (\sunparalamban“) with negative used with this infinitive. Literally, "But Paul kept on deeming it wise not to be taking along with them this one." Barnabas looked on it as a simple punctiliar proposal (aorist infinitive), but Paul felt a lively realization of the problem of having a quitter on his hands (present infinitive). Each was insistent in his position (two imperfects). Paul had a definite reason for his view describing John Mark as "him who withdrew from them from Pamphylia" (\ton apostanta ap' aut“n apo Pamphulias). Second aorist active articular participle of \aphist^mi, intransitive use, "the one who stood off from, apostatized from" (our very word "apostasy"). And also as the one who "went not with them to the work" (\kai m^ sunelthonta autois eis to ergon\). At Perga Mark had faced the same task that Paul and Barnabas did, but he flinched and flickered and quit. Paul declined to repeat the experiment with Mark.

15:39 {A sharp contention} (\paroxusmos\). Our very word paroxysm in English. Old word though only twice in the N.T. (here and Heb 10:24), from \paroxun“, to sharpen (\para, oxus\) as of a blade and of the spirit (Ac 17:16; 1Co 13:5). This "son of consolation" loses his temper in a dispute over his cousin and Paul uses sharp words towards his benefactor and friend. It is often so that the little irritations of life give occasion to violent explosions. If the incident in Ga 2:11-21 had already taken place, there was a sore place already that could be easily rubbed. And if Mark also joined with Peter and Barnabas on that occasion, Paul had fresh ground for irritation about him. But there is no way to settle differences about men and we can only agree to disagree as Paul and Barnabas did. {So that they parted asunder from one another} (\h“ste apoch“risth^nai autous ap' all^l“n\). Actual result here stated by \h“ste\ and the first aorist passive infinitive of \apoch“riz“, old verb to sever, to separate, here only and Re 6:4 in the N.T. The accusative of general reference (\autous\) is normal. For construction with \h“ste\ see Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 999f. {And Barnabas took Mark with him and sailed away to Cyprus} (\ton te Barnaban paralabonta ton Markon ekpleusai eis Kupron\). Second infinitival clause \ekpleusai\ after \h“ste\ connected by \te\. The same participle is used here minus \sun, paralabonta\ (second aorist active). Barnabas and Mark sailed out (\ekpleusai\ from \ekple“) from the harbour of Antioch. This is the last glimpse that Luke gives us of Barnabas, one of the noblest figures in the New Testament. Paul has a kindly reference to him in 1Co 9:6. No one can rightly blame Barnabas for giving his cousin John Mark a second chance nor Paul for fearing to risk him again. One's judgment may go with Paul, but one's heart goes with Barnabas. And Mark made good with Barnabas, with Peter (1Pe 5:13) and finally with Paul (Col 4:10; 2Ti 4:11). See my little book on John Mark (_Making Good in the Ministry_). Paul and Barnabas parted in anger and both in sorrow. Paul owed more to Barnabas than to any other man. Barnabas was leaving the greatest spirit of the time and of all times.

15:40 {Chose} (\epilexamenos\). First aorist middle (indirect) participle of \epileg“, choosing for himself, as the successor of Barnabas, not of Mark who had no place in Paul's plans at this time. {Commended} (\paradotheis\). First aorist passive of \paradid“mi\, the same verb employed about Paul and Barnabas (14:26) on their return from the first tour. It is clear now that the sympathy of the church at Antioch is with Paul rather than with Barnabas in the cleavage that has come. The church probably recalled how in the pinch Barnabas flickered and went to the side of Peter and that it was Paul who for the moment stood _Paulus contra mundum_ for Gentile liberty in Christ against the threat of the Judaizers from Jerusalem. Silas had influence in the church in Jerusalem (verse 22) and was apparently a Roman citizen (16:37) also. He is the Silas or Silvanus of the epistles (1Th 1:1; 2Th 1:1; 2Co 1:19; 1Pe 5:12). It is remarkable that Peter mentions both Mark and Silas as with him (1Pe 5:12f.) at the same time.

15:41 {Went through} (\di^rcheto\). Imperfect middle. So Paul went forth on his second mission tour with heart-aches and high hopes mingled together. {Syria and Cilicia} (\t^n Surian kai t^n Kilikian\). He took the opposite course from the first tour, leaving Cyprus to Barnabas and Mark. Probably Paul had established these churches while in Tarsus after leaving Jerusalem (Ac 9:30; Ga 1:21). Paul would go "by the Gulf of Issus through the Syrian Gates, a narrow road between steep rocks and the sea, and then inland, probably past Tarsus and over Mt. Taurus by the Cilician gates" (Page). This second tour will occupy Luke's story in Acts through 18:22.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

16:1 {And he came also to Derbe and Lystra} (\kat^nt^sen de kai eis Derb^h kai eis Lustran). First aorist active of \katanta^“\, late verb to come down to, to arrive at. He struck Derbe first of the places in the first tour which was the last city reached then. {Timothy} (\Timotheos). Apparently a native of Lystra ("there," \ekei), his Hebrew mother named Eunice and grandmother Lois (2Ti 1:5) and his Greek father's name not known. He may have been a proselyte, but not necessarily so as Timothy was taught the Scriptures by his mother and grandmother (2Ti 3:15), and, if a proselyte, he would have had Timothy circumcised. It is idle to ask if Paul came on purpose to get Timothy to take Mark's place. Probably Timothy was about eighteen years of age, a convert of Paul's former visit a few years before (1Ti 1:2) and still young twelve years later (1Ti 4:12). Paul loved him devotedly (1Ti 1:3; 5:23; 2Ti 3:15; Php 2:19f.). It is a glorious discovery to find a real young preacher for Christ's work.

16:2 {Was well reported of} (\emartureito). Imperfect passive. It was a continuous witness that was borne the young disciple both in his home town of Lystra and in Derbe. Already he had so borne himself that his gifts and graces for the ministry were recognized. It is a wise precaution that the approval of the local church is necessary for the licensing and the ordaining of a preacher. If God has called a man for the work signs of it will be manifest to others.

16:3 {Him would Paul have to go forth with him} (\touton^thel^sen ho Paulos sun aut^i exelthein). This one (note emphatic position) Paul wanted (first aorist active indicative of \thel^“\ with temporal augment as if from \ethel^“\ the old form). Here was a gifted young man who was both Jew and Greek. {He took and circumcised him} (\lab^h n perietemen auton). Any one could perform this rite. Paul had stoutly resisted circumcision in the case of Titus, a pure Greek (Ga 2:3,5), because the whole principle of Gentile liberty was at stake. But Timothy was both Jew and Greek and would continually give offence to the Jews with no advantage to the cause of Gentile freedom. So here for the sake of expediency, "because of the Jews" (\dia tous Ioudaious), Paul voluntarily removed this stumbling-block to the ministry of Timothy. Otherwise Timothy could not have been allowed to preach in the synagogues. _Idem non est semper idem_. But Timothy's case was not the case of Titus. Here it was a question of efficient service, not an essential of salvation. Hovey notes that Timothy was circumcised because of Jewish unbelievers, not because of Jewish believers. {Was a Greek} (\Hell^n hup^rchen). Imperfect active in indirect assertion where ordinarily the present \huparchei would be retained, possibly indicating that his father was no longer living.

16:4 {They delivered them} (\paredidosan autois). Imperfect active, kept on delivering to them in city after city. This is a proof of Paul's loyalty to the Jerusalem compact (Knowling). The circumcision of Timothy would indicate also that the points involved were under discussion and that Paul felt no inconsistency in what he did. {The decrees} (\ta dogmata). Old word from \doke, to give an opinion. It is used of public decrees of rulers (Lu 2:1; Ac 17:7), of the requirements of the Mosaic law (Col 2:14), and here of the regulations or conclusions of the Jerusalem Conference. Silas was with Paul and his presence gave added dignity to the passing out of the decrees, a charter of Gentile freedom, since he was one of the committee from Jerusalem to Antioch (15:22,27,32). {Which had been ordained} (\ta kekrimena). Perfect passive articular participle of \krin, to judge, emphasizing the permanence of the conclusions reached by the apostles and elders in Jerusalem. {For to keep} (\phulassein). This present active infinitive likewise accents that it is a charter of liberty for continual living, not a temporary compromise.

16:5 {Were strengthened} (\estereounto). Imperfect passive of \stereo, old verb to make firm and solid like the muscles (Ac 3:7,16), these three the only examples in the N.T. {Increased} (\eperisseuon). Imperfect active of the old and common verb \perisseu from \perissos (overplus). The blessing of God was on the work of Paul, Silas, and Timothy in the form of a continuous revival.

16:6 {The region of Phrygia and Galatia} (\t^n Phrugian kai Galatik^n ch^ran). This is probably the correct text with one article and apparently describes one "Region" or District in The Province of Galatia which was also Phrygian (the old-ethnographic name with which compare the use of Lycaonia in 14:6). Strictly speaking Derbe and Lystra, though in the Province of Galatia, were not Phrygian, and so Luke would here be not resumptive of the record in verses 1-5; but a reference to the country around Iconium and Antioch in Pisidia in North Galatia is not included. This verse is hotly disputed at every point by the advocates of the North Galatian theory as represented by Chase and the South Galatian theory by Ramsay. Whatever is true in regard to the language of Luke here and in 18:23, it is still possible for Paul in Ga 1:2 to use the term Galatia of the whole province of that name which could, in fact, apply to either South or North Galatia or to both. He could, of course, use it also in the ethnographic sense of the real Gauls or Celts who dwelt in North Galatia. Certainly the first tour of Paul and Barnabas was in the Province of Galatia though touching only the Regions of Pisidia, Phrygia, and Lycaonia, which province included besides the Gauls to the north. In this second tour Lycaonia has been already touched (Derbe and Lystra) and now Phrygia. The question arises why Luke here and in 18:23 adds the term "of Galatia" (Galatikⁿ) though not in 13:14 (Pisidian Antioch) nor in 14:6 (cities of Lycaonia). Does Luke mean to use "of Galatia" in the same ethnographic sense as "of Phrygia" or does he here add the province (Galatia) to the name of the Region (Phrygia)? In itself either view is possible and it really matters very little except that the question is raised whether Paul went into the North Galatian Region on this occasion or later (18:23). He could have done so and the Epistle be addressed to the churches of South Galatia, North Galatia, or the province as a whole. But the Greek participle κ^ατα^νυ^νθ^ην^{τες} ("having been forbidden") plays a part in the argument that cannot be overlooked whether Luke means to say that Paul went north or not. This aorist passive participle of κ^ατα^νυ^νθ^ημι, to hinder, can only express simultaneous or antecedent action, not subsequent action as Ramsay argues. No example of the so-called subsequent use of the aorist participle has ever been found in Greek as all Greek grammarians agree (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 860-63, 1112-14). The only natural meaning of κ^ατα^νυ^νθ^ην^{τες} is that Paul with Silas and Timothy "passed through the region of Phrygia and Galatia" because they were hindered by the Holy Spirit from speaking the word in Asia (the Province of Asia of which Ephesus was the chief city and west of Derbe and Lystra). This construction implies that the country called "the region of Phrygia and Galatia" is not in the direct line west toward Ephesus. What follows in verse

7 throws further light on the point.

16:7 {Over against Mysia} (\kata tⁿ Musian). This was an ill-defined region rather north and west of Phrygia. The Romans finally absorbed most of it in the Province of Asia. {They assayed to go into Bithynia} (\epeirazon eis tⁿ Bithunian poreuth^{nai}). Conative imperfect of \peiraz“ and ingressive aorist passive infinitive of \poreuomai. Now Bithynia is northeast of Mysia and north of Galatia (province). Clearly Luke means to say that Paul had, when hindered by the Holy Spirit from going west into Asia, gone north so as to come in front of Bithynia. This journey would take him directly through Phrygia and the North Galatian country (the real Gauls or Celts). This is, to my mind, the strongest argument for the North Galatian view in these verses 6,7. The grammar and the topography bring Paul right up to Bithynia (north of the old Galatia). It is verses 6,7 that make me pause before accepting the plausible arguments of Ramsay for the South Galatian theory. In itself the problem is nothing like so important or so determinative as he makes it. But shall we smash Luke's grammar to pieces to bolster up a theory of criticism? {And the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not} (\kai ouk eiasen autous to pneuma I^{sou}). The same Spirit who in verse 6 had forbidden going into Asia now closed the door into Bithynia. This expression occurs nowhere else, but we have the spirit of Christ (Ro 8:9) and the Spirit of Jesus Christ (Php 1:19). \Eiasen is first aorist active indicative of \ea“, old verb to allow.

16:8 {Passing by Mysia} (\parelthontes tⁿ Musian). Literally, passing alongside or skirting Mysia, neglecting it without preaching there. Strictly they passed through part of it to reach Troas. {To Troas} (\eis Troiada). This city, named Alexandria Troas after Alexander the Great, was the seaport of Mysia, though a Roman colony and not counted as part of either Asia or Bithynia. New Ilium, on the site of the old Troy, was four miles farther north. It was the place to take ship for Philippi. Twice again Paul will be here (2Co 2:12; Ac 20:6).

16:9 {A vision} (\horama). Old word, eleven times in Acts, once in Mt 17:9. Twice Paul had been hindered by the Holy Spirit from going where he wanted to go. Most men would have gone back home with such rebuffs, but not so Paul. Now the call is positive and not negative, to go "far hence to the Gentiles" (22:21). He had little dreamed of such a call when he left Antioch. Paul's frequent visions always came at real crises in his life. {A man of Macedonia} (\an^r Maked^'n). Ramsay follows Renan in the view that this was Luke with whom Paul had conversed about conditions in Macedonia. Verse 10 makes it plain that Luke was now in the party, but when he joined them we do not know. Some hold that Luke lived at Antioch in Syria and came on with Paul and Silas, others that he joined them later in Galatia, others that he appeared now either as Paul's physician or new convert. Ramsay thinks that Philippi was his home at this time. But, whatever is true about Luke, the narrative must not be robbed of its supernatural aspect (10:10; 22:17). {Was standing} (\^n hest^'s). Second perfect active participle of \hist^mi, intransitive, periphrastic imperfect. Vivid picture. {Help us} (\bo^th^son h^min). Ingressive first aorist active imperative of \bo^the^' (\bo^, the^'), to run at a cry, to help. The man uses the plural for all including himself. It was the cry of Europe for Christ.

16:10 {We sought} (\ez^t^samen). This sudden use of the plural, dropped in 17:1 when Paul leaves Philippi, and resumed in 20:5 when Paul rejoins Luke in Philippi, argues conclusively that Luke, the author, is in the party ("we" portions of Acts) and shows in a writer of such literary skill as Luke that he is not copying a document in a blundering sort of way. Paul told his vision to the party and they were all ready to respond to the call. {Concluding} (\sunbibazontes). A very striking word, present active participle of \sunbibaz^', old verb to make go together, to coalesce or knit together, to make this and that agree and so to conclude. Already in 9:22 of Paul's preaching. This word here gives a good illustration of the proper use of the reason in connection with revelation, to decide whether it is a revelation from God, to find out what it means for us, and to see that we obey the revelation when understood. God had called them to preach to the Macedonians. They had to go.

16:11 {Setting sail} (\anachthentes). Same word in 13:13 which see. {We made a straight course} (\euthudrom^samen). First aorist active indicative of compound verb \euthudrome^' (in Philo) from adjective \euthudromos (in Strabo), running a straight course (\euthus, dromos). In the N.T. only here and 21:1. It is a nautical term for sailing before the wind. Luke has a true feeling for the sea. {To Samothrace} (\eis Samothrfik^'n). A small island in the Aegean about halfway between Troas and Neapolis. {The day following} (\t^i epious^i). Locative case of time with \h^merfi (day) to be supplied (7:26; 20:15; 21:18; 23:11). With adverse winds it took five days to make the run of 125 miles (20:6). {To Neapolis} (\eis Nean Polin). To New Town (Newton, Naples, Neapolis). The port of Philippi ten miles distant, Thracian, but reckoned as Macedonian after Vespasian.

16:12 {To Philippi} (\eis Philippous). The plural like \Ath^nai (Athens) is probably due to separate sections of the city united (Winer-Moulton, _Grammar_, p. 220). The city (ancient name Krenides or Wells) was renamed after himself by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great. It was situated about a mile east of the small stream Gangites which flows into the river Strymon some thirty miles away. In this valley the Battle of Philippi was fought B.C. 42 between the Second Triumvirate (Octavius, Antonius, Lepidus) and Brutus and Cassius. In memory of the victory Octavius made it a colony (\kol^nia) with all the privileges of Roman citizenship, such as freedom from scourging, freedom from arrest save in extreme cases, and the right of appeal to the emperor. This Latin word occurs here alone in the N.T. Octavius planted here a colony of Roman veterans with farms attached, a military outpost and a miniature of Rome itself. The language was Latin. Here Paul is face to face with the Roman power and empire in a new sense. He was a new Alexander, come from Asia to conquer Europe for Christ, a new Caesar to build the Kingdom of Christ on the work of Alexander and Caesar. One need not think that Paul was conscious of all that was involved in destiny for the world. Philippi was on the Egnatian Way, one of the great Roman roads, that ran from here to Dyrrachium on the shores of the Adriatic, a road that linked the east with the west. {The first of the district} (\pr^t^s meridos). Philippi was not the first city of Macedonia nor does Luke say so. That honour belonged to Thessalonica and even Amphipolis was larger than Philippi. It is not clear whether by \meris Luke means a formal division of the province, though the _Koin,_ has examples of this geographical sense (papyri). There is no article with \pr^t^s and Luke may not mean to stress unduly the position of Philippi in comparison with Amphipolis. But it was certainly a leading city of this district of Macedonia. {We were tarrying} (\^men diatribontes). Periphrastic imperfect active.

16:13 {By a river side} (\para potamon). The little river

Gangites (or Gargites) was one mile west of the town. Philippi as a military outpost had few Jews. There was evidently no synagogue inside the city, but "without the gates" (\ex“ tˆs pulˆs) they had noticed an enclosure "where we supposed" (\hou enomizomen, correct text, imperfect active), probably as they came into the city, "was a place of prayer" (\proscuchˆn einai). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect discourse. \Proseuchˆ is common in the LXX and the N.T. for the act of prayer as in Ac 2:42 then for a place of prayer either a synagogue (III Macc. 7:20) or more often an open air enclosure near the sea or a river where there was water for ceremonial ablutions. The word occurs also in heathen writers for a place of prayer (Schurer, _Jewish People_, Div. II, Vol. II, p. 69, Engl. Tr.). Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 222) quotes an Egyptian inscription of the third century B.C. with this sense of the word and one from Panticapaeum on the Black Sea of the first century A.D. (_Light from the Ancient East_, p. 102). Juvenal (III. 296) has a sneering reference to the Jewish \proseucha. Josephus (_Ant_. XIV. 10, 23) quotes a decree of Halicarnassus which allowed the Jews "to make their prayers (\proseuchas) on the seashore according to the custom of their fathers." There was a synagogue in Thessalonica, but apparently none in Amphipolis and Apollonia (Ac 17:1). The rule of the rabbis required ten men to constitute a synagogue, but here were gathered only a group of women at the hour of prayer. In pioneer days in this country it was a common thing to preach under bush arbours in the open air. John Wesley and George Whitfield were great open air preachers. Paul did not have an inspiring beginning for his work in Europe, but he took hold where he could. The conjecture was correct. It was a place of prayer, but only a bunch of women had come together (\tais sunelthousais gunaixin), excuse enough for not preaching to some preachers, but not to Paul and his party. The "man of Macedonia" turned out to be a group of women (Furneaux). Macedonian inscriptions show greater freedom for women in Macedonia than elsewhere at this time and confirm Luke's story of the activities of women in Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea. {We sat down and spake} (\kathisantes elaloumen). Having taken our seats (aorist active participle of \kathizˆ) we began to speak or preach (inchoative imperfect of \laleˆ\, often used for preaching). Sitting was the Jewish attitude for public speaking. It was not mere conversation, but more likely conversational preaching of an historical and expository character. Luke's use of the first person plural implies that each of the four (Paul, Silas, Timothy, Luke) preached in turn, with Paul as chief speaker.

16:14 {Lydia} (\Ludia\). Her birthplace was Thyatira in Lydia. She may have been named after the land, though Lydia is a common female name (see Horace). Lydia was itself a Macedonian colony (Strabo, XIII. 4). Thyatira (note plural form like Philippi and one of the seven churches of Asia here Re 2:18) was famous for its purple dyes as old as Homer (Iliad, IV. 141) and had a guild of dyers (\hoi bapheis\) as inscriptions show. {A seller of purple} (\porphurop^lis\). A female seller of purple fabrics (\porphura, p^lis\). Late word, masculine form in an inscription. There was a great demand for this fabric as it was used on the official toga at Rome and in Roman colonies. We still use the term "royal purple." See on Lu 16:19. Evidently Lydia was a woman of some means to carry on such an important enterprise from her native city. She may have been a freed-woman, since racial names were often borne by slaves. {One that worshipped God} (\sebomen^ton theon\). A God-fearer or proselyte of the gate. There was a Jewish settlement in Thyatira which was especially interested in the dyeing industry. She probably became a proselyte there. Whether this was true of the other women we do not know. They may have been Jewesses or proselytes like Lydia, probably all of them employees of hers in her business. When Paul writes to the Philippians he does not mention Lydia who may have died meanwhile and who certainly was not Paul's wife. She was wealthy and probably a widow. {Heard us} (\^kouen\). Imperfect active of \akou^, was listening, really listening and she kept it up, listening to each of these new and strange preachers. {Opened} (\di^noixen\). First aorist active indicative of \dianoig^, old word, double compound (\dia, ana, oig^\) to open up wide or completely like a folding door (both sides, \dia, two). Only the Lord could do that. Jesus had opened (the same verb) the mind of the disciples to understand the Scriptures (Lu 24:45). {To give heed} (\prosechein\). To hold the mind (\ton noun\ understood), present active infinitive. She kept her mind centred on the things spoken by Paul whose words gripped her attention. She rightly perceived that Paul was the foremost one of the group. He had personal magnetism and power of intellect that the Spirit of God used to win the heart of this remarkable woman to Christ. It was worth coming to Philippi to win this fine personality to the Kingdom of God. She will be the chief spirit in this church that will give Paul more joy and co-operation than any of his churches. It is not stated that she was converted on the first Sabbath, though this may have been the case. "One solitary convert, a woman, and she already a seeker after God, and a native of that very Asia where they had been forbidden to preach" (Furneaux). But a new era had dawned for Europe and for women in the conversion of Lydia.

16:15 {And when she was baptized} (\h“s de ebaptisth^). First aorist passive indicative of \baptiz“. The river Gangites was handy for the ordinance and she had now been converted and was ready to make this public declaration of her faith in Jesus Christ. {And her household} (\kai ho oikos aut^s). Who constituted her "household"? The term \oikos, originally means the building as below, "into my house" and then it includes the inmates of a house. There is nothing here to show whether Lydia's "household" went beyond "the women" employed by her who like her had heard the preaching of Paul and had believed. "Possibly Euodia and Syntyche and the other women, Php 4:2,3, may have been included in the family of Lydia, who may have employed many slaves and freed women in her trade" (Knowling). "This statement cannot be claimed as any argument for infant baptism, since the Greek word may mean her servants or her work-people" (Furneaux). In the household baptisms (Cornelius, Lydia, the jailor, Crispus) one sees "infants" or not according to his predilections or preferences. {If ye have judged me} (\ei kekrikate me). Condition of the first class, assumed to be true (\ei and the indicative, here perfect active of \krin“). She had confessed her faith and submitted to baptism as proof that she was "faithful to the Lord" (\pist^n t“i kuri“i), believing on the Lord. "If she was fit for that, surely she was fit to be their hostess" (Furneaux). And Paul and his party had clearly no comfortable place to stay while in Philippi. The ancient hotels or inns were abominable. Evidently Paul demurred for there were four of them and he did not wish to sacrifice his independence or be a burden even to a woman of wealth. {And she constrained us} (\kai parebiasato h^mas). Effective first aorist middle of \parabiazomai, late word, in the N.T. only here and Lu 24:29. Some moral force (\bia) or hospitable persuasion was required (cf. 1Sa 28:23), but Lydia had her way as women usually do. So he accepted Lydia's hospitality in Philippi, though he worked for his own living in Thessalonica (2Th 3:8) and elsewhere (2Co 11:9). So far only women have been won to Christ in Philippi. The use of "us" shows that Luke was not a householder in Philippi.

16:16 {A spirit of divination} (\pneuma puth“na\). So the correct text with accusative (apparition, a spirit, a python), not the genitive (\puth“nos\). Hesychius defines it as \daimonion manikon\ (a spirit of divination). The etymology of the word is unknown. Bengel suggests \puthesthai\ from \punthanomai\, to inquire. Python was the name given to the serpent that kept guard at Delphi, slain by Apollo, who was called \Puthios Apollo\ and the prophetess at Delphi was termed Pythia. Certainly Luke does not mean to credit Apollo with a real existence (1Co 8:4). But Plutarch (A.D. 50-100) says that the term \puth“nes\ was applied to ventriloquists (\eggastrimuthoi\). In the LXX those with familiar spirits are called by this word ventriloquists (Le 19:31; 20:6,27, including the witch of Endor 1Sa 28:7). It is possible that this slave girl had this gift of prophecy "by soothsaying" (\manteuomen^). Present middle participle of \manteuomai\, old heathen word (in contrast with \proph^teu“) for acting the seer (\mantis\) and this kin to \mainomai\, to be mad, like the howling dervishes of later times. This is the so-called instrumental use of the circumstantial participles. {Brought} (\pareichen\). Imperfect active of \parech“, a steady source of income. {Much gain} (\ergasian poll^n\). Work, business, from \ergazomai\, to work. {Her masters} (\tois kuriois aut^s\). Dative case. Joint owners of this poor slave girl who were exploiting her calamity, whatever it was, for selfish gain, just as men and women today exploit girls and women in the "white slave" trade. As a fortune-teller she was a valuable asset for all the credulous dupes of the community. Simon Magus in Samaria and Elymas Barjesus in Cyprus had won power and wealth as soothsayers.

16:17 {The Most High God} (\tou theou tou hupsistou\). Pagan inscriptions use this language for the Supreme Being. It looks like supernatural testimony like that borne by the demoniacs to Jesus as "son of the Most High God" (Lu 8:28. Cf; also Mr 1:24; 3:11; Mt 8:29; Lu 4:41, etc.). She may have heard Paul preach about Jesus as the way of salvation. {The way of salvation} (\hodon s“t^rias\). A way of salvation, strictly speaking (no article). There were many "ways of salvation" offered to men then as now.

16:18 {She did} (\epoiei\). Imperfect active, kept it up for many days. The strange conduct gave Paul and the rest an unpleasant prominence in the community. {Being sore troubled} (\diapon^ˆtheis). First aorist passive of \diapone^ˆ, old verb, to work laboriously, then in passive to be "worked up," displeased, worn out. In the N.T. only here and 4:2 which see (there of the Sadducees about Peter's preaching). Paul was grieved, annoyed, indignant. He wanted no testimony from a source like this any more than he did the homage of the people of Lystra (14:14). {That very hour} (\aut^ˆi t^ˆi h^ˆ“rfi). Locative case of time and familiar Lukan idiom in his Gospel, "at the hour itself." The cure was instantaneous. Paul, like Jesus, distinguished between the demon and the individual.

16:19 {Was gone} (\ex^ˆlthen). Was gone out of the slave girl, second aorist active indicative of \exerchomai. "The two most important social revolutions worked by Christianity have been the elevation of woman and the abolition of slavery" (Furneaux). Both are illustrated here (Lydia and this slave girl). "The most sensitive part of 'civilized' man is the pocket" (Ramsay). {Laid hold on} (\epilabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of \epilamban^ˆ as in 9:27; 17:19, but here with hostile intent. {Dragged} (\heilkusan). First aorist active indicative of \helku^ˆ, late form of the old verb \helk^ˆ (also in Jas 2:6) to draw as a sword, and then to drag one forcibly as here and 21:30. It is also used of spiritual drawing as by Jesus in Joh 12:32. Here it is by violence. {Into the marketplace} (\eis t^ˆn agoran). Into the Roman forum near which would be the courts of law as in our courthouse square, as in 17:17. Marketing went on also (Mr 7:4), when the crowds collect (Mr 6:56), from \ageir^ˆ, to collect or gather. {Unto the rulers} (\epi tous archontas). General Greek term for "the magistrates."

16:20 {Unto the magistrates} (\tois strat^ˆgois). Greek term (\stratos, ag^ˆ) for leader of an army or general. But in civic life a governor. The technical name for the magistrates in a Roman colony was _duumviri_ or duumvirs, answering to consuls in Rome. \Strat^ˆgoi here is the Greek rendering of the Latin _praetores_ (praetors), a term which they preferred out of pride to the term _duumviri_. Since they represented consuls, the praetors or duumvirs were accompanied by lictors bearing rods (verse 35). {These men} (\houtoi hoi anthr^ˆ“poi). Contemptuous use. {Being Jews} (\Ioudaioi huparchontes). The people of Philippi, unlike those in Antioch (11:26), did not recognize any distinction between Jews and Christians. These four men were Jews. This appeal to race prejudice would be especially pertinent then because of the recent decree of Claudius expelling Jews from Rome (18:2). It was about A.D. 49 or 50 that Paul is in Philippi. The hatred of the Jews by the Romans is known otherwise (Cicero, _Pro Flacco_, XXVIII; Juvenal, XIV. 96-106). {Do exceedingly trouble} (\ektarassousin\). Late compound (effective use of \ek\ in composition) and only here in the N.T.

16:21 {Customs which it is not lawful for us to receive, or to observe, being Romans} (\eth^ha ouk estin h^min paradechesthai oude poiein R^maiois ousin\). Note the sharp contrast between "being Jews" in verse 20 and "being Romans" here. This pose of patriotism is all sound and fury. It is love of money that moves these "masters" far more than zeal for Rome. As Roman citizens in a colony they make full use of all their rights of protest. Judaism was a _religio licita_ in the Roman empire, only they were not allowed to make proselytes of the Romans themselves. No Roman magistrate would pass on abstract theological questions (18:15), but only if a breach of the peace was made (\ektarassousin h^m^"n t^n polin\) or the formation of secret sects and organizations. Evidently both of these last points are involved by the charges of "unlawful customs" by the masters who are silent about their real ground of grievance against Paul and Silas. \Ethos\ (kin to \^thos\, 1Co 15:33) is from \eth^"\, to be accustomed or used to a thing. The Romans granted toleration to conquered nations to follow their religious customs provided they did not try to win the Romans. But the Jews had made great headway to favour (the God-fearers) with increasing hatred also. Emperor worship had in store grave peril for both Jews and Christians. The Romans will care more for this than for the old gods and goddesses. It will combine patriotism and piety.

16:22 {Rose up together} (\sunepest^\. Second aorist (ingressive) active of the double compound \sunephist^mi\, intransitive, old verb, but only here in the N.T. (cf. \katepest^san\ in 18:12). There was no actual attack of the mob as Paul and Silas were in the hands of the officers, but a sudden and violent uprising of the people, the appeal to race and national prejudice having raised a ferment. {Rent their garments off them} (\perir^xantes aut^"n ta himatia\). First aorist active participle of \perir^gnumi\, old verb, to break off all around, to strip or rend all round. Here only in the N.T. The duumvirs probably gave orders for Paul and Silas to be stripped of their outer garments (\himatia), though not actually doing it with their own hands, least of all not stripping off their own garments in horror as Ramsay thinks. That would call for the middle voice. In II Macc. 4:38 the active voice is used as here of stripping off the garments of others. Paul in 1Th 2:2 refers to the shameful treatment received in Philippi, "insulted" (\hubristhentas). As a Roman citizen this was unlawful, but the duumvirs looked on Paul and Silas as vagabond and seditious Jews and "acted with the highhandedness characteristic of the fussy provincial authorities" (Knowling). {Commanded} (\ekeleuon). Imperfect active, repeatedly ordered. The usual formula of command was: "Go, lictors; strip off their garments; let them be scourged." {To beat them with rods} (\rhabdizein). Present active infinitive of \rhabdiz, old verb, but in the N.T.=_virgis caedere_ only here and 2Co 11:25 where Paul alludes to this incident and two others not given by Luke (\triserhabdisth^n). He came near getting another in Jerusalem (Ac 22:25). Why did not Paul say here that he was a Roman citizen as he does later (verse 37) and in Jerusalem (22:26f.)? It might have done no good in this hubbub and no opportunity was allowed for defence of any kind.

16:23 {When they had laid} (\epithentes). Second aorist (constative) active participle of \epitith^mi, to place upon. {Many stripes} (\pollas pl^gas). The Jewish law was forty stripes save one (2Co 11:24). The Roman custom depended on the caprice of the judge and was a terrible ordeal. It was the custom to inflict the stripes on the naked body (back) as Livy 2.5 says: "_Missique lictores ad sumendum supplicium, nudatos virgis caedunt_." On \pl^gas (from \pl^ss, to strike a blow) see on Lu 10:30; 12:47f. {The jailor} (\t^i desmophulaki). Late word (\desmos, phulax, keeper of bonds), in the N.T. only here (verses 23,27,36). The LXX has the word \archidesmophulax (Ge 39:21-23). Chrysostom calls this jailor Stephanus, he was of Achaia (1Co 16:15). {To keep safely} (\asphal^s t^rein). Present active infinitive, to keep on keeping safely, perhaps "as dangerous political prisoners" (Rackham). He had some rank and was not a mere turnkey.

16:24 {Into the inner prison} (\eis t^n es^teran phulak^n). The comparative form from the adverb \es^s (within), Ionic and old Attic for \eis^s. In the LXX, but in the N.T. only here and Heb 6:19. The Roman public prisons had a vestibule and outer prison and behind this the inner prison, a veritable dungeon with no light or air save what came through the door when open. One has only to picture modern cells in our jails, the dungeons in feudal castles, London prisons before the time of Howard, to appreciate the horrors of an inner prison cell in a Roman provincial town of the first century A.D. {Made their feet fast} (\tous podas ^sphalisato aut“n). First aorist (effective) middle of \asphaliz“, from \asphal^s (safe), common verb in late Greek, in the N.T. only here and Mt 24:64ff. The inner prison was safe enough without this refinement of cruelty. {In the stocks} (\eis to xulon). \Xulon, from \xu“, to scrape or plane, is used for a piece of wood whether a cross or gibbet (Ac 5:30; 10:39; 13:29; Ga 3:13; 1Pe 2:24) or a log or timber with five holes (four for the wrists and ankles and one for the neck) or two for the feet as here, \xuloped^, Latin _vervus_, to shackle the feet stretched apart (Job 33:11). This torment was practiced in Sparta, Athens, Rome, and Adonirom Judson suffered it in Burmah. \Xulon is also used in the N.T. for stick or staff (Mt 26:47) and even a tree (Lu 23:31). Tertullian said of Christians in the stocks: _Nihil crus sentit in vervo, quum animus in caelo est_ (Nothing the limb feels in the stocks when the mind is in heaven).

16:25 {About midnight} (\kata de mesonuktion). Middle of the night, old adjective seen already in Mr 13:35; Lu 11:5 which see. {Were praying and singing} (\proseuchomenoi humnoun). Present middle participle and imperfect active indicative: Praying they were singing (simultaneously, blending together petition and praise). \Humne“ is an old verb from \humnos (cf. Isa 12:4; Da 3:23). Paul and Silas probably used portions of the Psalms (cf. Lu 1:39f., 67f.; 2:28f.) with occasional original outbursts of praise. {Were listening to them} (\ep^kro“nto aut“n). Imperfect middle of \epakroaomai. Rare verb to listen with pleasure as to a recitation or music (Page). It was a new experience for the prisoners and wondrously attractive entertainment to them.

16:26 {Earthquake} (\seismos). Old word from \sei“, to shake. Luke regarded it as an answer to prayer as in 4:31. He and Timothy were not in prison. {So that the foundations of the prison house were shaken} (\h“ste saleuth^nai ta themelia tou desm“t^riou). Regular construction of the first aorist passive infinitive and the accusative of general reference with \h“ste for actual result just like the indicative. This old word for prison house already in Mt 11:2; Ac 5:21,23 which see. \Themelia\ is neuter plural of the adjective \themelios\, from \thema\ (thing laid down from tith^{mi}). So already in Lu 6:48; 14:29. If the prison was excavated from rocks in the hillside, as was often the case, the earthquake would easily have slipped the bars of the doors loose and the chains would have fallen out of the walls. {Were opened} (\^{ne}“ichth^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative of \anoig“\ (or -numi\) with triple augment (\^e, “\), while there is no augment in \aneth“\ (first aorist passive indicative of ani^{mi}, were loosed), old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 27:40; Eph 6:9; Heb 13:5.

16:27 {Being roused out of sleep} (exupnos genomenos\). Becoming \exupnos\ (rare word, only here in N.T., in LXX and Josephus). An earthquake like that would wake up any one. {Open} (ane“igmenos\). Perfect passive participle with double reduplication in predicate position, standing open. {Drew his sword} (spasamenos tⁿ machairan\). First aorist middle participle of \spa“\, to draw, as in Mr 14:47, drawing his own sword himself. Our word spasm from this old word. {Was about} (\^{mellen}\). Imperfect active of \mell“\ with both syllabic and temporal augment and followed here by present infinitive. He was on the point of committing suicide as Brutus had done near here. Stoicism had made suicide popular as the escape from trouble like the Japanese _harikari_. {Had escaped} (ekpepheugenai\). Second perfect active infinitive of \ekpheug“\, old verb with perfective force of \ek\, to flee out, to get clean away. This infinitive and accusative of general reference is due to indirect discourse after \nomiz““n\). Probably the prisoners were so panic stricken by the earthquake that they did not rally to the possibility of escape before the jailor awoke. He was responsible for the prisoners with his life (12:19; 27:42).

16:28 {Do thyself no harm} (m^{den} prax^{is} seaut“i kakon\). The usual construction (m[^] and the aorist subjunctive) for a prohibition not to {begin} to do a thing. The older Greek would probably have used \poi^s“is\ here. The later Greek does not always preserve the old distinction between \poie“\, to do a thing, and \prass“\, to practice, though \prassete\ keeps it in Php 4:9 and \poie“\ is rightly used in Lu 3:10-14. As a matter of fact \prass“\ does not occur in Matthew or in Mark, only twice in John, six times in Luke's Gospel, thirteen in Acts, and elsewhere by Paul. {Sprang in} (\eisp^d^sen). First aorist active of \eisp^da^, old verb, but here only in the N.T. Cf. \ekp^da^ in 14:14. The jailor was at the outer door and he wanted lights to see what was inside in the inner prison.

16:29 {Trembling for fear} (\entromos genomenos). "Becoming terrified." The adjective \entromos (in terror) occurs in N.T. only here and 7:32; Heb 12:21. {Fell down} (\prosepesen). Second aorist active indicative of \prospipt^, old verb. An act of worship as Cornelius before Peter (10:25), when \prosekun^sen is used.

16:30 {Brought them out} (\progag^"n autous ex^). Second aorist active participle of \proag^, to lead forward. He left the other prisoners inside, feeling that he had to deal with these men whom he had evidently heard preach or had heard of their message as servants of the Most High God as the slave girl called them. There may have been superstition behind his fear, but there was evident sincerity.

16:31 {To be saved} (\hina s^"th^). Final clause with \hina and first aorist passive subjunctive. What did he mean by "saved"? Certainly more than escape from peril about the prisoners or because of the earthquake, though these had their influences on him. Cf. way of salvation in verse 17. {Believe on the Lord Jesus} (\Pisteuson epi ton kurion I^soun). This is what Peter told Cornelius (10:43). This is the heart of the matter for both the jailor and his house.

16:32 {They spake the word of God} (\elal^san ton logon tou theou). So Paul and Silas gave fuller exposition of the way of life to the jailor "with all that were in his house." It was a remarkable service with keenest attention and interest, the jailor with his warden, slaves, and family.

16:33 {Washed their stripes} (\elousen apo t^"n pl^g^"n). Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 227) cites an inscription of Pergamum with this very construction of \apo and the ablative, to wash off, though it is an old verb. This first aorist active indicative of \lou^, to bathe, succinctly shows what the jailor did to remove the stains left by the rods of the lictors (verse 22). \Nipt^ was used for washing parts of the body. {And was baptized, he and all his, immediately} (\kai ebaptisth^ autos kai hoi autou hapantes parachr^ma). The verb is in the singular agreeing with \autos\, but it is to be supplied with \hoi autou\, and it was done at once.

16:34 {He brought them up} (\anagag“n\). Second aorist active participle of \anag“\. It looks as if his house was above the prison. The baptism apparently took place in the pool or tank in which he bathed Paul and Silas (De Wette) or the rectangular basin (_impluvium_) in the court for receiving the rain or even in a swimming pool or bath (kolumb^thra) found within the walls of the prison (Kuinoel). Meyer: "Perhaps the water was in the court of the house; and the baptism was that of immersion, which formed an essential part of the symbolism of the act." {Set meat} (\pareth^ken trapezan\). Set a "table" before them with food on it. They had probably had no food for a day. {With all his house} (\panoikei\). Adverb, once in Plato, though usually \panoikifi\. In LXX, but here alone in the N.T. It is in an amphibolous position and can be taken either with "rejoiced" (\^galliasato\) or "having believed" (\pepisteuk“s\, perfect active participle, permanent belief), coming between them. The whole household (family, warden, slaves) heard the word of God, believed in the Lord Jesus, made confession, were baptized, and rejoiced. Furneaux considers the haste in baptism here "precipitate" as in the baptism of the eunuch. But why delay?

16:35 {The serjeants} (\tous rhabdouchous\). Fases-bearers, regular Greek word (\rhabdos, ech“\) for Latin _lictores_ though Cicero says that they should carry _baculi_, not _fasces_. Was this message because of the earthquake, the influence of Lydia, or a belated sense of justice on the part of the magistrates (praetors)? Perhaps a bit of all three may be true. The Codex Bezae expressly says that the magistrates "assembled together in the market place and recollecting the earthquake that had happened they were afraid."

16:36 {Now therefore} (\nun oun\). Note both particles (time and inference). It was a simple matter to the jailor and he was full of glee over this happy outcome.

16:37 {Unto them} (\pros autous\). The lictors by the jailor. The reply of Paul is a marvel of brevity and energy, almost every word has a separate indictment showing the utter illegality of the whole proceeding. {They have beaten us} (\deirantes h^mas\). First aorist active participle of \der“\, old verb to flay, to skin, to smite. The _Lex Valeria_ B.C. 509 and the _Lex Poscia_

B.C. 248 made it a crime to inflict blows on a Roman citizen. Cicero says, "To fetter a Roman citizen was a crime, to scourge him a scandal, to slay him--parricide." Claudius had "deprived the city of Rhodes of its freedom for having crucified some citizen of Rome" (Rackham). {Publicly} (\d^ˆmosifi\). This added insult to injury. Common adverb (\hod^ˆi\) supplied with adjective, associative instrumental case, opposed to \idifi\ or \kat' oikous\, Ac 20:20) {Uncondemned} (\akatakritous\). This same verbal adjective from \kata-krin^ˆ\ with \a\ privative is used by Paul in 22:25 and nowhere else in the N.T. Rare in late Greek like \akatagn^ˆstos\, but in late _Koin,_ (papyri, inscriptions). The meaning is clearly "without being tried." Paul and Silas were not given a chance to make a defence. They were sentenced unheard (25:16). Even slaves in Roman law had a right to be heard. {Men that are Romans} (\anthr^ˆpous Romaious huparchontas\). The praetors did not know, of course, that Paul and Silas were Roman citizens any more than Lysias knew it in Ac 22:27. Paul's claim is not challenged in either instance. It was a capital offence to make a false claim to Roman citizenship. {Have cast us into prison} (\ebalan eis phulak^ˆn\). Second aorist active indicative of \ball^ˆ\, old verb, with first aorist ending as often in the _Koin,_ (\-an\, not \-on\). This was the climax, treating them as criminals. {And now privily} (\kai nun lathrfi\). Paul balances their recent conduct with the former. {Nay verily, but} (\ou gar, alla\). No indeed! It is the use of \gar\ so common in answers (\ge+ara\) as in Mt 27:23. \Alla\ gives the sharp alternative. {Themselves} (\autoi\). As a public acknowledgment that they had wronged and mistreated Paul and Silas. Let them come themselves and lead us out (\exagaget^ˆsan\, third person plural second aorist active imperative of \exag^ˆ\). It was a bitter pill to the proud praetors.

16:39 {They feared} (\ephob^ˆth^ˆsan\). This is the explanation. They became frightened for their own lives when they saw what they had done to Roman citizens. {They asked} (\r^ˆt^ˆn\). Imperfect active of \er^ˆta^ˆ\. They kept on begging them to leave for fear of further trouble. The colonists in Philippi would turn against the praetors if they learned the facts, proud as they were of being citizens. This verb in the _Koin,_ is often used as here to make a request and not just to ask a question.

16:40 {Into the house of Lydia} (\pros t^ˆn Ludian\). No word in the Greek for "house," but it means the house of Lydia. Note "the brethren" here, not merely Luke and Timothy, but other brethren now converted besides those in the house of the jailor. The four missionaries were guests of Lydia (verse 15) and probably the church now met in her home. {They departed} (\ex^lthan\). Paul and Silas, but not Luke and Timothy. Note "they" here, not "we." Note also the \-an\ ending instead of \-on\ as above. The movements of Timothy are not perfectly clear till he reappears at Berea (17:15). It seems unlikely that he came to Thessalonica with Paul and Silas since only Paul and Silas obtained security there (17:9) and were sent on to Berea (17:10). Probably Timothy was sent to Thessalonica from Philippi with gifts of which Paul spoke later (Php 4:15f.). Then he followed Paul and Silas to Berea.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

17:1 {When they had passed through} (\diodeusantes\). First aorist active participle of \diodeu“, common verb in the _Koin_,_ (Polybius, Plutarch, LXX, etc.), but in the N.T. only here and Lu 8:1. It means literally to make one's way (\hodos\) through (\dia\). They took the Egnatian Way, one of the great Roman roads from Byzantium to Dyrrachium (over 500 miles long) on the Adriatic Sea, opposite Brundisium and so an extension of the Appian Way. {Amphipolis} (\t^n Amphipolin\). So called because the Strymon flowed almost around (\amphi\) it, the metropolis of Macedonia Prima, a free city, about 32 miles from Philippi, about three miles from the sea. Paul and Silas may have spent only a night here or longer. {Apollonia} (\t^n Apoll“nian\). Not the famous Apollonia in Illyria, but 32 miles from Amphipolis on the Egnatian Way. So here again a night was spent if no more. Why Paul hurried through these two large cities, if he did, we do not know. There are many gaps in Luke's narrative that we have no way of filling up. There may have been no synagogues for one thing. {To Thessalonica} (\eis Thessalonik^n\). There was a synagogue here in this great commercial city, still an important city called Saloniki, of 70,000 population. It was originally called Therma, at the head of the Thermaic Gulf. Cassander renamed it Thessalonica after his wife, the sister of Alexander the Great. It was the capital of the second of the four divisions of Macedonia and finally the capital of the whole province. It shared with Corinth and Ephesus the commerce of the Aegean. One synagogue shows that even in this commercial city the Jews were not very numerous. As a political centre it ranked with Antioch in Syria and Caesarea in Palestine. It was a strategic centre for the spread of the gospel as Paul later said for it sounded (echoed) forth from Thessalonica throughout Macedonia and Achaia (1Th 1:8).

17:2 {As his custom was} (\kata to ei“thos t“i Paul“i\). The same construction in Lu 4:16 about Jesus in Nazareth (\kata to ei“thos aut“i\) with the second perfect active participle neuter singular from \eth“. Paul's habit was to go to the Jewish synagogue to use the Jews and the God-fearers as a springboard for his work among the Gentiles. {For three Sabbaths} (\epi sabbata tria\). Probably the reference is to the first three Sabbaths when Paul had a free hand in the synagogue as at first in Antioch in Pisidia. Luke does not say that Paul was in Thessalonica only three weeks. He may have spoken there also during the week, though the Sabbath was the great day. Paul makes it plain, as Furneaux shows, that he was in Thessalonica a much longer period than three weeks. The rest of the time he spoke, of course, outside of the synagogue. Paul implies an extended stay by his language in 1Th 1:8. The church consisted mainly of Gentile converts (2Th 3:4,7,8) and seems to have been well organized (1Th 5:12). He received help while there several times from Philippi (Php 4:16) and even so worked night and day to support himself (1Th 2:9). His preaching was misunderstood there in spite of careful instruction concerning the second coming of Christ (1Th 4:13-5:5; 2Th 2:1-12). {Reasoned} (\dielexato\). First aorist middle indicative of \dialegomai\, old verb in the active to select, distinguish, then to revolve in the mind, to converse (interchange of ideas), then to teach in the Socratic ("dialectic") method of question and answer (cf. dielegeto\ in verse 17), then simply to discourse, but always with the idea of intellectual stimulus. With these Jews and God-fearers Paul appealed to the Scriptures as text and basis (\apo\) of his ideas.

17:3 {Opening and alleging} (\dianoig“n kai paratithemenos\). Opening the Scriptures, Luke means, as made plain by the mission and message of Jesus, the same word (\dianoig“) used by him of the interpretation of the Scriptures by Jesus (Lu 24:32) and of the opening of the mind of the disciples also by Jesus (Lu 24:45) and of the opening of Lydia's heart by the Lord (16:14). One cannot refrain from saying that such exposition of the Scriptures as Jesus and Paul gave would lead to more opening of mind and heart. Paul was not only "expounding" the Scriptures, he was also "propounding" (the old meaning of "allege") his doctrine or setting forth alongside the Scriptures (\para-tithemenos\), quoting the Scripture to prove his contention which was made in much conflict (1Th 2:2), probably in the midst of heated discussion by the opposing rabbis who were anything but convinced by Paul's powerful arguments, for the Cross was a stumbling-block to the Jews (1Co 1:23). {That it behoved the Christ to suffer} (\hoti ton Christon edei pathein\). The second aorist active infinitive is the subject of \edei\ with \ton Christon\, the accusative of general reference. This is Paul's major premise in his argument from the Scriptures about the Messiah, the necessity of his sufferings according to the Scriptures, the very argument made by the Risen Jesus to the two on the way to Emmaus (Lu 24:25-27). The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah was a passage in point that the rabbis had overlooked. Peter made the same point in Ac 3:18 and Paul again in Ac 26:23. The minor premise is the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. {To rise again from the dead} (\anast^{nai} ek nekrⁿ). This second aorist active infinitive \anast^{nai} is also the subject of \edei. The actual resurrection of Jesus was also a necessity as Paul says he preached to them (1Th 4:14) and argued always from Scripture (1Co 15:3-4) and from his own experience (Ac 9:22; 22:7; 26:8,14; 1Co 15:8). {This Jesus is the Christ} (\houtos estin ho Christos, ho I^{sous}). More precisely, "This is the Messiah, viz., Jesus whom I am proclaiming unto you." This is the conclusion of Paul's line of argument and it is logical and overwhelming. It is his method everywhere as in Damascus, in Antioch in Pisidia, here, in Corinth. He spoke as an eye-witness.

17:4 {Some of them} (\tines ex autⁿ). That is of the Jews who were evidently largely afraid of the rabbis. Still "some" were persuaded (\epeisth^{san}, effective first aorist passive indicative) and "consorted with" (\prosekl^rth^{san}). This latter verb is also first aorist passive indicative of \proskl^{ro}, a common verb in late Greek (Plutarch, Lucian), but only here in the N.T., from \pros and \kl^{ros}, to assign by lot. So then this small group of Jews were given Paul and Silas by God's grace. {And of the devout Greeks a great multitude} (\tⁿ te sebomenⁿ Hellⁿ pl^{thos} polu). These "God-fearers" among the Gentiles were less under the control of the jealous rabbis and so responded more readily to Paul's appeal. In 1Th 1:9 Paul expressly says that they had "turned to God from idols," proof that this church was mainly Gentile (cf. also 1Th 2:14). {And of the chief women not a few} (\gunaikⁿ te tⁿ pr^t n ouk oligai). Literally, "And of women the first not a few." That is, a large number of women of the very first rank in the city, probably devout women also like the men just before and like those in 13:50 in Antioch in Pisidia who along with "the first men of the city" were stirred up against Paul. Here these women were openly friendly to Paul's message, whether proselytes or Gentiles or Jewish wives of Gentiles as Hort holds. It is noteworthy that here, as in Philippi, leading women take a bold stand for Christ. In Macedonia women had more freedom than elsewhere. It is not to be inferred that all those converted belonged to the higher classes, for the industrial element was clearly large (1Th 4:11). In 2Co 8:2 Paul speaks of the deep poverty of the Macedonian churches, but with Philippi mainly in mind. Ramsay thinks that Paul won many of the heathen not affiliated at all with the synagogue. Certain it is that we must allow a considerable interval of time between verses 4,5 to understand what Paul says in his Thessalonian Epistles.

17:5 {Moved with jealousy} (\z^l^“santes\). Both our English words, {zeal} and {jealousy}, are from the Greek \z^los\. In 13:45 the Jews (rabbis) "were filled with jealousy" (\epI^sth^san z^lou\). That is another way of saying the same thing as here. The success of Paul was entirely too great in both places to please the rabbis. So here is jealousy of Jewish preachers towards Christian preachers. It is always between men or women of the same profession or group. In 1Th 2:3-10 Paul hints at some of the slanders spread against him by these rabbis (deceivers, using words of flattery as men-pleasers, after vain-glory, greed of gain, etc.). {Took unto them} (\proslabomenoi\). Second aorist middle (indirect, to themselves) participle of \proslamban“, old and common verb. {Certain vile fellows of the rabble} (\t^“n agorai^“n andras tinas pon^rous\). The \agora\ or market-place was the natural resort for those with nothing to do (Mt 20:4) like the court-house square today or various parks in our cities where bench-warmers flock. Plato (_Protagoras_ 347 C) calls these \agorai\ (common word, but in N.T. only here and 19:38) idlers or good-for-nothing fellows. They are in every city and such "bums" are ready for any job. The church in Thessalonica caught some of these peripatetic idlers (2Th 3:10f.) "doing nothing but doing about." So the Jewish preachers gather to themselves a choice collection of these market-loungers or loafers or wharf-rats. The Romans called them _subrostrani_ (hangers round the rostrum or _subbasilicari_). {Gathering a crowd} (\ochlopoi^santes\). Literally, making or getting (\poie“) a crowd (\ochlos\), a word not found elsewhere. Probably right in the \agora\ itself where the rabbis could tell men their duties and pay them in advance. Instance Hyde Park in London with all the curious gatherings every day, Sunday afternoons in particular. {Set the city on an uproar} (\ethoruboun\). Imperfect active of \thorube“, from \thorubos\ (tumult), old verb, but in the N.T. only here and 20:10; Mt 9:23; Mr 4:39. They kept up the din, this combination of rabbis and rabble. {Assaulting the house of Jason} (\epistantes tⁱ oikifi Iasonos\). Second aorist (ingressive) active of \ephist^{mi}\, taking a stand against, rushing at, because he was Paul's host. He may have been a Gentile (Jason the name of an ancient king of Thessaly), but the Jews often used it for Joshua or Jesus (II Macc. 1:7). {They sought} (\ez^{toun}\). Imperfect active. They burst into the house and searched up and down. {Them} (\autous\). Paul and Silas. They were getting ready to have a lynching party.

17:6 {When they found them not} (\m^{heurontes}\). Usual negative \m^{he}\ with the participle in the _Koin,_, second aorist (effective) active participle, complete failure with all the noise and "bums." {They dragged} (\esuron\). Imperfect active, vivid picture, they were dragging (literally). See already 8:3; 16:19. If they could not find Paul, they could drag Jason his host and some other Christians whom we do not know. {Before the rulers of the city} (\epi tous politarchas\). This word does not occur in Greek literature and used to be cited as an example of Luke's blunders. But now it is found in an inscription on an arch in the modern city preserved in the British Museum. It is also found in seventeen inscriptions (five from Thessalonica) where the word or the verb \politarche“\ occurs. It is a fine illustration of the historical accuracy of Luke in matters of detail. This title for city officers in Thessalonica, a free city, is correct. They were burgomasters or "rulers of the city." {Crying} (\bo^{ntes}\). Yelling as if the house was on fire like the mob in Jerusalem (21:28). {These that have turned the world upside down} (\hoi tⁿ oikoumenⁿ anastat^{santes}\). The use of \oikoumenⁿ (\supply \gen\ or \ch^{ran}\, the inhabited earth, present passive participle of \oike“) means the Roman Empire, since it is a political charge, a natural hyperbole in their excitement, but the phrase occurs for the Roman Empire in Lu 2:1. It is possible that news had come to Thessalonica of the expulsion of the Jews from Rome by Claudius. There is truth in the accusation, for Christianity is revolutionary, but on this particular occasion the uproar (verse 5) was created by the rabbis and the hired loafers. The verb \anastato“\ (here first aorist active participle) does not occur in the ancient writers, but is in LXX and in Ac 17:6; 21:38; Ga 5:12. It occurs also in Harpocraton (A.D. 4th cent.) and about 100 B.C. \exanastato“\ is found in a fragment of papyrus (Tebtunis no. 2) and in a Paris Magical Papyrus l. 2243f. But in an Egyptian letter of Aug. 4, 41

A.D. (Oxyrhynchus Pap. no. 119, 10) "the bad boy" uses it = "he upsets me" or "he drives me out of my senses" (\anastatoi me). See Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, pp. 84f. It is not a "Biblical word" at all, but belongs to the current _Koin, _. It is a vigorous and graphic term.

17:7 {Whom Jason hath received} (\hous hupodedektai Ias“n).

Present perfect middle indicative of \hupodechomai, to entertain, old verb, but in N.T. only in Lu 10:38; 19:6; Ac 17:7; Jas 2:25. This is Jason's crime and he is the prisoner before the politarchs. {These all} (\houtoi pantes). Jason, the "brethren" of verse 6, Paul and Silas, and all Christians everywhere. {Contrary} (\apenanti). Late compound preposition (\apo, en, anti) found in Polybius, LXX, here only in the N.T. {The decrees of Caesar} (\t“n dogmat“n Kaisaros). This was a charge of treason and was a sure way to get a conviction.

Probably the Julian _Leges Majestatis_ are in mind rather than the definite decree of Claudius about the Jews (Ac 18:2).

{Saying that there is another king, one Jesus} (\Basilea heteron legontes einai I’soun). Note the very order of the words in the Greek indirect discourse with the accusative and infinitive after \legontes. \Basilea heteron comes first, a different king, another emperor than Caesar. This was the very charge that the smart student of the Pharisees and Herodians had tried to catch Jesus on (Mr 12:14). The Sanhedrin made it anyhow against Jesus to Pilate (Lu 23:2) and Pilate had to notice it. "Although the emperors never ventured to assume the title _rex_ at Rome, in the Eastern provinces they were regularly termed _basileus_" (Page). The Jews here, as before Pilate (Joh 19:15), renounce their dearest hope of a Messianic king. It is plain that Paul had preached about Jesus as the Messiah, King of the Kingdom of God over against the Roman Empire, a spiritual kingdom, to be sure, but the Jews here turn his language to his hurt as they did with Jesus. As a matter of fact Paul's preaching about the kingdom and the second coming of Christ was gravely misunderstood by the Christians at Thessalonica after his departure (1Th 4:13-5:4; 2Th 2). The Jews were quick to seize upon his language about Jesus Christ to his own injury. Clearly here in Thessalonica Paul had faced the power of the Roman Empire in a new way and pictured over against it the grandeur of the reign of Christ.

17:8 {They troubled the multitude and the rulers} (\etaraxan ton ochlon kai tous politarchas). First aorist active of \tarass“, old verb to agitate. The excitement of the multitude "agitated" the politarchs still more. To the people it meant a revolution, to the politarchs a charge of complicity in treason if they let it pass. They had no way to disprove the charge of treason and Paul and Silas were not present.

17:9 {When they had taken security} (\labontes to hikanon\). A Greek idiom=Latin _satis accipere_, to receive the sufficient (bond), usually money for the fulfilment of the judgment. Probably the demand was made of Jason that he see to it that Paul and Silas leave the city not to return. In 1Th 2:17f. Paul may refer to this in mentioning his inability to visit these Thessalonians again. The idiom \lambanein to hikanon\ now is found in two inscriptions of the second century A.D. (O. G. I. S. 484, 50 and 629, 101). In Vol. III Oxyrhynchus Papyri no. 294 A.D. 22 the corresponding phrase \dounai heikanon\ ("to give security") appears. {They let them go} (\apelusan autous\). The charge was serious but the proof slim so that the politarchs were glad to be rid of the case.

17:10 {Immediately by night} (\euthe"s dia nuktos\). Paul's work had not been in vain in Thessalonica (1Th 1:7f.; 2:13,20). Paul loved the church here. Two of them, Aristarchus and Secundus, will accompany him to Jerusalem (Ac 20:4) and Aristarchus will go on with him to Rome (27:2). Plainly Paul and Silas had been in hiding in Thessalonica and in real danger. After his departure severe persecution came to the Christians in Thessalonica (1Th 2:14; 3:1-5; 2Th 1:6). It is possible that there was an escort of Gentile converts with Paul and Silas on this night journey to Beroea which was about fifty miles southwest from Thessalonica near Pella in another district of Macedonia (Emathia). There is a modern town there of some 6,000 people. {Went} (\apⁱesan\). Imperfect third plural active of \apeimi\, old verb to go away, here alone in the N.T. A literary, almost Atticistic, form instead of \ap^lthon\. {Into the synagogue of the Jews} (\eis tⁿ sunag^gn tⁿ Ioudaiⁿ\). Paul's usual custom and he lost no time about it. Enough Jews here to have a synagogue.

17:11 {More noble than those} (\eugenesteroi tⁿ\). Comparative form of \eugen^s\, old and common adjective, but in N.T. only here and Lu 19:12; 1Co 1:26. Followed by ablative case tⁿ as often after the comparative. {With all readiness of mind} (\meta pfs^s prothumias\). Old word from \prothumos\ (\pro, thumos\) and means eagerness, rushing forward. In the N.T. only here and 2Co

8:11-19; 9:2. In Thessalonica many of the Jews out of pride and prejudice refused to listen. Here the Jews joyfully welcomed the two Jewish visitors. {Examining the Scriptures daily} (\kath' h^meran anakrinontes tas graphas). Paul expounded the Scriptures daily as in Thessalonica, but the Bereans, instead of resenting his new interpretation, examined (\anakrin^“\ means to sift up and down, make careful and exact research as in legal processes as in Ac 4:9; 12:19, etc.) the Scriptures for themselves. In Scotland people have the Bible open on the preacher as he expounds the passage, a fine habit worth imitating. {Whether these things were so} (\ei echoi tauta hout^“s). Literally, "if these things had it thus." The present optative in the indirect question represents an original present indicative as in Lu 1:29 (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1043f.). This use of \ei with the optative may be looked at as the condition of the fourth class (undetermined with less likelihood of determination) as in Ac 17:27; 20:16; 24:19; 27:12 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1021). The Bereans were eagerly interested in the new message of Paul and Silas but they wanted to see it for themselves. What a noble attitude. Paul's preaching made Bible students of them. The duty of private interpretation is thus made plain (Hovey).

17:12 {Many therefore} (\Polloi men oun). As a result of this Bible study. {Also of the Greek women of honourable estate}. The word \Hell^nis means Greek woman, but the word \gun^“ is added. In particular women of rank (\eusche^mon^“n\, from \eu\ and \ech^“\, graceful figure and the honourable standing) as in 13:50 (Mr 15:43). Probably Luke means by implication that the "men" (\andr^“n) were also noble Greeks though he does not expressly say so. So then the Jews were more open to the message, the proselytes or God-fearers followed suit, with "not a few" (\ouk oligoi) real Greeks (both men and women) believing. It was quick and fine work.

17:13 {Was proclaimed} (\kat^ggel^“). Second aorist passive indicative of \kataggeil^“, common late verb as in Ac 16:21. {Of Paul} (\hupo Paulou). By Paul, of course. {Stirring up and troubling the multitudes} (\saleuontes kai tarassontes tous ochlous). Shaking the crowds like an earthquake (4:31) and disturbing like a tornado (17:8). Success at Thessalonica gave the rabbis confidence and courage. The attack was sharp and swift. The Jews from Antioch in Pisidia had likewise pursued Paul to Iconium and Lystra. How long Paul had been in Berea Luke does not say. But a church was established here which gave a good account of itself later and sent a messenger (Ac 20:4) with their part of the collection to Jerusalem. This quiet and noble town was in a whirl of excitement over the attacks of the Jewish emissaries from Thessalonica who probably made the same charge of treason against Paul and Silas.

17:14 {And then immediately} (\euthe“s de tote). They acted swiftly as in Thessalonica. {Sent forth} (\exapesteilan). Double compound (\ex, apo\, both out and away) common in late Greek. First aorist active indicative (\exapostell“\, liquid verb). Same form in 9:30. {As far as to the sea} (\he“s epi tˆn thalassan). It is not clear whether Paul went all the way to Athens by land or took ship at Dium or Pydna, some sixteen miles away, and sailed to Athens. Some even think that Paul gave the Jews the slip and went all the way by land when they expected him to go by sea. At any rate we know that Paul was grieved to cut short his work in Macedonia, probably not over six months in all, which had been so fruitful in Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea. Silas and Timothy (note his presence) remained behind in Beroea and they would keep the work going. Paul no doubt hoped to return soon. Silas and Timothy in Beroea would also serve to screen his flight for the Jews wanted his blood, not theirs. The work in Macedonia spread widely (1Th 1:7f.).

17:15 {But they that conducted Paul} (\hoi de kathistanontes ton Paulon). Articular present active participle of \kathistan“ (late form in A B of \kathistˆmi\ or \kathista“), an old verb with varied uses to put down, to constitute, to conduct, etc. This use here is in the LXX (Jos 6:23) and old Greek also. {To Athens} (\he“s Athˆn“n). To make sure of his safe arrival. {That they should come to him with all speed} (\hina h“s tachista elth“sin pros auton). Note the neat Greek idiom \h“s tachista as quickly as possible (good Attic idiom). The indirect command and purpose (\hina-elth“sin\, second aorist active subjunctive) is also neat Greek (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1046). {Departed} (\exˆiesan). Imperfect active of \exeimi, old Greek word, but rare in N.T. All in Acts (13:42; 17:15; 20:7; 27:43)

17:16 {Now while Paul waited for them in Athens} (\En de tais Athˆnais ekdechomenou autous tou Paulou). Genitive absolute with present middle participle of \ekdechomai, old verb to receive, but only with the sense of looking out for, expecting found here and elsewhere in N.T. We know that Timothy did come to Paul in Athens (1Th 3:1,6) from Thessalonica and was sent back to them from Athens. If Silas also came to Athens, he was also sent away, possibly to Philippi, for that church was deeply interested in Paul. At any rate both Timothy and Silas came from Macedonia to Corinth with messages and relief for Paul (Ac 18:5; 2Co 11:8f.). Before they came and after they left, Paul felt lonely in Athens (1Th 3:1), the first time on this tour or the first that he has been completely without fellow workers. Athens had been captured by Sulla B.C. 86. After various changes Achaia, of which Corinth is the capital, is a separate province from Macedonia and A.D. 44 was restored by Claudius to the Senate with the Proconsul at Corinth. Paul is probably here about A.D. 50. Politically Athens is no longer of importance when Paul comes though it is still the university seat of the world with all its rich environment and traditions. Rackham grows eloquent over Paul the Jew of Tarsus being in the city of Pericles and Demosthenes, Socrates and Plato and Aristotle, Sophocles and Euripides. In its Agora Socrates had taught, here was the Academy of Plato, the Lyceum of Aristotle, the Porch of Zeno, the Garden of Epicurus. Here men still talked about philosophy, poetry, politics, religion, anything and everything. It was the art centre of the world. The Parthenon, the most beautiful of temples, crowned the Acropolis. Was Paul insensible to all this cultural environment? It is hard to think so for he was a university man of Tarsus and he makes a number of allusions to Greek writers. Probably it had not been in Paul's original plan to evangelize Athens, difficult as all university seats are, but he cannot be idle though here apparently by chance because driven out of Macedonia. {Was provoked} (\par"xuneto\). Imperfect passive of \paroxun"\, old verb to sharpen, to stimulate, to irritate (from \para, oxus), from \paroxusmos\ (Ac 15:39), common in old Greek, but in N.T. only here and 1Co 13:5. It was a continual challenge to Paul's spirit when he beheld (\the"rountos\, genitive of present participle agreeing with \autou\ (his), though late MSS. have locative \the"rounti\ agreeing with \en aut"i). {The city full of idols} (\kateid"lon ousan t^n polin\). Note the participle \ousan\ not preserved in the English (either the city being full of idols or that the city was full of idols, sort of indirect discourse). Paul, like any stranger was looking at the sights as he walked around. This adjective \kateid"lon\ (perfective use of \kata\ and \eid"lon\ is found nowhere else, but it is formed after the analogy of \katampelos, katadendron), full of idols. Xenophon (_de Republ. Ath._) calls the city \hol^ bomos, hol^ thuma theois kai anath^{ma}\ (all altar, all sacrifice and offering to the gods). These statues were beautiful, but Paul was not deceived by the mere art for art's sake. The idolatry and sensualism of it all glared at him (Ro 1:18-32). Renan ridicules Paul's ignorance in taking these statues for idols, but Paul knew paganism better than Renan. The superstition of this centre of Greek culture was depressing to Paul. One has only to recall how superstitious cults today flourish in the atmosphere of Boston and Los Angeles to understand conditions in Athens. Pausanias says that Athens had more images than all the rest of Greece put together. Pliny states that in the time of Nero Athens had over 30,000 public statues besides countless private ones in the homes. Petronius sneers that it was easier to find a god than a man in Athens. Every gateway or porch had its protecting god. They lined the street from the Piraeus and caught the eye at every place of prominence on wall or in the agora.

17:17 {So he reasoned} (\dielegeto men oun\). Accordingly therefore, with his spirit stirred by the proof of idolatry. Imperfect middle of \dialegeto\, same verb used in verse 2 which see. First he reasoned in the synagogue at the services to the Jews and the God-fearers, then daily in the agora or marketplace (southwest of the Acropolis, between it and the Areopagus and the Pnyx) to the chance-comers, "them that met him" (\pros tous paratugchanontas\). Simultaneously with the synagogue preaching at other hours Paul took his stand like Socrates before him and engaged in conversation with (\pros\) those who happened by. This old verb, \paratugchan\, occurs here alone in the N.T. and accurately pictures the life in the agora. The listeners to Paul in the agora would be more casual than those who stop for street preaching, a Salvation Army meeting, a harangue from a box in Hyde Park. It was a slim chance either in synagogue or in agora, but Paul could not remain still with all the reeking idolatry around him. The boundaries of the agora varied, but there was always the \Poikil^ē Stoa\ (the Painted Porch), over against the Acropolis on the west. In this \Stoa\ (Porch) Zeno and other philosophers and rhetoricians held forth from time to time. Paul may have stood near this spot.

17:18 {And certain also of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers encountered him} (\tines de kai t^ēn Epikouri^ēn kai St^{ōi}k^ēn philosoph^{ōn} suneballon aut^ōi\). Imperfect active of \sunball\, old verb, in the N.T. only by Luke, to bring or put together in one's mind (Lu 2:19), to meet together (Ac 20:14), to bring together aid (18:27), to confer or converse or dispute as here and already 4:15 which see. These professional philosophers were always ready for an argument and so they frequented the agora for that purpose. Luke uses one article and so groups the two sects together in their attitude toward Paul, but they were very different in fact. Both sects were eager for argument and both had disdain for Paul, but they were the two rival practical philosophies of the day, succeeding the more abstruse theories of Plato and Aristotle. Socrates had turned men's thought inward (Gn⁴“thi Seauton, Know Thyself) away from the mere study of physics. Plato followed with a profound development of the inner self (metaphysics). Aristotle with his cyclopaedic grasp sought to unify and relate both physics and metaphysics. Both Zeno and Epicurus (340-272 B.C.) took a more practical turn in all this intellectual turmoil and raised the issues of everyday life. Zeno (360-260 B.C.) taught in the \Stoa (Porch) and so his teaching was called Stoicism. He advanced many noble ideas that found their chief illustration in the Roman philosophers (Seneca, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius). He taught self-mastery and hardness with an austerity that ministered to pride or suicide in case of failure, a distinctly selfish and unloving view of life and with a pantheistic philosophy. Epicurus considered practical atheism the true view of the universe and denied a future life and claimed pleasure as the chief thing to be gotten out of life. He did not deny the existence of gods, but regarded them as unconcerned with the life of men. The Stoics called Epicurus an atheist. Lucretius and Horace give the Epicurean view of life in their great poems. This low view of life led to sensualism and does today, for both Stoicism and Epicureanism are widely influential with people now. "Eat and drink for tomorrow we die," they preached. Paul had doubtless become acquainted with both of these philosophies for they were widely prevalent over the world. Here he confronts them in their very home. He is challenged by past-masters in the art of appealing to the senses, men as skilled in their dialectic as the Pharisaic rabbis with whom Paul had been trained and whose subtleties he had learned how to expose. But, so far as we know, this is a new experience for Paul to have a public dispute with these philosophical experts who had a natural contempt for all Jews and for rabbis in particular, though they found Paul a new type at any rate and so with some interest in him. "In Epicureanism, it was man's sensual nature which arrayed itself against the claims of the gospel; in Stoicism it was his self-righteousness and pride of intellect" (Hackett). Knowing calls the Stoic the Pharisee of philosophy and the Epicurean the Sadducee of philosophy. Socrates in this very agora used to try to interest the passers-by in some desire for better things. That was 450 years before Paul is challenged by these superficial sophistical Epicureans and Stoics. It is doubtful if Paul had ever met a more difficult situation. {What would this babblers say?} (Ti an theloi ho spermologos houtos legein?). The word for "babblers" means "seed-picker" or picker up of seeds (sperma, seed, leg, to collect) like a bird in the agora hopping about after chance seeds. Plutarch applies the word to crows that pick up grain in the fields. Demosthenes called Aeschines a spermologos. Eustathius uses it of a man hanging around in the markets picking up scraps of food that fell from the carts and so also of mere rhetoricians and plagiarists who picked up scraps of wisdom from others. Ramsay considers it here a piece of Athenian slang used to describe the picture of Paul seen by these philosophers who use it, for not all of them had it ("some," tines). Note the use of an and the present active optative theloi, conclusion of a fourth-class condition in a rhetorical question (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). It means, What would this picker up of seeds wish to say, if he should get off an idea? It is a contemptuous tone of supreme ridicule and doubtless Paul heard this comment. Probably the Epicureans made this sneer that Paul was a charlatan or quack. {Other some} (hoi de). But others, in contrast with the "some" just before. Perhaps the Stoics take this more serious view of Paul. {He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods} (zen "n daimoni "n dokei kataggeleus einai). This view is put cautiously by dokei (seems). Kataggeleus does not occur in the old Greek, though in ecclesiastical writers, but Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 99) gives an example of the word "on a marble stele recording a decree of the Mitylenaens in honour of the Emperor Augustus," where it is the herald of the games. Here alone in the N.T. Daimonion is used in the old Greek sense of deity or divinity whether good or bad, not in the N.T. sense of demons. Both this word and kataggeleus are used from the Athenian standpoint. Xenos is an old word for a guest-friend (Latin hospes) and then host (Ro 16:23), then for foreigner or stranger (Mt 25:31; Ac 17:21), new and so strange as here and Heb 13:9; 1Pe 4:12, and then aliens (Eph 2:12). This view of Paul is the first count against Socrates: Socrates does wrong, introducing new deities (adikei S "krat's, kaina daimonia eispher“n\, Xen. _Mem_. I). On this charge the Athenians voted the hemlock for their greatest citizen. What will they do to Paul? This Athens was more sceptical and more tolerant than the old Athens. But Roman law did not allow the introduction of a new religion (_religio illicita_). Paul was walking on thin ice though he was the real master philosopher and these Epicureans and Stoics were quacks. Paul had the only true philosophy of the universe and life with Jesus Christ as the centre (Col 1:12-20), the greatest of all philosophers as Ramsay justly terms him. But these men are mocking him. {Because he preached Jesus and the resurrection} (\hoti ton I^soun kai t^n anastasin eu^ggelizato\). Reason for the view just stated. Imperfect middle indicative of \euaggeliz“\, to "gospelize." Apparently these critics considered \anastasis\ (Resurrection) another deity on a par with Jesus. The Athenians worshipped all sorts of abstract truths and virtues and they misunderstood Paul on this subject. They will leave him as soon as he mentions the resurrection (verse 32). It is objected that Luke would not use the word in this sense here for his readers would not understand him. But Luke is describing the misapprehension of this group of philosophers and this interpretation fits in precisely.

17:19 {And they took hold of him} (\epilabomenoi de autou\). Second aorist middle participle of \epilamban“\, old verb, but in the N.T. only in the middle, here with the genitive \autou\ to lay hold of, but with no necessary sense of violence (Ac 9:27; 23:27; Mr 8:23), unless the idea is that Paul was to be tried before the Court of Areopagus for the crime of bringing in strange gods. But the day for that had passed in Athens. Even so it is not clear whether "{unto the Areopagus} (\epi ton Areion Pagon\') means the Hill of Mars (west of the Acropolis, north of the agora and reached by a flight of steps in the rock) or the court itself which met elsewhere as well as on the hills, usually in fact in the Stoa Basilica opening on the agora and near to the place where the dispute had gone on. Raphael's cartoon with Paul standing on Mars Hill has made us all familiar with the common view, but it is quite uncertain if it is true. There was not room on the summit for a large gathering. If Paul was brought before the Court of Areopagus (commonly called the Areopagus as here), it was not for trial as a criminal, but simply for examination concerning his new teaching in this university city whether it was strictly legal or not. Paul was really engaged in proselytism to turn the Athenians away from their old gods to Jesus Christ.

But "the court of refined and polished Athenians was very different from the rough provincial magistrates of Philippi, and the philosophers who presented Paul to their cognizance very different from the mob of Thessalonians" (Rackham). It was all very polite. {May we know?} (\Dunametha gn“nai\). Can we come to know (ingressive second aorist active infinitive). {This new teaching} (\h^ kain^ haut^ didach^). On the position of \haut^ see Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 700f. The question was prompted by courtesy, sarcasm, or irony. Evidently no definite charge was laid against Paul.

17:20 {For thou bringest certain strange things} (\xenizonta gar tina eispherei\). The very verb used by Xenophon (_Mem_. I) about Socrates. \Xenizonta\ is present active neuter plural participle of \xeniz“\ and from \xenos\ (verse 18), "things surprising or shocking us." {We would know therefore} (\boulometha oun gn“nai\). Very polite still, we wish or desire, and repeating \gn“nai\ (the essential point).

17:21 {Spent their time} (\^ukairoun\). Imperfect active of \eukaire“\. A late word to have opportunity (\eu, kairos\) from Polybius on. In the N.T. only here and Mr 6:31. They had time for, etc. This verse is an explanatory parenthesis by Luke. {Some new thing} (\ti kainoteron\). Literally "something newer" or "fresher" than the new, the very latest, the comparative of \kainos\. Demosthenes (_Philipp_. I. 43) pictures the Athenians "in the agora inquiring if anything newer is said" (\punthanomenoi kata t^ n agoran ei ti legetai ne“teron\). The new soon became stale with these itching and frivolous Athenians.

17:22 {Stood in the midst of the Areopagus} (\statheis en mes“i tou Areiou Pagou\). First aorist passive of \hist^mi\ used of Peter in 2:14. Majestic figure whether on Mars Hill or in the Stoa Basilica before the Areopagus Court. There would be a crowd of spectators and philosophers in either case and Paul seized the opportunity to preach Christ to this strange audience as he did in Caesarea before Herod Agrippa and the crowd of prominent people gathered by Festus for the entertainment. Paul does not speak as a man on trial, but as one trying to get a hearing for the gospel of Christ. {Somewhat superstitious} (\h“s deisidaimonesterous\). The Authorized Version has "too superstitious," the American Standard "very religious." \Deisidaim“n\ is a neutral word (from \deid“, to fear, and \daim“n\, deity). The Greeks used it either in the good sense of pious or religious or the bad sense of superstitious. Thayer suggests that Paul uses it "with kindly ambiguity." Page thinks that Luke uses the word to represent the religious feeling of the Athenians (_religiosus_) which bordered on superstition. The Vulgate has _superstitiosiores_. In 25:19 Festus uses the term \deisidaimonia for "religion." It seems unlikely that Paul should give this audience a slap in the face at the very start. The way one takes this adjective here colours Paul's whole speech before the Council of Areopagus. The comparative here as in verse 21 means more religions than usual (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 664f.), the object of the comparison not being expressed. The Athenians had a tremendous reputation for their devotion to religion, "full of idols" (verse 16).

17:23 {For} (\gar). Paul gives an illustration of their religiousness from his own experiences in their city. {The objects of your worship} (\ta sebasmata hum“n). Late word from \sebazomai, to worship. In N.T. only here and 2Th 2:4. The use of this word for temples, altars, statues, shows the conciliatory tone in the use of \deisidaimonesterous in verse 22. {An altar} (\b“mon). Old word, only here in the N.T. and the only mention of a heathen altar in the N.T. {With this inscription} (\en h“i epegegrapto). On which had been written (stood written), past perfect passive indicative of \epigraph“, old and common verb for writing on inscriptions (\epigraph“, Lu 23:38). {To an Unknown God} (\AGNOSTO THEO). Dative case, dedicated to. Pausanias (I. 1, 4) says that in Athens there are "altars to gods unknown" (\b“moi the“n agn“st“n). Epimenides in a pestilence advised the sacrifice of a sheep to the befitting god whoever he might be. If an altar was dedicated to the wrong deity, the Athenians feared the anger of the other gods. The only use in the N.T. of \agn“stos, old and common adjective (from \a\ privative and \gn“stos\ verbal of \gin“sk“\, to know). Our word agnostic comes from it. Here it has an ambiguous meaning, but Paul uses it though to a stern Christian philosopher it may be the "confession at once of a bastard philosophy and of a bastard religion" (Hort, _Hulsean Lectures_, p. 64). Paul was quick to use this confession on the part of the Athenians of a higher power than yet known to them. So he gets his theme from this evidence of a deeper religious sense in them and makes a most clever use of it with consummate skill. {In ignorance} (\agnoountes). Present active participle of \agnoe“, old verb from same root as \agn“stos to which Paul refers by using it.

{This set I forth unto you} (\touto ego kataggell“ humin). He is a \kataggeleus (verse 18) as they suspected of a God, both old and new, old in that they already worship him, new in that Paul knows who he is. By this master stroke he has brushed to one side any notion of violation of Roman law or suspicion of heresy and claims their endorsement of his new gospel, a shrewd and consummate turn. He has their attention now and proceeds to describe this God left out of their list as the one true and Supreme God. The later MSS. here read \hon--touton (whom--this one) rather than \ho--touto (what--this), but the late text is plainly an effort to introduce too soon the personal nature of God which comes out clearly in verse 24.

17:24 {The God that made the world} (\Ho theos ho poiˆsas ton kosmon). Not a god for this and a god for that like the 30,000 gods of the Athenians, but the one God who made the Universe (\kosmos\ on the old Greek sense of orderly arrangement of the whole universe). {And all things therein} (\kai panta ta en aut“i). All the details in the universe were created by this one God. Paul is using the words of Isa 42:5. The Epicureans held that matter was eternal. Paul sets them aside. This one God was not to be confounded with any of their numerous gods save with this "Unknown God." {Being Lord of heaven and earth} (\ouranou kai gˆs huparch“n kurios). \Kurios here owner, absolute possessor of both heaven and earth (Isa 45:7), not of just parts. {Dwelleth not in temples made with hands} (\ouken cheiropoiˆtois naois katoikei). The old adjective \cheiropoiˆtos (\cheir, poie“) already in Stephen's speech (7:48). No doubt Paul pointed to the wonderful Parthenon, supposed to be the home of Athene as Stephen denied that God dwelt alone in the temple in Jerusalem.

17:25 {As though he needed anything} (\prosdeomenos tinos). Present middle participle of \prosdeomai, to want besides, old verb, but here only in the N.T. This was strange doctrine for the people thought that the gods needed their offerings for full happiness. This self-sufficiency of God was taught by Philo and Lucretius, but Paul shows that the Epicurean missed it by putting God, if existing at all, outside the universe. {Seeing he himself giveth to all} (\autos didous pasin). This Supreme Personal God is the source of life, breath, and everything. Paul here rises above all Greek philosophers.

17:26 {And he made of one} (\epoiˆsen te ex henos). The word

\haimatos\ (blood) is absent from Aleph A B and is a later explanatory addition. What Paul affirms is the unity of the human race with a common origin and with God as the Creator. This view runs counter to Greek exclusiveness which treated other races as barbarians and to Jewish pride which treated other nations as heathen or pagan (the Jews were \laos\, the Gentiles \ethn^). The cosmopolitanism of Paul here rises above Jew and Greek and claims the one God as the Creator of the one race of men. The Athenians themselves claimed to be \antochthonous\ (indigenous) and a special creation. Zeno and Seneca did teach a kind of cosmopolitanism (really pantheism) far different from the personal God of Paul. It was Rome, not Greece, that carried out the moral ideas of Zeno. Man is part of the universe (verse 24) and God created (\epoi^sen\) man as he created (\poi^sas\) the all. {For to dwell} (\katoikein\). Infinitive (present active) of purpose, so as to dwell. {Having determined} (\horisas\). First aorist active participle of \horiz^~, old verb to make a horizon as already in 19:42 which see. Paul here touches God's Providence. God has revealed himself in history as in creation. His hand appears in the history of all men as well as in that of the Chosen People of Israel. {Appointed seasons} (\prostetagmenous kairous\). Not the weather as in 14:17, but "the times of the Gentiles" (\kairoi ethn^~n\) of which Jesus spoke (Lu 21:24). The perfect passive participle of \prostass^~, old verb to enjoin, emphasizes God's control of human history without any denial of human free agency as was involved in the Stoic Fate (\Heirmarmen^). {Bounds} (\horothesias\). Limits? Same idea in Job 12:23. Nations rise and fall, but it is not blind chance or hard fate. Thus there is an interplay between God's will and man's activities, difficult as it is for us to see with our shortened vision.

17:27 {That they should seek God} (\Z^tein ton theon\). Infinitive (present active) of purpose again. Seek him, not turn away from him as the nations had done (Ro 1:18-32). {If haply they might feel after him} (\ei ara ge ps^laph^seian auton\). First aorist active (Aeolic form) optative of \ps^lapha^~, old verb from \psa^~, to touch. So used by the Risen Jesus in his challenge to the disciples (Lu 24:39), by the Apostle John of his personal contact with Jesus (IJo 1:1), of the contact with Mount Sinai (Heb 12:18). Here it pictures the blind groping of the darkened heathen mind after God to "find him" (\heuroien\, second aorist active optative) whom they had lost. One knows what it is in a darkened room to feel along the walls for the door (De 28:29; Job 5:14; 12:25; Isa 59:10). Helen Keller, when told of God, said that she knew of him already, groping in the dark after him. The optative here with \ei\ is due to the condition of the fourth class (undetermined, but with vague hope of being determined) with aim also present (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1021). Note also \ara ge\ the inferential particle \ara\ with the delicate intensive particle \ge\. {Though he is not far from each one of us} (\kai ge ou makran apo henos hekastou h^m“n huparchonta\). More exactly with B L (\kai ge\ instead of \kaitoi\ or \kaitoi ge\), "and yet being not far from each one of us," a direct statement rather than a concessive one. The participle \huparchonta\ agrees with \auton\ and the negative \ou\ rather than the usual \me\ with the participle makes an emphatic negative. Note also the intensive particle \ge\.

17:28 {For in him} (\en autⁱ gar\). Proof of God's nearness, not stoic pantheism, but real immanence in God as God dwells in us. The three verbs (\z[“]men, kinoumetha, esmen\) form an ascending scale and reach a climax in God (life, movement, existence). \Kinoumetha\ is either direct middle present indicative (we move ourselves) or passive (we are moved). {As certain even of your own poets} (\h^s kai tines tⁿ kath' humfs poi^t“n\). "As also some of the poets among you." Aratus of Soli in Cilicia (ab. B.C. 270) has these very words in his _Ta Phainomena_ and Cleanthes, Stoic philosopher (300-220 B.C.) in his _Hymn to Zeus_ has \Ek sou gar genos esmen\. In 1Co 15:32 Paul quotes from Menander and in Tit 1:12 from Epimenides. J. Rendel Harris claims that he finds allusions in Paul's Epistles to Pindar, Aristophanes, and other Greek writers. There is no reason in the world why Paul should not have acquaintance with Greek literature, though one need not strain a point to prove it. Paul, of course, knew that the words were written of Zeus (Jupiter), not of Jehovah, but he applies the idea in them to his point just made that all men are the offspring of God.

17:29 {We ought not to think} (\ouk opheilomen nomizein\). It is a logical conclusion (\oun\, therefore) from the very language of Aratus and Cleanthes. {That the Godhead is like} (\to theion einai homoion\). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect discourse. \To theion\ is strictly "the divine" nature like \theiot^s\ (Ro 1:20) rather than like \theot^s\ (Col 2:9). Paul may have used \to theion\ here to get back behind all their notions of various gods to the real nature of God. The Athenians may even have used the term themselves. After \homoios\ (like) the associative instrumental case is used as with \chrus“i, argur“i, lith“i\.

{Graven by art and device of man} (\charagmati techn“s kai enthum“se“s anthr“pou\). Apposition with preceding and so \charagmati\ in associative instrumental case. Literally, graven work or sculpture from \charass“\, to engrave, old word, but here alone in N.T. outside of Revelation (the mark of the beast). Graven work of art (\techn“s\) or external craft, and of thought or device (\enthum“se“s\) or internal conception of man.

17:30 {The times of ignorance} (\tous chronous t“s agnoias\). The times before full knowledge of God came in Jesus Christ. Paul uses the very word for their ignorance (\agnoountes\) employed in verse 23. {Overlooked} (\huperid“n\). Second aorist active participle of \huperora“\ or \hupereid“\, old verb to see beyond, not to see, to overlook, not "to wink at" of the Authorized Version with the notion of condoning. Here only in the N.T. It occurs in the LXX in the sense of overlooking or neglecting (Ps 18:62; 55:1). But it has here only a negative force. God has all the time objected to the polytheism of the heathen, and now he has made it plain. In Wisdom 11:23 we have these words: "Thou overlookest the sins of men to the end they may repent." {But now} (\ta nun\). Accusative of general reference, "as to the now things or situation." All is changed now that Christ has come with the full knowledge of God. See also 27:22. {All everywhere} (\pantas pantachou\). No exceptions anywhere. {Repent} (\metanoein\). Present active infinitive of \metanoe“\ in indirect command, a permanent command of perpetual force. See on \metanoe“\ -Ac 2:38 and the Synoptic Gospels. This word was the message of the Baptist, of Jesus, of Peter, of Paul, this radical change of attitude and life.

17:31 {Inasmuch as} (\kathoti\). According as (\kata, hoti\). Old causal conjunction, but in N.T. only used in Luke's writings (Lu 1:7; 19:9; Ac 2:45; 4:35; 17:31). {Hath appointed a day} (\est“sen h“meran\). First aorist active indicative of \hist“mi\, to place, set. God did set the day in his counsel and he will fulfil it in his own time. {Will judge} (\mellei krinein\). Rather, is going to judge, \mell“\ and the present active infinitive of \krin“\.

Paul here quotes Ps 9:8 where \krinei\ occurs. {By the man whom he hath ordained} (\en andri h“i h^orisen). Here he adds to the Psalm the place and function of Jesus Christ, a passage in harmony with Christ's own words in Mt 25. \H^oi\ (whom) is attracted from the accusative, object of \h^orisen\ (first aorist active indicative of \horiz^o\) to the case of the antecedent \andri\. It has been said that Paul left the simple gospel in this address to the council of the Areopagus for philosophy. But did he? He skilfully caught their attention by reference to an altar to an Unknown God whom he interprets to be the Creator of all things and all men who overrules the whole world and who now commands repentance of all and has revealed his will about a day of reckoning when Jesus Christ will be Judge. He has preached the unity of God, the one and only God, has proclaimed repentance, a judgment day, Jesus as the Judge as shown by his Resurrection, great fundamental doctrines, and doubtless had much more to say when they interrupted his address. There is no room here for such a charge against Paul. He rose to a great occasion and made a masterful exposition of God's place and power in human history. {Whereof he hath given assurance} (pistin parasch^on). Second aorist active participle of \parech^o\, old verb to furnish, used regularly by Demosthenes for bringing forward evidence. Note this old use of \pistis\ as conviction or ground of confidence (Heb 11:1) like a note or title-deed, a conviction resting on solid basis of fact. All the other uses of \pistis\ grow out of this one from \peith^o\, to persuade. {In that he hath raised him from the dead} (anast^osas auton ek nekr^on). First aorist active participle of \anist^omi\, causal participle, but literally, "having raised him from the dead." This Paul knew to be a fact because he himself had seen the Risen Christ. Paul has here come to the heart of his message and could now throw light on their misapprehension about "Jesus and the Resurrection" (verse 18). Here Paul has given the proof of all his claims in the address that seemed new and strange to them.

17:32 {The resurrection of the dead} (anastasin nekr^on). Rather, "a resurrection of dead men." No article with either word. The Greeks believed that the souls of men lived on, but they had no conception of resurrection of the body. They had listened with respect till Paul spoke of the actual resurrection of Jesus from the dead as a fact, when they did not care to hear more. {Some mocked} (hoi men echleuazon). Imperfect active of \chleuaz^o\, a common verb (from \chleu^o\, jesting, mockery). Only here in the N.T. though late MSS. have it in 2:13 (best MSS.

\diachleuaz“\). Probably inchoative here, began to mock. In contempt at Paul's statement they declined to listen further to "this babblers" (verse 18) who had now lost what he had gained with this group of hearers (probably the light and flippant Epicureans). {But others} (\hoi de\). A more polite group like those who had invited him to speak (verse 19). They were unconvinced, but had better manners and so were in favour of an adjournment. This was done, though it is not clear whether it was a serious postponement or a courteous refusal to hear Paul further (probably this). It was a virtual dismissal of the matter. " It is a sad story--the noblest of ancient cities and the noblest man of history--and he never cared to look on it again" (Furneaux).

17:33 {Thus Paul went out from among them} (\hout“s ho Paulos ex`lthen ek mesou aut“n\). No further questions, no effort to arrest him, no further ridicule. He walked out never to return to Athens. Had he failed?

17:34 {Clave unto him and believed} (\koll`thentes aut“i episteusan\). First aorist passive of this strong word \kolla“\, to glue to, common in Acts (5:13; 8:29; 9:26; 10:28) No sermon is a failure which leads a group of men (\andres\) to believe (ingressive aorist of \pisteu“) in Jesus Christ. Many so-called great or grand sermons reap no such harvest. {Dionysius the Areopagite} (\Dionusios ho Areopagit`s\). One of the judges of the Court of the Areopagus. That of itself was no small victory. He was one of this college of twelve judges who had helped to make Athens famous. Eusebius says that he became afterwards bishop of the Church at Athens and died a martyr. {A woman named Damaris} (\gun`onomati Damaris\). A woman by name Damaris. Not the wife of Dionysius as some have thought, but an aristocratic woman, not necessarily an educated courtesan as Furneaux holds. And there were "others" (\heteroi\) with them, a group strong enough to keep the fire burning in Athens. It is common to say that Paul in 1Co 2:1-5 alludes to his failure with philosophy in Athens when he failed to preach Christ crucified and he determined never to make that mistake again. On the other hand Paul determined to stick to the Cross of Christ in spite of the fact that the intellectual pride and superficial culture of Athens had prevented the largest success. As he faced Corinth with its veneer of culture and imitation of philosophy and sudden wealth he would go on with the same gospel of the Cross, the only gospel that Paul knew or preached. And it was a great thing to give the world a sermon like that preached in Athens.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Acts: Chapter 17)

18:1 {To Corinth} (\eis Korinthon). Mummius had captured and destroyed Corinth B.C. 146. It was restored by Julius Caesar B.C. 46 as a boom town and made a colony. It was now the capital of the province of Achaia and the chief commercial city of Greece with a cosmopolitan population. It was only fifty miles from Athens. The summit of Acrocorinthus was 1,800 feet high and the ports of Cenchreae and Lechaem and the Isthmus across which ships were hauled gave it command of the trade routes between Asia and Rome. The temple of Aphrodite on the Acrocorinthus had a thousand consecrated prostitutes and the very name to Corinthianize meant immorality. Not the Parthenon with Athene faced Paul in Corinth, but a worse situation. Naturally many Jews were in such a mart of trade. Philippi, Thessalonica, Beroea, Athens, all had brought anxiety to Paul. What could he expect in licentious Corinth?

18:2 {Aquila} (\Akulan). Luke calls him a Jew from Pontus, apparently not yet a disciple, though there were Jews from Pontus at the great Pentecost who were converted (2:9). Aquila who made the famous A.D. translation of the O.T. was also from Pontus. Paul "found" (\heur“n, second aorist active participle of \heurisk“) though we do not know how. Edersheim says that a Jewish guild always kept together whether in street or synagogue so that by this bond they probably met. {Latently come from Italy} (\prospat“s el`luthota apo t`s Italias). Second perfect participle of \erchomai. _Koin_, adverb, here only in the N.T., from adjective \prospatos (\pro, spha“\ or \sphaz“, to kill), lately slaughtered and so fresh or recent (Heb 10:20). {With his wife Priscilla} (\kai Priskillan gunaika autou). Diminutive of \Priska (Ro 16:3; 1Co 16:19). Prisca is a name in the Acilian family and the Prisci was the name of another noble clan. Aquila may have been a freedman like many Jews in Rome. Her name comes before his in verses 18,26; Ro 16:3; 2Ti 4:9. {Because Claudius had commanded} (\dia to diatetachenai Klaudion). Perfect active articular infinitive of \diatass“, old verb to dispose, arrange, here with accusative of general reference. \Dia here is causal sense, "because of the having ordered as to Claudius." This was about A.D. 49, done, Suetonius says (Claudius C. 25), because "the Jews were in a state of constant tumult at the instigation of one Chrestus" (probably among the Jews about Christ so pronounced). At any rate Jews were unpopular in Rome for Tiberius had deported 4,000 to Sardinia. There were 20,000 Jews in Rome. Probably mainly those implicated in the riots actually left.

18:3 {Because he was of the same trade} (dia to homotechnon einai). Same construction with dia as above. Homotechnon is an old word (homos, techn), though here alone in N.T. Rabbi Judah says: "He that teacheth not his son a trade, doth the same as if he taught him to be a thief." So it was easy for Paul to find a home with these "tentmakers by trade" (sk^hnoipoioi tⁱ technⁱ). Late word from sk^hn^h and poie^a, here only in the N.T. They made portable tents of leather or of cloth of goat's hair. So Paul lived in this home with this noble man and his wife, all the more congenial if already Christians which they soon became at any rate. They worked as partners in the common trade. Paul worked for his support elsewhere, already in Thessalonica (1Th 2:9; 2Th 3:8) and later at Ephesus with Aquila and Priscilla (Ac 18:18,26; 20:34; 1Co 16:19). They moved again to Rome (Ro 16:3) and were evidently a couple of considerable wealth and generosity. It was a blessing to Paul to find himself with these people. So he "abode" (emenen, imperfect active) with them and "they wrought" (rgazonto, imperfect middle), happy and busy during week days.

18:4 {He reasoned} (dielegeto). Imperfect middle, same form as in 17:17 about Paul's work in Athens, here only on the Sabbaths. {Persuaded} (epeithen). Imperfect active, conative, he tried to persuade both Jews and Greeks (God-fearers who alone would come).

18:5 {Was constrained by the word} (suneicheto tⁱ log^ai). This is undoubtedly the correct text and not tⁱ pneumatⁱ of the Textus Receptus, but suneicheto is in my opinion the direct middle imperfect indicative, not the imperfect passive as the translations have it (Robertson, Grammar, p. 808). Paul held himself together or completely to the preaching instead of just on Sabbaths in the synagogue (verse 4). The coming of Silas and Timothy with the gifts from Macedonia (1Th 3:6; 2Co 11:9; Php 4:15) set Paul free from tent-making for a while so that he began to devote himself (inchoative imperfect) with fresh consecration to preaching. See the active in 2Co 5:14. He was now also assisted by Silas and Timothy (2Co 1:19). {Testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ} (\diamarturomenos tois Ioudaiois einai ton Christon I'soun\). Paul's witness everywhere (9:22; 17:3). This verb \diamarturomenos\ occurs in 2:40 (which see) for Peter's earnest witness. Perhaps daily now in the synagogue he spoke to the Jews who came. \Einai\ is the infinitive in indirect discourse (assertion) with the accusative of general reference. By \ton Christon\ Paul means "the Messiah." His witness is to show to the Jews that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah.

18:6 {When they opposed themselves} (\antitassomen“n aut“n\). Genitive absolute with present middle (direct middle again) of \antitass“\, old verb to range in battle array (\tass“\) face to face with or against (\anti\). In the N.T. only here and Ro 13:2; Jas 4:6; 1Pe 5:5. Paul's fresh activity roused the rabbis as at Antioch in Pisidia and at Thessalonica in concerted opposition and railing (blasphemy). {He shook out his raiment} (\ektinaxamenos ta himatia\). First aorist middle of \ektinass“\, old verb, in the N.T. only here as in 13:51 (middle) and Mr 6:11; Mt 10:15 where active voice occurs of shaking out dust also. Vivid and dramatic picture here like that in Ne 5:13, "undoubtedly a very exasperating gesture" (Ramsay), but Paul was deeply stirred. {Your blood be upon your own heads} (\To haima hum“n epi t^n kephal^n hum“n\). As in Eze 3:18f., 33:4,8f.; 2Sa 1:16. Not as a curse, but "a solemn disclaimer of responsibility" by Paul (Page) as in Ac 20:26. The Jews used this very phrase in assuming responsibility for the blood of Jesus (Mt 27:25). Cf. Mt 23:35. {I am clean} (\katharos eg“\). Pure from your blood. Repeats the claim made in previous sentence. Paul had done his duty. {From henceforth} (\apo tou nun\). Turning point reached in Corinth. He will devote himself to the Gentiles, though Jews will be converted there also. Elsewhere as in Ephesus (19:1-10) and in Rome (Ac 28:23-28) Paul will preach also to Jews.

18:7 {Titus Justus} (\Titou Ioustou\). So Aleph E Vulgate, while B has \Titiau Ioustou\, while most MSS. have only \Ioustou\). Evidently a Roman citizen and not Titus, brother of Luke, of Ga 2:1. We had Barsabbas Justus (Ac 1:23) and Paul speaks of Jesus Justus (Co 4:11). The Titii were a famous family of potters in Corinth. This Roman was a God-fearer whose house "joined hard to the synagogue" (\^n sunomoroussa t^i sunag“g^i\).

Periphrastic imperfect active of \sunomore“, a late (Byzantine) word, here only in the N.T., followed by the associative instrumental case, from \sunomoros\ (\sun, \homoros\ from \homos\, joint, and \horos\, boundary) having joint boundaries, right next to. Whether Paul chose this location for his work because it was next to the synagogue, we do not know, but it caught the attendants at the synagogue worship. In Ephesus when Paul had to leave the synagogue he went to the school house of Tyrannus (19:9f.). The lines are being drawn between the Christians and the Jews, drawn by the Jews themselves.

18:8 {Crispus} (\Krispos). Though a Jew and ruler of the synagogue (cf. 13:15), he had a Latin name. Paul baptized him (1Co 1:14) himself, perhaps because of his prominence, apparently letting Silas and Timothy baptize most of the converts (1Co 1:14-17). Probably he followed Paul to the house of Titus Justus. It looked like ruin for the synagogue. {With all his house} (\sun hol“i t“i oik“i autou). Another household conversion, for Crispus "believed (\episteusen) in the Lord with all his house." {Hearing believed and were baptized} (\akouontes episteuon kai ebaptizonto). Present active participle and imperfect indicatives active and passive, expressing repetition for the "many" others who kept coming to the Lord in Corinth. It was a continual revival after Silas and Timothy came and a great church was gathered here during the nearly two years that Paul laboured in Corinth (possibly A.D. 51 and 52).

18:9 {Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace} (\M^ phobou, alla lalei kai m^ si“p^s^is). Literally, "stop being afraid (\m^ \ with present middle imperative of \phobe“), but go on speaking (present active imperative of \lale“) and do not become silent (\m^ and first aorist active of \si“pa“\, ingressive aorist)." Evidently there were signs of a gathering storm before this vision and message from the Lord Jesus came to Paul one night. Paul knew only too well what Jewish hatred could do as he had learned it at Damascus, Jerusalem, Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, Thessalonica, Beroea. He had clearly moments of doubt whether he had not better move on or become silent for a while in Corinth. Every pastor knows what it is to have such moods and moments. In 2Th 3:2 (written at this time) we catch Paul's dejection of spirits. He was like Elijah (1Ki 19:4) and Jeremiah (Jer 15:15ff.).

18:10 {Because I am with thee} (\dioti eg“ eimi meta sou). Jesus had given this promise to all believers (Mt 28:20) and here he renews it to Paul. This promise changes Paul's whole outlook. Jesus had spoken to Paul before, on the way to Damascus (9:4), in Jerusalem (22:17f.), in Troas (16:9), in great crises of his life. He will hear him again (23:11; 27:23). Paul knows the voice of Jesus. {No man shall set on thee to harm thee} (\oudeis epith^setai soi tou kak"sai se). Future direct middle indicative of \epitith^mi, old and common verb, here in direct middle to lay or throw oneself upon, to attack. Jesus kept that promise in Corinth for Paul. \Tou kak"sai is genitive articular infinitive of purpose of \kako", to do harm to. Paul would now face all the rabbis without fear. {I have much people} (\laos estin moi polus). Dative of personal interest. "There is to me much people," not yet saved, but who will be if Paul holds on. There is the problem for every preacher and pastor, how to win the elect to Christ.

18:11 {A year and six months} (\eniauton kai m^nas hex). Accusative of extent of time. How much time before this incident he had been there we do not know. He was in Corinth probably a couple of years in all. His work extended beyond the city (2Co 11:10) and there was a church in Cenchreae (Ro 16:1).

18:12 {When Gallio was proconsul of Achaia} (\Galli"nos de anthupatou ontos t^s Achaias). Genitive absolute of present participle \ontos. Brother of Seneca the Stoic (Nero's tutor) and uncle of Lucan the author of the \Pharsalia. His original name was M. Annaeus Novatus till he was adopted by Gallio the rhetorician. The family was Spanish. Gallio was a man of culture and refinement and may have been chosen proconsul of Achaia for this reason. Statius calls him "_dulcis Gallio_." Seneca says of him: _Nemo enim mortalium uni tam dulcis quam hic omnibus_ (No one of mortals is so pleasant to one person as he is to all).

Luke alone among writers says that he was proconsul, but Seneca speaks of his being in Achaia where he caught fever, a corroboration of Luke. But now a whitish grey limestone inscription from the Hagios Elias quarries near Delphi (a letter of Claudius to Delphi) has been found which definitely names Gallio as proconsul of Achaia (\authupatos t^s Achaias). The province of Achaia after various shifts (first senatorial, then imperial) back and forth with Macedonia, in A.D. 44 Claudius gave back to the Senate with proconsul as the title of the governor. It is amazing how Luke is confirmed whenever a new discovery is made. The discovery of this inscription has thrown light also on the date of Paul's work in Corinth as it says that Gallio came in the 26th acclamation of Claudius as Emperor in A.D. 51, that would definitely fix the time of Paul in Corinth as A.D. 50 and 51 (or 51 and 52). Deissmann has a full and able discussion of the whole matter in Appendix I to his _St. Paul_. {Rose up} (\katepest^san). Second aorist active of \kat-eph-ist^mi, intransitive, to take a stand against, a double compound verb found nowhere else. They took a stand (\est^san) against (\kata, down on, \epi, upon), they made a dash or rush at Paul as if they would stand it no longer. {Before the judgment seat} (\epi to b^ma). See on 12:21. The proconsul was sitting in the basilica in the forum or agora. The Jews had probably heard of his reputation for moderation and sought to make an impression as they had on the praetors of Philippi by their rush (\sunepest^, 16:22). The new proconsul was a good chance also (25:2). So for the second time Paul faces a Roman proconsul (Sergius Paulus, 13:7) though under very different circumstances.

18:13 {Contrary to the law} (\para ton nomon). They did not accuse Paul of treason as in Thessalonica, perhaps Paul had been more careful in his language here. They bring the same charge here that the owners of the slave-girl brought in Philippi (16:21) Perhaps they fear to go too far with Gallio, for they are dealing with a Roman proconsul, not with the politarchs of Thessalonica. The Jewish religion was a _religio licita_ and they were allowed to make proselytes, but not among Roman citizens. To prove that Paul was acting contrary to Roman law (for Jewish law had no standing with Gallio though the phrase has a double meaning) these Jews had to show that Paul was making converts in ways that violated the Roman regulations on that subject. The accusation as made did not show it nor did they produce any evidence to do it. The verb used \anapeithei means to stir up by persuasion (old verb here only in the N.T.), a thing that he had a right to do.

18:14 {When Paul was about to open his mouth} (\mellontos tou Paulou anoigein to stoma). Genitive absolute again. Before Paul could speak, Gallio cut in and ended the whole matter. According to their own statement Paul needed no defence. {Wrong} (\adik^ma). _Injuria_. Old word, a wrong done one. In N.T. only here, Ac 24:20; Re 18:5. Here it may mean a legal wrong to the state. {Wicked villainy} (\rhfidiourg^ma). A crime, act of a criminal, from \rhfidourgos\ (\rhfidios\, easy, \ergon\, work), one who does a thing with ease, adroitly, a "slick citizen."

{Reason would that I should bear with you} (\kata logon an aneschomⁿ humⁿ\). Literally, "according to reason I should have put up with you (or held myself back from you)." This condition is the second class (determined as unfulfilled) and means that the Jews had no case against Paul in a Roman court. The verb in the conclusion (\aneshomⁿ\) is second aorist middle indicative and means with the ablative \humⁿ\ "I should have held myself back (direct middle) from you (ablative). The use of \an\ makes the form of the condition plain.

18:15 {Questions} (\z^tˆmata\). Plural, contemptuous, "a parcel of questions" (Knowling). {About words} (\peri logou\). Word, singular, talk, not deed or fact (\ergon, factum\). {And names} (\kai onomatⁿ\). As to whether "Jesus" should also be called "Christ" or "Messiah." The Jews, Gallio knew, split hairs over words and names. {And your own law} (\kai nomou tou kath' humfs\). Literally, "And law that according to you." Gallio had not been caught in the trap set for him. What they had said concerned Jewish law, not Roman law at all. {Look to it yourselves} (\opsesthe autoi\). The volitive future middle indicative of \horaⁿ\ often used (cf. Mt 27:4) where an imperative could be employed (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 874). The use of \autoi\ (yourselves) turns it all over to them. {I am not minded} (\ou boulomai\). I am not willing, I do not wish. An absolute refusal to allow a religious question to be brought before a Roman civil court. This decision of Gallio does not establish Christianity in preference to Judaism. It simply means that the case was plainly that Christianity was a form of Judaism and as such was not opposed to Roman law. This decision opened the door for Paul's preaching all over the Roman Empire. Later Paul himself argues (Ro 9-11) that in fact Christianity is the true, the spiritual Judaism.

18:16 {He drave them} (\ap^ˆlasen autous\). First aorist active indicative of \apelaunⁿ\, old word, but here alone in the N.T. The Jews were stunned by this sudden blow from the mild proconsul and wanted to linger to argue the case further, but they had to go.

18:17 {They all laid hold on Sosthenes} (\epilabomenoi pantes S^ˆsthenⁿ\). See 16:19; 17:19 for the same form. Here is violent hostile reaction against their leader who had failed so miserably. {Beat him} (\etupton). Inchoative imperfect active, began to beat him, even if they could not beat Paul. Sosthenes succeeded Crispus (verse 8) when he went over to Paul. The beating did Sosthenes good for he too finally is a Christian (1Co 1:1), a co-worker with Paul whom he had sought to persecute. {And Gallio cared for none of these things} (\kai ouden tout“n t“i Galli“ni emelen). Literally, "no one of these things was a care to Gallio." The usually impersonal verb (\melei, emelen\, imperfect active) here has the nominative as in Lu 10:40. These words have been often misunderstood as a description of Gallio's lack of interest in Christianity, a religious indifferentist. But that is quite beside the mark. Gallio looked the other way with a blind eye while Sosthenes got the beating which he richly deserved. That was a small detail for the police court, not for the proconsul's concern. Gallio shows up well in Luke's narrative as a clear headed judge who would not be led astray by Jewish subterfuges and with the courage to dismiss a mob.

18:18 {Having tarried after this yet many days} (\eti prosmeinas h^meras hikanas). First aorist (constative) active participle of \prosmen“, old verb, to remain besides (\pros\ as in 1Ti 1:3) and that idea is expressed also in \eti\ (yet). The accusative is extent of time. On Luke's frequent use of \hikanos see 8:11. It is not certain that this period of "considerable days" which followed the trial before Gallio is included in the year and six months of verse 11 or is in addition to it which is most likely. Vindicated as Paul was, there was no reason for haste in leaving, though he usually left after such a crisis was passed. {Took his leave} (\apotaxamenos). First aorist middle (direct), old verb, to separate oneself, to bid farewell (Vulgate _valefacio_), as in verse 21; Mr 6:46. {Sailed thence} (\exeplei). Imperfect active of \ekple“, old and common verb, inchoative imperfect, started to sail. Only Priscilla and Aquila are mentioned as his companions though others may have been in the party. {Having shorn his head} (\keiramenos t^h kephal^h). First aorist middle (causative) of \keir“, old verb to shear (sheep) and the hair as also in 1Co 11:6. The participle is masculine and so cannot refer to Priscilla. Aquila comes next to the participle, but since mention of Priscilla and Aquila is parenthetical and the two other participles (\prosmeinas, apotaxamenos) refer to Paul it seems clear that this one does also. {For he had a vow} (\eichen gar euch^h). Imperfect active showing the continuance of the vow up till this time in Cenchreae, the port of Corinth when it expired. It was not a Nazarite vow which could be absolved only in Jerusalem. It is possible that the hair was only polled or trimmed, cut shorter, not "shaved" (\xura“\ as in 21:24) for there is a distinction as both verbs are contrasted in 1Co 11:6 (\keirfsthai ^ xurfsthai\). It is not clear what sort of a vow Paul had taken nor why he took it. It may have been a thank offering for the outcome at Corinth (Hackett). Paul as a Jew kept up his observance of the ceremonial law, but refused to impose it on the Gentiles.

18:19 {Came} (\kat^nt^san\). Came down, as usual in speaking of coming to land (16:1). {To Ephesus} (\eis Epheson\). This great city on the Cayster, the capital of the Province of Asia, the home of the worship of Diana (Artemis) with a wonderful temple, Paul at last had reached, though forbidden to come on the way out on this tour (16:6). Here Paul will spend three years after his return from Jerusalem. {He left them there} (\kakeinous katelipen autou\). That is, Priscilla and Aquila he left (second aorist active indicative) here (\autou\). But Luke mentions the departure by way of anticipation before he actually went away (verse 21). {But he himself} (\autos de\). Paul again the leading person in the narrative. On this occasion he may have gone alone into the synagogue. {He reasoned} (\dielexato\). Luke's favourite word for Paul's synagogue discourses (17:2,17; 18:4 which see) as also 19:8,9.

18:20 {When they asked him} (\er“t“nt“n aut“n\). Genitive absolute of present participle of \er“ta“, old verb to ask a question, common in _Koin,_ to make a request as here. {He consented not} (\ouk epeneusen\). First aorist active indicative of \epineu“, old verb to express approval by a nod, only here in the N.T.

18:21 {I shall return} (\anakamps“\). Future active indicative of \anakampt“, old verb to bend back, turn back (Mt 2:2). {If God will} (\tou theou thelontos\). Genitive absolute of present active participle. This expression (\ean\ with subjunctive) occurs also in 1Co 4:19; 16:7; Jas 4:15. Such phrases were common among Jews, Greeks, and Romans, and are today. It is simply a recognition that we are in God's hands. The Textus Receptus has here a sentence not in the best MSS.: "I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem." This addition by D and other documents may have been due to a desire to give a reason for the language in verse 22 about "going up" to Jerusalem. Whether Paul said it or not, it was in the spring when he made this journey with a company of pilgrims probably going to the feast of Pentecost in Jerusalem. We know that later Paul did try to reach Jerusalem for Pentecost (20:16) and succeeded. As the ship was leaving, Paul had to go, but with the hope of returning soon to Ephesus as he did.

18:22 {He went up and saluted the church} (\anabas kai aspamenos tⁿ ekkl^{sian}). The language could refer to the church in Caesarea where Paul had just landed, except for several things. The going up (\anabas\, second aorist active participle of \anabain) is the common way of speaking of going to Jerusalem which was up from every direction save from Hebron. It was the capital of Palestine as people in England today speaking of going up to London. Besides "he went down to Antioch" (\kateb^{eis} Antiocheian\, second aorist active indicative of \katabain) which language suits better leaving Jerusalem than Caesarea. Moreover, there was no special reason for this trip to Caesarea, but to Jerusalem it was different. Here Paul saluted the church in the fourth of his five visits after his conversion (9:26; 11:30; 15:4; 18:22; 21:17). The apostles may or may not have been in the city, but Paul had friends in Jerusalem now. Apparently he did not tarry long, but returned to Antioch to make a report of his second mission tour as he had done at the close of the first when he and Barnabas came back (14:26-28). He had started on this tour with Silas and had picked up Timothy and Luke, but came back alone. He had a great story to tell.

18:23 {Having spent some time} (\poi^{sas} chronon tina). Literally, having done some time. How long we do not know, probably not long. There are those who place the visit of Peter here to which Paul alludes in Ga 2:11ff. and which we have located while Paul was here the last time (Ac 15:35). {He departed} (\ex^{lthen}). Thus simply and alone Paul began the third mission tour without a Barnabas or a Silas. {Went through} (\dierchomenos). Present middle participle, going through. {The region of Galatia and Phrygia} (\ten Galatikⁿ ch^{ran} kai Phrygian). See on ^{Ac} 16:6 for discussion of this phrase, here in reverse order, passing through the Galatic region and then Phrygia. Does Luke mean Lycaonia (Derbe and Lystra) and Phrygia (Iconium and Pisidian Antioch)? Or does he mean the route west through the old Galatia and the old Phrygia on west into Asia?

 The same conflict exists here over the South Galatian and the North Galatian theories. Phrygia is apparently distinguished from the Galatic region here. It is apparently A.D. 52 when Paul set out on this tour. {In order} (\kathex^s\). In succession as in 11:4, though the names of the cities are not given.

{Stabliſhing} (\st^riz^“n\). As he did in the second tour (15:41, \epist^riz^“n\, compound of this same verb) which see.

18:24 {Apolloſ} (\Apoll^“s\). Genitive \-“\ Attic second declension. Probably a contraction of \Apollonios\ as D has it here. {An Alexandrian} (\Alexandreus\). Alexander the Great founded this city B.C. 332 and placed a colony of Jews there which flourished greatly, one-third of the population at this time. There was a great university and library there. The Jewish-Alexandrian philosophy developed here of which Philo was the chief exponent who was still living. Apolloſ was undoubtedly a man of the ſchools and a man of parts. {A learned man} (\an^r logios\). Or eloquent, as the word can mean either a man of words (like one "wordy," verbose) or a man of ideas, ſince \logos\ was uſed either for reaſon or ſpeech. Apolloſ was doubtleſſ both learned (mighty in the Scriptures) and eloquent, though eloquence varies greatly in people's ideas. {Mighty in the Scriptures} (\dunatos ^“n en tais graphais\). Being powerful (\dunatos\ verbal of \dunamai\ and ſame root as \dunamis\, dynamite, dynamo) in the Scriptures (in the knowledge and the uſe of the Scriptures), as ſhould be true of every preacher. There is no excuſe for ignorance of the Scriptures on the part of preachers, the profeſſed interpreters of the word of God. The laſt lecture made to the New Teſtament Engliſh claſſ in Southern Baſtiſt Theological Seminary by John A. Broaduſ was on this paſſage with a plea for hiſ ſtudentſ to be mighty in the Scriptures. In Alexandria Clement of Alexandria and Origen taught in the Chriſtian theological ſchool.

18:25 {Had been inſtructed in the way of the Lord} (\^n kat^ch^menos t^“n hodon tou kuriou\). Periphratic paſt perfect paſſive of \kat^che^“\, rare in the old Greek and not in the LXX from \kata\ and ^che^“\ (\^ch^“\, ſound) as in Lu 1:4, to re-ſound, to re-echo, to teach by repeated dinning into the earſ as the Arabſ do now, to teach orally by word of mouth (and ear). Here the accuſative of the thing (the word) is retained in the paſſive like with \didask^“\, to teach (Robertſon, _Grammar_, p.

485). Being fervent in spirit (\ze“n t“i pneumatī). Boiling (from \ze“\, to boil, old and common verb, in N.T. only here and Ro 12:11) like boiling water or yeast. The Latin verb _ferveo_ means to boil or ferment. Locative case after it. {Taught carefully} (\edidasken akrib“s). Imperfect active, was teaching or inchoative, began teaching, accurately. He taught accurately what he knew, a fine gift for any preacher. {Only the baptism of John} (\monon to baptisma I“anou). It was a {baptism of repentance} (marked by repentance) as Paul said (13:24; 19:4), as Peter said (2:38) and as the Gospels tell (Mr 1:4, etc.). That is to say, Apollos knew only what the Baptist knew when he died, but John had preached the coming of the Messiah, had baptized him, had identified him as the Son of God, had proclaimed the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but had not seen the Cross, the Resurrection of Jesus, nor the great Day of Pentecost.

18:26 {They took him unto them} (\proselabonto). Second aorist middle (indirect) indicative of \proslamban“, old verb, to their home and heart as companion (cf. the rabbis and the ruffians in 17:5). Probably for dinner after service. {Expounded} (\exethento). Second aorist (effective) middle indicative of \ektithēmi seen already in 11:4, to set forth. {More carefully} (\akribesteron). Comparative adverb of \akrib“s. More accurately than he already knew. Instead of abusing the young and brilliant preacher for his ignorance they (particularly Priscilla) gave him the fuller story of the life and work of Jesus and of the apostolic period to fill up the gaps in his knowledge. It is a needed and delicate task, this thing of teaching gifted young ministers. They do not learn it all in schools. More of it comes from contact with men and women rich in grace and in the knowledge of God's ways. He was not rebaptized, but only received fuller information.

18:27 {Encouraged him} (\protrepsamenoi). First aorist middle participle of \protrep“, old verb, to urge forward, to push on, only here in the N.T. Since Apollos wanted (\boulomenou autou\, genitive absolute) to go into Achaia, the brethren (including others besides Priscilla and Aquila) wrote (\egrapsan) a letter of introduction to the disciples in Corinth to receive him (\apodexasthai auton), a nice letter of recommendation and a sincere one also. But Paul will refer to this very letter later (2Co 3:1) and observe that he himself needed no such letter of commendation. The Codex Bezae adds here that certain Corinthians who had come to Ephesus heard Apollos and begged him to cross over with them to Corinth. This may very well be the way that Apollos was led to go. Preachers often receive calls because visitors from other places hear them. Priscilla and Aquila were well known in Corinth and their approval would carry weight. But they did not urge Apollos to stay longer in Ephesus. {Helped them much} (\sunebaletō polu\). Second aorist middle indicative of \sunball\ used in 17:18 for "dispute," old verb to throw together, in the N.T. always in the active save here in the middle (common in Greek writers) to put together, to help. {Through grace} (\dia t̃s charitos\). This makes sense if taken with "believed," as Hackett does (cf. 13:48; 16:14) or with "helped" (1Co 3:10; 15:10; 2Co 1:12). Both are true as the references show.

18:28 {Powerfully} (\euton̄s\). Adverb from \eutonos\ (\eu, well, \tein̄, to stretch), well-strung, at full stretch. {Confuted} (\diakat̄legcheto\). Imperfect middle of the double compound verb \dia-kat-elegchomai\, to confute with rivalry in a contest, here alone. The old Greek has \dielegch̄, to convict of falsehood, but not this double compound which means to argue down to a finish. It is the imperfect tense and does not mean that Apollos convinced these rabbis, but he had the last word. {Publicly} (\d̄mosifi\). See 5:18; 16:37. In open meeting where all could see the victory of Apollos. {Shewing} (\epideiknus\). Present active participle of \epideiknumi\, old verb to set forth so that all see. {By the Scriptures} (\dia t̄n graph̄n\). In which Apollos was so "mighty" (verse 24) and the rabbis so weak for they knew the oral law better than the written (Mr 7:8-12). {That Jesus was the Christ} (\einai ton Christon Īsoun\). Infinitive and the accusative in indirect assertion. Apollos proclaims the same message that Paul did everywhere (17:3). He had not yet met Paul, but he had been instructed by Priscilla and Aquila. He is in Corinth building on the foundation laid so well by Paul (1Co 3:4-17). Luke has here made a brief digression from the story of Paul, but it helps us understand Paul better. There are those who think that Apollos wrote Hebrews, a guess that may be correct.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

19:1 {While Apollos was at Corinth} (\en t“i ton Apoll“ einai en Korinth“i). Favourite idiom with Luke, \en\ with the locative of the articular infinitive and the accusative of general reference (Lu 1:8; 2:27, etc.). {Having passed through the upper country} (\dielthonta ta an“terika mer^). Second aorist active participle of \dierchomai\, accusative case agreeing with \Paulon\, accusative of general reference with the infinitive \elthein\, idiomatic construction with \egeneto\. The word for "upper" (\an“terika\) is a late form for \an“tera\ (Lu 14:10) and occurs in Hippocrates and Galen. It refers to the highlands (cf. Xenophon's _Anabasis_) and means that Paul did not travel the usual Roman road west by Colossae and Laodicea in the Lycus Valley, cities that he did not visit (Col 2:1). Instead he took the more direct road through the Cayster Valley to Ephesus. Codex Bezae says here that Paul wanted to go back to Jerusalem, but that the Holy Spirit bade him to go into Asia where he had been forbidden to go in the second tour (16:6). Whether the upper "parts" (\mer^\) here points to North Galatia is still a point of dispute among scholars. So he came again to Ephesus as he had promised to do (18:21). The province of Asia included the western part of Asia Minor. The Romans took this country B.C. 130. Finally the name was extended to the whole continent. It was a jewel in the Roman empire along with Africa and was a senatorial province. It was full of great cities like Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, Laodicea (the seven churches of Re 2:3), Colossae, Hierapolis, Apamea, to go no further. Hellenism had full sway here. Ephesus was the capital and chief city and was a richer and larger city than Corinth. It was located at the entrance to the valley of the Maeander to the east. Here was the power of Rome and the splendour of Greek culture and the full tide of oriental superstition and magic. The Temple of Artemis was one of the seven wonders of the world. While in Ephesus some hold that Paul at this time wrote the Epistle to the Galatians after his recent visit there, some that he did it before his recent visit to Jerusalem. But it is still possible that he wrote it from Corinth just before writing to Rome, a point to discuss later. {Certain disciples} (\tinas math^tas\). Who were they? Apollos had already gone to Corinth.

They show no connection with Priscilla and Aquila. Luke calls them "disciples" or "learners" (\math^tas) because they were evidently sincere though crude and ignorant. There is no reason at all for connecting these uninformed disciples of the Baptist with Apollos. They were floating followers of the Baptist who drifted into Ephesus and whom Paul found. Some of John's disciples clung to him till his death (Joh 3:22-25; Lu 7:19; Mt 14:12). Some of them left Palestine without the further knowledge of Jesus that came after his death and some did not even know that, as turned out to be the case with the group in Ephesus.

19:2 {Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed?} (\ei pneuma hagion elabete pisteusantes?). This use of \Pi in a direct question occurs in 1:6, is not according to the old Greek idiom, but is common in the LXX and the N.T. as in Lu 13:23 which see (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 916). Apparently Paul was suspicious of the looks or conduct of these professed disciples. The first aorist active participle \pisteusantes is simultaneous with the second aorist active indicative \elabete and refers to the same event. {Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Spirit was} (All' oude ei pneuma hagion estin^kousamen). The reply of these ignorant disciples is amazing. They probably refer to the time of their baptism and mean that, when baptized, they did not hear whether (\ei in indirect question) the Holy Spirit was (\estin retained as in Joh 7:39). Plain proof that they knew John's message poorly.

19:3 {Into what} (\eis ti). More properly, {Unto what} or {on what basis} (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 592). Clearly, Paul felt they had received a poor baptism with no knowledge of the Holy Spirit. {John's baptism} (\to I^anou baptisma). Last mention of John the Baptist in the N.T. They had been dipped in other words, but they had not grasped the significance of the ordinance.

19:4 {With the baptism of repentance} (\baptisma metanoias). Cognate accusative with \ebaptisen and the genitive \metanoias describing the baptism as marked by (case of species or genus), not as conveying, repentance just as in Mr 1:4 and that was the work of the Holy Spirit. But John preached also the baptism of the Holy Spirit which the Messiah was to bring (Mr 1:7f.; Mt 3:11f.; Lu 3:16). If they did not know of the Holy Spirit, they had missed the point of John's baptism. {That they should believe on him that should come after him, that is on Jesus} (\eis ton erchomenon met' auton hina pisteus“sin, tout' estin eis ton I'soun”). Note the emphatic prolepsis of \eis ton erchomenon met' auton\ before \hina pisteus“sin\ with which it is construed. This is John's identical phrase, "the one coming after me" as seen in Mr 1:7; Mt 3:11; Lu 3:16; Joh 1:15. It is not clear that these "disciples" believed in a Messiah, least of all in Jesus. They were wholly unprepared for the baptism of John. Paul does not mean to say that John's baptism was inadequate, but he simply explains what John really taught and so what his baptism signified.

19:5 {The name of the Lord Jesus} (\to onoma ton kuriou I'sou\).

Apollos was not rebaptized. The twelve apostles were not rebaptized. Jesus received no other baptism than that of John. The point here is simply that these twelve men were grossly ignorant of the meaning of John's baptism as regards repentance, the Messiahship of Jesus, the Holy Spirit. Hence Paul had them baptized, not so much again, as really baptized this time, in the name or on the authority of the Lord Jesus as he had himself commanded (Mt 28:19) and as was the universal apostolic custom. Proper understanding of "Jesus" involved all the rest including the Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Spirit). Luke does not give a formula, but simply explains that now these men had a proper object of faith (Jesus) and were now really baptized.

19:6 {When Paul had laid his hands upon them} (\epithentos autois tou Paulou cheiras\).

Genitive absolute of second aorist active participle of \epitithēmi\). This act of laying on of the hands was done in Samaria by Peter and John (8:16) and in Damascus in the case of Paul (9:17) and was followed as here by the descent of the Holy Spirit in supernatural power. {They spake with tongues} (\elaloun gl'ssais\). Inchoative imperfect, began to speak with tongues as in Jerusalem at Pentecost and as in Caesarea before the baptism. {Prophesied} (\eprophēteuon\). Inchoative imperfect again, began to prophesy. The speaking with tongues and prophesying was external and indubitable proof that the Holy Spirit had come on these twelve uninformed disciples now fully won to the service of Jesus as Messiah. But this baptism in water did not "convey" the Holy Spirit nor forgiveness of sins. Paul was not a sacramentalist.

19:8 {Spake boldly} (\eparrēsiazeto\). Imperfect middle, kept on at it for three months. Cf. same word in 18:26. {Persuading} (\peithēn\). Present active conative participle of \peithēn\, trying to persuade (28:23). Paul's idea of the Kingdom of God was the church of God which he (Jesus, God's Son) had purchased with his own blood (Ac 20:28, calling Christ God). Nowhere else had Paul apparently been able to speak so long in the synagogue without interruption unless it was so at Corinth. These Jews were already interested (18:30).

19:9 {But when some were hardened} (\h“s de tines eskl`runonto\).

Imperfect passive of \skl`run“\, causative like _hiphil_ in Hebrew, to make hard (\skl`ros\), or rough or harsh (Mt 25:24).

In LXX and Hippocrates and Galen (in medical writings). In N.T.

only here and Ro 9:18 and 4 times in Heb 3:8,13,15; 4:7,8 quoting and referring to Ps 95:8 about hardening the heart like a gristle. The inevitable reaction against Paul went on even in Ephesus though slowly. {Disobedient} (\epeithoun\). Imperfect again, showing the growing disbelief and disobedience

(\apeith`s\), both ideas as in 14:2; 17:5, first refusal to believe and then refusal to obey. Both \skl`run“\ and \apeithe“\ occur together, as here, in Ecclus. 30:12. {Speaking evil of the Way} (\kakologountes t`n hodon\). Late verb from \kakologos\

(speaker of evil) for the old \kak“s leg“\. Already in Mr 7:10;

9:39; Mt 15:4. Now these Jews are aggressive opponents of Paul and seek to injure his influence with the crowd. Note "the Way" as in 9:2 for Christianity. {He departed from them} (\apostas ap' aut`n\). Second aorist active participle of \aphist`mi\, made an "apostasy" (standing off, cleavage) as he did at Corinth

(18:7, \metabas\, making a change). {Separated the disciples}

(\aph`risen tous math`tas\). First aorist active indicative of \aphoriz“\, old verb to mark limits (horizon) as already in 13:2. Paul himself was a spiritual Pharisee "separated" to Christ (Ro 1:1). The Jews regarded this withdrawal as apostasy, like separating the sheep from the goats (Mt 25:32). Paul now made a separate church as he had done at Thessalonica and Corinth. {In the school of Tyrannus} (\en t`i schol`i Turannou\).

\Schol` (our school) is an old word from \schein\ (\ech“\) to hold on, leisure and then in later Greek (Plutarch, etc.) a place where there is leisure as here. Only this example in the N.T.

This is the Greek notion of "school," the Jewish being that of "yoke" as in Mt 11:29. The name Tyrannus (our tyrant) is a common one. It is an inscription in the Columbarium of the Empress Livia as that of a physician in the court. Furneaux suggests the possibility that a relative of this physician was lecturing on medicine in Ephesus and so as a friend of Luke, the physician, would be glad to help Paul about a place to preach. It was probably a public building or lecture hall with this name whether hired by Paul or loaned to him. The pagan sophists often spoke in such halls. The Codex Bezae adds "from the fifth hour to the tenth" as the time allotted Paul for his work in this hall, which is quite possible, from just before midday till the close of the afternoon (from before the noon meal till two hours before sunset) each day. Here Paul had great freedom and a great hearing. As the church grows there will be other places of meeting as the church in the house of Aquila and Priscilla (1Co 16:19).

19:10 {For two years} (\epi et^ duo). Note \epi with accusative for extent of time as in verse 8, \epi m^nas treis and often. But in 20:31 Paul said to the Ephesian elders at Miletus that he laboured with them for the space of "three years." That may be a general expression and there was probably a longer period after the "two years" in the school of Tyrannus besides the six months in the synagogue. Paul may have preached thereafter in the house of Aquila and Priscilla for some months, the "for a while" of verse 22. {So that all they which dwelt in Asia heard} (\h^ste pantas tous katoikountas t^n Asian akousai). Actual result with \h^ste and the infinitive with accusative of general reference as is common (also verse 11) in the _Koin_, (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 999f.). Paul apparently remained in Ephesus, but the gospel spread all over the province even to the Lycus Valley including the rest of the seven churches of Re 1:11; 2; 3. Demetrius in verse 26 will confirm the tremendous influence of Paul's ministry in Ephesus on Asia. Forty years after this Pliny in his famous letter to Trajan from Bithynia will say of Christianity: "For the contagion of this superstition has not only spread through cities, but also through villages and country places." It was during these years in Ephesus that Paul was greatly disturbed over the troubles in the Corinthian Church. He apparently wrote a letter to them now lost to us (1Co 5:9), received messages from the household of Chloe, a letter from the church, special messengers, sent Timothy, then Titus, may have made a hurried trip himself, wrote our First Corinthians, was planning to go after the return of Titus to Troas where he was to meet him after Pentecost, when all of a sudden the uproar raised by Demetrius hurried Paul away sooner than he had planned. Meanwhile Apollos had returned from Corinth to Ephesus and refused to go back (1Co 16:12). Paul doubtless had helpers like Epaphras and Philemon who carried the message over the province of Asia, Tychicus, and Trophimus of Asia who were with him on the last visit to Jerusalem (verses 22,29; 20:4). Paul's message reached Greeks, not merely Hellenists and God-fearers, but some of the Greeks in the upper circles of life in Ephesus.

19:11 {Special miracles} (\dunameis ou tas tuchousas\). "Powers not the ones that happen by chance," "not the ordinary ones," litotes for "the extraordinary." All "miracles" or "powers" (\dunameis\) are supernatural and out of the ordinary, but here God regularly wrought (\epoiei\), imperfect active) wonders beyond those familiar to the disciples and completely different from the deeds of the Jewish exorcists. This phrase is peculiar to Luke in the N.T. (also 28:2), but it occurs in the classical Greek and in the _Koin,_ as in III Macc. 3:7 and in papyri and inscriptions (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 255). In Samaria Philip wrought miracles to deliver the people from the influence of Simon Magus. Here in Ephesus exorcists and other magicians had built an enormous vogue of a false spiritualism and Paul faces unseen forces of evil. His tremendous success led some people to superstitious practices thinking that there was power in Paul's person.

19:12 {Handkerchiefs} (\soudaria\). Latin word for \sudor\ (sweat). Used in Lu 19:20; Joh 11:44; 20:7. In two papyri marriage-contracts this word occurs among the toilet articles in the dowry (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 223). {Aprons} (\simikinthia\). Latin word also, _semicinctilum_ (\semi, cingo\). Only here in the N.T. Linen aprons used by servants or artisans (Martial XIV. 153). Paul did manual work at Ephesus (20:34) and so wore these aprons. {Departed} (\apallalsethai\). Present passive infinitive with \h“ste\ for actual result as in verse 10. If one wonders how God could honour such superstitious faith, he should remember that there is no power in superstition or in magic, but in God. If God never honoured any faith save that entirely free from superstition, how about Christian people who are troubled over the number 13, over the moon, the rabbit's foot? The poor woman with an issue of blood touched the hem of Christ's garment and was healed (Lu 8:44-46) as others sought to do (Mt 14:36). God condescends to meet us in our ignorance and weakness where he can reach us. Elisha had a notion that some of the power of Elijah resided in his mantle (2Ki 2:13). Some even sought help from Peter's shadow (Ac

5:15).

19:13 {Of the strolling Jews, exorcists} (\t“n perierchomen“n Ioudai“n exorkist“n\). These exorcists travelled around (\peri\) from place to place like modern Gypsy fortune-tellers. The Jews were especially addicted to such practices with spells of sorcery connected with the name of Solomon (Josephus, Ant. VIII. 2.5). See also Tobit 8:1-3. Jesus alludes to those in Palestine (Mt 12:27; Lu 11:19). The exorcists were originally those who administered an oath (from \exorkiz“\, to exact an oath), then to use an oath as a spell or charm. Only instance here in the N.T. These men regarded Paul as one of their own number just as Simon Magus treated Simon Peter. Only here these exorcists paid Paul the compliment of imitation instead of offering money as Magus did. {To name over} (\onomazein epi\). They heard what Paul said and treated his words as a magic charm or spell to drive the evil spirits out. {I adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth} (\Horkiz“ humas ton I'soun hon Paulos k^russei\). Note two accusatives with the verb of swearing (cf. Mr 5:7) as a causative verb (Robertson, Grammar, p. 483). The papyri furnish numerous instances of \horkiz“\ in such constructions (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 281). Note also the article with Jesus, "the Jesus," as if to identify the magic word to the demons with the addition "whom Paul preaches." They thought that success turned on the correct use of the magical formula. The Ephesian mysteries included Christianity, so they supposed.

19:14 {Seven sons of Sceva} (\Skeuf hepta huioi\). Who this Sceva was we do not know. If a high priest, he was highly connected in Jerusalem (cf. 5:24). Some MSS. have ruler instead of priest. His name may be Latin in origin. \Skeuf\ has Doric form of genitive. But that he had seven sons in this degraded business shows how Judaism had fared poorly in this superstitious city. Did they imagine there was special power in the number seven?

19:15 {Jesus I know} (\ton I'soun gin“sk“\). "The (whom you mention) Jesus I recognize (\gin“sk“\)" and "the (whom you mentioned) Paul I am acquainted with (\ton Paulon epistamai\)." Clear distinction between \gin“sk“\ and \epistamai\. {But who are ye?} (\humeis de tines este?\). But you, who are you? Emphatic prolepsis.

19:16 {Leaped on them} (\ephalomenos ep' autous\). Second aorist (ingressive) middle participle of \ephallomai\, old verb to spring upon like a panther, here only in the N.T. {Mastered} (\katakurieusas). First aorist (effective) active participle of \katakurieu“, late verb from \kata and \kurios, to become lord or master of. {Both} (\amphoter“n). Papyri examples exist where \amphoterai means "all" or more than "two" (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 745). So here \amphoterai includes all seven. "Both" in old English was used for more than two. {So that} (\h“ste). Another example (verses 10,11) of \h“ste with the infinitive for result. {Naked} (\gumnous). Probably with torn garments, {Wounded} (\tetraumatismenous). Perfect passive participle of \traumatiz“, old verb to wound, from \trauma (a wound). In the N.T. only here and Lu 20:12.

19:17 {Was magnified} (\emegaluneto). Imperfect passive. To make great. It was a notable victory over the powers of evil in Ephesus.

19:18 {Came} (\rchonto). Imperfect middle, kept coming, one after another. Even some of the believers were secretly under the spell of these false spiritualists just as some Christians today cherish private contacts with so-called occult powers through mediums, seances, of which they are ashamed. {Confessing} (\exomologoumenoi). It was time to make a clean breast of it all, to turn on the light, to unbosom their secret habits. {Declaring their deeds} (\anagellontes tas praxeis aut“n). Judgment was beginning at the house of God. The dupes (professing believers, alas) of these jugglers or exorcists now had their eyes opened when they saw the utter defeat of the tricksters who had tried to use the name of Jesus without his power. The boomerang was tremendous. The black arts were now laid bare in their real character. Gentile converts had a struggle to shake off their corrupt environment.

19:19 {Not a few of them that practised curious arts} (\hikanoi t“n ta perierga praxant“n). Considerable number of the performers or exorcists themselves who knew that they were humbugs were led to renounce their evil practices. The word \perierga (curious) is an old word (\peri, erga) originally a piddler about trifles, a busybody (ITi 5:13), then impertinent and magical things as here. Only two examples in the N.T. It is a technical term for magic as the papyri and inscriptions show. Deissmann (_Bible Studies_, p. 323) thinks that these books here burned were just like the Magic Papyri now recovered from Egypt. {Burned them in the sight of all} (\katekaion en“pion pant“n).

Imperfect active of \katakai“. It probably took a good while to do it, burned them completely (up, we say; down, the Greeks say, perfective use of |kata|). These Magical Papyri or slips of parchment with symbols or magical sentences written on them called \Ephesia Grammata\ (Ephesian Letters). These Ephesian Letters were worn as amulets or charms. {They brought them together} (\sunenegkantes\). Second aorist active participle of \sunpher“. What a glorious conflagration it would be if in every city all the salacious, blasphemous, degrading books, pamphlets, magazines, and papers could be piled together and burned. {They counted} (\suneps^phisan\). First aorist active indicative of \sunps^phiz“, to reckon together. In LXX (Jer 29:49). Only here in N.T. \Sunkataps^phiz“ in 1:26. {Fifty thousand pieces of silver} (\arguriou murias pentē\). Five ten thousand (\murias\) pieces of silver. Ephesus was largely Greek and probably the silver pieces were Greek drachmae or the Latin denarius, probably about ten thousand dollars or two thousand English pounds.

19:20 {Mightily} (\kata kratos\). According to strength. Only here in N.T., common military term in Thucydides. Such proof of a change counted. {Grew and prevailed} (\uxanen kai ischuen\). Imperfect actives, kept growing and gaining strength. It was a day of triumph for Christ in Ephesus, this city of vast wealth and superstition. Ephesus for centuries will be one of the centres of Christian power. Timothy will come here and John the Apostle and Polycarp and Irenaeus.

19:21 {Purposed in the spirit} (\etheto en t“i pneumatī\). Second aorist middle indicative for mental action and "spirit" expressed also. A new stage in Paul's career begins here, a new division of the Acts. {Passed through} (\dielth“n\). Word (\dierchomai\) used ten times in Acts (cf. 19:1) of missionary journeys (Ramsay). {Macedonia and Achaia} (\t^n Makedonian kai Achaian\). This was the way that he actually went, but originally he had planned to go to Achaia (Corinth) and then to Macedonia, as he says in 2Co 1:15f., but he had now changed that purpose, perhaps because of the bad news from Corinth. Already when he wrote I Corinthians he proposed to go first to Macedonia (1Co 16:5-7). He even hoped to spend the winter in Corinth "if the Lord permit" and to remain in Ephesus till Pentecost, neither of which things he did. {I must also see Rome} (\dei me kai R“m^n idein\). This section of Acts begins with Rome in the horizon of Paul's plans and the book closes with Paul in Rome (Rackham). Here he feels the necessity of going as in Ro 1:15 he feels himself "debtor" to all including "those in Rome" (Ro 1:16). Paul had long desired to go to Rome (Rom 1:10), but had been frequently hindered (Ro 1:13), but he has definitely set his face to go to Rome and on to Spain (Ro 15:23-29). Paley calls sharp attention to this parallel between Ac 19:21 and Ro 1:10-15; 15:23-29. Rome had a fascination for Paul as the home of Aquila and Priscilla and numerous other friends (Ro 16), but chiefly as the capital of the Roman Empire and a necessary goal in Paul's ambition to win it to Jesus Christ. His great work in Asia had stirred afresh in him the desire to do his part for Rome. He wrote to Rome from Corinth not long after this and in Jerusalem Jesus in vision will confirm the necessity (\dei) that Paul see Rome (Acts 23:11).

19:22 {Timothy and Erastus} (\Timotheon kai Eraston\). Paul had sent Timothy to Corinth (1Co 4:17) and had requested kindly treatment of this young minister in his difficult task of placating the divided church (1Co 16:10-11) that he might return to Paul as he evidently had before Paul leaves Ephesus. He then despatched Titus to Corinth to finish what Timothy had not quite succeeded in doing with instructions to meet him in Troas. Now Timothy and Erastus (cf. Ro 16:23; 2Ti 4:20) go on to Macedonia to prepare the way for Paul who will come on later. {He himself stayed in Asia for a while} (\autos epeschen chronon eis t^n Asian\). Literally, He himself had additional time in Asia. Second aorist active indicative of \epech"\, old and common idiom, only here in the N.T. in this sense and the verb only in Luke and Paul. The reason for Paul's delay is given by him in 1Co 16:8f., the great door wide open in Ephesus. Here again Luke and Paul supplement each other. Pentecost came towards the end of May and May was the month of the festival of Artemis (Diana) when great multitudes would come to Ephesus. But he did not remain till Pentecost as both Luke and Paul make plain.

19:23 {No small stir} (\tarachos ouk oligos\). Same phrase in 12:18 and nowhere else in the N.T. Litotes. {Concerning the Way} (\peri t^s hodou\). See this phrase for Christianity in 9:2; 19:9; 24:22 which see, like the "Jesus Way" of the Indians. There had already been opposition and "stir" before this stage (cf. 19:11-20). The fight with wild beasts in 1Co 15:32 (whatever it was) was before that Epistle was written and so before this new uproar. Paul as a Roman citizen could not be thrown to wild beasts, but he so pictured the violent opponents of Christ in Ephesus.

19:24 {Demetrius, a silversmith} (\D^m^trios argurokopos). The name is common enough and may or may not be the man mentioned in 3Jo 1:12 who was also from the neighbourhood of Ephesus. There is on an inscription at Ephesus near the close of the century a Demetrius called \neopoios Artemidos a temple warden of Artemis (Diana). Zoeckler suggests that Luke misunderstood this word \neopoios and translated it into \argurokopos, a beater (\kopt^“, to beat) of silver (\arguros, silver), "which made silver shrines of Artemis" (\poi^“n naous (\argurous) \Artemidos). It is true that no silver shrines of the temple have been found in Ephesus, but only numerous terra-cotta ones. Ramsay suggests that the silver ones would naturally be melted down. The date is too late anyhow to identify the Demetrius who was \neopoios with the Demetrius \argurokopos who made little silver temples of Artemis, though B does not have the word \argurous. The poor votaries would buy the terra-cotta ones, the rich the silver shrines (Ramsay, _Paul the Traveller_, p. 278). These small models of the temple with the statue of Artemis inside would be set up in the houses or even worn as amulets. It is a pity that the Revised Version renders Artemis here. Diana as the Ephesian Artemis is quite distinct from the Greek Artemis, the sister of Apollo, the Diana of the Romans. This temple, built in the 6th century B.C., was burnt by Herostratus Oct. 13 B.C. 356, the night when Alexander the Great was born. It was restored and was considered one of the seven wonders of the world. Artemis was worshipped as the goddess of fertility, like the Lydian Cybele, a figure with many breasts. The great festival in May would offer Demetrius a golden opportunity for the sale of the shrines. {Brought no little business} (\pareicheto ouk olig^“n ergasian). Imperfect middle, continued to bring (furnish, provide). The middle accents the part that Demetrius played as the leader of the guild of silversmiths, work for himself and for them. {Unto the craftsmen} (\tais technitais). The artisans from \techn^“ (craft, art). Trade guilds were common in the ancient world. Demetrius had probably organized this guild and provided the capital for the enterprise.

19:25 {Whom he gathered together} (\hous sunathroisas). First aorist active participle of \sunathroiz^“, old verb to assemble together (\athroos, a crowd), in the N.T. only here and Ac

12:12. {With the workmen of like occupation} (\kai tous peri ta toiauta ergatas). "And the workmen concerning such things," apparently those who made the marble and terra-cotta shrines who would also be affected in the same way. It was a gathering of the associated trades, not for a strike, for employer and employees met together, but in protest against the preaching of Paul. {We have our wealth} (\h^ euporia h^min estin). The wealth is to us (dative of possession). This old word for wealth occurs here alone in the N.T. It is from \eu and \poros, easy to pass through, easy to accomplish, to be well off, wealthy, welfare, weal, well-being, rich. Demetrius appeals to this knowledge and self-interest of the artisans as the basis for their zeal for Artemis, piety for revenue.

19:26 {At Ephesus} (\Ephesou). Genitive of place as also with \Asias (Asia). Cf. Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 494f. {This Paul} (\ho Paulos houtos). Contemptuous use of \houtos. {Hath turned away} (\metest^sen). Changed, transposed. First aorist active indicative, did change. Tribute to Paul's powers as a preacher borne out by Luke's record in 19:10. There may be an element of exaggeration on the part of Demetrius to incite the workmen to action, for the worship of Artemis was their wealth. Paul had cut the nerve of their business. There had long been a Jewish colony in Ephesus, but their protest against idolatry was as nothing compared with Paul's preaching (Furneaux). {Which are made with hands} (\hoi dia cheir^ n ginomenoi). Note the present tense, made from time to time. No doubt Paul had put the point sharply as in Athens (Ac 17:29). Isaiah (Isa 44:9-17) had pictured graphically the absurdity of worshipping stocks and stones, flatly forbidden by the Old Testament (Ex 20:4; Ps 135:15-18). The people identified their gods with the images of them and Demetrius reflects that point of view. He was jealous of the brand of gods turned out by his factory. The artisans would stand by him on this point. It was a reflection on their work.

19:27 {This our trade} (\touto to meros). Part, share, task, job, trade. {Come into disrepute} (\eis apelegmon elthein). Not in the old writers, but in LXX and _Koin, _. Literally, reputation, exposure, censure, rejection after examination, and so disrepute. Their business of making gods would lose caste as the liquor trade (still called the trade in England) has done in our day. They felt this keenly and so Demetrius names it first. They felt it in their pockets. {Of the great goddess Artemis}

(\t^s megal^s theas Artemidos\). She was generally known as the Great (\h[^] Megal[^]\). An inscription found at Ephesus calls her "the greatest god" (\h[^] megist[^] theos\). The priests were eunuchs and there were virgin priestesses and a lower order of slaves known as temple-sweepers (\ne[^] "koroi", verse 35). They had wild orgiastic exercises that were disgraceful with their Corybantic processions and revelries. {Be made of no account} (\eis outhen logisth[^] nai\). Be reckoned as nothing, first aorist passive infinitive of \logizomai\ and \eis\. {Should even be deposed of her magnificence} (\mellein te kai kathaireisthai t^s megaleiot^s aut^s\). Note the present infinitive after \mellein\, ablative case (so best MSS.) after \kathaire[^]\, to take down, to depose, to deprive of. The word \megaleiot^s\ occurs also in Lu 9:43 (the majesty of God) and in 2Pe 1:16 of the transfiguration of Christ. It is already in the LXX and Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 363) thinks that the word runs parallel with terms used in the emperor-cult. {All Asia and the world} \hol[^] (h[^]) Asia kai (h[^]) oikoumen[^]\. See 11:28 for same use of \oikoumen[^]\. An exaggeration, to be sure, but Pausanias says that no deity was more widely worshipped. Temples of Artemis have been found in Spain and Gaul. Multitudo errantium non efficit veritatem (Bengel). Even today heathenism has more followers than Christianity. To think that all this splendour was being set at naught by one man and a despised Jew at that!

19:28 {They were filled with wrath} (\genomenoi plereis thumou\). Having become full of wrath. {Cried out} (\ekrazon\). Inchoative imperfect, began to cry out and kept it up continuously. Repetition was characteristic of the orgiastic exercises. The Codex Bezae adds after \thumou\ (wrath): \Dramontes eis tⁿ amphodon\ (running into the street), which they certainly did after the speech of Demetrius. {Great is Artemis of the Ephesians} (\Megal[^] h[^] Artemis Ephesi[^] n\). D (Codex Bezae) omits \h[^]\ (the) and makes it read: "Great Artemis of the Ephesians." This was the usual cry of the votaries in their orgies as the inscriptions show, an ejaculatory outcry or prayer instead of an argument as the other MSS. have it. That is vivid and natural (Ramsay, Church in the Roman Empire, pp. 135ff.). Yet on this occasion the artisans were making an argumentative protest and plea against Paul. An inscription at Dionysopolis has "Great is Apollo."

19:29 {With the confusion} (t^hs sugchuse^s). Genitive case after ep^lsth^h. An old word, but in the N.T. only here, from verb sugche^s, to pour together like a flood (only in Acts in the N.T.). Vivid description of the inevitable riot that followed "the appearance of such a body in the crowded agora of an excitable city" (Rackham) "vociferating the city's watch-word." {They rushed} (h^hrm^hsan). Ingressive aorist active indicative of horma^s, old verb for impetuous dashing, a case of mob psychology (mob mind), with one accord (homothumadon as in Ac 1:14, etc.). {Into the theatre} (eis to theatron). A place for seeing (theaomai) spectacles, originally for dramatic representation (Thucydides, Herodotus), then for the spectators, then for the spectacle or show (1Co 4:9). The theatre (amphitheatre) at Ephesus can still be traced in the ruins (Wood, _Ephesus_) and shows that it was of enormous size capable of seating fifty-six thousand persons (some estimate it only 24,500). It was the place for large public gatherings of any sort out of doors like our football and baseball parks. In particular, gladiatorial shows were held in these theatres. {Having seized Gaius and Aristarchus men of Macedonia} (sunarpasantes Gaion kai Aristarchon Makedonas). See 6:12 for this same verb. They wanted some victims for this "gladiatorial" show. These two men were "Paul's companions in travel" (sunekd^hmous Paulou), together (sun) with Paul in being abroad, away from home or people (ek-d^hmous, late word, in the N.T. only here and 2Co 8:19). How the mob got hold of Gaius (Ac 20:4) and Aristarchus (20:4; 27:2; Col 4:10; Phm 1:24) we do not know whether by accidental recognition or by search after failure to get Paul. In Ro 16:4 Paul speaks of Priscilla and Aquila as those "who for my life laid down their own necks." Paul lived with them in Ephesus as in Corinth. It is possible that Demetrius led the mob to their house and that they refused to allow Paul to go or to be seized at the risk of their own lives. Paul himself may have been desperately ill at this time as we know was the case once during his stay in Ephesus when he felt the answer of death in himself (2Co 1:9) and when God rescued him. That may mean that, ill as he was, Paul wanted to go and face the mob in the theatre, knowing that it meant certain death.

19:30 {And when Paul was minded to enter in unto the people} (Paulou de boulomenou eiselthein eis ton d^hmon). Genitive absolute. Plainly Paul wanted to face the howling mob, whether it was the occasion pictured in 2Co 1:9 or not. "St. Paul was not the man to leave his comrades in the lurch" (Knowling). {Suffered him not} (\ouk ei“n auton\). Imperfect of \ea“, common verb to allow, what Gildersleeve called the negative imperfect (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 885), denoting resistance to pressure. The more Paul insisted on going the more the disciples refused to agree to it and they won.

19:31 {Certain also of the chief officers of Asia} (\tines de kai t“n Asiarch“n\). These "Asiarchs" were ten officers elected by cities in the province who celebrated at their own cost public games and festivals (Page). Each province had such a group of men chosen, as we now know from inscriptions, to supervise the funds connected with the worship of the emperor, to preside at games and festivals even when the temple services were to gods like Artemis. Only rich men could act, but the position was eagerly sought. {Being his friends} (\ontes aut“i philoi\). Evidently the Asiarchs had a high opinion of Paul and were unwilling for him to expose his life to a wild mob during the festival of Artemis. They were at least tolerant toward Paul and his preaching. "It was an Asiarch who at Smyrna resisted the cry of the populace to throw Polycarp to the lions" (Furneaux). {Besought him} (\parekaloun auton\). Imperfect active, showing that the messengers sent had to insist over Paul's protest. "{Not to adventure himself}" (\m^ dounai heauton\). It was a hazard, a rash adventure "to give himself" (second aorist active infinitive of \did“mi). Just this sense of "adventure" with the idiom occurs only here in the N.T., though in Polybius V., 14, 9. But the phrase itself Paul uses of Jesus who gave himself for our sins (Ga 1:4; 1Ti 2:6; Tit 2:14). It is not the first time that friends had rescued Paul from peril (Ac 9:25,30; 17:10,14). The theatre was no place for Paul. It meant certain death.

19:32 {Some therefore cried one thing and some another} (\alloi men oun allo ti ekrazon\). This classical use of \allos allo\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 747) appears also in 2:12; 21:34. Literally, "others cried another thing." The imperfect shows the repetition (kept on crying) and confusion which is also distinctly stated. {For the assembly was in confusion} (\^n gar h^ ekkl^sia sunkechumen^). The reason for the previous statement. Periphrastic past perfect passive of \sugche“, sugchun“ (-unn“)\, to pour together, to commingle as in verse 29 (\sugchuse“s\). It was not an "assembly" (\ekkl^sia, ek, kale“, to call out), but a wholly irregular, disorganized mob in a state (perfect tense) of confusion. There was "a lawful assembly" (verse 39), but this mob was not one. Luke shows his contempt for this mob (Furneaux). {Had come together} (\sunel^llutheisan\). Past perfect active of \sunerchomai\. It was an assembly only in one sense. For some reason Demetrius who was responsible for the mob preferred now to keep in the background, though he was known to be the ring-leader of the gathering (verse 38). It was just a mob that shouted because others did.

19:33 {And they brought Alexander out of the crowd} (\ek de tou ochlou sunebibasan Alexandron\). The correct text (Aleph A B) has this verb \sunebibasan\ (from \sunbibaz“\, to put together) instead of \proebibasan\ (from \probibaz“\, to put forward). It is a graphic word, causal of \bain“\, to go, and occurs in Ac 16:10; Col 2:19; Eph 4:16. Evidently some of the Jews grew afraid that the mob would turn on the Jews as well as on the Christians. Paul was a Jew and so was Aristarchus, one of the prisoners. The Jews were as strongly opposed to idolatry as were the Christians. {The Jews putting him forward} (\probalont“n auton t“n Ioudai“n\). Genitive absolute of the second aorist active participle of \proball“\, old verb to push forward as leaves in the spring (Lu 21:30). In the N.T. only in these two passages. Alexandria had already disgraceful scenes of Jew-baiting and there was real peril now in Ephesus with this wild mob. So Alexander was pushed forward as the champion to defend the Jews to the excited mob. He may be the same Alexander the coppersmith who did Paul much evil (2Ti 4:14), against whom Paul will warn Timothy then in Ephesus. "The Jews were likely to deal in the copper and silver required for the shrines, so he may have had some trade connexion with the craftsmen which would give him influence" (Furneaux). {Beckoned with the hand} (\kataseisas tⁿ cheira\). Old verb \katasei“\, to shake down, here the hand, rapidly waving the hand up and down to get a hearing. In the N.T. elsewhere only in Ac 12:17; 13:16; 21:40 where "with the hand" (\tⁱ cheiri\, instrumental case) is used instead of \tⁿ cheira\ (the accusative). {Would have made a defence unto the people} (\^hthelen apologeisthai t“i d^m“i\). Imperfect active, wanted to make a defence, tried to, started to, but apparently never got out a word. \Apologeisthai\ (present middle infinitive, direct middle, to defend oneself), regular word for formal apology, but in N.T. only by Luke and Paul (twice in Gospel, six times in Acts, and in Ro 2:15; 2Co 12:19).

19:34 {When they perceived} (\epignontes\). Recognizing, coming to know fully and clearly (\epi-), second aorist (ingressive) active participle of \epigin“sk“. The masculine plural is left as nominative absolute or \pendens\ without a verb. The rioters saw at once that Alexander was (\estin\, present tense retained in indirect assertion) a Jew by his features. {An with one voice cried out} (\ph“n^ egeneto mia ek pant“n krazont“n\). Anacoluthon or construction according to sense. Literally, "one voice arose from all crying." \Krazont“n\ agrees in case (ablative) with \pant“n\, but Aleph A have \krazontes\. This loose construction is not uncommon (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 436f.). Now at last the crowd became unanimous (one voice) at the sight of a hated Jew about to defend their attacks on the worship of Artemis. The unanimity lasted "about the space of two hours" (\hosei epi h“ras duo\), "as if for two hours." Their creed centred in this prolonged yell: "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians" with which the disturbance started (verse 28).

19:35 {The town-clerk} (\ho grammateus\). Ephesus was a free city and elected its own officers and the recorder or secretary was the chief magistrate of the city, though the proconsul of the province of Asia resided there. This officer is not a mere secretary of another officer or like the copyists and students of the law among the Jews, but the most influential person in Ephesus who drafted decrees with the aid of the \strat^goi\, had charge of the city's money, was the power in control of the assembly, and communicated directly with the proconsul. Inscriptions at Ephesus give frequently this very title for their chief officer and the papyri have it also. The precise function varied in different cities. His name appeared on the coin at Ephesus issued in his year of office. {Had quieted the multitude} (\katasteilas ton ochlon\). First aorist active participle of \katastell“, to send down, arrange dress (Euripides), lower (Plutarch), restrain (papyrus example), only twice in the N.T. (here and verse 36, be quiet), but in LXX and Josephus. He evidently took the rostrum and his very presence as the city's chief officer had a quieting effect on the billowy turmoil and a semblance of order came. He waited, however, till the hubbub had nearly exhausted itself (two hours) and did not speak till there was a chance to be heard. {Saith} (\ph^sin\). Historical present for vividness. {How that}. Merely participle \ousan\ and accusative \polin\ in indirect discourse, no conjunction at all (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1040ff.), common idiom after \gin“sk“\, to know. {Temple-keeper} (\ne“koron\). Old word from \ne“s\ (\naos\), temple, and \kore“\, to sweep. Warden, verger, cleaner of the temple, a sacristan. So in Xenophon and Plato. Inscriptions so describe Ephesus as \ne“koron t^s Artemidos\ as Luke has it here and also applied to the imperial _cultus_ which finally had several such temples in Ephesus. Other cities claimed the same honour of being \ne“koros\, but it was the peculiar boast of Ephesus because of the great temple of Artemis. A coin of A.D. 65 describes Ephesus as \ne“koros\. There are papyri examples of the term applied to individuals, one to Priene as \ne“koros\ of the temple in Ephesus (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). {And of the image which fell down from Jupiter} (\kai tou diopetous\). Supply \agalma\ (image), "the from heaven-fallen image." From Zeus (\Dios\) and \pet“\ (\pipt“, pipet“), to fall. Zeus (Jupiter) was considered lord of the sky or heaven and that is the idea in \diopetous\ here. The legend about a statue fallen from heaven occurs concerning the statue of Artemis at Tauris, Minerva at Athens, etc. Thus the recorder soothed the vanity (Rackham) of the crowd by appeal to the world-wide fame of Ephesus as sacristan of Artemis and of her heaven-fallen image.

19:36 {Cannot be gainsaid} (\anantir^t“n oun ont“n\). Genitive absolute with \oun\ (therefore). Undeniable (\an, anti, r^tos\), verbal adjective. Occasionally in late Greek (Polybius, etc.), only here in N.T., but adverb \anantir^t“s\ in Ac 10:29. These legends were accepted as true and appeased the mob. {Ye ought} (\deon estin\). It is necessary. Periphrastic present indicative instead of \dei\ like 1Pe 1:6; 1Ti 5:13f. {Be quiet} (\katestalmenous\). Perfect passive participle of \katastell“\ (see verse 35). {Rash} (\propetes\). Old adjective from \pro\ and \pet“\, to fall forward, headlong, precipitate. In the N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:4, though common in the _Koin,_. Better look before you leap.

19:37 {Neither robbers of temples} (\oute hierosulous\). Common word in Greek writers from \hieron\, temple, and \sula“\, to rob, be guilty of sacrilege. The word is found also on inscriptions in Ephesus. The Jews were sometimes guilty of this crime (Ro 2:22), since the heathen temples often had vast treasures like banks. The ancients felt as strongly about temple-robbing as westerners used to feel about a horse-thief. {Nor blasphemers of our goddess} (\oute blasph^mountas t^n theon h^m“n\). Nor those who blasphemed our goddess. That is to say, these men (Gaius and Aristarchus) as Christians had so conducted themselves (Col 4:5) that no charge could be placed against them either in act (temple-robbery) or word (blasphemy). They had done a rash thing since these men are innocent. Paul had used tact in Ephesus as in Athens in avoiding illegalities.

19:38 {Have a matter against any one} (\echousin pros tina logon\). For this use of \ech“ logon\ with \pros\ see Mt 5:32; Col 3:13. The town-clerk names Demetrius and the craftsmen (\technitai\)) as the parties responsible for the riot. {The courts are open} (\agoraioi agontai\). Supply \h^merai\ (days), court days are kept, or \sunodoi\, court-meetings are now going on, Vulgate _conventus forenses aguntur_. Old adjective from \agora\ (forum) marketplace where trials were held. Cf. Ac 17:4. There were regular court days whether they were in session then or not. {And there are proconsuls} (\kai anthupatoi eisin\). Asia was a senatorial province and so had proconsuls (general phrase) though only one at a time, "a rhetorical plural" (Lightfoot). Page quotes from an inscription of the age of Trajan on an aqueduct at Ephesus in which some of Luke's very words occur (\ne“koros, anthupatos, grammateus, d^mos\). {Let them accuse one another} (\egkaleit“san all^lois\). Present active imperative of \egkale“\ (\en, kale“\), old verb to call in one's case, to bring a charge against, with the dative. Luke uses the verb six times in Acts for judicial proceedings (19:38,40; 23:28,29; 26:2,7). The town-clerk makes a definite appeal to the mob for orderly legal procedure as opposed to mob violence in a matter where money and religious prejudice unite, a striking rebuke to so-called lynch-law proceedings in lands today where Christianity is supposed to prevail.

19:39 {Anything about other matters} (\ti peraiter“\). Most MSS. here have \ti peri heter“n\, but B b Vulgate read \ti peraiter“\ as in Plato's \Phaedo\. Several papyri examples of it also. It is comparative \peraiteros\ of \pera\, beyond. Note also \epi\ in \epiz^teite\). Charges of illegal conduct (Page) should be settled in the regular legal way. But, if you wish to go further and pass resolutions about the matter exciting you, "it shall be settled in the regular assembly" (\en t“i ennom“i ekkl^sifi\). "In the lawful assembly," not by a mob like this. Wood (_*Ephesus*_) quotes an inscription there with this very phrase "at every lawful assembly" (\kata pfsan ennomon ekkl^sian\). The Roman officials alone could give the sanction for calling such a lawful or regular assembly. The verb \epilu“\ is an old one, but in the N.T. only here and Mr 4:34 (which see) where Jesus privately opened or disclosed the parables to the disciples. The papyri give examples of the verb in financial transactions as well as of the metaphorical sense. The solution will come in the lawful assembly, not in a riot like this. See also 2Pe 1:20 where the substantive \epilusis\ occurs for disclosure or revelation (prophecy).

19:40 {For indeed we are in danger to be accused concerning this day's riot} (\kai gar kinduneuomen egkaleisthai stase“s peri t^s s^meron\). The text is uncertain. The text of Westcott and Hort means "to be accused of insurrection concerning today's assembly." The peril was real. \Kinduneuomen\, from \kindunos\, danger, peril. Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Lu 8:23; 1Co 15:30. {There being no cause for it} (\m^denos aitiou huparchontos\). Genitive absolute with \aitios\, common adjective (cf. \aitia\, cause) though in N.T. only here and Heb 5:9; Lu 23:4,14,22. {And as touching it} (\peri hou\). "Concerning which." But what? No clear antecedent, only the general idea. {Give an account of this concourse} (\apodounai logon peri t^s sustroph^s taut^s\). _Rationem reddere_. They will have to explain matters to the proconsul. \Sustroph^“\ (from \sun\, together, \streph^“\, to turn) is a late word for a conspiracy (Ac 23:12) and a disorderly riot as here (Polybius). In Ac 28:12 \sustreph^“\ is used of gathering up a bundle of sticks and of men combining in Mt 17:22. Seneca says that there was nothing on which the Romans looked with such jealousy as a tumultuous meeting.

19:41 {Dismissed the assembly} (\apelusen t^n ekkl^sian\). The town-clerk thus gave a semblance of law and order to the mob by formally dismissing them, this much to protect them against the charge to which they were liable. This vivid, graphic picture given by Luke has all the earmarks of historical accuracy. Paul does not describe the incidents in his letters, was not in the theatre in fact, but Luke evidently obtained the details from one who was there. Aristarchus, we know, was with Luke in Caesarea and in Rome and could have supplied all the data necessary. Certainly both Gaius and Aristarchus were lively witnesses of these events since their own lives were involved.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

20:1 {After the uproar was ceased} (\meta to pausasthai ton thorubon\). Literally, after the ceasing (accusative of articular aorist middle infinitive of \pau“\, to make cease) as to the uproar (accusative of general reference). Noise and riot, already in Mt 26:5; 27:24; Mr 5:38; 14:2; and see in Ac 21:34; 24:18. Pictures the whole incident as bustle and confusion. {Took leave} (\aspamenos\). First aorist middle participle of \aspazomai\, old verb from \a\ intensive and \spa“\, to draw, to draw to oneself in embrace either in greeting or farewell. Here it is in farewell as in 21:6. Salutation in 21:7,19. {Departed for to go into Macedonia} (\ex^lthen poreuesthai eis Makedonian\). Both verbs, single act and then process. Luke here condenses what was probably a whole year of Paul's life and work as we gather from II Corinthians, one of Paul's "weighty and powerful" letters as his enemies called them (2Co 10:10). "This epistle more than any other is a revelation of S. Paul's own heart: it is his spiritual autobiography and _apologia pro vita sua_."

20:2 {Those parts} (\ta mer^ ekeina\). We have no way of knowing why Luke did not tell of Paul's stay in Troas (2Co 2:12f.) nor of meeting Titus in Macedonia (2Co 2:13-7:16) nor of Paul's visit to Illyricum (Ro 15:19f.) to give time for II Corinthians to do its work (2Co 13), one of the most stirring experiences in Paul's whole career when he opened his heart to the Corinthians and won final victory in the church by the help of Titus who also helped him round up the great collection in Achaia. He wrote II Corinthians during this period after Titus arrived from Corinth. The unity of II Corinthians is here assumed. Paul probably met Luke again in Macedonia, but all this is passed by except by the general phrase: "had given them much exhortation" (\parakalesas autous log“i poll“i\). Literally, "having exhorted them (the Macedonian brethren) with much talk" (instrumental case). {Into Greece} (\eis t^n Hellada\). That is, Achaia (18:12; 19:21), and particularly Corinth, whither he had at last come again after repeated attempts, pauses, and delays (2Co 13:1). Now at last the coast was clear and Paul apparently had an open door in Corinth during these three months, so completely had Titus at last done away with the opposition of the Judaizers there.

20:3 {When he had spent three months there} (\poi^ˆˆsas m^ˆnas treis\). Literally, "having done three months," the same idiom in Ac 14:33; 18:23; Jas 5:13. During this period Paul may have written Galatians as Lightfoot argued and certainly did Romans. We do not have to say that Luke was ignorant of Paul's work during this period, only that he did not choose to enlarge upon it. {And a plot was laid against him by the Jews} (\genomen^ˆs epiboul^ˆs aut^ˆi hupo t^ˆn Ioudai^ˆn\). Genitive absolute, "a plot by the Jews having come against him." \Epiboul^ˆ\ is an old word for a plot against one. In the N.T. only in Acts (9:24; 20:3,19; 23:30). Please note that this plot is by the Jews, not the Judaizers whom Paul discusses so vehemently in 2Co 10-13. They had given Paul much anguish of heart as is shown in I Cor. and in 2Co 1-7, but that trouble seems now past. It is Paul's old enemies in Corinth who had cherished all these years their defeat at the hands of Gallio (Ac 18:5-17) who now took advantage of Paul's plans for departure to compass his death if possible. {As he was about to set sail for Syria} (\mellonti anagesthai eis t^ˆn Surian\). The participle \mellonti\ agrees in case (dative) with \aut^ˆi\. For the sense of intending see also verse 13. \Anagesthai\ (present middle infinitive) is the common word for putting out to sea (going up, they said, from land) as in 13:13. {He determined} (\egeneto gn^ˆm^ˆs\). The best MSS. here read \gn^ˆm^ˆs\ (predicate ablative of source like \epiluse^ˆs\, 2Pe 1:20, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 514), not \gn^ˆm^ˆ\ (nominative). "He became of opinion." The Jews had heard of Paul's plan to sail for Syria and intended in the hurly-burly either to kill him at the docks in Cenchreae or to push him overboard from the crowded pilgrim ship bound for the passover. Fortunately Paul learned of their plot and so eluded them by going through Macedonia. The Codex Bezae adds here that "the Spirit bade him return into Macedonia."

20:4 {Accompanied him} (\suneipeto aut^ˆi\). Imperfect of \sunepomai\, old and common verb, but only here in the N.T. The singular is used agreeing with the first name mentioned \S^ˆpatros\ and to be supplied with each of the others. Textus Receptus adds here "into Asia" (\achri t^ˆs Asias\, as far as Asia), but the best documents (Aleph B Vulg. Sah Boh) do not have it. As a matter of fact, Trophimus went as far as Jerusalem (Ac 21:29) and Aristarchus as far as Rome (27:2; Col 4:10), The phrase could apply only to Sopatros. It is not clear though probable that Luke means to say that these seven brethren, delegates of the various churches (2Co 8:19-23) started from Corinth with Paul. Luke notes the fact that they accompanied Paul, but the party may really have been made up at Philippi where Luke himself joined Paul, the rest of the party having gone on to Troas (20:5f.). These were from Roman provinces that shared in the collection (Galatia, Asia, Macedonia, Achaia). In this list three were from Macedonia, Sopater of Beroea, Aristarchus and Secundus of Thessalonica; two from Galatia, Gaius of Derbe and Timothy of Lystra; two from Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus. It is a bit curious that none are named from Achaia. Had Corinth failed after all (2Co 8; 9) to raise its share of the collection after such eager pledging? Rackham suggests that they may have turned their part over directly to Paul. Luke joined Paul in Philippi and could have handled the money from Achaia. It was an important event and Paul took the utmost pains to remove any opportunity for scandal in the handling of the funds.

20:5 {Were waiting for us in Troas} (emenon h^mfs en Troiadi\). Here again we have "us" for the first time since chapter 16 where Paul was with Luke in Philippi. Had Luke remained all this time in Philippi? We do not know, but he is with Paul now till Rome is reached. The seven brethren of verse 4 went on ahead from Philippi to Troas while Paul remained with Luke in Philippi.

20:6 {After the days of unleavened bread} (meta tas h^merfs t^"n azum^"n\). Paul was a Jew, though a Christian, and observed the Jewish feasts, though he protested against Gentiles being forced to do it (Ga 4:10; Col 2:16). Was Luke a proselyte because he notes the Jewish feasts as here and in Ac 27:9? He may have noted them merely because Paul observed them. But this passover was a year after that in Ephesus when Paul expected to remain there till Pentecost (1Co 16:8). He was hoping now to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (Ac 20:16) as he did. We do not know the precise year, possibly A.D. 56 or 57. {In five days} (achri h^mer^"n pente\). Up to five days (cf. Lu 2:37). D has \pemptaioi\, "fifth day men," a correct gloss. Cf. \deuteraioi\, second-day men (Ac 28:13). In Ac 16:11 they made the voyage in two days. Probably adverse winds held them back here. {Seven days} (hepta h^meras\). To atone for the short stay in Troas before (2Co 2:12f.) when Paul was so restless. Now he preaches a week to them.

20:7 {Upon the first day of the week} (\en de mifi t“n sabbat“n). The cardinal \mifi used here for the ordinal \pr“t^i (Mr 16:9) like the Hebrew _ehadh_ as in Mr 16:2; Mt 28:1; Lu 24:1; Joh 20:1 and in harmony with the _Koin,_ idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 671). Either the singular (Mr 16:9) \sabbatou or the plural \sabbaton as here was used for the week (sabbath to sabbath). For the first time here we have services mentioned on the first day of the week though in 1Co 16:2 it is implied by the collections stored on that day. In Re 1:10 the Lord's day seems to be the day of the week on which Jesus rose from the grave. Worship on the first day of the week instead of the seventh naturally arose in Gentile churches, though Joh 20:26 seems to mean that from the very start the disciples began to meet on the first (or eighth) day. But liberty was allowed as Paul makes plain in Ro 14:5f. {When we were gathered together} (\sun^gmen“n h^m“n). Genitive absolute, perfect passive participle of \sunag“, to gather together, a formal meeting of the disciples. See this verb used for gatherings of disciples in Ac 4:31; 11:26; 14:27; 15:6,30; 19:7,8; 1Co 5:4. In Heb 10:25 the substantive \episunag“g^n is used for the regular gatherings which some were already neglecting. It is impossible for a church to flourish without regular meetings even if they have to meet in the catacombs as became necessary in Rome. In Russia today the Soviets are trying to break up conventicles of Baptists. They probably met on our Saturday evening, the beginning of the first day at sunset. So these Christians began the day (Sunday) with worship. But, since this is a Gentile community, it is quite possible that Luke means our Sunday evening as the time when this meeting occurs, and the language in Joh 20:19 "it being evening on that day the first day of the week" naturally means the evening following the day, not the evening preceding the day. {To break bread} (\klasai arton). First aorist active infinitive of purpose of \kla“. The language naturally bears the same meaning as in 2:42, the Eucharist or the Lord's Supper which usually followed the \Agap^. See 1Co 10:16. The time came, when the \Agap^ was no longer observed, perhaps because of the abuses noted in 1Co 11:20ff. Rackham argues that the absence of the article with bread here and its presence (\ton arton) in verse 11 shows that the \Agap^ is] referred to in verse 7 and the Eucharist in verse 11, but not necessarily so because \ton arton may merely refer to \arton in verse 7. At any rate it should be noted that Paul, who conducted this service, was not a member of the church in Troas, but only a visitor. {Discoursed} (\dielegeto). Imperfect middle because he kept on at length. {Intending} (\mell“). Being about to, on the point of. {On the morrow} (\t^i epaurion). Locative case with \h^merfi understood after the adverb \epaurion. If Paul spoke on our Saturday evening, he made the journey on the first day of the week (our Sunday) after sunrise. If he spoke on our Sunday evening, then he left on our Monday morning. {Prolonged his speech} (\Pareteinen ton logon). Imperfect active (same form as aorist) of \paratein“, old verb to stretch beside or lengthwise, to prolong. Vivid picture of Paul's long sermon which went on and on till midnight (\mechri mesonuktiou). Paul's purpose to leave early next morning seemed to justify the long discourse. Preachers usually have some excuse for the long sermon which is not always clear to the exhausted audience.

20:8 {Many lights} (\lampades hikanai). It was dark at night since the full moon (passover) was three weeks behind. These lamps were probably filled with oil and had wicks that flickered and smoked. They would not meet in the dark. {In the upper room} (\en t“i huper“i“i). As in 1:13 which see.

20:9 {Sat} (\kathezomenos). Sitting (present middle participle describing his posture). {In the window} (\epi t^s thuridos). Old word diminutive from \thura, door, a little door. Latticed window (no glass) opened because of the heat from the lamps and the crowd. Our window was once spelt _windore_ (Hudibras), perhaps from the wrong idea that it was derived from _wind_ and _door_. Eutychus (a common slave name) was sitting on (\epi) the window sill. Ahaziah "fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber" (2Ki 1:2). In the N.T. \thuris only here and 2Co 11:33 (\dia thuridos) through which Paul was let down through the wall in Damascus. {Borne down with deep sleep} (\katapheromenos hupn“i bathei). Present passive participle of \katapher“, to bear down, and followed by instrumental case (\hupn“i). Describes the gradual process of going into deep sleep. Great medical writers use \bathus with \hupnos as we do today (deep sleep). D here has \basei (heavy) for \bathei (deep). {As Paul discoursed yet longer} (\dialegomenou tou Paulou epi pleion). Genitive absolute of present middle participle of \dialegomai (cf. verse 7). with \epi pleion. Eutychus struggled bravely to keep awake, vainly hoping that Paul would finish. But he went on "for more." {Being born down by his sleep} (\katenechtheis apo tou hupnou). First aorist (effective) passive showing the final result of the process described by \katapheromenos, finally overcome as a result of (\apo) the (note article \tou) sleep (ablative case). These four participles (\kathezomenos, katapheromenos, dialegomenou, katenechtheis) have no connectives, but are distinguished clearly by case and tense. The difference between the present \katapheromenos and the aorist \katenechtheis of the same verb is marked. {Fell down} (\epesen kat^). Effective aorist active indicative of \pipt^ with the adverb \kat^, though \katapipt^ (compound verb) could have been used (Ac 26:14; 28:6). Hobart (Medical Language of St. Luke) thinks that Luke shows a physician's interest in the causes of the drowsiness of Eutychus (the heat, the crowd, the smell of the lamps, the late hour, the long discourse). Cf. Lu 22:45. {From the third story} (\apo tou tristegou). From \treis (three) and \steg^ (roof), adjective \tristegos having three roofs. {Was taken up dead} (\rth^\ nekros). First aorist passive indicative of \air^. Luke does not say \h^\s (as) or \h^\sei (Mr 9:26 as if). The people considered him dead and Luke the physician seems to agree with that view.

20:10 {Fell on him} (\epepesen aut^\i). Second aorist active indicative of \epipt^ with dative case as Elijah did (1Ki 17:21) and Elisha (2Ki 4:34). {Embracing} (\sunperilamban^). Second aorist active participle of \sunperilamban^, old verb to embrace completely (take hold together round), but only here in the N.T. In Ezr 5:3. {Make ye no ado} (\m^\ thorubeisthe). Stop (\m^) and present middle imperative of \thorube^ making a noise (\thorubos) as the people did on the death of Jairus's daughter (Mt 9:23 \thoruboumenou\ and Mr 5:38 \thorubou) when Jesus asked \Ti thorubeisthe? {For his life is in him} (\h^\ gar psuch^\ autou en aut^\i estin). This language is relied on by Ramsay, Wendt, Zockler to show that Eutychus had not really died, but had merely swooned. Paul's language would suit that view, but it suits equally well the idea that he had just been restored to life and so is indecisive. Furneaux urges also the fact that his friends did not bring him back to the meeting till morning (verse 12) as additional evidence that it was a case of swooning rather than of death. But this again is not conclusive as they would naturally not take him back at once. One will believe here as the facts appeal to him.

20:11 {When he was gone up} (\anabas\). Second aorist active participle in sharp contrast to \katabas\ (went down) of verse 10. {Had broken bread} (\klasas ton arton\). Probably the Eucharist to observe which ordinance Paul had come and tarried (verse 7), though some scholars distinguish between what took place in verse 7 and verse 11, needlessly so as was stated on verse 7. {And eaten} (\kai geusamenos\). The word is used in 10:10 of eating an ordinary meal and so might apply to the \Agap^, but it suits equally for the Eucharist. The accident had interrupted Paul's sermon so that it was observed now and then Paul resumed his discourse. {And had talked with them a long while} (\ep'h' hikanon te homil^sas\). Luke, as we have seen, is fond of \hikanos\ for periods of time, for a considerable space of time, "even till break of day" (\achri aug^s\). Old word for brightness, radiance like German _Auge_, English eye, only here in the N.T. Occurs in the papyri and in modern Greek for dawn. This second discourse lasted from midnight till dawn and was probably more informal (as in 10:27) and conversational (\homil^sas\, though our word homiletics comes from \homile^) than the discourse before midnight (\dialegomai\, verses 7,9). He had much to say before he left. {So he departed} (\hout^s ex^lthen\). Thus Luke sums up the result. Paul left (went forth) only after all the events narrated by the numerous preceding participles had taken place. Effective aorist active indicative \exelthen\. \Hout^s\ here equals \tum demum\, now at length (Ac 27:7) as Page shows.

20:12 {They brought the lad alive} (\^gagon ton paida z^nta\). Second aorist active indicative of \ag^\. Evidently the special friends of the lad who now either brought him back to the room or (Rendall) took him home to his family. Knowling holds that \z^nta\ (living) here is pointless unless he had been dead. He had been taken up dead and now they brought him living. {Not a little} (\ou metri^s\). Not moderately, that is a great deal. Luke is fond of this use of the figure _litotes_ (use of the negative) instead of the strong positive (1:5, etc.). D (Codex Bezae) has here instead of \^gagon\ these words: \alpazomen^n de aut^n ^gagen ton neaniskon z^nta\ (while they were saying farewell he brought the young man alive). This reading pictures the joyful scene over the lad's restoration as Paul was leaving.

20:13 {To the ship} (\epi to ploion\). Note article. It is possible that Paul's party had chartered a coasting vessel from Philippi or Troas to take them to Patara in Lycia. Hence the boat stopped when and where Paul wished. That is possible, but not certain, for Paul could simply have accommodated himself to the plans of the ship's managers. {To take in Paul} (\analambanein ton Paulon). So in verse 14. Same use in 2Ti 4:11: "Picking up Mark" (\Markon analab“n). Assos was a seaport south of Troas in Mysia in the province of Asia. {He had appointed} (\diatetagmenos ^n). Past perfect periphrastic middle of \diatass“, old verb to give orders (military in particular). {To go by land} (\pezeuein). Present active infinitive of \pezeu“, old verb to go on foot, not on horse back or in a carriage or by ship. Here only in the N.T. It was about twenty miles over a paved Roman road, much shorter (less than half) than the sea voyage around Cape Lectum. It was a beautiful walk in the spring-time and no doubt Paul enjoyed it whatever his reason was for going thus to Assos while the rest went by sea. Certainly he was entitled to a little time alone, this one day, as Jesus sought the Father in the night watches (Mt 14:23).

20:14 {Met us} (\suneballen h^min). Imperfect active where the aorist (\sunebalen, as C D have it) would seem more natural. It may mean that as soon as (h“s) Paul "came near or began to meet us" (inchoative imperfect), we picked him up. Luke alone in the N.T. uses \sunball“ to bring or come together either in a friendly sense as here or as enemies (Lu 14:31). {To Mitylene} (\eis Mitul^nn). The capital of Lesbos about thirty miles from Assos, an easy day's sailing.

20:15 {We came over against Chios} (\kat^nt^samen antikrus Chiou). Luke uses this _Koin,_ verb several times (16:1; 18:19), meaning to come right down in front of and the notion of \anta is made plainer by \antikrus, face to face with, common "improper" preposition only here in the N.T. They probably lay off the coast (anchoring) during the night instead of putting into the harbour. The Island of Chios is about eight miles from the mainland. {The next day} (\t^i heterfi). The third day in reality from Assos (the fourth from Troas), in contrast with \t^i epious^i just before for Chios. {We touched at Samos} (\parebalomen eis Samon). Second aorist active of \paraball“, to throw alongside, to cross over, to put in by. So Thucydides III. 32. Only here in the N.T. though in Textus Receptus in Mr 4:30. The word parable (\parabol^i) is from this verb. The Textus Receptus adds here \kai meinantes en Trogulli“i (and remaining at Trogyllium), but clearly not genuine. In passing from Chios to Samos they sailed past Ephesus to save time for Pentecost in Jerusalem (verse 16), if in control of the ship, or because the captain allowed Paul to have his way. The island of Samos is still further down the coast below Chios. It is not stated whether a stop was made here or not. {The day after} (t̃i echomeñi). The day holding itself next to the one before. Note Luke's three terms in this verse (t̃i epious̃i, t̃i heterfi, t̃i echomeñi). This would be the fourth from Assos. {To Miletus} (eis Mil̃ton). About 28 miles south of Ephesus and now the site is several miles from the sea due to the silt from the Maeander. This city, once the chief city of the Ionian Greeks, was now quite eclipsed by Ephesus.

20:16 {For Paul had determined} (kekrikei gar ho Paulos). Past perfect active (correct text) of \kriñ“ and not the aorist \ekrine. Either Paul controlled the ship or the captain was willing to oblige him. {To sail past Ephesus} (parapleusai t̃n Epheson). First aorist active infinitive of \paraple“, old verb to sail beside, only here in the N.T. {That he might not have} (hop̃s m̃ geñtai aut̃i). Final clause (negative) with aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai and dative "that it might not happen to him." {To spend time} (chronotrib̃sai). First aorist active of the late compound verb \chronotribē“ (\chronos, time, \trib“, to spend), only here in the N.T. The verb \trib“, to rub, to wear out by rubbing, lends itself to the idea of wasting time. It was only a year ago that Paul had left Ephesus in haste after the riot. It was not expedient to go back so soon if he meant to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost. Paul clearly felt (Ro 15) that the presentation of this collection at Pentecost to the Jewish Christians would have a wholesome influence as it had done once before (Ac 11:30). {He was hastening} (espeuden). Imperfect active of \speud“, old verb to hasten as in Lu 2:16; 19:56. {If it were possible for him} (ei dunaton eĩ aut̃i). Condition of the fourth class (optative mode), if it should be possible for him. The form is a remote possibility. It was only some thirty days till Pentecost. {The day of Pentecost} (t̃n h̃meran t̃s pent̃kost̃s). Note the accusative case. Paul wanted to be there for the whole day. See Ac 2:1 for this very phrase.

20:17 {Called to him} (metekalesato). Aorist middle (indirect) indicative of \metakale“, old verb to call from one place to another (\meta for "change"), middle to call to oneself, only in Acts in the N.T. (7:14; 10:32; 20:17; 24:25). Ephesus was some thirty miles, a stiff day's journey each way. They would be with Paul the third day of the stay in Miletus. {The elders of the church} (tous presbuterous t^hs ekkl^hsias). The very men whom Paul terms "bishops" (episkopous) in verse 28 just as in Tit 1:5,7 where both terms (presbuterous, ton episkopon) describe the same office. The term "elder" applied to Christian ministers first appears in Ac 11:30 in Jerusalem and reappears in 15:4,6,22 in connection with the apostles and the church. The "elders" are not "apostles" but are "bishops" (cf. Php 1:1) and with "deacons" constitute the two classes of officers in the early churches. Ignatius shows that in the early second century the office of bishop over the elders had developed, but Lightfoot has shown that it was not so in the first century. Each church, as in Jerusalem, Philippi, Ephesus, had a number of "elders" ("bishops") in the one great city church. Hackett thinks that other ministers from the neighbourhood also came. It was a noble group of preachers and Paul, the greatest preacher of the ages, makes a remarkable talk to preachers with all the earmarks of Pauline originality (Spitta, _Apostelgeschichte_, p. 252) as shown by the characteristic Pauline words, phrases, ideas current in all his Epistles including the Pastoral (testify, course, pure, take heed, presbyter, bishop, acquire, apparel). Luke heard this address as he may and probably did hear those in Jerusalem and Caesarea (Ac 21-26). Furneaux suggests that Luke probably took shorthand notes of the address since Galen says that his students took down his medical lectures in shorthand: "At any rate, of all the speeches in the Acts this contains most of Paul and least of Luke. ... It reveals Paul as nothing else does. The man who spoke it is no longer a man of eighteen centuries ago: he is of yesterday; of today. He speaks as we speak and feels as we feel; or rather as we fain would speak and feel." We have seen and listened to Paul speak to the Jews in Antioch in Pisidia as Luke pictures the scene, to the uneducated pagans at Lystra, to the cultured Greeks in Athens. We shall hear him plead for his life to the Jewish mob in Jerusalem, to the Roman governor Felix in Caesarea, to the Jewish "King" Herod Agrippa II in Caesarea, and at last to the Jews in Rome. But here Paul unbosoms himself to the ministers of the church in Ephesus where he had spent three years (longer than with any other church) and where he had such varied experiences of prowess and persecution. He opens his heart to these men as he does not to the average crowd even of believers. It is Paul's _Apologia pro sua Vita_. He will probably not see them again and so the outlook and attitude is similar to the farewell discourse of Jesus to the disciples in the upper room (Joh 13-17). He warns them about future perils as Jesus had done. Paul's words here will repay any preacher's study today. There is the same high conception of the ministry here that Paul had already elaborated in 2Co 2:12-6:10 (see my _Glory of the Ministry_). It is a fitting time and occasion for Paul to take stock of his ministry at the close of the third mission tour. What wonders had God wrought already.

20:18 {Ye yourselves know} (\humeis epistasthe). Pronoun expressed and emphatic. He appeals to their personal knowledge of his life in Ephesus. {From the first day that} (\apo pr“t’s h^meras aph’ h^s). "From first day from which." He had first "set foot" (\epeb^n, second aorist active indicative of old verb \epibain“, to step upon or step into) in Ephesus four years ago in the spring of 51 or 52, but had returned from Antioch that autumn. It is now spring of 54 or 55 so that his actual ministry in Ephesus was about two and a half years, roughly three years (verse 31).

{After what manner I was with you} (\p“s meth’ h–m“n egenom^n). Literally, "How I came (from Asia and so was) with you." Cf. 1Th 1:5; 2Th 2:1-10 where Paul likewise dares to refer boldly to his life while with them "all the time" (\ton panta chronon). Accusative of duration of time. So far as we know, Paul stuck to Ephesus the whole period. He had devoted himself consecratedly to the task in Ephesus. Each pastor is bishop of his field and has a golden opportunity to work it for Christ. One of the saddest things about the present situation is the restlessness of preachers to go elsewhere instead of devoting themselves wholly to the task where they are. 19. {Serving the Lord} (\douleu“n t“i kuri“i). It was Paul's glory to be the \doulos (bond-slave) as in Ro 1:1; Php 1:1. Paul alone, save Jesus in Mt 6:24; Lu 16:13, uses \douleu“ six times for serving God (Page). {With all lowliness of mind} (\meta pas^s tapeinophrosun^s). Lightfoot notes that heathen writers use this word for a grovelling, abject state of mind, but Paul follows Christ in using it for humility, humble-mindedness that should mark every Christian and in particular the preacher. {With tears} (\dakru“n). Construed with \meta. Paul was a man of the deepest emotion along with his high intellectuality. He mentions his tears again in verse 31, tears of sorrow and of anxiety. He refers to his tears in writing the sharp letter to the church in Corinth (2Co 2:4) and in denouncing the sensual apostates in Php 3:18. Adolphe Monod has a wonderful sermon on the tears of Paul. Consider also the tears of Jesus. {Trials which befell me} (\peirasm“n t“n sumbant“n moi\). Construed also with \meta\. Second aorist active participle of \sunbain“\, to walk with, to go with, to come together, to happen, to befall. Very common in this sense in the old Greek (cf. Ac 3:10). {By the plots of the Jews} (\en tais epiboulais t“n Ioudai“n\). Like the plot (\epiboul^\) against him in Corinth (20:3) as well as the earlier trial before Gallio and the attacks in Thessalonica. In Ac 19:9 Luke shows the hostile attitude of the Jews in Ephesus that drove Paul out of the synagogue to the school of Tyrannus. He does not describe in detail these "plots" which may easily be imagined from Paul's own letters and may be even referred to in 1Co 4:10; 15:30ff.; 16:9; 2Co 1:4-10; 7:5; 11:23. In fact, one has only to dwell on the allusions in 2Co 11 to picture what Paul's life was in Ephesus during these three years. Luke gives in Ac 19 the outbreak of Demetrius, but Paul had already fought with "wild-beasts" there.

20:20 {How that I shrank not} (\h“s ouden hupesteilamen\). Still indirect discourse (question) after \epistasthe\ (ye know) with \h“s\ like \p“s\ in verse 18. First aorist middle of \hupostell“\, old verb to draw under or back. It was so used of drawing back or down sails on a ship and, as Paul had so recently been on the sea, that may be the metaphor here. But it is not necessarily so as the direct middle here makes good sense and is frequent, to withdraw oneself, to cower, to shrink, to conceal, to dissemble as in Hab 2:4 (Heb 10:38). Demosthenes so used it to shrink from declaring out of fear for others. This open candour of Paul is supported by his Epistles (1Th 2:4,11; 2Co 4:2; Ga 1:10). {From declaring unto you} (\tou m^ anaggeilai humin\). Ablative case of the articular first aorist active infinitive of \anaggell“\ with the redundant negative after verbs of hindering, etc. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1094). {Anything that was profitable} (t“n sumpheront“n\). Partitive genitive after \ouden\ of the articular present active participle of \sumpher“\, to bear together, be profitable. {Publicly} (\d`mosifi\, adverb) {and from house to house} (\kai kat' oikous\). By (according to) houses. It is worth noting that this greatest of preachers preached from house to house and did not make his visits merely social calls. He was doing kingdom business all the while as in the house of Aquila and Priscilla

(1Co 16:19).

20:21 {Testifying} (\dⁱamarturomenos\). As Peter did (Ac 2:40) where Luke uses this same word thoroughly Lucan and Pauline. So again in verses 23,24. Paul here as in Ro 1:16 includes both Jews and Greeks, to the Jew first. {Repentance toward God} (\tⁿeis theon metanoian\) {and faith toward our Lord Jesus} (\kai pistin eis ton kurion h^m“n I^soun\). These two elements run through the Epistle to the Romans which Paul had recently written and sent from Corinth. These two elements appear in all Paul's preaching whether "to Jews or Gentiles, to philosophers at Athens or to peasants at Lystra, he preached repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus" (Knowling).

20:22 {Bound in the spirit} (\dedemenos tⁱ pneumati\). Perfect passive participle of \de“\, to bind, with the locative case. "Bound in my spirit" he means, as in 19:21, from a high sense of duty. The mention of "the Holy Spirit" specifically in verse 23 seems to be in contrast to his own spirit here. His own spirit was under the control of the Holy Spirit (Ro 8:16) and the sense does not differ greatly. {Not knowing} (\m[^]eid“s\). Second perfect active participle of \oida\ with \m[^]\. {That shall befall me} (\ta sunant[^]son^ta emoi\). Articular future active participle of \sunanta“\, to meet with (Ac 10:25), to befall (with associative instrumental case) and compare with \sumbant“n\ (befell) in verse 19. One of the rare instances of the future participle in the N.T.

20:23 {Save that} (\plⁿ hoti\). The \hoti\ clause is really in the ablative case after \plⁿ\, here a preposition as in Php 1:18, this idiom \plⁿ hoti\ occasionally in ancient Greek. {In every city} (\kata polin\). Singular here though plural in \kat' oikous\ (verse 20). {Bonds and afflictions} (\desma kai thlipseis\). Both together as in Php 1:17; 2Co 1:8. Literal bonds and actual pressures. {Abide me} (\me menousin\). With the accusative as in verse 5 (\emenon h^mas\) and nowhere else in the N.T.

20:24 {But I hold not my life of any account} (\all' oudenos logou poioumai tⁿ psuch[^]n\). Neat Greek idiom, accusative \psuch[^]n\ and genitive \logou\ and then Paul adds "dear unto myself" (\timian emaut[^]i\ in apposition with \psuch[^]n\ (really a combination of two constructions). {So that I may accomplish my course} (\h“s telei“s“ dromon mou\). Rather, "In order that"

(purpose, not result). Aleph and B read \telei“s“\ here (first aorist active subjunctive) rather than \telei“sai\ (first aorist active infinitive). It is the lone instance in the N.T. of \h“s\ as a final particle (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 987). Paul in Ac 13:25 in his sermon at Antioch in Pisidia described John as fulfilling his course and in 2Ti 4:7 he will say: "I have finished my course" (ton dromon teteleka). He will run the race to the end. {Which I received from the Lord Jesus} (h^ⁿ elabon para tou kuriou I^sou). Of that fact he never had a doubt and it was a proud boast (Gal 1:1; Ro 11:13). {The gospel of the grace of God} (to euaggelion t^s charitos tou theou). To Paul the gospel consisted in the grace of God. See this word "grace" (charis) in Romans and his other Epistles.

20:25 {And now, behold} (kai nun, idou). Second time and solemn reminder as in verse 22. {I know} (eg“ oida). Emphasis on \eg“\ which is expressed. {Ye all} (humeis pantes). In very emphatic position after the verb \opsesthe\ (shall see) and the object (my face). Twice Paul will write from Rome (Php 2:24; Phm 1:22) the hope of coming east again; but that is in the future, and here Paul is expressing his personal conviction and his fears. The Pastoral Epistles show Paul did come to Ephesus again (1Ti 1:3; 3:14; 4:13) and Troas (2Ti 4:13) and Miletus (2Ti 4:20). There need be no surprise that Paul's fears turned out otherwise. He had reason enough for them. {Among whom I went about} (en hois di^lthon). Apparently Paul here has in mind others beside the ministers. They represented the church in Ephesus and the whole region where Paul laboured.

20:26 {I testify} (marturomai). Elsewhere in the N.T. only in Paul's Epistles (Ga 5:3; Eph 4:17; 1Th 2:12). It means "I call to witness" while \marture“\ means "I bear witness." {This day} (en t^i s^^hmeron h^^hmerfi). The today day, the last day with you, our parting day. {I am pure from the blood of all men} (katharos eimi apo tou haimatos pant“n). Paul was sensitive on this point as in Corinth (Ac 18:6). It is much for any preacher to claim and it ought to be true of all. The papyri also give this use of \apo\ with the ablative rather than the mere ablative after \katharos\.

20:27 Paul here repeats the very words and idioms used in verse 20, adding "the whole counsel of God" (pfsan t^ⁿ boul^ⁿ tou theou). All the counsel of God that concerned Paul's work and nothing inconsistent with the purpose of God of redemption through Christ Jesus (Page).

20:28 {Take heed unto yourselves} (\prosechete heautois\). The full phrase had \ton noun\, hold your mind on yourselves (or other object in the dative), as often in old writers and in Job 7:17. But the ancients often used the idiom with \noun\ understood, but not expressed as here and Ac 5:35; Lu 12:1; 17:3; 21:34; 1Ti 1:4; 3:8; 4:13. \Epeche\ is so used in 1Ti 4:16. {To all the flock} (\panti t*“i poimni“i*\). Contracted form of \poimenion = poimn[^]\ (Joh 10:16) already in Lu 12:32 and also in Ac 20:29; 1Pe 5:2,3. Common in old Greek. {Hath made} (\etheto\). Did make, second aorist middle indicative of \tith[^]mi\, did appoint. Paul evidently believed that the Holy Spirit calls and appoints ministers. {Bishops} (\episkopous\). The same men termed elders in verse 17 which see. {To shepherd} (\poimainein\). Present active infinitive of purpose of \poimain[“]\, old verb to feed or tend the flock (\poimn[^], poimnion\), to act as shepherd (\poim[^]n\). These ministers are thus in Paul's speech called elders (verse 17), bishops (verse 28), and shepherds (verse 28). Jesus had used this very word to Peter (Joh 21:16, twice \boske\, feed, 21:15,17) and Peter will use it in addressing fellow-elders (1Pe 5:2) with memories, no doubt of the words of Jesus to him. The "elders" were to watch over as "bishops" and "tend and feed as shepherds" the flock. Jesus is termed "the shepherd and bishop of your souls" in 1Pe 2:25 and "the great Shepherd of the sheep" in Heb 13:20. Jesus called himself "the good Shepherd" in Joh 10:11. {The church of God} (\t[^]n ekkl[^]sian tou theou\). The correct text, not "the church of the Lord" or "the church of the Lord and God" (Robertson, _Introduction to Textual Criticism of the N.T._, p. 189). {He purchased} (\periepoi[^]sato\). First aorist middle of \peripoie[“]\, old verb to reserve, to preserve (for or by oneself, in the middle). In the N.T. only in Luke 17:33; Ac 20:28; 1Ti 3:13. The substantive \peripoi[^]sin\ (preservation, possession) occurs in 1Pe 2:9 ("a peculiar people" = a people for a possession) and in Eph 1:14. {With his own blood} (\dia tou haimatos tou idiou\). Through the agency of (\dia\ his own blood. Whose blood? If \tou theou\ (Aleph B Vulg.) is correct, as it is, then Jesus is here called "God" who shed his own blood for the flock. It will not do to say that Paul did not call Jesus God, for we have Ro 9:5; Col 2:9; Tit 2:13 where he does that very thing, besides Col 1:15-20; Php 2:5-11.

20:29 {After my departing} (\meta tⁿ aphixin mou\). Not his death, but his departure from them. From \aphikneomai\ and usually meant arrival, but departure in Herodotus IX. 17, 76 as here. {Grievous wolves} (\lukoi bareis\). \Bareis\ is heavy, rapacious, harsh. Jesus had already so described false teachers who would raven the fold (Joh 10:12). Whether Paul had in mind the Judaizers who had given him so much trouble in Antioch, Jerusalem, Galatia, Corinth or the Gnostics the shadow of whose coming he already foresaw is not perfectly clear. But it will not be many years before Epaphras will come to Rome from Colossae with news of the new peril there (Epistle to the Colossians). In writing to Timothy (1Ti 1:20) Paul will warn him against some who have already made shipwreck of their faith. In Re 2:2 John will represent Jesus as describing false apostles in Ephesus. {Not sparing the flock} (\m^h pheidomenoi tou poimniou\). Litotes again as so often in Acts. Sparing the flock was not the fashion of wolves. Jesus sent the seventy as lambs in the midst of wolves (Lu 10:3). In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus had pictured the false prophets who would come as ravening wolves in sheep's clothing (Mt 7:15).

20:30 {From among your own selves} (\ex humⁿ autⁿ\). In sheep's clothing just as Jesus had foretold. The outcome fully justified Paul's apprehensions as we see in Colossians, Ephesians, I and II Timothy, Revelation. False philosophy, immorality, asceticism will lead some astray (Col 2:8,18; Eph 4:14; 5:6). John will picture "antichrists" who went out from us because they were not of us (1Jo 2:18f.). There is a false optimism that is complacently blind as well as a despondent pessimism that gives up the fight. {Perverse things} (\diestrammena\). Perfect passive participle of \diastreph^a\, old verb to turn aside, twist, distort as in Ac 13:8,10. {To draw away} (\tou apospfin\). Articular genitive present active participle of purpose from \apospa^a\, old verb used to draw the sword (Mt 26:51), to separate (Lu 22:41; Ac 21:1). The pity of it is that such leaders of dissension can always gain a certain following. Paul's long residence in Ephesus enabled him to judge clearly of conditions there.

20:31 {Wherefore watch ye} (\dio gr^h goreite\). Paul has concluded his defence of himself and his warning. Now he exhorts on the basis of it (\dio\) because of which thing. The very command of Jesus concerning the perils before his return as in Mr 13:35

(\gr̂goreite\), the very form (late present imperative from the second perfect |egr̂gora| of |egeir̂“, to arouse). Stay awake. {I ceased not to admonish} (\ouk epausam̂n nouthet̂“n\). Participle describes Paul, I did not cease admonishing, night and day (\nukta kai ĥmeran\, accusative of extent of time, for three years |trietian\, accusative of extent of time also). \Nouthet̂“n\ is from \nouthetê“, to put sense into one. So Paul kept it up with tears (verse 19) if so be he could save the Ephesians from the impending perils. Forewarned is to be forearmed. Paul did his duty by them.

20:32 {And now} (\kai ta nun\). Same phrase as in verses 22,25 save that \idou\ (behold) is wanting and the article \ta\ occurs before \nun\, accusative of general reference. And as to the present things (or situation) as in 4:29. {I commend} (\paratithemai\). Present middle indicative of \paratitĥmi\, old verb to place beside, middle, to deposit with one, to interest as in 1Ti 1:18; 2Ti 2:2. Paul can now only do this, but he does it hopefully. Cf. 1Pe 4:19. {The word of his grace} (\t̂“i loĝ“i t̂s charitos autou\). The instrumentality through preaching and the Holy Spirit employed by God. Cf. Col 4:6; Eph 4:29. {Which is able to build up} (\t̂“i dunamen̂“i oikodom̂sai\). God works through the word of his grace and so it is able to build up (edify); a favourite Pauline word (1Co 3:10-14; 3:9; 2Co 5:1; Eph 2:20-22; 2Ti 3:15; etc.), and Jas 1:21. The very words "build" and "inheritance among the sanctified" will occur in Eph 1:11; 2:30; 3:18 and which some may recall on reading. Cf. Col 1:12. Stephen in Ac 7:5 used the word "inheritance" (\kl̂ronomian\), nowhere else in Acts, but in Eph 1:14,18; 5:5. In Eph 1:18 the very expression occurs "his inheritance among the saints " (\t̂n kl̂ronomian autou en tois hagiois\).

20:33 {No man's silver or gold or apparel} (\arguriou ^chrusiou ^himatismou oudenos\). Genitive case after \epethum̂sa\. One of the slanders against Paul was that he was raising this collection, ostensibly for the poor, really for himself (2Co 12:17f.). He includes "apparel" because oriental wealth consisted largely in fine apparel (not old worn out clothes). See Ge 24:53; 2Ki 5:5; Ps 45:13f.; Mt 6:19. Paul did not preach just for money.

20:34 {Ye yourselves} (\autoi\). Intensive pronoun. Certainly they knew that the church in Ephesus had not supported Paul while there. {These hands} (\hai cheires hautai\). Paul was not above manual labour. He pointed to his hands with pride as proof that he toiled at his trade of tent-making as at Thessalonica and Corinth for his own needs (\chreiais) and for those with him (probably Aquila and Priscilla) with whom he lived and probably Timothy because of his often infirmities (1Ti 5:23).

{Ministered} (\hup^ret^san). First aorist active of \hup^rete^“, to act as under rower, old verb, but in the N.T. only in Ac 13:36; 20:34; 24:23. While in Ephesus Paul wrote to Corinth: "We toil, working with our own hands" (1Co 4:12). "As he held them up, they saw a tongue of truth in every seam that marked them" (Furneaux).

20:35 {I gave you an example} (\hupedeixa). First aorist active indicative of \hupodeiknumi, old verb to show under one's eyes, to give object lesson, by deed as well as by word (Lu 6:47). \Hupodeigma means example (Joh 13:15; Jas 5:10). So Paul appeals to his example in 1Co 11:1; Php 3:17. \Panta is accusative plural of general reference (in all things). {So labouring ye ought to help} (\hout^s kopi^ntas dei antilambanesthai). So, as I did. Necessity (\dei). Toiling (\kopi^ntas) not just for ourselves, but to help (\antilambanesthai), to take hold yourselves (middle voice) at the other end (\anti). This verb common in the old Greek, but in the N.T. only in Lu 1:54; Ac 20:35; 1Ti 6:2. This noble plea to help the weak is the very spirit of Christ (1Th 5:14; 1Co 12:28; Ro 5:6; 14:1). In 1Th 5:14 \antechesthe t^n asthenount^n we have Paul's very idea again. Every Community Chest appeal today re-echoes Paul's plea. {He himself said} (\autos eipen). Not in the Gospels, one of the sayings of Jesus in current use that Paul had received and treasured. Various other _Agrapha_ of Jesus have been preserved in ancient writers and some in recently discovered papyri which may be genuine or not. We are grateful that Paul treasured this one. This Beatitude (on \makarion\ see on Mt 5:3-11) is illustrated by the whole life of Jesus with the Cross as the culmination. Aristotle (Eth. IV. I) has a saying somewhat like this, but assigns the feeling of superiority as the reason (Page), an utterly different idea from that here. This quotation raises the question of how much Paul personally knew of the life and sayings of Jesus.

20:36 {He kneeled down} (\theis ta gonata autou). Second aorist active participle of \tith^mi, to place. The very idiom used in 7:60 of Stephen. Not in ancient writers and only six times in the N.T. (Mr 15:19; Lu 22:41; Ac 7:60; 9:40; 20:36; 21:5).

Certainly kneeling in prayer is a fitting attitude (cf. Jesus, Lu 22:41), though not the only proper one (Mt 6:5). Paul apparently prayed aloud (\pros^uxato).

20:37 {They all wept sore} (\hikanos klauthmos egeneto pant^n).

Literally, There came considerable weeping of all (on the part of all, genitive case). {Kissed him} (\katephiloun auton).

Imperfect active of \kataphile^, old verb, intensive with \kata and repetition shown also by the tense: They kept on kissing or kissed repeatedly, probably one after the other falling on his neck. Cf. also Mt 26:49.

20:38 {Sorrowing} (\odun^menoi). Present middle participle of \oduna^, old verb to cause intense pain, to torment (Lu 16:24), middle to distress oneself (Lu 2:48; Ac 20:38).

Nowhere else in N.T. {Which he had spoken} (\h^i eir^kei).

Relative attracted to the case of the antecedent \log^i (word).

Past perfect indicative of \eipon. {They brought him on his way} (\proepempon auton). Imperfect active of \propemp^, old verb to send forward, to accompany as in Ac 15:3; 20:38; 21:5; 1Co 16:6,11; 2Co 1:16; Tit 3:13; 3Jo 1:6. Graphic picture of Paul's departure from this group of ministers.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

21:1 {Were parted from them} (\apospasthentas ap' aut' n). First aorist passive participle of \apospa' same verb as in 20:30; Lu 22:41. {Had set sail} (\anachth nai). First aorist passive of \anag', the usual verb to put out (up) to sea as in verse 2 (\an chth men). {We came with a straight course} (\euthudrom santes lthomen). The same verb (aorist active participle of \euthudrome') used by Luke in 16:11 of the voyage from Troas to Samothrace and Neapolis, which see. {Unto Cos} (\eis t n Ko). Standing today, about forty nautical miles south from Miletus, island famous as the birthplace of Hippocrates and Apelles with a great medical school. Great trading place with many Jews. {The next day} (\t i hex s). Locative case with \h merfi (day) understood. The adverb \hex s is from \ech' (future \hex') and means successively or in order. This is another one of Luke's ways of saying "on the next day" (cf. three others in 20:15). {Unto Rhodes} (\eis t n Rhodon). Called the island of roses. The sun shone most days and made roses luxuriant. The great colossus which represented the sun, one of the seven wonders of the world, was prostrate at this time. The island was at the entrance to the Aegean Sea and had a great university, especially for rhetoric and oratory. There was great commerce also. {Unto Patara} (\eis Patara). A seaport on the Lycian coast on the left bank of the Xanthus. It once had an oracle of Apollo which rivalled that at Delphi. This was the course taken by hundreds of ships every season.

21:2 {Having found a ship} (\heurontes ploion). Paul had used a small coasting vessel (probably hired) that anchored each night at Cos, Rhodes, Patara. He was still some four hundred miles from Jerusalem. But at Patara Paul caught a large vessel (a merchantman) that could sail across the open sea. {Crossing over unto Phoenicia} (\diaper n eis Phoinik n). Neuter singular accusative (agreeing with \ploion) present active participle of \diapera', old verb to go between (\dia) and so across to Tyre. {We went aboard} (\epibantes). Second aorist active participle of \epibain'.

21:3 {When we had come in sight of Cyprus} (\anaphanantes t n Kupron\). First aorist active participle of \anaphain“\ (Doric form \-phanfntes\ rather than the Attic \-ph^hantes\), old verb to make appear, bring to light, to manifest. Having made Cyprus visible or rise up out of the sea. Nautical terms. In the N.T. only here and Lu 19:11 which see. {On the left hand} (\eu“numon\). Compound feminine adjective like masculine. They sailed south of Cyprus. {We sailed} (\epleomen\). Imperfect active of common verb \ple“\, kept on sailing till we came to Syria. {Landed at Tyre} (\kat^hlthomen eis Turon\). Came down to Tyre. Then a free city of Syria in honour of its former greatness (cf. the long siege by Alexander the Great). {There} (\ekeise\). Thither, literally. Only one other instance in N.T., 22:5 which may be pertinent = \ekei\ (there). {Was to unlade} (\ⁿapophortizomenon\). Periphrastic imperfect middle of \apophortiz“\, late verb from \apo\ and \phortos\, load, but here only in the N.T. Literally, "For thither the boat was unloading her cargo," a sort of "customary" or "progressive" imperfect (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 884). {Burden} (\gomon\). Cargo, old word, from \gem“\, to be full. Only here and Re 18:11f. in N.T. Probably a grain or fruit ship. It took seven days here to unload and reload.

21:4 {Having found} (\aneurontes\). Second aorist active participle of \aneurisk“\, to seek for, to find by searching (\ana\). There was a church here, but it was a large city and the number of members may not have been large. Probably some of those that fled from Jerusalem who came to Phoenicia (Ac 11:19) started the work here. Paul went also through Phoenicia on the way to the Jerusalem Conference (15:3). As at Troas and Miletus, so here Paul's indefatigable energy shows itself with characteristic zeal. {Through the Spirit} (\dia tou pneumatos\). The Holy Spirit undoubtedly who had already told Paul that bonds and afflictions awaited him in Jerusalem (20:23). {That he should not set foot in Jerusalem} (\m^h epibainein eis Ierosoluma\). Indirect command with \m^h\ and the present active infinitive, not to keep on going to Jerusalem (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1046). In spite of this warning Paul felt it his duty as before (20:22) to go on. Evidently Paul interpreted the action of the Holy Spirit as information and warning although the disciples at Tyre gave it the form of a prohibition. Duty called louder than warning to Paul even if both were the calls of God.

21:5 {That we had accomplished the days} (\exartisai h^hmfs tas h^meras\). First aorist active infinitive of \exartiz^{\}, to furnish perfectly, rare in ancient writers, but fairly frequent in the papyri. Only twice in the N.T., here and 2Ti 3:17. Finish the exact number of days (seven) of verse 4. The accusative of general reference \h^mfs\ is the usual construction and the infinitive clause is the subject of \egeneto\). We departed and went on our journey (\exelthontes eporeuometha\). Sharp distinction between the first aorist active participle \exelthontes\ (from \exerchomai\, to go out) and the imperfect middle \eporeuometha\ from \poreu^{\} (we were going on). {And they all, with wives and children, brought us on our way} (\propempont^{\} n h^mfs pant^{\} n sun gunaixi kai teknois\). No "and" in the Greek, simply genitive absolute, "They all with wives and children accompanying us," just as at Miletus (20:28), same verb \propemp^{\} which see. The first mention of children in connection with the apostolic churches (Vincent). Vivid picture here as at Miletus, evident touch of an eyewitness. {Till we were out of the city} (\he^{\} s ex^{\} t^{\} s pole^{\} s\). Note both adverbial prepositions (\he^{\} s ex^{\}) clear outside of the city.

21:6 {Beach} (\aigialon\). As in Mt 13:2 which see. This scene is in public as at Miletus, but they did not care. {Bade each other farewell} (\apespasametha all^{\} lous\). First aorist middle of \apaspazomai\). Rare compound, here alone in the N.T. Tender scene, but "no bonds of long comradeship, none of the clinging love" (Furneaux) seen at Miletus (Ac 20:37f.). {Home again} (\eis ta idia\). To their own places as of the Beloved Disciple in Joh 19:27 and of Jesus in Joh 1:11. This idiom in the papyri also.

21:7 {Had finished} (\dianusantes\). First aorist active participle of \dianu^{\}, old verb to accomplish (\anu^{\}) thoroughly (\dia\), only here in the N.T. {From Tyre} (\apo Turou\). Page takes (Hackett also) with \kat^{\} nt^{\} samen\ (we arrived) rather than with "\ton ploun\" (the voyage) and with good reason: "And we, having (thereby) finished the voyage, arrived from Tyre at Ptolemais." Ptolemais is the modern Acre, called Accho in Jud 1:31. The harbour is the best on the coast of Palestine and is surrounded by mountains. It is about thirty miles south of Tyre. It was never taken by Israel and was considered a Philistine town and the Greeks counted it a Phoenician city. It was the key to the road down the coast between Syria and Egypt and had successively the rule of the Ptolemies, Syrians, Romans. {Saluted} (\aspasamenoi). Here greeting as in 21:19 rather than farewell as in 20:1. The stay was short, one day (\h^meran mian\, accusative), but "the brethren" Paul and his party found easily. Possibly the scattered brethren (Ac 11:19) founded the church here or Philip may have done it.

21:8 {On the morrow} (\t^i epaurion). Another and the more common way of expressing this idea of "next day" besides the three in 20:15 and the one in 21:1. {Unto Caesarea} (\eis Kaisarian). Apparently by land as the voyage (\ploun) ended at Ptolemais (verse 7). Caesarea is the political capital of Judea under the Romans where the procurators lived and a city of importance, built by Herod the Great and named in honour of Augustus. It had a magnificent harbour built Most of the inhabitants were Greeks. This is the third time that we have seen Paul in Caesarea, on his journey from Jerusalem to Tarsus (Ac 9:30), on his return from Antioch at the close of the second mission tour (18:22) and now. The best MSS. omit \hoi peri Paulou (we that were of Paul's company) a phrase like that in 13:13. {Into the house of Philip the evangelist} (\eis ton oikon Philippou tou euaggelistou). Second in the list of the seven (6:5) after Stephen and that fact mentioned here. By this title he is distinguished from "Philip the apostle," one of the twelve. His evangelistic work followed the death of Stephen (Ac 8) in Samaria, Philistia, with his home in Caesarea. The word "evangelizing" (\eu^ggelizeto) was used of him in 8:40. The earliest of the three N.T. examples of the word "evangelist" (Ac 21:8; Eph 4:11; 2Ti 4:5). Apparently a word used to describe one who told the gospel story as Philip did and may have been used of him first of all as John was termed "the baptizer" (\ho baptiz^n\, Mr 1:4), then "the Baptist" (\ho baptist^s\, Mt 3:1). It is found on an inscription in one of the Greek islands of uncertain date and was used in ecclesiastical writers of later times on the Four Gospels as we do. As used here the meaning is a travelling missionary who "gospelized" communities. This is probably Paul's idea in 2Ti 4:5. In Eph 4:11 the word seems to describe a special class of ministers just as we have them today. Men have different gifts and Philip had this of evangelizing as Paul was doing who is the chief evangelist. The ideal minister today combines the gifts of evangelist, herald, teacher, shepherd. "{We abode with him}" (\emeinamen par' aut^i). Constative aorist active indicative. \Par aut^i (by his side) is a neat idiom for "at his house." What a joyful time Paul had in conversation with Philip. He could learn from him much of value about the early days of the gospel in Jerusalem. And Luke could, and probably did, take notes from Philip and his daughters about the beginnings of Christian history. It is generally supposed that the "we" sections of Acts represent a travel document by Luke (notes made by him as he journeyed from Troas to Rome). Those who deny the Lukan authorship of the whole book usually admit this. So we may suppose that Luke is already gathering data for future use. If so, these were precious days for him.

21:9 {Virgins which did prophesy} (\parthenoi proph^{teusai}). Not necessarily an "order" of virgins, but Philip had the honour of having in his home four virgin daughters with the gift of prophecy which was not necessarily predicting events, though that was done as by Agabus here. It was more than ordinary preaching (cf. 19:6) and was put by Paul above the other gifts like tongues (1Co 14:1-33). The prophecy of Joel (2:28f.) about their sons and daughters prophesying is quoted by Peter and applied to the events on the day of Pentecost (Ac 2:17). Paul in 1Co 11:5 gives directions about praying and prophesying by the women (apparently in public worship) with the head uncovered and sharply requires the head covering, though not forbidding the praying and prophesying. With this must be compared his demand for silence by the women in 1Co 14:34-40; 1Ti 2:8-15 which it is not easy to reconcile. One wonders if there was not something known to Paul about special conditions in Corinth and Ephesus that he has not told. There was also Anna the prophetess in the temple (Lu 2:36) besides the inspired hymns of Elizabeth (Lu 1:42-45) and of Mary (Lu 1:46-55). At any rate there was no order of women prophets or official ministers. There were Old Testament prophetesses like Miriam, Deborah, Huldah. Today in our Sunday schools the women do most of the actual teaching. The whole problem is difficult and calls for restraint and reverence. One thing is certain and that is that Luke appreciated the services of women for Christ as is shown often in his writings (Lu 8:1-3, for instance) before this incident.

21:10 {As we tarried} (\epimenont^{n h^mn}). Genitive absolute. Note \epi\ (additional) with \menⁿ as in 12:16. {Many days} (\h^{meras pleious}). More days (than we expected), accusative of time. {A certain prophet named Agabus} (\proph^{ts onomati} Agabos\). A prophet like the daughters of Philip, mentioned already in connection with the famine predicted by him (Ac 11:28), but apparently not a man of prominence like Barnabas, and so no allusion to that former prophecy.

21:11 {Coming} (\elth“n\, second aorist active participle of \erchomai\), taking (\aras\, first aorist active participle of \air“\, to take up\), {binding} (\d^sas\, first aorist active participle of \de“\, to bind\). Vivid use of three successive participles describing the dramatic action of Agabus. {Paul's girdle} (\t^nz“n^ntou Paulou\). Old word from \z“nnumi\, to gird. See on 12:8. {His own feet and hands} (\heautou tous podas kai tas cheiras\). Basis for the interpretation. Old Testament prophets often employed symbolic deeds (1Ki 22:11; Jas 2:2; Jer 13:1-7; Eze 4:1-6). Jesus interpreted the symbolism of Peter's girding himself (Joh 21:18). {So} (\hout“s\). As Agabus had bound himself. Agabus was just from Jerusalem and probably knew the feeling there against Paul. At any rate the Holy Spirit revealed it to him as he claims. {Shall deliver} (\parad“sousin\). Like the words of Jesus about himself (Mt 20:19). He was "delivered" into the hands of the Gentiles and it took five years to get out of those hands.

21:12 {Both we and they of that place} (\h^meis te kai hoi entopioi\). Usual use of \te kai\ (both--and). \Entopioi\, old word, only here in N.T. {Not to go up} (\tou m^anabainein\). Probably ablative of the articular present active infinitive with redundant negative \me\ after \parekaloumen\ (imperfect active, conative). We tried to persuade him from going up. It can be explained as genitive, but not so likely: We tried to persuade him in respect to not going up. Vincent cites the case of Regulus who insisted on returning from Rome to Carthage to certain death and that of Luther on the way to the Diet of Worms. Spalatin begged Luther not to go on. Luther said: "Though devils be as many in Worms as tiles upon the roofs, yet thither will I go." This dramatic warning of Agabus came on top of that in Tyre (21:4) and Paul's own confession in Miletus (20:23). It is small wonder that Luke and the other messengers together with Philip and his daughters (prophetesses versus prophet?) joined in a chorus of dissuasion to Paul.

21:13 {What are you doing weeping?} (\Ti poieite klaiontes?\) Strong protest as in Mr 11:5. {Breaking my heart} (\sunthruptontes mou t^nkardian\). The verb \sunthrupt“\, to crush together, is late _Koin_ for \apothrupt“, to break off, both vivid and expressive words. So to enervate and unman one, weakening Paul's determination to go on with his duty. {I am ready} (Eg“ hetoim“s ech“\). I hold (myself) in readiness (adverb, \hetoim“s\). Same idiom in 2Co 12:14. {Not only to be bound} (\ou monon deth^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \de“\ and note \ou monon\ rather than \m^ monon\, the usual negative of the infinitive because of the sharp contrast (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1095). Paul's readiness to die, if need be, at Jerusalem is like that of Jesus on the way to Jerusalem the last time. Even before that Luke (9:51) said that "he set his face to go on to Jerusalem." Later the disciples will say to Jesus, "Master, the Jews were but now seeking to stone thee; and goest thou thither?" (Joh 11:8). The stature of Paul rises here to heroic proportions "for the name of the Lord Jesus" (\huper tou onomatos tou kuriou I^sou\).

21:14 {When he would not be persuaded} (\m^ peithomenou autou\). Genitive absolute of the present passive participle of \peith“\, Literally, "he not being persuaded." That was all. Paul's will (\kardia\) was not broken, not even bent. {We ceased} (\h^suchasamen\). Ingressive aorist active indicative of \h^suchaz“, old verb to be quiet, silent. {The will of the Lord be done} (\tou kuriou to thel^ma gimesth“\). Present middle imperative of \ginomai\, There is a quaint naivete in this confession by the friends of Paul. Since Paul would not let them have their way, they were willing for the Lord to have his way, acquiescence after failure to have theirs.

21:15 {We took up our baggage} (\episkeuasamenoi\). First aorist middle participle of \episkeuaz“, old verb to furnish (\skeuos, epi\) with things necessary, to pack up, saddle horses here Ramsay holds. Here only in the N.T. {Went up} (\anebainomen\). Inchoative imperfect active of \anabain“, we started to go up.

21:16 {Certain of the disciples} (\t^“n math^t^“n\). The genitive here occurs with \tines\ understood as often in the Greek idiom, the partitive genitive used as nominative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 502). {Bringing} (\agontes\). Nominative plural participle agreeing with \tines\ understood, not with case of \math^t^“n\, {One Mnason of Cyprus, an early disciple, with whom we should lodge} (\par h^“i xenisth“men Mnas“ni tini Kupri“i archai“i math^t^i\). A thoroughly idiomatic Greek idiom, incorporation and attraction of the antecedent into the relative clause (Robertson, Grammar, p. 718). \Mnas“ni\ is really the object of \agontes\ or the accusative with \para\ or \pros\ understood and should be accusative, but it is placed in the clause after the relative and in the same locative case with the relative \h“i\ (due to \par“\, beside, with). Then the rest agrees in case with \Mnas“ni\. He was originally from Cyprus, but now in Caesarea. The Codex Bezae adds \eis tina k“m^n\ (to a certain village) and makes it mean that they were to lodge with Mnason at his home there about halfway to Jerusalem. This may be true. The use of the subjunctive \xenisth“men\ (first aorist passive of \xeniz“\, to entertain strangers as in Ac 10:6,23,32 already) may be volitive of purpose with the relative (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 955, 989). The use of \archai“i\ for "early" may refer to the fact that he was one of the original disciples at Pentecost as Peter in 15:7 uses \h^mer“n archai“n\ (early days) to refer to his experience at Caesarea in Ac 10. "As the number of the first disciples lessened, the next generation accorded a sort of honour to the survivors" (Furneaux).

21:17 {When we were come} (\genomen“n h^m“n\). Genitive absolute again, "we having come." {Received} (\apedexanto\).

\Apodechomai\, to receive from. This old compound only in Luke in the N.T. {Gladly} (\asmen“s\). Old adverb \h^smen“s\ from \h^domai\, to be pleased. Here only in the N.T. Perhaps this first glad welcome was from Paul's personal friends in Jerusalem.

21:18 {The day following} (\t^i epious^i\). As in 20:15 which see. {Went in} (\eis^iei\). Imperfect active of \eiseimi\, old classic verb used only four times in the N.T. (Ac 3:3; 21:18,26; Heb 9:6), a mark of the literary style rather than the colloquial _Koin_ use of \eiserchomai\. Together with us to James (\sun h^min pros Iak“bon\). So then Luke is present. The next use of "we" is in 27:1 when they leave Caesarea for Rome, but it is not likely that Luke was away from Paul in Jerusalem and Caesarea. The reports of what was done and said in both places is so full and minute that it seems reasonable that Luke got first hand information here whatever his motive was for so full an account of these legal proceedings to be discussed later. There are many details that read like an eye witness's story (21:30,35,40; 22:2,3; 23:12, etc.). It was probably the house of James (\pros\ and \para\ so used often). {And all the elders were present} (\pantes te paregenonto hoi presbuteroi\). Clearly James is the leading elder and the others are his guests in a formal reception to Paul. It is noticeable that the apostles are not mentioned, though both elders and apostles are named at the Conference in chapter 15. It would seem that the apostles are away on preaching tours. The whole church was not called together probably because of the known prejudice against Paul created by the Judaizers.

21:19 {He rehearsed} (\ex^geito). Imperfect middle of \ex^geomai, old verb to lead out, to draw out in narrative, to recount. So Paul is pictured as taking his time for he had a great story to tell of what had happened since they saw him last. {One by one} (\kath' hena hekaston). According to each one (item) and the adverbial phrase used as an accusative after the verb \ex^geito as Demosthenes does (1265), though it could be like \kath' hena hekastos in Eph 5:33. {Which} (\h^'n). Genitive attracted from \ha (accusative) into the case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout^'n. {God had wrought} (\epoi^sen ho theos). Summary constative aorist active indicative that gathers up all that God did and he takes pains to give God the glory. It is possible that at this formal meeting Paul observed an absence of warmth and enthusiasm in contrast with the welcome accorded by his friends the day before (verse 17). Furneaux thinks that Paul was coldly received on this day in spite of the generous offering brought from the Gentile Christians. "It looks as though his misgiving as to its reception (Ro 15:31) was confirmed. Nor do we hear that the Christians of Jerusalem later put in so much as a word on his behalf with either the Jewish or the Roman authorities, or expressed any sympathy with him during his long imprisonment at Caesarea" (Furneaux). The most that can be said is that the Judaizers referred to by James do not appear actively against him. The collection and the plan proposed by James accomplished that much at any rate. It stopped the mouths of those lions.

21:20 {Glorified} (\edoxazon). Inchoative imperfect, began to glorify God, though without special praise of Paul. {How many thousands} (\posai muriades). Old word for ten thousand (Ac 19:19) and then an indefinite number like our "myriads" (this very word) as Lu 12:1; Ac 21:20; Jude 1:14; Re 5:11; 9:16. But it is a surprising statement even with allowable hyperbole, but one may recall Ac 4:4 (number of the men--not women--about five thousand); 5:14 (multitudes both of men and women); 6:7. There were undoubtedly a great many thousands of believers in Jerusalem and all Jewish Christians, some, alas, Judaizers (Ac 11:2; 15:1,5). This list may include the Christians from neighbouring towns in Palestine and even some from foreign countries here at the Feast of Pentecost, for it is probable that Paul arrived in time for it as he had hoped. But we do not have to count the hostile Jews from Asia (verse 27) who were clearly not Christians at all. {All zealous for the law} (\pantes z^l“tai tou nomou\). Zealots (substantive) rather than zealous (adjective) with objective genitive (\tou nomou\). The word zealot is from \z^lo“, to burn with zeal, to boil. The Greek used \z^l“tˆs\ for an imitator or admirer. There was a party of Zealots (developed from the Pharisees), a group of what would be called "hot-heads," who brought on the war with Rome. One of this party, Simon Zelotes (Ac 1:13), was in the number of the twelve apostles. It is important to understand the issues in Jerusalem. It was settled at the Jerusalem Conference (Ac 15; Ga 2) that the Mosaic ceremonial law was not to be imposed upon Gentile Christians. Paul won freedom for them, but it was not said that it was wrong for Jewish Christians to go on observing it if they wished. We have seen Paul observing the passover in Philippi (Ac 20:6) and planning to reach Jerusalem for Pentecost (20:16). The Judaizers rankled under Paul's victory and power in spreading the gospel among the Gentiles and gave him great trouble in Galatia and Corinth. They were busy against him in Jerusalem also and it was to undo the harm done by them in Jerusalem that Paul gathered the great collection from the Gentile Christians and brought it with him and the delegates from the churches. Clearly then Paul had real ground for his apprehension of trouble in Jerusalem while still in Corinth (Ro 15:25) when he asked for the prayers of the Roman Christians (verses 30-32). The repeated warnings along the way were amply justified.

21:21 {They have been informed concerning thee} (\kat^{ch}ˆthˆsan peri sou\). First aorist passive indicative of \kat^{ch}e“. A word in the ancient Greek, but a few examples survive in the papyri. It means to sound (echo, from \ˆch“, our word) down (\kata\), to resound, re-echo, to teach orally. Oriental students today (Arabs learning the Koran) often study aloud. In the N.T. only in Lu 1:4 which see; Ac 18:25; 21:21; 1Co 14:19; Ga 6:6; Ro 2:18. This oral teaching about Paul was done diligently by the Judaizers who had raised trouble against Peter (Ac 11:2) and Paul (15:1,5). They had failed in their attacks on Paul's world campaigns. Now they try to undermine him at home. In Paul's long absence from Jerusalem, since 18:22, they have had a free hand, save what opposition James would give, and have had great success in prejudicing the Jerusalem Christians against Paul. So James, in the presence of the other elders and probably at their suggestion, feels called upon to tell Paul the actual situation. {That thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses} (\hoti apostasian didaskeis apo M^{use}s tous kata ta ethn[^] pantas Ioudaious\). Two accusatives with \didaskeis\ (verb of teaching) according to rule. Literally, "That thou art teaching all the Jews among (\kata\ the Gentiles (the Jews of the dispersion as in 2:9) apostasy from Moses." That is the point, the dreadful word \apostasian\ (our apostasy), a late form (I Macc. 2:15) for the earlier \apostasis\ (cf. 2Th 2:3 for \apostasia). "In the eyes of the church at Jerusalem this was a far more serious matter than the previous question at the Conference about the status of Gentile converts" (Furneaux). Paul had brought that issue to the Jerusalem Conference because of the contention of the Judaizers. But here it is not the Judaizers, but the elders of the church with James as their spokesman on behalf of the church as a whole. They do not believe this false charge, but they wish Paul to set it straight. Paul had made his position clear in his Epistles (I Corinthians, Galatians, Romans) for all who cared to know. {Telling them not to circumcise their children} (\legⁿ m[^] peritemnein autous ta tekna\). The participle \legⁿ\ agrees with "thou" (Paul), the subject of \didaskeis\. This is not indirect assertion, but indirect command, hence the negative \m[^]\ instead of \ou\ with the infinitive (Robertson, _Grammar_, p.1046). The point is not that Paul stated what the Jewish Christians in the dispersion do, but that he says that they (\autous\ accusative of general reference) are not to go on circumcising (\peritemnein\, present active infinitive) their children. Paul taught the very opposite (1Co 7:18) and had Timothy circumcised (Ac 16:3) because he was half Jew and half Greek. His own practice is stated in 1Co 9:19 ("to the Jews as a Jew"). {Neither to walk after the customs} (\m[^]de tois ethesin peripatein\). Locative case with infinitive \peripatein\. The charge was here enlarged to cover it all and to make Paul out an enemy of Jewish life and teachings. That same charge had been made against Stephen when young Saul (Paul) was the leader (6:14): "Will change the customs (\eth[^]\ the very word used here) which Moses delivered unto us." It actually seemed that some of the Jews cared more for Moses than for God (Ac 6:11). So much for the charge of the Judaizers.

21:22 {What is it therefore?} (\Ti oun estin?). See this form of question by Paul (1Co 14:15,26). What is to be done about it? Clearly James and the elders do not believe these misrepresentations of Paul's teaching, but many do. {They will certainly hear} (\pant"s akousontai\). \Pant"s\ is old adverb, by all means, altogether, wholly, certainly as here and 28:4; Lu 4:23; 1Co 9:10. This future middle of \akou"s\ is the usual form instead of \akous"s\ . There was no way to conceal Paul's arrival nor was it wise to do so. B C and several cursives omit \dei pl^thos sunelthein\ (The multitude must needs come together).

21:23 {Do therefore this} (\touto oun poi^son\). The elders had thought out a plan of procedure by which Paul could set the whole matter straight. {We have} (\eisin h^min\). "There are to us" (dative of possession as in 18:10). Apparently members of the Jerusalem church. {Which have a vow on them} (\euch^n echontes aph'-- or \eph' heaut^n\). Apparently a temporary Nazarite vow like that in Nu 6:1-21 and its completion was marked by several offerings in the temple, the shaving of the head (Nu 6:13-15). Either Paul or Aquila had such a vow on leaving Cenchreae (Ac 18:18). "It was considered a work of piety to relieve needy Jews from the expenses connected with this vow, as Paul does here" (Page). The reading \aph' heaut^n\ would mean that they had taken the vow voluntarily or of themselves (Lu 12:57; 2Co 3:5), while \eph' heaut^n\ means that the vow lies on them still.

21:24 {These take} (\toutous paralab^s\). Second aorist active participle of \paralamban"s\ . Taking these alone. {Purify thyself with them} (\hagnisth^ti sun autois\). First aorist passive imperative of \hagniz"s\ , old verb to purify, to make pure (\hagnos\). See the active voice in Jas 4:8; 1Pe 1:22; 1Jo 3:3. It is possible to see the full passive force here, "Be purified." But a number of aorist passives in the _Koin,_ supplant the aorist middle forms and preserve the force of the middle (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 819). That is possible here. Hence, "Purify thyself" is allowable. The word occurs in Nu 6:1 for taking the Nazarite vow. The point is that Paul takes the vow with them. Note \hagnismou\ in verse 26. {Be at charges for them} (\dapan^son ep' autois\). First aorist active imperative of old verb \dapana"s\ , to incur expense, expend. Spend (money) upon (\ep') them. Ramsay (_St. Paul the Traveller_, etc., p. 310) argues that Paul had use of considerable money at this period, perhaps from his father's estate. The charges for five men would be considerable. "A poor man would not have been treated with the respect paid him at Caesarea, on the voyage, and at Rome" (Furneaux). {That they may shave their heads} (\hina xur^hsontai tⁿ kephalⁿ). Note \tⁿ kephalⁿ\, the head (singular). Future middle indicative of \xura^h\, late form for the old \xure^h\, to shave, middle to shave oneself or (causative) to get oneself shaved. This use of \hina\ with the future indicative is like the classic \hop^hs\ with the future indicative and is common in the N.T. as in the _Koin_, (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 984). {And all shall know} (\kai gn^hsontai\). This future middle indicative of \gin^hsk^h\ (cf. \akousontai\ in verse 22) may be independent of \hina\ or dependent on it like \xur^hsontai\, though some MSS. (HL P) have \gn^hsin\ (second aorist subjunctive, clearly dependent on \hina). {Of which} (\h^hn\). Genitive plural of the relative \ha\ (accusative) object of the perfect passive verb \kat^hch^hntai\ (cf. verse 21 \kat^hch^hth^hsan) attracted into the case of the omitted antecedent \tout^hn\. The instruction still in effect. {But that thou thyself walkest orderly} (\alla stoicheis kai autos\). \Stoicheis\ is an old verb to go in a row (from \stoichos\, row, rank, series), to walk in a line or by rule. In the N.T. only here and Ga 5:25; Ro 4:12; Php 3:16. The rule is the law and Paul was not a sidestepper. The idea of the verb is made plain by the participle \phulass^hn ton nomon\ (keeping or observing the law).

21:25 {We wrote} (\epesteilamen\). First aorist active of \epistell^h\, to send to and so to write like our epistle (\epistol^h\). Old verb, but in the N.T. only here and Ac 15:20; Heb 13:22. It is the very word used by James in this "judgment" at the Conference (Ac 15:20, \episteilai). B D here read \apesteilamen\ from \apostell^h\, to send away, to give orders. Wendt and Schuerer object to this as a gloss. Rather is it an explanation by James that he does not refer to the Gentile Christians whose freedom from the Mosaic ceremonial law was guaranteed at the Jerusalem Conference. James himself presided at that Conference and offered the resolution that was unanimously adopted. James stands by that agreement and repeats the main items (four: anything sacrificed to idols, blood, anything strangled, fornication, for discussion see Ac 15) from which they are to keep themselves (direct middle \phulassesthai\ of \phulass^h\, indirect command after \krinantes\ with accusative, \autous\, of general reference). James has thus again cleared the air about the Gentiles who have believed (\pepisteukot^hn\, perfect active participle genitive plural of \pisteu“). He asks that Paul will stand by the right of Jewish Christians to keep on observing the Mosaic law. He has put the case squarely and fairly.

21:26 {Took the men} (\paralab“n tous andras). The very phrase used in verse 24 to Paul. {The next day} (\t^i echomen^i). One of the phrases in 20:15 for the coming day. Locative case of time. {Purifying himself with them} (\sun autois hagnistheis, first aorist passive participle of \hagniz“). The precise language again of the recommendation in verse 24. Paul was conforming to the letter. {Went into the temple} (\eis^iei eis to hieron). Imperfect active of \eiseimi as in verse 18 which see. Went on into the temple, descriptive imperfect. Paul joined the four men in their vow of separation. {Declaring} (\diaggell“n). To the priests what day he would report the fulfilment of the vow. The priests would desire notice of the sacrifice. This verb only used by Luke in N.T. except Ro 11:17 (quotation from the LXX). It is not necessary to assume that the vows of each of the five expired on the same day (Rackham). {Until the offering was offered for every one of them} (\he“s hou pros^nechth^ huper henos hekastou aut“n h^ prosphora). This use of \he“s hou (like \he“s, alone) with the first aorist passive indicative \pros^nechth^ of \prospher“, to offer, contemplates the final result (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 974f.) and is probably the statement of Luke added to Paul's announcement. He probably went into the temple one day for each of the brethren and one for himself. The question arises whether Paul acted wisely or unwisely in agreeing to the suggestion of James. What he did was in perfect harmony with his principle of accommodation in 1Co 9:20 when no principle was involved. It is charged that here on this occasion Paul was unduly influenced by considerations of expediency and was willing for the Jewish Christians to believe him more of a Jew than was true in order to placate the situation in Jerusalem. Furneaux calls it a compromise and a failure. I do not so see it. To say that is to obscure the whole complex situation. What Paul did was not for the purpose of conciliating his opponents, the Judaizers, who had diligently spread falsehoods about him in Jerusalem as in Corinth. It was solely to break the power of these "false apostles" over the thousands in Jerusalem who have been deluded by Paul's accusers. So far as the evidence goes that thing was accomplished. In the trouble that comes in Jerusalem and Caesarea the Judaizers cut no figure at all. The Jewish Christians do not appear in Paul's behalf, but there was no opportunity for them to do so. The explosion that came on the last day of Paul's appearance in the temple was wholly disconnected from his offerings for the four brethren and himself. It must be remembered that Paul had many kinds of enemies. The attack on him by these Jews from Asia had no connexion whatever with the slanders of the Judaizers about Paul's alleged teachings that Jewish Christians in the dispersion should depart from the Mosaic law. That slander was put to rest forever by his following the advice of James and justifies the wisdom of that advice and Paul's conduct about it.

21:27 {The seven days} (\hai hepta h^merai). For which Paul had taken the vow, though there may be an allusion to the pentecostal week for which Paul had desired to be present (20:16). There is no necessary connexion with the vow in 18:15. In 24:17 Paul makes a general reference to his purpose in coming to Jerusalem to bring alms and offerings (\prosphoras, sacrifices). Paul spent seven days in Troas (20:6), Tyre (21:4), and had planned for seven here if not more. It was on the last of the seven days when Paul was completing his offerings about the vows on all five that the incident occurred that was to make him a prisoner for five years. {When they saw him in the temple} (\theasamenoi auton en t^i hier^i). First aorist middle participle of \theaomai (from \thea, a view, cf. theatre) to behold. In the very act of honouring the temple these Jews from Asia raise a hue and cry that he is dishonouring it. Paul was not known by face now to many of the Jerusalem Jews, though once the leader of the persecution after the death of Stephen and the outstanding young Jew of the day. But the Jews in Ephesus knew him only too well, some of whom are here at the pentecostal feast. They had plotted against him in Ephesus to no purpose (Ac 19:23-41; 20:19), but now a new opportunity had come. It is possible that the cry was led by Alexander put forward by the Jews in Ephesus (19:33) who may be the same as Alexander the coppersmith who did Paul so much harm (2Ti 4:14). Paul was not in the inner sanctuary (\ho naos), but only in the outer courts (\to hieron). {Stirred up all the multitude} (\sunecheon panta ton ochlon). Imperfect (kept on) active of \sunche^o or \sunchun^o (\-unn^o), to pour together, to confuse as in Ac 2:6; 9:22; 19:31,32; 21:31 and here to stir up by the same sort of confusion created by Demetrius in Ephesus where the same word is used twice (19:31,32). The Jews from Ephesus had learned it from Demetrius the silversmith. {Laid hands on him} (\epebalan ep' auton tas cheiras). Second aorist (ingressive, with endings of the first aorist, -an) active indicative of \epiball“, old verb to lay upon, to attack (note repetition of \epi). They attacked and seized Paul before the charge was made.

21:28 {Help} (\bo^theite). Present active imperative of \bo^the“, to run (\the“) at a cry (\bo^“), as if an outrage had been committed like murder or assault. {All men everywhere} (\panta pantach^i). Alliterative. \Pantach^i is a variation in MSS., often \pantachou, and here only in the N.T. The charges against Paul remind one of those against Stephen (Ac 6:13) in which Paul had participated according to his confession (22:20). Like the charges against Stephen and Jesus before him truth and falsehood are mixed. Paul had said that being a Jew would not save a man. He had taught the law of Moses was not binding on Gentiles. He did hold, like Jesus and Stephen, that the temple was not the only place to worship God. But Paul gloried himself in being a Jew, considered the Mosaic law righteous for Jews, and was honouring the temple at this very moment. {And moreover also he brought Greeks also into the temple} (\eti te kai Hell^nas eis^gagen eis to hieron). Note the three particles (\eti te kai), {and} (\te) {still more} (\eti) {also} or {even} (\kai). Worse than his teaching (\didask“n) is his dreadful deed: he actually brought (\eis^gagen, second aorist active indicative of \eisag“). This he had a right to do if they only went into the court of the Gentiles. But these Jews mean to imply that Paul had brought Greeks beyond this court into the court of Israel. An inscription was found by Clermont-Ganneau in Greek built into the walls of a mosque on the Via Dolorosa that was on the wall dividing the court of Israel from the court of the Gentiles. Death was the penalty to any Gentile who crossed over into the Court of Israel (_The Athenaeum_, July, 1871). {Hath defiled this holy place} (\kekoin^ken ton hagion topon touton). Present perfect active of \koino“, to make common (see on ~10:14). Note vivid change of tense, the defilement lasts (state of completion). All this is the substance of the call of these shrewd conspirators from Ephesus, Jews (not Jewish Christians, not even Judaizers) who hated him for his work there and who probably "spoke evil of the Way before the multitude" there so that Paul had to separate the disciples from the synagogue and go to the School of Tyrannus (19:9f.). These enemies of Paul had now raised the cry of "fire" and vanish from the scene completely (24:19). This charge was absolutely false as we shall see, made out of inferences of hate and suspicion.

21:29 {For} (\gar\). Luke adds the reason for the wild charges made against Paul. {They had before seen} (\^san proe“rakotes\). Periphrastic past perfect of \proora“, old verb to see before, whether time or place. Only twice in the N.T., here and Ac 2:25 quoted from Ps 15:8. Note the double reduplication in \-e“-\ as in Attic (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 364). {With him in the city Trophimus the Ephesian} (\Trophimon ton Ephesion en t^i polei sun aut“i\). The Jews from Asia (Ephesus) knew Trophimus by sight as well as Paul. One day they saw both of them together (\sun\) in the city. That was a fact. They had just seized Paul in the temple (\hieron\). That was another fact. {They supposed} (\enomizon\). Imperfect active of \nomiz“, common to think or suppose. Perfectly harmless word, but they did, as so many people do, put their supposed inference on the same basis with the facts. They did not see Trophimus with Paul now in the temple, nor had they ever seen him there. They simply argued that, if Paul was willing to be seen down street with a Greek Christian, he would not hesitate to bring him (therefore, did bring him, eis^gagen\ as in verse 28) into the temple, that is into the court of Israel and therefore both Paul and Trophimus were entitled to death, especially Paul who had brought him in (if he had) and, besides, they now had Paul. This is the way of the mob-mind in all ages. Many an innocent man has been rushed to his death by the fury of a lynching party.

21:30 {All the city was shaken} (\ekin^th^ h^ polis hol^). First aorist passive of \kine“, common verb for violent motion and emotion. See also 24:5 where the word is used by Tertullus of Paul as the stirrer up of riots! {The people ran together} (\egeneto sundrom^ tou laou\). Rather, There came a running together (\sun-drom^ \from \sun-trech“\ of the people. The cry spread like wildfire over the city and there was a pell-mell scramble or rush to get to the place of the disturbance. {They laid hold on Paul} (\epilabomenoi tou Paulou\). Second aorist middle participle of \epilambanomai\ with the genitive (cf. epebalan\ in verse 27). {Dragged} (\heilkon\). Imperfect active of \helk“\ (and also \helku“), old verb to drag or draw. Imperfect tense vividly pictures the act as going on. They were saving the temple by dragging Paul outside. Curiously enough both \epilabomenoi\ and \heilkusan\ occur in 16:19 about the arrest of Paul and Silas in Philippi. {Straightway the doors were shut} (\euthe“s ekleisth^san hai thurai\). With a bang and at once. First aorist (effective) passive of \klei“\ . The doors between the inner court and the court of the Gentiles. But this was only the beginning, the preparation for the real work of the mob. They did not wish to defile the holy place with blood. The doors were shut by the Levites.

21:31 {As they were seeking to kill him} (\z^tount“n aut“n\). Genitive absolute of \z^te“, to seek, without \aut“n\ (they). This was their real purpose. {Tidings} (\phasis\). From \phain“, to show. Old word for the work of informers and then the exposure of secret crime. In LXX. Here only in the N.T. {Came up} (\aneb^)\. Naturally in the wild uproar. The Roman guard during festivals was kept stationed in the Tower of Antonia at the northwest corner of the temple overlooking the temple and connected by stairs (verse 35). {To the chief captain} (\t“i chiliarch“i\). Commander of a thousand men or cohort (Mr 15:16). His name was Claudius Lysias. {Of the band} (\t^s speir^s\). Each legion had six tribunes and so each tribune (chiliarch) had a thousand if the cohort had its full quota. See on 10:1; 27:1. The word is the Latin _spira_ (anything rolled up). Note the genitive \speir^s\ instead of \speiras\ (Attic). {Was in confusion} (\sunchunnetai\). Present passive indicative of \sunchunn“\ (see verse 27, \sunecheon\). This is what the conspirators had desired.

21:32 {Forthwith} (\exaut^s\). Common in the _Koin,_ (\ex aut^s\, supply \h“ras\, hour). {He took} (\paralab“n\). See verses 24,26. {Centurions} (\hekatontarchas\). See on 1 Lu 7:2 for discussion. Plural shows that Lysias the chiliarch took several hundred soldiers along (a centurion with each hundred). {Ran down} (\katedramen\). Effective second aorist active indicative of \katatrech“. From the tower of Antonia, vivid scene. {And they} (\hoi de\). Demonstrative use of \hoi\ . The Jewish mob who had begun the work of killing Paul (verse 31). {Left off beating Paul} (\epausanto tuptontes ton Paulon\). The participle with \pauomai\ describes what they were already doing, the supplementary participle (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1121). They stopped before the job was over because of the sudden onset of the Roman soldiers. Some ten years before in a riot at the passover the Roman guard marched down and in the panic several hundred were trampled to death.

21:33 {Came near} (\eggisas\). First aorist active participle of \eggiz“\, to draw near, _Koin,_ verb from \eggus\, near, and common in the N.T. {Laid hold on him} (\epelabeto antou\). See same verb in verse 30. {To be bound} (\deth^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \de“\ (see verse 11). {With two chains} (\halusesi dusi\). Instrumental case of \halusis\, old word from \a\ privative and \lu“\ (not loosening, i.e. chaining). With two chains as a violent and seditious person, probably leader of a band of assassins (verse 38). See on ^Mr 5:4. {Inquired} (\epunthaneto\). Imperfect middle of \punthanomai\, old and common verb used mainly by Luke in the N.T. Lysias repeated his inquiries. {Who he was} (\tis ei\). Present active optative of \eimi\ changed from \estin\ (present indicative) in the indirect question, a change not obligatory after a past tense, but often done in the older Greek, rare in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1043f.). {And what he had done} (\kai ti estin pepoi^k“s\). Periphrastic perfect active indicative of \poie“\ here retained, not changed to the optative as is true of \ei^ from \estin\ in the same indirect question, illustrating well the freedom about it.

21:34 {Some shouting one thing, some another} (\alloi allo ti epeph“noun\). Same idiom of \alloi allo\ as in 19:32 which see. The imperfect of \epiph“ne“\, to call out to, suits well the idiom. This old verb occurs in the N.T. only in Luke and Acts (already in 12:22). {When he could not know} (\m^ dunamenou autou gn“nai\). Genitive absolute of present middle participle of \dunamai\ with negative \m^ and second aorist active infinitive of \gin“sk“\, to know. {The certainty} (\to asphales\). Neuter articular adjective from \a\ privative and \sphall“\, to make totter or fall. Old word, in the N.T. only in Ac 21:34; 22:30; 25:26; Php 3:1; Heb 6:19. {Into the castle} (\eis t^ n parembol^ n\). _Koin,_ word from \paremball“\, to cast in by the side of, to assign soldiers a place, to encamp (see on ^Lu 19:43). So \parembol^ comes to mean an interpolation, then an army drawn up (Heb 11:34), but mainly an encampment (Heb 13:11,13), frequent in Polybius and LXX. So here barracks of the Roman soldiers in the tower of Antonia as in verse 37; 22:24; 23:10,16,32.

21:35 {Upon the stairs} (\epi tous anabathmous\). From \ana\, up, and \bain“\, to go. Late word, in LXX and _Koin,_ writers. In the N.T. only here and verse 40. {So it was} (\suneb^ \). Second aorist active of \sumbain“, to happen (see on 20:19) with infinitive clause as subject here as often in the old Greek. {He was borne} (\bastazesthai auton). Accusative of general reference with this subject infinitive, present passive of \bastaz“, to take up with the hands, literally as here. {Violence} (\bian). See on Ac 5:26. \Biaz“, to use force, is from \bia\.

21:36 {Followed after} (\kolouthēi). Imperfect active of \akoluthe“, was following. Cheated of their purpose to lynch Paul, they were determined to have his blood. {Crying out} (\krazontes). Construction according to sense, plural masculine participle agreeing with neuter singular substantive \pl^hthos\ (Robertson, Grammar, p. 401). {Away with him} (\Aire auton). The very words used by the mob to Pilate when they chose Barabbas in preference to Jesus (Lu 23:18, Aire touton). He will hear it again from this same crowd (Ac 22:22). It is the present imperative (\aire) as in Lu 23:18, but some may have used the urgent aorist active imperative as also in the case of Jesus Joh 19:15, \fron, fron\ with \staur“son\ added). Luke does not say that this mob demanded crucifixion for Paul. He was learning what it was to share the sufferings of Christ as the sullen roar of the mob's yells rolled on and on in his ears.

21:37 {May I say something unto thee?} (\Ei exestin moi eipein ti pros se?). On this use of \ei\ in a direct question see on 1:6. The calm self-control of Paul in the presence of this mob is amazing. His courteous request to Lysias was in Greek to the chiliarch's amazement. {Dost thou know Greek?} (\Hellⁿisti gin^{skeis?}). Old Greek adverb in \-i\ from \Hellⁿiz“, meaning "in Greek." "Do you know it in Greek?" In the N.T. only here and Joh 19:20. {Art thou not then the Egyptian?} (\Ouk ara su ei ho Aiguptios?). Expects the answer _Yes_ and \ara\ argues the matter (therefore). The well-known (\ho) Egyptian who had given the Romans so much trouble. {Stirred up to sedition} (\anastat^{sas}). First aorist active participle of \anastato“, a late verb from \anastatos\, outcast, and so to unsettle, to stir up, to excite, once known only in LXX and Ac 17:6 (which see); 21:38; Ga 5:12, but now found in several papyri examples with precisely this sense to upset. {Of the Assassins} (\tⁿsikariⁿ). Latin word _sicarius_, one who carried a short sword \sica\ under his cloak, a cutthroat. Josephus uses this very word for bands of robbers under this Egyptian (War II. 17,6 and 13,5; _Ant_. XX. 8,10). Josephus says that there were 30,000 who gathered on the Mount of Olives to see the walls of Jerusalem fall down and not merely 4,000 as Lysias does here. But Lysias may refer to the group that were armed thus (banditti) the core of the mob of 30,000. Lysias at once saw by Paul's knowledge of Greek that he was not the famous Egyptian who led the Assassins and escaped himself when Felix attacked and slew the most of them.

21:39 {I am} (\Eg“ men eimi\). In contrast with the wild guess of Lysias Paul uses \men\ and \de\. He tells briefly who he is: {a Jew} (\Ioudaios\ by race, {of Tarsus in Cilicia} (\Tarseus t^s Kilikias\ by country, belonging to Tarsus (this adjective \Tarseus\ only here and Ac 9:11), and proud of it, one of the great cities of the empire with a great university. {A citizen of no mean city} (\ouk as^mou pole“s polit^s\). Litotes again, "no mean" (\as^mos\, old adjective, unmarked, \a\ privative and \s^ma\, mark, insignificant, here only in the N.T.). This same litotes used by Euripides of Athens (_Ion_ 8). But Paul calls himself a citizen (\polit^s\ of Tarsus. Note the "effective assonance" (Page) in \pole“s polit^s\. Paul now (\de\) makes his request (\deomai\) of Lysias. {Give me leave} (\epitrepson moi\). First aorist active imperative of \epitrep“, old and common verb to turn to, to permit, to allow. It was a strange request and a daring one, to wish to speak to this mob howling for Paul's blood.

21:40 {When he had given him leave} (\epitrepsantos autou\). Genitive absolute of aorist active participle of the same verb \epitrep“. {Standing on the stairs} (\hest“s epi t“n anabathm“n\). Second perfect active participle of \hist^mi\, to place, but intransitive to stand. Dramatic scene. Paul had faced many audiences and crowds, but never one quite like this. Most men would have feared to speak, but not so Paul. He will speak about himself only as it gives him a chance to put Christ before this angry Jewish mob who look on Paul as a renegade Jew, a turncoat, a deserter, who went back on Gamaliel and all the traditions of his people, who not only turned from Judaism to Christianity, but who went after Gentiles and treated Gentiles as if they were on a par with Jews. Paul knows only too well what this mob thinks of him. {Beckoned with the hand} (\kateseise t^i cheiri\). He shook down to the multitude with the hand (instrumental case \cheiri), while Alexander, Luke says

(19:33), "shook down the hand" (accusative with the same verb, which see). In 26:1 Paul reached out the hand (\ekteinas t^n cheira). {When there was made a great silence} (\poll^s sig^s genomen^s). Genitive absolute again with second aorist middle participle of \ginomai, "much silence having come." Paul waited till silence had come. {In the Hebrew language} (t^i Ebraidī dialekt^i). The Aramaean which the people in Jerusalem knew better than the Greek. Paul could use either tongue at will. His enemies had said in Corinth that "his bodily presence was weak and his speech contemptible" (2Co 10:10). But surely even they would have to admit that Paul's stature and words reach heroic proportions on this occasion. Self-possessed with majestic poise Paul faces the outraged mob beneath the stairs.

22:1 {Brethren and fathers} (\Andres adelphoi kai pateres\) Men, brethren, and fathers. The very language used by Stephen (7:2) when arraigned before the Sanhedrin with Paul then present. Now Paul faces a Jewish mob on the same charges brought against Stephen. These words are those of courtesy and dignity (_amoris et honoris nomina_, Page). These men were Paul's brother Jews and were (many of them) official representatives of the people (Sanhedrists, priests, rabbis). Paul's purpose is conciliatory, he employs "his ready tact" (Rackham). {The defence which I now make unto you} (\mou t's pros humas nuni apologias\). Literally, My defence to you at this time. \Nuni\ is a sharpened form (by -i) of \nun\ (now), just now. The term \apologia\ (apology) is not our use of the word for apologizing for an offence, but the original sense of defence for his conduct, his life. It is an old word from \apologeomai\, to talk oneself off a charge, to make defence. It occurs also in Ac 25:16 and then also in 1Co 9:3; 2Co 7:11; Php 1:7,16; 2Ti 4:16; 1Pe 3:15. Paul uses it again in Ac 25:16 as here about his defence against the charges made by the Jews from Asia. He is suspected of being a renegade from the Mosaic law and charged with specific acts connected with the alleged profanation of the temple. So Paul speaks in Aramaic and recites the actual facts connected with his change from Judaism to Christianity. The facts make the strongest argument. He first recounts the well-known story of his zeal for Judaism in the persecution of the Christians and shows why the change came. Then he gives a summary of his work among the Gentiles and why he came to Jerusalem this time. He answers the charge of enmity to the people and the law and of desecration of the temple. It is a speech of great skill and force, delivered under remarkable conditions. The one in chapter Ac 26 covers some of the same ground, but for a slightly different purpose as we shall see. For a discussion of the three reports in Acts of Paul's conversion see chapter Ac 9. Luke has not been careful to make every detail correspond, though there is essential agreement in all three.

22:2 {He spake} (\proseph"nei\). Imperfect active, was speaking. See aorist active \proseph"n^sen\ in 21:40. {They were the more quiet} (\mflon pareschon h^{suchian}\). Literally, The more (\mflon\) they furnished or supplied (second aorist active indicative of \parech“) quietness (\h^{suchian}\, old word, in the N.T. only here and 2Th 3:12; 1Ti 2:11ff.). Precisely this idiom occurs in Plutarch (_Cor_. 18) and the LXX (Job 34:29). Knowing notes the fondness of Luke for words of silence (\sig[^], sigā“, h^{suchaz“}) as in Lu 14:4; 15:26; Ac 11:18; 12:17; 15:12; 21:14,40. It is a vivid picture of the sudden hush that swept over the vast mob under the spell of the Aramaic. They would have understood Paul's _Koin_, Greek, but they much preferred the Aramaic. It was a masterstroke.

22:3 {I am a Jew} (\Eg“ eimi an^r Ioudaios\). Note use of \Eg“\ for emphasis. Paul recounts his Jewish advantages or privileges with manifest pride as in Ac 26:4f.; 2Co 11:22; Ga 1:14; Php 3:4-7. {Born} (\gegenn[^]menos\). Perfect passive participle of \genna“\, to nurse up, to nurse up, to nurse up, to nurse up, common old verb, but in the N.T. only here, 7:20ff., and MSS. in Lu 4:16. The implication is that Paul was sent to Jerusalem while still young, "from my youth" (26:4), how young we do not know, possibly thirteen or fourteen years old. He apparently had not seen Jesus in the flesh (2Co 5:16). {At the feet of Gamaliel} (\pros tous podas Gamali^l\). The rabbis usually sat on a raised seat with the pupils in a circle around either on lower seats or on the ground. Paul was thus nourished in Pharisaic Judaism as interpreted by Gamaliel, one of the lights of Judaism. For remarks on Gamaliel see chapter 5:34ff. He was one of the seven Rabbis to whom the Jews gave the highest title \Rabban\ (our Rabbi). \Rabbi\ (my teacher) was next, the lowest being \Rab\ (teacher). "As Aquinas among the schoolmen was called _Doctor Angelicus_, and Bonaventura _Doctor Seraphicus_, so Gamaliel was called _the Beauty of the Law_" (Conybeare and Howson). {Instructed} (\pepaideumenos\). Perfect passive participle again (each participle beginning a clause), this time of \paideu“\, old verb to train a child (\pais\ as in 7:22 which see. In this sense also in 1Ti 1:20; Tit 2:12. Then to chastise as in Lu 23:16,22 (which see); 2Ti 2:25; Heb 12:6f. {According to the strict manner} (\kata akribeian\). Old word, only here in N.T. Mathematical accuracy, minute exactness as seen in the adjective in 26:5. See also Ro 10:2; Gal 1:4; Php

3:4-7. {Of our fathers} (\patr“iou\). Old adjective from \pater\, only here and 24:14 in N.T. Means descending from father to son, especially property and other inherited privileges. \Patrikos\ (patrician) refers more to personal attributes and affiliations. {Being zealous for God} (\z^l“t^s huparch“n tou theou\). Not adjective, but substantive {zealot} (same word used by James of the thousands of Jewish Christians in Jerusalem, 21:20 which see) with objective genitive \tou theou\ (for God). See also verse 14; 28:17; 2Ti 1:3 where he makes a similar claim. So did Peter (Ac 3:13; 5:30) and Stephen (7:32). Paul definitely claims, whatever freedom he demanded for Gentile Christians, to be personally "a zealot for God" "even as ye all are this day" (\kath“s pantes humeis este s^meron\). In his conciliation he went to the limit and puts himself by the side of the mob in their zeal for the law, mistaken as they were about him. He was generous surely to interpret their fanatical frenzy as zeal for God. But Paul is sincere as he proceeds to show by appeal to his own conduct.

22:4 {And I} (\hos\). {I who}, literally. {This Way} (\taut^n t^h hodon\). The very term used for Christianity by Luke concerning Paul's persecution (9:2), which see. Here it "avoids any irritating name for the Christian body" (Furneaux) by using this Jewish terminology. {Unto the death} (\achri thanatou\). Unto death, actual death of many as 26:10 shows. {Both men and women} (\andras te kai gunaikas\). Paul felt ashamed of this fact and it was undoubtedly in his mind when he pictured his former state as "a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious (1Ti 1:13), the first of sinners" (1Ti 1:15). But it showed the lengths to which Paul went in his zeal for Judaism.

22:5 {Doth bear me witness} (\marturei moi\). Present active indicative as if still living. Caiaphas was no longer high priest now, for Ananias is at this time (23:2), though he may be still alive. {All the estate of the elders} (\pan to presbuterion\). All the eldership or the Sanhedrin (4:5) of which Paul was probably then a member (26:10). Possibly some of those present were members of the Sanhedrin then (some 20 odd years ago). {From whom} (\par' h“n\). The high priest and the Sanhedrin. {Letters unto the brethren} (\epistalas pros tous adelphous\). Paul still can tactfully call the Jews his "brothers" as he did in Ro 9:3. There is no bitterness in his heart. {Journeyed} (\eporeuom^h\). Imperfect middle indicative of \poreuomai\, and a vivid reality to Paul still as he was going on towards Damascus. {To bring also} (\ax“n kai\). Future active participle of \ag“, to express purpose, one of the few N.T. examples of this classic idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1118). {Them which were there} (\tous ekeise ontas\). _Constructio praegnans_. The usual word would be \ekei\ (there), not \ekeise\ (thither). Possibly the Christians who had fled to Damascus, and so were there (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 548). {In bonds} (\dedemenous\). Perfect passive participle of \de“, predicate position, "bound." {For to be punished} (\hina tim“r^th“sin\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \tim“re“, old verb to avenge, to take vengeance on. In the N.T. only here, and 26:11. Pure final clause with \hina\. He carried his persecution outside of Palestine just as later he carried the gospel over the Roman empire.

22:6 {And it came to pass} (\egeneto de\). Rather than the common \kai egeneto\ and with the infinitive (\periastrapsai\), one of the three constructions with \kai (de) egeneto\ by Luke (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1042f.), followed by \kai\, by finite verb, by subject infinitive as here. {As I made my journey} (\moi poreuomen“i\). To me (dative after \egeneto\, happened to me) journeying (participle agreeing with \moi). See this same idiom in verse 17. Luke uses \egeneto de\ seventeen times in the gospel and twenty-one in the Acts. {Unto Damascus} (\t^i Damask“i\). Dative after \eggizonti\ (drawing nigh to). {About noon} (\peri mes^mbrian\). Mid (\mesos\) day (\h^mera\), old word, in the N.T. only here and 8:26 which see where it may mean "toward the south." An item not in ch. 9. {Shone round about me} (\periastrapsai peri eme\). First aorist active infinitive of \periastrapt“, to flash around, in LXX and late Greek, in the N.T. only here and 9:3 which see. Note repetition of \peri\. {A great light} (\ph“s hikanon\). Luke's favourite word \hikanon\ (considerable). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive.

22:7 {I fell} (\epesa\). Second aorist active indicative with \-a\ rather than \epeson\, the usual form of \pipt“. {Unto the ground} (\eis to edaphos\). Old word, here alone in N.T. So the verb \edaphiz“, is in Lu 19:44 alone in the N.T. {A voice saying} (\ph“n^s legous^s\). Genitive after \^kousa\, though in 26:14 the accusative is used after \^kousa\, as in 22:14 after \akousai\, either being allowable. See on 9:7 for discussion of the difference in case. Saul's name repeated each time (9:4; 22:7; 26:14). Same question also in each report: "Why persecuted thou me?" (\Ti me di“keis?). These piercing words stuck in Paul's mind.

22:8 {Of Nazareth} (\ho Naz“raios). The Nazarene, not in 9:5; 26:15 and here because Jesus is mentioned now for the first time in the address. The form \Naz“raios as in Mt 2:23 (which see) is used also in 24:5 for the followers of Jesus instead of \Nazar^nos as in Mr 1:24, etc. (which see).

22:9 {But they heard not the voice} (\t^n de ph“n^ n ouk ^kousan). The accusative here may be used rather than the genitive as in verse 7 to indicate that those with Paul did not understand what they heard (9:7) just as they beheld the light (22:9), but did not see Jesus (9:7). The difference in cases allows this distinction, though it is not always observed as just noticed about 22:14; 26:14. The verb \akou“ is used in the sense of understand (Mr 4:33; 1Co 14:2). It is one of the evidences of the genuineness of this report of Paul's speech that Luke did not try to smooth out apparent discrepancies in details between the words of Paul and his own record already in ch. 9. The Textus Receptus adds in this verse: "And they became afraid" (\kai emphoboi egenonto). Clearly not genuine.

22:10 {Into Damascus} (\eis Damaskon). In 9:6 simply "into the city" (\eis t^n polin). {Of all things which} (\peri pant“n h“n). \H“n, relative plural attracted to genitive of antecedent from accusative \ha, object of \poi^sai (do). {Are appointed for thee} (\tetaktai soi). Perfect passive indicative of \tass“, to appoint, to order, with dative \soi. Compare with \hoti se dei of 9:6. The words were spoken to Paul, of course, in the Aramaic, Saoul, Saoul.

22:11 {I could not see} (\ouk eneblepon). Imperfect active of \emblep“, I was not seeing, same fact stated in 9:8. Here the reason as "for the glory of that light" (\apo t^s dox^s tou ph“tos ekeinou). {Being led by the hand} (\cheirag“goumenos). Present passive participle of \cheirag“ge“, the same verb used in 9:8 (\cheirag“gountes) which see. Late verb, in the N.T. only in these two places. In LXX.

22:12 {A devout man according to the law} (\eulab^s kata ton nomon). See on 2:5; 8:2; Lu 2:25 for the adjective \eulab^s. Paul adds "according to the law" to show that he was introduced to Christianity by a devout Jew and no law-breaker (Lewin).

22:13 {I looked up on him} (\anablepsa eis auton\). First aorist active indicative and same word as \anablepso\ (Receive thy sight). Hence here the verb means as the margin of the Revised Version has it: "I received my sight and looked upon him." For "look up" see Joh 9:11.

22:14 {Hath appointed thee} (\proecheirisato\). First aorist middle indicative of \procheirizo\, old verb to put forth into one's hands, to take into one's hands beforehand, to plan, propose, determine. In the N.T. only in Ac 3:20; 22:14; 26:16. Three infinitives after this verb of God's purpose about Paul: {to know} (\gn'nai\, second aorist active of gin'sk\) his will, {to see} (\idein\, second aorist active of hora\) the Righteous One (cf. 3:14), {to hear} (\akousai\, first aorist active of akou\) a voice from his mouth.

22:15 {A witness for him} (\martus aut'i\). As in 1:8. {Of what} (\h'n\). Attraction of the accusative relative \ha\ to the genitive case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout'n\. {Thou hast seen and heard} (\he'rakas\, present perfect active indicative kai kousas\, first aorist active indicative). This subtle change of tense is not preserved in the English. Blass properly cites the perfect \he'raka\ in 1Co 9:1 as proof of Paul's enduring qualification for the apostleship.

22:16 {By baptized} (\baptisai\). First aorist middle (causative), not passive, Get thyself baptized (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 808). Cf. 1Co 10:2. Submit yourself to baptism. So as to \apolousai\, Get washed off as in 1Co 6:11. It is possible, as in 2:38, to take these words as teaching baptismal remission or salvation by means of baptism, but to do so is in my opinion a complete subversion of Paul's vivid and picturesque language. As in Ro 6:4-6 where baptism is the picture of death, burial and resurrection, so here baptism pictures the change that had already taken place when Paul surrendered to Jesus on the way (verse 10). Baptism here pictures the washing away of sins by the blood of Christ.

22:17 {When I had returned} (\moi hupostrepsanti\), {while I prayed} (\proseuchomenou mou\), {I fell} (\genesthai me\). Note dative \moi\ with \egeneto\ as in verse 6, genitive \mou\ (genitive absolute with proseuchomenou\), accusative of general reference \me\ with \genesthai\, and with no effort at uniformity, precisely as in 15:22,23 which see. The participle is especially liable to such examples of anacolutha (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 439).

22:18 {Saw him saying} (\idein auton legonta\). The first visit after his conversion when they tried to kill him in Jerusalem (9:29). {Because} (\dioti, dia\ and \hoti\), {for that}.

22:19 {Imprisoned and beat} (\m^n phulakiz^“n kai der^“n\). Periphrastic imperfect active of \phulakiz^“\ (LXX and late _Koin,_, here alone in the N.T.) and \der^“\ (old verb to skin, to beat as in Mt 21:35 which see). {In every synagogue} (\kata tas sunagogas\). Up and down (\kata\) in the synagogues.

22:20 {Was shed} (\exechunneto\). Imperfect passive of \ekchunn^“\ (see on Mt 23:35), was being shed. {Witness} (\marturos\). And "martyr" also as in Re 2:13; 17:6. Transition state for the word here. {I also was standing by} (\kai autos m^n ephest^“s\). Periphrastic second past perfect in form, but imperfect (linear) in sense since \hest^“s=histamenos\ (intransitive). {Consenting} (\suneudok^“n\). The very word used by Luke in Ac 8:1 about Paul. _Koin, _ word for being pleased at the same time with (cf. Lu 11:48). Paul adds here the item of "guarding the clothes of those who were slaying (\anairount^“n\ as in Lu 23:32; Ac 12:2) him" (Stephen). Paul recalls the very words of protest used by him to Jesus. He did not like the idea of running away to save his own life right where he had helped slay Stephen. He is getting on dangerous ground.

22:21 {I will send thee forth far hence unto the Gentiles} (\Eg^“ eis ethn^ makran exapostel^“ se\). Future active of the double (\ex\, out, \apo\, off or away) compound of \exapostell^“\, common word in the _Koin, _ (cf. Lu 24:49). This is a repetition by Jesus of the call given in Damascus through Ananias (9:15). Paul had up till now avoided the word Gentiles, but at last it had to come, "the fatal word" (Farrar).

22:22 {They gave him audience} (\kouon\). Imperfect active, they kept on listening, at least with respectful attention. {Unto this word} (\achri toutou tou logou\). But "this word" was like a spark in a powder magazine or a torch to an oil tank. The explosion of pent-up indignation broke out instantly worse than at first (21:30). {Away with such a fellow from the earth}

(\Aire apo t's g's ton toiouton\). They renew the cry with the very words in 21:36, but with "from the earth" for vehemence. {For it is not fit} (\ou gar kath^ken\). Imperfect active of \kath^k^, old verb to come down to, to become, to fit. In the N.T. only here and Ro 1:28. The imperfect is a neat Greek idiom for impatience about an obligation: It was not fitting, he ought to have been put to death long ago. The obligation is conceived as not lived up to like our "ought" (past of owe). See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 886.

22:23 {As they cried out} (\kraugazont^"n aut^"n\). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \kraugaz^, a rare word in the old Greek from \kraug^ (\a cry). See on Mt 12:19. Two other genitive absolutes here, \rhiptount^"n (\throwing off, present active participle, frequent active variation of \rhipt^") and \ballont^"n (\present active participle of \ball^, flinging). These present participles give a lively picture of the uncontrolled excitement of the mob in their spasm of wild rage.

22:24 {That he be examined by scourging} (\mastixin anetazesthai auton\). The present passive infinitive of \anetaz^ in indirect command after \eipas\ (bidding). This verb does not occur in the old Greek (which used \exetaz^ as in Mt 2:8), first in the LXX, in the N.T. only here and verse 29, but Milligan and Moulton's _Vocabulary_ quotes an Oxyrhynchus papyrus of A.D. 127 which has a prefect using the word directing government clerks to "examine" (\anetazein) documents and glue them together into volumes (\tomoi\). The word was evidently in use for such purposes. It was a kind of "third degree" applied to Paul by the use of scourges (\mastixin), instrumental plural of \mastix, old word for whip, as in Heb 11:36. But this way of beginning an inquiry by torture (inquisition) was contrary to Roman law (Page): _Non esse a tormentis incipiendum, Divus Augustus statuit_. {That he might know} (\hina epign^i\). Final clause with \hina\ and second aorist active subjunctive of \epign^sk^ (\full knowledge). Lysias was as much in the dark as ever, for Paul's speech had been in Aramaic and this second explosion was a mystery to him like the first. {They so shouted} (\houtos epeph^noun\). Imperfect active progressive imperfect had been so shouting.

22:25 {When they had tied him up} (\hos proeteinan auton\). First aorist active indicative of \protein^, old verb to stretch forward, only here in the N.T. Literally, "When they stretched him forward." {With the thongs} (\tois himasin\). If the instrumental case of \himas\, old word for strap or thong (for sandals as Mr 1:7, or for binding criminals as here), then Paul was bent forward and tied by the thongs to a post in front to expose his back the better to the scourges. But \tois himasin\ may be dative case and then it would mean "for the lashes." In either case it is a dreadful scene of terrorizing by the chiliarch. {Unto the centurion that stood by} (\pros ton hest^{ta} hekatontarchon\). He was simply carrying out the orders of the chiliarch (cf. Mt 27:54). Why had not Paul made protest before this? {Is it lawful?} (\ei exestin?\). This use of \ei\ in indirect questions we have had before (1:6). {A Roman and uncondemned} (\Romaion kai akatakriton\). Just as in 16:37 which see. Blass says of Paul's question: _Interrogatio subironica est confidentiae plena_.

22:26 {What art thou about to do?} (\Ti melleis poiein?\). On the point of doing, sharp warning.

22:27 {Art thou a Roman?} (\Su Romaios ei?\). {Thou} (emphatic position) a Roman? It was unbelievable.

22:28 {With a great sum} (\pollou kephalaiou\). The use of \kephalaiou\ (from \kephal[^], head) for sums of money (principal as distinct from interest) is old and frequent in the papyri. Our word capital is from \caput\ (head). The genitive is used here according to rule for price. "The sale of the Roman citizenship was resorted to by the emperors as a means of filling the exchequer, much as James I. made baronets" (Page). Dio Cassius (LX., 17) tells about Messalina the wife of Claudius selling Roman citizenship. Lysias was probably a Greek and so had to buy his citizenship. {But I am a Roman born} (\Eg^{de} kai gegenn^{mai}\). Perfect passive indicative of \genna[^]\. The word "Roman" not in the Greek. Literally, "But I have been even born one," (i.e. born a Roman citizen). There is calm and simple dignity in this reply and pardonable pride. Being a citizen of Tarsus (21:39) did not make Paul a Roman citizen. Tarsus was an _urbs libera_, not a _colonia_ like Philippi. Some one of his ancestors (father, grandfather) obtained it perhaps as a reward for distinguished service. Paul's family was of good social position. "He was educated by the greatest of the Rabbis; he was at an early age entrusted by the Jewish authorities with an important commission; his nephew could gain ready access to the Roman tribunal; he was treated as a person of consequence by Felix, Festus, Agrippa, and Julius" (Furneaux).

22:29 {Departed from him} (\apest^{san ap' autou}\). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive) of \aphist^{mi}\, stood off from him at once. {Was afraid} (\ephobth\). Ingressive aorist passive indicative of \phobeomai\, became afraid. He had reason to be. {That he was a Roman} (\hoti Romaioi estin\). Indirect assertion with tense of \estin\ retained. {Because he had bound him} (\hoti auton ^{n dedek}“s\). Causal \hoti\ here after declarative \hoti\ just before. Periphrastic past perfect active of \de“\, to bind.

22:30 {To know the certainty} (\gn^{nai to asphales}\). Same idiom in 21:34 which see. {Wherefore he was accused} (\to ti kategoreitai\). Epexegetical after to \asphales\. Note article (accusative case) with the indirect question here as in Lu 22:1,23,24 (which see), a neat idiom in the Greek. {Commanded} (\ekeleusen\). So the Sanhedrin had to meet, but in the Tower of Antonia, for he brought Paul down (\katagagⁿ\, second aorist active participle of \katag[“]\). {Set him} (\est^{sen}\). First aorist active (transitive) indicative of \hist^{mi}\, not the intransitive second aorist \est[“]\. Lysias is determined to find out the truth about Paul, more puzzled than ever by the important discovery that he has a Roman citizen on his hands in this strange prisoner.

23:1 {Looking steadfastly} (atenisas\). See on this word 1:10; 3:12; 6:15; 7:55; 13:9. Paul may have had weak eyes, but probably the earnest gaze was to see if he recognized any faces that were in the body that tried Stephen and to which he apparently once belonged. {I have lived before God} (pepoliteumai t^i the^i\). Perfect middle indicative of \politeu^α\, old verb to manage affairs of city (polis\) or state, to be a citizen, behave as a citizen. In the N.T. only here and Php 1:27. The idea of citizenship was Greek and Roman, not Jewish. "He had lived as God's citizen, as a member of God's commonwealth" (Rackham). God (the^i\) is the dative of personal interest. As God looked at it and in his relation to God. {In all good conscience unto this day} (pas^i suneid[^]sei agath^i achri taut^s t^s h^meras\). This claim seems to lack tact, but for brevity's sake Paul sums up a whole speech in it. He may have said much more than Luke here reports along the line of his speech the day before, but Paul did not make this claim without consideration. It appears to contradict his confession as the chief of sinners (1Ti 1:13-16). But that depends on one's interpretation of "good conscience." The word \suneid[^]sis\ is literally "joint-knowledge" in Greek, Latin (_conscientia_) and English "conscience" from the Latin. It is a late word from \sunoida\, to know together, common in O.T., Apocrypha, Philo, Plutarch, New Testament, Stoics, ecclesiastical writers. In itself the word simply means consciousness of one's own thoughts (Heb 10:2), or of one's own self, then consciousness of the distinction between right and wrong (Ro 2:15) with approval or disapproval. But the conscience is not an infallible guide and acts according to the light that it has (1Co 8:7,10; 1Pe 2:19). The conscience can be contaminated (Heb 10:22, evil \pon[^]rfs\). All this and more must be borne in mind in trying to understand Paul's description of his motives as a persecutor. Alleviation of his guilt comes thereby, but not removal of guilt as he himself felt (1Ti 1:13-16). He means to say to the Sanhedrin that he persecuted Christians as a conscientious (though mistaken) Jew (Pharisee) just as he followed his conscience in turning from Judaism to Christianity. It is a pointed disclaimer against the charge that he is a renegade Jew, an opposer of the law, the people, the temple. Paul addresses the Sanhedrin as an equal and has no "apologies" (in our sense) to make for his career as a whole. The golden thread of consistency runs through, as a good citizen in God's commonwealth. He had the consolation of a good conscience (1Pe 3:16). The word does not occur in the Gospels and chiefly in Paul's Epistles, but we see it at work in Joh 8:9 (the interpolation 7:53-8:11).

23:2 {Ananias} (\Hananias). Not the one in Lu 3:2; Joh 18:13; Ac 4:7, but the son of Nebedaeus, nominated high priest by Herod, King of Chalcis, A.D. 48 and till A.D. 59. He was called to Rome A.D. 52 to answer "a charge of rapine and cruelty made against him by the Samaritans, but honourably acquitted" (Page). Though high priest, he was a man of bad character. {Them that stood by him} (\tois parest"sin aut"i). Dative case of second perfect participle of \paristemi, to place, and intransitive. See the same form in verse 4 (\parest"tes). {To smite him on the mouth} (\tuptein autou to stoma). See on 12:45; 18:17. Cf. the treatment of Jesus (Joh 18:22). Ananias was provoked by Paul's self-assertion while on trial before his judges. "The act was illegal and peculiarly offensive to a Jew at the hands of a Jew" (Knowling). More self-control might have served Paul better. Smiting the mouth or cheek is a peculiarly irritating offence and one not uncommon among the Jews and this fact gives point to the command of Jesus to turn the other cheek (Lu 6:29 where \tupt" is also used).

23:3 {Thou whited wall} (\toiche kekoniamene). Perfect passive participle of \konias (from \konias\, dust or lime). The same word used in Mt 23:27 for "whited sepulchres" (\taphoi kekoniamenoi) which see. It is a picturesque way of calling Ananias a hypocrite, undoubtedly true, but not a particularly tactful thing for a prisoner to say to his judge, not to say Jewish high priest. Besides, Paul had hurled back at him the word \tuptein (smite) in his command, putting it first in the sentence (\tuptein se mellei ho theos) in strong emphasis. Clearly Paul felt that he, not Ananias, was living as a good citizen in God's commonwealth. {And sittest thou to judge me?} (\Kai su kath"i krin"n me?) Literally, "And thou (being what thou art) art sitting (\kath"i\, second person singular middle of \kath'mai\, late form for \kath'sai\, the uncontracted form) judging me." Cf. Lu 22:30. \Kai su at the beginning of a question expresses indignation. {Contrary to the law}

(\paranom“n\). Present active participle of \paranome“\, old verb to act contrary to the law, here alone in the N.T., "acting contrary to the law."

23:4 {Of God} (\tou theou\). As God's representative in spite of his bad character (De 17:8f.). Here was a charge of irreverence, to say the least. The office called for respect.

23:5 {I wist not} (\ouk ^idein\). Second past perfect of \oida\ used as an imperfect. The Greek naturally means that Paul did not know that it was the high priest who gave the order to smite his mouth. If this view is taken, several things may be said by way of explanation. The high priest may not have had on his official dress as the meeting was called hurriedly by Lysias. Paul had been away so long that he may not have known Ananias on sight. And then Paul may have had poor eyesight or the high priest may not have been sitting in the official seat. Another way of explaining it is to say that Paul was so indignant, even angry, at the command that he spoke without considering who it was that gave the order. The Greek allows this idea also. At any rate Paul at once recognizes the justice of the point made against him. He had been guilty of irreverence against the office of high priest as the passage from Ex 22:18 (LXX) shows and confesses his fault, but the rebuke was deserved. Jesus did not threaten (IPe 2:23) when smitten on the cheek (Joh 18:22), but he did protest against the act and did not turn the other cheek.

23:6 {But when Paul perceived} (\gnous de ho Paulos\). Perceiving (second aorist ingressive of \gin“sk“\). Paul quickly saw that his cause was ruined before the Sanhedrin by his unwitting attack on the high priest. It was impossible to get a fair hearing. Hence, Vincent says, "Paul, with great tact, seeks to bring the two parties of the council into collision with each other." So Alford argues with the motto "divide and conquer." Farrar condemns Paul and takes 24:21 as a confession of error here, but that is reading into Paul's word about the resurrection more than he says. Page considers Luke's report meagre and unsatisfactory. Rackham thinks that the trial was already started and that Paul repeated part of his speech of the day before when "the Sadducees received his words with ostentatious scepticism and ridicule: this provoked counter-expressions of sympathy and credulity among the Pharisees." But all this is inference. We do not have to adopt the Jesuitical principle that the end justifies the means in order to see shrewdness and hard sense in what Paul said and did. Paul knew, of course, that the Sanhedrin was nearly evenly divided between Pharisees and Sadducees, for he himself had been a Pharisee. {I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees} (Eg“Pharisaios eimi huios Pharisai“n). This was strictly true as we know from his Epistles (Php 3:5). {Touching the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question} (peri elpidos kai anastase“s nekr“n krinomai). This was true also and this is the point that Paul mentions in 24:21. His failure to mention again the fact that he was a Pharisee throws no discredit on Luke's report here. The chief point of difference between Pharisees and Sadducees was precisely this matter of the resurrection. And this was Paul's cardinal doctrine as a Christian minister. It was this fact that convinced him that Jesus was the Messiah and was "the very centre of his faith" (Page) and of his preaching. It was not a mere trick for Paul to proclaim this fact here and so divide the Sanhedrin. As a matter of fact, the Pharisees held aloof when the Sadducees persecuted Peter and the other apostles for preaching resurrection in the case of Jesus and even Gamaliel threw cold water on the effort to punish them for it (Ac 5:34-39). So then Paul was really recurring to the original cleavage on this point and was able to score a point against the Sadducees as Gamaliel, his great teacher, had done before him. Besides, "Paul and Pharisaism seem to us such opposite ideas that we often forget that to Paul Christianity was the natural development of Judaism" (Page). Paul shows this in Ga 3; Ro 9-11.

23:7 {When he had so said} (touto autou lalountos). Genitive absolute of present participle (Westcott and Hort) rather than aorist (eipontos). While he was saying this. {A dissension} (stasis). This old word for standing or station (Heb 9:8) from histēmi, to place, we have seen already to mean insurrection (Ac 19:40 which see). Here it is strife as in 15:2. {Was divided} (eschisthē). See on 14:4.

23:8 {There is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit} (m[^] einai anastasin m[^]te aggelon m[^]te pneuma). Infinitive with negative m[^] in indirect assertion. These points constitute the chief doctrinal differences between the Pharisees and the Sadducees. {Both} (amphotera). Here used though three items of belief are mentioned as in 19:16 where the seven sons of Sceva are thus described. This idiom is common enough in papyri and Byzantine Greek (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 745).

23:9 {Strove} (\diemachonto\). Imperfect middle of \diamachomai\, old Attic verb, to fight it out (between, back and forth, fiercely). Here only in the N.T. It was a lively scrap and Luke pictures it as going on. The Pharisees definitely take Paul's side. {And what if a spirit hath spoken to him or an angel?} (\ei de pneuma elal^sen aut^i ^aggelos?\). This is aposiopesis, not uncommon in the N.T., as in Lu 13:9; Joh 6:62 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1203). See one also in Ex 32:32.

23:10 {When there arose a great dissension} (\poll^s t^s ginomen^s stase^s\). Present middle participle (genitive absolute). Literally, "dissension becoming much." {Lest Paul should be torn in pieces by them} (\m^ diaspasth^i ho Paulos\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \diaspa^s\, to draw in two, to tear in pieces, old verb, in the N.T. only here and Mr 5:4 of tearing chains in two. The subjunctive with \m^ is the common construction after a verb of fearing (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 995). {The soldiers} (\to strateuma\). The army, the band of soldiers and so in verse 27. {To go down} (\kataban\). Second aorist active participle of \katabain^s\, having gone down. {Take him by force} (\harpasai\). To seize. The soldiers were to seize and save Paul from the midst of (\ek mesou\) the rabbis or preachers (in their rage to get at each other). Paul was more of a puzzle to Lysias now than ever.

23:11 {The night following} (\t^i epious^i nukti\). Locative case, on the next (following) night. {The Lord} (\ho kurios\). Jesus. Paul never needed Jesus more than now. On a previous occasion the whole church prayed for Peter's release (12:5), but Paul clearly had no such grip on the church as that, though he had been kindly welcomed (21:18). In every crisis Jesus appears to him (cf. Ac 18:9). It looked dark for Paul till Jesus spoke. Once before in Jerusalem Jesus spoke words of cheer (22:18). Then he was told to leave Jerusalem. Now he is to have "cheer" or "courage" (\tharsei\). Jesus used this very word to others (Mt 9:2,22; Mr 10:49). It is a brave word. {Thou hast testified} (\diemartur^s\). First aorist middle indicative second person singular of \diamarturomai\, strong word (see on 22:18). {Must thou} (\se dei\). That is the needed word and on this Paul leans. His hopes (19:21) of going to Rome will not be in vain. He can bide Christ's time now. And Jesus has approved his witness in Jerusalem.

23:12 {Banded together} (\poi^ˆsantes sustroph^ˆn\). See on 19:40 (riot), but here conspiracy, secret combination, binding together like twisted cords. {Bound themselves under a curse} (\anethematisan heautous\). First aorist active indicative of \anathematiz^ˆ\, a late word, said by Cremer and Thayer to be wholly Biblical or ecclesiastical. But Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 95) quotes several examples of the verb in an Attic cursing tablet from Megara of the first or second century A.D. This proof shows that the word, as well as \anathema\ (substantive) from which the verb is derived, was employed by pagans as well as by Jews. Deissmann suggests that Greek Jews like the seven sons of Sceva may have been the first to coin it. It occurs in the LXX as well as Mr 14:71 (which see and Luke 21:5); Ac 23:12,14,21. They placed themselves under an anathema or curse, devoted themselves to God (cf. Le 27:28f.; 1Co 16:22). {Drink} (\pein=piein\). Second aorist active infinitive of \pin^ˆ\. For this shortened form see Robertson, Grammar, p. 343. {Till they had killed} (\he^ˆs hou apoktein^ˆsin\). First aorist active subjunctive of \apoktein^ˆ\, common verb. No reason to translate "had killed," simply "till they should kill," the aorist merely punctiliar action, the subjunctive retained instead of the optative for vividness as usual in the Koin, (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 974-6). Same construction in verse 14. King Saul took an "anathema" that imperilled Jonathan (1Sa 14:24). Perhaps the forty felt that the rabbis could find some way to absolve the curse if they failed. See this verse repeated in verse 21.

23:13 {More than forty} (\pleious tesserakonta\). Without "than" (\^\) as in verse 21; 24:11 and often in the ancient Greek. {Conspiracy} (\sun^ˆmosian\). Old word from \sunomnumi\, to swear together. Only here in the N.T.

23:14 {Came to the chief priests and the elders} (\proselthontes tois archiereusin kai tois presbuterois\). The Sanhedrin, just as Judas did (Lu 22:4). {With a great curse} (\anathemati\). This use of the same word as the verb repeated in the instrumental case is in imitation of the Hebrew absolute infinitive and common in the LXX, the very idiom and words of De 13:15; 20:17, an example of translation Greek, though found in other languages (Robertson, Grammar, p. 531). See on Lu 21:5 for the distinction between \anathema\ and \anath^ˆma\. Jesus had foretold: "Whoso killeth you will think that he doeth God service" (Joh 16:2).

23:15 {Ye} (\humeis). Emphatic. {Signify} (\emphanisate). First aorist active imperative of \emphaniz. Make plain from \emphan^s, chiefly in Acts. Repeated in verse 22. The authority is with the chiliarch not with the Sanhedrin, but he had appealed to the Sanhedrin for advice. {As though ye would judge of his case more exactly} (\h^s mellontas diagin^skein akribesteron ta peri autou). \H^s with the participle gives the alleged reason as here. So also in verse 20. \Diagnosk^s, old verb to distinguish accurately, only here in N.T. and 24:22. {Or ever come near} (\pro tou eggisai auton). "Before the coming near as to him." \Pro and the genitive of the articular infinitive of \eggiz with accusative of general reference. {We are ready to slay him} (\hetoimoi esmen tou anelein auton). Genitive of purpose of the articular infinitive after the adjective \hetoimoi (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1061). \Anelein, second aorist active of \anaire.

23:16 {Their lying in wait} (\t^n enedran). Old word from \en (in) and \hedra (seat), ambush. In N.T. only here and 25:3. Accusative object of \akousas. {He came} (\paragenomenos). Second aorist middle participle of \paraginomai. It may mean, "having come upon them" and so discount their plot, a graphic touch. Vincent thinks that some Pharisee, since Paul was a Pharisee and so a member of the "guild," told his nephew of the plot. Perhaps, and perhaps not. {Told Paul} (\ap^ggeilen t^i Paul^i). This nephew is not known otherwise. He may be a student here from Tarsus as Paul once was. Anyhow he knows what to do when he catches on to the conspirators. He had enough address to get into the barracks where Paul was. He ran the risk of death if discovered.

23:17 {Called unto him} (\proskalesamenos). First aorist participle indirect middle, calling to himself. Paul laid his plans as energetically as if Jesus had not promised that he would see Rome (23:11). {Bring} (\apage). "Take away."

23:18 {Paul the prisoner} (\ho desmios Paulos). Bound (\desmios) to a soldier, but not with two chains (21:33), and with some freedom to see his friends as later (28:16), in military custody (_custodia militaris_). This was better than _custodia publica_ (public custody), the common prison, but more confining. {Who hath something to say to thee} (\echonta ti lal'sai soi). Same idiom as in verse 17,19, but \lal^sai\ here instead of \apaggeilai\.

23:19 {Took him by the hand} (\epilabomenos t^s cheiros autou\). Kindly touch in Lysias, _ut fiduciam adolescentis confirmaret_ (Bengel). Note genitive with the second aorist middle (indirect, to himself) of \epilamban^ as in Lu 8:54 with \krat^sas\ which see. How old the young man (\neanias\) was we do not know, but it is the very word used of Paul in 7:58 when he helped in the killing of Stephen, a young man in the twenties probably. See also 20:9 of Eutychus. He is termed \neaniskos\ in verse 22. {Asked him privately} (\kat' idian epunthaneto\). Imperfect middle, began to ask (inchoative).

23:20 {The Jews} (\hoi Ioudaioi\). As if the whole nation was in the conspiracy and so in verse 12. The conspirators may have belonged to the Zealots, but clearly they represented the state of Jewish feeling toward Paul in Jerusalem. {Have agreed} (\sunethento\). Second aorist middle indicative of \suntith^mi\, old verb to join together, to agree. Already this form in Lu 22:5 which see. See also Joh 9:22; Ac 24:9. {To bring down} (\hop^s katagag^is\). Very words of the conspirators in verse 15 as if the young man overheard. Second aorist active subjunctive of \katag^ with \hop^s\ in final clause, still used, but nothing like so common as \hina\ though again in verse 23 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 985). {As though thou wouldest inquire} (\h^s mell^ n punthanesthai\). Just as in verse 15 except that here \mell^ n\ refers to Lysias instead of to the conspirators as in verse 15. The singular is used by the youth out of deference to the authority of Lysias and so modifies a bit the scheming of the conspirators, not "absurd" as Page holds.

23:21 {Do not therefore yield unto them} (\Su oun m^ peisth^is autois\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \peith^, common verb, here to be persuaded by, to listen to, to obey, to yield to. With negative and rightly. Do not yield to them (dative) at all. On the aorist subjunctive with \m^ in prohibitions against committing an act see Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 851-4. {For there lie in wait} (\enedreuusin gar\). Present active indicative of \enedreu^, old verb from \enedra\ (verse 16), in the N.T. only here and Lu 11:54 which see. {Till they have slain him} (\he^s hou anel^ sin auton\). Same idiom as in verse 12 save that here we have \anel^ sin\ (second aorist active subjunctive) instead of \apoktein^ sin\ (another word for kill), "till they slay him."

{Looking for the promise from thee} (\prosdechomenoi tⁿ apo sou epaggelian\). This item is all that is needed to put the scheme through, the young man shrewdly adds.

23:22 {Tell no man} (\m[^]deni eklal[^]sai\). Indirect command (_oratio obliqua_) after \paraggeilas\ (charging) with first aorist active infinitive of \eklale“\ (in ancient Greek, but here only in N.T.), but construction changed to direct in rest of the sentence (_oratio recta_) as in 1:4, "that thou hast signified these things to me" (\hoti tauta enephanisas pros eme\). Same verb here as in verse 15. This change is common in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1047).

23:23 {Two} (\tinias duo\). "Some two" as in Lu 7:19, indicating (Page) that they were not specially chosen. {Soldiers} (\strati“tas\), {horsemen} (\hippeis\), {spearmen} (\dexiolabous\). The three varieties of troops in a Roman army like the cohort of Lysias (Page). The \strati“tai\ were the heavy-armed legionaries, the \hippeis\ belonged to every legion, the \dexiolaboi\ were light-armed supplementary troops who carried a lance in the right hand (\dexios\, right, \lamban“\, to take). Vulgate, _lancearios_. At the third hour of the night (\apo trit[^]s h“ras t[^]s nuktos\). About nine in the evening.

23:24 {Provide beasts} (\kten[^] parast[^]sai\). Change from direct to indirect discourse just the opposite of that in verse 22. {Beasts} (\kt[^]n^). For riding as here or for baggage. See on ̄Lu 10:34. Asses or horses, but not war-horses. Since Paul was chained to a soldier, another animal would be required for baggage. It was also seventy miles and a change of horses might be needed. The extreme precaution of Lysias is explained in some Latin MSS. as due to fear of a night attack with the result that he might be accused to Felix of bribery. Luke also probably accompanied Paul. {To bring safe} (\hina dias“s“sin\). Final clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \dias“z“\, old verb, to save through (\dia\) to a finish. Eight times in the N.T. (Mt 14:36; Lu 7:3; Ac 23:24; 27:43,44; 28:1,4; 1Pe 3:20). {Unto Felix the governor} (\pros Ph[^]lika ton h[^]gemonas\). Felix was a brother of Pallas, the notorious favourite of Claudius. Both had been slaves and were now freedmen. Felix was made procurator of Judea by Claudius A.D. 52. He held the position till Festus succeeded him after complaints by the Jews to Nero. He married Drusilla the daughter of Herod Agrippa I with the hope of winning the favour of the Jews. He was one of the most depraved men of his time. Tacitus says of him that "with all cruelty and lust he exercised the power of a king with the spirit of a slave." The term "governor" (\h^gem“n) means "leader" from \h^geomai, to lead, and was applied to leaders of all sorts (emperors, kings, procurators). In the N.T. it is used of Pilate (Mt 27:2), of Felix, (Ac 23:24,26,33; 24:1), of Festus (26:30).

23:25 {And he wrote} (\grapsas). First aorist active participle of \graph“, agreeing with the subject (Lysias) of \eipen (said) back in verse 23 (beginning). {After this form} (\echousan ton tupon touton). Textus Receptus has \periechousan. The use of \tupon (type or form) like _exemplum_ in Latin (Page who quotes Cicero _Ad Att_. IX. 6. 3) may give merely the purport or substantial contents of the letter. But there is no reason for thinking that it is not a genuine copy since the letter may have been read in open court before Felix, and Luke was probably with Paul. The Roman law required that a subordinate officer like Lysias in reporting a case to his superior should send a written statement of the case and it was termed _elogium_. A copy of the letter may have been given Paul after his appeal to Caesar. It was probably written in Latin. The letter is a "dexterous mixture of truth and falsehood" (Furneaux) with the stamp of genuineness. It puts things in a favourable light for Lysias and makes no mention of his order to scourge Paul.

23:26 {Most excellent} (\kratist“i). See on Lu 1:3 to Theophilus though not in Ac 1:1. It is usual in addressing men of rank as here, like our "Your Excellency" in 24:3 and Paul uses it to Festus in 26:25. {Greeting} (\chairein). Absolute infinitive with independent or absolute nominative (\Klaudios Lusias) as is used in letters (Ac 15:23; Jas 1:1) and in countless papyri (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1092).

23:27 {Was seized} (\sull^mphthenta). First aorist passive participle of \sullamban“. {Rescued him having learned that he was a Roman} (\exeilamen math“n hoti Romaioi estin). Wendt, Zockler, and Furneaux try to defend this record of two facts by Lysias in the wrong order from being an actual lie as Bengel rightly says. Lysias did rescue Paul and he did learn that he was a Roman, but in this order. He did not first learn that he was a Roman and then rescue him as his letter states. The use of the aorist participle (\math“n\ from \manthan“) after the principal verb \exeilamen (second aorist middle of \exaire“\, to take out to oneself, to rescue) can be either simultaneous action or antecedent. There is in Greek no such idiom as the aorist participle of subsequent action (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 1112-14). Lysias simply reversed the order of the facts and omitted the order for scourging Paul to put himself in proper light with Felix his superior officer and actually poses as the protector of a fellow Roman citizen.

23:28 {To know} (\epign“nai\). To know fully, \epi\, second aorist active infinitive. {They accused him} (\enekaloun aut“i\). Imperfect active indicative, were accusing him (dative), repeating their charges.

23:29 {Concerning questions of their law} (\peri z“t“mata tou nomou aut“n\). The very distinction drawn by Gallio in Corinth (Ac 18:14f.). On the word see on 15:2. {But to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds} (\m“den de axion thanatou ^desm“n echonta enkl“ma\). Literally, "having no accusation (or crime) worthy of death or of bonds." This phrase here only in the N.T. \Egkl“ma\ is old word for accusation or crime from \egkale“\ used in verse 28 and in the N.T. only here and 25:16. Lysias thus expresses the opinion that Paul ought to be set free and the lenient treatment that Paul received in Caesarea and Rome (first imprisonment) is probably due to this report of Lysias. Every Roman magistrate before whom Paul appears declares him innocent (Gallio, Lysias, Felix, Festus).

23:30 {When it was shown to me that there would be a plot} (\m“nutheis“s moi epiboul“s esesthai\). Two constructions combined; genitive absolute (\m“nutheis“s epiboul“s\, first aorist passive participle of \m“nu“\ and future infinitive (\esesthai\ as if \epiboul“n\ accusative of general reference used) in indirect assertion after \m“nu“\ (Robertson, Grammar, p. 877). {Charging his accusers also} (\paraggeilas kai tois kat“gorois\). First aorist active participle of \paraggell“\ with which compare \math“n\ above (verse 27), not subsequent action. Dative case in \kat“gorois\. {Before thee} (\epi sou\). Common idiom for "in the presence of" when before a judge (like Latin apud) as in 24:20,21; 25:26; 26:2. What happened to the forty conspirators we have no way of knowing. Neither they nor the Jews from Asia are heard of more during the long five years of Paul's imprisonment in Caesarea and Rome.

23:31 {As it was commanded them} (\kata to diatetagmenon autois\). "According to that which was commanded them," perfect passive articular participle of \diatass“\, {By night} (\dia nuktos\). Through the night, travelling by night forty miles from Jerusalem to Antipatris which was founded by Herod the Great and was on the road from Jerusalem to Caesarea, a hard night's ride.

23:33 {And they} (\hoitines\). Which very ones, the cavalry, the horsemen of verse 31. {Delivered} (\anadontes\). Second aorist active participle of \anadid“mi\, old verb to give up, to hand over, here only in the N.T. {Presented Paul also} (\parest^san kai ton Paulon\). First aorist active (transitive, not second aorist intransitive) indicative of \parist^mi\, common verb to present or place beside. What would Paul's friends in Caesarea (Philip and his daughters) think of the prophecy of Agabus now so quickly come true.

23:34 {When he had read it} (\anagnous\). Second aorist active participle of \anagin“sk“\, to know again, to read. {Of what province he was} (\ek poias eparcheias estin\). Tense of \estin\ (is) retained in indirect question. \Poias\ is strictly "of what kind of" province, whether senatorial or imperial. Cilicia, like Judea, was under the control of the propraeor of Syria (imperial province). Paul's arrest was in Jerusalem and so under the jurisdiction of Felix unless it was a matter of insurrection when he could appeal to the propraeor of Syria.

23:35 {I will hear thy cause} (\diakousomai\). "I will hear thee fully" (\dia\). {When--are come} (\paragen“ntai\). Second aorist middle subjunctive of \paraginomai\ with temporal conjunction \hotan\, indefinite temporal clause of future time (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 972), "whenever thine accusers come." {In Herod's palace} (\en t“i prait“ri“i\). The Latin word \praetorium\, The word meant the camp of the general, then the palace of the governor as here and Mt 27:27 which see, and then the camp of praetorian soldiers or rather the praetorian guard as in Php 1:13.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

24:1 {And with an Orator, one Tertullus} (\kai rh^ˆtoros Tertullou tinou\). A deputation of elders along with the high priest Ananias, not the whole Sanhedrin, but no hint of the forty conspirators or of the Asian Jews. The Sanhedrin had become divided so that now it is probably Ananias (mortally offended) and the Sadducees who take the lead in the prosecution of Paul. It is not clear whether after five days is from Paul's departure from Jerusalem or his arrival in Caesarea. If he spent nine days in Jerusalem, then the five days would be counted from then (verse 11). The employment of a Roman lawyer (Latin _orator_) was necessary since the Jews were not familiar with Roman legal procedure and it was the custom in the provinces (Cicero _pro Cael_ 30). The speech was probably in Latin which Paul may have understood also. \Rh^ˆt^ˆr\ is a common old Greek word meaning a forensic orator or advocate but here only in the N.T. The Latin _rhetor_ was a teacher of rhetoric, a very different thing. Tertullus is a diminutive of Tertius (Ro 16:22). {Informed} (\enephanisan\). Same verb as in 23:15,22, somewhat like our modern "indictment," certainly accusations "against Paul" (\kata tou Paulou\). They were down on Paul and the hired barrister was prosecuting attorney. For the legal form see _Oxyrhynchus Papyri_, Vol. II., p. 162, line 19.

24:2 {When he (Paul) was called} (\kl^ˆthentos autou\). Genitive absolute (as so often in Acts) with first aorist passive participle of \kale^ˆ\. Seeing that by thee we enjoy much peace (\poll^ˆs eir^ˆn^ˆs tugchanontes dia sou\). Literally, obtaining much peace by thee. A regular piece of flattery, _captatio benevolentiae_, to ingratiate himself into the good graces of the governor. Felix had suppressed a riot, but Tacitus (_Ann_ XII. 54) declares that Felix secretly encouraged banditti and shared the plunder for which the Jews finally made complaint to Nero who recalled him. But it sounded well to praise Felix for keeping peace in his province, especially as Tertullus was going to accuse Paul of being a disturber of the peace. {And that by thy providence} (\kai dia t^ˆs pronoias\). Forethought, old Greek word from \pronoos\ (\prone^ˆ\ in 1Ti 5:8; Ro 12:17; 2Co 8:21), in N.T. only here and Ro 13:14. "Providence" is Latin Providentia (foreseeing, provideo). Roman coins often have _Providentia Caesaris_. Post-Augustan Latin uses it of God (Deus). {Evils are corrected for this nation} (\diorth“mat“n ginomen“n t“i ethnei tout“i\). Genitive absolute again, \ginomen“n\, present middle participle describing the process of reform going on for this nation (dative case of personal interest). \Diorth“ma\ (from \diortho“\, to set right) occurs from Aristotle on of setting right broken limbs (Hippocrates) or reforms in law and life (Polybius, Plutarch). "Reform continually taking place for this nation." Felix the Reform Governor of Judea! It is like a campaign speech, but it doubtless pleased Felix.

24:3 {In all ways and in all places} (\pant“i te kai pantachou\). \Pant“i\, old adverb of manner only here in N.T. \Pantachou\ also old adverb of place, several times in N.T. But these adverbs most likely go with the preceding clause about "reforms" rather than as here translated with "we accept" (\apodechometha\). But "with all gratitude" (\meta pas“s eucharistias\) does naturally go with \apodechometha\.

24:4 {That I be not further tedious unto thee} (\hina m“ epi pleion se enkopt“\). _Koin,_ verb (Hippocrates, Polybius) to cut in on (or into), to cut off, to impede, to hinder. Our modern telephone and radio illustrate it well. In the N.T. (Ac 24:4; 1Th 2:18; Ga 5:7; Ro 15:22; 1Pe 3:7). "That I may not cut in on or interrupt thee further (\epi pleion\) in thy reforms." Flattery still. {Of thy clemency} (\t“i s“i epieikeifi\). Instrumental case of old word from \epieik“s\ and this from \epi\ and \eikos\ (reasonable, likely, fair). "Sweet Reasonableness" (Matthew Arnold), gentleness, fairness. An \epieik“s\ man is "one who makes reasonable concessions" (Aristotle, _Eth_. V. 10), while \dikaiois\ is "one who insists on his full rights" (Plato, _Leg_. 757 D) as translated by Page. {A few words} (\suntom“s\). Old adverb from \suntemn“\, to cut together (short), abbreviate. Like \dia brache“n\ in Heb 13:22. In N.T. only here and Mr 16 (shorter conclusion).

24:5 {For we have found} (\heurontes gar\). Second aorist active participle of \heurisk“\, but without a principal verb in the sentence. Probably we have here only a "summary of the charges against Paul" (Page). {A pestilent fellow} (\loimon\). An old word for pest, plague, pestilence, Paul the pest. In N.T. only here and Lu 21:11 (\loimoi kai limoi\, pestilences and famines) which see. Latin _pestis_. Think of the greatest preacher of the ages being branded a pest by a contemporary hired lawyer. {A mover of insurrections} (\kinounta staseis). This was an offence against Roman law if it could be proven. "Plotted against at Damascus, plotted against at Jerusalem, expelled from Pisidian Antioch, stoned at Lystra, scourged and imprisoned at Philippi, accused of treason at Thessalonica, haled before the proconsul at Corinth, cause of a serious riot at Ephesus, and now finally of a riot at Jerusalem" (Furneaux). Specious proof could have been produced, but was not. Tertullus went on to other charges with which a Roman court had no concern (instance Gallio in Corinth). {Throughout the world} (\kata t^ⁿ oikoumen^ⁿ). The Roman inhabited earth (\g^ⁿ) as in 17:6. {A ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes} (\pr^^otostat^ⁿ t^^s t^ⁿ Naz^^orai^ⁿ haires^^es). \Pr^^otostat^^s is an old word in common use from \pr^^otos and \hist^^{mi}, a front-rank man, a chief, a champion. Here only in the N.T. This charge is certainly true. About "sect" (\hairesis) see on 5:17. \Naz^^oraioi here only in the plural in the N.T., elsewhere of Jesus (Mt 2:23; 26:71; Lu 18:37; Joh 18:5,7; 19:19; Ac 2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; 22:8; 26:9). The disciple is not above his Master. There was a sneer in the term as applied to Jesus and here to his followers.

24:6 {Assayed to profane} (\epeirasen beb^^l^^osai). A flat untruth, but the charge of the Asian Jews (21:28-30). _Verbum optum ad calumnian_ (Bengel). {We seized} (\ekrat^^{samen}). As if the Sanhedrin had arrested Paul, Tertullus identifying himself with his clients. But it was the mob (21:28-31) that attacked Paul and Lysias who rescued him (21:32ff.).

24:7 This whole verse with some words at the end of verse 6 and the beginning of verse 8 in the Textus Receptus ("And would have judged according to our law. But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands, commanding his accusers to come unto thee") is absent from Aleph A B H L P 61 (many other cursives) Sahidic Bohairic. It is beyond doubt a later addition to the incomplete report of the speech of Tertullus. As the Revised Version stands, verse 8 connects with verse 6. The motive of the added words is clearly to prejudice Felix against Lysias and they contradict the record in Ac 21. Furneaux holds them to be genuine and omitted because contradictory to Ac 21. More likely they are a clumsy attempt to complete the speech of Tertullus.

24:8 {From whom} (\par' hou\). Referring to Paul, but in the Textus Receptus referring to Lysias. {By examining him thyself} (\autos anakrinas\). Not by torture, since Paul was a Roman citizen, but by hearing what Paul has to say in defence of himself. \Anakrin“\ is to examine thoroughly up and down as in Lu 23:14.

24:9 {Joined in the charge} (\sunepethento\). Second aorist middle indicative of \sunepitith^mi\, old verb, double compound, to place upon (\epi\) together with (\sun\), to make a joint attack, here only in the N.T. {Affirming} (\phaskontes\). Alleging, with the accusative in indirect assertion as in 25:19; Ro 1:22 (nominative with infinitive, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1038). {Were so} (\hout“s echein\), "held thus," common idiom.

24:10 {When the governor had beckoned to him} (\neusantos aut“i tou h^gemonos\). Genitive absolute again with first aorist active participle of \neu“\, to give a nod, old word, in N.T. only here and Joh 13:24. "The governor nodding to him." {Forasmuch as I know} (\epistamenos\). Knowing, from \epistamai\. {That thou hast been of many years a judge} (\ek poll“n et“n onta se krit^n\). The participle in indirect assertion after \epistamenos\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1041). Paul goes as far as he can in the way of a compliment. For seven years Felix has been governor, \onta\ being a sort of progressive present participle with \ek poll“n et“n\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 892). {Cheerfully} (\euthum“s\). Old adverb from \euthumos\ (\eu\ and \thumos\, good spirit), here only in N.T. {Make my defence} (\apologoumai\). Old and regular word for this idea as in Lu 21:14 which see.

24:11 {Seeing that thou canst take knowledge} (\dunamenou sou epign“nai\). Genitive absolute again. The same word and form (\epign“nai\) used by Tertullus, if in Greek, in verse 8 to Felix. Paul takes it up and repeats it. {Not more than twelve days} (\ou pleious h^merai d“deka\). Here \^ (than) is absent without change of case to the ablative as usually happens. But this idiom is found in the _Koin_, (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 666). {Since} (\aph' h^s\). Supply \h^meras\, "from which day." {To worship} (\proskun^s“n\). One of the few examples of the future participle of purpose so common in the old Attic.

24:12 {Disputing} (\dialegomenon\). Simply conversing, discussing, arguing, and then disputing, common verb in old Greek and in N.T. (especially in Acts). {Stirring up a crowd} (\epistasin poiounta ochlou). \Epistasis is a late word from \ephist^mi, to make an onset or rush. Only twice in the N.T., 2Co 11:28 (the pressure or care of the churches) and here (making a rush of a crowd). The papyri give examples also for "onset." So Paul denies the two charges that were serious and the only one that concerned Roman law (insurrection).

24:13 {Prove} (\parast^sai). First aorist active infinitive of \parist^mi, to place beside. They have made "charges," mere assertions. They have not backed up these charges with proof, "nor can they," says Paul. {Now} (\nuni). As if they had changed their charges from the cries of the mob in Jerusalem which is true. Paul has no hired lawyer to plead for him, but he has made a masterly plea for his freedom.

24:14 {I confess} (\homolog^ai). The only charge left was that of being a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. This Paul frankly confesses is true. He uses the word in its full sense. He is "guilty" of that. {After the Way} (\kata t^h hodon). This word Paul had already applied to Christianity (22:4). He prefers it to "sect" (\hairesin which means a choosing, then a division). Paul claims Christianity to be the real (whole, catholic) Judaism, not a "sect" of it. But he will show that Christianity is not a deviation from Judaism, but the fulfilment of it (Page) as he has already shown in Ga 3; Ro 9. {So serve I the God of our fathers} (\hout^s latreu^s t^i patr^i^i the^i). Paul has not stretched the truth at all. He has confirmed the claim made before the Sanhedrin that he is a spiritual Pharisee in the truest sense (23:6). He reasserts his faith in all the law and the prophets, holding to the Messianic hope. A curious "heretic" surely! {Which these themselves also look for} (\h^h kai autoi houtoi prosdechontai). Probably with a gesture towards his accusers. He does not treat them all as Sadducees. See Tit 2:13 for similar use of the verb (\prosdechomenoi t^h makarian elpida, looking for the happy hope).

24:15 {That there shall be a resurrection} (\anastasin mellein esesthai). Indirect assertion with infinitive and accusative of general reference (\anastasin) after the word \elpida (hope). The future infinitive \esesthai after \mellein is also according to rule, \mell^ai being followed by either present, aorist, or future infinitive (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 870, 877, 878). {Both of the just and the unjust} (\dikai^s n te kai adik“n\). Apparently at the same time as in Joh 5:29 (cf. Ac 17:31f.). Gardner thinks that Luke here misrepresents Paul who held to no resurrection save for those "in Christ," a mistaken interpretation of Paul in my opinion. The Talmud teaches the resurrection of Israelites only, but Paul was more than a Pharisee.

24:16 {Herein} (\i en tout“i\). His whole confession of belief in verses 14,15. {Do I also exercise myself} (\kai autos ask“\). "Do I also myself take exercise," take pains, labour, strive. Old word in Homer to work as raw materials, to adorn by art, then to drill. Our word ascetic comes from this root, one who seeks to gain piety by rules and severe hardship. Paul claims to be equal to his accusers in efforts to please God. {Void of offence} (\aproskopon\). This word belongs to the papyri and N.T. (only in Paul), not in the ancient writers. The papyri examples (Moulton Milligan, _Vocabulary_) use the word to mean "free from hurt or harm." It is a privative and \proskopt“\ (to cut or stumble against). Page likes "void of offence" since that can be either active "not stumbling" as in Php 1:10 or passive "not stumbled against" as in 1Co 10:32 (the first toward God and the second toward men), the only other N.T. examples. Hence the word here appears in both senses (the first towards God, the second towards men). Paul adds "alway" (\dia pantos\), a bold claim for a consistent aim in life. "Certainly his conscience acquitted him of having caused any offence to his countrymen" (Rackham). Furneaux thinks that it must have been wormwood and gall to Ananias to hear Paul repeat here the same words because of which he had ordered Paul to be smitten on the mouth (23:1f.).

24:17 {After many years} (\di' et“n pleion“n\). "At an interval (\dia\ of more (\pleion“n\ years" (than a few, one must add), not "after many years." If, as is likely Paul went up to Jerusalem in Ac 18:22, that was some five years ago and would justify "\pleion“n\" (several years ago or some years ago). {To bring alms} (\ele^mosunas poi^son\). Another (see \proskun^s“n\ in verse 11) example of the future participle of purpose in the N.T. These "alms" (on \ele^mosunas\ see on ^Mt 6:1,4; Ac 10:2, common in Tobit and is in the papyri) were for the poor saints in Jerusalem (1Co 16:1-4; 2Co 8; 9; Ro 15:26) who were none the less Jews. "And offerings" (\kai prosporas\). The very word used in 21:26 of the offerings or sacrifices made by Paul for the four brethren and himself. It does not follow that it was Paul's original purpose to make these "offerings" before he came to Jerusalem (cf. 18:18). He came up to worship (verse 11) and to be present at Pentecost (20:16).

24:18 {Amidst which} (\en hail\). That is, "in which offerings" (in presenting which offerings, 21:27). {They found me} (my accusers here present, \heuron me), {purified in the temple} (\h^gnismenon en t^i hier^i\). Perfect passive participle of \hagniz^ (same verb in 21:24,26) state of completion of the Jewish sacrifices which had gone on for seven days (21:27), the very opposite of the charges made. {With no crowd} (\ou meta ochlou\). "Not with a crowd" till the Asiatic Jews gathered one (21:27). {Nor yet with tumult} (\oude meta thorubou\). They made the tumult (27:30), not Paul. Till they made the stir, all was quiet.

24:19 {But certain Jews from Asia} (\tines de apo t^s Alias Ioudaioi\). No verb appears in the Greek for these words. Perhaps he meant to say that "certain Jews from Asia charged me with doing these things." Instead of saying that, Paul stops to explain that they are not here, a thoroughly Pauline anacoluthon (2Co 7:5) as in 26:9. "The passage as it stands is instinct with life, and seems to exhibit the abruptness so characteristic of the Pauline Epistles" (Page). {Who ought to have been here before thee} (\hous edei epi sou pareinai\). This use of \epi\ with genitive of the person is common. The imperfect indicative with verbs of necessity and obligation to express failure to live up to it is common in Greek (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 919-21). "The accusers who were present had not witnessed the alleged offence: those who could have given evidence at first-hand were not present" (Furneaux). There was no case in a Roman court. These Asiatic Jews are never heard of after the riot, though they almost succeeded in killing Paul then. {If they had aught against me} (\ei ti echoien pros eme\). A condition of the fourth class or undetermined with less likelihood of being determined (\ei\ with the optative, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1021). This is a "mixed condition" (_op.cit._, p. 1022) with a conclusion of the second class.

24:20 {These men themselves} (\autoi houtoi\). Since the Asiatic Jews are not present and these men are. {Wrong doing} (\adik^ma\). Or misdeed. Old word from \adike^, to do wrong. In the N.T. only here and Ac 18:14; Re 18:5. Paul uses "\adik^ma\" from the standpoint of his accusers. "To a less sensitive conscience his action before the Sanhedrin would have seemed venial enough" (Furneaux). {When I stood} (\stantos mou\). Genitive absolute, second aorist active participle of \hist^mi\ (intransitive), "when I took my stand." {Before the council} (\epi tou sunedriou\). Same use of \epi\ with genitive as in verse 19.

24:21 {Except it be} (\e\). Literally, "than," but after interrogative \ti = ti allo\ "what else than." {For this one voice} (\peri mias taut^s ph^"n^s\). The normal Greek idiom with the attributive use of \houtos\ calls for the article before \mias\, though some inscriptions show it as here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 702). {That} (\h^s\). Genitive of the relative attracted to the case of the antecedent {ph^"n^s}. {I cried} (\ekekraxa\). Reduplicated aorist as is usual with this verb in the LXX (Jud 3:15). Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 348. {Touching} (\peri\). Concerning (around, about). {I am called in question} (\krinomai\). As in 23:6. {Before you} (\eph' hum^"n\). Same idiom as in verses 19,20.

24:22 {Having more exact knowledge} (\akribesteron eid^"s\). "Knowing" (second perfect active participle of \oida) "more accurately" (comparative of adverb \akrib^"s). More accurately than what? Than the Sanhedrin supposed he had "concerning the Way" (\ta peri t^s hodou\, the things concerning the Way, common in Acts for Christianity). How Felix had gained this knowledge of Christianity is not stated. Philip the Evangelist lived here in Caesarea and there was a church also. Drusilla was a Jewess and may have told him something. Besides, it is wholly possible that Felix knew of the decision of Gallio in Corinth that Christianity was a _religio licita_ as a form of Judaism. As a Roman official he knew perfectly well that the Sanhedrin with the help of Tertullus had failed utterly to make out a case against Paul. He could have released Paul and probably would have done so but for fear of offending the Jews whose ruler he was and the hope that Paul (note "alms" in verse 17) might offer him bribes for his liberty. {Deferred them} (\anebaletō autous\). Second aorist middle indicative of \anaball^"\, old verb (only here in N.T.) to throw or toss up, to put back or off, in middle to put off from one, to delay, to adjourn. Felix adjourned the case without a decision under a plausible pretext, that he required the presence of Lysias in person, which was not the case. Lysias had already said that Paul was innocent and was never summoned to Caesarea, so far as we know. Since Paul was a Roman citizen, Lysias could have thrown some light on the riot, if he had any. {Shall come down} (\katab^hi\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \katabain^h\. {I will determine your matter} (\diagn^h“somai ta kath' humfs\). Future middle of \diagin^h“sk^h\, old and common verb to know accurately or thoroughly (\dia\). In the N.T. only here (legal sense) and 23:15. "The things according to you" (plural, the matters between Paul and the Sanhedrin).

24:23 {And should have indulgence} (\echein te anesin\). From \ani^hmi\, to let loose, release, relax. Old word, in the N.T. only here and 2Th 1:7; 2Co 2:13; 7:5; 8:13. It is the opposite of strict confinement, though under guard, "kept in charge" (\t^hreisthai\). {Forbid} (\k^h“luein\). To hinder "no one of his friends" (\m^hdena t^h“n idi^h“n\). No one of Paul's "own" (cf. 4:23; Joh 1:11) or intimates. Of these we know the names of Luke, Aristarchus, Trophimus, Philip the Evangelist.

24:24 {With Drusilla his wife} (\sun Drousill^hi t^hi idifi gunaiki\). Felix had induced her to leave her former husband Aziz, King of Emesa. She was one of three daughters of Herod Agrippa I (Drusilla, Mariamne, Bernice). Her father murdered James, her great-uncle Herod Antipas slew John the Baptist, her great-grandfather (Herod the Great) killed the babes of Bethlehem. Perhaps the mention of Drusilla as "his own wife" is to show that it was not a formal trial on this occasion. Page thinks that she was responsible for the interview because of her curiosity to hear Paul. {Sent for} (\metepempsato\). First aorist middle of \metapemp^h\ as usual (Ac 10:5).

24:25 {Was terrified} (\emphobos genomenos\). Ingressive aorist middle of \ginomai\, "becoming terrified." \Emphobos\ (\en\ and \phobos\) old word, in the N.T. only Lu 24:5; Ac 10:5; 24:25; Re 11:13. Paul turned the tables completely around and expounded "the faith in Christ Jesus" as it applied to Felix and Drusilla and discoursed (\dialegomenou autou\, genitive absolute) concerning "righteousness" (\dikaiosun^hs\) which they did not possess, "self-control" or temperance (\egkrateias\) which they did not exhibit, and "the judgment to come" (\tou krimatos tou mellontos\) which was certain to overtake them. Felix was brought under conviction, but apparently not Drusilla. Like another Herodias her resentment was to be feared (Knowling). {Go thy way for this time} (\to nun echon poreuou\). The ancient Greek has this use of \to nun echon\ (Tobit 7:11) in the accusative of time, "as for the present or holding the now." {When I have a convenient season} (\kairon metalab“n). Second aorist active participle of the old verb \metalamban“, to find a share in, to obtain. It was his "excuse" for dodging the personal turn that Paul had given.

24:26 {He hoped withal} (\hama kai elpiz“n). "At the same time also hoping." Paul had mentioned the "alms" (24:17) and that excited the avarice of Felix for "money" (\chr^mata). Roman law demanded exile and confiscation for a magistrate who accepted bribes, but it was lax in the provinces. Felix had doubtless received them before. Josephus (_Ant_. XX. 8, 9) represents Felix as greedy for money. {The oftener} (\puknoteron). Comparative adverb of \puknos, old word, in N.T. only here and Lu 5:33 which see and 1Ti 5:23. Kin to \pugm^\" (Mr 7:3) which see from \puk“\, thick, dense, compact. Paul kept on not offering a bribe, but Felix continued to have hopes (present tense \elpiz“n\), kept on sending for him (present tense \metapempomenos\), and kept on communing (imperfect active \h“milei\ from \homile“\, old word as in Ac 20:11; Lu 24:14, which see, only N.T. examples of this word). But he was doomed to disappointment. He was never terrified again.

24:27 {But when two years were fulfilled} (\dietias de pl^r“theis^s). Genitive absolute first aorist passive of \pl^ro“, common verb to fill full. \Dietia, late word in LXX and Philo, common in the papyri, in N.T. only here and Ac 28:30. Compound of \dia, two (\duo, dis) and \etos, year. So Paul lingered on in prison in Caesarea, waiting for the second hearing under Felix which never came. Caesarea now became the compulsory headquarters of Paul for two years. With all his travels Paul spent several years each at Tarsus, Antioch, Corinth, Ephesus, though not as a prisoner unless that was true part of the time at Ephesus for which there is some evidence though not of a convincing kind. We do not know that Luke remained in Caesarea all this time. In all probability he came and went with frequent visits with Philip the Evangelist. It was probably during this period that Luke secured the material for his Gospel and wrote part or all of it before going to Rome. He had ample opportunity to examine the eyewitnesses who heard Jesus and the first attempts at writing including the Gospel of Mark (Lu 1:1-4). {Was succeeded by} (\elaben diadochon). Literally, "received as successor." \Diadochos is an old word from the arguments for either of these two views are more specious than convincing. Furneaux would even put 2Ti 4:9-22 here in spite of the flat contradiction with Ac 21:29 about Trophimus being in Jerusalem instead of Miletus (2Ti 4:20), a "mistake" which he attributes to Luke! That sort of criticism can prove anything.

\diadechomai\, to receive in succession (dia, duo\, two) and occurs here alone in the N.T. Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 115) gives papyri examples where \hoi diadochoi\ means "higher officials at the court of the Ptolemies," probably "deputies," a usage growing out of the "successors" of Alexander the Great (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary), though here the original notion of "successor" occurs (cf. Josephus, Ant. XX. 8, 9). Luke does not tell why Felix "received" a successor. The explanation is that during these two years the Jews and the Gentiles had an open fight in the market-place in Caesarea. Felix put the soldiers on the mob and many Jews were killed. The Jews made formal complaint to the Emperor with the result that Felix was recalled and Porcius Festus sent in his stead. {Porcius Festus} (Porkion Phston\). We know very little about this man. He is usually considered a worthier man than Felix, but Paul fared no better at his hands and he exhibits the same insincerity and eagerness to please the Jews. Josephus (Ant. XX. 8, 9) says that "Porcius Festus was sent as a successor to Felix." The precise year when this change occurred is not clear. Albinus succeeded Festus by A.D. 62, so that it is probable that Festus came A.D. 58 (or 59). Death cut short his career in a couple of years though he did more than Felix to rid the country of robbers and sicarii. Some scholars argue for an earlier date for the recall of Felix. Nero became Emperor Oct. 13, A.D. 54. Poppaea, his Jewish mistress and finally wife, may have had something to do with the recall of Felix at the request of the Jews. {Desiring to gain favour with the Jews} (thelⁿ te charita katathesthai tois Ioudaiou\). Reason for his conduct. Note second aorist (ingressive) middle infinitive \katathesthai\ from \katatith^{mi}\, old verb to place down, to make a deposit, to deposit a favour with, to do something to win favour. Only here and 25:9 in N.T., though in some MSS. in Mr 15:46. It is a banking figure. {Left Paul in bonds} (katelipe ton Paulon dedemenon\). Effective aorist active indicative of \kataleip^o\, to leave behind. Paul "in bonds" (dedemenon\, perfect passive participle of de^o\, to bind) was the "deposit" (katathesthai\) for their favour. Codex Bezae adds that Felix left Paul in custody "because of Drusilla" (dia Drousillan\). She disliked Paul as much as Herodias did John the Baptist. So Pilate surrendered to the Jews about the death of Jesus when they threatened to report him to Caesar. Some critics would date the third group of Paul's Epistles (Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians) to the imprisonment here in Caesarea, some even to one in Ephesus. But

25:1 {Having come into the province} (\epibas t'i eparcheifi\). Second aorist active participle of \epibain\, to set foot upon. Literally, "Having set foot upon his province." \Eparcheia\ is a late word for province, in N.T. only here and 23:34. Judea was not strictly a province, but a department (Page) of the province of Syria which was under a _propraetor_ (\legatus Caesaris\), while Judea was under a _procurator_ (\epitropos\). {After three days} (\meta treis h^meras\). So in Ac 28:17 in Rome. That is on the third day, with a day of rest in between. Precisely the language used of the resurrection of Jesus "after three days" = "on the third day." So by common usage then and now.

25:2 {The principal men} (\hoi pr^toi\). The first men, the leading men of the city, besides the chief priests. In verse 15 we have "the chief priests and the elders." These chief men among the Jews would desire to pay their respects to the new Procurator on his first visit to Jerusalem. There was another high priest now, Ishmael in place of Ananias. {Informed him against Paul} (\enephanisan aut^i kata tou Paulou\). "This renewal of the charge after two years, on the very first opportunity, is a measure, not only of their unsleeping hatred, but of the importance which they attached to Paul's influence" (Furneaux). {Besought} (\parekaloun\). Imperfect active, kept on beseeching as a special favour to the Jews.

25:3 {Asking favour against him} (\aitoumenoi charin kat' autou\). A favour to themselves (middle voice), not to Paul, but "against" (\kat', down, against) him. {That he would send for} (\hop^s metapemps^tai\). First aorist middle subjunctive of \metapemp\ (see 24:24,26) with final particle \hop^s\ like \hina\, Aorist tense for single case. {Laying wait} (\enedran poiountes\). See on 23:16 for the word \enedra\, Old idiom (Thucydides) for laying a plot or ambush as here. Only these two uses of \enedra\ in N.T. Two years before the Sanhedrin had agreed to the plot of the forty conspirators. Now they propose one on their own initiative. {On the way} (\kata t^h hodon\). Down along, up and down along the way. Plenty of opportunity would occur between Caesarea and Jerusalem for ambush and surprise attacks.

25:4 {Howbeit} (\men oun\). No antithesis expressed, though Page considers \de\ in verse 6 to be one. They probably argued that it was easier for one man (Paul) to come to Jerusalem than for many to go down there. But Festus was clearly suspicious (verse 6) and was wholly within his rights to insist that they make their charges in Caesarea where he held court. {Was kept in charge} (\t^reisthai\). Present passive infinitive of \t^re\ in indirect assertion. \Hoti\ with finite verb is more common after \apokrinomai\, but the infinitive with the accusative of general reference is proper as here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1036). {Shortly} (\en tachei\). In quickness, in speed. Old and common usage, seen already in Lu 18:8; Ac 12:7; 22:18. Festus is clearly within his rights again since his stay in Caesarea had been so brief. He did go down in "eight or ten days" (verse 6). Luke did not consider the matter important enough to be precise.

25:5 {Them therefore which are of power among you} (\hoi oun en humin dunatoi\). "The mighty ones among you," "the men of power" (\dunatoi\), and authority, "the first men," the Sanhedrin, in other words. Note change here by Luke from indirect discourse in verse 4, to direct in verse 5 (\ph^sin\, says he). {Go down with me} (\sunkatabantes\). Double compound (\sun, kata\), second aorist active participle of \sunkatabain\). It was a fair proposal. {If there is anything amiss in the man} (\ei ti estin en t^i andri atopon\). Condition of the first class, assuming that there is (to be courteous to them), but not committing himself on the merits of the case. \Atopon\ is an old word, specially common in Plato, meaning "out of place." In N.T. only here and Lu 23:41 which see; Ac 28:6; 2Th 3:2. Note present tense active voice of \kat^goreit^san\ (imperative) of \kat^gore\, repeat their accusations.

25:6 {On the morrow} (\t^i epaurion\). Locative case of the article with \h^merfi\ understood (\epaurion\, adverb, tomorrow). Festus lost no time for the chief men had come down with him. {Sat on the judgment seat} (\kathisas epi tou b^matos\). A legal formality to give weight to the decision. Ingressive aorist active participle. For this use of \b^ma\ for judgment seat see on ^Mt. 27:19; Joh 19:13; Acts 12:21; 18:12; 25:10,17. Same phrase repeated in 25:17. {To be brought} (\achth^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \ag^ after \ekeleusen\ (commanded). Same words repeated in 25:17 by Festus.

25:7 {When he was come} (\paragenomenou autou\). Genitive absolute of common verb \paraginomai\ (cf. 24:24). {Which had come down} (\hoi katabeb^kotes\). Perfect active participle of \katabain^\. They had come down on purpose at the invitation of Festus (verse 5), and were now ready. {Stood round about him} (\periest^san auton\). Second aorist (ingressive) active (intransitive) of \periist^mi\, old verb, "Took their stand around him," "_periculum intentantes_" (Bengel). Cf. Lu 23:10 about Christ. They have no lawyer this time, but they mass their forces so as to impress Festus. {Bringing against him} (\katapherontes\). Bearing down on. See on ^20:9; 26:10, only N.T. examples of this ancient verb. {Many and grievous charges} (\polla kai barea aiti^mata\). This word \aiti^ma\ for old form \aitiama\ is found in one papyrus (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_) in sense of "blame." But the charges were no "heavier" than those made by Tertullus (24:5-8). Paul's reply proves this and they were also probably on court record (Furneaux). See this adjective \barus\ (heavy) used with \lukoi\ (wolves) in 20:29. {Which they could not prove} (\ha ouk ischuon apodeixai\). Imperfect active of \ischu^\. to have strength or power as in 19:16,20. Repetition and reiteration and vehemence took the place of proof (\apodeixai\, first aorist active infinitive of \apodeiknumi\, to show forth, old verb, in N.T. only here, Ac 2:22 which see and 1Co 4:9).

25:8 {While Paul said in his defence} (\tou Paulou apologoumenou\). Genitive absolute again, present middle participle of \apologeomai\, old verb to make defence as in 19:33; 24:10; 26:1,2. The recitative \hoti\ of the Greek before a direct quotation is not reproduced in English. {Have I sinned at all} (\ti h^marton\). Constative aorist active indicative of \hamartan^\. to miss, to sin. The \ti\ is cognate accusative (or adverbial accusative). Either makes sense. Paul sums up the charges under the three items of law of the Jews, the temple, the Roman state (Caesar). This last was the one that would interest Festus and, if proved, would render Paul guilty of treason (\majestas\). Nero was Emperor A.D. 54-68, the last of the emperors with any hereditary claim to the name "Caesar." Soon it became merely a title like Kaiser and Czar (modern derivatives). In Acts only "Caesar" and "Augustus" are employed for the Emperor, not "King" (\Basileus\) as from the time of Domitian. Paul's denial is complete and no proof had been presented. Luke was apparently present at the trial.

25:9 {Desiring to gain favour with the Jews} (\thel“n tois Ioudaiois charin katathesthai). Precisely the expression used of Felix by Luke in 24:27 which see. Festus, like Felix, falls a victim to fear of the Jews. {Before me} (\ep' emou). Same use of \epi with the genitive as in 23:30; 24:19,21. Festus, seeing that it was unjust to condemn Paul and yet disadvantageous to absolve him (Blass), now makes the very proposal to Paul that the rulers had made to him in Jerusalem (verse 3). He added the words "\ep' emou" (before me) as if to insure Paul of justice. If Festus was unwilling to give Paul justice in Caesarea where his regular court held forth, what assurance was there that Festus would give it to him at Jerusalem in the atmosphere of intense hostility to Paul? Only two years ago the mob, the Sanhedrin, the forty conspirators had tried to take his life in Jerusalem. Festus had no more courage to do right than Felix, however plausible his language might sound. Festus also, while wanting Paul to think that he would in Jerusalem "be judged of these things before me," in reality probably intended to turn Paul over to the Sanhedrin in order to please the Jews, probably with Festus present also to see that Paul received justice (\me presente). Festus possibly was surprised to find that the charges were chiefly against Jewish law, though one was against Caesar. It was not a mere change of venue that Paul sensed, but the utter unwillingness of Festus to do his duty by him and his willingness to connive at Jewish vengeance on Paul. Paul had faced the mob and the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem, two years of trickery at the hands of Felix in Caesarea, and now he is confronted by the bland chicanery of Festus. It is too much, the last straw.

25:10 {I am standing before Caesar's judgment-seat} (\Hest“s epi tou b^matos Kaisaros eimi). Periphrastic present perfect indicative (\hest“s eimi), second perfect participle \hest“s of \hist^mi (intransitive). Paul means to say that he is a Roman citizen before a Roman tribunal. Festus was the representative of Caesar and had no right to hand him over to a Jewish tribunal. Festus recognized this by saying to Paul "wilt thou" (\theleis). {Where I ought to be judged} (\hou me dei krinesthai). Rather, "Where I must be judged," for \dei expresses necessity (it is necessary). Paul exposes the conduct of Festus with merciless precision. {As thou also very well knowest} (\h“s kai su kallion epigin“skeis”). "As thou also dost understand (hast additional knowledge, \epigin“skeis”) better" (than thou art willing to admit). That this is Paul's meaning by the use of the comparative \kallion\ (positive \kal“s”) is made plain by the confession of Festus to Agrippa in verse 18. Paul says that Festus knows that he has done no wrong to the Jews at all (\ouden ^dik^ka) and yet he is trying to turn him over to the wrath of the Jews in Jerusalem.

25:11 {If I am a wrong-doer} (\ei men oun adik“\). Condition of the first class with \ei\ and the present active indicative of \adike“\ (\a\ privative and \dik^): "If I am in the habit of doing injustice," assuming it to be true for the sake of argument. {And have committed anything worthy of death} (\kai axion thanatou pepracha\). Same condition with the difference in tense (\pepracha\, perfect active indicative) of a single case instead of a general habit. Assuming either or both Paul draws his conclusion. {I refuse not to die} (\ou paraitoumai to apothanein\). Old verb to ask alongside, to beg from, to deprecate, to refuse, to decline. See on ṽLu 14:18f. Josephus (*Life*_, 29) has \thanein ou paraitoumai\. Here the articular second aorist active infinitive is in the accusative case the object of \paraitoumai\: "I do not beg off dying from myself." {But if none of these things is} (\ei de ouden estin\). \De\ here is contrasted with \men\ just before. No word for "true" in the Greek. \Estin\ ("is") in the Greek here means "exists." Same condition (first class, assumed as true). {Whereof these accuse me} (\h“n houtoi kat^gorousin mou”). Genitive of relative \hon\ by attraction from \ha\ (accusative with \kat^gorousin\) to case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout“n\ ("of these things"). \Mou\ is genitive of person after \kat^gorousin\. {No man can give me up to them} (\oudeis me dunatai autois charisasthai\). "Can" legally. Paul is a Roman citizen and not even Festus can make a free gift (\charisasthai\) of Paul to the Sanhedrin. {I appeal unto Caesar} (\Kaisara epikaloumai\). Technical phrase like Latin _Caesarem appello_. Originally the Roman law allowed an appeal from the magistrate to the people (_provocatio ad populum_), but the emperor represented the people and so the appeal to Caesar was the right of every Roman citizen. Paul had crossed the Rubicon on this point and so took his case out of the hands of dilatory provincial justice (really injustice). Roman citizens could make this appeal in capital offences. There would be expense connected with it, but better that with some hope than delay and certain death in Jerusalem. Festus was no better than Felix in his vacillation and desire to curry favour with the Jews at Paul's expense. No doubt Paul's long desire to see Rome (19:21; Ro 15:22-28) and the promise of Jesus that he would see Rome (Ac 23:11) played some part in Paul's decision. But he made it reluctantly for he says in Rome (Ac 28:19): "I was constrained to appeal." But acquittal at the hands of Festus with the hope of going to Rome as a free man had vanished.

25:12 {When he had conferred with the council} (\sunlal^ˆˆsas meta tou sumbouliou). The word \sumboulion in the N.T. usually means "counsel" as in Mt 12:14, but here alone as an assembly of counsellors or council. But the papyri (Milligan and Moulton's _Vocabulary_) furnish a number of instances of this sense of the word as "council." Here it apparently means the chief officers and personal retinue of the procurator, his assessors (\assessores consilarii). These local advisers were a necessity. Some discretion was allowed the governor about granting the appeal. If the prisoner were a well-known robber or pirate, it could be refused. {Thou hast appealed unto Caesar} (\Kaisara epikekl^ˆsai). The same technical word, but the perfect tense of the indicative. {Unto Caesar thou shalt go} (\epi Kaisara poreus^ˆi). Perhaps the volitive future (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 874). Bengel thinks that Festus sought to frighten Paul with these words. Knowling suggests that "they may have been uttered, if not with a sneer, yet with the implication 'thou little knowest what an appeal to Caesar means.'" But embarrassment will come to Festus. He has refused to acquit this prisoner. Hence he must formulate charges against him to go before Caesar.

25:13 {When certain days were passed} (\H^ˆmer^ˆˆn diagenomenon). Genitive absolute of \diaginomai, to come between, "days intervening." {Agrippa the King} (\Agrippas ho basileus). Agrippa II son of Agrippa I of Ac 12:20-23. On the death of Herod King of Chalcis A.D. 48, Claudius A.D. 50 gave this Herod Agrippa II the throne of Chalcis so that Luke is correct in calling him king, though he is not king of Judea. But he was also given by Claudius the government of the temple and the right of appointing the high priest. Later he was given also the tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias. He was the last Jewish king in Palestine, though not king of Judea. He angered the Jews by building his palace so as to overlook the temple and by frequent changes in the high priesthood. He made his capital at Caesarea Philippi which he called Neronias in honour of Nero. Titus visited it after the fall of Jerusalem. {Bernice} (\Bernik^). He was her brother and yet she lived with him in shameful intimacy in spite of her marriage to her uncle Herod King of Chalcis and to Polemon King of Cilicia whom she left. Schuerer calls her both a Jewish bigot and a wanton. She afterwards became the mistress of Titus. {Arrived at Caesarea} (\kat^nt^san eis Kaisarian^). Came down (first aorist active of \katanta^) to Caesarea from Jerusalem. {And saluted Festus} (\aspasamenoi ton Ph^ston^). The Textus Receptus has \aspasomenoi^ the future participle, but the correct text is the aorist middle participle \aspasamenoi^ which cannot possibly mean subsequent action as given in the Canterbury Revision "and saluted." It can only mean contemporaneous (simultaneous) action "saluting" or antecedent action like the margin "having saluted." But antecedent action is not possible here, so that simultaneous action is the only alternative. It is to be noted that the salutation synchronized with the arrival in Caesarea (note \kata^\, down, the effective aorist tense), not with the departure from Jerusalem, nor with the whole journey. Rightly understood the aorist participle here gives no trouble at all (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 861-3).

25:14 {Tarried} (\diatribon^). Imperfect active of \diatrib^, common verb for spending time (Ac 12:19, etc.). {Many days} (\pleious h^meras^). More days (than a few). Accusative case for extent of time. {Laid Paul's case} (\anetheto ta kata ton Paulon^). Second aorist middle indicative of \anatith^mi^, old verb to set before, to place up, as if for consultation in conference. Only twice in N.T. here and Ga 2:2. The motive of Festus is not given, though it was natural enough in view of the quandary of Festus about Paul (the things about Paul) and Agrippa's interest in and responsibility for Jewish worship in the temple in Jerusalem. It is quite possible that Festus had a bit of \ennui^ over the visit of these Jewish dignitaries as "more days" went by. Hence the tone of Festus about Paul in this proposal for the entertainment of Agrippa and Bernice is certainly one of superficial and supremely supercilious indifference. {Left a prisoner} (\katalelimmenos desmios^). Perfect passive participle of \kataleip^, to leave behind. Paul is one of Felix's left overs (left behind), a sort of "junk" left on his hands. This cowardly Roman procurator thus pictures the greatest of living men and the greatest preacher of all time to this profligate pair (brother and sister) of sinners. Undoubtedly today in certain circles Christ and his preachers are held up to like contempt.

25:15 {Informed} (\enephanisan\). Same word as in 23:15,22; 25:2 which see. {Asking for sentence against him} (\aitoumenoi kat' autou katadik^n\). Only N.T. example of this old word (penalty, fine, condemnation) from \kata\ and \dik^ (\i>justice against).

25:16 {It is not the custom of the Romans} (\hoti ouk estin ethos R^maiois\). If a direct quotation, \hoti\ is recitative as in Authorized Version. Canterbury Revision takes it as indirect discourse after \apekrith^n\ (I answered), itself in a relative clause (\pros hous\) with the present tense (\estin\, is) preserved as is usual. There is a touch of disdain (Furneaux) in the tone of Festus. He may refer to a demand of the Jews before they asked that Paul be brought to Jerusalem (25:3). At any rate there is a tone of scorn towards the Jews. {Before that the accused have} (\prin ^ ho kat^goroumenos echoi\). This use of the optative in this temporal clause with \prin ^\ instead of the subjunctive \an ech^i\ is in conformity with literary Greek and occurs only in Luke's writings in the N.T. (Robertson, Grammar, p. 970). This sequence of modes is a mark of the literary style occasionally seen in Luke. It is interesting here to note the succession of dependent clauses in verses 14-16. {The accusers face to face} (\kata pros^pon tous kat^gorous\). Same word \kat^goros\ as in 23:30,35; 25:18. This all sounds fair enough. {And have had opportunity to make his defence concerning the matter laid against him} (\topon te apologias laboi peri tou egkl^matos\). Literally, "And should receive (\laboi\ optative for same reason as \echoi\ above, second aorist active of \lamban^") opportunity for defence (objective genitive) concerning the charge" (\egkl^matos\ in N.T. only here and 23:19 which see).

25:17 {When they were come together here} (\sunelthont^enthade\). Genitive absolute of second aorist active participle of \sunerchomai\, but without \aut^n\ (they), merely understood. {Delay} (\anabol^n\). Old word from \anaball^, only here in N.T.

25:18 {Brought} (\epheron\). Imperfect active of \pher^, referring to their repeated charges. {Of such evil things as I supposed} (\h^n eg^ hupenoon pon^r^n\). Incorporation of the antecedent \pon^r“n\ into the relative clause and change of the case of the relative from the accusative \ha\ object of \hupenoooun\ to the genitive like \pon^r“n\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 719). Note the imperfect active \hupenoooun\ of \huponoe“\ to emphasize Festus's state of mind about Paul before the trial. This old verb only three times in the N.T. (here, Ac 13:25 which see; 27:27).

25:19 {But had} (\de eichon\). Descriptive imperfect active of \ech“\ and \de\ of contrast (but). {Concerning their own religion} (\peri t^s idias deisidaimonias\). See on ^17:22 for discussion of this word. Festus would hardly mean "superstition," whatever he really thought, because Agrippa was a Jew. {And of one Jesus} (\kai peri tinos I^sou\). This is the climax of supercilious scorn toward both Paul and "one Jesus." {Who was dead} (\tethn^kotos\). Perfect active participle of \thn^sk“\ agreeing with \I^sou\ (genitive). As being dead. {Whom Paul affirmed to be alive} (\hon ephasken ho Paulos z^in\). Imperfect active of \phask“\, old form of \ph^mi\ to say, in the N.T. only here and Ac 24:9; Ro 1:22. Infinitive \z^in\ in indirect discourse with \hon\ (whom) the accusative of general reference. With all his top-loftical airs Festus has here correctly stated the central point of Paul's preaching about Jesus as no longer dead, but living.

25:20 {Being perplexed} (\aporoumenos\). Present middle participle of the common verb \apore“\ (\a\ privative and \poros\ way), to be in doubt which way to turn, already in Mr 6:20 which see and Lu 24:4. The Textus Receptus has \eis\ after here, but critical text has only the accusative which this verb allows (Mr 6:20) as in Thucydides and Plato. {How to inquire concerning these things} (\t^n peri tout“n z^t^sin\). Literally, "as to the inquiry concerning these things." This is not the reason given by Luke in verse 9 (wanting to curry favour with the Jews), but doubtless this motive also actuated Festus as both could be true. {Whether he would go to Jerusalem} (\ei bouloito poreuesthai eis Ierosoluma\). Optative in indirect question after \elegon\ (asked or said) imperfect active, though the present indicative could have been retained with change of person: "Dost thou wish, etc.," (\ei boul^i\, etc.). See Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1031, 1044. This is the question put to Paul in verse 9 though \theleis\ is there used.

25:21 {When Paul had appealed} (\tou Paulou epikalesamenou\).

Genitive absolute with first aorist middle participle of \epikaleomai\, the technical word for appeal (verses 11,12). The first aorist passive infinitive \t^hr^hth^hnai\ (to be kept) is the object of the participle. {For the decision of the emperor} (\eis tⁿ tou Sebastou diagn^hsin\). \Diagn^hsin\ (cf. diagn^hsomai 24:22, I will determine) is the regular word for a legal examination (\cognitio\), thorough sifting (\dia\), here only in N.T. Instead of "the Emperor" it should be "the Augustus," as \Sebastos\ is simply the Greek translation of _Augustus_, the adjective (Revered, Reverent) assumed by Octavius B.C. 27 as the \agnomen\ that summed up all his various offices instead of _Rex_ so offensive to the Romans having led to the death of Julius Caesar. The successors of Octavius assumed _Augustus_ as a title. The Greek term \Sebastos\ has the notion of worship (cf. sebasma in Acts 17:25). In the N.T. only here, verse 25; 27:1 (of the legion). It was more imposing than "Caesar" which was originally a family name (always official in the N.T.) and it fell in with the tendency toward emperor-worship which later played such a large part in Roman life and which Christians opposed so bitterly. China is having a revival of this idea in the insistence on bowing three times to the picture of Sun-Yat-Sen. {Till I should send him to Caesar} (\he^s anapemp^hs auton pros Kaisara\). Here \anapemp^hs\ can be either future indicative or first aorist subjunctive (identical in first person singular), aorist subjunctive the usual construction with \he^s for future time (Robertson, Grammar, p. 876). Literally, "send up" (\ana\ to a superior (the emperor). Common in this sense in the papyri and _Koin_, writers. Here "Caesar" is used as the title of Nero instead of "Augustus" as \Kurios\ (Lord) occurs in verse 26.

25:22 {I also could wish} (\eboulomⁿ kai autos\). The imperfect for courtesy, rather than the blunt \boulomai\, I wish, I want. Literally, "I myself also was wishing" (while you were talking), a compliment to the interesting story told by Festus. The use of \an\ with the imperfect would really mean that he does not wish (a conclusion of the second class condition, determined as unfulfilled). \An\ with the optative would show only a languid desire. The imperfect is keen enough and yet polite enough to leave the decision with Festus if inconvenient for any reason (Robertson, Grammar, pp. 885-7). Agrippa may have heard much about Christianity.

25:23 {When Agrippa was come and Bernice} (\elthontos tou Agrippa kai t^hs Bernik^hs\). Genitive absolute, the participle agreeing in number and gender (masculine singular, \elthontos\) with \Agrippa\, \Bernik^hs\ being added as an afterthought. {With great pomp} (\meta poll^hs phantasias\). \Phantasia\ is a _Koin, _ word (Polybius, Diodorus, etc.) from the old verb \phantaz“\ (Heb 12:21) and it from \phain“\, common verb to show, to make an appearance. This is the only N.T. example of \phantasia\, though the kindred common word \phantasma\ (appearance) occurs twice in the sense of apparition or spectre (Mt 14:26; Mr 6:49). Herodotus (VII. 10) used the verb \phantaz“\ for a showy parade. Festus decided to gratify the wish of Agrippa by making the "hearing" of Paul the prisoner (verse 22) an occasion for paying a compliment to Agrippa (Rackham) by a public gathering of the notables in Caesarea. Festus just assumed that Paul would fall in with this plan for a grand entertainment though he did not have to do it. {Into the place of hearing} (\eis to akroat^hion\). From \akroamai\ (to be a hearer) and, like the Latin _auditorium_, in Roman law means the place set aside for hearing, and deciding cases. Here only in the N.T. Late word, several times in Plutarch and other _Koin, _ writers. The hearing was "semi-official" (Page) as is seen in verse 26. {With the chief captains} (\sun te chiliarchois\). \Chiliarchs\, each a leader of a thousand. There were five cohorts of soldiers stationed in Caesarea. {And the principal men of the city} (\kai andrasin tois kat' exoch^hn\). The use of \kat' exoch^hn\, like our French phrase _par excellence_, occurs here only in the N.T., and not in the ancient Greek, but it is found in inscriptions of the first century A.D. (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). \Exoch^h\ in medical writers is any protuberance or swelling. Cf. our phrase "outstanding men." {At the command of Festus} (\keleusantos tou Ph^hstou\). Genitive absolute again, "Festus having commanded."

25:24 {Which are here present with us} (\hoi sunparontes h^hmin\). Present articular participle of \sunpareimi\ (only here in N.T.) with associative instrumental case \h^hmin\. {Made suit to me} (\enetuchon moi\). Second aorist active indicative of \entugchan“\, old verb to fall in with a person, to go to meet for consultation or supplication as here. Common in old Greek and _Koin, _. Cf. Ro 8:27,34. See \enteuxis\ (petition) 1Ti 2:1. Papyri give many examples of the technical sense of \enteuxis\ as petition (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 121). Some MSS. have plural here \enetuchon\ rather than the singular \enetuchen\.

{Crying} (\bo“ntes\). Yelling and demanding with loud voices.

{That he ought not to live any longer} (\m^ dein auton z^in m^keti\). Indirect command (demand) with the infinitive \dein\ for \dei\ (it is necessary). The double negative (\m^--m^keti\) with \z^in\ intensifies the demand.

25:25 {But I found} (\eg“ de katelabom^n\). Second aorist middle of \katalamban“\, to lay hold of, to grasp, to comprehend as in 4:13; 10:34. {That he had committed nothing worthy of death} (\m^den axion auton thanatou peprachenai\). Perfect active infinitive of \prass“\ in indirect assertion with negative \m^ and accusative \auton\ of general reference, the usual idiom. Verse 25 repeats the statement in verse 21, perhaps for the benefit of the assembled dignitaries.

25:26 {No certain thing} (\asphales ti--ou\). Nothing definite or reliable (\a\ privative, \sphall“\, to trip). All the charges of the Sanhedrin slipped away or were tripped up by Paul. Festus confesses that he had nothing left and thereby convicts himself of gross insincerity in his proposal to Paul in verse 9 about going up to Jerusalem. By his own statement he should have set Paul free. The various details here bear the marks of the eyewitness. Luke was surely present and witnessed this grand spectacle with Paul as chief performer. {Unto my lord} (\t“i kuri“i\). Augustus (Octavius) and Tiberius refused the title of \kurios\ (lord) as too much like _rex_ (king) and like master and slave, but the servility of the subjects gave it to the other emperors who accepted it (Nero among them). Antoninus Pius put it on his coins. Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 105) gives an ostrakon dated Aug. 4, A.D. 63 with the words "in the year nine of Nero the lord" (\enatou Ner“nos tou kuriou\). Deissmann (op. cit., pp. 349ff.) runs a most interesting parallel "between the cult of Christ and the cult of Caesar in the application of the term \kurios\, lord" in ostraca, papyri, inscriptions. Beyond a doubt Paul has all this fully in mind when he says in 1Co 12:3 that "no one is able to say \Kurios I^sous\ except in the Holy Spirit" (cf. also Php 2:11). The Christians claimed this word for Christ and it became the test in the Roman persecutions as when Polycarp steadily refused to say " Lord Caesar" and insisted on saying "Lord Jesus" when it meant his certain death. {Before you} (\eph' hum“n\). The whole company. In no sense a new trial, but an examination in the presence of these prominent men to secure data and to furnish entertainment and pleasure to Agrippa (verse 22). {Especially before thee} (\malista epi sou). Out of courtesy. It was the main reason as verse 22 shows. Agrippa was a Jew and Festus was glad of the chance to see what he thought of Paul's case. {After examination had} (\t^s anakrise^s genomen^s). Genitive absolute, "the examination having taken place." \Anakrisis from \anakrin^s (cf. 12:19; 24:8; 28:18) is a legal term for preliminary examination. Only here in the N.T. Inscriptions and papyri give it as examination of slaves or other property. {That I may have somewhat to write} (\hop^s sch^ ti graps^s). Ingressive aorist subjunctive \sch^s (may get) with \hop^s (final particle like \hina). \Ti graps^s in indirect question after \sch^s is either future indicative or aorist subjunctive (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1045). Festus makes it plain that this is not a "trial," but an examination for his convenience to help him out of a predicament.

25:27 {Unreasonable} (\alogon). Old word from \a privative and \logos (reason, speech). "Without reason" as of animals (Jude 1:10; 2Pe 2:12), "contrary to reason" here. These the only N.T. instances and in harmony with ancient usage. {In sending} (\pempon^ta). Note accusative case with the infinitive \s^mfna^i though \moi (dative) just before. Cf. same variation in 15:22f.; 22:17. {Signify} (\s^mfna^i). First aorist active infinitive (not \s^m^nai\, the old form) of \s^main^s, to give a sign (\s^meion^s). {The charges} (\tas aitias). This naive confession of Festus reveals how unjust has been his whole treatment of Paul. He had to send along with the appeal of Paul _litterae dimissoriae_ (\apostoli^s) which would give a statement of the case (Page).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

26:1 {Thou art permitted} (\epitrepetai soi\). Literally, It is permitted thee. As if Agrippa were master of ceremonies instead of Festus. Agrippa as a king and guest presides at the grand display while Festus has simply introduced Paul. {For thyself} (\huper seautou\). Some MSS. have \peri\ (concerning). Paul is allowed to speak in his own behalf. No charges are made against him. In fact, Festus has admitted that he has no real proof of any charges. {Stretched forth his hand} (\ekteinas t^n cheira\). Dramatic oratorical gesture (not for silence as in 12:17; 13:16) with the chain still upon it (verse 29) linking him to the guard. First aorist active participle of \ektein\, to stretch out. {Made his defence} (\apelogeito\). Inchoative imperfect of \apologeomai\ (middle), "began to make his defence." This is the fullest of all Paul's defences. He has no word of censure of his enemies or of resentment, but seizes the opportunity to preach Christ to such a distinguished company which he does with "singular dignity" (Furneaux). He is now bearing the name of Christ "before kings" (Ac 9:15). In general Paul follows the line of argument of the speech on the stairs (chapter Ac 22).

26:2 {I think myself happy} (\h^g^mai emauton makarion\). See on ^Mt 5:3 for \makarios\. Blass notes that Paul, like Tertullus, begins with _captatio benevolentiae_, but _absque adulatione_. He says only what he can truthfully speak. For \h^g^mai\ see Php 3:7; 1Ti 6:1 (perfect middle indicative of \h^geomai), I have considered. {That I am to make my defence} (\mell^"n apologeisthai\). Literally, "being about to make my defence." {Whereof I am accused} (\h^"n egkaloumai\). Genitive with \egkaloumai\ as in 19:40 or by attraction from accusative of relative (\ha\) to case of antecedent (\pant^"n\).

26:3 {Especially because thou art expert} (\malista gn^"st^"n onta se\). Or like the margin, "because thou art especially expert," according as \malista\ is construed. \Gn^"st^"n\ is from \gin^"sk^"\ and means a knower, expert, connoisseur. Plutarch uses it and Deissmann (Light, etc., p. 367) restores it in a papyrus. Agrippa had the care of the temple, the appointment of the high priest, and the care of the sacred vestments. But the accusative \onta se\ gives trouble here coming so soon after \sou\ (genitive with epi). Some MSS. insert \epistamenos\ or \eid“s\ (knowing) but neither is genuine. Page takes it as "governed by the sense of thinking or considering." Knowling considers it an anacoluthon. Buttmann held it to be an accusative absolute after the old Greek idiom. \Tuchon\ is such an instance though used as an adverb (1Co 16:6). It is possible that one exists in Eph 1:18. See other examples discussed in Robertson's Grammar, pp. 490f. {Customs and questions} (\eth“n te kai z^t^mat“n\). Both _consuetudinum in practicis_ and _quaestionum in theoreticis_ (Bengel). Agrippa was qualified to give Paul an understanding and a sympathetic hearing. Paul understands perfectly the grand-stand play of the whole performance, but he refused to be silent and chose to use this opportunity, slim as it seemed, to get a fresh hearing for his own case and to present the claims of Christ to this influential man. His address is a masterpiece of noble apologetic. {Patiently} (\makrothum“s\). Adverb from \makrothumos\. Only here in the N.T., though \makrothumia\ occurs several times. Vulgate has _longanimiter_. Long spirit, endurance, opposite of impatience. So Paul takes his time.

26:4 {My manner of life} (\t^h men oun bi“sin mou\). With \men oun\ Paul passes from the _captatio benevolentiae_ (verses 1,2) "to the _narratio_ or statement of his case" (Page). \Bi“sis\ is from \bio“\ (1Pe 4:2) and that from \bios\ (course of life). This is the only instance of \bi“sis\ yet found except the Prologue (10) of Ecclesiasticus and an inscription given in Ramsay's Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia, Vol II, p. 650. {Know} (isfsi). Literary form instead of the vernacular _Koin_, \oidasin\. Paul's early life in Tarsus and Jerusalem was an open book to all Jews.

26:5 {Having knowledge of me from the first} (\progin“skontes me an“then\). Literally, "knowing me beforehand" (both pro\ and an“then), from the beginning of Paul's public education in Jerusalem (Knowling). Cf. 2Pe 3:17. {If they be willing to testify} (\ean thel“sin marturein\). Condition of third class (\ean\ and subjunctive). A neat turning of the tables on the distinguished audience about Paul's Jerusalem reputation before his conversion. {After the straitest sect} (\t^h akribestat^h hairesin\). This is a true superlative (not elative) and one of the three (also hagi“tatos, Jude 1:20, timi“tatos Re 18:12; 21:11) superlatives in \-tatos\ in the N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 279f., 670), though common enough in the LXX and the papyri. \Hairesin\ (choosing) is properly used here with Pharisees (Josephus, _Life_, 38). {Religion} (\thr^skeias\). From \thr^skeu^ and this from \thr^skos\ (Jas 1:26), old word for religious worship or discipline, common in the papyri and inscriptions (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_) for reverent worship, not mere external ritual. In N.T. only here, Jas 1:26f.; Col 2:18. {I lived a Pharisee} (\ez^sa Pharisaios\). Emphatic position. Paul knew the rules of the Pharisees and played the game to the full (Ga 1:14; Php 3:5f.). The Talmud makes it plain what the life of a Pharisee was. Paul had become one of the leaders and stars of hope for his sect.

26:6 {And now} (\kai nun\). Sharp comparison between his youth and the present. {To be judged for the hope} (\ep' elpidi--krinomenos\). The hope of the resurrection and of the promised Messiah (13:32). Page calls verses 6-8 a parenthesis in the course of Paul's argument by which he shows that his life in Christ is a real development of the best in Pharisaism. He does resume his narrative in verse 9, but verses 6-8 are the core of his defence already presented in Ga 3; Ro 9-11 where he proves that the children of faith are the real seed of Abraham.

26:7 {Our twelve tribes} (\to d^dekaphulon h^m^"n\). A word found only here in N.T. and in Christian and Jewish writings, though \d^dekam^non\ (twelve month) is common in the papyri and \dekaphulos\ (ten tribes) in Herodotus. Paul's use of this word for the Jewish people, like Jas 1:1 (\tais d^deka phulais\, the twelve tribes), shows that Paul had no knowledge of any "lost ten tribes." There is a certain national pride and sense of unity in spite of the dispersion (Page). {Earnestly} (\en ekteneifi\). A late word from \ektein^, to stretch out, only here in N.T., but in papyri and inscriptions. Page refers to Simeon and Anna (Lu 2:25-28) as instances of Jews looking for the coming of the Messiah. Note the accusative of \nukta kai h^meran\ as in 20:31. {Hope to attain} (\elpizei katant^sai\). This Messianic hope had been the red thread running through Jewish history. Today, alas, it is a sadly worn thread for Jews who refuse to see the Messiah in Jesus. {I am accused by Jews} (\egkaloumai hupo Ioudai^"n\). The very word used in 23:28 (\enekaloun\ which see, and by Jews of all people in the world whose mainspring was this very "hope." It is a tremendously effective turn.

26:8 {Incredible with you} (\apiston par' humin\). This old word \apiston\ (\a\ privative and \pistos\) means either unfaithful (Lu 12:46), unbelieving (Joh 20:27), or unbelievable as here). Paul turns suddenly from Agrippa to the audience (\par' humin\, plural), most of whom were probably Gentiles and scouted the doctrine of the resurrection as at Athens (17:32). {If God doth raise the dead} (\ei ho theos nekrous egeirei\). Condition of the first class assuming that God does raise dead people. Only God can do it. This rhetorical question needs no answer, though the narrative resumed in verse 9 does it in a way.

26:9 {I verily thought with myself} (\eg“ men oun edoxa emaut“i\). Personal construction instead of the impersonal, a touch of the literary style. Paul's "egoism" is deceived as so often happens. {I ought} (\dein\). Infinitive the usual construction with \doke“. Necessity and a sense of duty drove Paul on even in this great sin (see on 23:1), a common failing with persecutors. {Contrary} (\enantia\). Old word (adjective), over against, opposite (Ac 27:4), then hostile to as here.

26:10 {I both shut up many} (\pollous te katekleisa\). Effective aorist active of \kataklei“, old word to shut down like a trap door, in N.T. only here and Lu 3:20. Double use of \te\ (both--and). {Having received authority from the chief priests} (\t^n para t“n archiere“n exousian lab“n\). "The authority," he says. Paul was the official persecutor of the saints under the direction of the Sanhedrin. He mentions "chief priests" (Sadducees), though a Pharisee himself. Both parties were co-operating against the saints. {And when they were put to death} (\anairoumen“n te aut“n\). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of \anaire“. {I gave my vote against them} (\kat^negka ps^phon\). "I cast down my pebble" (a black one). The ancient Greeks used white pebbles for acquittal (Re 2:17), black ones for condemnation as here (the only two uses of the word in the N.T.). Paul's phrase (not found elsewhere) is more vivid than the usual \kataps^phiz“\ for voting. They literally cast the pebbles into the urn. Cf. \sumps^phiz“\ in Ac 19:19, \sugkatapsephizo\ in Ac 1:26. If Paul's language is taken literally here, he was a member of the Sanhedrin and so married when he led the persecution. That is quite possible, though he was not married when he wrote 1Co 7:7f., but a widower. It is possible to take the language figuratively for approval, but not so natural.

26:11 {Punishing} (\tim“r“n). Old word \tim“re“ originally to render help, to succor (\tim“ros\, from \tim^ and \ouros), then to avenge (for honour). In N.T. only here and 22:5. {I strove to make them blaspheme} (\^nagkazon blasph^mein). Conative imperfect active of \anagkaz“, old verb from \anagk^ (necessity, compulsion). The tense, like the imperfect in Mt 3:14; Lu 1:59, leaves room to hope that Paul was not successful in this effort, for he had already said that he brought many "unto death" (22:4). {I persecuted} (\edi“kon). Imperfect active again, repeated attempts. The old verb \di“k“ was used to run after or chase game and then to chase enemies. The word "persecute" is the Latin _persequor_, to follow through or after. It is a vivid picture that Paul here paints of his success in hunting big game, a grand heresy hunt. {Even unto foreign cities} (\kai eis ex“poleis). We know of Damascus, and Paul evidently planned to go to other cities outside of Palestine and may even have done so before the fateful journey to Damascus.

26:12 {Whereupon} (\en hois). "In which things" (affairs of persecution), "on which errand." Cf. 24:18. Paul made them leave Palestine (11:19) and followed them beyond it (9:2). {With the authority and commission} (\met' exousias kai epitrop^s). Not merely "authority" (\exousia), but express appointment (\epitrop^, old word, but here only in N.T., derived from \epitropos\, steward, and that from \epitrep“\, to turn over to, to commit).

26:13 {At midday} (\h^meras mes^s). Genitive of time and idiomatic use of \mesos, in the middle of the day, more vivid than \mes^mbrian (22:6). {Above the brightness of the sun} (\huper t^n lamprot^ta tou h^liou). Here alone not in Ac 9; 22, though implied in 9:3; 22:6, "indicating the supernatural character of the light" (Knowling). Luke makes no effort to harmonize the exact phrases here with those in the other accounts and Paul here (verse 16) blends together what Jesus said to him directly and the message of Jesus through Ananias (9:15). The word \lamprot^s, old word, is here alone in the N.T. {Shining round about me} (\perilampsan me). First aorist active participle of \perilamp“, common _Koin_ verb, in N.T. only here and Lu 2:9.

26:14 {When we were all fallen} (\pant“n katapesont“n h^m“n). Genitive absolute with second aorist active participle of \katapipt“\). In the Hebrew language (\(t^i Ebraidi dialekt“i\)). Natural addition here, for Paul is speaking in Greek, not Aramaic as in 22:2. {It is hard for thee to kick against the goad} (\(skl^ron soi pros kentra laktizein\)). Genuine here, but not in chapters 9,22. A common proverb as Aeschylus _Ag_. 1624: \Pros kentra m^ laktize\. "It is taken from an ox that being pricked with a goad kicks and receives a severer wound" (Page). Cf. the parables of Jesus (Mt 13:35). Blass observes that Paul's mention of this Greek and Latin proverb is an indication of his culture. Besides he mentions (not invents) it here rather than in chapter 22 because of the culture of this audience. \Kentron\ means either sting as of bees (II Macc. 14:19) and so of death (1Co 15:55) or an iron goad in the ploughman's hand as here (the only two N.T. examples). Note plural here (goads) and \laktizein\ is present active infinitive so that the idea is "to keep on kicking against goads." This old verb means to kick with the heel (adverb lax\, with the heel), but only here in the N.T. There is a papyrus example of kicking (\(laktiz“\)) with the feet against the door.

26:16 {Arise and stand} (\(anast^thi kai st^thi\)). "Emphatic assonance" (Page). Second aorist active imperative of compound verb (\(anist^mi\)) and simplex (\(hist^mi\)). "Stand up and take a stand." {Have I appeared unto thee} (\(“phth^n soi\)). First aorist passive indicative of \hora“\. See on Lu 22:43. {To appoint thee} (\(procheirisasthai se\)). See 3:30; 22:14 for this verb. {Both of the things wherein thou hast seen me} (\(h“n te eides me\)). The reading \me\ (not in all MSS.) makes it the object of \eides\ (didst see) and \h“n\ is genitive of \ha\ (accusative of general reference) attracted to the case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout“n\. Paul is thus a personal eyewitness of the Risen Christ (Lu 1:1; 1Co 4:1; 9:1). {And of the things wherein I will appear unto thee} (\(h“n te ophth^somai soi\)). Here again \h“n\ is genitive of the accusative (general reference) relative \ha\ attracted to the case of the antecedent \tout“n\ or \ekein“n\ as before. But \ophth^somai\ is first future passive of \hora“\ and cannot be treated as active or middle. Page takes it to mean "the visions in which I shall be seen by you," the passive form bringing out the agency of God. See those in Ac 18:9; 23:11; 2Co 12:2. The passive voice, however, like \apekrith^n\ and \ephob^th^n\, did become sometimes transitive in the _Koin_, (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 819).

26:17 {Delivering thee} (\exairoumenos se\). Present middle participle of \exaire“\, old verb and usually so rendered, but the old Greek also uses it for "choose" as also in LXX (Isa 48:10). The papyri give examples of both meanings and either makes good sense here. God was continually rescuing Paul "out of the hands of Jews and Gentiles and Paul was a chosen vessel" (9:15). Modern scholars are also divided.

26:18 {To open} (\anoixai\). First aorist active infinitive of purpose. {That they may turn} (\tou epistrepsai\). Another infinitive of purpose first aorist active (genitive case and articular), epexegetic to \anoixai\ {That they may receive} (\tou labein\). Another genitive articular infinitive of purpose subordinate (epexegetic) to \tou epistrepsai\ {Sanctified by faith in me} (\h^giasmenois pistei t^i eis eme\). Perfect passive participle of \hagiaz“\, instrumental case of \pistei\, article before \eis eme\ ("by faith, that in me"). These important words of Jesus to Paul give his justification to this cultured audience for his response to the command of Jesus. This was the turning point in Paul's career and it was a step forward and upward.

26:19 {Wherefore} (\hothen\). This relative adverb (cf. 14:26; 28:13) gathers up all that Paul has said. {I was not disobedient} (\ouk egenom^h apeith^s\). Litotes again, "I did not become (second aorist middle indicative of \ginomai) disobedient" (\apeith^s\, old word already in Lu 1:17). {Unto the heavenly vision} (\t^i ourani“i optasifi\). A later form of \opsis\, from \optaz“\, in LXX, and in N.T. (Lu 1:22; 24:23; Ac 26:19; 2Co 12:1). Only time that Paul uses it about seeing Christ on the Damascus road, but no reflection on the reality of the event.

26:20 {But declared} (\alla ap^ggellon\). Imperfect active of \apaggell“\, repeatedly. {Throughout all the country of Judea} (\pfsan te t^h ch“ran t^s Ioudaias\). The accusative here in the midst of the datives (\tois en Damask“i, Ierosolumois, tois ethnesin\)) seems strange and Page feels certain that \eis\ should be here even though absent in Aleph A B. But the accusative of extent of space will explain it (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 469). {Doing works worthy of repentance} (\axia t^s metanoias erga prassontas\). Accusative case of present active participle \prassontas\ because of the implied \autous\ with the present infinitive \metanoein\ (repent) and \epistrephein\ (turn), though the dative \prassousin\ could have been used to agree with \ethnesin\ (Gentiles). Cf. Mt 3:8 for similar language used of the Baptist. Paul, the greatest of theologians, was an interesting practical preacher.

26:21 {Assayed to kill me} (\epeir“nto diacheirisasthai\).

Conative imperfect middle of \peira“, the old form of the later _Koin, _ \peiraz“\ so common in the _Koin,_, but in N.T. here only. Some MSS. have it in Ac 9:26; Heb 4:15. The old verb \diacheiriz“, to take in hand, middle to lay hands on, to slay, occurs in N.T. only here and 5:30 which see.

26:22 {Having therefore obtained} (\oun tuch“n\). Second aorist active participle of old verb \tugchan“. {The help that is from God} (\epikourias t“s apo tou theou\). Old word from \epikoure“, to aid, and that from \epikouros\, ally, assister. Only here in N.T. God is Paul's ally. All of the plots of the Jews against Paul had failed so far. {I stand} (\hest“ka\). Second perfect of \hist“mi\, to place, intransitive to stand. Picturesque word (Page) of Paul's stability and fidelity (cf. Php 4:1; Eph 6:13). {Both to small and great} (\mikr“i te kai megal“i\).

Dative singular (rather than instrumental, taking \marturoumenos\ middle, not passive) and use of \te kai\ links the two adjectives together in an inclusive way. These two adjectives in the singular (representative singular rather than plural) can apply to age (young and old) or to rank (Re 11:18) as is specially suitable here with Festus and Agrippa present. In Ac 8:10 (Heb 8:11) the phrase explains \pantes\ (all). {Saying nothing but what} (\ouden ektos leg“n h“n\). "Saying nothing outside of those things which." The ablative relative \h“n\ is attracted into the case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout“n\ and so ablative after \ektos\ (adverbial preposition common in LXX, the papyri. In N.T. here and 1Co 6:18; 15:27; 2Co 12:2f.). Cf. Lu 16:29 about Moses and the prophets.

26:23 {How that the Christ must suffer} (\ei path“tos ho Christos\).

Literally, "if the Messiah is subject to suffering."

\Ei\ can here mean "whether" as in Heb 7:15. This use of a verbal in \-tos\ for capability or possibility occurs in the N.T. alone in \path“tos\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 157). This word occurs in Plutarch in this sense. It is like the Latin patibilis and is from _pasch“_. Here alone in N.T. Paul is speaking from the Jewish point of view. Most rabbis had not rightly understood Isa 53. When the Baptist called Jesus "the Lamb of God" (Joh 1:29) it was a startling idea. It is not then "must suffer" here, but "can suffer." The Cross of Christ was a stumbling-block to the rabbis. {How that he first by the resurrection of the dead} (\ei pr^otos ex anastase^s nekr^on\). Same construction with \ei\ (whether). This point Paul had often discussed with the Jews: "whether he (the Messiah) by a resurrection of dead people." Others had been raised from the dead, but Christ is the first (\pr^otos\) who arose from the dead and no longer dies (Ro 6:19) and proclaims light (\ph^os mellei kataggellein\). Paul is still speaking from the Jewish standpoint: "is about to (going to) proclaim light." See verse 18 for "light" and Lu 2:32. {Both to the people and to the Gentiles} (\t^oi te la^oi kai tois ethnesin\). See verse 17. It was at the word Gentiles (\ethn^o\) that the mob lost control of themselves in the speech from the stairs (22:21f.). So it is here, only not because of that word, but because of the word "resurrection" (\anastasis\).

26:24 {As he thus made his defence} (\tauta autou apologoumenou\). Genitive absolute again with present middle participle. Paul was still speaking when Festus interrupted him in great excitement. {With a loud voice} (\megalⁱ tⁱ ph^onⁱ\). Associative instrumental case showing manner (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 530) and the predicate use of the adjective, "with the voice loud" (elevated). {Thou art mad} (\mainⁱ\). Old verb for raving. See also Joh 10:20; Ac 12:15; 1Co 14:23. The enthusiasm of Paul was too much for Festus and then he had spoken of visions and resurrection from the dead (verse 8). "Thou art going mad" (linear present), Festus means. {Thy much learning doth turn thee to madness} (\ta polla se grammata eis manian peritrepei\). "Is turning thee round." Old verb \peritrep^o\, but only here in N.T. Festus thought that Paul's "much learning" (= "many letters," cf. Joh 7:15 of Jesus) of the Hebrew Scriptures to which he had referred was turning his head to madness (wheels in his head) and he was going mad right before them all. The old word \mania\ (our mania, frenzy, cf. maniac) occurs here only in N.T. Note unusual position of \se\ between \polla\ and \grammata\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 418, 420)

26:25 {But speak forth} (\alla apophtheggomai\). Verb for dignified and elevated discourse, a word from the literary _Koin_, not the vernacular. In N.T. only here and 2:4,14 which see. It occurs three times in Vettius Valens in a "mantic" sense. Paul was not ruffled by the rude and excited interruption of Festus, but speaks with perfect courtesy in his reply "words of truth and soberness." The old word \s^{phrosun}\ (soundness of mind) from \s^{phr}ⁿ\ (and that from \s^s\ and \phrⁿ\) is directly opposed to "madness" (mania\) and in N.T. occurs only here and 1Ti 2:15.

26:26 {For the king knoweth of these things} (\epistatai gar peri toutⁿ ho basileus\). \Epistatai\ (present middle probably Ionic form of \ephist^{mi}\) is a literary word and suits well here (cf. 24:10). {Freely} (\parr^{siazomenos}\). Present middle participle, speaking fully, making a clean breast of it. From \parr^{sia}\ (\pan, rh^{sis}\) (cf. 13:46). {Is hidden from him} (\lanthanein auton\). Escapes his notice. Infinitive in indirect discourse after \peithomai\ (I am persuaded).

26:27 {I know that thou believest} (\oida hoti pisteueis\). Paul had "cornered" Agrippa by this direct challenge. As the Jew in charge of the temple he was bound to confess his faith in the prophets. But Paul had interpreted the prophets about the Messiah in a way that fell in with his claim that Jesus was the Messiah risen from the dead. To say, "Yes" would place himself in Paul's hands. To say "No" would mean that he did not believe the prophets. Agrippa had listened with the keenest interest, but he slipped out of the coils with adroitness and a touch of humour.

26:28 {With but little persuasion thou wouldest fain make me a Christian} (\en oligⁱ me peitheis Christianon poi^{sai}\). The Authorized rendering is impossible: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." \En oligⁱ\ does not mean "almost." That would require \oligou, par' oligon\, or \dei oligou\. It is not clear, however, precisely what \en oligoi\ does mean. It may refer to time (in little time) or a short cut, but that does not suit well \en megalⁱ\ in verse 29. Tyndale and Crammer rendered it "somewhat" (in small measure or degree). There are, alas, many "somewhat" Christians. Most likely the idea is "in (or with) small effort you are trying to persuade (\peitheis\, conative present active indicative) me in order to make me a Christian." This takes the infinitive \poi^{sai}\ to be purpose (Page renders it by "so as") and thus avoids trying to make \poi^{sai}\ like \genesthai\ (become). The aorist is punctiliar action for single act, not "perfect." The tone of Agrippa is ironical, but not unpleasant. He pushes it aside with a shrug of the shoulders. The use of "Christian" is natural here as in the other two instances (11:26; 1Pe 4:16).

26:29 {I would to God} (\euxaim[^]n an t[^]i the[^]i\). Conclusion of fourth-class condition (optative with \an\), undetermined with less likelihood, the so-called potential optative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1021). Polite and courteous wish (first aorist middle optative of \euchomai\). {Whether with little or with much} (\kai en mikr[^]i kai en megal[^]i\). Literally, "both in little and in great," or "both with little and with great pains" or "both in some measure and in great measure." Paul takes kindly the sarcasm of Agrippa. {Such as I am} (\toioutous hopoios kai eg[^]eimi\). Accusative \toioutous\ with the infinitive \genesthai\. Paul uses these two qualitative pronouns instead of repeating the word "Christian." {Except these bonds} (\parektos t[^]n desm[^]n tout[^]n\). Ablative case with \parektos\ (late preposition for the old \parek\). Paul lifts his right manacled hand with exquisite grace and good feeling.

26:30 {Rose up} (\anest[^]\). Second aorist active of \anist[^]mi\ (intransitive), agreeing only with "the king" (\ho basileus\). The entertainment was over.

26:31 {They spake one to another} (\elaloun pros all[^]lous\). Imperfect active, describing the eager conversation of the dignitaries about Paul's wonderful speech. {Nothing worthy of death or bonds} (\ouden thanatou ^ desm[^]n axion\). This is the unanimous conclusion of all these dignitaries (Romans, Jews, Greeks) as it was of Festus before (25:25). But Paul had not won any of them to Christ. The conclusion leaves Festus in a predicament. Why had he not set Paul free before this?

26:32 {This man might have been set at liberty} (\Apoelusthai edunato ho anthr[^]pos houtos\). Conclusion of the second class condition (determined as unfulfilled) without \an\ as in 24:19 because of \edunato\ (verb of possibility, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1014). Note perfect passive infinitive \apolelusthai\ from \apolu[^]\. He certainly "could have been set free." Why was it not done? {If he had not appealed unto Caesar} (\ei m[^]epekekl[^]to Kaisara\). Condition of the second class with the past perfect middle indicative (_op. cit._, p. 1015) of \epikale[^]\ (cf. 25:11f.). But Paul _only_ appealed to Caesar after Festus had tried to shift him back to Jerusalem and had refused to set him free in Caesarea. Festus comes out with no honour in the case. Since Agrippa was a favourite at court perhaps Festus would be willing to write favourably to Caesar.

27:1 {That we should sail} (\tou apoplein h^mas). This genitive articular infinitive with \ekrith^ like the LXX construction translating the Hebrew infinitive construct is awkward in Greek. Several similar examples in Lu 17:1; Ac 10:25; 20:3 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1068). Luke alone uses this old verb in N.T. He uses nine compounds of \ple^, to sail. Note the reappearance of "we" in the narrative. It is possible, of course, that Luke was not with Paul during the series of trials at Caesarea, or at least, not all the time. But it is natural for Luke to use "we" again because he and Aristarchus are travelling with Paul. In Caesarea Paul was the centre of the action all the time whether Luke was present or not. The great detail and minute accuracy of Luke's account of this voyage and shipwreck throw more light upon ancient seafaring than everything else put together. Smith's _Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul_ is still a classic on the subject. Though so accurate in his use of sea terms, yet Luke writes like a landsman, not like a sailor. Besides, the character of Paul is here revealed in a remarkable fashion. {They delivered} (\paredidou). Imperfect active \^mega\ form rather than the old \-mi\ form \paredidosan\ as in 4:33, from \paradid^mi\. Perhaps the imperfect notes the continuance of the handing over. {Certain other prisoners} (\tinias heterous desm^tas). Bound (\desm^tas) like Paul, but not necessarily appellants to Caesar, perhaps some of them condemned criminals to amuse the Roman populace in the gladiatorial shows, most likely pagans though \heterous\ does not have to mean different kind of prisoners from Paul. {Of the Augustan band} (\speir^s Sebast^s). Note Ionic genitive \speir^s\, not \speiras\. See on ^Mt 27:1; Ac 10:1. \Cohortis Augustae\. We do not really know why this cohort is called "Augustan." It may be that it is part of the imperial commissariat (_frumentarii_) since Julius assumes chief authority in the grain ship (verse 11). These legionary centurions when in Rome were called _peregrini_ (foreigners) because their work was chiefly in the provinces. This man Julius may have been one of them.

27:2 {In a ship of Adramyttium} (\ploi^i Hadramunt^ni). A boat belonging to Adramyttium, a city in Mysia in the province of Asia. Probably a small coasting vessel on its way home for the winter stopping at various places (\topous). Julius would take his chances to catch another ship for Rome. The usual way to go to Rome was to go to Alexandria and so to Rome, but no large ship for Alexandria was at hand. {We put to sea} (\an^chth^men). First aorist passive of \anag^, usual word in Luke.

{Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us} (\ontos sun h^min Aristarchou Makedonos Thessalonike^s). Genitive absolute. Ramsay suggests that Luke and Aristarchus accompanied Paul as his slaves since they would not be allowed to go as his friends. But Luke was Paul's physician and may have gained permission on that score.

27:3 {The next day} (\t^i heterfi). Locative case with \h^merfi understood. {We touched} (\kat^chth^men). First aorist passive of \katag^, the usual term for "coming down" from the seas as \anag^ above (and verse 4) is for "going up" to sea. So it looks to sailors. Sidon was 67 miles from Caesarea, the rival of Tyre, with a splendid harbour. The ship stopped here for trade. {Treated Paul kindly} (\philanthr^p^s t^i Paul^i chr^samenos). "Using (\chr^samenos, first aorist middle participle of \chraomai, to use) Paul (instrumental case used with this verb) kindly" (\philanthr^p^s, "philanthropically," adverb from \phil-anthr^pos, love of mankind). He was kindly to Paul throughout the voyage (verse 43; 28:16), taking a personal interest in his welfare. {Refresh himself} (\epimeleias tuchein). Second aorist active infinitive of \tugchan^ (to obtain) with the genitive \epimeleias, old word from \epimel^s, careful, only here in the N.T. Whether it was mere hospitality we do not know. It may have been medical attention required because of Paul's long confinement. This is Paul's first visit to Sidon, but Christians were already in Phoenicia (11:19) and so Paul had "friends" here.

27:4 {We sailed under the lee of Cyprus} (\hupepleusamen t^n Kupron). First aorist active indicative of \hupole^, to sail under. Cyprus was thus on the left between the ship and the wind from the northwest, under the protection of Cyprus. {Because the winds were contrary} (\dia to tous anemous einai enantious). The articular infinitive after \dia and the accusative of general reference (\anemous) with predicate accusative (\enantious, facing them, in their very teeth if they went that way). The Etesian winds were blowing from the northwest so that they could not cut straight across from Sidon to Patara with Cyprus on the right. They must run behind Cyprus and hug the shore of Cilicia and Pamphylia.

27:5 {When we had sailed across} (\diapleusantes\). First aorist active participle of \diaple“\ (another compound of \ple“). {The sea which is off Cilicia and Pamphylia} (\to pelagos to kata t^n Kilikian kai Pamphulian\). \Pelagos\ is properly the high sea as here. In Mt 18:6 (which see) Jesus uses it of "the depth of the sea." Only these examples in the N.T. The current runs westward along the coast of Cilicia and Pamphylia and the land would protect from the wind. {We came to Myra of Lycia} (\kat^lthamen eis Murra t^s Lukias\). Literally, "We came down." This town was two and a half miles from the coast of Lycia. The port Andriace had a fine harbour and did a large grain business. No disciples are mentioned here nor at Lasea, Melita, Syracuse, Rhegium.

27:6 {Sailing for Italy} (\pleon eis t^n Italian\). This was the opportunity for which Lysias had been looking. So he put (\enebibasen\, first aorist active of \embibaz“, to cause to enter. Cf. \epibantes\ in verse 2) prisoners and soldiers on board. This was a ship of Alexandria bound for Rome, a grain ship (38) out of its course because of the wind. Such grain ships usually carried passengers.

27:7 {When we had sailed slowly} (\braduploountes\). Present active participle of \braduploe“\ (\bradus\, slow, \plous\, voyage). Literally, "sailing slowly," not "having or had sailed slowly." Only here and in Artemidorus (sec. cent. A.D.). It may mean "tacking" before the wind. Polybius uses \tachuploe“\, to sail swiftly. {Many days} (\en hikanais h^merais\). See on ^Lu 7:6 for \hikanos\. Literally, "in considerable days." {With difficulty} (\molis\). Used in old Greek, like \mogis\ (Lu 9:39) from \molos\, toil (see Ac 14:18). {Over against Cnidus} (\kata t^n Knidon\). "Down along Cnidus." A hundred and thirty miles from Myra, the southwest point of Asia Minor and the western coast. Here the protection of the land from the northwest wind ceased. {The wind not further suffering us} (\m^prose“ntos h^mfs tou anemou\). Genitive absolute with present active participle of \prosea“\, one of the few words still "not found elsewhere" (Thayer). Regular negative \m^ with participles. They could not go on west as they had been doing since leaving Myra. {We sailed under the lee of Crete} (\hupepleusamen t^n Kr^t^n\). See under verse ^4. Instead of going to the right of Crete as the straight course would have been they sailed southwest with Crete to their right and got some protection against the wind there. {Over against Salmone} (\kata Salm“n^{\n}). Off Cape Salmone, a promontory on the east of the island.

27:8 {Coasting along} (\paralegomenoi). Present middle participle of \paraleg“, to lay beside, not from \leg“, to collect or \leg“, to say. Diodorus Siculus uses \paralegamai in precisely this sense of coasting along, like Latin _legere oram_. In N.T. only here and verse 13. {Fair Havens} (\Kalous Limenas). This harbour is named Kalus Limeonas, a small bay two miles east of Cape Matala. It opens to the East and Southeast, but is not fit to winter in. This harbour would protect them for a time from the winds. {The city of Lasea} (\polis Lasea). Neither Lasea nor Fair Havens is mentioned by any ancient writer, two of the hundred cities of Crete.

27:9 {Where much time was spent} (\Hikanou chronou diagenomenou). Genitive absolute again with second aorist middle participle of \diaginomai, to come in between (\dia). "Considerable time intervening," since they became weatherbound in this harbour, though some take it since they left Caesarea. {And the voyage was now dangerous} (\kai ontos ^d^ episphalous). Genitive absolute, "and the voyage being already (\^d^=Latin _jam_) dangerous" (old word from \epi and \sphall“, to trip, to fall, and so prone to fall, here only in N.T.). {Because the Fast was now already gone by} (\dia to kai t^{\n} n^{\steian} ^d^ parel^{\luthenai}). Accusative (after \dia) of the articular infinitive perfect active of \parerchomai, to pass by, with the accusative of general reference (\n^{\steian}, the great day of atonement of the Jews, Le 16:29ff.) occurring about the end of September. The ancients considered navigation on the Mediterranean unsafe from early October till the middle of March. In A.D. 59 the Fast occurred on Oct. 5. There is nothing strange in Luke using this Jewish note of time as in 20:6 though a Gentile Christian. Paul did it also (1Co 16:8). It is no proof that Luke was a Jewish proselyte. We do not know precisely when the party left Caesarea (possibly in August), but in ample time to arrive in Rome before October if conditions had been more favourable. But the contrary winds had made the voyage very slow and difficult all the way (verse 7) besides the long delay here in this harbour of Fair Havens. {Paul admonished them} (\par^{\in}^{\i} ho Paulos). Imperfect active of \paraine“, old word to exhort from \para\ and \aine“\, to praise (3:8), only here and verse 22 in N.T. It is remarkable that a prisoner like Paul should venture to give advice at all and to keep on doing it (imperfect tense inchoative, began to admonish and kept on at it). Paul had clearly won the respect of the centurion and officers and also felt it to be his duty to give this unasked for warning. {I perceive} (\the“r“\). Old word from \the“ros\, a spectator. See Lu 10:18. Paul does not here claim prophecy, but he had plenty of experience with three shipwrecks already (2Co 11:25) to justify his apprehension. {Will be} (\mellein esesthai\). Infinitive in indirect assertion followed by future infinitive after \mellein\ in spite of \hoti\ which would naturally call for present indicative \mellei\, an anacoluthon due to the long sentence (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 478). {With injury} (\meta hubre“s\). An old word from \huper\ (above, upper, like our "uppishness") and so pride, insult, personal injury, the legal word for personal assault (Page). Josephus (_Ant_. III. 6, 4) uses it of the injury of the elements. {Loss} (\z^mian\). Old word, opposite of \kerdos\, gain or profit (Php 3:7f.). Nowhere else in N.T. {Lading} (\phortiou\). Diminutive of \phortos\ (from pher“\, to bear) only in form. Common word, but in N.T. only here in literal sense, as metaphor in Mt 11:30; 23:4; Lu 11:46; Ga 6:5. {But also of our lives} (\alla kai t“n psuch“n\). Common use of \psuch^ for life, originally "breath of life" (Ac 20:10), and also "soul" (14:2). Fortunately no lives were lost, though all else was. But this outcome was due to the special mercy of God for the sake of Paul (verse 24), not to the wisdom of the officers in rejecting Paul's advice. Paul begins now to occupy the leading role in this marvellous voyage.

27:11 {Gave more heed} (\mflon epeitheto\). Imperfect middle of \peith“\, to yield to (with the dative case). The "Frumentarian" centurion ranked above the captain and owner. As a military officer the centurion was responsible for the soldiers, the prisoners, and the cargo of wheat. It was a government ship. Though the season was not advanced, the centurion probably feared to risk criticism in Rome for timidity when the wheat was so much needed in Rome (Knowling). {To the master} (\t“i kubern^t^i\). Old word from \kuberna“\, to steer, and so steersman, pilot, sailing-master. Common in this sense in the papyri. In N.T. only here and Re 18:17. {And to the owner of the ship} (\kai t“i naukl^r“i\). Old word compounded of \naus\ and \kl^ros\ and used for owner of the ship who acted as his own skipper or captain.

The papyri examples (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_) all have the meaning "captain" rather than "owner."

27:12 {Because the haven was not commodious to winter in} (\aneuthetou tou limenos huparchontos pros paracheimasian). Genitive absolute again present tense of \huparch“: "The harbour being unfit (\aneuthetou, this compound not yet found elsewhere, simplex in Lu 9:62; 14:35; Heb 6:7) for wintering" (\paracheimasia, only here in N.T., but in Polybius and Diodorus, in an inscription A.D. 48, from \paracheimaz“). {The more part advised} (\hoi pleiones ethento boul^n). Second aorist middle indicative of \tith^mi, ancient idiom with \boul^n, to take counsel, give counsel. Lysias held a council of the officers of the ship on the issue raised by Paul. {If by any means they could reach Phoenix and winter there} (\ei p^s dunainto katant^santes eis Phoinika paracheimasai). The optative \dunainto (present middle of \dunamai) here with \ei is a condition of the fourth class with the notion of purpose implied and indirect discourse (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1021). "We vote for going on the chance that we may be able" (Page). Phoenix is the town of palms (Joh 12:13), the modern Lutro, the only town in Crete on the southern coast with a harbour fit for wintering, though Wordsworth and Page argue for Phineka which suits Luke's description better. The verb \paracheimaz“, to winter, is from \para and \cheim“n (see also 28:11). Used in several _Koin,_ writers. {Looking northeast and southeast} (\bleponta kata liba kai kata ch^ron). There are two ways of interpreting this language. \Lips means the southwest wind and \ch^ros the northwest wind. But what is the effect of \kata with these words? Does it mean "facing" the wind? If so, we must read "looking southwest and northwest." But \kata can mean down the line of the wind (the way the wind is blowing). If so, then it is proper to translate "looking northeast and southeast." This translation suits Lutro, the other suits Phoenike. Ramsay takes it to be Lutro, and suggests that sailors describe the harbour by the way it looks as they go into it (the subjectivity of the sailors) and that Luke so speaks and means Lutro which faces northeast and southeast. On the whole Lutro has the best of the argument.

27:13 {When the south wind blew softly} (\hupopneusantos notou). Genitive absolute with aorist active participle of \hupopne“, old verb to blow under, then to blow gently, here only in N.T. "A south wind having blown gently," in marked contrast to the violent northwest wind that they had faced so long. They were so sure of the wisdom of their decision that they did not even draw up the small boat attached by a rope to the vessel's stern (verse 16). It was only some forty miles to Lutro. {Their purpose} (t's prothese"s), set before them, from (protith'mi), genitive after \krate" (kekrat'kenai), perfect active infinitive in indirect discourse. {They weighed anchor} (frantes). First aorist active participle of \air", old verb used in technical sense with \tas agkuras (anchors) understood as in Thucydides I. 52; II. 23, "having lifted the anchors." Page takes it simply as "moving." {Sailed along Crete} (parelegonto t'n Kr't'n). Imperfect middle. See verse 8, "were coasting along Crete." {Close in shore} (fsson). Comparative adverb of \agki, near, and so "nearer" to shore. Only here in N.T.

27:14 {After no long time} (met' ou polu). Litotes again. {Beat down from it} (ebalen kat' aut's). Second aorist active indicative of \ball", to throw. Here "dashed" (intransitive). \Aut's is in the ablative, not genitive case, beat "down from it" (Crete), not "against it or on it." (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 606). \Aut's cannot refer to \ploion (boat) which is neuter. So the ablative case with \kata as in Mr 5:13, Homer also. The Cretan mountains are over 7,000 feet high. {A tempestuous wind which is called Euraquilo} (anemos tuph"nikos ho kaloumenos Eurakul'n). \Tuph"n=Tuph"s was used for the typhoon, a violent whirlwind (turbo) or squall. This word gives the character of the wind. The \Eurakul'n (reading of Aleph A B against the Textus Receptus \Euroklud"n) has not been found elsewhere. Blass calls it a hybrid word compounded of the Greek \euros (east wind) and the Latin \aquilo (northeast). It is made like \euronotos (southeast). The Vulgate has _euroaquilo_. It is thus the east north east wind. Page considers Euroclydon to be a corruption of Euraquilo. Here the name gives the direction of the wind.

27:15 {When the ship was caught} (sunarpasthentos tou ploiou). Genitive absolute again with first aorist passive of \sunarpaz", old word, in N.T. only Lu 8:29; Ac 6:12; 19:29, and here. Graphic picture as if the ship was seized by a great monster. {Face the wind} (antophthalmein t"i anem"i). Dative case with the vivid infinitive of \antophthalme" from \antophthalmos, looking in the eye, or eye to eye (anti), facing and

\o^{phthal}mos\, eye). Eyes were painted on the prows of vessels. The ship could not face the wind enough to get to Phoenix. Modern sailors talk of sailing into the eye of the wind. We were not able to look the wind in the eye. _Koin,_ verb used by Polybius. Some MSS. have it in Ac 6:11, but only here in N.T. In Wisdom of Sol. 12:14 it is used of a prince who cannot look God in the face. Clement of Rome 34 uses it of an idle workman not able to look his employer in the face (Milligan and Moulton's Vocabulary). {We gave way} (\epidontes\). Second aorist active participle of \epidid“mi\, giving way to the wind. {Were driven} (\epherometha\). Imperfect passive of \pher“\, "we were being borne along." We "scudded before the gale" (Page). "The suddenness of the hurricane gave no time to furl the great mainsail" (Furneaux).

27:16 {Running under the lee of} (\hupodramontes\). Second aorist active participle of \hupotrech“\ . Same use of \hupo\ as in \hupepleusamen\ (verses 4,8) for "under the lee", under the protection of. \N^sion\ is diminutive of \n^sos\, a small island. The MSS. vary between Cauda (B) and Clauda (Aleph). {To secure the boat} (\perikrateis genesthai t^s skaph^s\). "To become masters (\perikrateis\ from \peri\ and \kratos\, power over, found in Susannah and ecclesiastical writers, and here only in N.T.) of the boat ("dug out," like Indian boats, literally, from \skapt“\, to dig, old word, here only in N.T. and verses 30,32). The smooth water behind the little island enabled them to do this. {When they had hoisted it up} (\h^ⁿ frantes\). "Which (the little boat) having hoisted up (\arantes\, verse 13)." Even so it was "with difficulty" (\molis\). Perhaps the little boat was waterlogged. {Used helps} (\bo^^{the}iais echr“^{nto}\). Imperfect middle of \chraomai\ with instrumental case. The "helps" were ropes or chains, no doubt. {Under-girding the ship} (\hupo^z“^{nnuntes to ploion}\). Present active participle of \hupo^z“^{nnumi}\. Old verb, here only in N.T. Probably cables (\hupo^z“^{mata}\) or ropes were used under the hull of the ship laterally or even longitudinally, tightly secured on deck. This "frapping" was more necessary for ancient vessels because of the heavy mast. The little island made it possible to do this also. {Lest we be cast upon the Syrtis} (\m^^{eis t^ⁿ Surtin ekpes}“^{sin}\). Final clause after verb of fearing (\phoboumenoi\ with \m^ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \ekpipt“\, old verb to fall out or off, to be cast away. So here and verses 26,29, a classical use of the verb for a ship driven out of its course on to shoals or rocks (Page who cites Xenophon, _Anab_. VII. 5, 12). The Syrtis was the name for two quicksands between Carthage and Cyrenaica, this clearly being the Syrtis Major most dangerous because of the sandbanks (\surtis\, from \sur“). The wind would drive the ship right into this peril if something were not done. {They lowered the gear} (\chalasantes to skeuos). First aorist active participle of \chala“ (cf. Lu 5:4 for lowering the nets). \Skeuos means vessel or gear. They slackened or reduced sail, especially the mainsail, but leaving enough to keep the ship's head as close to the wind as was practicable. {So were driven} (\hout“s epheronto). Imperfect passive indicative again as in verse 15 with the addition of \hout“s (thus). The ship was now fixed as near to the wind (E N E) as possible (seven points). That would enable the ship to go actually W by N and so avoid the quicksands. J. Smith has shown that, a day being lost around Cauda, the ship going 36 miles in 24 hours in 13 days would make 468 miles. The Island of Malta (Melita) is precisely in that direction (W by N) from Cauda and is 480 miles. Page sees a difficulty about this explanation of the steady drift of the ship in the word \diapheromenon in verse 27, but that was at the end of the drifting and the varied winds could have come then and not before. The whole narrative as explained carefully in Smith's _Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul_ is a masterpiece of precise and accurate scholarship. A resume of his results appears in my _Luke the Historian in the Light of Research_.

27:18 {As we laboured exceedingly with the storm} (\sphodr“s cheimazomen“n h^m“n). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of \cheimaz“, old verb to afflict with a tempest (\cheima\, stormy weather), to toss upon the waves, here alone in N.T. {They began to throw overboard} (\ekbal^n epoiounto). Literally, "They began to make (inchoative imperfect middle of \poie“) a casting out" (\ekbol^n\ from \ekball“\, to cast out, old word, only here in N.T.). Cf. Latin _jacturam facere_. This to lighten the ship by throwing overboard the cargo. The grain in the ship would shift and make it list and so added to the danger. {They cast out} (\eripsan). Third person plural aorist active of \ript“, not \eripsamen as Textus Receptus. {With their own hands} (\autocheires). Old word (\autos, cheir) but here alone in N.T. Vivid and graphic touch by Luke who, of course, watched every movement day by day. {The tackling} (\t^n skeu^“n). The furniture of the ship that could be spared. It was becoming desperate.

27:20 {When neither sun nor stars shone upon us} (\m^te h^liou m^te astr^“n epiphainont^“n). Genitive absolute again. {For many days} (\epi pleionas h^meras). For more days than a few. {No small tempest} (\cheimonos ouk oligou). Litotes again. {All hope that we should be saved was now taken away} (\loipon peri^ireito elpis pfsa tou s^“zesthai h^mas). "For the rest (or future) there began to be taken from around us (\peri^ireito\ inchoative imperfect and see use of the verb in 2Co 13:16 of the veil) all hope of the being saved so far as we were concerned." Despair was beginning to settle like a fog on all their hopes. Had Paul lost hope?

27:21 {When they had been long without food} (\poll^s te asitias huparchous^s). Genitive absolute, the old word \asitia from \asitos (verse 33) \a privative and \sitos, food, here alone in N.T. Literally, "There being much abstinence from food." They had plenty of grain on board, but no appetite to eat (sea-sickness) and no fires to cook it (Page). "Little heart being left for food" (Randall). Galen and other medical writers use \asitia and \asitos for want of appetite. {Stood forth} (\statheis). As in 1:15; 2:14; 17:22. Pictorial word (Page) that sets forth the vividness and solemnity of the scene (Knowling). {Ye should have hearkened unto me} (\edei men peitharch^santas moi). Literally, "It was necessary for you hearkening unto me not to set sail (\m^ anagesthai)." It was not the "I told you so" of a small nature, "but a reference to the wisdom of his former counsel in order to induce acceptance of his present advice" (Furneaux). The first aorist active participle is in the accusative of general reference with the present infinitive \anagesthai. {And have gotten this injury and loss} (\kerd^sai te t^“n hubrin taut^“n kai t^“n z^mian). This Ionic form \kerd^sai (from \kerda^“) rather than \kerd^nai or \kerdfnai is common in late Greek (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 349). The Revised Version thus carries over the negative \m^ to this first aorist active infinitive \kerd^sai from \kerda^“ (cf. on Mt 16:26). But Page follows Thayer in urging that this is not exact, that Paul means that by taking his advice they ought to have escaped this injury and loss. "A person is said in Greek 'to gain a loss' when, being in danger of incurring it, he by his conduct saves himself from doing so." This is probably Paul's idea here.

27:22 {And now} (\kai ta nun). Accusative plural neuter article of general reference in contrast with \men\ in verse 21. Paul shows modesty (Bengel) in the mild contrast. {No loss of life} (\apobol^{psuch}'s oudemia\). Old word from \apoball'', to throw away, only twice in N.T. Ro 11:15 (rejection) and here. He had foretold such loss of life as likely (verse 10), but he now gives his reason for his changed view.

27:23 {For there stood by me} (\parest^{gar moi}\). Second aorist active (intransitive) indicative of \parist^{mi}\ with the locative case (beside me). The very form used by Paul of his trial (2Ti 4:17) when "the Lord stood by me" (\ho de kurios moi parest^{gar moi}\) when others deserted him. This angel of the God whom Paul serves (in distinction from the heathen gods) is the reason for Paul's present confidence.

27:24 {Thou must stand before Caesar} (\Kaisari se dei parast^{nai}\). Note the same \dei\ (must) as in 23:11 when Jesus appeared to Paul in Jerusalem and the same verb \parast^{nai}\ (second aorist active infinitive) used in verse 23. {Hath granted thee} (\kecharistai soi\). Perfect middle indicative of \charizomai\ and that from \charis\, a gift or grace. The lives of those that sailed with Paul God had spared as a gift (\charis\) to Paul.

27:25 {Wherefore be of good cheer} (\dio euthumeite\). God had spoken. That was enough. This old verb from \euthumos\ in the N.T. only here, verse 25; Jas 5:13. See the adjective 27:36. {For I believe God} (\pisteu^{gar t' i the}'i\). This is Paul's reason for his own good cheer and for his exhortation to confidence in spite of circumstances so untoward. Paul had doubtless prayed for his own life and for the lives of all. He was sure that he was to bear his witness in Rome.

27:26 {We must be cast} (\dei h^{mfs} ekpesein\). It is necessary for us to fall out (\ekpesein\, second aorist active infinitive of \ekpipt^{ai}\). It was not revealed to Paul what island it would be.

27:27 {As we were driven to and fro} (\diapheromen^{n h'm}'n\). Genitive absolute with present passive participle of \diapher^{ai}\, old verb to bear different ways (\dia=duo\, two), this way and that. Continued to be tossed to and fro in the rough seas. It would seem so to those on board. It does not necessarily mean that the wind had changed. The fourteenth night is reckoned from the time they left Fair Havens. {In the sea of Adria} (\en tⁱ Hadrifi\). Not the Adriatic Sea as we now call the sea between Italy and the mainland of Illyricum, but all the lower Mediterranean between Italy and Greece. Luke's usage is like that of Strabo. {Surmised} (\hupenooun\). Imperfect active indicative of \huponoe“, inchoative, began to suspect. {That they were drawing near to some country} (\prosagein tina autois ch[“]ran\). Infinitive with accusative of general reference in indirect assertion. \Prosag“ is here used intransitively and Luke writes from the sailor's standpoint that a certain land was drawing near to them (\autois\, dative). The sailors heard the sound of breakers and grew uneasy.

27:28 {They sounded} (\bolisantes\). First aorist active participle of \boliz“\ rare verb only here and in Eustathius who says it was familiar in ancient Greek. Apparently from \bolis\, a missile or dart, and so to throw down the lead into the sea, to heave the lead, to take soundings. The inscriptions give \bolimos\ for "leaden." {Twenty fathoms} (\orguias eikosi\). This old word, from \oreg“, to stretch, means the distance from one outstretched middle finger tip to the other likewise out-stretched. {After a little space} (\brachu diast[^]santes\). Literally, "standing apart a little" (second aorist active participle of \diist[^]mi\), that is, the ship going a short distance further on. A ship today approaching St. Paul's Bay by the rocky point of Koura would pass first twenty, then fifteen fathoms (Furieux).

27:29 {Lest haply we should be cast ashore on rocky ground} (\m[^] pou kata tracheis topous ekpes[“]men\). The usual construction after a verb of fearing (\m[^] and the aorist subjunctive \ekpes[“]men\). Literally, "Lest somewhere (\pou\) we should fall out down against (\kata\) rocky places." The change in the soundings made it a very real fear. \Tracheis\ (rough) is old adjective, but in the N.T. only here and Lu 3:5 (from Isa 40:4). {Four anchors} (\agkuras tessaras\). Old word from \agk[^]\. In N.T. only in this chapter, with \rhipt[“]\ here, with \ektein[“]\ in verse 30, with \periaire[“]\ in verse 40; and Heb 6:19 (figuratively of hope). {From the stern} (\ek prumn[^]s\). Old word, but in N.T. only in Mr 4:38; here and 41 in contrast with \pr[“]ira\ (prow). The usual practice was and is to anchor by the bows. "With a view to running the ship ashore anchoring from the stern would, it is said, be best" (Page).

Nelson is quoted as saying that he had been reading Ac 27 the morning of the Battle of Copenhagen (April, 1801) where he anchored his ships from the stern. {Wished for the day} (\uchonto). Imperfect middle, kept on praying for "day to come" (\h^meran genesthai) before the anchors broke under the strain of the storm or began to drag. If the ship had been anchored from the prow, it would have swung round and snapped the anchors or the stern would have faced the beach.

27:30 {The sailors} (\t^“n naut^“n). Old word from \naus (ship), in N.T. only here, verse 30; Re 18:17. {Were seeking} (\z^tount^“n). Genitive absolute again with present active participle of \z^te^“ to seek. {Had lowered} (\chalasant^“n). Aorist active participle of \chalaz^“. {Under colour} (\prophasei). Possibly the same word as "prophecy" (from \pro-ph^mi\, to speak forth), but here pretence, pretext, although it may come from \prophain^“, to show forth. The use here is an old one and appears also in Mr 12:40; Lu 20:47; 1Th 2:5; Php 1:18. {As though} (\h^“s). The alleged reason, a common Greek idiom with \h^“s and the participle (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 966). Here with \mellont^“n. {From the foreship} (\ek pr^“ir^s). Old word for prow of the ship. In the N.T. only here and verse 41. Note here \ekteinein (lay out, stretch out) rather than \rhipsantes (casting) in verse 29, for they pretended to need the small boat to stretch out or lay out the anchors in front.

27:31 {Except these abide in the ship} (\Ean m^ houtoi mein^“sin en t^“i ploi^“i). Condition of the third class (undetermined, but with hope, etc.). Paul has no hesitancy in saying this in spite of his strong language in verse 24 about God's promise. He has no notion of lying supinely down and leaving God to do it all. Without the sailors the ship could not be properly beached.

27:32 {The ropes} (\ta schoinia). Diminutive of \schoinos, old word, but in N.T. only here and Joh 2:15. Paul is now saviour of the ship and the soldiers quickly cut loose the skiff and "let her fall off" (\eiasan aut^“n ekpesein) rather than be the means of the escape of the sailors who were needed. This dastardly scheme of the sailors would have brought frightful loss of life.

27:33 {While the day was coming on} (\achri hou h^mera ^mellen ginesthai). More likely here \achri hou (for \achri toutou h^“i) with the imperfect \^mellen, has its usual meaning, "until which time day was about to come on (\ginesthai\, present middle infinitive, linear action). That is Paul kept on exhorting or beseeching (\parekalei\, imperfect active) them until dawn began to come on (cf. verse 39 when day came). In Heb 3:13 \achri hou with the present indicative has to mean "so long as" or while, but that is not true here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 975). See on \Ac 2:46 for the same phrase for partaking food (\metalamban\ "troph^s\, genitive case) as also in 27:34. Paul wanted them to be ready for action when day really came. "Fourteenth day" repeated (verse 27), only here in the accusative of duration of time (\h^meran). It is not clear whether the "waiting" (\prosdok\ "ntes\, present active participle predicate nominative complementary participle after \diateleite\, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1121) means fourteen days of continuous fasting or only fourteen successive nights of eager watching without food. Galen and Dionysius of Halicarnassus employ the very idiom used here by Luke (\asitos diatele). {Having taken nothing} (\m^then proslabomenoi). Second aorist middle participle of \proslamban with the accusative \m^then rather than the more usual \m^den. Probably Paul means that they had taken no regular meals, only bits of food now and then.

27:34 {For this is for your safety} (\touto gar pros t^s humeteras s^t^rias huparchei). Note \s^t^ria in sense of "safety," literal meaning, not spiritual salvation. This is the only instance in the N.T. of the use of \pros with the ablative meaning "from the side of" your safety, though a classic idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 623), an example of Luke's literary style. {Perish} (\apoleitai). Future middle (intransitive) of \apollumi (-u\), to destroy. So the oldest MSS. rather than \peseitai from \pipt, to fall. This proverbial expression occurs also in Lu 21:18 which see and in 1Sa 14:45; 2Sa 14:11; 1Ki 1:52.

27:35 {Gave thanks to God} (\eucharist^sen t^i the^i). First aorist active indicative of \euchariste from which our word "Eucharist" comes. It was saying grace like the head of a Hebrew family and the example of Paul would encourage the others to eat. Probably Paul, Luke, and Aristarchus had memories of the Lord's supper (Ac 2:42) while to others it was only an ordinary meal (Lu 24:30).

27:36 {Then were they all of good cheer} (\euthumoi de genomenoi). More exactly, "Then all becoming cheerful," because of Paul's words and conduct. {Took food} (\proselabonto troph^ˆs\). Partitive genitive here (some food), not accusative as verse 33. Paul's courage was contagious.

27:37 {Two hundred three-score and sixteen souls} (\diakosiai hebdom^ˆkonta hex\). The Vatican Manuscript (B) has \h^ˆs\ in place of \diakosiai\ (two hundred) which Westcott and Hort put in the margin. But Alford is probably correct in suggesting that the scribe of B wrote \h^ˆs\ by repeating the omega in \ploi^ˆi\ with \s\ = 200 (Greek numeral). If the number 276 seems large, it is to be remembered that we do not know the size of the ship. Josephus (Life, 3) says that there were 600 on the ship that took him to Italy. The grain ships were of considerable size. The number included sailors, soldiers, and prisoners. A muster or roll call may have been made.

27:38 {When they had eaten enough} (\koresthentes troph^ˆs\). First aorist passive of \korennumi\, old verb to satisfy, to satiate, with the genitive. Literally, "Having been satisfied with food." Here only in the N.T. {They lightened} (\ekouphizon\). Inchoative imperfect active, began to lighten. Old verb from \kouphos\ and originally to be light, but transitive to lighten, as here, from Hippocrates on. {Throwing out the wheat} (\ekballomenoi ton siton\). The cargo of wheat. The second \ekbol^ˆ\ (verse 18) or casting out and overboard which was only partially done at first.

27:39 {They knew not} (\ouk epegin^ˆskon\). Imperfect active of \epigin^ˆsk^ˆ\, to recognize. Probably conative, tried to recognize and could not (Conybeare and Howson). The island was well-known (28:1, \epegn^ˆmen\), but St. Paul's Bay where the wreck took place was some distance from the main harbour (Valetta) of Melita (Malta). {They perceived} (\katenoooun\). Imperfect active of \katanoe^ˆ\, gradually perceived after some effort as in 11:16. This beach seemed their only hope. {They took counsel} (\ebouleuonto\). Imperfect middle showing the process of deliberation and doubt. The bay "having a beach" (\echonta aigialon\) is a phrase found in Xenophon's Anabasis VI. 4, 4. {Whether they could drive} (\ei dunainto eks^ˆsai\). This use of the optative with \ei\ in questions of this sort (implied indirect) is a neat Greek idiom (Robertson, Grammar, p. 1021). B C Bohairic read \eks^ˆsai\ (first aorist active infinitive of \eks^ˆz^ˆ\), to save out (so Westcott and Hort), instead of \ex^ˆsai\ (from \ex^ˆthe^ˆ\, to push out, as Textus Receptus).

27:40 {Casting off} (\perielontes). Second aorist active of \periaire. Literally, "Having taken away from around," that is all four anchors from around the stern. Cf. the other verbs with \agkuras in verse 29,30. {They left them in the sea} (\ei“n eis t^ⁿ thalassan). Imperfect active of \ea“, either descriptive or inchoative. They let the anchors go and the ropes fell down into the sea. {At the same time loosing the bands of the rudders} (\hama anentes tas zeukt^ⁿ rias t“n p^ⁿ dali“n). On the use of \hama with the participle, old Greek idiom see Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1139. The second aorist active participle of \ani^ⁿ mi, to relax, loosen up. Old verb, in N.T. Ac 16:26; 27:40; Eph 6:9; Heb 13:5. Thayer notes that \zeukt^ⁿ rias (bands) occurs nowhere else, but several papyri use it of yokes and waterwheels (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). The word for rudders (\p^ⁿ dalion) is an old one (from \p^ⁿ don\, the blade of an oar), but in the N.T. only here and Jas 3:4. Page notes that the ancient ships had a pair of paddle rudders like those of the early northmen, one on each quarter. The paddle rudders had been fastened while the ship was anchored. {Hoisting up the foresail to the wind} (\eparantes ton artem“na t^ⁱ pneous^ⁱ). Supply \aurfi (breeze) after \pneous^ⁱ (blowing). It is not clear what "sail" is meant by "\artem“na." No other example in Greek is known, though the scholiast to Juvenal XII. 68 explains \velo prora suo by _artemone solo_. Hence "foresail" is probably correct. {They made for the beach} (\kateichon eis ton aigialon). Imperfect active of \katech“, to hold down, perhaps inchoative. "They began to hold the ship steadily for the beach."

27:41 {But lighting upon} (\peripesontes de). Second aorist active participle of \peripipt“, old verb to fall into and so be encompassed by as in Lu 10:30; Jas 1:2. There is a current on one side of St. Paul's Bay between a little island (Salmonetta) and Malta which makes a sand bank between the two currents. Unexpectedly the ship stuck in this sandbar. {Where two seas met} (\dithalasson). Used in Strabo and Dio Chrysostom for divided seas (\dis, thalassa). {They ran the vessel aground} (\epekeilan t^ⁿ naun). First aorist active indicative of old verb \epikell“, to run a ship ashore. Only here in N.T. Here also we have the only N.T. use of \naus for ship (from \na“, ne“\, to swim) so common in ancient Greek. Our word navy is from this word through the Latin. {Struck} (\ereisasa). First aorist active participle of \ereid“, old verb to fix firmly. Only here in N.T.

{Unmoveable} (\asaleutos\). From \a\ privative and \saleu“\ to shake. Old word. In N.T. only here and Heb 12:28. {Began to break up} (\elueto\). Inchoative imperfect passive of the old verb \lu“\, to loosen. The prow was stuck in the sand-bar, and the stern was breaking to pieces by the opposing waves lashing on both sides. It was a critical moment.

27:42 {Counsel was to kill} (\boul^ egeneto hina--apoktein“sin\). The soldiers did not relish the idea of the escape of the prisoners. Hence there came this "counsel" (\boul^). Regular Greek idiom for purpose (\hina\ and aorist active subjunctive of \apoktein“\, to kill). Soldiers were responsible for the lives of prisoners (Ac 12:19). {Swim out} (\ekkolumb^sas\). First aorist active participle of \ekkolumba“\, old verb to swim out and so away. {Escape} (\diaphug^i\). Second aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \diapheug“\, to make a clean (\dia\) escape.

27:43 {To save Paul} (\dias“sai ton Paulon\). Effective first aorist active infinitive of \dias“z“\. And no wonder for the centurion knew now how much they all owed to Paul. {Stayed them from their purpose} (\ek“leusen autous tou boul^matos\.) Ablative case of \boul^ma\ after \ek“leusen\ (from \k“leu“\, to hinder, common verb). {And get first to land} (\pr“tous eis t^n g^n exienai\). This classic verb \exeimi\ occurs four times in Acts (13:42; 17:15; 20:7; 27:32) and nowhere else in the N.T. It was a wise command.

27:44 {Some on planks} (\hous men epi sanisin\). Common Greek idiom (\hous men--hous de\) for "some--some." The only N.T. instance of the old Greek word \sanis\ for board or plank. The breaking of the ship gave scraps of timber which some used. {They all escaped safe} (\pantas dias“th^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \dias“z“\ (the very word used for the desire of the centurion about Paul) with accusative of general reference, the clause being subject of \egeneto\. So Luke in this marvellous narrative, worthy of any historian in any age, shows how Paul's promise was fulfilled (verse 24). Paul the prisoner is the hero of the voyage and shipwreck, a wonderful example of God's providential care.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

28:1 {Then we knew} (\tote epegn“men\). Second aorist (ingressive) active indicative of \epigin“sk“. Then we recognized. See 27:39. {Was called} (\kaleitai\). Present passive indicative retained in indirect discourse. {Melita} (\Melit^). Not \Miletē\ as only B reads, a clerical error, but retained in the text of Westcott and Hort because of B. Page notes that the island was Malta as is shown from the name, the location, the presence of a ship from Alexandria bound for Rome wintering there (verse 11), and the mention of Syracuse as the next stop after leaving (verse 12).

28:2 {The barbarians} (\hoi barbaroi\). The Greeks called all men "barbarians" who did not speak Greek (Ro 1:14), not "barbarians" in our sense of rude and uncivilized, but simply "foreign folk." Diodorus Siculus (V. 12) says that it was a colony of the Phoenicians and so their language was Punic (Page). The word originally meant an uncouth repetition (\barbar\) not understood by others (1Co 14:11). In Col 3:11 Paul couples it with Scythian as certainly not Christian. These are (with verse 4 below) the only N.T. instances. {Showed us} (\pareichan\). Imperfect active of \parech“\ with \-an\ instead of \-on\ as \eichan\ in Mr 8:7 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 339). It was their habit on this occasion, Luke means, they kept on showing. {No common kindness} (\ou t^n tuchousan philanthr“pian\). The old word \philanthr“pia\ (\philos\, \anthr“pos\), love of mankind, occurs in the N.T. only here and Tit 3:4 (adverb in 27:3). See on 19:11 for this use of \ou t^n tuchousan\, "not the kindness that happens every day." They were not "wreckers" to take advantage of the calamity. {They kindled a fire} (\hapsantes puran\). The only N.T. example and verse 3 of the old word \pura\ (from \pur\, fire), a pile of burning fuel (sticks). First aorist active participle of \hapt“, to set fire to, to kindle. Cf. \anapt“\ in Lu 12:49. {Received us all} (\proselabonto pantas h^mfs\). Second aorist middle (indirect indicative of \proslamban“.) They took us all to themselves (cf. Ac 18:26). {The present} (\ton ephest“ta\). Second perfect active participle (intransitive) of \ephist^mi\, "the rain that stood upon them" (the pouring rain). Only in Luke and Paul in N.T.

28:3 {When Paul had gathered} (\sustrepsantos tou Paulou\). Genitive absolute with first aorist active participle of \sustreph^{\,}, old verb to twist or turn together or roll into a bundle. In N.T. only here and Mt 17:22. {A bundle of sticks} (\phrugaⁿ ti pl^thos\). "Some multitude (or pile) of dry twigs" (\phrugaⁿ \from \phrug^{\,} or \phruss^{\,}, to dry. Only here in N.T.). {Laid} (\epithentos\). So genitive absolute again with second aorist active participle of \epitith^mi\, to place upon. Few things show Paul to better advantage than this incident. {By reason of the heat} (\apo t^s therm^s\). Old word, only here in N.T. Ablative case with \apo\ (from the heat). The viper was in a state of torpor in the bundle of sticks. The heat wakened him. {A viper} (\echidna\). The old word used by the Baptist of the Pharisees (Mt 3:7; Lu 3:7) and by Jesus also (Mt 12:34; 23:33). It is objected that there is little wood in the island today and no vipers, though Lewin as late as 1853 believes that he saw a viper near St. Paul's Bay. But the island now has 1,200 people to the square mile and snakes of any kind have a poor chance. The viper has also disappeared from Arran as the island became more frequented (Knowling). Ramsay thinks that the small constrictor (Coronella Austriaca) which still exists in the island may be the "viper," though it has no poison fangs, but clings and bites. The natives thought that it was a poisonous viper. {Fastened on his hand} (\kath^pse t^s cheiros autou\). First aorist active indicative of \kathapt^{\,}, to fasten down on with the genitive case. Old verb, here only in N.T. Cf. Mr 16:18.

28:4 {The beast} (\to th^rion\). Diminutive of \th^r\ and so little beast. See on Mr 1:13. Aristotle and the medical writers apply the word to venomous serpents, the viper in particular (Knowling), as Luke does here. Vincent calls attention to the curious history of our word "_treacle_" for molasses (Latin theriaca) from \th^riak^{\,}, an antidote made from the flesh of vipers. Coverdale translates Jer 8:22: "There is no more treacle in Gilead." Jeremy Taylor: "We kill the viper and make treacle of him." {Hanging from his hand} (\kremamenon ek t^s cheiros autou\). Vivid picture of the snake dangling from Paul's hand. Present middle participle of \kremamai\, late form for \kremannumi\, to hang up, to suspend (cf. Ga 3:13). {No doubt} (\pant^s\). Literally, By all means, old adverb. Cf. 21:22; Lu 4:23; 1Co 9:22. Only by Luke and Paul in the N.T. "They _knew_ that he was a prisoner being taken to Rome on some grave charge, and _inferred_ that the charge was murder" (Page). {Though he hath escaped} (\dias“thenta\). First aorist passive participle of \dias“z“\ (same verb used in 24:43,44; 28:1), so-called concessive use of the participle (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1129). {Yet Justice} (\dik^\). An abstraction personified like the Latin _Justitia_ (Page). The natives speak of \Dik^\ as a goddess, but we know nothing of such actual worship in Malta, though the Greeks worshipped abstractions as in Athens. {Hath not suffered} (\ouk eiasen\). Did not suffer. They look on Paul as a doomed man as good as dead. These people thought that calamity was proof of guilt, poor philosophy and worse theology.

28:5 {Shook off} (\apotinaxas\). First aorist active participle of \apotinass“\, to shake off. Rare word (Euripides, Galen, LXX). In N.T. only here and Lu 9:5.

28:6 {But they expected} (\hoi de prosedok“n\). Imperfect active, were expecting, continued to expect. {That he would have swollen} (\auton mellein pimprasthai\). More exactly, "Expecting him to be about (or that he was about) to swell up." \Pimprasthai\ is present middle infinitive from \pimpr^mi\, to blow, to burn, to inflame, to cause to swell. \Pr^th“\, to swell, seems connected and both use the aorist \epr^sa\. Our word "inflammation" likewise means a burning and a swelling. This verb is a common medical term used as Luke has it. It occurs here only in N.T. {Or fallen down dead suddenly} (\^katapiptein aphn“ nekron\). Rather, "or was about to fall down dead suddenly." The two common results of a bite by a viper or other poisonous snake, both medical terms used by Luke. {But when they were long in expectation} (\epi polu de aut“n prosdok“nt“n\). Genitive absolute. "But while they were expecting for much time." {Nothing amiss come to him} (\m^den atupon eis auton ginomenon\). "Nothing out of place coming to him" (present middle participle). \M^den\ the usual negative of the participle and the accusative case the object of \the“rount“n\ (genitive absolute). {Changed their minds} (\metabalomenoi\). Aorist middle (direct) participle of \metaball“\, old verb to turn about or around, turning themselves about, changing their minds. Plato uses this very verb in middle voice for changing the mind. {That he was a god} (\auton einai theon\). Accusative and infinitive in indirect discourse. At Lystra Paul was first received as a god (Mercury) and then they stoned him to kill him (Ac 14:11,19). So fickle is popular favour.

28:7 {To the chief man of the island} (\t*“i pr“t“i t^hs n^hsou*\). An official title correct in Malta (Ramsay, _St. Paul_, p. 343). An inscription in Malta calls Prudens "Primate of the Maltese" (\pr*“tos Melitai“n*\). Here it is plainly a title and not the common use seen in 13:50; 25:2; 28:17. {Publius} (\Popli*“i*\). This Greek name (\praenomen\) can be derived either from \Popilius\ or \Publius\ (cf. \publicus\ for \populicus\ from \populus). Entertained us (\exenisen h^hmfs\). Paul and his companions (Luke and Aristarchus). Was Julius included? On \xeniz“\ see Ac 10:23. {Courteously} (\philophron*“s*\). This old adverb from \philophr“n\ (\philos, phren\, friendly mind) occurs here alone in the N.T. In a kindly or friendly manner, all the more so because of the original suspicion of Paul as a criminal.

28:8 {Lay} (\katakeisthai\). Common verb for the sick (Mr 1:30; Joh 5:6). {Sick} (\sunechomenon\). "Held together." Common verb again for the sick as in Lu 4:38. {Of fever} (\puretois\). Instrumental case, and plural "fevers," medical term for intermittent attacks of fever (Demosthenes, Lucian, medical writers). {Dysentery} (\dusenteri*“i*\). Instrumental case also. Late form of the older \dusenteria\ and only here in N.T. Our very word _dysentery_. Another medical term of which Luke uses so many. Hippocrates often mentions these two diseases together. {Laying his hands on him healed him} (\epitheis tas cheiras aut*“i iasato auton*\). Either like the laying on of hands in Jas 5:14, the gift of healing (1Co 12:9f.), or the tender interest of Jesus when he took hold of the hand of Peter's mother-in-law (Mr 1:31). Ramsay argues that \iaomai\ is employed here of the miraculous healing by Paul while \therapeu“\ is used of the cures by Luke the physician (verse 9). This is a general distinction and it is probably observed here, but in Lu 6:18 (which see) both verbs are employed of the healings by Jesus. {Came and were healed} (\pros^hrchonto kai etherapeuonto\). Imperfect middle and imperfect passive. A regular stream of patients came during these months. Luke had his share in the honours, "us" (\h^hmfs\), and no doubt his share in the cures. {With many honours} (\pollais timais\). Instrumental case. The word was often applied to payment for professional services as we today speak of an honorarium. {They put on board} (\epethento\). Second aorist middle indicative of \epitith^hmi\, to put on. The idea of "on board" is merely suggested by \anagomenois\ (when we sailed) "the things for our needs" (ta pros tas chreias).

28:11 {Which had wintered} (parakeheimakoti). Perfect active participle of paracheimaz, to pass the winter. Old verb, in N.T. only 27:12; 28:11; 1Co 16:6; Tit 3:12. The locative case agreeing with ploi. Navigation in the Mediterranean usually opened up in February (always by March), spring beginning on Feb. 9 (Page). {Whose sign was the Twin Brothers} (paras^m^i Dioskourois). The word paras^m^i can be either a substantive (as Revised Version has it) or an adjective "marked by the sign," examples of both uses common in ancient Greek. Dioskourois is in apposition with paras^m^i. The word means the twin sons (kouros or koros) of Zeus (Dios, genitive of Zeus) and Leda, viz., Castor and Pollux. The Attic used the dual, t^ Dioskor. Castor and Pollux were the tutelary deities of sailors whose figures were painted one on each side of the prow of the ship. This sign was the name of the ship. So they start in another grain ship of Alexandria bound for Rome.

28:12 {Touching} (katachthentes). First aorist passive participle of katag, to go down to land, just the opposite of an^chth^men in verse 11 from anag, to go up to sea. {At Syracuse} (eis Surakousas). The chief city of Sicily and eighty miles from Malta. Perhaps open weather and a southerly wind helped them across. Here it was that Alcibiades wrecked the power and glory of Athens. Why the ship spent three days we do not know.

28:13 {We made a circuit} (perielthontes). Second aorist active of perierchomai, to go around, old verb, already in 19:13. See also Heb 11:37; 1Ti 5:13. But Westcott and Hort read perielontes after Aleph B (from periaire) as in 27:40, though here it could only mean casting loose, for which no other authority exists. At any rate the ship had to tack to reach Rhegium and was not able to make a straight course (enthudrome, 16:11). {Rhegium} (Rh^gion) is from rh^gnumi, to break off, the place where the land breaks off, the southern entrance to the straits of Messina. {A south wind sprang up} (epigenomenou notou). Genitive absolute again, and for all the world like that fatal south wind in 27:13, but with no bad results this time, though the weather was plainly treacherous at this early season. {On the second day} (deuteraioi). This is the classical use of the predicate adjective, "We second day men" as in Lu 24:22; Joh 11:39; Php

3:5 instead of the adverb (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 657). {To Puteoli} (\eis Potiolous\). It was 182 miles from Rhegium and would require 26 hours (Page). It was eight miles northwest from Neapolis (Naples) and the chief port of Rome, the regular harbour for the Alexandrian ships from Rome. Portions of the great mole are said to be still visible.

28:14 {Where we found brethren} (\hou heurontes adelphous\). Possibly from Alexandria, but, as Blass observes, it is no more strange to find "brethren" in Christ in Puteoli when Paul arrives than in Rome. There was a large Jewish quarter. {Seven days} (\h^meras hepta\). Accusative of extent of time. Paul and his party remained so long at the urgent request of the brethren. He was still a prisoner, but clearly Julius was only too glad to show another courtesy to Paul to whom they all owed their lives. It was 130 miles by land from Puteoli to Rome over one of the great Roman roads. {And so we came to Rome} (\kai hout^s eis t^n Rom^n ^lthamen\). So at last. Luke is exultant as Page observes: _Paulus Romae captivus: triumphus unicus_. It is the climax of the book of Acts (19:21; 23:11), but not the close of Paul's career. Page rightly remarks that a new paragraph should begin with verse 15, for brethren came from Rome and this part of the journey is touched with the flavour of that incident. The great event is that Paul reached Rome, but not as he had once hoped (Ro 15:22-29).

28:15 {When they heard of us} (\akousantes ta peri h^m^n\). How "they heard the things concerning us" we do not know. Good news had its way of travel even before the days of telegraph, telephone, daily papers. Possibly Julius had to send on special couriers with news of his arrival after the shipwreck. Possibly some of the brethren in Puteoli at once (beginning of the week) sent on news to the brethren in Rome. The church in Rome had long ago received Paul's letter from Corinth at the hands of Phoebe. {To meet us} (\eis apant^sin h^min\). Idiomatic phrase, "for meeting with us" (associative instrumental case). _Koin,_ word \apant^sis\ from verb \apanta^s\, to meet, in N.T. only here; Mt 25:6; 1Ti 4:17. Use after \eis\ rather than infinitive like a translation Hebraism (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 91). {As far as the Market of Appius} (\achri Appiou Phorou\). The Forum of Appius, 90 miles from Puteoli, 40 from Rome, on the great Appian Way. The Censor Appius Claudius had constructed this part of the road, B.C. 312. Paul probably struck the Appian Way at Capua.

Portions of this great stone highway are still in use. If one wishes to tread where Paul trod, he can do it here. Appii Forum had a bad reputation, the haunt of thieves, thugs, and swindlers. What would this motley crowd think of Paul chained to a soldier? {Three Taverns} (\Tri“n Tabern“n). Genitive case after \achri like \Appiou Phorou. About 30 miles from Rome. _Tres Tabernae_. {Whom} (\hous). Two groups of the disciples came (one Gentile, one Jewish, Rackham thinks), one to Appii Forum, the other to Three Taverns. It was a joyous time and Julius would not interfere. {Took courage} (\elabe tharsos). The old substantive \tharsos is here alone in the N.T. Jesus himself had exhorted Paul to be of good courage (\tharsei\ Ac 23:11) as he had done the disciples (Joh 16:33). Paul had passed through enough to cause depression, whether he was depressed or not, but he deeply appreciated this kindly sympathy.

28:16 {Paul was suffered to abide by himself} (\epetrap^ t“i Paul“i menein kath' heauton). Second aorist passive of \epitrepo, to permit or allow. Literally, "It was permitted to Paul to abide by himself." Some late documents (Textus Receptus) here add: "The centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard" (or the \stratopedarch). This officer used to be considered Burrus who was Prefect of the Praetorian Guard A.D. 51-62. But it is by no means certain that Julius turned the prisoners over to this officer. It seems more likely that Julius would report to the captain of the Peregrini. If so, we may be sure that Julius would give a good report of Paul to this officer who would be kindly disposed and would allow Paul comparative freedom (living by himself, in his lodging, verse 23, his own hired house verse 30, though still chained to a soldier). {With the soldier that guarded him} (\sun t“i phulassonti auton strati“t“i). Probably a new soldier every day or night, but always with this soldier chained to his right hand day and night. Now that Paul is in Rome what can he do for Christ while he awaits the outcome of his own appeal to Nero?

28:17 {Those that were the chief of the Jews} (\tous ontas t“n Ioudai“n pr“tous). This use of \pr“tos for the leading men of a city or among the Jews we have already had in 13:50; 25:2; Lu 19:47. Literally, "Those that were first among the Jews." The position of the participle \ontas between the article and the adjective \pr“tous is regular (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 777). {When they were come together} (\sunelthont“n aut“n). Genitive absolute again. Paul could not go to the synagogue, as his custom was, being a bound prisoner. So he invited the Jewish leaders to come to his lodging and hear his explanation of his presence in Rome as a prisoner with an appeal to Caesar. He is anxious that they may understand that this appeal was forced upon him by Festus following Felix and lot because he has come to make an attack on the Jewish people. He was sure that false reports had come to Rome. These non-Christian Jews accepted Paul's invitation. {Nothing against} (\ouden enantion). Adjective here as in 26:9, not preposition as in 7:10; 8:32. From \en and \antios (\anti), face to face. Concessive participle \poi^sas as in verse 4 (\dias“thenta) which see. {Yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans} (\desmios ex Ierosolum“n paredoth^ n eis tas cheiras t^ n Romai“n). This condensed statement does not explain how he "was delivered," for in fact the Jews were trying to kill him when Lysias rescued him from the mob (22:27-36). The Jews were responsible for his being in the hands of the Romans, though they had hoped to kill him first.

28:18 {When they had examined me} (\anakrinantes me). First aorist active participle of \anakrin“, the same verb used already in 24:8; 25:6,26 of the judicial examinations by Felix and Festus. {Desired} (\eboulonto). Imperfect middle of attempted action or picture of their real attitude. This is a correct statement as the words of both Felix and Festus show. {Because there was} (\dia to--huparchein). Accusative case with \dia (causal use) with the articular infinitive, "Because of the being no cause of death in me" (\en emoi, in my case, \aitia, usual word for crime or charge of crime).

28:19 {When the Jews spake against it} (\antilegont“n t^ n Ioudai“n). Genitive absolute again, \antilegont“n (\antileg“) common verb for speaking against as in 13:45. _Clementer dicit_ (Bengel). "The word is a mild one to describe the bitter enmity of the Jews" (Knowling). {I was constrained} (\^nagkasth^ n). "I was compelled," first aorist passive indicative of \anagkaz“, the very word used of Paul's efforts to get the Christians to blaspheme (26:11) which see. Paul was compelled to appeal to Caesar (see 25:11,12 for this phrase), unless Paul was willing to be the victim of Jewish hate when he had done no wrong. {Not that I had ought to accuse my nation of} (\ouch h“s tou ethnous mou ech“n ti kat^gorein). This use of \h“s with a participle (\ech“n\) is common in Greek for the alleged reason. The genitive case with the infinitive \kat^gorein\ is regular. Paul says \ethnos\ instead of \laos\ as in 24:17; 26:4.

28:20 {Did I intreat} (\parekalesa\). Did I invite you. {Because of the hope of Israel} (\heineken t^s elpidos tou Israel\). Genitive with preposition \heineken\. The hope of the Messiah is his point as in 26:6. {I am bound with this chain} (\t^nhalusin taut^nh perikeimai\). This old verb means to lie around as in Lu 17:2; Heb 12:1. But it is also used as the passive of \peritith^mi\, to place around with the accusative of \peritith^mi\ retained. It is a transitive passive. Paul does not lie around the chain, but the chain lies around him, a curious reversal of the imagery (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 815).

28:21 {Letters} (\grammata\). Official documents from the Sanhedrin about the charges against Paul. {Any harm of thee} (\ti peri sou pon^ron\). {Evil} (\pon^ron\). The three aorists (\edexametha, ap^ggeilen, elal^sen\) cover the past. These Jews do not mean to say that they had never heard of Paul. It is hardly likely that they had heard of his appeal to Caesar, "for how could the news have reached Rome before Paul?" (Page).

28:22 {But we desire} (\axioumen de\). Old verb \axio“, to deem worthy, to think right or proper as in 15:38 which see. They think it only fair to hear Paul's side of his case. {Concerning this sect} (\peri t^s hairesē“s taut^s\). Paul had identified Christianity with Judaism (verse 20) in its Messianic hope. The language seems to imply that the number of Christians in Rome was comparatively small and mainly Gentile. If the edict of Claudius for the expulsion of the Jews from Rome (Ac 18:2) was due to disturbance over Christ (\Chr^stus\), then even in Rome the Jews had special reason for hostility towards Christians. {Everywhere spoken against} (\pantachou antilegetai\). Cf. verse 19. The line of cleavage between Jew and Christian was now sharply drawn everywhere.

28:23 {Appointed} (\taxamenoi\). First aorist middle participle of \tass“. Formal arrangement as in Mt 28:16 when Jesus appointed the mountain for his meeting in Galilee. {In great number} (\pleiones\). Comparative of \polus\, "more than a few." {Expounded} (\exetitheto\). Imperfect middle of \ektith^mi\, to set forth, as in 11:4; 18:26. He did it with detail and care and spent all day at it, "from morning till evening" (\apo pr“i he“s hesperas\). In N.T. only here, 4:3 and Lu 24:29, though common word. {Persuading them concerning Jesus} (\peith“n autous peri tou I’sou\). Conative present active participle, trying to persuade. It was only about Jesus that he could make good his claim concerning the hope of Israel (verse 20). It was Paul's great opportunity. So he appealed both to Moses and to the prophets for proof as it was his custom to do.

28:24 {Some believed} (\hoi men epeithonto\). Imperfect passive indicative of \peith“\, More exactly, "some began to be persuaded" (inchoative). {Some disbelieved} (\hoi de ^pistoun\). Imperfect active of \apiste“\, to disbelieve, continued to disbelieve. It is usually so.

28:25 {When they agreed not} (\asumph“noi ontes\). Old adjective, only here in N.T., double compound (\a\ privative, \sum, ph“n^\), without symphony, out of harmony, dissonant, discordant. It was a triumph to gain adherents at all in such an audience. {They departed} (\apeluonto\). Imperfect middle (direct) indicative, "They loosed themselves from Paul." Graphic close. {After that Paul had spoken one word} (\eipontos tou Paulou rh^ma hen\). Genitive absolute. One last word (like a preacher) after the all day exposition. {Well} (\kal“s\). Cf. Mt 14:7; Mr 7:6,9 (irony). Here strong indignation in the very position of the word (Page). {To your fathers} (\pros tous pateras hum“n\). So Aleph A B instead of \h^m“n\ (our) like Stephen in 7:52 whose words Paul had heard. By mentioning the Holy Spirit Paul shows (Knowing) that they are resisting God (7:52).

28:26 {Say} (\eipon\). Second aorist active imperative instead of the old form \eipe\, The quotation is from Isa 6:9,10. This very passage is quoted by Jesus (Mt 13:14,15; Mr 4:12; Lu 8:10) in explanation of his use of parables and in Joh 12:40 the very point made by Paul here, "the disbelief of the Jews in Jesus" (Page). See on Matthew for discussion of the language used. Here the first time ("go to this people and say") does not occur in Matthew. It is a solemn dirge of the doom of the Jews for their rejection of the Messiah foreseen so long ago by Isaiah.

28:28 {This salvation} (\touto to s“t^rion\). Adjective from \s“t^r\ (Saviour), saving, bringing salvation. Common in the old Greek. The neuter as here often in LXX (as Ps 67:2) as substantive like \s“t^ria\ (cf. Lu 3:6). {They will also hear} (\autoi kai akousontai\). \Autoi\ as opposed to the rejection by the Jews, "vivid and antithetical" (Page).

28:30 {Two whole years} (\dietian hol^{\}). Only here in N.T. and 24:27 which see. During these busy years in Rome Paul wrote Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians, Epistles that would immortalize any man, unless, forsooth, one or more of them was written from Ephesus or Caesarea, which has not yet been proven. {In his own hired dwelling} (\en idi^i misth^{\}mati^{\}). Old word, here only in N.T., that which is hired for a price (from \mistho^{\} and that from \misthos^{\}, hire). {Received} (\apedecheto^{\}). Imperfect middle of \apodechomai^{\}, received from time to time as they came, all that came (\eisporeuomenous^{\}) from time to time. {Preaching} (\keruss^{\}n^{\}), {teaching} (\didask^{\}n^{\}), the two things that concerned Paul most, doing both as if his right hand was not in chains, to the amazement of those in Rome and in Philippi (Php 1:12-14). {None forbidding him} (\ak^{\}lut^{\}s^{\}). Old adverb from \a^{\} privative and the verbal adjective \k^{\}lutos^{\} (from \k^{\}lu^{\}, to hinder), here only in the N.T. Page comments on "the rhythmic cadence of the concluding words." Page rejects the notion that the book is an unfinished work. It closes with the style of a concluded work. I agree with Harnack that Luke wrote the Acts during this period of two years in Rome and carried events no further because they had gone no further. Paul was still a prisoner in Rome when Luke completed the book. But he had carried Paul to "Rome, the capital of the world, _Urbi et Orbi_" (Page). The gospel of Christ has reached Rome. For the fate of Paul we must turn elsewhere. But Luke had the presence of Paul while he carried the Acts to its triumphant conclusion. Ramsay can give a good deal in proof of his claim that Luke is the greatest of all historians. Beyond a doubt his rank is high and the world can never repay its debt to this cultured physician who wrote the Gospel and the Acts.

1:1 {To the Romans} (\pros R^{maious}\). This is the title in Aleph A B C, our oldest Greek MSS. for the Epistle. We do not know whether Paul gave any title at all. Later MSS. add other words up to the Textus Receptus: The Epistle of Paul to the Romans. The Epistle is put first in the MSS. because it is the most important of Paul's Epistles.

{Paul} (\Paulos\). Roman name (\Paulus\). See on [~]Ac 13:9 for the origin of this name by the side of Saul. {Servant} (\doulos\). Bond-slave of Jesus Christ (or Christ Jesus as some MSS. give it and as is the rule in the later Epistles) for the first time in the Epistles in the opening sentence, though the phrase already in Ga 1:10. Recurs in Php 1:1 and \desmios\ (bondsman) in Phm 1:1. {Called to be an apostle} (\kl^{tos} apostolos\). An apostle by vocation (Denney) as in 1Co 1:1. In Ga 1:1 \kl^{tos}\ is not used, but the rest of the verse has the same idea. {Separated} (\aph^{rismenos}\). Perfect passive participle of \aphoriz[~]\ for which verb see on [~]Ga 1:15. Paul is a spiritual Pharisee (etymologically), separated not to the oral tradition, but to God's gospel, a chosen vessel (Ac 9:15). By man also (Ac 13:2). Many of Paul's characteristic words like \euaggelion\ have been already discussed in the previous Epistles that will call for little comment from now on.

1:2 {He promised afore} (\proep^{ggeilato}\). First aorist middle of \proepaggell[~]\ for which verb see on [~]2Co 9:5. {By} (\dia\). Through, by means of, intermediate agency like Mt 1:22 which see. {In the holy scriptures} (\en graphais hagiais\). No article, yet definite. Perhaps the earliest use of the phrase (Sanday and Headlam). Paul definitely finds God's gospel in the Holy Scriptures.

1:3 {Concerning his Son} (\peri tou huiou autou\). Just as Jesus found himself in the O.T. (Lu 24:27,46). The deity of Christ here stated. {According to the flesh} (\kata sarka\). His real humanity alongside of his real deity. For the descent from David see Mt 1:1,6,20; Lu 1:27; Joh 7:42; Ac 13:23, etc.

1:4 {Who was declared} (\(tou horisthentos\)). Articular participle (first aorist passive) of \horiz“\ for which verb see on ̳Lu 22:22; Ac 2:23. He was the Son of God in his preincarnate state (2Co 8:9; Php 2:6) and still so after his Incarnation (verse 3, "of the seed of David"), but it was the Resurrection of the dead (\(ex anastase“s nekr“n\, the general resurrection implied by that of Christ) that definitely marked Jesus off as God's Son because of his claims about himself as God's Son and his prophecy that he would rise on the third day. This event (cf. 1Co 15) gave God's seal "with power" (\(en dunamei\), "in power," declared so in power (2Co 13:4). The Resurrection of Christ is the miracle of miracles. "The resurrection only declared him to be what he truly was" (Denney). {According to the spirit of holiness} (\(kata pneuma hagi“sun^s\). Not the Holy Spirit, but a description of Christ ethically as \kata sarka\ describes him physically (Denney). \Hagi“sun^s\ is rare (1Th 3:13; 2Co 7:1 in N.T.), three times in LXX, each time as the attribute of God. "The \pneuma hagi“sun^s\, though not the Divine nature, is that in which the Divinity or Divine Personality Resided " (Sanday and Headlam). {Jesus Christ our Lord} (\(I’sou Christou tou kuriou h^m“n\). These words gather up the total personality of Jesus (his deity and his humanity).

1:5 {Unto obedience of faith} (\(eis hupako^n piste“s\). Subjective genitive as in 16:26, the obedience which springs from faith (the act of assent or surrender).

1:6 {Called to be Jesus Christ's} (\(kl^toi I’sou Christou\). Predicate genitive after \kl^toi\ (verbal adjective from \kale“\, to call), though it is possible to consider it the ablative case, "called of (or from) Jesus Christ."

1:7 {In Rome} (\(en R“m^i\). One late uncial (G of tenth century) and a cursive omit these words here and one or two other late MSS. omit \en R“m^i\ in verse 15. This possibly proves the Epistle was circulated as a circular to a limited extent, but the evidence is late and slight and by no means shows that this was the case in the first century. It is not comparable with the absence of \en Ephes“i\ in Eph 1:1 from Aleph and B (the two oldest and best MSS.). {Beloved of God} (\(agap^tois theou\). Ablative case of \theou\ after the verbal adjective like \didaktoi theou\ (taught of God) in Joh 6:45 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 516). {From God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ} (\(apo theou patros h^m“n kai kuriou I’sou Christou\).

"St. Paul, if not formally enunciating a doctrine of the Divinity of Christ, held a view which cannot really be distinguished from it" (Sanday and Headlam). Paul's theology is clearly seen in the terms used in verses 1-7.

1:8 {First} (\pr^{ton} men\). Adverb in the accusative case, but no \epeita de\ (in the next place) as in Heb 7:2 or \epeita\ as in Jas 3:17 follows. The rush of thoughts crowds out the balanced phraseology as in Ro 3:2; 1Co 11:18. {Through} (\dia\). As the mediator or medium of thanksgiving as in 7:25. {For} (\peri\). Concerning, about. {That} (\hoti\). Or because. Either declarative or causal \hoti\ makes sense here. {Your faith} (\h^{pistis} humⁿ\). "Your Christianity" (Sanday and Headlam). {Is proclaimed} (\kataggelletai\). Present passive indicative of \kataggell^{ai}\, to announce (\aggell^{ai}\) up and down (\kata\). See also \anaggell^{ai}\, to bring back news (Joh 5:15), \apaggell^{ai}\, to announce from one as the source (Mt 2:8), \prokataggell^{ai}\, to announce far and wide beforehand (Ac 3:18). {Throughout all the world} (\en holⁱ tⁱ kosmⁱ\). Natural hyperbole as in Col 1:6; Ac 17:6. But widely known because the church was in the central city of the empire.

1:9 {I serve} (\latreu^{ai}\). Old verb from \latron\, hire, and \latris\, hireling, so to serve for hire, then to serve in general gods or men, whether sacred services (Heb 9:9; 10:2) or spiritual service as here. Cf. Ro 12:1; Php 3:3. {Unceasingly} (\adialeipt^{os}\). Late adverb for which see 1Th 1:2f.; 2:13; 5:17, only other N.T. examples. {Always} (\pantote\). One might think that Paul prayed for no others, but he uses both adverbs in 1Th 1:2. He seems to have had prayer lists. He never omitted the Romans.

1:10 {If by any means now at length} (\ei p^{os} ^d^h pote\). A condition of the first class in the form of an indirect question (aim) or elliptical condition like Ac 27:12 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1024). Note the four particles together to express Paul's feelings of emotion that now at length somehow it may really come true. {I may be prospered} (\euod^{ai} th^{somai}\). First future passive indicative of \euodo^{ai}\ for which verb see on 1Co 16:2. {By the will of God} (\en tⁱ thel^{mati} tou theou\). Paul's way lay "in" God's will.

1:11 {Impart} (\metad^{ai}\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \metadid^{ai}\, to share with one. See on 1Lu 3:11; 1Th 2:8. {To the end ye may be established} (\eis to st^{richth}^nai humas\). Final clause (common in Paul) with \eis to\ and the first aorist passive infinitive of \st^{riz}“\ for which verb see on ̄Lu 22:32; 1Th 3:3,13.

1:12 {That is} (\touto de estin\). "An explanatory correction" (Denney). The \de\ should not be ignored. Instead of saying that he had a spiritual gift for them, he wishes to add that they also have one for him. {That I with you may be comforted} (\sunparaklth^nai en humin\). "My being comforted in you (\en humin\ together (\sun-\) with you," a mutual blessing to each party (you and me).

1:13 {Oftentimes I purposed} (\pollakis proethemⁿ\). Second aorist middle of \protith^{mi}\, old verb to place, to propose to oneself, in N.T. only here, 3:25; Eph 1:9. See Ac 19:21 for this purpose. {And was hindered} (\kai ek^{luth}^n\). "But was hindered," adversative use of \kai\. {That I might have some fruit} (\hina tina karpon sch[“]\). Second aorist (ingressive), active of \ech[“]\, to have, and here means "might get (ingressive aorist) some fruit."

1:14 On {debtor} (\opheilet^s\) see Ga 5:3. {Both to Greeks and to Barbarians} (\Hell^{sin} te kai barbarois\). The whole human race from the Greek point of view, Jews coming under \barbarois\. On this word see Ac 18:2,4; 1Co 4:11; Col 3:11 (only N.T. instances). The Greeks called all others barbarians and the Jews termed all others Gentiles. Did Paul consider the Romans as Greeks? They had absorbed the Greek language and culture.

1:15 {So as much as in me is I am ready} (\hout[“] to kat' eme prothumon\). Literally, "Thus the according to me affair is ready" (\prothumos\, old adjective, \pro, thumos\). It is an awkward idiom like to \ex hum[“]n\ in 12:18. The plural \ta kat' eme\ we find in Php 1:12; Col 4:7; Eph 6:21.

1:16 {It is the power of God} (\dunamis theou estin\). This Paul knew by much experience. He had seen the dynamite of God at work. {To the Jew first, and also to the Greek} (\Ioudaiⁱ te pr[“]ton kai Hellⁿⁱ\). Jesus had taught this (Joh 4:22; 10:16; Lu 24:47; Ac 1:8). The Jew is first in privilege and in penalty (Ro 2:9f.). It is not certain that \pr[“]ton\ is genuine, but it is in 2:9f.

1:17 {For therein} (\gar en aut“i\). In the gospel (verse 16) of which Paul is not ashamed. {A righteousness of God} (\dikaiosun^ theou\). Subjective genitive, "a God kind of righteousness," one that each must have and can obtain in no other way save "from faith unto faith" (\ek piste“s eis pistin\), faith the starting point and faith the goal (Lightfoot). {Is revealed} (\apokaluptetai\). It is a revelation from God, this God kind of righteousness, that man unaided could never have conceived or still less attained. In these words we have Paul's statement in his own way of the theme of the Epistle, the content of the gospel as Paul understands it. Every word is important: \s“t^rian\ (salvation), \euaggelion\ (gospel), \apokaluptetai\ (is revealed), \dikaiosun^ theou\ (righteousness of God), \pistis\ (faith) and \pisteuonti\ (believing). He grounds his position on Hab 2:4 (quoted also in Ga 3:11). By "righteousness" we shall see that Paul means both "justification" and "sanctification." It is important to get a clear idea of Paul's use of \dikaiosun^ here for it controls the thought throughout the Epistle. Jesus set up a higher standard of righteousness (\dikaiosun^) in the Sermon on the Mount than the Scribes and Pharisees taught and practised (Mt 5:20) and proves it in various items. Here Paul claims that in the gospel, taught by Jesus and by himself there is revealed a God kind of righteousness with two ideas in it (the righteousness that God has and that he bestows). It is an old word for quality from \dikaios\, a righteous man, and that from \dik^, right or justice (called a goddess in Ac 28:4), and that allied with \deiknumi\, to show, to point out. Other allied words are \dikaio“, to declare or make \dikaios\ (Ro 3:24,26), \dikai“ma\, that which is deemed \dikaios\ (sentence or ordinance as in 1:32; 2:26; 8:4), \dikai“sis\, the act of declaring \dikaios\ (only twice in N.T., 4:25; 5:18). \Dikaiosun^ and \dikaio“ are easy to render into English, though we use justice in distinction from righteousness and sanctification for the result that comes after justification (the setting one right with God). Paul is consistent and usually clear in his use of these great words.

1:18 {For the wrath of God is revealed} (\apokaluptetai gar org^ theou\). Note in Romans Paul's use of \gar\, now argumentative, now explanatory, now both as here. There is a parallel and antecedent revelation (see verse 17) of God's wrath corresponding to the revelation of God's righteousness, this an unwritten revelation, but plainly made known. \Org^ is from \orga^, to teem, to swell. It is the temper of God towards sin, not rage, but the wrath of reason and law (Shedd). The revelation of God's righteousness in the gospel was necessary because of the failure of men to attain it without it, for God's wrath justly rested upon all both Gentiles (1:18-32) and Jews (2:1-3:20). {Ungodliness} (\asebeian\). Irreligion, want of reverence toward God, old word (cf. 2Ti 2:16). {Unrighteousness} (\adikian\). Lack (\a\ privative and \dik^\) of right conduct toward men, injustice (Ro 9:14; Lu 18:6). This follows naturally from irreverence. The basis of ethical conduct rests on the nature of God and our attitude toward him, otherwise the law of the jungle (cf. Nietzsche, "might makes right"). {Hold down the truth} (\t^n al^theian katechont^n\). Truth (\al^theia, al^th^s\, from \a\ privative and \l^th^n or \lanthan^, to conceal) is out in the open, but wicked men, so to speak, put it in a box and sit on the lid and "hold it down in unrighteousness." Their evil deeds conceal the open truth of God from men. Cf. 2Th 2:6f. for this use of \katech^, to hinder.

1:19 {Because} (\dioti\). Gives the reason (\dia, hoti\ like our "for that") for the revelation of God's wrath. {That which may be known of God} (\to gn^ston tou theou\). Verbal adjective from \gin^sk^, either "the known" as elsewhere in N.T. (Ac 1:19; 15:18, etc.) or "the knowable" as usual in ancient Greek, that is "the knowledge" (\h^ gn^sis\) of God. See Php 3:8. Cf. same use of the verbal \chr^ston in Ro 2:4, \ametatheton in Heb 6:17. {Manifest in them} (\phaneron en autois\). In their hearts and consciences. {God manifested} (\ho theos ephaner^sen\). First aorist active indicative of \phanero^\. Not mere tautology. See 2:14-16.

1:20 {The invisible things of him} (\ta aorata autou\). Another verbal adjective (\a\ privative and \hora^, to see), old word, either unseen or invisible as here and elsewhere in N.T. (Col 1:15f., etc.). The attributes of God's nature defined here as "his everlasting power and divinity" (\h^ te aidios autou dunamis kai theiot^s\). \Aidios\ is for \aaidios\ from \aei\ (always), old word, in N.T. only here and Jude 1:6, common in Philo (\z^ aidios\), elsewhere \ai^nios\. \Theiot^s\ is from \theios\ (from \theos\) quality of \theos\ and corresponds more to Latin _divinitas_ from _divus_, divine. In Col 2:9 Paul uses \theot^s\ (Latin _deitas_ from _deus_) {deity}, both old words and nowhere else in the N.T. \Theot^s\ is Divine Personality, \theiot^s\, Divine Nature and properties (Sanday and Headlam). {Since the creation of the world} (\apo ktise^s kosmou\). He means by God and unto God as antecedent to and superior to the world (cf. Col 1:15f. about Christ). {Are clearly seen} (\kathoratai\). Present passive indicative of \kathora^a\ (perfective use of \kata-), old word, only here in N.T., with direct reference to \aorata\. {Being perceived} (\nooumena\). Present passive participle of \noe^a\, to use the \nous\ (intellect). {That they may be without excuse} (\eis to einai autous anapolog^{tous}\). More likely, "so that they are without excuse." The use of \eis to\ and the infinitive (with accusative of general reference) for result like \h^aste\ is reasonably clear in the N.T. (Moulton, _Prolegomena_, p. 219; Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1003). \Anapolog^{tous}\ is another verbal with \an\ from \apologeomai\. Old word, in N.T. only here and Ro 2:1 ("inexcusable" here).

1:21 {Because that} (\dioti\). As in verse 19. {Knowing God} (\gnontes ton theon\). Second aorist active participle of \gin^ask^a\, to know by personal experience. Definite statement that originally men had some knowledge of God. No people, however degraded, have yet been found without some yearning after a god, a seeking to find the true God and get back to him as Paul said in Athens (Ac 17:27). {Glorified not as God} (\ouch h^as theon edoxasan\). They knew more than they did. This is the reason for the condemnation of the heathen (2:12-16), the failure to do what they know. {Their senseless heart} (\h^a asunetos aut^an kardia\). \Kardia\ is the most comprehensive term for all our faculties whether feeling (Ro 9:2), will (1Co 4:5), intellect (Ro 10:6). It may be the home of the Holy Spirit (Ro 5:5) or of evil desires (1:24). See Mr 7:21f. for list of vices that come "out of the heart." \Asunetos\ is a verbal adjective from \suni^{mi}\, to put together, and \a\ privative, unintelligent, not able to put together the manifest evidence about God (verse 20). So darkness settled down on their hearts (\eskotisth^a\, first aorist ingressive passive of \skotiz^a\, to darken).

1:22 {Professing themselves to be wise} (\phaskontes einai sophoi\). \Sophoi\ is predicate nominative with \einai\ in indirect discourse agreeing with \phaskontes\ (old verb, from \ph^ami\, to say, rare in N.T.) in case and number according to regular Greek idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1038). {Became vain} (\ematai“th^san\). Ingressive first aorist passive indicative of \mataio“\ from \mataios\ (empty). Empty reasonings as often today. {Became fools} (\em“ranth^san\). Ingressive first aorist passive of \m“rain“, to be a fool, old word from \m“ros\, a fool. An oxymoron or sharp saying, true and one that cuts to the bone. {For the likeness of an image} (\en homoi“mati eikonos\). Both words, "a likeness which consists in an image or copy" (Lightfoot). See Php 2:7 for "likeness of men" and Col 1:15 for "image of God." Paul shows indignant contempt for these grotesque efforts to present pictures of a deity that had been lost (Denney). Why is it that heathen images of gods in the form of men and beasts are so horrible to look upon?

1:24 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Paul's inexorable logic. See it also in verse 26 with the same verb and in verse 28 \kai\ like "and so." {God gave them up} (\pared“ken autous ho theos\). First aorist active indicative of \paradid“mi\, old and common verb to hand over (beside, \para\) to one's power as in Mt 4:12. These people had already wilfully deserted God who merely left them to their own self-determination and self-destruction, part of the price of man's moral freedom. Paul refers to this stage and state of man in Ac 17:30 by "overlooked" (\huperid“n\). The withdrawal of God's restraint sent men deeper down. Three times Paul uses \pared“ken\ here (verses 24,26,28), not three stages in the giving over, but a repetition of the same withdrawal. The words sound to us like clods on the coffin as God leaves men to work their own wicked will. {That their bodies should be dishonoured} (\tou atimazesthai ta s“mata aut“n\). Contemplated result expressed by \tou\ (genitive article) and the passive infinitive \atimazesthai\ (from \atimos\, \a\ privative and \timos\, dishonoured) with the accusative of general reference. Christians had a new sense of dignity for the body (1Th 4:4; 1Co 6:13). Heathenism left its stamp on the bodies of men and women.

1:25 {Exchanged} (\met^llaxan\). First aorist active indicative of \metallass“, old word for exchanging trade, only here and verse 26 in N.T. What a bargain they made, "the truth of God for (\en\) the (\t“i\ lie." "The price of mythology" (Bengel). {Worshipped} (\esebasth^san\). First aorist passive (used transitively) of \sebazomai\, old verb, used in late Greek like \sebomai\, to worship. {Rather than the Creator} (\para ton ktisanta\). Placed side by side (\para\, the Creator and the creature, \ktisis\) they preferred the creature. {Who is blessed forever. Amen} (hos estin eulog^{tos}. Amⁿ\). One of Paul's doxologies which may come at any moment when he is greatly stirred, as in 9:5. \Eulog^{tos}\ is verbal of \euloge“\.

1:26 {Unto vile passions} (eis path^{atimias}\). Unto passions of dishonour. \Pathos\, old word from \pasch“\, to experience, originally meant any feeling whether good or bad, but in N.T. always in bad sense as here, 1Th 4:5; Col 3:5 (only N.T. examples). {That which is against nature} (tⁿ para phusin\). The degradation of sex is what Paul here notes as one of the results of heathenism (the loss of God in the life of man). They passed by the Creator.

1:27 {Turned} (exekauth^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative, causative aorist, of \ekkai“\, old verb, to burn out, to set on fire, to inflame with anger or lust. Here only in N.T. {Lust} (orexei\). Only here in N.T. {Unseemliness} (asch^{mosunⁿ}\). Old word from \asch^{mon}\ (deformed). In N.T. only here and Re 16:15. {Recompense} (antimisthian\). See on 2Co 6:13 for only other N.T. instance of this late Pauline word, there in good sense, here in bad. {Which was due} (hⁿ edei\). Imperfect active for obligation still on them coming down from the past. This debt will be paid in full (apolambanontes\, pay back as in Lu 6:34, and due as in Lu 23:41). Nature will attend to that in their own bodies and souls.

1:28 {And even as they refused} (kai kath“s ouk edokimasan\). "And even as they rejected" after trial just as \dokimaz“\ is used of testing coins. They tested God at first and turned aside from him. {Knowledge} (epign“sei\). Full knowledge (epi^{additional}, gn“sis\). They had a dim memory that was a caricature. {Unto a reprobate mind} (eis adokimon noun\). Play on \ouk edokimasan\). They rejected God and God rejected their mental attitude and gave them over (verses 24,26,28). See this adjective already in 1Co 9:27; 2Co 13:5-7. Like an old abandoned building, the home of bats and snakes, left "to do those things which are not fitting" (poiein ta m^{kath^{konta}}\), like the night clubs of modern cities, the dives and dens of the underworld, without God and in the darkness of unrestrained animal impulses. This was a technical term with Stoics (II Macc. 6:4).

"filled to the brim with" four vices in the associative instrumental case (\adikifi\, unrighteousness as in verse 18, \pon^{ri}fi\, active wickedness as in Mr 7:22, \pleonexifi\, covetousness as in 1Th 2:5; Lu 12:15, \kakifi\, maliciousness or inward viciousness of disposition as in 1Co 5:8). Note asyndeton, no connective in the lists in verses 29-31. Dramatic effect. The order of these words varies in the MSS. and \porneifi\, fornication, is not genuine here (absent in Aleph A B C). {Full of} (\mestous\). Paul changes from participle to adjective. Old adjective, rare in the N.T., like \mesto“, to fill full (only in Ac 2:13 in N.T.), stuffed full of (with genitive). Five substantives in the genitive (\phthonou\, envy, as in Ga 5:21, \phonou\, murder, and so a paronomasia or combination with \phthonou\, of like sounding words, \eridos\, strife, as in 2Co 12:16, \kako^{thias}\, malignty, and here only in N.T. though old word from \kakoths\ and that from \kakos\ and \^{thos}\, a tendency to put a bad construction on things, depravity of heart and malicious disposition.)

1:30 Paul changes the construction again to twelve substantives and adjectives that give vivid touches to this composite photograph of the God abandoned soul. {Whisperers} (\psithuristas\). Old word from \psithuriz“, to speak into the ear, to speak secretly, an onomatopoetic word like \psithurismos\ (2Co 12:20) and only here in N.T. {Backbiters} (\katalalous\). Found nowhere else except in Hermas, compound like \katalale“, to talk back (Jas 4:11), and \katalalia\, talking back (2Co 12:20), talkers back whether secretly or openly. {Hateful to God} (\theostugeis\). Old word from \theos\ and \stuge“. All the ancient examples take it in the passive sense and so probably here. So \stug^{tos}\ (Tit 3:13). Vulgate has _deo odibiles_. {Insolent} (\hubristas\). Old word for agent from \hubriz“, to give insult to, here alone in N.T. save 1Ti 1:13. {Haughty} (\huper^{phanous}\). From \huper\ and \phainomai\, to appear above others, arrogant in thought and conduct, "stuck up." {Boastful} (\alazonas\). From \al“, wandering. Empty pretenders, swaggerers, braggarts. {Inventors of evil things} (\epheuretas kakⁿ\). Inventors of new forms of vice as Nero was. Tacitus (_Ann_. IV. ii) describes Sejanus as _facinorum omnium repertor_ and Virgil (_Aen_. ii. 163) _scelerum inventor_. {Disobedient to parents} (\goneusin apeitheis\). Cf. 1Ti 1:9; 2Ti 3:2. An ancient and a modern trait.

1:31 {Without understanding} (\asunetous\). Same word in verse 21. {Covenant-breakers} (\asunthetous\). Another paronomasia or pun. \A\ privative and verbal \sunthetos\ from \suntith^mi\, to put together. Old word, common in LXX (Jer 3:7), men "false to their engagements" (Sanday and Headlam), who treat covenants as "a scrap of paper." {Without natural affection} (\astorgous\). Late word, \a\ privative and \storg^, love of kindred. In N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:3. {Unmerciful} (\anele^monas\). From \a\ privative and \ele^m^"n\, merciful. Late word, only here in N.T. Some MSS. add \aspondous\, implacable, from 2Ti 3:3. It is a terrible picture of the effects of sin on the lives of men and women. The late Dr. R. H. Graves of Canton, China, said that a Chinaman who got hold of this chapter declared that Paul could not have written it, but only a modern missionary who had been to China. It is drawn to the life because Paul knew Pagan Graeco-Roman civilization.

1:32 {The ordinance of God} (\to dikai^ma tou theou\). The heathen knows that God condemns such evil practices. {But also consent with them} (\alla kai suneudokousin\). Late verb for hearty approval as in Lu 11:48; Ac 8:1; 1Co 7:12. It is a tragedy of American city government that so many of the officials are proven to be hand in glove with the underworld of law-breakers.

(Romans: Chapter 1)

2:1 {Wherefore} (\dio\). See 1:24,26 for this relative conjunction, "because of which thing." {Without excuse} (\anapolog^{tos}\). See on 1:21. {Whosoever thou art that judgest} (\pas ho krinⁿ\). Literally, "every one that judgest," vocative case in apposition with \anthr^{pe}\. Paul begins his discussion of the failure of the Jew to attain to the God-kind of righteousness (2:1-3:20) with a general statement applicable to all as he did (1:18) in the discussion of the failure of the Gentiles (Lightfoot). The Gentile is readily condemned by the Jew when he sins and equally so is the Jew condemned by the Gentile in like case. \Krinⁿ\ does not of itself mean to condemn, but to pick out, separate, approve, determine, pronounce judgment, condemn (if proper). {Another} (\ton heteron\). Literally, "the other man." The notion of two in the word, one criticizing the other. {Thou condemnest thyself} (\seauton katakrineis\). Note \kata\ here with \krinⁿ\, to make plain the adverse judgment. {For} (\gar\). Explanatory reason for the preceding statement. The critic {practises} (\prasseis, not single acts \poieⁿ\, but the habit \prassⁿ\) the same things that he condemns.

2:2 {Judgment} (\krima\). Decision rendered whether good or bad. {According to} (\kata\ with accusative). As the rule of measure. Cf. Joh 7:24.

2:3 {And doest the same} (\kai poiⁿ auta\). "And doest them occasionally." {That thou shalt escape} (\su ekpheuxⁱ\). Emphasis on \su\, "thou conceited Jew expecting to escape God's \krima\ because thou art a Jew." Cf. Mt 3:8f. Paul justifies the bitter words of the Baptist to the Pharisees and Sadducees. The future middle of the old verb \ekpheugⁿ\ (cf. 1Th 5:3). The Jew posed as immune to the ordinary laws of ethics because a Jew. Alas, some Christians affect the same immunity.

2:4 {Or despiseth thou?} (\[^]kataphroneis?\). Another alternative, that of scorn of God's kindness (\chr^{stot}^{tos}\, 2Co 6:6) and forbearance (\anoch^s\, old word, holding back from \anechⁿ\, only here in N.T.) and longsuffering (\makrothumias\, late word for which see 2Co 6:4,6).

\Kataphrone“\ is old verb to think down on (kata, phrone“) as in Mt 6:24; 1Co 11:22. This upstart Jew actually thinks down on God. And then "the riches" (tou ploutou\) of all that comes from God. {Leadeth thee to repentance} (eis metanoian se agei\). The very kindness (to chrston\, the kindly quality) of God is trying to lead (conative present agei\) thee to a right-about face, a change of mind and attitude (metanoian\) instead of a complacent self-satisfaction and pride of race and privilege.

2:5 {After thy hardness} (kata tⁿ skl^{rot}ta sou\). "According to thy hardness (old word from skl^{ros}\, hard, stiff, only here in N.T.) will God's judgment be." {And impenitent heart} (kai ametano^{ton} kardian\). See \metanoian\ just before. "Thy unreconstructed heart," "with no change in the attitude of thy heart." {Treasurest up for thyself} (th^{saurizeis} seautⁱ\). See for \th^{sauriz}“\ on Mt 6:19f.; Lu 12:21; 2Co 12:14. Dative case \seautⁱ“\ (for thyself) with a touch of irony (Vincent). {Wrath} (orgⁿ\). For such a Jew as already stated for the Gentile (1:18). There is a revelation (apokalypse“s\) of God's wrath for both in the day of wrath and righteous judgment (dikaio^{krisias}\, a late compound word, in LXX, two examples in the Oxyrhynchus papyri, only here in N.T.). See 2Th 1:5 for \dikaia^s krise^s“s\ . Paul looks to the judgment day as certain (cf. 2Co 5:10-12), the day of the Lord (2Co 1:14).

2:6 {Who will render} (hos apod^{sei}\). Paul quotes Pr 24:12 as in 2Ti 4:14. See also Mt 16:27; Re 22:12. The rendering will be in accord with the facts.

2:7 {To them that seek} (tois men--z^{tousin}\). Dative plural of the articular present active participle of \z^{te}“\ with \men\ on the one hand. {Eternal life} (zⁿ ai^{nion}\). Accusative case object of \apod^{sei}“\ above.

2:8 {But unto them that are factious and obey not the truth but obey unrighteousness} (tois de ex eritheias kai apeithousin tⁱ al^{theifi} peithomenois de adikifi\). The other side with \de\ and the articular present participles in the dative again, only with \ex eritheias\, there is no participle \ousin\ . But the construction changes and the substantives that follow are not the object of \apod^{sei}“\ like \zⁿ ain^{nion}“\ above, but are in the nominative as if with \esontai\ (shall be) understood (anger and wrath, both orgⁿ\ and thumos\, tribulation and anguish, again a pair thlipsis kai stenoch^{ria}\ on which see 2Co 5:4; 12:10).

2:9 {Every soul of man} (\pasan psuchⁿ anthr^o pou\). See 13:1 for this use of \psuchⁿ for the individual. {Of the Jew first and also of the Greek} (\Ioudaiou te pr^oton kai Hellⁿos\). See on 1:16. First not only in penalty as here, but in privilege also as in 2:11; 1:16.

2:11 {Respect of persons} (\pros^o pol^l mpsia\). Milligan (_Vocabulary_) considers this word (in N.T. only here, Col 3:25; Eph 6:9) and \pros^o pol^l mpt^s (Ac 10:34) and \pros^o pol^l mpte^o (Jas 2:9) the earliest definitely known Christian words, not in LXX or non-Christian writings. See on Ac 10:34 for the formation in imitation of the Hebrew to take note of the face (\pros^o pon, lamban^o\), to judge by the face or appearance.

2:12 {Have sinned} (\h^o marton\). Constativ aorist active indicative, "sinned," a timeless aorist. {Without law} (\anom^o s\). Old adverb "contrary to law," "unjustly," but here in ignorance of the Mosaic law (or of any law). Nowhere else in N.T. {Shall also perish without law} (\anom^o s kai apolountai\). Future middle indicative of \apollumi\, to destroy. This is a very important statement. The heathen who sin are lost, because they do not keep the law which they have, not because they do not have the Mosaic law or Christianity. {Under law} (\en nom^o i\). In the sphere of the Mosaic law. {By the law} (\dia nomou\). The Jew has to stand or fall by the Mosaic law.

2:13 {Not the hearers--but the doers} (\ou gar hoi akroatai--all' hoi poi^o tai\). The law was read in the synagogue, but there was no actual virtue in listening. The virtue is in doing. See a like contrast by James between "hearers" and "doers" of the gospel (Jas 1:22-25). {Before God} (\para t^o i the^o i\). By God's side, as God looks at it. {Shall be justified} (\dikai^o th^o sontai\). Future passive indicative of \dikaio^o\, to declare righteous, to set right. "Shall be declared righteous." Like Jas 1:22-25.

2:14 {That have no law} (\ta m^o nomon echonta\). Better, "that have not the law" (the Mosaic law). {By nature} (\phusei\). Instrumental case of \phusis\, old word from \phu^o\, to beget. The Gentiles are without the Mosaic law, but not without some knowledge of God in conscience and when they do right "they are a law to themselves" (\heautois eisin nomos\). This is an obvious reply to the Jewish critic.

2:15 {In that they} (\hoitines). "The very ones who," qualitative relative. {Written in their hearts} (\grapton en tais kardiais aut“n). Verbal adjective of \graph“, to write. When their conduct corresponds on any point with the Mosaic law they practise the unwritten law in their hearts. {Their conscience bearing witness therewith} (\sunmarturous^s aut“n t^s suneid^se“s). On conscience (\suneid^sis) see on 1Co 8:7; 10:25f.; 2Co 1:12. Genitive absolute here with present active participle \sunmarturous^s as in 9:1. The word \suneid^sis means co-knowledge by the side of the original consciousness of the act. This second knowledge is personified as confronting the first (Sanday and Headlam). The Stoics used the word a great deal and Paul has it twenty times. It is not in the O.T., but first in this sense in Wisdom 17:10. All men have this faculty of passing judgment on their actions. It can be over-scrupulous (1Co 10:25) or "seared" by abuse (1Ti 4:12). It acts according to the light it has. {Their thoughts one with another accusing or also excusing them} (\metaxu all^l“n t“n logism“n kat^gorount“n ^ kai apologoumen“n). Genitive absolute again showing the alternative action of the conscience, now accusing, now excusing. Paul does not say that a heathen's conscience always commends everything that he thinks, says, or does. In order for one to be set right with God by his own life he must always act in accord with his conscience and never have its disapproval. That, of course, is impossible else Christ died for naught (Ga 2:21). Jesus alone lived a sinless life. For one to be saved without Christ he must also live a sinless life.

2:16 {According to my gospel} (\kata to euaggelion mou). What Paul preaches (1Co 15:1) and which is the true gospel

2:17 {Bearest the name} (\eponomaz^i). Present passive indicative in condition of first class of \eponomaz“, old word, to put a name upon (\epi), only here in N.T. "Thou art surnamed Jew" (Lightfoot). Jew as opposed to Greek denoted nationality while Hebrew accented the idea of language. {Restest upon the law} (\epanapau^i nom“i). Late and rare double compound, in LXX and once in the Didache. In N.T. only here and Lu 10:6 which see. It means to lean upon, to refresh oneself back upon anything, here with locative case (\nom“i). It is the picture of blind and mechanical reliance on the Mosaic law. {Gloriest in God} (\kauchfsai en the“i). _Koin,_ vernacular form for \kauchfi (\kauchaesai, kauchfsai) of \kauchaomai as in verse 23; 1Co 4:7 and \katakauchfsai\ in Ro 11:18. The Jew gloried in God as a national asset and private prerogative (2Co 10:15; Ga 6:13). {Approvest the things that are excellent} (\dokimazeis ta diapheronta\). Originally, "Thou testest the things that differ," and then as a result comes the approval for the excellent things. As in Php 1:10 it is difficult to tell which stage of the process Paul has in mind. {Instructed out of the law} (\kat^choumenos ek tou nomou\). Present passive participle of \kat^che\, a rare verb to instruct, though occurring in the papyri for legal instruction. See on ^Lu 1:4; 1Co 14:19. The Jew's "ethical discernment was the fruit of catechetical and synagogical instruction in the Old Testament" (Shedd).

2:19 {A guide of the blind} (\hod^gon tuphl^"n\). Accusative \hod^gon\ in predicate with \einai\ to agree with \seauton\, accusative of general reference with infinitive \einai\ in indirect discourse after \pepoithas\. Late word (Polybius, Plutarch) from \hodos\, way, and \h^geomai\, to lead, one who leads the way. \Tuphl^"n\ is objective genitive plural. The Jews were meant by God to be guides for the Gentiles, for salvation is of the Jews (Joh 4:22). {A light} (\ph^"s\). "A light for those in darkness" (\t^"n en skotei\, objective genitive again). But this intention of God about the Jews had resulted in conceited arrogance on their part.

2:20 {A corrector of the foolish} (\paideut^"n aphron^"n\). Old word (from \paideu^") for instructor, in Plato, and probably so here, though corrector or chastiser in Heb 12:9 (the only N.T. instances). See Lu 23:16. Late inscriptions give it as instructor (Preisigke). \Aphron^"n\ is a hard word for Gentiles, but it is the Jewish standpoint that Paul gives. Each termed the other "dogs." {Of babes} (\n^pi^"n\). Novitiates or proselytes to Judaism just as in Ga 4:1. Paul used it of those not of legal age. {The form} (\t^"n morph^"sin\). Rare word only in Theophrastus and Paul (here and 2Ti 3:5). Pallis regards it as a Stoical term for education. Lightfoot considers the \morph^"sis\ as "the rough-sketch, the pencilling of the \morph^", the outline or framework, and in 2Ti 3:5 "the outline without the substance." This is Paul's picture of the Jew as he sees himself drawn with consummate skill and subtle irony.

2:21 {Thou therefore that teachest another} (\ho oun didask^"n heteron\). Paul suddenly breaks off (anacoluthon) the long sentence that began in verse 17 and starts over again with a phrase that gathers it all up in small compass (teachest) and drives it home (therefore) on the Jew (thysself). {Not to steal} (\m[^]kleptein\). Infinitive with \m[^]\ in indirect command (indirect discourse) after \keruss“n\, {Dost thou steal?} (\klepteis?\). The preaching (\keruss“n\ was fine, but the practice? A home-thrust. {Should not commit adultery} (\m[^]moicheuein\). Infinitive in direct command again after \leg“n\, "The Talmud charges the crime of adultery upon the three most illustrious Rabbins" (Vincent).

2:22 {That abhorrest} (\ho bdelussomenos\). Old word to make foul, to stink, to have abhorrence for. In LXX, in N.T. only here and Re 21:8. The very word used by Jesus to express their horror of idols (\eid“la\, see on Ac 7:41; 1Co 12:2). See Mt 24:15 for "abomination." {Dost thou rob temples?} (\hierosuleis?\). Old verb from \hierosulos\ (Ac 19:37) and that from \hieron\, temple, and \sula“, to rob. The town clerk (Ac 19:37) said that these Jews (Paul and his companions) were "not robbers of temples," proof that the charge was sometimes made against Jews, though expressly forbidden the Jews (Josephus, Ant. IV. 8, 10). Paul refers to the crime of robbing idol temples in spite of the defilement of contact with idolatry.

2:23 {Through thy transgression of the law} (\dia t[^]s parabase“s tou nomou\). Old word for stepping across a line. Trench calls attention to "the mournfully numerous group of words" for the varieties of sin like \agno[^]ma\, ignorance, \anomia\, violation of law, \hamartia\, missing the mark, \hett[^]ma\, falling short, \parabasis\, passing over the line, \parako[^]\, disobedience to a voice, \paranomia\, putting the law aside, \parapt“ma\, falling down, \pl[^]mmeleia\, discord.

2:24 {Because of you} (\di' humas\). Free quotation from the LXX of Isa 52:5. The Jews were jealous for the Name of God and would not pronounce the Tetragrammaton and yet acted so that the Gentiles blasphemed that Name.

2:25 {If thou be a doer of the law} (\ean nomon prasseis\). Condition of third class and the present (continued action) subjunctive of \prass“, a verb meaning to do as a habit. {Is become uncircumcision} (\akrobusia gegonen\). The Jew is then like the Gentile, with no privilege at all. Circumcision was simply the seal of the covenant relation of Israel with God.

2:26 {Keep} (\phulass^i\). Present subjunctive with \ean\, condition of third class, mere supposition like that in verse 25, "keep on keeping" perfectly, Paul means. {For} (\eis\). As often in N.T.

2:27 {If it fulfill the law} (\ton nomon telousa\). Present active participle (conditional use of the participle) of \tele^, to finish, continually fulfilling to the end (as would be necessary). {Judge thee} (\krinei--se\). Unusual position of \se\ (thee) so far from the verb \krinei\. {With the letter and circumcision} (\dia grammatos kai peritom^s\). \Dia\ means here accompanied by, with the advantage of.

2:28 {Which is one outwardly} (\ho en t^i phaner^i\). \Ioudaios\ (Jew) has to be repeated (ellipse) with the article, "the in the open Jew" (circumcision, phylacteries, tithes, etc.). Likewise repeat \peritom^ (circumcision).

2:29 {Who is one inwardly} (\ho en t^i krupt^i\). Repeat \Ioudaios\ (Jew) here also, "the in the inward part Jew" (circumcision of the heart \peritom^ kardias\ and not a mere surgical operation as in Col 2:11, in the spirit \en pneumat^i\, with which compare 2Co 3:3,6). This inward or inside Jew who lives up to his covenant relation with God is the high standard that Paul puts before the merely professional Jew described above. {Whose praise} (\hou ho epainos\). The antecedent of the relative \hou\ is \Ioudaios\ (Jew). Probably (Gifford) a reference to the etymology of Judah (praise) as seen in Ga 49:8.

3:1 {What advantage then hath the Jew?} (\ti oun to perisson tou Ioudaiou?). Literally, "What then is the overplus of the Jew?" What does the Jew have over and above the Gentile? It is a pertinent question after the stinging indictment of the Jew in chapter 2. {The profit} (\h^ "phelia). The help. Old word, only here in N.T. See Mr 8:36 for \“phelei, the verb to profit.

3:2 {Much every way} (\polu kata panta). \Polu\ points back to \to perisson\. So it means the overplus of the Jew is much from every angle. {First of all} (\pr^“ton men). As in 1:8; 1Co 11:18 Paul does not add to his "first." He singles out one privilege of the many possessed by the Jew. {They were intrusted with} (\episteuth^san). First aorist passive indicative of \pisteu^“, to intrust, with accusative of the thing and dative of the person in the active. In the passive as here the accusative of the thing is retained as in 1Th 2:4. {The oracles of God} (\ta logia tou theou). In the accusative case, therefore, the object of \episteuth^san\. \Logion\ is probably a diminutive of \logos\, word, though the adjective \logios\ also occurs (Ac 18:24). The word was early used for "oracles" from Delphi and is common in the LXX for the oracles of the Lord. But from Philo on it was used of any sacred writing including narrative. It occurs four times in the N.T. (Ac 7:38, which see; Ro 3:2; Heb 5:12; 1Pe 4:11). It is possible that here and in Ac 7:38 the idea may include all the Old Testament, though the commands and promises of God may be all.

3:3 {For what if?} (\ti gar ei?). But Westcott and Hort print it, \Ti gar? ei\. See Php 1:18 for this exclamatory use of \ti gar\ (for how? How stands the case?). {Some were without faith} (\^pist^san). First aorist active indicative of \apisteu^“, old verb, to disbelieve. This is the common N.T. meaning (Lu 24:11,41; Ac 28:24; Ro 4:20). Some of them "disbelieved," these "depositories and guardians of revelation" (Denney). But the word also means to be unfaithful to one's trust and Lightfoot argues for that idea here and in 2Ti 2:13. The Revised Version renders it "faithless" there. Either makes sense here and both ideas are true of some of the Jews, especially concerning the Messianic promises and Jesus. {The faithfulness of God} (tⁿ pistin tou theou). Undoubtedly \pistin has this sense here and not "faith." God has been faithful (2Ti 2:13) whether the Jews (some of them) were simply disbelievers or untrue to their trust. Paul can use the words in two senses in verse 3, but there is no real objection to taking \pist^{san}, apistian, pistin, all to refer to faithfulness rather than just faith.

3:4 {Let God be found true} (ginesth^h ho theos alths). "Let God continue to be true" (present middle imperative). {But every man a liar} (pfs de anthr^{pos} pseust^s). The contrast in \de really means, "though every man be found a liar." Cf. Ps 116:12. {As it is written} (kath^s gegraptai). Ps 51:6. {That thou mightest be justified} (hop^s an dikaithis). \Hop^s rather than the common \hina for purpose and \an with the first aorist passive subjunctive of \dikaio^o. Used of God this verb here has to mean "declared righteous," not "made righteous." {Mightest prevail} (nik^{seis}). Future active indicative with \hop^s of \nika^o, to win a victory, though B L have \nik^sis (first aorist active subjunctive, the usual construction). {When thou comest into judgement} (en tⁱ krinesthai se). "In the being judged as to thee" (present passive infinitive or, if taken as middle, "in the entering upon trial as to thee"). Common construction in the LXX from the Hebrew infinitive construct.

3:5 {What shall we say?} (ti eroumen?). Rhetorical question, common with Paul as he surveys the argument. {Commendeth} (sunist^{sin}). This common verb \sunist^{mi}, to send together, occurs in the N.T. in two senses, either to introduce, to commend (2Co 3:1; 4:2) or to prove, to establish (2Co 7:11; Ga 2:18; Ro 5:8). Either makes good sense here. {Who visiteth the wrath} (ho epipherⁿ tⁿ orgⁿ). "Who brings on the wrath," "the inflicter of the anger" (Vaughan). {I speak as a man} (kata anthr^{pon}). See Ga 3:15 for same phrase. As if to say, "pardon me for this line of argument." Tholuck says that the rabbis often used \kata anthr^{pon} and \ti eroumen. Paul had not forgotten his rabbinical training.

3:6 {For then how} (epei p^s). There is a suppressed condition between \epei and \p^s, an idiom occurring several times in the N.T. (1Co 15:29; Ro 11:6,22). "Since, if that were true, how."

3:7 {Through my lie} (en tⁱ emⁱ pseusmati).] Old word from \pseudomai\, to lie, only here in N.T. Paul returns to the imaginary objection in verse 5. The MSS. differ sharply here between \ei de\ (but if) and \ei gar\ (for if). Paul "uses the first person from motives of delicacy" (Sanday and Headlam) in this supposable case for argument's sake as in 1Co 4:6. So here he "transfers by a fiction" (Field) to himself the objection.

3:8 {And why not} (\kai m^). We have a tangled sentence which can be cleared up in two ways. One is (Lightfoot) to supply \gen^tai\ after \m^ and repeat \ti\ (\kai ti m^ gen^tai\, deliberative subjunctive in a question): And why should it not happen? The other way (Sanday and Headlam) is to take \m^ with \poi^s"men\ and make a long parenthesis of all in between. Even so it is confusing because \hoti\ also (recitative \hoti\)) comes just before \poi^s"men\. The parenthesis is necessary anyhow, for there are two lines of thought, one the excuse brought forward by the unbeliever, the other the accusation that Paul affirms that very excuse that we may do evil that good may come. Note the double indirect assertion (the accusative and the infinitive \h^mfs legein\ after \phasin\ and then the direct quotation with recitative \hoti\ after \legein\, a direct quotation dependent on the infinitive in indirect quotation.) {Let us do evil that good may come} (\poi^s"men ta kaka hina elth^i ta agatha\). The volitive aorist subjunctive (\poi^s"men\)) and the clause of purpose (\hina\ and the aorist subjunctive \elth^i\). It sounds almost uncanny to find this maxim of the Jesuits attributed to Paul in the first century by Jews. It was undoubtedly the accusation of Antinomianism because Paul preached justification by faith and not by works.

3:9 {What then?} (\ti oun?). Paul's frequent query, to be taken with verses 1,2. {Are we in worse case than they?} (\proechometha?). The American Revisers render it: "Are we in better case than they?" There is still no fresh light on this difficult and common word though it occurs alone in the N.T. In the active it means to have before, to excel. But here it is either middle or passive. Thayer takes it to be middle and to mean to excel to one's advantage and argues that the context demands this. But no example of the middle in this sense has been found. If it is taken as passive, Lightfoot takes it to mean, "Are we excelled" and finds that sense in Plutarch. Vaughan takes it as passive but meaning, "Are we preferred?" This suits the context, but no other example has been found. So the point remains unsettled. The papyri throw no light on it. {No, in no wise} (\ou pant“s\). "Not at all." See 1Co 5:10. {We before laid to the charge} (\pro^itiasametha\). First aorist middle indicative of \proaitiaomai\, to make a prior accusation, a word not yet found anywhere else. Paul refers to 1:18-32 for the Greeks and 2:1-29 for the Jews. The infinitive \einai\ with the accusative \pantas\ is in indirect discourse. {Under sin} (\hupo hamartian\). See Ga 3:22; Ro 7:14.

3:10 {As it is written} (\kath“s gegraptai hoti\). Usual formula of quotation as in verse 4 with recitative \hoti\ added as in verse 8. Paul here uses a catena or chain of quotations to prove his point in verse 9 that Jews are in no better fix than the Greeks for all are under sin. Dr. J. Rendel Harris has shown that the Jews and early Christians had _Testimonia_ (quotations from the Old Testament) strung together for certain purposes as proof-texts. Paul may have used one of them or he may have put these passages together himself. Verses 10-12 come from Ps 14:1-3; first half of 13 as far as \edoliousan\ from Ps 4:9, the second half from Ps 140:3; verse 14 from Ps 10:7; 15-17 from an abridgment of Isa 59:7f.; verse 18 from Ps 35:1. Paul has given compounded quotations elsewhere (2Co 6:16; Ro 9:25f.,27f; 11:26f.,34f.; 12:19f.). Curiously enough this compounded quotation was imported bodily into the text (LXX) of Ps 14 after verse 4 in Aleph B, etc. {There is none righteous, no, not one} (\ouk estin dikaios oude heis\). "There is not a righteous man, not even one." This sentence is like a motto for all the rest, a summary for what follows.

3:11 {That understandeth} (\suni“n\). Present active participle of \suni“\, late omega form of \-mi\ verb \suni^mi\, to send together, to grasp, to comprehend. Some MSS. have the article \ho\ before it as before \ekz^t“n\ (seeking out).

3:12 {They are together become unprofitable} (\hama^chre“th^san\). First aorist passive indicative of \achreo“\. Late word in Polybius and Cilician inscription of first century A.D. Some MSS. read \^chrei“th^san\ from \achreios\, useless (\a\ privative and \achreios\, useful) as in Lu 17:10; Mt 25:30, but Westcott and Hort print as above from the rarer spelling \achreos\. Only here in N.T. The Hebrew word means to go bad, become sour like milk (Lightfoot). {No, not so much as one} (\ouk estin he“s henos\). "There is not up to one."

3:13 {Throat} (\larugx\). Old word, larynx. {Open sepulchre} (\taphos ane“igmenos\). Perfect passive participle of \anoig“\, "an opened grave." Their mouth (words) like the odour of a newly opened grave. "Some portions of Greek and Roman literature stink like a newly opened grave" (Shedd). {They have used deceit} (\edoliousan\). Imperfect (not perfect or aorist as the English implies) active of \dolio“\, only in LXX and here in the N.T. from the common adjective \dolios\, deceitful (2Co 11:13). The regular form would be \edolioun\. The \-osan\ ending for third plural in imperfect and aorist was once thought to be purely Alexandrian because so common in the LXX, but it is common in the Boeotian and Aeolic dialects and occurs in \eichosan\ in the N.T. (Joh 15:22,24). "They smoothed their tongues" in the Hebrew. {Poison} (\ios\). Old word both for rust (Jas 5:3) and poison (Jas 3:8). {Of asps} (\aspid“n\). Common word for round bowl, shield, then the Egyptian cobra (a deadly serpent). Often in LXX. Only here in the N.T. The poison of the asp lies in a bag under the lips (\cheil“\), often in LXX, only here in N.T. Genitive case after \gemei\ (is full).

3:15 {To shed} (\ekcheai\). First aorist active infinitive of \ekche“\, to pour out, old verb with aorist active \exechea\.

3:16 {Destruction} (\suntrimma\). Rare word from \suntrib“\, to rub together, to crush. In Le 21:19 for fracture and so in papyri. Only here in N.T. {Misery} (\talaip“ria\). Common word from \talaip“ros\ (Ro 7:24), only here in the N.T.

3:17 {The way of peace} (\hodon eir^n^s\). Wherever they go they leave a trail of woe and destruction (Denney).

3:18 {Before} (\apenanti\). Late double compound (\apo, en, anti\) adverbial preposition in LXX and Polybius, papyri and inscriptions. With genitive as here.

3:19 {That every mouth may be stopped} (\hina pfn stoma phrag^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and second aorist passive subjunctive of \phrass“\, old verb to fence in, to block up. See 2Co 11:10. Stopping mouths is a difficult business. See Tit 1:11 where Paul uses \epistomizein\ (to stop up the mouth) for the same idea. Paul seems here to be speaking directly to Jews (\tois en t“i nom“i\), the hardest to convince. With the previous proof on that point he covers the whole ground for he made the case against the Gentiles in 1:18-32. {May be brought under the judgement of God} (\hupodikos gen^{tai} tⁱ theⁱ). "That all the world (Jew as well as Gentile) may become (\gen^{tai}) answerable (\hupodikos, old forensic word, here only in N.T.) to God (dative case tⁱ theⁱ)." Every one is "liable to God," in God's court.

3:20 {Because} (\dioti, again, \dia, hoti). {By the works of the law} (\ex ergⁿ nomou). "Out of works of law." Mosaic law and any law as the source of being set right with God. Paul quotes Ps 43:2 as he did in Ga 2:16 to prove his point. {The knowledge of sin} (\epign^{sis} hamartias). The effect of law universally is rebellion to it (1Co 15:56). Paul has shown this carefully in Ga 3:19-22. Cf. Heb 10:3. He has now proven the guilt of both Gentile and Jew.

3:21 {But now apart from the law} (\nuni de ch^{ris} nomou). He now (\nuni\ emphatic logical transition) proceeds carefully in verses 21-31 the {nature} of the God-kind of righteousness which stands manifested (\dikaiousun^{theou} pephaner^{tai}, perfect passive indicative of \phanero^a, to make manifest), the {necessity} of which he has shown in 1:18-3:20. This God kind of righteousness is "apart from law" of any kind and all of grace (\chariti) as he will show in verse 24. But it is not a new discovery on the part of Paul, but "witnessed by the law and the prophets" (\marturoumen^{en}, present passive participle, \hupo tou nomou kai tⁿ proph^t n), made plain continuously by God himself.

3:22 {Even} (\de). Not adversative here. It defines here. {Through faith in Jesus Christ} (\dia piste^s [I^{sou}] Christou). Intermediate agency (\dia) is faith and objective genitive, "in Jesus Christ," not subjective "of Jesus Christ," in spite of Haussleiter's contention for that idea. The objective nature of faith in Christ is shown in Ga 2:16 by the addition \eis Christon I^{sou}n episteusamen (we believed in Christ), by t^s eis Christon piste^s humⁿ (of your faith in Christ) in Col 2:5, by \en pistei tⁱ en Christⁱ I^{sou} (in faith that in Christ Jesus) in 1Ti 3:13, as well as here by the added words "unto all them that believe" (\eis pantas tous pisteuontas) in Jesus, Paul means. {Distinction} (\diastol^{en}). See on 1Co 14:7 for the difference of sounds in musical instruments. Also in Ro 10:12. The Jew was first in privilege as in penalty (2:9f.), but justification or setting right with God is offered to both on the same terms.

3:23 {Sinned} (\h^{rm}arton\). Constativ second aorist active indicative of \hamartan“\ as in 5:12. This tense gathers up the whole race into one statement (a timeless aorist). {And fall short} (\kai husterountai\). Present middle indicative of \hustere“\, to be \husteros\ (comparative) too late, continued action, still fall short. It is followed by the ablative case as here, the case of separation.

3:24 {Being justified} (\dikaiousmenoi\). Present passive participle of \dikaio“\, to set right, repeated action in each case, each being set right. {Freely} (\d^{rean}\). As in Ga 2:21. {By his grace} (\tⁱ autou chariti\). Instrumental case of this wonderful word \charis\ which so richly expresses Paul's idea of salvation as God's free gift. {Through the redemption} (\dia t^s apolutr^{se}“s\). A releasing by ransom (\apo, lutr^{sis}\ from \lutro“\ and that from \lutron\, ransom). God did not set men right out of hand with nothing done about men's sins. We have the words of Jesus that he came to give his life a ransom (\lutron\) for many (Mr 10:45; Mt 20:28). \Lutron\ is common in the papyri as the purchase-money in freeing slaves (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, pp. 327f.). {That is in Christ Jesus} (\tⁱ en Christⁱ I^{sou}\). There can be no mistake about this redemption. It is like Joh 3:16.

3:25 {Set forth} (\proetheto\). Second aorist middle indicative. See on 1:13 for this word. Also in Eph 1:9, but nowhere else in N.T. God set before himself (purposed) and did it publicly before (\pro\) the whole world. {A propitiation} (\hilast^{rion}\). The only other N.T. example of this word is in Heb 9:5 where we have the "cherubim overshadowing the mercy seat" (\to hilast^{rion}\). In Hebrews the adjective is used as a substantive or as "the propitiatory place " But that idea does not suit here. Deissmann (Bible Studies, pp. 124-35) has produced examples from inscriptions where it is used as an adjective and as meaning "a votive offering" or "propitiatory gift." Hence he concludes about Ro 3:25: "The crucified Christ is the votive gift of the Divine Love for the salvation of men." God gave his Son as the means of propitiation (1Jo 2:2). \Hilast^{rion}\ is an adjective (\hilast^{rios}\) from \hilaskomai\, to make propitiation (Heb 2:17) and is kin in meaning to \hilasmos\, propitiation (1Jo 2:2; 4:10). There is no longer room for doubting its meaning in Ro 3:25. {Through faith, by his blood} (\dia piste^s en tⁱ autou haimati\). So probably, connecting \en toi haimati\ (in his blood) with \proetheto\. {To show his righteousness} (\eis endeixin t's dikaiosun^s autou\). See 2Co 8:24. "For showing of his righteousness," the God-kind of righteousness. God could not let sin go as if a mere slip. God demanded the atonement and provided it. {Because of the passing over} (\dia t^n paresin\). Late word from \pari^mi\, to let go, to relax. In Dionysius Hal., Xenophon, papyri (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 266) for remission of punishment, especially for debt, as distinct from \aphesis\ (remission). {Done aforetime} (\progegonot^"n\). Second perfect active genitive participle of \proginomai\. The sins before the coming of Christ (Ac 14:16; 17:30; Heb 9:15). {Forbearance} (\anoch^i\). Holding back of God as in 2:4. In this sense Christ tasted death for every man (Heb 2:9).

3:26 {For the shewing} (\pros t^n endeixin\). Repeats point of \eis endeixin\ of 25 with \pros\ instead of \eis\. {At this present season} (\en t^"i nun kair^"i\). "In the now crisis," in contrast with "done aforetime." {That he might himself be} (\eis to einai auton\). Purpose with \eis\ to and the infinitive \einai\ and the accusative of general reference. {Just and the justifier of} (\dikaion kai dikaiounta\). "This is the key phrase which establishes the connexion between the \dikaiosun^ theou\ and the \dikaiosun^ ek piste^s\" (Sanday and Headlam). Nowhere has Paul put the problem of God more acutely or profoundly. To pronounce the unrighteous righteous is unjust by itself (Ro 4:5). God's mercy would not allow him to leave man to his fate. God's justice demanded some punishment for sin. The only possible way to save some was the propitiatory offering of Christ and the call for faith on man's part.

3:27 {It is excluded} (\exekleisth^). First aorist (effective) passive indicative. "It is completely shut out." Glorifying is on man's part. {Nay; but by a law of faith} (\ouchi, alla dia nomou piste^s\). Strong negative, and note "law of faith," by the principle of faith in harmony with God's love and grace.

3:28 {We reckon therefore} (\logizometha oun\). Present middle indicative. Westcott and Hort read \gar\ instead of \oun\. "My fixed opinion" is. The accusative and infinitive construction occurs after \logizometha\ here. On this verb \logizomai\, see 2:3; 4:3f.; 8:18; 14:14. Paul restates verses 21f.

3:29 {Of Gentiles also} (\kai ethn^"n\). Jews overlooked it then and some Christians do now.

3:30 {If so be that God is one} (\eiper heis ho theos\). Correct text rather than \epeiper\. It means "if on the whole." "By a species of rhetorical politeness it is used of that about which there is no doubt" (Thayer. Cf. 1Co 8:5; 15:15; Ro 8:9. {By faith} (\ek piste"s\). "Out of faith," springing out of. {Through faith} (\dia t^s piste"s\). "By means of the faith" (just mentioned). \Ek\ denotes source, \dia\ intermediate agency or attendant circumstance.

3:31 {Nay, we establish the law} (\alla nomon histanomen\). Present indicative active of late verb \histan^ from \hist^mi\. This Paul hinted at in verse 21. How he will show in chapter 4 how Abraham himself is an example of faith and in his life illustrates the very point just made. Besides, apart from Christ and the help of the Holy Spirit no one can keep God's law. The Mosaic law is only workable by faith in Christ.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Romans: Chapter 3)

4:1 {What then shall we say?} (\ti oun eroumen?). Paul is fond of this rhetorical question (4:1; 6:1; 7:7; 8:31; 9:14,30).

Accusative case in apposition with \Abraam (accusative of general reference with the infinitive). {Hath found}

(\heur^kenai). Westcott and Hort put \heur^kenai in the margin because B omits it, a needless precaution. It is the perfect active infinitive of \heurisk^{\} in indirect discourse after \eroumen. The MSS. differ in the position of \kata sarka.

4:2 {The Scripture} (\h^ graph^{\}). Ge 15:6. {Was justified by works} (\ex erg^{\}n edikai^{\}th^{\}). Condition of first class, assumed as true for the sake of argument, though untrue in fact. The rabbis had a doctrine of the merits of Abraham who had a superfluity of credits to pass on to the Jews (Lu 3:8). {But not towards God} (\all' ou pros theon). Abraham deserved all the respect from men that came to him, but his relation to God was a different matter. He had there no ground of boasting at all.

4:3 {It was reckoned unto him for righteousness} (\elogisth^ eis dikaiosun^{\}). First aorist passive indicative of \logizomai, old and common verb to set down accounts (literally or metaphorically). It was set down on the credit side of the ledger "for" (\eis\ as often) righteousness. What was set down? His believing God (\episteusen t^{\}i the^{\}i).

4:4 {But as of debt} (\alla kata opheil^{\}ma). An illustration of the workman (\ergazomen^{\}i) who gets his wages due him, "not as of grace" (\ou kata charin).

4:5 {That justifieth the ungodly} (\ton dikaiounta ton aseb^{\}). The impious, irreverent man. See 1:25. A forensic figure (Shedd). The man is taken as he is and pardoned. "The whole Pauline gospel could be summed up in this one word-- God who justifies the ungodly" (Denney).

4:6 {Pronounceth blessing} (\legei ton makarismon). old word from \makariz^{\}, to pronounce blessed (Lu 1:48), felicitation, congratulation, in N.T. only here, verse 9; Ac 4:15.

4:7 {Blessed} (\makarioi\). See on Mt 5:3. {Are forgiven} (\apheth^{san}\). First aorist passive indicative of \aphi^{mi}\, without augment (\apheith^{san}\, regular form). Paul quotes Ps 32:1f. and as from David. Paul thus confirms his interpretation of Ge 15:6. {Iniquities} (\anomia\). Violations of law whereas \hamartiai\ (sins) include all kinds. {Are covered} (\epikalupth^{san}\). First aorist passive of \epikalupt^{ai}\, old verb, to cover over (upon, \epi\) as a shroud. Only here in N.T.

4:8 {To whom} (\hⁱ\). But the best MSS. read \hou\ like the LXX and so Westcott and Hort, "whose sin." {Will not reckon} (\ou m^o logis^{tai}\). Strong negation by double negative and aorist middle subjunctive.

4:9 {Is this blessing then pronounced?} (\ho makarismos oun houtos?\). "Is this felicitation then?" There is no verb in the Greek. Paul now proceeds to show that Abraham was said in Ge 15:6 to be set right with God by faith before he was circumcised.

4:10 {When he was in circumcision} (\en peritomⁱ ontⁱ\). Dative masculine singular of the present active participle of \eimi\; "to him being in a state of circumcision or in a state of uncircumcision?" A pertinent point that the average Jew had not noticed.

4:11 {The sign of circumcision} (\s^{meion} peritom^s\). It is the genitive of apposition, circumcision being the sign. {A seal of the righteousness of the faith} (\sphragida t^s dikaiosun^s t^s piste^s\). \Sphragis\ is old word for the seal placed on books (Re 5:1), for a signet-ring (Re 7:2), the stamp made by the seal (2Ti 2:19), that by which anything is confirmed (1Co 9:2) as here. The circumcision did not convey the righteousness, but only gave outward confirmation. It came by faith and "the faith which he had while in uncircumcision" (\t^s en tⁱ akrobustifi\), "the in the state of uncircumcision faith." Whatever parallel exists between baptism and circumcision as here stated by Paul argues for faith before baptism and for baptism as the sign and seal of the faith already had before baptism. {That he might be} (\eis to einai auton\). This idiom may be God's purpose (contemplated result) as in \eis to logisth^{nai}\ below, or even actual result (so that he was) as in 1:20. {Though they be in uncircumcision} (\di' akrobustias\). Simply, "of those who believe while in the condition of uncircumcision."

4:12 {The father of circumcision} (\patera peritom^s). The accusative with \eis to einai to be repeated from verse 11. Lightfoot takes it to mean, not "a father of a circumcised progeny," but "a father belonging to circumcision," a less natural interpretation. {But who also walk} (\alla kai tois stoichousin). The use of \tois here is hard to explain, for \ou monon and \alla kai both come after the preceding \tois. All the MSS. have it thus. A primitive error in a copyist is suggested by Hort who would omit the second \tois. Lightfoot regards it less seriously and would repeat the second \tois in the English: "To those who are, I do not say of circumcision only, but also to those who walk." {In the steps} (\tois ichnesin). Locative case. See on ²Co 12:18. \Stoiche^s is military term, to walk in file as in Ga 5:25; Php 3:16.

4:13 {That he should be the heir of the world} (\to kl^hronomon auton einai kosmou). The articular infinitive (\to einai) with the accusative of general reference in loose apposition with \h^h epaggelia (the promise). But where is that promise? Not just Ge 12:7, but the whole chain of promises about his son, his descendants like the stars in heaven, the Messiah and the blessing to the world through him. In these verses (13-17) Paul employs (Sanday and Headlam) the keywords of his gospel (faith, promise, grace) and arrays them against the current Jewish theology (law, works, merit).

4:14 {Be heirs} (\kl^hronomoi). No predicate in the Greek (\eisin). See on ²Ga 4:1. If legalists are heirs of the Messianic promise to Abraham (condition of first class, assumed as true for argument's sake), the faith is emptied of all meaning (\keken^stai, perfect passive indicative of \keno^s) and the promise to Abraham is made permanently idle (\kat^hrg^htai).

4:15 {Worketh wrath} (\org^hn katergazetai). Because of disobedience to it. {Neither is there transgression} (\oude parabasis). There is no responsibility for the violation of a non-existent law.

4:16 {Of faith} (\ek piste^s). As the source. {According to grace} (\kata charin). As the pattern. {To the end that} (\eis to einai). Purpose again as in 11. {Sure} (\bebaian). Stable, fast, firm. Old adjective from \bain^s, to walk. {Not to that only which is of the law} (\ou t*“i ek tou nomou monon*\). Another instance where \monon\ (see verse 12) seems in the wrong place. Normally the order would be, \ou monon t*“i ek tou nomou, alla kai ktl*\.

4:17 {A father of many nations} (\patera poll*“n ethn“n*\).

Quotation from Ge 17:5. Only true in the sense of spiritual children as already explained, father of believers in God.

{Before him whom he believed even God} (\katenanti hou episteusen theou\). Incorporation of antecedent into the relative clause and attraction of the relative \h*“i*\ into \hou\.

See Mr 11:2 for \katenanti\, "right in front of."

{Calleth the things that are not as though they were} (\kalountos ta m*^onta h“s onta*\).

"Summons the non-existing as existing." Abraham's body was old and decrepit. God rejuvenated him and Sarah (Heb 11:19).

4:18 {In hope believed against hope} (\par' elpida ep' elpidi episteusen\).

"Past hope in (upon) hope he trusted." Graphic picture. {To the end that he might become} (\eis to genesthai auton\). Purpose clause again with \eis\ to and the infinitive as in verses 11-16.

4:19 {Without being weakened in faith} (\m*^* asthen*^sas t“i* pistei\).

"Not becoming weak in faith." Ingressive first aorist active participle with negative \m*^*\. {Now as good as dead} (d' nenekr“menon\).

Perfect passive participle of \nekro*“*\, "now already dead." B omits d'\. He was, he knew, too old to become father of a child. {About} (\pou\). The addition of \pou\

(somewhere, about) "qualifies the exactness of the preceding numeral" (Vaughan). The first promise of a son to Abraham and Sarah came (Ge 15:3f.) before the birth of Ishmael (86 when Ishmael was born). The second promise came when Abraham was 99 years old (Ge 17:1), calling himself 100 (Ge 17:17).

4:20 {He wavered not through unbelief} (\ou diekrith*^* t*“i* apistifi\).

First aorist passive indicative of old and common verb \diakrin*“*\, to separate, to distinguish between, to decide between, to desert, to dispute, to be divided in one's own mind.

This last sense occurs here as in Mt 21:22; Mr 11:23; Ro 14:23;

Jas 1:6. "He was not divided in his mind by unbelief"

(instrumental case). {Waxed strong through faith} (\enedunam*“th^*

t*“i pistei*\). First aorist passive again of \endunamo*“*\, late word to empower, to put power in, in LXX and Paul and Ac 9:22.

4:21 {Being fully assured} (\pl^rophor^theis). First aorist passive participle of \pl^rophore^{\}, from \pl^rophoros and this from \pl^r^s and \pher^{\}, to bear or bring full (full measure), to settle fully. Late word, first in LXX but frequent in papyri in sense of finishing off or paying off. See on Lu 1:1; Ro 14:5. {What he had promised} (\ho ep^ggeltai). Perfect middle indicative of \epaggellomai, to promise, retained in indirect discourse according to usual Greek idiom. {He was able} (\dunatos estin). Present active indicative retained in indirect discourse. The verbal adjective \dunatos with \estin is here used in sense of the verb \dunatai (Lu 14:31; Ac 11:17).

4:23 {That} (\hoti). Either recitative or declarative \hoti. It makes sense either way.

4:24 {Him that raised up Jesus} (\ton egeiranta I^soun). First aorist active articular participle of \egeir^{\}, to raise up. The fact of the Resurrection of Jesus is central in Paul's gospel (1Co 15:4ff.).

4:25 {For our justification} (\dia t^{\hat{n}} dikai^{\hat{sin}} h^{\hat{m}} n^{\hat{}}). The first clause (\paredoth^{\hat{dia}} ta parapt^{\hat{mata}}) is from Isa 53:12. The first \dia with \parapt^{\hat{mata}} is probably retrospective, though it will make sense as prospective (to make atonement for our transgressions). The second \dia is quite clearly prospective with a view to our justification. Paul does not mean to separate the resurrection from the death of Christ in the work of atonement, but simply to show that the resurrection is at one with the death on the Cross in proof of Christ's claims.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

5:1 {Being therefore justified by faith} (\dikai“thentes oun ek piste“s). First aorist passive participle of \dikaio“, to set right and expressing antecedent action to the verb \ech“men. The \oun refers to the preceding conclusive argument (chapters 1 to 4) that this is done by faith. {Let us have peace with God} (\eir^n^n ech“men pros ton theon). This is the correct text beyond a doubt, the present active subjunctive, not \echomen (present active indicative) of the Textus Receptus which even the American Standard Bible accepts. It is curious how perverse many real scholars have been on this word and phrase here. Godet, for instance. Vincent says that "it is difficult if not impossible to explain it." One has only to observe the force of the _tense_ to see Paul's meaning clearly. The mode is the volitive subjunctive and the present tense expresses linear action and so does not mean "make peace" as the ingressive aorist subjunctive \eir^n^n sch“men would mean. A good example of \sch“men occurs in Mt 21:38 (\sch“men t^n kl'ronomian autou) where it means: "Let us get hold of his inheritance." Here \eir^n^n ech“men can only mean: "Let us enjoy peace with God" or "Let us retain peace with God." We have in Ac 9:31 \eichen eir^n^n (imperfect and so linear), the church "enjoyed peace," not "made peace." The preceding justification (\dikai“thentes) "made peace with God." Observe \pros (face to face) with \ton theon and \dia (intermediate agent) with \tou kuriou.

5:2 {We have had} (\esch^kamen). Perfect active indicative of \ech“ (same verb as \ech“men), still have it. {Our access} (\ten prosag“g^n). Old word from \prosag“, to bring to, to introduce. Hence "introduction," "approach." Elsewhere in N.T. only Eph 2:18; 3:12. {Wherein we stand} (\en h^i hest^kamen). Perfect active (intransitive) indicative of \hist^mi. Grace is here present as a field into which we have been introduced and where we stand and we should enjoy all the privileges of this grace about us. {Let us rejoice} (\kauch“metha). "Let us exult." Present middle subjunctive (volitive) because \ech“men is accepted as correct. The exhortation is that we keep on enjoying peace with God and keep on exulting in hope of the glory of God.

5:3 {But let us also rejoice in our tribulations} (\alla kai kauch“metha en tais thlipsesin). Present middle subjunctive of same verb as in verse 2. \Kauch“mai is more than "rejoice," rather "glory," "exult." These three volitive subjunctives (\ech“men, kauch“metha\, twice) hold up the high ideal for the Christian after, and because of, his being set right with God. It is one thing to submit to or endure tribulations without complaint, but it is another to find ground of glorying in the midst of them as Paul exhorts here.

5:4 {Knowing} (\eidotes). Second perfect participle of \eidon (\oida), giving the reason for the previous exhortation to glory in tribulations. He gives a linked chain, one linking to the other (tribulation \thlipsis\, patience \hupomon^, experience \dokim^, hope \elpis) running into verse 5. On \dokim^, see 2Co 2:9.

5:5 {Hath been shed abroad} (\ekkechutai). Perfect passive indicative of \ekche“, to pour out. "Has been poured out" in our hearts.

5:6 {For} (\eti gar). So most documents, but B reads \ei ge which Westcott and Hort use in place of \gar. {While we were yet weak} (\ont“n h^m“n asthen“n eti). Genitive absolute. The second \eti (yet) here probably gave rise to the confusion of text over \eti gar above. {In due season} (\kata kairon). Christ came into the world at the proper time, the fulness of the time (Ga 4:4; Eph 1:10; Tit 1:3). {I or the ungodly} (\huper aseb“n). In behalf, instead of. See about \huper on Ga 3:13 and also verse 7 here.

5:7 {Scarcely} (\molis). Common adverb from \molos, toil. See on Ac 14:18. As between \dikaios, righteous, and \agathos, good, Lightfoot notes "all the difference in the world" which he shows by quotations from Plato and Christian writers, a difference of sympathy mainly, the \dikaios man being "absolutely without sympathy" while the \agathos man "is beneficent and kind." {Would even dare} (\kai tolmi). Present active indicative of \tolma“, to have courage. "Even dares to." Even so in the case of the kindly sympathetic man courage is called for to make the supreme sacrifice. {Perhaps} (\tachai). Common adverb (perhaps instrumental case) from \tachus (swift). Only here in N.T.

5:8 {His own love} (t^hn heautou agapⁿ). See Joh 3:16 as the best comment here. {While we were yet sinners} (eti hamart^lⁿ ontⁿ). Genitive absolute again. Not because we were Jews or Greeks, rich or poor, righteous or good, but plain sinners. Cf. Lu 18:13, the plea of the publican, "\moi tⁱ hamart^lⁱ\".

5:9 {Much more then} (pollⁱ oun mallon). Argument from the greater to the less. The great thing is the justification in Christ's blood. The final salvation (sth sometha), future passive indicative) is less of a mystery.

5:10 {We were reconciled to God} (kat^llag^{men} tⁱ theⁱ). Second aorist passive indicative of \katallass^α for which great Pauline word see on 2Co 5:18f. The condition is the first class. Paul does not conceive it as his or our task to reconcile God to us. God has attended to that himself (Ro 3:25f.). We become reconciled to God by means of the death of God's Son. "Much more" again we shall be saved "by his life" (en tⁱ zⁱ autou). "In his life," for he does live, "ever living to intercede for them" (Heb 7:25).

5:11 {But also glorying in God} (alla kai kauch^{menoi} en tⁱ theⁱ). Basis of all the exultation above (verses 1-5).

{Through whom we have now received the reconciliation} (di hou nun tⁿ katallagⁿ elabomen). Second aorist active indicative of \lamban^α, looked at as a past realization, "now" (nun) in contrast with the future consummation and a sure pledge and guarantee of it.

5:12 {Therefore} (dia touto). "For this reason." What reason? Probably the argument made in verses 1-11, assuming our justification and urging exultant joy in Christ because of the present reconciliation by Christ's death and the certainty of future final salvation by his life. {As through one man} (h^{sper} di' henos anthr^{pou}). Paul begins a comparison between the effects of Adam's sin and the effects of the redemptive work of Christ, but he does not give the second member of the comparison. Instead of that he discusses some problems about sin and death and starts over again in verse 15. The general point is plain that the effects of Adam's sin are transmitted to his descendants, though he does not say how it was done whether by the natural or the federal headship of Adam. It is important to note that Paul does not say that the whole race receives the full benefit of Christ's atoning death, but only those who do. Christ is the head of all believers as Adam is the head of the race. In this sense Adam "is a figure of him that was to come." {Sin entered into the world} (\h^ hamartia eis ton kosmon eis^lthen). Personification of sin and represented as coming from the outside into the world of humanity. Paul does not discuss the origin of evil beyond this fact. There are some today who deny the fact of sin at all and who call it merely "an error of mortal mind" (a notion) while others regard it as merely an animal inheritance devoid of ethical quality. {And so death passed unto all men} (\kai hout^s eis pantas anthr^pous di^lthen). Note use of \dierchomai rather than \eiserchomai, just before, second aorist active indicative in both instances. By "death" in Ge 2:17; 3:19 physical death is meant, but in verses 17,21 eternal death is Paul's idea and that lurks constantly behind physical death with Paul. {For that all sinned} (\epi^ h^i pantes h^marton). Constative (summary) aorist active indicative of \hamartan^s, gathering up in this one tense the history of the race (committed sin). The transmission from Adam became facts of experience. In the old Greek \epi^ h^i usually meant "on condition that," but "because" in N.T. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 963).

5:13 {Until the law} (\achri nomou). Until the Mosaic law. Sin was there before the Mosaic law, for the Jews were like Gentiles who had the law of reason and conscience (2:12-16), but the coming of the law increased their responsibility and their guilt (2:9). {Sin is not imputed} (\hamartia de ouk ellogetai). Present passive indicative of late verb \ellogea^s (|-e^s) from \en and \logos, to put down in the ledger to one's account, examples in inscription and papyri. {When there is no law} (\m^ontos nomou). Genitive absolute, no law of any kind, he means. There was law _before_ the Mosaic law. But what about infants and idiots in case of death? Do they have responsibility? Surely not. The sinful nature which they inherit is met by Christ's atoning death and grace. No longer do men speak of "elect infants."

5:14 {Even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression} (\kai epi tous m^ hamart^santas epi t^i homoi^mati t^s parabase^s Adam). Adam violated an express command of God and Moses gave the law of God clearly. And yet sin and death followed all from Adam on till Moses, showing clearly that the sin of Adam brought terrible consequences upon the race. Death has come upon infants and idiots also as a result of sin, but one understands Paul to mean that they are not held responsible by the law of conscience. {A figure} (\tupos\). See on ᾠAc 7:43; 1Th 1:7; 2Th 3:9; 1Co 10:6 for this word. Adam is a type of Christ in holding a relation to those affected by the headship in each case, but the parallel is not precise as Paul shows.

5:15 {But not as the trespass} (\all' ouch hˆs\). It is more contrast than parallel: "the trespass" (\to paraptˆˆma\, the slip, fall to one side) over against the free gift (\to charisma\, of grace \charis\). {Much more} (\pollˆˆi mallon\). Another _a fortiori_ argument. Why so? As a God of love he delights {much more} in showing mercy and pardon than in giving just punishment (Lightfoot). The gift surpasses the sin. It is not necessary to Paul's argument to make "the many" in each case correspond, one relates to Adam, the other to Christ.

5:16 {Through one that sinned} (\di' henos hamartˆˆsantos\). "Through one having sinned." That is Adam. Another contrast, difference in source (\ek\). {Of one} (\ex henos\). Supply \paraptˆˆmatos\, Adam's one transgression. {Of many trespasses} (\ek pollˆˆˆn paraptˆˆˆmatˆˆˆn\). The gift by Christ grew out of manifold sins by Adam's progeny. {Justification} (\dikaiˆˆˆma\). Act of righteousness, result, ordinance (1:32; 2:26; 8:4), righteous deed (5:18), verdict as here (acquittal).

5:17 {Much more} (\pollˆˆˆi mallon\). Argument _a fortiori_ again. Condition of first class assumed to be true. Note balanced words in the contrast (transgression \paraptˆˆˆmati\, grace \charitos\; death \thanatos\, life \zˆˆˆi\; the one or {Adam} \tou henos\, the one {Jesus Christ}; reign \basileuˆˆ\ in both).

5:18 {So then} (\ara oun\). Conclusion of the argument. Cf. 7:3,25; 8:12, etc. Paul resumes the parallel between Adam and Christ begun in verse 12 and interrupted by explanation (13f.) and contrast (15-17). {Through one trespass} (\di' henos paraptˆˆˆmatos\). That of Adam. {Through one act of righteousness} (\di' henos dikaiˆˆˆmatos\). That of Christ. The first "unto all men" (\eis pantas anthrˆˆˆpous\ as in verse 12, the second as in verse 17 "they that receive, etc."

5:19 Here again we have "the one" (\tou henos\ with both Adam and Christ, but "disobedience" (\parakoˆˆs\, for which see 2Co 10:6) contrasted with "obedience" (\hupakoˆˆs\), the same verb

\kathist^{mi}\, old verb, to set down, to render, to constitute (\katestath^{san}\, first aorist passive indicative, \katastath^{sontai}\, future passive), and "the many" (\hoi polloi\ in both cases (but with different meaning as with "all men" above).

5:20 {Came in beside} (\pareis^{lthen}\). Second aorist active indicative of double compound \pareiserchomai\, late verb, in N.T. only here and Ga 2:4 which see. See also \eis^{lthen}\ in verse 12. The Mosaic law came into this state of things, in between Adam and Christ. {That the trespass might abound} (\hina pleonas^{i to parapt^{ma}}\). It is usual to explain \hina\ here as final, as God's ultimate purpose. So Denney who refers to Ga 3:19ff.; Ro 7:7f. But Chrysostom explains \hina\ here as \ekbasis\ (result). This is a proper use of \hina\ in the _Koin,_ as we have seen. If we take it so here, the meaning is "so that the trespass abounded" (aorist active subjunctive of \pleonaz^{ma}, late verb, see on 2Th 1:3; 2Co 8:15). This was the actual effect of the Mosaic law for the Jews, the necessary result of all prohibitions. {Did abound more exceedingly} (\huperperisseusen\). First aorist active indicative of \hyperperisseu^{ma}\. Late verb, in N.T. only here and 2Co 7:4
which see. A strong word. If \pleonaz^{ma}\ is comparative (\pleon\) \perisseu^{ma}\ is superlative (Lightfoot) and then \hyperperisseu^{ma}\ goes the superlative one better. See \hyperpleonaz^{ma}\ in 1Ti 1:14. The flood of grace surpassed the flood of sin, great as that was (and is).

5:21 {That--even so grace might reign} (\hina--houtos kai h^{charis basileusⁱ}\). Final \hina\ here, the purpose of God and the goal for us through Christ. Lightfoot notes the force of the aorist indicative (\ebasileusen\, established its throne) and the aorist subjunctive (\basileusⁱ\, might establish its throne), the ingressive aorist both times. "This full rhetorical close has almost the value of a doxology" (Denney).

6:1 {What shall we say then?} (\ti oun eroumen?\). "A debater's phrase" (Morison). Yes, and an echo of the rabbinical method of question and answer, but also an expression of exultant victory of grace versus sin. But Paul sees the possible perversion of this glorious grace. {Shall we continue in sin?} (\epimen“men t^i hamartifi?\). Present active deliberative subjunctive of \epimen“, old verb to tarry as in Ephesus (1Co 16:8) with locative case. The practice of sin as a habit (present tense) is here raised. {That grace may abound} (\hina h^ charis pteonas^i\). Final clause with ingressive aorist subjunctive, to set free the superfluity of grace alluded to like putting money in circulation. Horrible thought (\m^ genoito\) and yet Paul faced it. There are occasionally so-called pietists who actually think that God's pardon gives them liberty to sin without penalty (cf. the sale of indulgences that stirred Martin Luther).

6:2 {Died to sin} (\apethanomen t^i hamartifi\). Second aorist active of \apothn^sk“\ and the dative case. When we surrendered to Christ and took him as Lord and Saviour. Qualitative relative (\hoitines\, we the very ones who). {How} (\p“s\). Rhetorical question.

6:3 {Were baptized into Christ} (\ebaptisth^men eis Christon\). First aorist passive indicative of \baptiz“\ . Better, "were baptized unto Christ or in Christ." The translation "into" makes Paul say that the union with Christ was brought to pass by means of baptism, which is not his idea, for Paul was not a sacramentarian. \Eis\ is at bottom the same word as \en\ . Baptism is the public proclamation of one's inward spiritual relation to Christ attained before the baptism. See on ^Ga 3:27 where it is like putting on an outward garment or uniform. {Into his death} (\eis ton thanaton autou\). So here "unto his death," "in relation to his death," which relation Paul proceeds to explain by the symbolism of the ordinance.

6:4 {We were buried therefore with him by means of baptism unto death} (\sunetaph^men oun aut“i dia tou baptismatos eis ton thanaton\). Second aorist passive indicative of \sunthapt“\ , old verb to bury together with, in N.T. only here and Col 2:12. With associative instrumental case (\aut“i) and "by means of baptism unto death" as in verse 3. {In newness of life} (\enkainot“ti z““s). The picture in baptism points two ways, backwards to Christ's death and burial and to our death to sin (verse 1), forwards to Christ's resurrection from the dead and to our new life pledged by the coming out of the watery grave to walk on the other side of the baptismal grave (F. B. Meyer). There is the further picture of our own resurrection from the grave. It is a tragedy that Paul's majestic picture here has been so blurred by controversy that some refuse to see it. It should be said also that a symbol is not the reality, but the picture of the reality.

6:5 {For if we have become united with him by the likeness of his death} (\ei gar sumphutoi gegonamen t“i homoi“mati tou thanatou autou). Condition of the first class, assumed to be true.

\Sumphutoi is old verbal adjective from \sumphu“, to grow together. Baptism as a picture of death and burial symbolizes our likeness to Christ in his death. {We shall be also united in the likeness of his resurrection} (\alla kai t“s anastase“s esometha). The conclusion to the previous condition introduced by \alla kai as often and \toi homoi“mati (in the likeness) must be understood before t“s anastase“s (of his resurrection). Baptism is a picture of the past and of the present and a prophecy of the future, the matchless preacher of the new life in Christ.

6:6 {Our old man} (\ho palaios h“m“n anthr“pos). Only in Paul (here, Col 3:9; Eph 4:22). {Was crucified with him} (\sunestaur“th^). See on “Ga 2:19 for this boldly picturesque word. This took place not at baptism, but only pictured there. It took place when "we died to sin" (verse 1). {The body of sin} (\to s“ma t“s hamartias). "The body of which sin has taken possession" (Sanday and Headlam), the body marked by sin. {That so we should no longer be in bondage to sin} (\tou m“keti douleuein h“mas t“i hamartifi). Purpose clause with \tou and the present active infinitive of \douleu“, continue serving sin (as slaves). Adds "slavery" to living in sin (verse 2).

6:7 {Is justified} (\dedikai“tai). Perfect passive indicative of \dikaio“, stands justified, set free from, adding this great word to death and life of verses 1,2.

6:8 {With Christ} (\sun Christ“i\). As pictured by baptism, the crucifixion with Christ of verse 6.

6:9 {Dieth no more} (\ouketi apothn^skei\). "Christ's particular death occurs but once" (Shedd). See Heb 10:10. A complete refutation of the "sacrificial" character of the "mass."

6:10 {The death that he died} (\ho apethanen\). Neuter relative, cognative accusative with \apethanen\. {Once} (\ephapax\). Once and once only (Heb 9:26f.), not \pote\ (once upon a time). {The life that he liveth} (\ho z^i\). Cognate accusative of the relative.

6:11 {Reckon ye also yourselves} (\kai humeis logizesthe\). Direct middle imperative of \logizomai\ and complete proof that Paul does not mean that baptism makes one dead to sin and alive to God. That is a spiritual operation "in Christ Jesus" and only pictured by baptism. This is a plea to live up to the ideal of the baptized life.

6:12 {Reign} (\basileuet“\). Present active imperative, "let not sin continue to reign" as it did once (5:12). {Mortal} (\thn^toi\). Verbal adjective from \thn^sk“\, subject to death. The reign of sin is over with you. Self-indulgence is inconsistent with trust in the vicarious atonement. {That ye should obey} (\eis to hupakouein\). With a view to obeying.

6:13 {Neither present} (\m^de paristanete\). Present active imperative in prohibition of \paristan“\, late form of \parist^mi\, to place beside. Stop presenting your members or do not have the habit of doing so, "do not go on putting your members to sin as weapons of unrighteousness." {Instruments} (\hopla\). Old word for tools of any kind for shop or war (Joh 18:3; 2Co 6:7; 10:4; Ro 13:12). Possibly here figure of two armies arrayed against each other (Ga 5:16-24), and see \hopla dikaiosun^s\ below. The two sets of \hopla\ clash. {But present yourselves unto God} (\alla parast^sate heautous t“i the“i\). First aorist active imperative of \parist^mi\, same verb, but different tense, do it now and completely. Our "members" (\mel^\) should be at the call of God "as alive from the dead."

6:14 {Shall not have dominion} (\ou kurieusei\). Future active indicative of \kurieu“\, old verb from \kurios\, "shall not lord it over you," even if not yet wholly dead. Cf. 2Co 1:24.

6:15 {What then?} (\ti oun?). Another turn in the argument about the excess of grace. {Shall we sin?} (\hamartes“men?). First aorist active deliberative subjunctive of \hamartan“. "Shall we commit sin" (occasional acts of sin as opposed to the life of sin as raised by \epimen“men t^i hamartifi\ in verse 1)? {Because} (\hoti). The same reason as in verse 1 and taken up from the very words in verse 14. Surely, the objector says, we may take a night off now and then and sin a little bit "since we are under grace."

6:16 {His servants ye are whom ye obey} (\douloi este h“i hupakouete). Bondservants, slaves of the one whom ye obey, whatever one's profession may be, traitors, spies sometimes they are called. As Paul used the figure to illustrate death to sin and resurrection to new life in Christ and not in sin, so now he uses slavery against the idea of occasional lapses into sin. Loyalty to Christ will not permit occasional crossing over to the other side to Satan's line.

6:17 {Whereas ye were} (\^te). Imperfect but no "whereas" in the Greek. Paul is not grateful that they were once slaves of sin, but only that, though they once were, they turned from that state. {To that form of doctrine whereunto ye were delivered} (\eis hon paredoth^te tupon didach^s). Incorporation of the antecedent (\tupon didach^s) into the relative clause: "to which form of doctrine ye were delivered." See on 5:14 for \tupon\. It is hardly proper to take "form" here to refer to Paul's gospel (2:16), possibly an allusion to the symbolism of baptism which was the outward sign of the separation.

6:18 {Ye became servants of righteousness} (\edoul“th^te t^i dikaiosun^i). First aorist passive indicative of \doulo“, to enslave. "Ye were made slaves to righteousness." You have simply changed masters, no longer slaves of sin (set free from that tyrant), but ye are slaves of righteousness. There is no middle ground, no "no man's land" in this war.

6:19 {I speak after the manner of men} (\anthr“pinon leg“). "I speak a human word." He begs pardon for using "slaving" in connection with righteousness. But it is a good word, especially for our times when self-assertiveness and personal liberty bulk so large in modern speech. See 3:5; Ga 3:15 where he uses \kata anthr“pon\. {Because of the infirmity of your flesh} (\dia t^n astheneian t's sarkos hum“n”). Because of defective spiritual insight largely due to moral defects also. {Servants to uncleanness} (\doula t'i akatharsifi”). Neuter plural form of \doulos to agree with \mel“ (members). Patently true in sexual sins, in drunkenness, and all fleshly sins, absolutely slaves like narcotic fiends. {So now} (\hout“s nun”). Now that you are born again in Christ. Paul uses twice again the same verb \paristemi, to present (\parest^sate, parast^sate”). {Servants to righteousness} (\doula t'i dikaiosun^i”). Repeats the idea of verse 18. {Unto sanctification} (\eis hagasmon”). This the goal, the blessed consummation that demands and deserves the new slavery without occasional lapses or sprees (verse 15). This late word appears only in LXX, N.T., and ecclesiastical writers so far. See on 1Th 4:3; 1Co 1:30. Paul includes sanctification in his conception of the God-kind (1:17) of righteousness (both justification, 1:18-5:21 and sanctification, chapters 6-8). It is a life process of consecration, not an instantaneous act. Paul shows that we ought to be sanctified (6:1-7:6) and illustrates the obligation by death (6:1-14), by slavery (6:15-23), and by marriage (7:1-6).

6:20 {Free in regard of righteousness} (\eleutheroi t'i dikaiosun^i”). Ye wore no collar of righteousness, but freely did as ye pleased. They were "free." Note dative case, personal relation, of \dikaiosun^i”).

6:21 {What fruit then had ye at that time?} (\tina oun karpon eichete tote?”). Imperfect active, used to have. A pertinent question. Ashes in their hands now. They are ashamed now of the memory of them. The end of them is death.

6:22 {Ye have your fruit unto sanctification} (\echete ton karpon hum“n eis hagasmon”). Freedom from sin and slavery to God bring permanent fruit that leads to sanctification. {And the end eternal life} (\to de telos z“^n ai“nion”). Note accusative case \z“^n ai“nion”, object of \echete (ye have), though \thanatos in contrast above is nominative.

6:23 {Wages} (\ops“nia”). Late Greek for wages of soldier, here of sin. See on Lu 3:14; 1Co 9:7; 2Co 11:8. Sin pays its wages in full with no cut. But eternal life is God's gift (\charisma”), not wages. Both \thanatos and \z“^n are {eternal} (\ai“nion”).

7:1 {To men that know the law} (\gin“skousin nomon\). Dative plural of present active participle of \gin“sk“. The Romans, whether Jews or Gentiles, knew the principle of law. {A man} (\tou anthr“pou\). "The person," generic term \anthr“pos\, not \an^r\.

7:2 {The wife that hath a husband} (\h^ hupandros gun^). Late word, under (in subjection to) a husband. Here only in N.T. {Is bound} (\dedetail\). Perfect passive indicative, stands bound. {By law} (\nom“i\). Instrumental case. {To the husband while he liveth} (\t“i z“nti andri\). "To the living husband," literally. {But if the husband die} (\ean de apothan^i ho an^r\). Third class condition, a supposable case (ean\ and the second aorist active subjunctive). {She is discharged} (\kat^rg^tai\). Perfect passive indicative of \katarge“, to make void. She stands free from the law of the husband. Cf. 6:6.

7:3 {While the husband liveth} (\z“ntos tou andros\). Genitive absolute of present active participle of \za“. {She shall be called} (\chr^matisei\). Future active indicative of \chr^matiz“, old verb, to receive a name as in Ac 11:26, from \chr^ma\, business, from \chraomai\, to use, then to give an oracle, etc. {An adulteress} (\moichalis\). Late word, in Plutarch, LXX. See on Mt 12:39. {If she be joined} (\ean gen^tai\). Third class condition, "if she come to." {So that she is no adulteress} (\tou m^ einai aut^n moichalida\). It is a fact that \tou\ and the infinitive is used for result as we saw in 1:24. Conceived result may explain the idiom here.

7:4 {Ye also were made to the law} (\kai humeis ethanat“th^te\). First aorist indicative passive of \thanato“, old verb, to put to death (Mt 10:21) or to make to die (extinct) as here and Ro 8:13. The analogy calls for the death of the law, but Paul refuses to say that. He changes the structure and makes them dead to the law as the husband (6:3-6). The relation of marriage is killed "through the body of Christ" as the "propitiation" (3:25) for us. Cf. Col 1:22. {That we should be joined to another} (\eis to genesthai heter“i\). Purpose clause with \eis to\ and the infinitive. First mention of the saints as wedded to Christ as their Husband occurs in 1Co 6:13; Ga 4:26. See further Eph 5:22-33. {That we might bring forth fruit unto God} (hina karpophor^s“men t“i the“i). He changes the metaphor to that of the tree used in 6:22.

7:5 {In the flesh} (\en t*ˆ*i sarki\). Same sense as in 6:19 and 7:18,25. The "flesh" is not inherently sinful, but is subject to sin. It is what Paul means by being "under the law." He uses \sarx\ in a good many senses. {Sinful passions} (\ta path*ˆ*mata t*ˆ*ˆn hamarti*ˆ*ˆn\). "Passions of sins" or marked by sins. {Wrought} (\energeito\). Imperfect middle of \energe*ˆ*ˆ\, "were active." {To bring forth fruit unto death} (\eis to karpophor*ˆ*sai t*ˆ*ˆi thanat*ˆ*ˆi\). Purpose clause again. Vivid picture of the seeds of sin working for death.

7:6 {But now} (\nuni de\). In the new condition. {Wherein we were holden} (\en h“i kateichometha\). Imperfect passive of \katech“, picture of our former state (same verb in 1:18). {In newness of spirit} (\en kainot“ti pneumatosis\). The death to the letter of the law (the old husband) has set us free to the new life in Christ. So Paul has shown again the obligation on us to live for Christ.

7:7 {Is the law sin?} (\ho nomos hamartia?). A pertinent query in view of what he had said. Some people today oppose all inhibitions and prohibitions because they stimulate violations. That is half-baked thinking. {I had not known sin} (\t^h hamartian ouk egn^h). Second aorist indicative of \gin^hsk^h, to know. It is a conclusion of a second class condition, determined as unfulfilled. Usually \an^h is used in the conclusion to make it plain that it is second class condition instead of first class, but occasionally it is not employed when it is plain enough without as here (Joh 16:22,24). See on \Ga 4:15. So as to {I had not known coveting} (lust), \epithumian ouk ^hidein^h. But all the same the law is not itself sin nor the cause of sin. Men with their sinful natures turn law into an occasion for sinful acts.

7:8 {Finding occasion} (\aphorm^n labousa\). See 2Co 5:12; 11:12; Ga 5:13 for \aphorm^n\, a starting place from which to rush into acts of sin, excuses for doing what they want to do. Just so drinking men use the prohibition laws as "occasions" for violating them. {Wrought in me} (\kateirgasato en emoi\). First aorist active middle indicative of the intensive verb \katergazomai\, to work out (to the finish), effective aorist.

The command not to lust made me lust more. {Dead} (\nekra\).
Inactive, not non-existent. Sin in reality was there in a dormant state.

7:9 {I was alive} (\ez“n\). Imperfect active. Apparently, "the lost paradise in the infancy of men" (Denney), before the conscience awoke and moral responsibility came, "a seeming life" (Shedd). {Sin revived} (\h^ hamartia anez^sen\). Sin came back to life, waked up, the blissful innocent stage was over, "the commandment having come" (\elthous^s t^s entol^s\, genitive absolute). {But I died} (\eg“ de apethanon\). My seeming life was over for I was conscious of sin, of violation of law. I was dead before, but I did not know. Now I found out that I was spiritually dead.

7:10 {This I found unto death} (\heureth^ moi--haut^ eis thanaton\). Literally, "the commandment the one for (meant for) life, this was found for me unto death." First aorist (effective) passive indicative of \heurisk“\, to find, not active as the English has it. It turned out so for me (ethical dative).

7:11 {Beguiled me} (\ex^pat^sen me\). First aorist active indicative of \exapata“\, old verb, completely (\ex\) made me lose my way (\a\ privative, \pate“\, to walk). See on 1Co 3:18; 2Co 11:3. Only in Paul in N.T. {Slew me} (\apekteinen\). First aorist active indicative of \apoktein“\, old verb. "Killed me off," made a clean job of it. Sin here is personified as the tempter (Ge 3:13).

7:12 {Holy, and righteous, and good} (\hagia kai dikaia kai agath^). This is the conclusion (wherefore, \h“ste\) to the query in verse 7. The commandment is God's and so holy like Him, just in its requirements and designed for our good. The modern revolt against law needs these words.

7:13 {Become death unto me?} (\emoi egeneto thanatos?\). Ethical dative \emoi\ again. New turn to the problem. Admitting the goodness of God's law, did it issue in death for me? Paul repels (\m^ genoito\) this suggestion. It was sin that (But sin, \alla h^ hamartia\) "became death for me." {That it might be shown} (\hina phan^i\). Final clause, \hina\ and second aorist passive subjunctive of \phain“\, to show. The sinfulness of sin is revealed in its violations of God's law. {By working death to me}

(\moi katergazomen^ thanaton\). Present middle participle, as an incidental result. {Might become exceedingly sinful} (\gen^tai kath' huperbol^n hamart^'los\). Second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\ with \hina\ in final clause. On \kath' huperbol^n\, see on 1Co 12:31. Our _hyperbole_ is the Greek \huperbol^\. The excesses of sin reveal its real nature. Only then do some people get their eyes opened.

7:14 {Spiritual} (\pneumatikos\). Spirit-caused and spirit-given and like the Holy Spirit. See 1Co 10:3f. {But I am carnal} (\eg^' de sarkinos eimi\). "Fleshen" as in 1Co 3:1 which see, more emphatic even than \sarkikos\, "a creature of flesh." {Sold under sin} (\pepramenos hupo t^n hamartian\). Perfect passive participle of \piprask^', old verb, to sell. See on Mt 13:46; Ac 2:45, state of completion. Sin has closed the mortgage and owns its slave.

7:15 {I know not} (\ou gin^'sk^'\). "I do not recognize" in its true nature. My spiritual perceptions are dulled, blinded by sin (2Co 4:4). The dual life pictured here by Paul finds an echo in us all, the struggle after the highest in us ("what I really wish," \ho thel^', to practise it steadily, \prass^') and the slipping into doing (\poi^') "what I really hate" (\ho mis^') and yet sometimes do. There is a deal of controversy as to whether Paul is describing his struggle with sin before conversion or after it. The words "sold under sin" in verse 14 seem to turn the scale for the pre-conversion period. "It is the unregenerate man's experience, surviving at least in memory into regenerate days, and read with regenerate eyes" (Denney).

7:16 {I consent unto the law} (\sunph^mi t^'i nom^'i\). Old verb, here only in N.T., with associative instrumental case. "I speak with." My wanting (\thel^') to do the opposite of what I do proves my acceptance of God's law as good (\kalos\).

7:17 {So now} (\nuni de\). A logical contrast, "as the case really stands." {But sin that dwelleth in me} (\all' h^' enoikousa en emoi hamartia\). "But the dwelling in me sin." Not my true self, my higher personality, but my lower self due to my slavery to indwelling sin. Paul does not mean to say that his whole self has no moral responsibility by using this paradox. "To be saved from sin, a man must at the same time own it and disown it" (Denney).

7:18 {In me} (\en emoi). Paul explains this by "in my flesh" (\en t'i sarki mou), the unregenerate man "sold under sin" of verse 14. {No good thing} (\ouk--agathon). "Not absolutely good." This is not a complete view of man even in his unregenerate state as Paul at once shows. {For to will is present with me} (\to gar thelein parakeitai moi). Present middle indicative of \parakeimai, old verb, to lie beside, at hand, with dative \moi. Only here in N.T. {The wishing} is the better self, {the doing not} the lower self.

7:19 {But the evil which I would not} (\alla ho ou thel' kakon). Incorporation of the antecedent into the relative clause, "what evil I do not wish." An extreme case of this practise of evil is seen in the drunkard or the dope-fiend.

7:20 {It is no more I that do it} (\ouketi eg' katergazomai auto). Just as in verse 17, "no longer do I do it" (the real Ego\, my better self), and yet there is responsibility and guilt for the struggle goes on.

7:21 {The law} (\ton nomon). The principle already set forth (\ara\, accordingly) in verses 18,19. This is the way it works, but there is no surcease for the stings of conscience.

7:22 {For I delight in} (\sun^domai gar). Old verb, here alone in N.T., with associative instrumental case, "I rejoice with the law of God," my real self "after the inward man" (\kata ton es' anthr'pon) of the conscience as opposed to "the outward man" (2Co 4:16; Eph 3:16).

7:23 {A different law} (\heteron nomon). For the distinction between \heteros and \allos, see Ga 1:6f. {Warring against} (\antistrateuomenon). Rare verb (_Xenophon_) to carry on a campaign against. Only here in N.T. {The law of my mind} (\t'i nom' i tou noos). The reflective intelligence Paul means by \noos, "the inward man" of verse 22. It is this higher self that agrees that the law of God is good (12,16,22). {Bringing me into captivity} (\aichmal'tizonta). See on this late and vivid verb for capture and slavery Lu 21:24; 2Co 10:5. Surely it is a tragic picture drawn by Paul with this outcome, "sold under sin" (14), "captivity to the law of sin" (23). The ancient writers (Plato, Ovid, Seneca, Epictetus) describe the same dual struggle in man between his conscience and his deeds.

7:24 {O wretched man that I am} (\talaip“ros eg“ anthr“pos). "Wretched man I." Old adjective from \tla“\, to bear, and \p“ros\, a callus. In N.T. only here and Re 3:17. "A heart-rending cry from the depths of despair" (Sanday and Headlam). {Out of the body of this death} (\ek tou s“matos tou thanatou toutou). So the order of words demands. See verse 13 for "death" which finds a lodgment in the body (Lightfoot). If one feels that Paul has exaggerated his own condition, he has only to recall 1Ti 1:15 when he describes himself a chief of sinners. He dealt too honestly with himself for Pharisaic complacency to live long.

7:25 {I thank God} (\charis t“i the“i). "Thanks to God." Note of victory over death through Jesus Christ our Lord." {So then I myself} (\ara oun autos eg“). His whole self in his unregenerate state gives a divided service as he has already shown above. In 6:1-7:6 Paul proved the obligation to be sanctified. In 7:7-8:11 he discusses the possibility of sanctification, only for the renewed man by the help of the Holy Spirit.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Romans: Chapter 7)

8:1 {Therefore now} (\ara nun\). Two particles. Points back to the triumphant note in 7:25 after the preceding despair. {No condemnation} (\ouden katakrima\). As sinners we deserved condemnation in our unregenerate state in spite of the struggle. But God offers pardon "to those in Christ Jesus (\tois en Christ"i I'sou\). This is Paul's Gospel. The fire has burned on and around the Cross of Christ. There and there alone is safety. Those in Christ Jesus can lead the consecrated, the crucified, the baptized life.

8:2 {The law of the Spirit of life} (\ho nomos tou pneumatou t's z'ous\). The principle or authority exercised by the Holy Spirit which bestows life and which rests "in Christ Jesus." {Made me free} (\leuthero"sen me\). First aorist active indicative of the old verb \eleuthero" for which see Ga 5:1. Aleph B have \se\ (thee) instead of \me\. It matters little. We are pardoned, we are free from the old law of sin and death (7:7-24), we are able by the help of the Holy Spirit to live the new life in Christ.

8:3 {That the law could not do} (\to adunaton tou nomou\). Literally, "the impossibility of the law" as shown in 7:7-24, either nominative absolute or accusative of general reference. No syntactical connection with the rest of the sentence. {In that} (\en h'i\). "Wherein." {It was weak} (\sthenei\). Imperfect active, continued weak as already shown. {In the likeness of sinful flesh} (\en homoi"mati sarkos hamartias\). For "likeness" see Php 2:7, a real man, but more than man for God's "own Son." Two genitives "of flesh of sin" (marked by sin), that is the flesh of man is, but not the flesh of Jesus. {And for sin} (\kai peri hamartias\). Condensed phrase, God sent his Son also concerning sin (our sin). {Condemned sin in the flesh} (\katekrine t'n hamartian en t'i sarki\). First aorist active indicative of \katakrin". He condemned the sin of men and the condemnation took place in the flesh of Jesus. If the article t'n\ had been repeated before \en t'i sarki\ Paul would have affirmed sin in the flesh of Jesus, but he carefully avoided that (Robertson, Grammar, p. 784).

8:4 {The ordinance of the law} (\to dikai“ma tou nomou). "The requirement of the law." {Might be fulfilled} (\hina pler“th^i). Purpose of the death of Christ by \hina and first aorist passive subjunctive of \pl^ro“. Christ met it all in our stead (3:21-26). {Not after the flesh, but after the Spirit} (\m^kata sarka alla kata pneuma). The two laws of life (\kata sarka\ in 7:7-24, \kata pneuma\ 8:1-11). Most likely the Holy Spirit or else the renewed spirit of man.

8:5 {Do mind} (\phronousin). Present active indicative of \phrone“, to think, to put the mind (\phr^n) on. See Mt 16:23; Ro 12:16. For the contrast between \sarx and \pneuma, see Ga 5:16-24.

8:6 {The mind} (\to phron^ma). The bent or will of the flesh is death as shown in 7:7-24. {Life} (\z“^l). In contrast with "death." {Peace} (\eir^n^l). As seen in 5:1-5.

8:7 {Is not subject} (\ouch hupotassetai). Present passive indicative of \hupotass“, late verb, military term for subjection to orders. Present tense here means continued insubordination. {Neither indeed can it be} (\oude gar dunatai). "For it is not even able to do otherwise." This helpless state of the unregenerate man Paul has shown above apart from Christ. Hope lies in Christ (7:25) and the Spirit of life (8:2).

8:8 {Cannot please God} (\the“i aresai ou dunantai). Because of the handicap of the lower self in bondage to sin. This does not mean that the sinner has no responsibility and cannot be saved. He is responsible and can be saved by the change of heart through the Holy Spirit.

8:9 {Not in the flesh} (\ouk en sarki). Not sold under sin (7:14) any more. {But in the spirit} (\alla en pneumatil). Probably, "in the Holy Spirit." It is not Pantheism or Buddhism that Paul here teaches, but the mystical union of the believer with Christ in the Holy Spirit. {If so be that} (\eiper). "If as is the fact" (cf. 3:30). {The Spirit of Christ} (\pneuma Christou). The same as "the Spirit of God" just before. See also Php 1:19; 1Pe 1:11. Incidental argument for the Deity of Christ and probably the meaning of 2Co 3:18 "the Spirit of the Lord." Condition of first class, assumed as true.

8:10 {The body is dead} (\to men s“ma nekron\). Has the seeds of death in it and will die "because of sin." {The spirit is life} (\to de pneuma z““\). The redeemed human spirit. He uses \z““\ (life) instead of \z“sa\ (living), "God-begotten, God-sustained life" (Denney), if Christ is in you.

8:11 {Shall quicken} (\z“opoi^sei\). Future active indicative of \z“opoie“, late verb from \z“opoios\, making alive. See on 1Co 15:22. {Through his Spirit} (\dia tou pneumatos\). B D L have \dia to pneuma\ (because of the Spirit). Both ideas are true, though the genitive is slightly more probably correct.

8:12 {We are debtors} (\opheiletai esmen\). See on 1Ga 5:3; Ro 1:14. {Not to the flesh} (\ou t^i sarki\). Negative \ou\ goes with preceding verb and \t^i sarki\, not with the infinitive \tou z^in\.

8:13 {Ye must die} (\mellete apothn^skein\). Present indicative of \mell“, to be about to do and present active infinitive of \apothn^sk“, to die. "Ye are on the point of dying." Eternal death. {By the spirit} (\pneumati\). Holy Spirit, instrumental case. {Ye shall live} (\z^sesthe\). Future active indicative of \za“. Eternal life.

8:14 {Sons of God} (\huioi theou\). In the full sense of this term. In verse 16 we have \tekna theou\ (children of God). Hence no great distinction can be drawn between \huios\ and \teknon\. The truth is that \huios\ is used in various ways in the New Testament. In the highest sense, not true of any one else, Jesus Christ is God's Son (8:3). But in the widest sense all men are "the offspring" (\genos\) of God as shown in Ac 17:28 by Paul. But in the special sense here only those are "sons of God" who are led by the Spirit of God, those born again (the second birth) both Jews and Gentiles, "the sons of Abraham" (\huioi Abraam\, Ga 3:7), the children of faith.

8:15 {The spirit of adoption} (\pneuma huiiothesias\). See on this term \huiiothesia\, Ga 4:5. Both Jews and Gentiles receive this "adoption" into the family of God with all its privileges. "{Whereby we cry, Abba, Father}" (\en h^i krazomen Abbf ho pat^r\). See Ga 4:6 for discussion of this double use of Father as the child's privilege.

8:16 {The Spirit himself} (\auto to pneuma\). The grammatical gender of \pneuma\ is neuter as here, but the Greek used also the natural gender as we do exclusively as in Joh 16:13 \ekeinos\ (masculine {he}), \to pneuma\ (neuter). See also Joh 16:26 (\ho--ekeinos\). It is a grave mistake to use the neuter "it" or "itself" when referring to the Holy Spirit. {Beareth witness with our spirit} (\summarturei tⁱ pneumatⁱ h^m“n\). See on ̄Ro 2:15 for this verb with associative instrumental case. See 1Jo 5:10f. for this double witness.

8:17 {Joint-heirs with Christ} (\sunkl^ronomoi Christou\). A late rare double compound, in Philo, an Ephesian inscription of the imperial period (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 92), papyri of the Byzantine period. See 8:29 for this idea expanded. Paul is fond of compounds of \sun\, three in this verse (\sunkl^ronomoi, sunpasch“men, sundoxasth“men\). The last (first aorist passive subjunctive of \sundoxaz“\ with \hina\ (purpose)), late and rare, here only in N.T.

8:18 {To us-ward} (\eis h^mfs\). We shall be included in the radiance of the coming glory which will put in the shadow the present sufferings. Precisely the same idiom here with \mellousan doxan\ (aorist passive infinitive of \apokalupth^{nai}) occurs in Ga 3:23 with \mellousan pistin\, which see.

8:19 {The earnest expectation of creation} (\h^{apokaradokia} t^s ktise“s\). This substantive has so far been found nowhere save here and Php 1:20, though the verb \apokaradoke“\ is common in Polybius and Plutarch. Milligan (_Vocabulary_) thinks that Paul may have made the substantive from the verb. It is a double compound (\apo\, off from, \kara\, head, \doke“\, Ionic verb, to watch), hence to watch eagerly with outstretched head. {Waiteth for} (\apekdechetai\). See on ̄1Co 1:7; Ga 5:5 for this rare word (possibly formed by Paul, Milligan). "To wait it out" (Thayer). {The revealing of the sons of God} (\tⁿ apokalupsin tⁿ hui“n tou theou\). Cf. 1Jo 3:2; 2Th 2:8; Col 3:4. This mystical sympathy of physical nature with the work of grace is beyond the comprehension of most of us. But who can disprove it?

8:20 {Was subjected} (\hupetag^h\). Second aorist passive indicative of \hupatass“\ (cf. verse 7). {To vanity} (\tⁱ mataiot^{ti}\). Dative case. Rare and late word, common in LXX. From \mataios\, empty, vain. Eph 4:17; 2Pe 2:18. {Not of its own will} (\ouch hekousa\). Common adjective, in N.T. only here and 1Co 9:27. It was due to the effect of man's sin. {But by reason of him} (\alla dia ton\). Because of God. {In hope that} (\eph' helpidi hoti\). Note the form \helpidi\ rather than the usual \elpidi\ and so \eph\. \Hoti\ can be causal "because" instead of declarative "that."

8:21 {The creation itself} (\aut^ h^ ktisis\). It is the hope of creation, not of the Creator. Nature "possesses in the feeling of her unmerited suffering a sort of presentiment of her future deliverance" (Godet).

8:22 {Groaneth and travaileth in pain} (\sunstenazei kai sun"diinei\). Two more compounds with \sun\. Both rare and both here alone in N.T. Nature is pictured in the pangs of childbirth.

8:23 {The first fruits} (\t^ n aparch^ n\). Old and common metaphor. {Of the Spirit} (\tou pneumatos\). The genitive of apposition. The Holy Spirit came on the great Pentecost and his blessings continue as seen in the "gifts" in 1Co 12-14, in the moral and spiritual gifts of Ga 5:22f. And greater ones are to come (1Co 15:44ff.). {Even we ourselves} (\kai autoi\). He repeats for emphasis. We have our "groaning" (\stenazomen\) as well as nature. {Waiting for} (\apekdechomenoi\). The same verb used of nature in verse 19. {Our adoption} (\huiiothesian\). Our full "adoption" (see verse 15), "the redemption of our body" (\t^ n apolutr"sin tou s"matos h^ m"n\). That is to come also. Then we shall have complete redemption of both soul and body.

8:24 {For by hope were we saved} (\t^ i gar elpidi es"th^ men\). First aorist passive indicative of \s"z". The case of \elpidi\ is not certain, the form being the same for locative, instrumental and dative. Curiously enough either makes good sense in this context: "We were saved in hope, by hope, for hope" (of the redemption of the body).

8:25 {With patience} (\di' hupomon^ s\). Paul repeats the verb \apekdechomai\ of verse 23.

8:26 {Helpeth our infirmity} (\sunantilambanetai t^ i astheneifi h^ m"n\). Present middle indicative of \sunantilambanomai\, late and striking double compound (Diodorus, LXX, Josephus, frequent in inscriptions, Deissmann, Light, etc., p. 87), to lend a hand together with, at the same time with one. Only twice in N.T., here and Lu 10:40 in Martha's plea for Mary's help. Here beautifully Paul pictures the Holy Spirit taking hold at our side at the very time of our weakness (associative instrumental case) and before too late. {How to pray} (\to ti proseux“metha\). Articular clause object of \oidamen\ (we know) and indirect question with the deliberative aorist middle subjunctive \proseux“metha\, retained in the indirect question. {As we ought} (\katho dei\). "As it is necessary." How true this is of all of us in our praying. {Maketh intercession} (\huperentugchanei\). Present active indicative of late double compound, found only here and in later ecclesiastical writers, but \entugchan“\ occurs in verse 27 (a common verb). It is a picturesque word of rescue by one who "happens on" (\entugchanei\) one who is in trouble and "in his behalf" (\huper\) pleads "with unuttered groanings" (instrumental case) or with "sighs that baffle words" (Denney). This is work of our Helper, the Spirit himself.

8:27 {He that searcheth} (\ho eraun“n\). God (1Sa 16:7). {According to the will of God} (\kata theon\). See 2Co 7:9-11 for this phrase \kata theon\ (according to God). The Holy Spirit is the "other Paraclete" (Joh 14:16) who pleads God's cause with us as Christ is our Paraclete with the Father (1Jo 2:1). But more is true as here, for the Holy Spirit interprets our prayers to God and "makes intercession for us in accord with God's will."

8:28 {All things work together} (\panta sunergei\). A B have \ho theos\ as the subject of \sunergei\ (old verb, see on 1Co 16:16; 2Co 6:1). That is the idea anyhow. It is God who makes "all things work together" in our lives "for good" (\eis agathon\), ultimate good. {According to his purpose} (\kata prothesin\). Old word, seen already in Ac 27:13 and for "shewbread" in Mt 12:4. The verb \protith^mi\ Paul uses in 3:24 for God's purpose. Paul accepts fully human free agency but behind it all and through it all runs God's sovereignty as here and on its gracious side (9:11; 3:11; 2Ti 1:9).

8:29 {Foreknew} (\proegn“\). Second aorist active indicative of \progin“sk“, old verb as in Ac 26:5. See Ps 1:6 (LXX) and Mt 7:23. This fore-knowledge and choice is placed in eternity in Eph 1:4. {He foreordained} (\pro“risen\). First aorist active indicative of \prooriz“, late verb to appoint beforehand as in Ac 4:28; 1Co 2:7. Another compound with \pro- (for eternity). {Conformed to the image} (\summorphous t^s eikonos\). Late adjective from \sun\ and \morph^ and so an inward and not merely superficial conformity. \Eik“n\ is used of Christ as the very image of the Father (2Co 4:4; Col 1:15). See Php 2:6f. for \morph^\. Here we have both \morph^ and \eik“n\ to express the gradual change in us till we acquire the likeness of Christ the Son of God so that we ourselves shall ultimately have the family likeness of sons of God. Glorious destiny. {That he might be} (\eis to einai auton\). Common idiom for purpose. {First born among many brethren} (\pr“totokon en pollois adelphois\). Christ is "first born" of all creation (Col 1:15), but here he is "first born from the dead" (Col 1:18), the Eldest Brother in this family of God's sons, though "Son" in a sense not true of us.

8:30 {Called} (\ekalesen\) {--Justified} (\edikai“sen\) {--Glorified} (\edoxasen\). All first aorist active indicatives of common verbs (\kale“, dikaio“, doxaz“\). But the glorification is stated as already consummated (constative aorists, all of them), though still in the future in the fullest sense. "The step implied in \edoxasen\ is both complete and certain in the Divine counsels" (Sanday and Headlam).

8:31 {For these things} (\pros tauta\). From 8:12 on Paul has made a triumphant presentation of the reasons for the certainty of final sanctification of the sons of God. He has reached the climax with glorification (\edoxasen\ in verse 30). But Paul lets the objector have his say as he usually does so that in verses 31-39 he considers the objections. {If God is for us, who is against us?} (\ei ho theos huper h^m“n, tis kath' h^m“n?\). This condition of the first class carries Paul's challenge to all doubters. There is no one on a par with God. Note the two prepositions in contrast (\huper\, over, \kata\, down or against).

8:32 {He that} (\hos ge\). "Who as much as this" (\ge\ here magnifying the deed, intensive particle). {Spared not} (\ouk epheisato\). First aorist middle of \pheidomai\, old verb used about the offering of Isaac in Ge 22:16. See Ac 20:29. {Also with him} (\kai sun aut“i\). The gift of "his own son" is the promise and the pledge of the all things for good of verse 28. Christ is all and carries all with him.

8:33 {Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?} (\tis egkalesei kata eklekt“n theou?\). Future active indicative of \egkale“, old verb, to come forward as accuser (forensic term) in case in court, to impeach, as in Ac 19:40; 23:29; 26:2, the only N.T. examples. Satan is the great Accuser of the brethren.

{It is God that justifieth} (\theos ho dikai“n\). God is the Judge who sets us right according to his plan for justification (3:21-31). The Accuser must face the Judge with his charges.

8:34 {Shall condemn} (\katakryn“n\). Can be either present active participle (condemns) or the future (shall condemn). It is a bold accuser who can face God with false charges or with true ones for that matter for we have an "Advocate" at God's Court (1Jo 2:1), "who is at the right hand of God" (\hos estin en dexifi tou theou\) "who also maketh intercession for us" (\hos kai entugchanei huper h^m“n\). Our Advocate paid the debt for our sins with his blood. The score is settled. We are free (8:1).

8:35 {Shall separate} (\ch“risei\). Future active of old verb \choriz“\ from adverb \ch“ris\ and that from \ch“ra\, space. Can any one put a distance between Christ's love and us (objective genitive)? Can any one lead Christ to cease loving us? Such things do happen between husband and wife, alas. Paul changes the figure from "who" (\tis\) to "what" (\ti\). The items mentioned will not make Christ love us less. Paul here glories in tribulations as in 5:3ff.

8:36 {Even as it is written} (\kath“s gegraptai\). He quotes Ps 44:23. {We are killed} (\thanatoumetha\). Present passive indicative of \thanato“\ for which see on 7:4. Same idea of continuous martyrdom in 1Co 15:31. {As sheep for the slaughter} (\h“s probata sphag^s\). Objective genitive (\sphag^s\).

8:37 {Nay} (\alla\). On the contrary, we shall not be separated. {We are more than conquerors} (\hupernik“men\). Late and rare compound. Here only in N.T. "We gain a surpassing victory through the one who loved us."

8:38 {For I am persuaded} (\pepeismai gar\). Perfect passive participle of \peith“\, "I stand convinced." The items mentioned are those that people dread (life, death, supernatural powers, above, below, any creature to cover any omissions).

8:39 {To separate us} (\h^mfs ch“risai\). Aorist active infinitive of \choriz“\ (same verb as in 35). God's love is victor over all possible foes, "God's love that is in Christ Jesus." Paul has reached the mountain top. He has really completed his great argument concerning the God-kind of righteousness save for its bearing on some special problems. The first of these concerns the fact that the Jews (God's chosen people) have so largely rejected the gospel (chapters 9-11).

9:1 {In Christ} (\en Christ“i\). Paul really takes a triple oath here so strongly is he stirred. He makes a positive affirmation in Christ, a negative one (not lying), the appeal to his conscience as co-witness (\sunmarturous^s\, genitive absolute as in 2:15 which see) "in the Holy Spirit."

9:2 {Sorrow} (\lup^). Because the Jews were rejecting Christ the Messiah. "We may compare the grief of a Jew writing after the fall of Jerusalem" (Sanday and Headlam). {Unceasing pain in my heart} (\adialeiptos odun^ t^i kardifi\). Like _angina pectoris_. \Odun^ is old word for consuming grief, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:10. {Unceasing} (\adialeiptos\). Late and rare adjective (in an inscription 1 cent. B.C.), in N.T. only here and 2Ti 1:3. Two rare words together and both here only in N.T. and I and II Timothy (some small argument for the Pauline authorship of the Pastoral Epistles).

9:3 {I could wish} (\^uchom^n\). Idiomatic imperfect, "I was on the point of wishing." We can see that \euchomai\ (I do wish) would be wrong to say. \An^uchom^n\ would mean that he does not wish (conclusion of second class condition). \An^uchom^n\ would be conclusion of fourth class condition and too remote. He is shut up to the imperfect indicative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 886). {Anathema} (\anathema\). See for this word as distinct from \anath^ma\ (offering) 1Co 12:3; Ga 1:8f. {I myself} (\autos eg^). Nominative with the infinitive \einai\ and agreeing with subject of \^uchom^n\, {According to the flesh} (\kata sarka\). As distinguished from Paul's Christian brethren.

9:4 {Who} (\hoitines\). The very ones who, inasmuch as they. {Israelites} (\Isra^leitai\). Covenant name of the chosen people. {Whose} (\h^“n\). Predicate genitive of the relative, used also again with \hoi pateres\, For "the adoption" (\h^ huiiothesia\ see 8:15. {The glory} (\h^ doxa\). The Shekinah Glory of God (3:23) and used of Jesus in Jas 2:1. {The covenants} (\hai diath^kai\). Plural because renewed often (Ge 6:18; 9:9; 15:18; 17:2,7,9; Ex 2:24). {The giving of the law} (\h^ nomothesia\). Old word, here only in N.T., from \nomos\ and \tith^mi\, {The service} (h[^] latreia). The temple service (Heb 9:1,6). {The fathers} (hoi pateres). The patriarchs (Ac 3:13; 7:32).

9:5 {Of whom} (ex h[^]n). Fourth relative clause and here with \ex and the ablative. {Christ} (ho Christos). The Messiah. {As concerning the flesh} (to kata sarka). Accusative of general reference, "as to the according to the flesh." Paul limits the descent of Jesus from the Jews to his human side as he did in 1:3f. {Who is over all, God blessed for ever} (ho on epi pant[^]n theos eulog[^]tos). A clear statement of the deity of Christ following the remark about his humanity. This is the natural and the obvious way of punctuating the sentence. To make a full stop after \sarka (or colon) and start a new sentence for the doxology is very abrupt and awkward. See Ac 20:28; Tit 2:13 for Paul's use of \theos applied to Jesus Christ.

9:6 {But it is not as though} (ouch hoion de hoti). Supply \estin after \ouch: "But it is not such as that," an old idiom, here alone in N.T. {Hath come to nought} (ekpept[^]ken). Perfect active indicative of \ekpipt[^], old verb, to fall out. {For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel} (ou gar pantes hoi ex Isra[^]l houtoi Isra[^]l). "For not all those out of Israel (the literal Jewish nation), these are Israel (the spiritual Israel)." This startling paradox is not a new idea with Paul. He had already shown (Ga 3:7-9) that those of faith are the true sons of Abraham. He has amplified that idea also in Ro 4. So he is not making a clever dodge here to escape a difficulty. He now shows how this was the original purpose of God to include only those who believed. {Seed of Abraham} (sperma Abraam). Physical descent here, but spiritual seed by promise in verse 8. He quotes Ge 21:12f.

9:8 {The children of the promise} (ta tekna t[^]s epaggelias). Not through Ishmael, but through Isaac. Only the children of the promise are "children of God" (tekna tou theou) in the full sense. He is not speaking of Christians here, but simply showing that the privileges of the Jews were not due to their physical descent from Abraham. Cf. Lu 3:8.

9:9 {A word of promise} (epaggelias ho logos houtos). Literally, "this word is one of promise." Paul combines Ge 18:10,14 from the LXX.

9:10 {Having conceived of one} (ex henos koit[^]n echousa). By metonymy with cause for the effect we have this peculiar idiom (\koit^ being bed, marriage bed), "having a marriage bed from one" husband. One father and twins.

9:11 {The children being not yet born} (\m^p^“ genn^thent^“n). Genitive absolute with first aorist passive participle of \genna^“, to beget, to be born, though no word for children nor even the pronoun \aut^“n (they). {Neither having done anything good or bad} (\m^de praxant^“n ti agathon ^ phaulon). Genitive absolute again with first active participle of \prass^“. On \phaulon, see 2Co 5:10. {The purpose of God} (\h^ prothesis tou theou). See 8:28 for \prothesis. {According to election} (\kat' eklog^“n). Old word from \ekleg^“, to select, to choose out. See 1Th 1:4. Here it is the purpose (\prothesis) of God which has worked according to the principles of election. {Not of works} (\ouk ex erg^“n). Not of merit.

9:12 {But of him that calleth} (\all' ek tou kalountos). Present active articular participle of \kale^“ in the ablative case after \ek. The source of the selection is God himself. Paul quotes Ge 25:33 (LXX).

9:13 Paul quotes Mal 1:2f. {But Esau I hated} (\ton de Esau emis^sa). This language sounds a bit harsh to us. It is possible that the word \mise^“ did not always carry the full force of what we mean by "hate." See Mt 6:24 where these very verbs (\mise^“ and \agapa^“) are contrasted. So also in Lu 14:26 about "hating" (\mise^“) one's father and mother if coming between one and Christ. So in Joh 12:25 about "hating" one's life. There is no doubt about God's preference for Jacob and rejection of Esau, but in spite of Sanday and Headlam one hesitates to read into these words here the intense hatred that has always existed between the descendants of Jacob and of Esau.

9:14 {Is there unrighteousness with God?} (\m^ adikia para t^“i the^“i?). Paul goes right to the heart of the problem. \M^“ expects a negative answer. "Beside" (\para) God there can be no injustice to Esau or to any one because of election.

9:15 {For he says to Moses} (\t^“i M^“usei gar legei). He has an Old Testament illustration of God's election in the case of Pharaoh (Ex 33:19). {On whom I have mercy} (\hon an ele^“). Indefinite relative with \an and the present active subjunctive of \elea^“, late verb only here and Jude 1:23 in N.T. "On whomsoever I have mercy." The same construction in \hon an oikteir“\, "on whomsoever I have compassion."

9:16 {So then} (\ara oun\). In view of this quotation. {It is not of} (\ou\). We must supply \estin eleos\ with \ou\, "Mercy is not of." The articular participles (\tou thelontos, tou trechontos, tou ele“ntos\)) can be understood as in the genitive with \eleos\ understood (mercy is not a quality of) or as the predicate ablative of source like \epiluse“s\ in 2Pe 1:20. Paul is fond of the metaphor of running.

9:17 {To Pharaoh} (\t“i Phara“\). There is a national election as seen in verses 7-13, but here Paul deals with the election of individuals. He "lays down the principle that God's grace does not necessarily depend upon anything but God's will" (Sanday and Headlam). He quotes Ex 9:16. {Might be published} (\diaggel“i\). Second aorist passive subjunctive of \diaggel\.

9:18 {He hardeneth} (\skl“runei\). Pharaoh hardened his own heart also (Ex 8:15,32; 9:34), but God gives men up also (1:24,26,28). This late word is used by the Greek physicians Galen and Hippocrates. See on ᾠAc 19:9. Only here in Paul.

9:19 {Why doth he still find fault?} (\ti eti memphetai?\). Old verb, to blame. In N.T. only here and Heb 8:8. Paul's imaginary objector picks up the admission that God hardened Pharaoh's heart. "Still" (\eti\)) argues for a change of condition since that is true. {Withstandeth his will} (\t“i boul“mati autou anthest“ken\). Perfect active indicative of \anthist“mi\, old verb, maintains a stand (the perfect tense). Many have attempted to resist God's will (\boul“ma\, deliberate purpose, in N.T. only here and Ac 27:43; 1Pe 4:3). Elsewhere \thel“ma\ (Mt 6:10).

9:20 {Nay, but, O man, who art thou?} (\O anthr“pe, men oun ge su tis ei?\). "O man, but surely thou who art thou?" Unusual and emphatic order of the words, prolepsis of \su\ (thou) before \tis\ (who) and \men oun ge\ (triple particle, men, indeed, oun, therefore, ge, at least) at the beginning of clause as in Ro 10:18; Php 3:8 contrary to ancient idiom, but so in papyri. {That repliest} (\ho antapokrinomenos\). Present middle articular participle of double compound verb \antapokrinomai\, to answer to one's face (\anti-\) late and vivid combination, also in Lu 14:6, nowhere else in N.T., but in LXX. {The thing formed} (\to plasma\). Old word (Plato, Aristophanes) from \plass“\, to mould, as with clay or wax, from which the aorist active participle used here (\t“i plasanti\) comes. Paul quotes these words from Isa 29:16 verbatim. It is a familiar idea in the Old Testament, the absolute power of God as Creator like the potter's use of clay (Isa 44:8; 45:8-10; Jer 18:6). \M^ expects a negative answer. {Why didst thou make me thus?} (\ti me epoi^sas hout^s?\). The original words in Isaiah dealt with the nation, but Paul applies them to individuals. This question does not raise the problem of the origin of sin for the objector does not blame God for that but why God has used us as he has, made some vessels out of the clay for this purpose, some for that. Observe "thus" (\hout^s\). The potter takes the clay as he finds it, but uses it as he wishes.

9:21 {Or hath not the potter a right over the clay?} (\^ouk echei exousian ho kerameus tou p^lou?\). This question, expecting an affirmative answer, is Paul's reply to the previous one, "Why didst thou make me thus?" \P^los\, old word for clay, is mud or wet clay in Joh 9:6,11,14f. The old word for potter (\kerameus\) in N.T. only here and Mt 27:7,10. {Lump} (\phuramatos\). Late word from \phura“, to mix (clay, dough, etc.). {One part} (\ho men\) {--another} (\ho de\). Regular idiom for contrast (\men--de\) with the old demonstrative \ho\ (this), "this vessel (\skeuos\, old word as in Mr 11:16) for honour, that for dishonour." Paul thus claims clearly God's sovereign right (\exousian\, power, right, authority, from \exesti\) to use men (already sinners) for his own purpose.

9:22 {Willing} (\thel^“n\). Concessive use of the participle, "although willing," not causal, "because willing" as is shown by "with much long-suffering" (\en poll^i makrothumifi\, in much long-suffering). {His power} (\to dunaton autou\). Neuter singular of the verbal adjective rather than the substantive \dunamin\). {Endured} (\^negken\). Constative second aorist active indicative of the old defective verb \pher“, to bear. {Vessels of wrath} (\skeu^ org^s\). The words occur in Jer 50:25 (LXX Jer 27:25), but not in the sense here (objective genitive like \tekna org^s\, Eph 2:3, the objects of God's wrath). {Fitted} (\kat^rtismena\). Perfect passive participle of \katartiz“, old verb to equip (see Mt 4:21; 2Co 13:11), state of readiness. Paul does not say here that God did it or that they did it. That they are responsible may be seen from 1Th 2:15f. {Unto destruction} (\eis ap^leian\). Endless perdition (Mt 7:13; 2Th

2:3; Php 3:19), not annihilation.

9:23 {Vessels of mercy} (\skeu[^] eleous\). Objective genitive like \skeu[^] org[^]s\. {Afore prepared} (\pro[^]toimasen\). First aorist active indicative of \proetoimaz“, old verb to make ready (from \hetoimos\, ready) and \pro\, before, in N.T. only here and Eph 2:10. But same idea in Ro 8:28-30.

9:24 {But also from the Gentiles} (\alla kai ex ethn“n\). Paul had already alluded to this fact in 9:6f. (cf. Ga 3:7-9). Now he proceeds to prove it from the Old Testament.

9:25 {In Hosea} (\en t“i H“s[^]e\). He quotes 2:23 with some freedom. Hosea refers to the ten tribes and Paul applies the principle stated there to the Gentiles. Hosea had a son named _Lo-ammi_ = \ou laos\. So here \ho ou laos mou\ "the not people of mine." \Ou\ with substantives obliterates the meaning of the substantive, an idiom seen in Thucydides and other Greek writers. See also Ro 10:19; 1Pe 2:10. {Which was not beloved} (\t[^]n ouk[^]gap[^]men[^]n\). The LXX rendering of _Lo-ruhamah_ (not mercy, without mercy or love), name of Hosea's daughter. The use of \ouk\ with the perfect passive participle is emphatic, since \m[^]\ is the usual negative of the participle in the _Koin,_.

9:26 {Ye are not my people} (\ou laos mou humeis\). Quotation from Ho 1:10 (LXX Ho 2:1). {There} (\ekei\). Palestine in the original, but Paul applies it to scattered Jews and Gentiles everywhere.

9:27 {Isaiah} (\Esaias\). Shortened quotation from Isa 10:22 (LXX). {It is the remnant that shall be saved} (\to hupoleimmas“th[^]setai\). First future passive of \s“z“. Literally, "the remnant will be saved." Late word from \hupoleip“, to leave behind (II:3), here only in N.T. Textus Receptus has \kataleimma\, but Aleph A B have \hupoleimma\. Isaiah cries in anguish over the outlook for Israel, but sees hope for the remnant.

9:28 {Finishing it and cutting it short} (\suntel“n kai suntemn“n\). Present active participles and note \sun-\ with each (perfective use of the preposition, finishing completely as in Lu 4:13, cutting off completely or abridging and here only in N.T.) The quotation is from Isa 28:22.

9:29 {Hath said before} (\proeir^ken\). Perfect active indicative of \proeipon\ (defective verb). Stands on record in Isa 1:9. {Had left} (\egkatelipen\). Second aorist active indicative of old verb \egkataleip^, to leave behind. Condition of second class, determined as unfulfilled, with \an egen^th^men\ and \an h^moi^th^men\ as the conclusions (both first aorist passives of \ginomai\ and \homoio^, common verbs). {A seed} (\sperma\). The remnant of verse 27.

9:30 {Attained} (\katelaben\). Second aorist active indicative of \katalamban^, old verb, to grasp, to seize, to overtake (carrying out the figure in \di^k^ (to pursue)). It was a curious paradox. {Which is of faith} (\t^n ek piste^s\). As Paul has repeatedly shown, the only way to get the God-kind of righteousness.

9:31 {Did not arrive at that law} (\eis nomon ouk ephthasen\). First aorist active indicative of \phthan^, old verb to anticipate (1Th 4:15), now just to arrive as here and 2Co 10:14. The word "that" is not in the Greek. Legal righteousness Israel failed to reach, because to do that one had to keep perfectly all the law.

9:32 We must supply the omitted verb \edi^xa\ (pursued) from verse 31. That explains the rest. {They stumbled at the stone of stumbling} (\prosekopsan t^i lith^i tou proskommatos\). The quotation is from Isa 8:14. \Proskopt^ means to cut (\kopt^ against (\pros\ as in Mt 4:6; Joh 11:9f. The Jews found Christ a \skandalon\ (1Co 1:23).

9:33 Paul repeats the phrase just used in the whole quotation from Isa 8:14 with the same idea in "a rock of offence" (\petran skandalou, "a rock of snare, a rock which the Jews made a cause of stumbling"). The rest of the verse is quoted from Isa 28:16. However, the Hebrew means "shall not make haste" rather than "shall not be put to shame." In 1Pe 2:8 we have the same use of these Scriptures about Christ. Either Peter had read Romans or both Paul and Peter had a copy of Christian _Testimonia_ like Cyprian's later.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

10:1 {Desire} (\eudokia\). No papyri examples of this word, though \eudok^{sis}\ occurs, only in LXX and N.T., but no example for "desire" unless this is one, though the verb \eudoke\ is common in Polybius, Diodorus, Dion, Hal. It means will, pleasure, satisfaction (Mt 11:26; 2Th 1:11; Php 1:15; 2:13; Eph 1:5,9). {Supplication} (\de^{sis}\). Late word from \deomai\, to want, to beg, to pray. In the papyri. See Lu 1:13. It is noteworthy that, immediately after the discussion of the rejection of Christ by the Jews, Paul prays so earnestly for the Jews "that they may be saved" (\eis s^{t^{rian}}\), literally "unto salvation." Clearly Paul did not feel that the case was hopeless for them in spite of their conduct. Bengel says: _Non orasset Paul si absolute reprobati essent_ (Paul would not have prayed if they had been absolutely reprobate). Paul leaves God's problem to him and pours out his prayer for the Jews in accordance with his strong words in 9:1-5.

10:2 {A zeal for God} (\z^{lon theou}\). Objective genitive like Php 3:9, "through faith in Christ" (\dia piste^{s Christou}\). {But not according to knowledge} (\all' ou kat' epign^{sin}\). They had knowledge of God and so were superior to the Gentiles in privilege (2:9-11), but they sought God in an external way by rules and rites and missed him (9:30-33). They became zealous for the letter and the form instead of for God himself.

10:3 {Being ignorant of God's righteousness} (\agnoountes t^{n tou theou dikaiosunⁿ}\). A blunt thing to say, but true as Paul has shown in 2:1-3:20. They did not understand the God-kind of righteousness by faith (1:17). They misconceived it (2:4). {They did not subject themselves} (\ouch hupetag^{san}\). Second aorist passive indicative of \hupotass^{an}\, common _Koin,_ verb, to put oneself under orders, to obey, here the passive in sense of the middle (Jas 4:7) like \apekrithⁿ\, I answered.

10:4 {The end of the law} (\telos nomou\). Christ put a stop to the law as a means of salvation (6:14; 9:31; Eph 2:15; Col 2:14) as in Lu 16:16. Christ is the goal or aim of the law (Gal 3:24). Christ is the fulfilment of the law (Mt 5:17; Ro

13:10; 1Ti 1:5). But here (Denney) Paul's main idea is that Christ ended the law as a method of salvation for "every one that believeth" whether Jew or Gentile. Christ wrote _finis_ on law as a means of grace.

10:5 {Thereby} (\en aut^i). That is by or in "the righteousness that is from law." He stands or falls with it. The quotation is from Le 18:5.

10:6 {Saith thus} (\hout^s legei). Paul personifies "the from faith righteousness" (*\h^ ek piste^s dikaiosun^ *). A free reproduction from De 30:11-14. Paul takes various phrases from the LXX and uses them for "his inspired conviction and experiences of the gospel" (Denney). He does not quote Moses as saying this or meaning this. {Say not in thy heart} (\m^ eip^is en t^i kardifi sou). Second aorist active subjunctive with *\m^ * like De 8:17. To say in the heart is to think (Mt 3:9). {That is, to bring Christ down} (\tout' estin Christon katagagein). Second aorist active infinitive of the common verb *\katag^ *, to bring or lead down. It is dependent on the preceding verb \anab^setai (shall ascend). \Tout' estin (that is) is what is called _Midrash_ or interpretation as in 9:8. It occurs three times here (verses 6-8). Paul applies the words of Moses to Christ. There is no need for one to go to heaven to bring Christ down to earth. The Incarnation is already a glorious fact. Today some men scout the idea of the Deity and Incarnation of Christ.

10:7 {Into the abyss} (\eis t^ n abusson). See Lu 8:31 for this old Greek word (\a\ privative and \bussos) bottomless like sea (Ps 106:26), our abyss. In Re 9:1 it is the place of torment. Paul seems to refer to Hades or Sheol (Ac 2:27,31), the other world to which Christ went after death. {To bring Christ up} (\Christon anagagein). Second aorist active infinitive of *\anag^ * and dependent on \katab^setai (shall descend). Christ has already risen from the dead. The deity and resurrection of Christ are precisely the two chief points of attack today on the part of sceptics.

10:8 {But what saith it?} (\alla ti legei?). That is "the from faith righteousness." {The word of faith} (\to r^ma t^s piste^s). The gospel message concerning faith (objective genitive). Only here. In contrast to the law. {Which we preach} (\ho k^russomen). The living voice brings home to every one the faith kind of righteousness. Paul seizes upon the words of Moses with the orator's instinct and with rhetorical skill (Sanday and Headlam) applies them to the facts about the gospel message about the Incarnation and Resurrection of Christ.

10:9 {If thou shalt confess} (\ean homolog^sis\). Third class condition (\ean\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \homologe“\). {With thy mouth Jesus as Lord} (\en t“i stomati sou Kurion I^{soun}\). This is the reading of nearly all the MSS. But B 71 Clem of Alex. read \to r^{ma} en t“i stomati sou hoti Kurios I^{sous}\ (the word in thy mouth that Jesus is Lord). The idea is the same, the confession of Jesus as Lord as in 1Co 12:3; Php 2:11. No Jew would do this who had not really trusted Christ, for \Kurios\ in the LXX is used of God. No Gentile would do it who had not ceased worshipping the emperor as \Kurios\. The word \Kurios\ was and is the touchstone of faith. {And shalt believe} (\kai pisteus^{is}\). Same construction. Faith precedes confession, of course.

10:10 {Man believeth} (\pisteuetai\). Impersonal construction, "it is believed" (present passive indicative of \pisteu“\). The order is reversed in this verse and the true order (faith, then confession). {Confession is made} (\homologeitai\). Impersonal construction again, "it is confessed," "man confesses." Both \kardifi\ (heart) and \stomati\ (mouth) are in the instrumental case.

10:11 {Every one} (\pfs\). Paul adds this word to the quotation from Isa 28:16 already made in 9:33.

10:12 {Distinction} (\diastol^\\). See on this word 3:22. Here it is followed by the ablative case \Ioudaiou te kai Hell^{nos}\ (between Jew and Greek). {Lord of all} (\Kurios pant“n\). See Ga 3:28. {Rich} (\plout“n\). Present active participle of \ploute“\\. See Eph 3:8 "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

10:13 Paul here quotes Joe 3:5 (Joe 2:32 LXX).

10:14 {How then shall they call?} (\p“s oun epikales“ntai?\\). Deliberative subjunctive (first aorist middle) of \epikaleomai\ (see verses 12,13). The antecedent of \eis hon\ (in whom) is not expressed. {How shall they believe?} (\pos pisteus“sin?\\). Deliberative subjunctive again (first aorist active of \pisteu“\\ just used). Each time Paul picks up the preceding verb and challenges that. Here again the antecedent \eis touton\ before \hon\ is not expressed. {How shall they hear?} (\pos akous“sin?\). Deliberative subjunctive (first aorist active of akou“\). {Without a preacher?} (\ch“ris k^russontos?\). Preposition \ch“ris\ with ablative singular masculine present active participle of \k^russ“\, "without one preaching." {How shall they preach?} (\p“s k^rux“sin?\). Deliberative subjunctive again (first aorist active k^russ“\, to preach). {Except they be sent?} (\ean m^ apostal“sin?\). Second aorist passive deliberative subjunctive of \apostell“\, to send, from which verb \apostolos\ apostle comes. Negative condition of third class. In graphic style Paul has made a powerful plea for missions. It is just as true today as then.

10:15 {How beautiful} (\H“s h“raioi\). A quotation from Isa 52:7 more like the Hebrew than the LXX, picturing the messengers of the restoration from the Jewish captivity. Paul assumes that the missionaries (\apostoloi\) have been sent as implied in verse 14.

10:16 {But they did not all hearken} (\ou pantes hup^kousan\). They heard, but did not heed. Some disbelieve now (3:3) as they did then. On obedience and disobedience see 5:19; 1Th 2:13; Ga 3:2. He quotes Isa 53:1 to show how Isaiah felt. {Report} (\ako^i\). Literally, "hearing" (Mt 14:1; Mr 13:7).

10:17 {By the word of Christ} (\dia r^matos Christou\). "By the word about Christ" (objective genitive).

10:18 {Did they not hear?} (\m^ ouk ^kousan?\). Rather, "Did they fail to hear?" (expecting the negative answer m^, while ouk blends with the verb). See on 1Co 9:5 for this construction. {Yea, verily} (\menounge\). Triple particle (\men, oun, ge\) as in 9:20. {Sound} (\phthoggos\). Vibration of a musical string. See on 1Co 14:7. Only two N.T. examples. {The world} (\t^s oikoumen^s\). The inhabited earth as in Lu 2:1.

10:19 {Did Israel not know?} (\m^ Israel ouk egn“?\). "Did Israel fail to know?" See above. {First} (\pr“tos\). Moses first before any one else. LXX quotation De 32:21. See on 1Co 10:22 for \paraz^l“s“\ (I will provoke you to jealousy). {With that which is no nation} (\ep' ouk ethnei\). The Jews had worshipped "no-gods" and now God shows favours to a "no-nation" (people). {Will I anger you} (\parorgi“ humas\). Future active (Attic future) of \parorgiz“\, rare word, to rouse to wrath.

10:20 {Is very bold} (\apotolmfi). Present active indicative of \apotolma“\, old word, to assume boldness (\apo“, off) and only here in N.T. Isaiah "breaks out boldly" (Gifford). Paul cites Isa 65:1 in support of his own courage against the prejudice of the Jews. See 9:30-33 for illustration of this point. {I was found} (\heureth^n). First aorist passive indicative of \heurisk“\.

10:21 {All the day long} (\hol^t^ h^meran). Accusative of extent of time. He quotes Isa 65:2. {Did I spread out} (\exepetasa). First aorist active indicative of \ekpetannumi“, old verb, to stretch out, bold metaphor, only here in N.T. {Unto a disobedient and a gainsaying people} (\pros laon apeithounta kai antilegonta“\). "Unto a people disobeying and talking back." The two things usually go together. Contrary and contradictory (Lu 13:34f.).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

11:1 {I say then} (\leg“oun\). As in verse 11. \Oun\ looks back to 9:16-33 and 10:19-21. {Did God cast off?} (\m^ap“sato ho theos?\). An indignant negative answer is called for by \m^\ and emphasized by \m^ genoito\ (God forbid). Paul refers to the promise in the O.T. made three times: 1Sa 12:22; Ps 94:14 (Ps 93:14 LXX); Ps 94:4. First aorist middle indicative (without augment) of \ap“the“, to push away, to repel, middle, to push away from one as in Ac 7:27. {For I also} (\kai gar eg“\). Proof that not all the Jews have rejected Christ. See Php 3:5 for more of Paul's pedigree.

11:2 {Whom he foreknew} (\hon proegn“\). The same form and sense as in 8:29, which see. Probably the Hebrew sense of choice beforehand. The nation of Israel was God's chosen people and so all the individuals in it could not be cast off. {Wot ye not?} (\ouk oidate?\). "Know ye not?" Why keep the old English "wot"? {Of Elijah} (\en Eleifi\). "In the case of Elijah." Cf. "in the bush" (Mr 12:26). {He pleadeth} (\entugchanei\). See on 7:27. \Entugchan“ means to happen on one and so to converse with (Ac 25:24), to plead for (Ro 8:27,34), to plead against as here with \kata\, but the "against" is in \kata\.

11:3 {They have digged down} (\kateskapsan\). First aorist active indicative of \kataskapt“, to dig under or down. Old verb, here only in N.T. (critical text). LXX has \katheilan\ "pulled down." Paul has reversed the order of the LXX of 1Ki 19:10,14,18. {Altars} (\thusiast^ria\). Late word (LXX, Philo, Josephus, N.T. eccl. writers) from \thusiaz“, to sacrifice. See Ac 17:23. {And I am left alone} (\kag“ hupeleiphth^n monos\). First aorist passive indicative of \hupoleip“, old word, to leave under or behind, here only in N.T. Elijah's mood was that of utter dejection in his flight from Jezebel. {Life} (\psuch^n\). It is not possible to draw a clear distinction between \psuch^ (soul) and \pneuma\ (spirit). \Psuch^ is from \psuch“, to breathe or blow, \pneuma\ from \pne“, to blow. Both are used for the personality and for the immortal part of man. Paul is usually dichotomous in his language, but sometimes trichotomous in a popular sense. We cannot hold Paul's terms to our modern psychological distinctions.

11:4 {The answer of God} (\ho chr^matismos). An old word in various senses like \chr^matiz^, only here in N.T. See this use of the verb in Mt 2:12,22; Lu 2:26; Ac 10:22. {To Baal} (\t^i Baal). Feminine article. In the LXX the name \Baal\ is either masculine or feminine. The explanation is that the Jews put _Bosheth_ (\aischun^, shame) for Baal and in the LXX the feminine article occurs because \aischun^ is so, though here the LXX has the masculine \t^i\.

11:5 {Remnant} (\limma). Old word, but only here in N.T., but in papyri also and with this spelling rather than \leimma\. From \leip^, to leave. {According to the election of grace} (\kat' eklog^ n charitos). As in 9:6-13. The election is all of God. Verse 6 explains it further.

11:6 {Otherwise} (\epeì). Ellipse after \epeì (since), "since, in that case." {Is no more} (\ouketi ginetai). "No longer becomes" grace, loses its character as grace. Augustine: _Gratia nisi gratis sit gratia non est_.

11:7 {What then?} (\ti oun?). Since God did not push Israel away (verse 1), what is true? {The election} (\h^ eklog^). Abstract for concrete (the elect). {Obtained} (\epetuchen). Second aorist active indicative of \epitugchan^, old verb, to hit upon, only here in Paul. See 9:30-33 for the failure of the Jews. {Were hardened} (\ep^r^ th^ san). First aorist passive indicative of \p^ro^, late verb, to cover with thick skin (\p^ros). See on 2Co 3:14; Mr 3:5.

11:8 {A spirit of stupor} (\pneuma katanuxe^s). The quotation is a combination of De 19:4; Isa 29:10; 6:9f. This phrase is from Isa 29:10. \Katanuxis\ is a late and rare word from \katanuss^, to prick or stick (Ac 2:37), in LXX, here only in N.T., one example in _Pelagia-Legende_. The torpor seems the result of too much sensation, dulled by incitement into apathy. {That they should not see} (\tou m^ blepein). Genitive articular infinitive of negative purpose. {That they should not hear} (\tou m^ akouein). So here also. See Stephen's speech (Ac 7:51f.).

11:9 {David says} (\Daueid legei). From Ps 69:23f; (68:23f LXX); 34:8; 28:4 (combined quotation). {Table} (\trapeza). For what is on the table, "a feast." {A snare} (\eis pagida). From \p^gnumi\, to make fast, old word for snares for birds and beasts. See on ̳Lu 21:35. \Eis\ in predicate with \ginomai\ is a translation-Hebraism. {A trap} (\eis th^ran\). Old word for hunting of wild beasts, then a trap. Only here in N.T. {A stumbling-block} (\eis skandalon\). A third word for trap, snare, trap-stick or trigger over which they fall. See on ̳1Co 1:23; Ro 9:33. {A recompense} (\eis antapodoma\). Late word from double compound verb \antapodid^mi\, to repay (both \anti\ and \apo\). Ancient Greeks used \antapodosis\. In LXX and Didache. In N.T. only here (bad sense) and Lu 14:12 (good sense).

11:10 {Let their eyes be darkened} (\skotisth^t^san hoi ophthalmoi aut^n\). First aorist passive imperative of \skotiz^{\, to darken. A terrible imprecation. {That they may not see} (\tou m^blepein\). Repeated from verse 8. {Bow down} (\sunkampson\). First aorist active imperative of \sunkampt^{\, old verb, to bend together as of captives whose backs (\n^ton\, another old word, only here in N.T.) were bent under burdens. Only here in N.T.

11:11 {Did they stumble that they might fall?} (\m^eptaisan hina pes^sin?\). Negative answer expected by \m^{\ as in verse 1. First aorist active indicative of \ptai^{\, old verb, to stumble, only here in Paul (see Jas 3:2), suggested perhaps by \skandalon\ in verse 9. If \hina\ is final, then we must add "merely" to the idea, "merely that they might fall" or make a sharp distinction between \ptai^{\, to stumble, and \pipt^{\, to fall, and take \pes^sin\ as effective aorist active subjunctive to fall completely and for good. \Hina\, as we know, can be either final, sub-final, or even result. See 1Th 5:4; 1Co 7:29; Ga 5:17. Paul rejects this query in verse 11 as vehemently as he did that in verse 1. {By their fall} (\t^i aut^n parapt^mati\). Instrumental case. For the word, a falling aside or a false step from \parapipt^{\, see 5:15-20. {Is come}. No verb in the Greek, but \ginetai\ or \gegonen\ is understood. {For to provoke them to jealousy} (\eis to paraz^l^sai\). Purpose expressed by \eis\ and the articular infinitive, first aorist active, of \paraz^lo^{\, for which verb see 1Co 10:22. As an historical fact Paul turned to the Gentiles when the Jews rejected his message (Ac 13:45ff.; 28:28, etc.). {The riches of the world} (\ploutos kosmou\). See 10:12. {Their loss} (\to h^tt^ma aut^n\). So perhaps in 1Co 6:7, but in Isa 31:8 defeat is the idea. Perhaps so here. {Fulness} (\pl^r^ma\). Perhaps "completion," though the word from \pl^ro^{\, to fill, has a variety of senses, that with which anything is filled (1Co 10:26,28), that which is filled (Eph 1:23). {How much more?} (\pos“i mallon). Argument _a fortiori_ as in verse 24. Verse 25 illustrates the point.

11:13 {To you that are Gentiles} (\humin tois ethnesin). "To you the Gentiles." He has a serious word to say to them. {Inasmuch then} (\eph' hoson men oun). Not temporal, _quamdiu_, "so long as" (Mt 9:15), but qualitative _quatenus_ "in so far then as" (Mt 25:40). {I glorify my ministry} (\t^ⁿ diakonian mou doxaz“). As apostle to the Gentiles (\ethn“ⁿ apostolos, objective genitive). Would that every minister of Christ glorified his ministry. {If by any means} (\ei p“^s). This use of \ei with purpose or aim is a kind of indirect discourse. {I may provoke} (\paraz^^l“^s). Either future active indicative or first aorist active subjunctive, see same uncertainty in Php 3:10 \katant^^s, but in 3:11 \katalab“ after \ei is subjunctive. The future indicative is clear in Ro 1:10 and the optative in Ac 27:12. Doubtful whether future indicative or aorist subjunctive also in \s“^s (save).

11:15 {The casting away of them} (\h^^{apobol^ⁿ aut“ⁿ}). Objective genitive (\aut“ⁿ) with \apobol^ⁿ, old word from \apoball“, to throw off (Mr 10:50), in N.T. only here and Ac 27:22. {The reconciling of the world} (\katallag^^{kosmou}). See 5:10f. for \katallag^ⁿ (reconciling). It explains verse 12. {The receiving} (\h^^{prosl^^{mpsis}}). Old word from \proslamban“, to take to oneself, only here in N.T. {Life from the dead} (\z“^{ek nekr“ⁿ}). Already the conversion of Jews had become so difficult. It is like a miracle of grace today, though it does happen. Many think that Paul means that the general resurrection and the end will come when the Jews are converted. Possibly so, but it is by no means certain. His language may be merely figurative.

11:16 {First fruit} (\aparch^ⁿ). See on 1Co 15:20,23. The metaphor is from Nu 15:19f. The LXX has \aparch^ⁿ phuramatos, first of the dough as a heave offering. {The lump} (\to phurama). From which the first fruit came. See on 9:21. Apparently the patriarchs are the first fruit. {The root} (\h^^{riza}). Perhaps Abraham singly here. The metaphor is changed, but the idea is the same. Israel is looked on as a tree. But one must recall and keep in mind the double sense of Israel in 9:6f. (the natural and the spiritual).

11:17 {Branches} (\kladⁿ). From \klaⁿ, to break. {Were broken off} (\exeklasth^{san}). First aorist passive indicative of \ekklaⁿ. Play on the word \klados\ (branch) and \ekklaⁿ, to break off. Condition of first class, assumed as true. Some of the individual Jews (natural Israel) were broken off the stock of the tree (spiritual Israel). {And thou} (\kai su). An individual Gentile. {Being a wild olive} (\agrielaios ⁿ). This word, used by Aristotle, occurs in an inscription. Ramsay (Pauline Studies, pp. 219ff.) shows that the ancients used the wild-olive graft upon an old olive tree to reinvigorate the tree precisely as Paul uses the figure here and that both the olive tree and the graft were influenced by each other, though the wild olive graft did not produce as good olives as the original stock. But it should be noted that in verse 24 Paul expressly states that the grafting of Gentiles on to the stock of the spiritual Israel was "contrary to nature" (\para phusin). {Wast grafted in} (\enekentristh^s). First aorist passive indicative of \enkentrizⁿ, to cut in, to graft, used by Aristotle. Belongs "to the higher Koin," (literary Koin,) according to Milligan. {Partaker} (\sunkoin^{nos}). Co-partner. {Fatness} (\piot^{tos}). Old word from \piⁿ (fat), only here in N.T. Note three genitives here "of the root of the fatness of the olive."

11:18 {Glory not over the branches} (\mⁿ katakauchⁿ tⁿ kladⁿ). Genitive case after \kata\ . Present middle imperative second person singular of \katakauchaomai\ with negative \mⁿ, "stop glorying" or "do not have the habit of glorying over the branches." The conclusion of the preceding condition. {Gloriest} (\katakauchfsai). Late form \-aesai\ retaining \s\ . {Not thou} (\ou su). Very emphatic position. The graft was upon the stock and root, though each affected the other.

11:19 {Thou wilt say then} (\ereis oun). A presumptuous Gentile speaks. {That I might be grafted in} (\hina egⁿ enkentristhⁿ). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive. He shows contempt for the cast-off Jews.

11:20 {Well} (\kal^s). Perhaps ironical, though Paul may simply admit the statement (cf. Mr 12:32) and show the Gentile his real situation. {By unbelief} (\tⁱ apistifi) {--by faith} (\pistei). Instrumental case with both contrasted words (by unbelief, by belief).

11:21 {Be not highminded} (\mⁿ hups^{la} phronei). "Stop thinking high (proud) thoughts." {Of God spared not} (\ei gar ho theos ouk epheisato\). It is not \ei m^\ (unless), but the \ouk\ negatives the verb \epheisato\ (first aorist middle indicative of \pheidomai\, to spare. Condition of first class.)

11:22 {The goodness and the severity of God} (\chr^stot^ta kai apotomian theou\). See on Ro 2:2 for \chr^stot^s\, kindness of God. \Apotomia\ (here alone in the N.T.) is from \apotomos\, cut off, abrupt, and this adjective from \apotemn^\, to cut off. This late word occurs several times in the papyri. {If thou continue} (\ean epimen^is\). Third class condition, \ean\ and present active subjunctive. {Otherwise} (\epeì\). Ellipse after \epeì\, "since if thou dost not continue." {Thou also} (\kai su\). Precisely as the Jewish branches of verse 17 were. {Shalt be cut off} (\ekkop^s^i\). Second future passive of \ekkopt^\, to cut out.

11:23 {If they continue not in their unbelief} (\ean m^ epimen^si t^i apistifi\). Third class condition with the same verb used in verse 22 of the Gentile. Locative case of \apistifi\ here (same form as the instrumental in verse 20). {For God is able} (\dunatos gar estin ho theos\). See this use of \dunatos estin\ in 4:21 rather than \dunatai\. This is the \crux\ of the whole matter. God is able.

11:24 {Contrary to nature} (\para phusin\). This is the gist of the argument, the power of God to do what is contrary to natural processes. He put the wild olive (Gentile) into the good olive tree (the spiritual Israel) and made the wild olive (contrary to nature) become the good olive (\kallielaios\, the garden olive, kallos\ and elaia\ in Aristotle and a papyrus). {Into their own olive tree} (\t^i idifi elaifi\). Dative case. Another argument _a fortiori_, "how much more" (\poll^i mallon\). God can graft the natural Israel back upon the spiritual Israel, if they become willing.

11:25 {This mystery} (\to must^rion touto\). Not in the pagan sense of an esoteric doctrine for the initiated (from \mue^\, to blink, to wink), unknown secrets (2Th 2:7), or like the mystery religions of the time, but the revealed will of God now made known to all (1Co 2:1,7; 4:1) which includes Gentiles also (Ro 16:25; Col 1:26f.; Eph 3:3f.) and so far superior to man's wisdom (Col 2:2; 4:13; Eph 3:9; 5:32; 6:19; Mt 13:11; Mr 4:11). Paul has covered every point of difficulty concerning the failure of the Jews to accept Jesus as the Messiah and has shown how God has overruled it for the blessing of the Gentiles with a ray of hope still held out for the Jews. "In early ecclesiastical Latin \must^rion\ was rendered by _sacramentum_, which in classical Latin means _the military oath_. The explanation of the word _sacrament_, which is so often founded on this etymology, is therefore mistaken, since the meaning of sacrament belongs to \must^rion\ and not to _sacramentum_ in the classical sense" (Vincent). {Wise in your own conceits} (\en heautois phronimoi\). "Wise in yourselves." Some MSS. read \par' heautois\ (by yourselves). Negative purpose here (\hina m^~te\), to prevent self-conceit on the part of the Gentiles who have believed. They had no merit in themselves {A hardening} (\p^r^~sis\). Late word from \p^ro^~ (11:7). Occurs in Hippocrates as a medical term, only here in N.T. save Mr 3:5; Eph 4:18. It means obtuseness of intellectual discernment, mental dulness. {In part} (\apo merous\). Goes with the verb \gegonen\ (has happened in part). For \apo merous\, see 2Co 1:14; 2:5; Ro 15:24; for \ana meros\, see 1Co 14:27; for \ek merous\, see 1Co 12:27; 13:9; for \kata meros\, see Heb 9:5; for \meros ti\ (adverbial accusative) partly see 1Co 11:18. Paul refuses to believe that no more Jews will be saved. {Until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in} (\achri hou to pl^r^~ma t^~n ethn^~n eiselth^i\). Temporal clause with \achri hou\ (until which time) and the second aorist active subjunctive of \eiserchomai\, to come in (Mt 7:13,21). {For fulness of the Gentiles} (\to pl^r^~ma t^~n ethn^~n\) see on verse ~12, the complement of the Gentiles.

11:26 {And so} (\kai hout^~s\). By the complement of the Gentiles stirring up the complement of the Jews (verses 11f.). {All Israel} (\pfs Isra^l\). What does Paul mean? The immediate context (use of \pfs\ in contrast with \apo merous, pl^r^~ma\ here in contrast with \pl^r^~ma\ in verse 12) argues for the Jewish people "as a whole." But the spiritual Israel (both Jews and Gentiles) may be his idea in accord with 9:6 (Ga 6:16) as the climax of the argument. At any rate we should strive for and pray for the conversion of Jews as a whole. Paul here quotes from Isa 59:20f.; 27:9. {The Deliverer} (\ho ruomenos\). Present middle articular participle of \ruomai\, to rescue, to deliver. See on ~1Th 1:10; 2Co 1:10. The Hebrew _Goel_, the Avenger, the Messiah, the Redeemer (De 25:5-10; Job 19:25; Ru 3:12f.). Paul interprets it of Jesus as Messiah.

11:27 {My covenant} (\h^par' emou diath^k^). "The from me covenant," "my side of the covenant I have made with them" (Sanday and Headlam). Cf. Jer 31:31ff. Not a political deliverance, but a religious and ethical one. {When I shall take away} (\hotan aphel^mai). Second aorist middle subjunctive of \aphaire^, old and common verb, to take away.

11:28 {As touching the gospel} (\kata to euaggelion). "According to (kata with the accusative) the gospel" as Paul has shown in verses 11-24, the gospel order as it has developed. {Enemies} (\echthroï). Treated as enemies (of God), in passive sense, because of their rejection of Christ (verse 10), just as \agap^toi (beloved) is passive. {As touching the election} (\kata t^n eklog^n). "According to the election" (the principle of election, not as in verses 5f. the elect or abstract for concrete). {For the fathers' sake} (\dia tous pateras). As in 9:4; 11:16f.

11:29 {Without repentance} (\ametamel^ta). See on 2Co 7:10 for this word (a privative and \metamelomai, to be sorry afterwards). It is not \ametano^ton (Ro 2:5) from \a privative and \metano^, to change one's mind. God is not sorry for his gifts to and calling of the Jews (9:4f.).

11:30 {Ye in time past} (\humeis pote). Ye Gentiles (1:18-32). {Were disobedient} (\epeith^sate). First aorist active indicative of \apeithe^, to disbelieve and then to disobey. "Ye once upon a time disobeyed God." {By their disobedience} (\t^i tout^ n apeithifi). Instrumental case, "by the disobedience of these" (Jews). Note "now" (\nun) three times in this sentence.

11:31 {By the mercy shown to you} (\t^i humeter^ i eleei). Objective sense of \humeteros (possessive pronoun, your). Proleptic position also for the words go with \ele^th^sin (first aorist passive subjunctive of \elee^, from \eleos with \hina, purpose clause). God's purpose is for the Jews to receive a blessing yet.

11:32 {Hath shut up} (\sunekleisen). First aorist active indicative of \sunklei^, to shut together like a net (Lu 5:6). See Ga 3:22 for this word with \hupo hamartian (under sin). This is a resultant (effective) aorist because of the disbelief and disobedience of both Gentile (1:17-32) and Jew (2:1-3:20). {All} (\tous pantas). "The all" (both Gentiles and Jews). {That he might have mercy} (\hina--ele^si\). Purpose with \hina\ and aorist active subjunctive. No merit in anyone, but all of grace. "The all" again, who receive God's mercy, not that "all" men are saved.

11:33 {O the depth} (\O bathos\). Exclamation with omega and the nominative case of \bathos\ (see on 2Co 8:2; Ro 8:39). Paul's argument concerning God's elective grace and goodness has carried him to the heights and now he pauses on the edge of the precipice as he contemplates God's wisdom and knowledge, fully conscious of his inability to sound the bottom with the plummet of human reason and words. {Unsearchable} (\anexeraun^{ta}\). Double compound (\a\ privative and \ex\ verbal adjective of \ereuna^{ta}\ (old spelling -eu-), late and rare word (LXX, Dio Cassius, Heraclitus), only here in N.T. Some of God's wisdom can be known (1:20f.), but not all. {Past tracing out} (\anexichniastoi\).

Another verbal adjective from \a\ privative and \exichniast^{ai}\, to trace out by tracks (\ichnos\ Ro 4:12). Late word in Job (Job 5:9; 9:10; 34:24) from which use Paul obtained it here and Eph 3:8 (only N.T. examples). Also in ecclesiastical writers. Some of God's tracks he has left plain to us, but others are beyond us.

11:34 {Who hath known?} (\tis egn^{ta}?). Second aorist active indicative of \gin^{sk}\, a timeless aorist, did know, does know, will know. Quotation from Isa 40:13. Quoted already in 1Co 2:16. {Counsellor} (\sumboulos\). Old word from \sun\ and \boul\. Only here in N.T. {His} (\autou\). Objective genitive, counsellor to him (God). Some men seem to feel competent for the job.

11:35 {First driven to him} (\proed^{ken aut}i\). First aorist active indicative of \prodid^{mi}\, to give beforehand or first. Old verb, here alone in N.T. From Job 41:11, but not like the LXX, Paul's own translation. {Shall be recompensed} (\antapodoth^{setai}\). First future passive of double compound \antapodid^{mi}\, to pay back (both anti\ and apo), old word in good sense, as here and Lu 14:14; 1Th 3:9 and in bad sense as 2Th 1:6; Ro 12:19.

11:36 {Of him} (\ex autou\), {through him} (\di' autou\), {unto him} (\eis auton\). By these three prepositions Paul ascribes the universe (\ta panta\) with all the phenomena concerning creation, redemption, providence to God as the {Source} (\ex\), the {Agent}

(\di\), the {Goal} (\eis\). {For ever} (\eis tous ai“nas\). "For the ages." Alford terms this doxology in verses 33-36 "the sublimest apostrophe existing even in the pages of inspiration itself."

12:1 {Therefore} (\oun\). This inferential participle gathers up all the great argument of chapters 1-11. Now Paul turns to exhortation (\parakal\), "I beseech you." {By the mercies} (\dia t' "n oiktirm"n\). "By means of the mercies of God" as shown in his argument and in our lives. See 2Co 1:3 for "the Father of mercies." {To present} (\parast^sai\). First aorist active infinitive of \parist^mi\, for which verb see 6:13, a technical term for offering a sacrifice (Josephus, _Ant_. IV. 6, 4), though not in the O.T. Used of presenting the child Jesus in the temple (Lu 2:22), of the Christian presenting himself (Ro 6:13), of God presenting the saved (Eph 5:27), of Christ presenting the church (Col 1:28). {Bodies} (\s"mata\). So literally as in 6:13,19; 2Co 5:10 and in contrast with \nous\ (mind) in verse 2. {A living sacrifice} (\thusian z"san\). In contrast with the Levitical sacrifices of slain animals. Cf. 6:8,11,13. Not a propitiatory sacrifice, but one of praise. {Acceptable} (\euareston\). "Well-pleasing." See on 2Co 5:9. {Which is your reasonable service} (\t^n logik^n hum"n latreian\). "Your rational (spiritual) service (worship)." For \latreia\, see on 9:4. \Logikos\ is from \logos\, reason. The phrase means here "worship rendered by the reason (or soul)." Old word, in N.T. only here and 1Pe 2:2 \to logikon gala\ (not logical milk, but the milk nourishing the soul).

12:2 {Be not fashioned} (\m^ sunsch^matizesthe\). Present passive imperative with \m^, stop being fashioned or do not have the habit of being fashioned. Late Greek verb \susch^matiz^, to conform to another's pattern (1Co 7:31; Php 2:7f.). In N.T. only here and 1Pe 1:14. {According to this world} (\t"i ai"ni tout"i\). Associative instrumental case. Do not take this age as your fashion plate. {Be ye transformed} (\metamorphousthe\). Present passive imperative of \metamorpho^, another late verb, to transfigure as in Mt 17:2 (Mr 9:2); 2Co 3:18, which see. On the distinction between \sch^ma\ and \morph^, see Php 2:7. There must be a radical change in the inner man for one to live rightly in this evil age, "by the renewing of your mind" (\t^i anakain"sei tou noos\). Instrumental case. The new birth, the new mind, the new (\kainos\) man. {That ye may prove} (\eis to dokimazein\). Infinitive of purpose with \eis to\, "to test" what is God's will, "the good and acceptable and perfect" (\to agathon kai euareston kai teleion\).

12:3 {Not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think} (\m[^] huperphronein par' ho dei phronein\). Indirect negative command after \leg“\ (I say). Play on the two infinitives \phronein\, to think, and \huperphronein\ (old verb from huperphr“n\, over-proud, here only in N.T.) to "over-think" with \par' ho\ (beyond what) added. Then another play on \phronein\ and \s“phronein\ (old verb from s“phr“n\, sober-minded), to be in one's right mind (Mr 5:15; 2Co 5:13). Self-conceit is here treated as a species of insanity. {A measure of faith} (\metron piste“s\). Accusative case, the object of the verb \emerisen\). Each has his gift from God (1Co 3:5; 4:7). There is no occasion for undue pride. {To each man} (\hekast“i\). Emphatic position before \h“s\ (as) and emphasizes the diversity.

12:4 {The same office} (\t[^]n aut[^]n praxin\). Mode of acting or function. Cf. Ac 19:18; Ro 8:13.

12:5 {And severally} (\to de kath' heis\). A difficult late idiom where the preposition \kath'\ (\kata\ is treated adverbially with no effect on the nominative case \heis\ like \huper eg“\ (2Co 11:23). So \heis kath' heis\ (Mr 14:19) and in Modern Greek \katheis\ as a distributive pronoun. But we have \kath' hena\ in 1Co 14:31. The use of the neuter article here \to\ with \kath' heis\ is probably the accusative of general reference, "as to each one."

12:6 {Differing} (\diaphora\). Old adjective from \diapher“\, to differ, to vary. So Heb 9:10. {According to the proportion of our faith} (\kata t[^]n analogian t“s piste“s\). The same use of \pistis\ (faith) as in verse 3 "the measure of faith." Old word. \analogia\ (our word "analogy") from \analogos\ (analogous, conformable, proportional). Here alone in N.T. The verb \proph[^]teu“men\ (present active volitive subjunctive, let us prophesy) must be supplied with which \echontes\ agrees. The context calls for the subjective meaning of "faith" rather than the objective and outward standard though \pistis\ does occur in that sense (Ga 1:23; 3:23).

12:7 {Let us give ourselves}. There is no verb in the Greek. We must supply \d“men heautous\ or some such phrase. {Or he that teacheth} (\eite ho didask“n\). Here the construction changes and no longer do we have the accusative case like \diakonian\ (general word for Christian service of all kinds including ministers and deacons) as the object of \echontes\, but the nominative articular participle. A new verb must be supplied of which \ho didask“n\ is the subject as with the succeeding participles through verse 8. Perhaps in each instance the verb is to be repeated from the participle like \didasket“\ here (let him teach) or a general term \poieit“\ (let him do it) can be used for all of them as seems necessary before "with liberality" in verse 8 (\en haplot“ti\, in simplicity, for which word, see Mt 6:22; 2Co 8:2; 9:11,13). {He that ruleth} (\ho proistamenos\). "The one standing in front" for which see 1Th 5:12. {With diligence} (\en spoud“i\). "In haste" as if in earnest (Mr 6:25; 2Co 7:11f., 8:8,16), from \speud“\, to hasten. Again verse 11. {With cheerfulness} (\en hilarot“ti\). Late word, only here in N.T., from \hilaros\ (2Co 9:7) cheerful, hilarious.

12:9 {Without hypocrisy} (\anupokritos\). Late double compound adjective for which see 2Co 6:6. Hypocritical or pretended love is no love at all as Paul describes \agap“ in 1Co 13. {Abhor} (\apostugountes\). Old verb with intensive (\apo\) dislike, only here in N.T. The present active participle is here employed in the sense of the present active indicative as sometimes happens with the independent participle (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1132ff.). This same idiom appears with \koll“menoi\ (cleaving) for which verb see on 1Co 6:17, with \pro“goumenoi\ (preferring) in verse 10 (old verb here only in N.T.), and with the participles in verses 11-13 and again in verses 16-18. One can supply \este\ if he prefers.

12:10 {In love of the brethren} (\t“i philadelphifi\). Late word for brotherly love for which see 1Th 4:9. {Tenderly affectioned} (\philostorgoi\). Old compound adjective from \philos\ and \storg“\ (mutual love of parents and children), here alone in N.T.

12:11 {Slothful} (\okn“roi\). Old adjective from \okne“\, to hesitate, to be slow. Slow and "poky" as in Mt 25:26.

12:12 {Patient in tribulation} (\t“i thlipsei hupomenontes\). So soon this virtue became a mark of the Christians.

12:13 {Communicating} (\koin“nountes\). "Contributing." From \koin“ne“\ for which see 2Co 9:13. Paul had raised a great collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem. {Given to hospitality} (\t^n philoxenian di“kontes\). "Pursuing (as if in a chase or hunt) hospitality" (\philoxenia\, old word from philoxenos\, fond of strangers, philos\ and xenos\ as in 1Ti 3:2). In N.T. only here and Heb 13:2. See 2Co 3:1. They were to pursue (\di“k“\) hospitality as their enemies pursued (\di“kontas\) them.

12:14 {And curse not} (\kai m^ katarfsthe\). Present middle imperative with \m^. Like Mt 5:44 in spirit, not a quotation, but a reminiscence of the words of Jesus. The negative addition gives emphasis. See Lu 6:28 for the old verb \kataraomai\ from \katara\ (curse).

12:15 {Rejoice} (\chairein\). Present active infinitive of \chair“\, absolute or independent use of the infinitive as if a finite verb as occurs sometimes (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1092ff.). Literally here, "Rejoicing with rejoicing people, weeping with weeping people."

12:16 {Be of the same mind} (\to auto phronountes\). Absolute or independent use of the participle again as with all the participles through verse 18, "thinking the same thing." {Set not your mind on high things} (\m^ ta hups^la phronountes\). "Not thinking the high things" (\hups^los\ from hupsos\, height). Cf. 1Co 13:5. {Condescend to things that are lowly} (\tois tapeinois sunapagomenoi\). "Be carried away with (borne along with) the lowly things" (in contrast with ta hups^la\, though the associative instrumental case may be masculine, "with lowly men.") See Ga 2:13; 2Pe 3:17 for the only other N.T. examples of this old verb. {Be not wise} (\m^ ginsthe phronimoi\). "Do not have the habit of becoming (\ginsthe\) wise in your own conceits" (\par' heautois\, beside yourselves). Note the imperative in the midst of infinitives and participles.

12:17 {Render to no man} (\m^deni apodidontes\). "Giving back to no man." Independent participle again. {Evil for evil} (\kakou anti kakou\). Directly opposite to the law of retaliation of the Pharisees as in Mt 5:39; 1Th 5:15; 1Co 13:5f. {Take thought of} (\pronooumenoi\). "Taking thought beforehand." Old word. See 2Co 8:21.

12:18 {As much as in you lieth} (\to ex hum“n\). Accusative of general reference, "so far as what proceeds from you" ("the from you part"). See \to kat' eme\ in 1:15. This phrase explains "if it be possible" (\ei dunaton\). "All _your_ part is to be peace" (Alford). For "be at peace" (\eir^neuontes\) see 2Co 13:11.

12:19 {Avenge not} (\m^ ekdikountes\). Independent participle again of late verb \ekdike“\ from \ekdikos\, exacting justice (13:4). See already Lu 18:5; 2Co 10:6. {But give place unto wrath} (\alla dote topon t^i org^i\). Second aorist active imperative of \did“mi\, to give. "Give room for the (note article as in 5:9; 1Th 2:16) wrath" of God instead of taking vengeance in your own hands. See Eph 4:27 for \didote topon\. Paul quotes De 32:35 (the Hebrew rather than the LXX). So have Heb 10:30 and the Targum of Onkelos, but the relation between them and Paul we cannot tell. Socrates and Epictetus condemned personal vindictiveness as Paul does here. {I will recompense} (\antapod“s“\). Future active of the double compound verb quoted also in 11:35.

12:20 {Feed him} (\ps“mize auton\). Quotation from LXX text of Pr 25:21f. Present active imperative of verb from \ps“mos\, a morsel, and so to feed crumbs to babies, then to feed in general. In N.T. only here and 1Co 13:3. {Thou shalt heap} (\s“reuseis\). Future active of old verb \s“reu“\ from \s“ros\, a heap. In N.T. only here and 2Ti 3:6. {Coals of fire} (\anthrakas puros\). That is, burning or live coals. {Anthrax} (our "anthracite") is an old word, only here in N.T. It is a metaphor for keen anguish. The Arabs have a proverb "coals in the heart," "fire in the liver." Such kindness may lead to repentance also.

12:21 {Be not overcome of evil} (\m^ nik“ hupo tou kakou\). Present passive imperative of \nika“\, to conquer. "Stop being conquered by the evil (thing or man)," {But overcome evil with good} (\alla nika en t^i agath“i to kakon\). "But keep on conquering the evil in the good." Drown the evil in the good. Seneca: _Vincit malos pertinax bonitas_.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

13:1 {Every soul} (\pfsa psuch^). As in 2:9; Ac 2:43. A Hebraism for \pfs anthr^ ("pos" (every man)). {To the higher powers} (\exousiais huperechousais^). Abstract for concrete. See Mr 2:10 for \exousia^. \Huperech^ is an old verb to have or hold over, to be above or supreme, as in 1Pe 2:13. {Except by God} (\ei m^ hupo theou^). So the best MSS. rather than \apo theou^ (from God). God is the author of order, not anarchy. {The powers that be} (\hai ousai^). "The existing authorities" (supply \exousiai^). Art ordained (\tetagmenai eisin^). Periphrastic perfect passive indicative of \tass^, "stand ordained by God." Paul is not arguing for the divine right of kings or for any special form of government, but for government and order. Nor does he oppose here revolution for a change of government, but he does oppose all lawlessness and disorder.

13:2 {He that resisteth} (\ho antitassomenos^). Present middle articular participle of \antitass^, old verb to range in battle against as in Ac 18:6, "he that lines himself up against." {Withstandeth} (\anthes^ken^). Perfect active indicative of \anthist^mi^ and intransitive, "has taken his stand against." {The ordinance of God} (\t^i tou theou diatag^i^). Late word, but common in papyri (Deissmann, Light, etc., p. 89), in N.T. only here and Ac 7:53. Note repetition of root of \tass^. {To themselves} (\heautois^). Dative of disadvantage. See Mr 12:40 for "shall receive a judgment" (\krina l^mpsontai^). Future middle of \lamban^.

13:3 {A terror} (\phobos^). This meaning in Isa 8:13. Paul does not approve all that rulers do, but he is speaking generally of the ideal before rulers. Nero was Emperor at this time. {From the same} (\ex aut^s^). "From it" (\exousia^, personified in verse 4).

13:4 {A minister of God} (\theou diakonos^). General sense of \diakonos^. Of course even Nero was God's minister "to thee (\soi^ ethical dative) for good (\eis to agathon^, for the good)." That is the ideal, the goal. {Beareth} (\phorei^). Present active indicative of \phore^, old frequentative form of \pher“\, to bear, to wear. {But if thou do} (\|ean de poi'is\). Condition of third class, \ean\ and present active subjunctive of \poie“\, "if thou continue to do." {Sword} (\|machairan\). Symbol of authority as to-day policemen carry clubs or pistols. "The Emperor Trajan presented to a provincial governor on starting for his province, a dagger, with the words, '_For me_. If I deserve it, _in_ me'" (Vincent). {An avenger} (\|ekdikos\). Old adjective from \ek\ and \dik^ (\|right), "outside of penalty," unjust, then in later Greek "exacting penalty from one," in N.T. only here and 1Th 4:6.

13:5 {Ye must needs} (\|anagk^\). "There is necessity," both because of the law and because of conscience, because it is right (2:15; 9:1).

13:6 {Ye pay} (\|teleite\). Present active indicative (not imperative) of \tele“\, to fulfil. {Tribute} (\|phorous\). Old word from \pher“\, to bring, especially the annual tax on lands, etc. (Lu 20:22; 23:1). Paying taxes recognizes authority over us. {Ministers of God's service} (\|leitourgoi theou\). Late word for public servant (unused \|leitros\ from Attic \|le's\, people, and \|erg“\, to work). Often used of military servants, servants of the king, and temple servants (Heb 8:2). Paul uses it also of himself as Christ's \|leitourgos\ (Ro 15:16) and of Epaphroditus as a minister to him (Php 2:25). See \|theou diakonos\ in verse 4. {Attending continually} (\|proskarterountes\). Present active participle of the late verb \|proskartere“\ (\|pros\ and \|kartere“\ from \|kartos\ or \|kratos\, strength) to persevere. See on ^Ac 2:42; 8:13.

13:7 {Dues} (\|opheilas\). Debts, from \|opheil“\, to owe. Often so in the papyri, though not in Greek authors. In N.T. only here, Mt 18:32; 1Co 7:3. Paying debts needs emphasis today, even for ministers. {To whom tribute is due} (\|t^i ton phoron\). We must supply a participle with the article \|t^i\ like \|apaitounti\ ('to the one asking tribute'). So with the other words (to whom custom, \|t^i to telos apaitounti\; to whom fear, \|t^i ton phobon apaitounti\; to whom honour, \|t^i t^ n tim^ n apaitounti\). \|Phoros\ is the tribute paid to a subject nation (Lu 20:22), while \|telos\ is tax for support of civil government (Mt 17:25).

13:8 {Save to love one another} (\|ei m^ to all^ lous agapfin\). "Except the loving one another." This articular infinitive is in the accusative case the object of \opheilete\ and partitive apposition with \m^den\ (nothing). This debt can never be paid off, but we should keep the interest paid up. {His neighbour} (\ton heteron\). "The other man," "the second man." "Just as in the relations of man and God \pistis\ has been substituted for \nomos\, so between man and man \agap^ takes the place of definite legal relations" (Sanday and Headlam). See Mt 22:37-40 for the words of Jesus on this subject. Love is the only solution of our social relations and national problems.

13:9 {For this} (\to gar\). For the article (\to\) pointing to a sentence see 8:26, here to the quotation. The order of the commandments here is like that in Lu 18:20; Jas 2:11 and in B for De 5, but different from that of the Hebrew in Ex 20; De 5. The use of \ou\ with the volitive future in prohibitions in place of \m^ and the imperative or subjunctive is a regular Greek idiom. {And if there be any other} (\kai ei tis hetera\). Paul does not attempt to give them all. {It is summed up} (\anakephalaiautai\). Present passive indicative of \anakephalaio^, late literary word or "rhetorical term" (\ana, kephalaion\, head or chief as in Heb 8:1). Not in the papyri, but \kephalaion\, quite common for sum or summary. In N.T. only here and Eph 1:10. {Namely} (\en t^i\). See \to gar\ at the beginning of the verse, though omitted by B F. The quotation is from Le 19:18. Quoted in Mt 5:43; 22:39; Mr 12:31; Lu 10:27; Ga 5:14; Jas 2:8 it is called \basilikos nomos\ (royal law). {Thy neighbour} (\ton pl^sion sou\). \Pl^sion\ is an adverb and with the article it means "the one near thee." See on ^Mt 5:43.

13:10 {The fulfilment of the law} (\pl^r^ma nomou\). "The filling up or complement of the law" like \pepl^r^ken\ (perfect active indicative of \pl^ro^, stands filled up) in verse 8. See 1Co 13 for the fuller exposition of this verse.

13:11 {And this} (\kai touto\). Either nominative absolute or accusative of general reference, a common idiom for "and that too" (1Co 6:6,8, etc.). {Knowing} (\eidotes\). Second perfect active participle, nominative plural without a principal verb. Either we must supply a verb like \poi^s^men\ (let us do it) or \poi^sate\ (do ye do it) or treat it as an independent participle as in 12:10f. {The season} (\ton kairon\). The critical period, not \chronos\ (time in general). {High time} (\h^ra\). Like our the "hour" has come, etc. MSS. vary between \h^mas\ (us) and \humfs\ (you), accusative of general reference with \egerth^nai\

(first aorist passive infinitive of \egeir“, to awake, to wake up), "to be waked up out of sleep" (\ex hupnou\). {Nearer to us} (\egguteron h^m“n\). Probably so, though \h^m“n\ can be taken equally well with \h^ s“t^ria\ (our salvation is nearer). Final salvation, Paul means, whether it comes by the second coming of Christ as they all hoped or by death. It is true of us all.

13:12 {Is far spent} (\proekopsen\). First aorist active indicative of \prokopt“, to cut forward, to advance, old word for making progress. See Lu 2:52; Ga 1:14; 2Ti 2:16; 3:9. {Is at hand} (\^ggiken\). Perfect active indicative, "has drawn nigh." Vivid picture for day-break. {Let us therefore cast off} (\apoth“metha oun\). Aorist middle subjunctive (volitive) of \apotith^mi\, to put off from oneself "the works of darkness" (\ta erga tou skotous\)) as we do our night-clothes. {Let us put on} (\endus“metha\). Aorist middle subjunctive (volitive) of \endu“, to put on. For this same contrast between putting off (\apotith^mi\ and \apekdu“) and putting on (\endu“) see Col 3:8-12. {The armour of light} (\ta hopla tou photos\). The weapons of light, that belong to the light (to the day time). For the metaphor of the Christian armour see 1Th 5:8; 2Co 6:7; Ro 6:13; Eph 6:13ff.

13:13 {Honestly} (\eusch^mon“s\). Paul is fond of the metaphor "walk" (\peripate“\), 33 times though not in the Pastoral Epistles. This old adverb (from \eusch^m“n\, graceful) occurs also in 1Th 4:12; 1Co 14:40. The English word "honest" means honourable (Latin _honor_) and so decent. Wycliff translates 1Co 12:32 by "unhonest," "honesty," "honest" for "less honourable, honour, honourable." {Not in revelling} (\m^ k“mois\). Plural "revellings." See on ^Ga 5:21. {Drunkenness} (\methais\). Plural again, "drunkennesses." See on ^Ga 5:21. {In chambering} (\koitais\). Plural also. See on ^Ro 9:10. {Wantonness} (\aselgeiais\). Plural likewise. See on ^2Co 12:21; Ga 5:19. {Not in strife and jealousy} (\m^ eridi kai z^l“i\). Singular here, but some MSS. have the plural like the previous words. Quarrelling and jealousy go with the other vices (Shedd).

13:14 {But ye on} (\endusasthe\). The same metaphor as in verse 12. The Lord Jesus Christ is the garment that we all need. See Ga 3:27 with baptism as the symbol. {Provision} (\pronoian\). Old word for forethought (from \pronoos\). In N.T. only here and Ac 24:2. {For the flesh} (\t^s sarkos\). Objective genitive. {To fulfil the lusts thereof} (\eis epithumias\). "For lusts." No verb.

14:1 {Him that is weak} (\ton asthenounta\). See on 1Co 8:7-12; 9:22; Ro 4:19. {Receive ye} (\proslambanesthe\). Present middle imperative (indirect), "take to yourselves." {Yet not to doubtful disputations} (\m^ eis diakriseis dialogism^n\). "Not for decisions of opinions." Note \dia\ (between, two or \duo) in both words. Discriminations between doubts or hesitations. For \diakrisis\, see 1Co 12:10; Heb 5:14 (only N.T. examples). For \dialogismos\ see Lu 2:35; 24:38; Php 2:14. The "strong" brother is not called upon to settle all the scruples of the "weak" brother. But each takes it on himself to do it.

14:2 {One man} (\hos men\). "This one," demonstrative pronoun \hos\ with \men\. {Hath faith} (\pisteuei\). Like \echei pistin\ (Ac 14:9). {But he that is weak} (\ho de asthen^n\). One would expect \hos de\ (but that one) in contrast with \hos men\. \Ho\ is demonstrative with \de\ sometimes, but here is probably just the article with \asthen^n\. {Herbs} (\lachana\). From \lachan^, to dig. Hence garden herbs or vegetables. Denney feels certain that Paul has in mind a party of vegetarians in Rome.

14:3 {Set at nought} (\exoutheneit^). Present active imperative of \exouthene^, to treat as nothing and so with contempt (Lu 23:11; 1Th 5:20). {Judge} (\krinet^). Present active imperative of \krin^, criticize. One side (the meat-eaters) despises the vegetarians, while the vegetarians criticize the meat-eaters. {Received him} (\auton proselabeto\). Aorist middle (indirect) of \proslamban^, same verb used in verse 1. God took both sides into his fellowship without requiring that they be vegetarians or meat-eaters.

14:4 {Who art thou?} (\su tis ei?). Proleptic position of \su\, "thou who art thou?" {The servant of another} (\allotrion oiket^n\). Not another (\allon\) servant (household servant, \oiket^n), but "another's servant." For the adjective \allotrios\, see Lu 16:12; 2Co 10:15f. {Shall be made to stand} (\stath^setai\). Future passive of \hist^mi\. In spite of your sharp criticisms of one another. {Hath power} (\dunatei\). Verb found only in Paul (2Co 9:8; 13:3; Ro 14:4), from verbal adjective \dunatos\.

14:5 {One man} (hos men\), {another} (hos de\). Regular idiom of contrasted demonstratives (this one, that one). {One day above another} (h^meran par' h^meran\). "Day beyond day." For this use of \para\ (beside) in comparison see 1:25; Lu 13:2. {Be fully assured} (pl^rophoreisth^{\}). Present passive imperative of \pl^rophore^{\}, late compound verb for which see on ^Lu 1:1; Ro 4:21. {In his own mind} (en t^i idi^i noi\). Intelligent and honest decision according to the light possessed by each.

14:6 {Regardeth} (phronei\). "Thinks of," "esteems," "observes," "puts his mind on" (from phr^n, mind). The Textus Receptus has also "he that regardeth not," but it is not genuine. {Unto the Lord} (kuri^i\). Dative case. So as to t^i the^i\ (unto God). He eats unto the Lord, he eats not unto the Lord. Paul's principle of freedom in non-essentials is most important. The Jewish Christians still observed the Seventh day (the Sabbath). The Gentile Christians were observing the first day of the week in honour of Christ's Resurrection on that day. Paul pleads for liberty.

14:7 {To himself} (heaut^i\). Dative of advantage again. But to the Lord as he shows in verse 8. Life and death focus in the Lord.

14:8 {Whether--or} (ean te--ean te\). "Both if--and if" (condition of third class with present subjunctive) (z^men--apothn^sk^men\). Both living and dying are "to the Lord." Paul repeats the idiom (ean te--ean te\) with the conclusion "we are the Lord's" (tou kuriou esmen\). Predicate genitive, "we belong to the Lord."

14:9 {And lived again} (kai ez^sen\). First ingressive aorist active indicative of \za^{\}, "he came to life." {Might be lord of} (kurieusei\). Ingressive aorist active subjunctive of \kurieu^{\}, "become Lord of." Purpose clause with \hina\ (that). Old verb from \kurios\, lord. See Lu 22:25; Ro 6:9.

14:10 {But thou, why dost thou judge?} (su de ti su krineis?^{\}). Referring to the conduct of the "weak" brother in verse 3. {Or thou again} (^kai su\). Referring to the "strong" brother. {Shall stand before} (parast^sometha\). Future middle of \parist^mi\ and intransitive, to stand beside (para\) with the locative case (t'“i bemati), the judgment seat) as in Ac 27:24. See the same figure of God in 2Co 5:10.

14:11 {As I live} (z“ eg). "I live." The LXX here (Isa 45:23) has \kat' emautou omnu“, "I swear by myself." {Shall confess to God} (exomolog^setai t'“i the“i). Future middle of \exomologe“, to confess openly (\ex) with the accusative as in Mt 3:6. With the dative as here the idea is to give praise to, to give gratitude to (Mt 11:25).

14:12 {Shall give account} (logon d“sei). So Aleph A C rather than \apod“sei of Textus Receptus. Common use of \logos for account (bookkeeping, ledger) as in Lu 16:2.

14:13 {Let us not therefore judge one another any more} (m^keti oun all^lous krin“men). Present active subjunctive (volitive). "Let us no longer have the habit of criticizing one another." A wonderfully fine text for modern Christians and in harmony with what the Master said (Mt 7:1). {That no man put a stumbling block in his brother's way or an occasion of falling} (to m^ tithenai proskomma t'“i adelph“i ^ skandalon). Articular present active infinitive of \tith^mi in apposition with \touto, accusative case after \krinate: "Judge this rather, the not putting a stumbling block (see 9:32 for \proskomma) or a trap (\skandalon, 9:33) for his brother" (\adelph“i, dative of disadvantage).

14:14 {I know and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus} (oida kai pepeismai en kuri“i I^sou). He knows it and stands persuaded (perfect passive indicative of \peith“, to persuade), but in the sphere of the Lord Jesus (cf. 9:1), not by mere rational processes. {Unclean of itself} (kainon di' heautou). So Paul takes his stand with the "strong" as in 1Co 8:4f., but he is not a libertine. Paul's liberty as to food is regulated by his life in the Lord. For this use of \koinos, not as common to all (Ac 2:44; 4:32), but unhallowed, impure, see on Mr 7:2,5; Ac 10:14,28. God made all things for their own uses. {Save that} (ei m^). The exception lies not in the nature of the food (\di' heautou), but in the man's view of it (to him, \ekein“i, dative case).

14:15 Because of meat (\dia br“ma). "Because of food." {In love} (\kata agap^n). "According to love" as the regulating principle of life. See 1Co 8 where Paul pleads for love in place of knowledge on this point. {Destroy not} ($\backslash m^{\wedge} apollue \backslash$). Present active imperative of $\backslash apollu^{\wedge} \backslash$, the very argument made in 1Co 8:10f. {With thy meat} ($\backslash t^{\wedge} i br^{\wedge} mati sou \backslash$). Instrumental case, "with thy food." It is too great a price to pay for personal liberty as to food.

14:16 {Your good} ($\backslash hum^{\wedge} n to agathon \backslash$). "The good thing of you" = the liberty or Christian freedom which you claim. {Be evil spoken of} ($\backslash blasph^{\wedge} meisth^{\wedge} \backslash$). Present passive imperative of $\backslash blasph^{\wedge} me^{\wedge} \backslash$ for which see Mt 9:3; Ro 3:8.

14:17 {The kingdom of God} ($\backslash h^{\wedge} basileia tou theou \backslash$). Not the future kingdom of eschatology, but the present spiritual kingdom, the reign of God in the heart, of which Jesus spoke so often. See 1Co 4:21. Paul scores heavily here, for it is not found in externals like food and drink, but in spiritual qualities and graces.

14:18 {Herein} ($\backslash en tout^{\wedge} i \backslash$). "On the principle implied by these virtues" (Sanday and Headlam). {Approved of men} ($\backslash dokimos tois anthr^{\wedge} pois \backslash$). "Acceptable to men." Stands the test for men. See 1Co 11:19; 2Co 10:18; 2Ti 2:15.

14:19 {So then} ($\backslash ara oun \backslash$). Two inferential particles, "accordingly therefore." {Let us follow after} ($\backslash di^{\wedge} k^{\wedge} men \backslash$). Present active subjunctive (volitive). "Let us pursue." Some MSS. have present indicative, "we pursue." {The things which make for peace} ($\backslash ta t^{\wedge} s eir^{\wedge} n^{\wedge} s \backslash$). "The things of peace," literally, genitive case. So "the things of edification for one another" ($\backslash ta t^{\wedge} s oikodom^{\wedge} s t^{\wedge} s eis all^{\wedge} lous \backslash$).

14:20 {Overthrow not} ($\backslash m^{\wedge} katalue \backslash$). "Destroy not," "do not loosen down" (carrying on the metaphor in $\backslash oikodom^{\wedge} \backslash$, building). {The work of God} ($\backslash to ergon tou theou \backslash$). The brother for whom Christ died, verse 15. Perhaps with a side-glance at Esau and his mess of pottage. {But it is evil} ($\backslash alla kakon \backslash$). Paul changes from the plural $\backslash koina \backslash$ to the singular $\backslash kakon \backslash$. {With offence} ($\backslash dia proskommatos \backslash$). "With a stumbling-block" as in verse 13. This use of $\backslash dia \backslash$ (accompaniment) is common. So then it is addressed to the "strong" brother not to cause a stumbling-block by the way he eats and exercises his freedom.

14:21 {Not to eat} ($\backslash to m^{\wedge} phagein \backslash$). "The not eating." Articular infinitive (second aorist active of $\backslash esthi^{\wedge} \backslash$) and subject of \kalon estin\ (copula, understood). {Flesh} (\kreas\). Old word, in N.T. only here and 1Co 8:13. {To drink} (\pein\). Shortened form for \piein\ (second aorist active infinitive of \pin“). {Whereby} (\en h“i\). "On which thy brother stumbleth" (\proskoptei\).

14:22 {Have thou to thyself before God} (\su--kata seauton eche en“pion tou theou\). Very emphatic position of \su\ at the beginning of the sentence, "Thou there." The old MSS. put \h^n\ (relative "which") after \pistin\ and before \echeis\. This principle applies to both the "strong" and the "weak." He is within his rights to act "according to thyself," but it must be "before God" and with due regard to the rights of the other brethren. {In that which he approveth} (\en hoi dokimazei\). This beatitude cuts both ways. After testing and then approving (1:28; 2:18) one takes his stand which very act may condemn himself by what he says or does. "It is a rare felicity to have a conscience untroubled by scruples" (Denney).

14:23 {He that doubteth} (\ho diakrinomenos\). Present middle participle of \diakrin“, to judge between (\dia\), to hesitate. See Jas 1:6f. for this same picture of the double-minded man. Cf. Ro 4:20; Mr 11:23. {Is condemned} (\katakekritai\). Perfect passive indicative of \katakrin“, (note \kata-), "stands condemned." {If he eat} (\ean phag^i\). Third class condition, \ean\ and second aorist active subjunctive. If in spite of his doubt, he eat. {Whatsoever is not of faith is sin} (\pan ho ouk ek piste“s hamartia estin\). {Faith} (\pistis\ here is subjective, one's strong conviction in the light of his relation to Christ and his enlightened conscience. To go against this combination is sin beyond a doubt. Some MSS. (A L etc.) put the doxology here which most place in 16:25-27. But they all give chapters 15 and 16. Some have supposed that the Epistle originally ended here, but that is pure speculation. Some even suggest two editions of the Epistle. But chapter 15 goes right on with the topic discussed in chapter 14.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

15:1 {We the strong} (\h^meis hoi dunatoi). Paul identifies himself with this wing in the controversy. He means the morally strong as in 2Co 12:10; 13:9, not the mighty as in 1Co 1:26. {The infirmities} (\ta asthen^mata). "The weaknesses" (cf. \asthen^"n\ in 14:1,2), the scruples "of the not strong" (\t^"n adunat^"n). See Ac 14:8 where it is used of the man weak in his feet (impotent). {To bear} (\bastazein). As in Ga 6:2, common in the figurative sense. {Not to please ourselves} (\m^ heautois areskein). Precisely Paul's picture of his own conduct in 1Co 10:33.

15:2 {For that which is good} (\eis to agathon). "For the good." As in 14:16,19. Not to please men just for popular favours, but for their benefit.

15:3 {Pleased not himself} (\ouch heaut^"i ^resen). Aorist active indicative of \aresk^"n with the usual dative. The supreme example for Christians. See 14:15. He quotes Ps 69:9 (Messianic Psalm) and represents the Messiah as bearing the reproaches of others.

15:4 {Were written aforetime} (\proograph^"n). Second aorist passive indicative of \proograph^"n, old verb, in N.T. only here, Ga 3:1 (which see); Eph 3:3; Jude 1:4. {For our learning} (\eis t^"n h^meteran didaskalian). "For the instruction of us." Objective sense of possessive pronoun \h^meteros. See Mt 15:9; 2Ti 3:16 for \didaskalian (from \didask^"n\, to teach). {We might have hope} (\t^"n elpida ech^"men). Present active subjunctive of \ech^"n with \hina in final clause, "that we might keep on having hope." One of the blessed uses of the Scriptures.

15:5 {The God of patience and comfort} (\ho theos t^"s hupomon^"s kai t^"s parakl^"se^"s). Genitive case of the two words in verse 4 used to describe God who uses the Scriptures to reveal himself to us. See 2Co 1:3 for this idea; Ro 15:13 for "the God of hope"; 15:33 for "the God of peace." {Grant you} (\d^"i^"n humin). Second aorist active optative (_Koin_, _form for older \doi^"n) as in 2Th 3:16; Eph 1:17; 2Ti 1:16,18; 2:25, though

MSS. vary in Eph 1:17; 2Ti 2:25 for \d“^i\ (subjunctive). The optative here is for a wish for the future (regular idiom). {According to Christ Jesus} (\kata Christon I^soun\). "According to the character or example of Christ Jesus" (2Co 11:17; Col 2:8; Eph 5:24).

15:6 {With one accord} (\homothumadon\). Here alone in Paul, but eleven times in Acts (Ac 1:14, etc.). {With one mouth} (\en heni stomati\). Vivid outward expression of the unity of feeling. {May glorify} (\doxaz^te\). Present active subjunctive of \doxaz“, final clause with \hina\ "that ye may keep on glorifying." For "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" see 2Co 1:3; 9:31 for discussion. It occurs also in Eph 1:3; 1Pe 1:3.

15:7 {Receive ye} (\proslambanesthe\ as in 14:1), {received} (\proselabeto\, here of Christ as in 14:3 of God). The repetition here is addressed to both the strong and the weak and the "us" (\h^mfs\) includes all.

15:8 {A minister of the circumcision} (\diakonon peritom^s\). Objective genitive, "a minister to the circumcision." \Diakonon\ is predicate accusative with \gegen^sthai\ (perfect passive infinitive of \ginomai\ in indirect assertion after \leg“\, I say) and in apposition with \Christon\, accusative of general reference with the infinitive. See Ga 4:4f. {That he might confirm} (\eis to bebai“sai\). Purpose clause with \eis to\ and the infinitive \bebai“sai\ (first aorist active of \bebaio“\, to make stand). {The promises given unto the fathers} (\tas epaggelias t^“n pater“^n\). No "given" in the Greek, just the objective genitive, "the promises to the fathers." See 9:4,5.

15:9 {And that the Gentiles might praise} (\ta de ethn^ doxasai\). Coordinate with \bebai“sai\ and \eis to\, to be repeated with \ta ethn^, the accusative of general reference and \ton theon\ the object of \doxasai\). Thus the Gentiles were called through the promise to the Jews in the covenant with Abraham (4:11f., 16f.). Salvation is of the Jews. Paul proves his position by a chain of quotations from the O.T., the one in verse 9 from Ps 18:50. For \exomologe“, see 14:10. {I will sing} (\psal“\). Future active of \psall“, for which verb see on 1Co 14:15.

15:10 {Rejoice, ye Gentiles} (\euphranth^te\). First aorist passive imperative of \euphrain“, old word from \eu\, well and \phr^n\, mind. See Lu 15:32. Quotation from De 32:43 (LXX).

15:11 {All the Gentiles} (\panta ta ethn^). From Ps 117:1 with slight variations from the LXX text.

15:12 {The root} (\h^ riza\). Rather here, as in Re 5:5; 23:16, the sprout from the root. From Isa 11:10. {On him shall the Gentiles hope} (\ep' aut“i ethn^ elpiousin\). Attic future of \elpiz“\ for the usual \elpisousin\.

15:13 {The God of hope} (\ho theos t^s elpidos\). Taking up the idea in verse 12 as in verse 5 from 4. {Fill you} (\pl^r“sai humas\). Optative (first aorist active of \pl^ro“\ of wish for the future. Cf. \d“i^ in verse 5. {In believing} (\en t“i pisteuein\). "In the believing" (\en\ with locative of the articular infinitive, the idiom so common in Luke's Gospel). {That ye may abound} (\eis to perisseuein humas\). Purpose clause with \eis to\, as in verse 8, with \perisseuein\ (present active infinitive of \perisseu“\, with accusative of general reference, \humas). This verse gathers up the points in the preceding quotations.

15:14 {I myself also} (\kai autos eg“\). See 7:25 for a like emphasis on himself, here in contrast with "ye yourselves" (\kai autoi\). The argument of the Epistle has been completed both in the main line (chapters 1-8) and the further applications (9:1-15:13). Here begins the Epilogue, the personal matters of importance. {Full of goodness} (\mestoi agathosun^s\). See 2Th 1:11; Ga 5:22 for this LXX and Pauline word (in ecclesiastical writers also) made from the adjective \agathos\, good, by adding \-sun^ (common ending for words like \dikaiosun^). See 1:29 for \mestos\ with genitive and \pepl^r“menoi\ (perfect passive participle of \pl^ro“\ as here), but there with instrumental case after it instead of the genitive. Paul gives the Roman Christians (chiefly Gentiles) high praise. The "all knowledge" is not to be pressed too literally, "our Christian knowledge in its entirety" (Sanday and Headlam). {To admonish} (\nouthetein\). To put in mind (from \nouthet^s\ and this from \nous\ and \tith^mi\). See on 1Th 5:12,14. "Is it laying too much stress on the language of compliment to suggest that these words give a hint of St. Paul's aim in this Epistle?" (Sanday and Headlam). The strategic position of the church in Rome made it a great centre for radiating and echoing the gospel over the world as Thessalonica did for Macedonia (1Th 1:8).

15:15 {I write} (\egrapsa). Epistolary aorist. {The more boldly} (\tolm^roter^s). Old comparative adverb from \tolm^r^s. Most MSS. read \tolm^roteron. Only here in N.T. {In some measure} (\apo merous). Perhaps referring to some portions of the Epistle where he has spoken plainly (6:12,19; 8:9; 11:17; 14:3,4,10, etc.). {As putting you again in remembrance} (\hos epanamimn^sk^"n humas). Delicately put with \h^s and \epi in the verb, "as if calling back to mind again" (\epi). This rare verb is here alone in the N.T.

15:16 {That I should be} (\eis to einai me). The \eis to idiom with the infinitive again (verses 8,13). {Minister} (\leitourgon). Predicate accusative in apposition with \me and see 13:6 for the word. "The word here derives from the context the priestly associations which often attach to it in the LXX" (Denney). But this purely metaphorical use does not show that Paul attached a "sacerdotal" character to the ministry. {Ministering} (\hierourgounta). Present active participle of \hierourge^s, late verb from \hierourgos (\hieros, erg^s), in LXX, Philo, and Josephus, only here in N.T. It means to work in sacred things, to minister as a priest. Paul had as high a conception of his work as a preacher of the gospel as any priest did. {The offering up of the Gentiles} (\h^prosphora t^"n ethn^"n). Genitive of apposition, the Gentiles being the offering. They are Paul's offering. See Ac 21:26. {Acceptable} (\euprosdektos). See 2Co 6:2; 8:12. Because "sanctified in the Holy Spirit" (\h^giasmen^ en pneumatihagi^i, perfect passive participle of \hagiaz^s).

15:17 {In things pertaining to God} (\ta pros ton theon). Accusative of general reference of the article used with the prepositional phrase, "as to the things relating to (\pros, facing) God."

15:18 {Any things save those which Christ wrought through me} (\ti h^"n ou kateirgasato Christos di' emou). Rather, "any one of those things which Christ did not work through me." The antecedent of \h^"n is the unexpressed \tout^"n and the accusative relative \ha (object of \kateirgasato) is attracted into the genitive case of \tout^"n after a common idiom. {By word and deed} (\log^"i kai erg^"i). Instrumental case with both words. By preaching and life (Lu 24:19; Ac 1:1; 7:22; 2Co 10:11).

15:19 {In power of signs and wonders} (\en dunamei s^mei“n kai terat“n). Note all three words as in Heb 2:4, only here \dunamis is connected with \s^meia and \terata. See all three words used of Paul's own work in 2Co 12:12 and in 2Th 2:9 of the Man of Sin. See 1Th 1:5; 1Co 2:4 for the "power" of the Holy Spirit in Paul's preaching. Note repetition of \en dunamei here with \pneumatou hagiou. {So that} (\h“ste). Result expressed by the perfect active infinitive \pepl^r“kenai (from pl^ro“) with the accusative \me (general reference). {Round about even unto Illyricum} (\kukl“i mechri tou Illurikou). "In a ring" (\kukl“i, locative case of \kuklos). Probably a journey during the time when Paul left Macedonia and waited for II Corinthians to have its effect before coming to Corinth. If so, see 2Co 13; Ac 20:1-3. When he did come, the trouble with the Judaizers was over. Illyricum seems to be the name for the region west of Macedonia (Dalmatia). Strabo says that the Egnatian Way passed through it. Arabia and Illyricum would thus be the extreme limits of Paul's mission journeys so far.

15:20 {Yea} (\hout“s de). "And so," introducing a limitation to the preceding statement. {Making it my aim} (\philotimoumenon). Present middle participle (accusative case agreeing with \me) of \philotimeomai, old verb, to be fond of honour (*\philos, tim^ ). In N.T. only here and 1Th 4:11; 2Co 5:9. A noble word in itself, quite different in aim from the Latin word for {ambition} (\ambio*, to go on both sides to carry one's point). {Not where} (\ouch hopou). Paul was a pioneer preacher pushing on to new fields after the manner of Daniel Boone in Kentucky. {That I might now build upon another man's foundation} (*\hina m^ ep' allotrion themelion oikodom“ *). For \allotrios (not \allos) see 14:4. For \themelion, see Lu 6:48f.; 1Co 3:11. This noble ambition of Paul's is not within the range of some ministers who can only build on another's foundation as Apollos did in Corinth. But the pioneer preacher and missionary has a dignity and glory all his own.

15:21 {As it is written} (\kath“s gegraptai). From Isa 52:15. Paul finds an illustration of his word about his own ambition in the words of Isaiah. Fritzsche actually argues that Paul understood Isaiah to be predicting his (Paul's) ministry! Some scholars have argued against the genuineness of verses 9-21 on wholly subjective and insufficient grounds.

15:22 {I was hindered} (\enekoptomⁿ\). Imperfect passive (repetition) of \enkopt[“]\, late verb, to cut in, to cut off, to interrupt. Seen already in Ac 24:4; 1Th 2:18; Ga 5:7. Cf. modern telephone and radio and automobile. {These many times} (\ta polla\). "As to the many things." In 1:13 Paul used \pollakis\ (many times) and B D read it here. But Paul's work (\ta polla\) had kept him away. {From coming to you} (\tou elthein pros humas\). Ablative case (after the verb of hindering) of the articular infinitive, "from the coming."

15:23 {Having no more any place in these regions} (\m^ˆketi topon ech[“]n en tois klimasin\). Surprising frankness that the average preacher would hardly use on such a matter. Paul is now free to come to Rome because there is no demand for him where he is. For \klima\ (from \klin[“]\, to incline), slope, then tract of land, region, see already 2Co 11:10; Ga 1:21 (the only N.T. examples). {A longing} (\epipotheian\). A _hapax legomenon_, elsewhere \epipoth^ˆsis\ (2Co 7:7,11), from \epipothe[“]\ as in Ro 1:11. {These many years} (\apo hikan[“]n et[“]n\). "From considerable years." So B C, but Aleph A D have \poll[“]n\, "from many years."

15:24 {Whensoever I go} (\h[“]s an poreu[“]mai\). Indefinite temporal clause with \h[“]s an\ and the present middle subjunctive (cf. 1Co 11:34; Php 2:23 with aorist subjunctive). {Into Spain} (\eis tⁿ Spanian\). It was a Roman province with many Jews in it. The Greek name was \Iberia\, the Latin _Hispania_. The Textus Receptus adds here \eleusomai pros humas\ (I shall come to you), but it is not in Aleph A B C D and is not genuine. Without it we have a parenthesis (or anacoluthon) through the rest of verse 24. {In my journey} (\diaporeuomenos\). Present middle participle, "passing through." Paul planned only a brief stay in Rome since a strong church already existed there. {To be brought on my way thitherward} (\propemphth^ˆnai ekei\). "To be sent forward there." First aorist passive infinitive of \propemp[“]\, common word for escorting one on a journey (1Co 16:6,11; 2Co 1:16; Tit 3:13; 2Jo 1:6). {If first in some measure I shall have been satisfied with your company} (\ean hum[“]n prot[“]n apo merous empl^ˆsth[“]\). Condition of third class with \ean\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \empimpl^ˆmi\, old verb, to fill up, to satisfy, to take one's fill. See Lu 6:25. Literally, "if I first in part be filled with you" (get my fill of you). delicate compliment for the Roman church.

15:25 {But now} (\nuni de\). Repeats the very words used in 23. {I go} (\poreuomai\). Futuristic present as in Joh 14:2. {Ministering unto the saints} (\diakonon tois hagiois\). Present active participle of purpose like \eulogounta\ in Ac 3:26. This collection had been one of Paul's chief cares for over a year now (see 2Co 8; 9). See 2Co 8:4.

15:26 {For it hath been the good pleasure of Macedonia and Achaia} (\^udok^san gar Makedonia kai Achaia\). "For Macedonia and Achaia took pleasure." The use of \^udok^san\ (first aorist active indicative of \eudoke^s) shows that it was voluntary (2Co 8:4). Paul does not here mention Asia and Galatia. {A certain contribution} (\koin^nian tina\). Put thus because it was unknown to the Romans. For this sense of \koin^nian\, see 2Co 8:4; 9:13. {For the poor among the saints} (\eis tous pt^chous t^n hagi^n\). Partitive genitive. Not all there were poor, but Ac 4:32-5:11; 6:1-6; 11:29f.; Ga 2:10 prove that many were.

15:27 {Their debtors} (\opheiletai aut^n\). Objective genitive: the Gentiles are debtors to the Jews. See the word \opheilet^s\ in 1:14; 8:12. {For if} (\ei gar\). Condition of the first class, assumed as true, first aorist active indicative (\ekoin^n^san\, from \koin^ne^s, to share) with associative instrumental case (\pneumatikois\, spiritual things). {To minister unto} (\leitourg^sai\, first aorist active infinitive of \leitourge^s\ with dative case \autois, to them), but here certainly with no "sacerdotal" functions (cf. verse 16). {In carnal things} (\en tois sarkikois\). Things which belong to the natural life of the flesh (\sarx\), not the sinful aspects of the flesh at all.

15:28 {Have sealed} (\sphragisamenos\). First aorist middle participle (antecedent action, having sealed) of \sphragiz^s\, old verb from \sphragis\, a seal (Ro 4:11), to stamp with a seal for security (Mt 27:66) or for confirmation (2Co 1:22) and here in a metaphorical sense. Paul was keenly sensitive that this collection should be actually conveyed to Jerusalem free from all suspicion (2Co 8:18-23). {I will go on by you} (\apeleusomai di' hum^n\). Future middle of \aperchomai\, to go off or on. Note three prepositions here (\ap^s\ from Rome, \di^s\ by means of you or through you, \eis\ unto Spain). He repeats the point of verse 24, his temporary stay in Rome with Spain as the objective. How little we know what is ahead of us and how grateful we should be for our ignorance on this point.

15:29 {When I come} (\erchomenos\). Present middle participle of \erchomai\ with the time of the future middle indicative \eleusomai\ (coming I shall come). {In the fulness of the blessing of Christ} (\en pl^r^“mati eulogias Christou\). On \pl^r^“mati\, see 11:12. Paul had already (1:11f.) said that he had a \charisma pneumatikon\ (spiritual blessing) for Rome. He did bring that to them.

15:30 {By} (\dia\). The intermediate agents of the exhortation (the Lord Jesus and the love of the Spirit) as \dia\ is used after \parakal^“\ in 12:1. {That ye strive together with me} (\sunag^“nisasthai moi\). First aorist middle infinitive of \sunag^“ni zomai\, old compound verb, only here in N.T., direct object of \parakal^“\, and with associative instrumental case \moi\, the simplex \ag^“nizomenos\, occurring in Col 4:12 of the prayers of Epaphras. For Christ's agony in prayer see Mt 26:42; Lu 22:44.

15:31 {That I may be delivered} (\hina rusth^“\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \ruomai\, old verb to rescue. This use of \hina\ is the sub-final one after words of beseeching or praying. Paul foresaw trouble all the way to Jerusalem (Ac 20:23; 21:4,13). {May be acceptable to the saints} (\euprosdektos tois hagiois gen^tai\). "May become (second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai) acceptable to the saints." The Judaizers would give him trouble. There was peril of a schism in Christianity.

15:32 {That} (\hina\). Second use of \hina\ in this sentence, the first one sub-final (\hina rusth^“\), this one final with \sunanapaus^“mai\, first aorist middle subjunctive of the double compound verb \sunanapauomai\, late verb to rest together with, to refresh (\anapau^“\ as in Mt 11:28) one's spirit with (\sun\), with the associative instrumental case \humin\ (with you), only here in the N.T.

15:33 {The God of peace} (\ho theos t^s eir^“n^s\). One of the characteristics of God that Paul often mentions in benedictions (1Th 5:23; 2Th 3:16; 2Co 13:11; Php 4:9; Ro 16:20). Because of the "amen" here some scholars would make this the close of the Epistle and make chapter 16 a separate Epistle to the Ephesians. But the MSS. are against it. There is nothing strange at all in Paul's having so many friends in Rome though he had not yet been there himself. Rome was the centre of the world's life as Paul realized (1:15). All men sooner or later hoped to see Rome.

16:1 {I commend} (\sunist^{mi}). The regular word for letters of commendation as in 2Co 3:1 (\sustatikⁿ *epistol*ⁿ). See also Ro 3:5. So here verses 1,2 constitute Paul's recommendation of Phoebe, the bearer of the Epistle. Nothing else is known of her, though her name (Phoib[^]) means bright or radiant. {Sister} (\adelphⁿ). In Christ, not in the flesh. {Who is a servant of the church} (\ousan diakonon t^s ekk^l^{sias}). The etymology of \diakonos\ we have had repeatedly. The only question here is whether it is used in a general sense or in a technical sense as in Php 1:1; 1Ti 3:8-13. In favour of the technical sense of "deacon" or "deaconess" is the addition of "t^s ekk^l^{sias}" (of the church). In some sense Phoebe was a servant or minister of the church in Cenchreae. Besides, right in the midst of the discussion in 1Ti 3:8-13 Paul has a discussion of \gunaikas\ (verse 11) either as women as deaconesses or as the wives of deacons (less likely though possible). The _Apostolic Constitutions_ has numerous allusions to deaconesses. The strict separation of the sexes made something like deaconesses necessary for baptism, visiting the women, etc. Cenchreae, as the eastern port of Corinth, called for much service of this kind. Whether the deaconesses were a separate organization on a par with the deacons we do not know nor whether they were the widows alluded to in 1Ti 5:9f.

16:2 {Worthily of the saints} (\axi^s tⁿ hagiⁿ). Adverb with the genitive as in Php 1:27 because the adjective \axios\ is used with the genitive (Lu 3:8). "Receive her in a way worthy of the saints." This word \hagios\ had come to be the accepted term for followers of Christ. {Assist her} (\parast^{te}). Second aorist (intransitive) active subjunctive of \parist^{mi}, to stand by, with the dative case ("beside her"), the very word used by Paul of the help of Jesus in his trial (\parest[^], 2Ti 4:17). Used with \hina\ as \prosdex^{sthe}. {In whatsoever matter} (\en hⁱ pragmati). Incorporation of the antecedent (\pragmati) into the relative clause (\hⁱ). {She may have need of you} (\an humⁿ chr^{iz}ⁱ). Indefinite relative clause with \an\ and the present subjunctive of \chr^{iz}ⁿ with genitive. {A succourer} (\prostatis). Old and rare feminine form for the masculine \prostat^s\, from \proist^{mi}\ (\prostate“\, common, but not in the N.T.), here only in the N.T. and not in the papyri. The word illustrates her work as \diakonon\ and is perhaps suggested here by \parast^{te}\, just before. {Of mine own self} (\emou autou\). "Of me myself."

16:3 In verses 3-16 Paul sends his greetings to various brethren and sisters in Rome. {Prisca and Aquila} (\Priskan kai Akulan\). This order always (Ac 18:18,26; 2Ti 4:19, and here) save in Ac 18:2; 1Co 16:19, showing that Prisca was the more prominent. Priscilla is a diminutive of Prisca, a name for women in the Acilian gens. She may have been a noble Roman lady, but her husband was a Jew of Pontus and a tent-maker by trade. They were driven from Rome by Claudius, came to Corinth, then to Ephesus, then back to Rome, and again to Ephesus. They were good travelling Christians. {My fellow-workers} (\tous sunergous mou\). Both in tent-making and in Christian service in Corinth and Ephesus.

16:4 {Laid down their own necks} (\ton heautⁿ trachelon hupeth^{kan}\). First aorist active of \hupotith^{mi}\, old verb to place under (the axe of the executioner), only here in N.T. in this sense, though in 1Ti 4:16 to suggest. If literal or figurative, the incident may be connected with the uproar created by Demetrius in Ephesus. Certainly Paul felt deep obligation toward them (see Ac 20:34). {Not only I} (\ouk egⁿ monos\). Rather, "not I alone" (adjective \monos\). The Gentile churches also (great mission workers).

16:5 {The church that is in their house} (\tⁿ kat' oikon autⁿ ekkl^{sian}\). The early Christians had no church buildings. See also Ac 12:2; 1Co 16:19; Phm 1:2; Col 4:15. The Roman Christians had probably several such homes where they would meet. {Epainetus} (\Epaineton\). Nothing is known of him except this item, "the first-fruits of Asia" (\aparch^ts Asias\). An early convert from the province of Asia. Cf. Ac 2:9; 1Co 16:15 (about Stephanus and Achaia).

16:6 {Mary} (\Marian\). Some MSS. have \Mariam\, the Hebrew form. The name indicates a Jewish Christian in Rome. Paul praises her toil. See Lu 5:5.

16:7 {Andronicus and Junias} (\Andronicou kai Iounian\). The first is a Greek name found even in the imperial household. The second name can be either masculine or feminine. {Kinsmen} (\suggeneis). Probably only fellow-countrymen as in 9:13. {Fellow-prisoners} (\sunaichmalˈtus). Late word and rare (in Lucian). One of Paul's frequent compounds with \sun. Literally, fellow captives in war. Perhaps they had shared one of Paul's numerous imprisonments (2Co 11:23). In N.T. only here, Phm 1:23; Col 4:10. {Of note} (\epiˆmoi). Stamped, marked (\epi sˆma). Old word, only here and Mt 27:16 (bad sense) in N.T. {Among the apostles} (\en tois apostolois). Naturally this means that they are counted among the apostles in the general sense true of Barnabas, James, the brother of Christ, Silas, and others. But it can mean simply that they were famous in the circle of the apostles in the technical sense. {Who have been in Christ before me} (\hoi kai pro emou gegonan en Christˈi). Andronicus and Junias were converted before Paul was. Note \gegonan (_Koin, _form by analogy) instead of the usual second perfect active indicative form \gegonasin, which some MSS. have. The perfect tense notes that they are still in Christ.

16:8 {Ampliatius} (\Ampliaton). Some MSS. have a contracted form Amplias.

16:9 {Urbanus} (\Ourbanon). "A common Roman slave name found among members of the household" (Sanday and Headlam). A Latin adjective from _urbs_, city (city-bred). {Stachys} (\Stachun). A Greek name, rare, but among members of the imperial household. It means a head or ear of grain (Mt 12:1).

16:10 {Apelles} (\Apellˆn). A name among Jews and a famous tragic actor also. {The approved} (\ton dokimon). The tried and true (1Co 11:19; 2Co 10:18; 13:7). {Them which are of the household of Aristobulus} (\tous ek tˈn Aristoboulou). The younger Aristobulus was a grandson of Herod the Great. Lightfoot suggests that some of the servants in this household had become Christians, Aristobulus being dead.

16:11 {Herodion} (\Herˈˈidiˈna). Probably one belonging to the Herod family like that above. {Kinsman} (\suggenˆ). Merely fellow-countryman. {Them of the household of Narcissus} (\tous ek tˈn Narkissou). "Narcissiani." There was a famous freedman of this name who was put to death by Agrippa. Perhaps members of his household.

16:12 {Tryphaena and Tryphosa} (\Truphainan kai Truphˈˈsan).

Probably sisters and possibly twins. Both names come from the same root, the verb \trupha“\, to live luxuriously (Jas 5:5). Denney suggests "Dainty and Disdain." {Persis} (Persida\). A freedwoman was so named. She is not Paul's "beloved," but the "beloved" of the whole church.

16:13 {Rufus} (Rouphon\). A very common slave name, possibly the Rufus of Mr 15:21. The word means "red." {The chosen} (ton eklekton\). Not "the elect," but "the select." {And mine} (kai emou\). Paul's appreciation of her maternal care once, not his real mother.

16:14 {Asyncritus} (Asunkriton\). There is an inscription of a freedman of Augustus with this name. {Phlegon} (Phlegonta\). No light on this name till the historian of the second century A.D. {Hermes} (Hermⁿ\). A very common slave name. {Patrobas} (Patroban\). Name of a freedman of Nero, abbreviated form of Patrobius. {Hermas} (Hermfn\). Not the author of the Shepherd of Hermas. Common as a slave name, shortened form of Hermagoras, Hermogenes, etc. {The brethren that are with them} (tous sun autois adelphous\). Perhaps a little church in the house of some one.

16:15 {Philologus} (Philologon\). Another common slave name. {Julia} (Ioulian\). The commonest name for female slaves in the imperial household because of Julius Caesar. Possibly these two were husband and wife. {Nereus} (N^{rea}\). Found in inscriptions of the imperial household. But the sister's name is not given. One wonders why. {Olympas} (Olumpfn\). Possibly an abbreviation for Olympiodorus. {All the saints that are with them} (tous sun autois pantas hagiouis\). Possibly another church in the house. These unnamed, the "and others," constitute the great majority in all our churches.

16:16 {With a holy kiss} (en phil^{mati} hagiⁱ\). The near-east mode of salutation as hand-shaking in the Western. In China one shakes hands with himself. Men kissed men and women kissed women. See 1Th 5 26; 1Co 16:20; 2Co 13:12.

16:17 {Mark} (skopeite\). Keep an eye on so as to avoid. \Skopos\ is the goal, \skope“\ means keeping your eye on the goal. {Divisions} (dichostasias\). Old word for "standings apart," cleavages. In N.T. only here and Ga 5:20. {Those which are causing} (tous--poiountas\). This articular participle clause has within it not only the objects of the participle but the relative clause \hⁿ humeis emathete\ (which you learned), a thoroughly Greek idiom.

16:18 {But their own belly} (\alla tⁱ heautⁿ koilifi\). Dative case after \douleuousin\. A blunt phrase like the same picture in Php 3:19 "whose god is the belly," more truth than caricature in some cases. {By their smooth and fair speech} (\dia t^s chr^{stologias} kai eulogias\). Two compounds of \logos\ (speech), the first (from \chr^{stos} and \logos\) is very rare (here only in N.T.), the second is very common (\eu\ and \logos\). {Beguile} (\exapatⁿ sin\). Present active indicative of the double compound verb \exapataⁿ\ (see 2Th 2:3; 1Co 3:18). {Of the innocent} (\tⁿ akakⁿ\). Old adjective (\a\ privative and \kakos\), without evil or guile, in N.T. only here and Heb 7:26 (of Christ).

16:19 {Is come abroad} (\aphiketo\). Second aorist middle indicative of \aphikneomai\, old verb, to come from, then to arrive at, only here in N.T. {Over you} (\eph' humin\). "Upon you." Simple unto that which is evil (\akeraious eis to kakon\). Old adjective from \a\ privative and \kerannumi\, to mix. Unmixed with evil, unadulterated.

16:20 {Shall bruise} (\suntripsei\). Future active of \suntribⁿ\, old verb, to rub together, to crush, to trample underfoot. Blessed promise of final victory over Satan by "the God of peace." "Shortly" (\en tachei\). As God counts time. Meanwhile patient loyalty from us.

16:21 Verses 21-23 form a sort of postscript with greetings from Paul's companions in Corinth. Timothy was with Paul in Macedonia (2Co 1:1) before he came to Corinth. Lucius may be the one mentioned in Ac 13:1. Jason was once Paul's host (Ac 17:5-9) in Thessalonica, Sosipater may be the longer form of Sopater of Ac 20:4. They are all Paul's fellow-countrymen (\suggeneis\).

16:22 {I Tertius} (\egⁿ Tertios\). The amanuensis to whom Paul dictated the letter. See 2Th 3:17; 1Co 16:21; Col 4:18.

16:23 {Gaius my host} (\Gaios ho xenos mou\). Perhaps the same Gaius of 1Co 1:14 (Ac 19:29; 20:4), but whether the one of 3Jo 1:1 we do not know. \Xenos\ was a guest friend, and then either a stranger (Mt 25:35) or a host of strangers as here. This Gaius was plainly a man of some means as he was the host of all the church. Erastus (2Ti 4:20) was "the treasurer of the city" (\ho oikonomos t's pole"s), one of the outstanding men of Corinth, the "steward" (house-manager) or city manager. See Lu 12:42; 16:1. He is probably the administrator of the city's property. {Quartus} (\Kouartos). Latin name for fourth.

16:24 Is not genuine, not in Aleph A B C Coptic.

16:25 Verses 25-27 conclude the noble Epistle with the finest of Paul's doxologies. {To him that is able} (\t"i dunamen"i). Dative of the articular participle of \dunamai. See similar idiom in Eph 3:20. {To stablish} (\st^rixai). First aorist active infinitive of \st^riz"\', to make stable. {According to my gospel} (\kata to euaggelion mou). Same phrase in 2:16; 2Ti 2:8. Not a book, but Paul's message as here set forth. {The preaching} (\to k^rugma). The proclamation, the heralding. {Of Jesus Christ} (\I^sou Christou). Objective genitive, "about Jesus Christ." {Revelation} (\apokalupsin). "Unveiling." {Of the mystery} (\must^riou). Once unknown, but now revealed. {Kept in silence} (\sesig^menou). Perfect passive participle of \siga"\', to be silent, state of silence. {Through times eternal} (\chronois ai"niois). Associative instrumental case, "along with times eternal" (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 527). See 1Co 2:6,7,10.

16:26 {But now is manifested} (\phaner"thentos de nun). First aorist passive participle of \phanero"\', to make plain, genitive case in agreement with \must^riou. {By the scriptures of the prophets} (\dia graph"n proph^tik"n). "By prophetic scriptures." Witnessed by the law and the prophets (3:21). This thread runs all through Romans. {According to the command of the eternal God} (\kat' epitag^n tou ai"niou theou). Paul conceives that God is in charge of the redemptive work and gives his orders (1:1-5; 10:15f.). The same adjective \ai"nios is here applied to God that is used of eternal life and eternal punishment in Mt 25:46. {Unto obedience of faith} (\eis hupako^n t's piste"s). See 1:5. {Made known unto all the nations} (\eis panta ta ethn^gn"risthentos). First aorist passive participle of \gn"riz"\', still the genitive case agreeing with \must^riou in verse 25.

16:27 {To the only wise God} (\mon"i soph"i the"i). Better, "to God alone wise." See 1Ti 1:17 without \soph"i. {To whom}

(\b*h*“i”). Some MSS. omit.

1:1 {Called to be an apostle} (\kl^tos apostolos). Verbal adjective \kl^tos from \kale^“, without \einai, to be. Literally, {a called apostle} (Ro 1:1), not so-called, but one whose apostleship is due not to himself or to men (Ga 1:1), but to God, {through the will of God} (\dia thel^matos tou theou). The intermediate (\dia, duo, two) agent between Paul's not being Christ's apostle and becoming one was God's will (\thel^ma, something willed of God), God's command (1Ti 1:1). Paul knows that he is not one of the twelve apostles, but he is on a par with them because, like them, he is chosen by God. He is an apostle of Jesus Christ or Christ Jesus (MSS. vary here, later epistles usually Christ Jesus). The refusal of the Judaizers to recognize Paul as equal to the twelve made him the more careful to claim his position. Bengel sees here Paul's denial of mere human authority in his position and also of personal merit: _Namque mentione Dei excluditur auctoramentum humanum, mentione Voluntatis Dei, meritum Pauli_. {Our brother} (\ho adelphos). Literally, the brother, but regular Greek idiom for our brother. This Sosthenes, now with Paul in Ephesus, is probably the same Sosthenes who received the beating meant for Paul in Corinth (Ac 18:17). If so, the beating did him good for he is now a follower of Christ. He is in no sense a co-author of the Epistle, but merely associated with Paul because they knew him in Corinth. He may have been compelled by the Jews to leave Corinth when he, a ruler of the synagogue, became a Christian. See 1Th 1:1 for the mention of Silas and Timothy in the salutation. Sosthenes could have been Paul's amanuensis for this letter, but there is no proof of it.

1:2 {The church of God} (\t^i ekkl^sifi tou theou). Belonging to God, not to any individual or faction, as this genitive case shows. In 1Th 1:1 Paul wrote "the church of the Thessalonians in God" (\en the^“i), but "the churches of God" in 1Th 2:14. See same idiom in 1Co 10:32; 11:16,22; 15:9; 2Co 1:1; Ga 1:13, etc. {Which is in Corinth} (\t^i ous^i en Korinth^“i). See on Ac 13:1 for idiom. It is God's church even in Corinth, "_laetum et ingens paradoxon_" (Bengel). This city, destroyed by Mummius B.C. 146, had been restored by Julius Caesar a hundred years later,

B.C. 44, and now after another hundred years has become very rich and very corrupt. The very word "to Corinthianize" meant to practise vile immoralities in the worship of Aphrodite (Venus). It was located on the narrow Isthmus of the Peloponnesus with two harbours (Lechaeum and Cenchreae). It had schools of rhetoric and philosophy and made a flashy imitation of the real culture of Athens. See Ac 18 for the story of Paul's work here and now the later developments and divisions in this church will give Paul grave concern as is shown in detail in I and II Corinthians. All the problems of a modern city church come to the front in Corinth. They call for all the wisdom and statesmanship in Paul.

{That are sanctified} (h^{giasmenois}). Perfect passive participle of hagiaz, late form for hagiz, so far found only in the Greek Bible and in ecclesiastical writers. It means to make or to declare hagion (from hagos, awe, reverence, and this from haz, to venerate). It is significant that Paul uses this word concerning the {called saints} or {called to be saints} (kl^{tois} hagiois) in Corinth. Cf. kl^{tos} apostolos in 1:1.

It is because they are sanctified {in Christ Jesus} (en Christⁱ I^{sou}). He is the sphere in which this act of consecration takes place. Note plural, construction according to sense, because ekkl^{sia} is a collective substantive. {With all that call upon} (sun pfsin tois epikaloumenois). Associative instrumental case with sun rather than kai (and), making a close connection with "saints" just before and so giving the Corinthian Christians a picture of their close unity with the brotherhood everywhere through the common bond of faith. This phrase occurs in the LXX (Ge 12:8; Zec 13:9) and is applied to Christ as to Jehovah (2Th 1:7,9,12; Php 2:9,10). Paul heard Stephen pray to Christ as Lord (Ac 7:59). Here "with a plain and direct reference to the Divinity of our Lord" (Ellicott). {Their Lord and ours} (autⁿ kai h^mⁿ). This is the interpretation of the Greek commentators and is the correct one, an afterthought and expansion (epanorth^{sis}) of the previous "our," showing the universality of Christ.

1:3 Identical language of 2Th 1:2 save absence of h^mⁿ (our), Paul's usual greeting. See on 1Th 1:1.

1:4 {I thank my God} (eucharist^t i theⁱ). Singular as in Ro 1:8; Php 1:3; Phm 1:4, but plural in 1Th 1:2; Col 1:3. The grounds of Paul's thanksgivings in his Epistles are worthy of study. Even in the church in Corinth he finds something to thank God for, though in II Cor. there is no expression of thanksgiving because of the acute crisis in Corinth nor is there any in Galatians. But Paul is gracious here and allows his general attitude (always, \pantote) concerning (\peri\, around) the Corinthians to override the specific causes of irritation. {For the grace of God which was given to you in Christ Jesus} (\epi t^i chariti tou theou t^i dotheis^i humin en Christ^i I^sou). Upon the basis of (\epi) God's grace, not in general, but specifically given (\dotheis^i\, first aorist passive participle of \did^mi), in the sphere of (\en\ as in verse 2) Christ Jesus.

1:5 {That} (\hoti). Explicit specification of this grace of God given to the Corinthians. Paul points out in detail the unusual spiritual gifts which were their glory and became their peril (chapters 1Co 12-14). {Ye were enriched in him} (\eploutisth^te en aut^i). First aorist passive indicative of \ploutiz^s, old causative verb from \ploutos, wealth, common in Attic writers, dropped out for centuries, reappeared in LXX. In N.T. only three times and alone in Paul (1Co 1:5; 2Co 6:10,11). The Christian finds his real riches in Christ, one of Paul's pregnant phrases full of the truest mysticism. {In all utterance and all knowledge} (\en panti log^i kai pas^i gn^sei). One detail in explanation of the riches in Christ. The outward expression (\log^i) here is put before the inward knowledge (\gn^sei) which should precede all speech. But we get at one's knowledge by means of his speech. Chapters 1Co 12-14 throw much light on this element in the spiritual gifts of the Corinthians (the gift of tongues, interpreting tongues, discernment) as summed up in 1Co 13:1,2, the greater gifts of 12:31. It was a marvellously endowed church in spite of their perversions.

1:6 {Even as} (\kath^s). In proportion as (1Th 1:5) and so inasmuch as (Php 1:7; Eph 1:4). {The testimony of Christ} (\to marturion tou Christou). Objective genitive, the testimony to or concerning Christ, the witness of Paul's preaching. {Was confirmed in you} (\ebebai^th^ en humin). First aorist passive of \bebaio^s, old verb from \bebaios and that from \bain^s, to make to stand, to make stable. These special gifts of the Holy Spirit which they had so lavishly received (ch. 1Co 12) were for that very purpose.

1:7 {So that ye come behind in no gift} (\h^ste humas m^ hustereisthai en m^deni charismati). Consecutive clause with \h“ste\ and the infinitive and the double negative. Come behind (\hustereisthai) is to be late (\husteros), old verb seen already in Mr 10:21; Mt 19:20. It is a wonderful record here recorded. But in 2Co 8:7-11; 9:1-7 Paul will have to complain that they have not paid their pledges for the collection, pledges made over a year before, a very modern complaint. {Waiting for the revelation} (\apekdechomenous t^n apokalupsin). This double compound is late and rare outside of Paul (1Co 1:7; Ga 5:5; Ro 8:19,23,25; Php 3:20), 1Pe 3:20; Heb 9:28. It is an eager expectancy of the second coming of Christ here termed revelation like the eagerness in \prosdechomenoi\ in Tit 2:13 for the same event. "As if that attitude of expectation were the highest posture that can be attained here by the Christian" (F.W. Robertson).

1:8 {Shall confirm} (\bebai“sei). Direct reference to the same word in verse 6. The relative \hos\ (who) points to Christ. {Unto the end} (\he“s telous). End of the age till Jesus comes, final preservation of the saints. {That ye be unreprouvable} (\anegkl'tous). Alpha privative and \egkale“, to accuse, old verbal, only in Paul in N.T. Proleptic adjective in the predicate accusative agreeing with \humas\ (you) without \h“ste\ and the infinitive as in 1Th 3:13; 5:23; Php 3:21. "Unimpeachable, for none will have the right to impeach" (Robertson and Plummer) as Paul shows in Ro 8:33; Col 1:22,28.

1:9 {God is faithful} (\pistos ho theos). This is the ground of Paul's confidence as he loves to say (1Th 5:24; 1Co 10:13; Ro 8:36; Php 1:16). God will do what he has promised. {Through whom} (\di' hou). God is the agent (\di') of their call as in Ro 11:36 and also the ground or reason for their call (\di' hon) in Heb 2:10. {Into the fellowship} (\eis koin“nian). Old word from \koin“nos\, partner for partnership, participation as here and 2Co 13:13f.; Php 2:1; 3:10. Then it means fellowship or intimacy as in Ac 2:42; Ga 2:9; 2Co 6:14; 1Jo 1:3,7. And particularly as shown by contribution as in 2Co 8:4; 9:13; Php 1:5. It is high fellowship with Christ both here and hereafter.

1:10 {Now I beseech you} (\parakal“ de humas). Old and common verb, over 100 times in N.T., to call to one's side. Corresponds here to \eucharist“, {I thank}, in verse 4. Direct appeal after the thanksgiving. {Through the name} (\dia tou onomatos). Genitive, not accusative (cause or reason), as the medium or instrument of the appeal (2Co 10:1; Ro 12:1; 15:30). {That}

(\hina\). Purport (sub-final) rather than direct purpose, common idiom in _Koin_, (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp.991-4) like Mt 14:36. Used here with \leg^{te}, ⁱ, ^{te} kat^{rtismenoi}\, though expressed only once. {All speak} (\leg^{te} pantes\). Present active subjunctive, that ye all keep on speaking. With the divisions in mind. An idiom from Greek political life (Lightfoot). This touch of the classical writers argues for Paul's acquaintance with Greek culture. {There be no divisions among you} (\m[^] ⁱ en humin schismata\). Present subjunctive, that divisions may not continue to be (they already had them). Negative statement of preceding idea. \Schisma\ is from \schiz[“]\, old word to split or rend, and so means a rent (Mt 9:16; Mr 2:21). Papyri use it for a splinter of wood and for ploughing. Here we have the earliest instance of its use in a moral sense of division, dissension, see also 1Co 11:18 where a less complete change than \haireseis\; 12:25; Joh 7:43 (discord); 9:16; 10:19. "Here, faction, for which the classical word is \stasis\; division within the Christian community" (Vincent). These divisions were over the preachers (1:12-4:21), immorality (5:1-13), going to law before the heathen (6:1-11), marriage (7:1-40), meats offered to idols (1Co 8-10), conduct of women in church (11:1-16), the Lord's Supper (11:17-34), spiritual gifts (1Co 12-14), the resurrection (1Co 15). {But that ye be perfected together} (\^{te} de kat^{rtismenoi}\). Periphrastic perfect passive subjunctive. See this verb in Mt 4:21 (Mr 1:19) for mending torn nets and in moral sense already in 1Th 3:10. Galen uses it for a surgeon's mending a joint and Herodotus for composing factions. See 2Co 13:11; Ga 6:1. {Mind} (\noi\), {judgment} (\gn[“]mⁱ\). "Of these words \nous\ denotes the frame or state of mind, \gn[“]m[^]\ the judgment, opinion or sentiment, which is the outcome of \nous\" (Lightfoot).

1:11 {For it hath been signified unto me} (\ed^l[“]th[^] gar moi\). First aorist passive indicative of \d[^]lo[“]\ and difficult to render into English. Literally, It was signified to me. {By them of Chloe} (\hupo t[“]n Chlo^s\). Ablative case of the masculine plural article \t[“]n\, by the (folks) of Chloe (genitive case). The words "which are of the household" are not in the Greek, though they correctly interpret the Greek, "those of Chloe." Whether the children, the kinspeople, or the servants of Chloe we do not know. It is uncertain also whether Chloe lived in Corinth or Ephesus, probably Ephesus because to name her if in Corinth might get her into trouble (Heinrici). Already Christianity was working a social revolution in the position of women and slaves. The name {Chloe} means tender verdure and was one of the epithets of Demeter the goddess of agriculture and for that reason Lightfoot thinks that she was a member of the freedman class like Phoebe (Ro 16:1), Hermes (Ro 16:14), Nereus (Ro 16:15). It is even possible that Stephanas, Fortunatus, Achaicus (1Co 16:17) may have been those who brought Chloe the news of the schisms in Corinth. {Contentions} (\erides\). Unseemly wranglings (as opposed to discussing, \dialegomai) that were leading to the {schisms}. Listed in works of the flesh (Ga 5:19f.) and the catalogues of vices (2Co 12:20; Ro 1:19f.; 1Ti 6:4).

1:12 {Now this I mean} (\leg“ de touto\). Explanatory use of \leg“\. Each has his party leader. \Apoll“\ is genitive of \Apoll“s\ (Ac 18:24), probably abbreviation of \Apoll“nius\ as seen in Codex Bezae for Ac 18:24. See on Acts for discussion of this "eloquent Alexandrian" (Ellicott), whose philosophical and oratorical preaching was in contrast "with the studied plainness" of Paul (1Co 2:1; 2Co 10:10). People naturally have different tastes about styles of preaching and that is well, but Apollos refused to be a party to this strife and soon returned to Ephesus and refused to go back to Corinth (1Co 16:12). \C`phf\ is the genitive of \C`phfs\, the Aramaic name given Simon by Jesus (Joh 1:42), \Petros\ in Greek. Except in Ga 2:7,8 Paul calls him Cephas. He had already taken his stand with Paul in the Jerusalem Conference (Ac 15:7-11; Ga 2:7-10). Paul had to rebuke him at Antioch for his timidity because of the Judaizers (Ga 2:11-14), but, in spite of Baur's theory, there is no evidence of a schism in doctrine between Paul and Peter. If 2Pe 3:15f. be accepted as genuine, as I do, there is proof of cordial relations between them and 1Co 9:5 points in the same direction. But there is no evidence that Peter himself visited Corinth. Judaizers came and pitted Peter against Paul to the Corinthian Church on the basis of Paul's rebuke of Peter in Antioch. These Judaizers made bitter personal attacks on Paul in return for their defeat at the Jerusalem Conference. So a third faction was formed by the use of Peter's name as the really orthodox wing of the church, the gospel of the circumcision. {And I of Christ} (\eg“ de Christou\). Still a fourth faction in recoil from the partisan use of Paul, Apollos, Cephas, with "a spiritually proud utterance" (Ellicott) that assumes a relation to Christ not true of the others. "Those who used this cry arrogated the common watchword as their _peculium_" (Findlay). This partisan use of the name of Christ may have been made in the name of unity against the other three factions, but it merely added another party to those existing. In scouting the names of the other leaders they lowered the name and rank of Christ to their level.

1:13 {Is Christ divided?} (\memeristai ho Christos;). Perfect passive indicative, Does Christ stand divided? It is not certain, though probable, that this is interrogative like the following clauses. Hofmann calls the assertory form a "rhetorical impossibility." The absence of \m^ here merely allows an affirmative answer which is true. The fourth or Christ party claimed to possess Christ in a sense not true of the others. Perhaps the leaders of this Christ party with their arrogant assumptions of superiority are the false apostles, ministers of Satan posing as angels of light (2Co 11:12-15). {Was Paul crucified for you?} (\M^ Paulos estaur^th^ huper hum^an;). An indignant "No" is demanded by \m^. Paul shows his tact by employing himself as the illustration, rather than Apollos or Cephas. Probably \huper, over, in behalf of, rather than \peri (concerning, around) is genuine, though either makes good sense here. In the _Koin_, \huper encroaches on \peri as in 2Th 2:1. {Were ye baptized into the name of Paul?} (\eis to onoma Paulou ebaptisth^te;). It is unnecessary to say {into} for \eis rather than {in} since \eis is the same preposition originally as \en and both are used with \baptiz^ as in Ac 8:16; 10:48 with no difference in idea (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 592). Paul evidently knows the idea in Mt 28:19 and scouts the notion of being put on a par with Christ or the Trinity. He is no rival of Christ. This use of \onoma for the person is not only in the LXX, but the papyri, ostraca, and inscriptions give numerous examples of the name of the king or the god for the power and authority of the king or god (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 146ff., 196ff.; _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 121).

1:14 {I thank God} (\eucharist^ t^i the^i). See verse 4, though uncertain if \t^i the^i is genuine here. {Save Crispus and Gaius} (\ei m^ Krispon kai Gaion). Crispus was the ruler of the synagogue in Corinth before his conversion (Ac 18:8), a Roman cognomen, and Gaius a Roman praenomen, probably the host of Paul and of the whole church in Corinth (Ro 16:23), possibly though not clearly the hospitable Gaius of 3Jo 1:5,6. The prominence and importance of these two may explain why Paul baptized them.

1:15 {Lest any man should say} (\hina m[^] tis eip[^]i\). Certainly sub-final \hina\ again or contemplated result as in 7:29; Joh 9:2. Ellicott thinks that already some in Corinth were laying emphasis on the person of the baptizer whether Peter or some one else. It is to be recalled that Jesus himself baptized no one (Joh 4:2) to avoid this very kind of controversy. And yet there are those today who claim Paul as a sacramentalist, an impossible claim in the light of his words here.

1:16 {Also the household of Stephanas} (\kai ton Stephanf oikon\). Mentioned as an afterthought. Robertson and Plummer suggest that Paul's amanuensis reminded him of this case. Paul calls him a first-fruit of Achaia (1Co 16:15) and so earlier than Crispus and he was one of the three who came to Paul from Corinth (16:17), clearly a family that justified Paul's personal attention about baptism. {Besides} (\loipon\). Accusative of general reference, "as for anything else." Added to make clear that he is not meaning to omit any one who deserves mention. See also 1Th 4:1; 1Co 4:2; 2Co 13:11; 2Ti 4:8. Ellicott insists on a sharp distinction from \to loipon\ "as for the rest" (2Th 3:1; Php 3:1; 4:8; Eph 6:10). Paul casts no reflection on baptism, for he could not with his conception of it as the picture of the new life in Christ (Ro 6:2-6), but he clearly denies here that he considers baptism essential to the remission of sin or the means of obtaining forgiveness.

1:17 {For Christ sent me not to baptize} (\ou gar apesteilen me Christos baptizein\). The negative \ou\ goes not with the infinitive, but with \apesteilen\ (from \apostell[^]“, apostolos, apostle). {For Christ did not send me to be a baptizer} (present active infinitive, linear action) like John the Baptist. {But to preach the gospel} (\alla euaggelizesthai\). This is Paul's idea of his mission from Christ, as Christ's apostle, to be {a gospelizer}. This led, of course, to baptism, as a result, but Paul usually had it done by others as Peter at Caesarea ordered the baptism to be done, apparently by the six brethren with him (Ac 10:48). Paul is fond of this late Greek verb from \euaggelion\ and sometimes uses both verb and substantive as in 1Co 15:1 "the gospel which I gospelized unto you." {Not in wisdom of words} (\ouk en sophifi logou\). Note \ou\, not \m[^]\ (the subjective negative), construed with \apesteilen\ rather than the infinitive. Not in wisdom of speech (singular). Preaching was Paul's forte, but it was not as a pretentious philosopher or professional rhetorician that Paul appeared before the Corinthians (1Co 2:1-5). Some who followed Apollos may have been guilty of a fancy for external show, though Apollos was not a mere performer and juggler with words. But the Alexandrian method as in Philo did run to dialectic subtleties and luxuriant rhetoric (Lightfoot). {Lest the cross of Christ should be made void} (\hina m^ ken“th^i ho stauros tou Christou\). Negative purpose (\hina m^\) with first aorist passive subjunctive, effective aorist, of \keno“, old verb from \kenos\, to make empty. In Paul's preaching the Cross of Christ is the central theme. Hence Paul did not fall into the snare of too much emphasis on baptism nor into too little on the death of Christ. "This expression shows clearly the stress which St. Paul laid on the death of Christ, not merely as a great moral spectacle, and so the crowning point of a life of self-renunciation, but as in itself the ordained instrument of salvation" (Lightfoot).

1:18 {For the word of the cross} (\ho logos gar ho tou staurou\). Literally, "for the preaching (with which I am concerned as the opposite of {wisdom of word} in verse 17) that (repeated article \ho\, almost demonstrative) of the cross." "Through this incidental allusion to preaching St. Paul passes to a new subject. The discussions in the Corinthian Church are for a time forgotten, and he takes the opportunity of correcting his converts for their undue exaltation of human eloquence and wisdom" (Lightfoot). {To them that are perishing} (\tois men apollumenois\). Dative of disadvantage (personal interest). Present middle participle is here timeless, those in the path to destruction (not annihilation. See 2Th 2:10). Cf. 2Co 4:3. {Foolishness} (\m“ria\). Folly. Old word from \m“ros\, foolish. In N.T. only in 1Co 1:18,21,23; 2:14; 3:19. {But unto us which are being saved} (\tois s“zomenois h^min\). Sharp contrast to those that are perishing and same construction with the articular participle. No reason for the change of pronouns in English. This present passive participle is again timeless. Salvation is described by Paul as a thing done in the past, "we were saved" (Ro 8:24), as a present state, "ye have been saved" (Ep 2:5), as a process, "ye are being saved" (1Co 15:2), as a future result, "thou shalt be saved" (Ro 10:9). {The power of God} (\dunamis theou\). So in Ro 1:16. No other message has this dynamite of God (1Co 4:20). God's power is shown in the preaching of the Cross of Christ through all the ages, now as always. No other preaching wins men and women from sin to holiness or can save them. The judgment of Paul here is the verdict of every soul winner through all time.

1:19 {I will destroy} (\apol“). Future active indicative of \apollumi. Attic future for \apoles“. Quotation from Isa 29:14 (LXX). The failure of worldly statesmanship in the presence of Assyrian invasion Paul applies to his argument with force. The wisdom of the wise is often folly, the understanding of the understanding is often rejected. There is such a thing as the ignorance of the learned, the wisdom of the simple-minded. God's wisdom rises in the Cross sheer above human philosophizing which is still scoffing at the Cross of Christ, the consummation of God's power.

1:20 {Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?} (\Pou sophos; pou grammateus; pou sunz^t^t^s tou ai“nos toutou;). Paul makes use of Isa 33:18 without exact quotation. The sudden retreat of Sennacherib with the annihilation of his officers. "On the tablet of Shalmaneser in the Assyrian Gallery of the British Museum there is a surprisingly exact picture of the scene described by Isaiah" (Robertson and Plummer). Note the absence of the Greek article in each of these rhetorical questions though the idea is clearly definite. Probably \sophos refers to the Greek philosopher, \grammateus to the Jewish scribe and \sunz^t^t^s suits both the Greek and the Jewish disputant and doubter (Ac 6:9; 9:29; 17:18; 28:29). There is a note of triumph in these questions. The word \sunz^t^t^s occurs here alone in the N.T. and elsewhere only in Ignatius, Eph. 18 quoting this passage, but the papyri give the verb \sunz^te“ for disputing (questioning together). {Hath not God made foolish?} (\ouchi em“ranen ho theos;). Strong negative form with aorist active indicative difficult of precise translation, "Did not God make foolish?" The old verb \m“rain“ from \m“ros, foolish, was to be foolish, to act foolish, then to prove one foolish as here or to make foolish as in Ro 1:22. In Mt 5:13; Lu 14:34 it is used of salt that is tasteless. {World} (\kosmou). Synonymous with \ai“n (age), orderly arrangement, then the non-Christian cosmos.

1:21 {Seeing that} (\epeid^“). Since (\epeid\ and \d^“) with explanatory \gar. {Through its wisdom} (\dia t^s sophias). Article here as possessive. The two wisdoms contrasted. {Knew not God} (\ouk egn“). Failed to know, second aorist (effective) active indicative of \gin“sk“, solemn dirge of doom on both Greek philosophy and Jewish theology that failed to know God. Has modern philosophy done better? There is today even a godless theology (Humanism). "Now that God's wisdom has reduced the self-wise world to ignorance" (Findlay). {Through the foolishness of the preaching} (\dia t^s m[“]rias tou k[^]rugmatos\). Perhaps "proclamation" is the idea, for it is not \k[^]ruxis\, the act of heralding, but \k[^]rugma\, the message heralded or the proclamation as in verse 23. The metaphor is that of the herald proclaiming the approach of the king (Mt 3:1; 4:17). See also \k[^]rugma\ in 1Co 2:4; 2Ti 4:17. The proclamation of the Cross seemed foolishness to the wiseacres then (and now), but it is consummate wisdom, God's wisdom and good-pleasure (\eudok[^]san\). The foolishness of preaching is not the preaching of foolishness. {To save them that believe} (\s[“]sai tous pisteuontas\). This is the heart of God's plan of redemption, the proclamation of salvation for all those who trust Jesus Christ on the basis of his death for sin on the Cross. The mystery-religions all offered salvation by initiation and ritual as the Pharisees did by ceremonialism. Christianity reaches the heart directly by trust in Christ as the Saviour. It is God's wisdom.

1:22 {Seeing that} (\epeid[^]\). Resumes from verse 21. The structure is not clear, but probably verses 23,24 form a sort of conclusion or apodosis to verse 22 the protasis. The resumptive, almost inferential, use of \de\ like \alla\ in the apodosis is not unusual. {Ask for signs} (\s[^]meia aitousin\). The Jews often came to Jesus asking for signs (Mt 12:38; 16:1; Joh 6:30). {Seek after wisdom} (\sophian z[^]tousin\). "The Jews claimed to _possess_ the truth: the Greeks were seekers, _speculators_" (Vincent) as in Ac 17:23.

1:23 {But we preach Christ crucified} (\h[^]meis de k[^]russomen Christon estaur[“]menon\). Grammatically stated as a partial result (\de\ of the folly of both Jews and Greeks, actually in sharp contrast. We proclaim, "we do not discuss or dispute" (Lightfoot). Christ (Messiah) as crucified, as in 2:2; Ga 3:1, "not a sign-shower nor a philosopher" (Vincent). Perfect passive participle of \stauro[“]\. {Stumbling-block} (\skandalon\). Papyri examples mean trap or snare which here tripped the Jews who wanted a conquering Messiah with a world empire, not a condemned and crucified one (Mt 27:42; Lu 24:21). {Foolishness} (\m[“]rian\). Folly as shown by their conduct in Athens (Ac 17:32).

1:24 {But to them that are called} (\autois de tois kl^{tois}\). Dative case, to the called themselves. {Christ} (\Christon\). Accusative case repeated, object of \k^{russomen}\, both {the power of God} (\theou dunamin\) and {the wisdom of God} (\theou sophian\). No article, but made definite by the genitive. Christ crucified is God's answer to both Jew and Greek and the answer is understood by those with open minds.

1:25 {The foolishness of God} (\to m^{ron} tou theou\). Abstract neuter singular with the article, the foolish act of God (the Cross as regarded by the world). {Wiser than men} (\soph^{teron} tⁿ anthr^pn\). Condensed comparison, wiser than the wisdom of men. Common Greek idiom (Mt 5:20; Joh 5:36) and quite forcible, brushes all men aside. {The weakness of God} (\to asthenes tou theou\). Same idiom here, {the weak act of God}, as men think, {is stronger} (\ischuroteron\). The Cross seemed God's defeat. It is conquering the world and is the mightiest force on earth.

1:26 {Behold} (\blepete\). Same form for imperative present active plural and indicative. Either makes sense as in Joh 5:39 \eraunate\ and 14:1 \pisteuete\. {Calling} (\kl^{sin}\). The act of calling by God, based not on the external condition of those called (\kl^{toi}\, verse 2), but on God's sovereign love. It is a clinching illustration of Paul's argument, an _argumentum ad hominen_. {How that} (\hoti\). Explanatory apposition to \kl^{sin}\. {After the flesh} (\kata sarka\). According to the standards of the flesh and to be used not only with \sophoi\ (wise, philosophers), but also \dunatoi\ (men of dignity and power), \eugeneis\ (noble, high birth), the three claims to aristocracy (culture, power, birth). {Are called}. Not in the Greek, but probably to be supplied from the idea in \kl^{sin}\.

1:27 {God chose} (\exelexato ho theos\). First aorist middle of \ekleg^a\, old verb to pick out, to choose, the middle for oneself. It expands the idea in \kl^{sin}\ (verse 26). Three times this solemn verb occurs here with the purpose stated each time. Twice the same purpose is expressed, {that he might put to shame} (\hina kataischunⁱ\, first aorist active subjunctive with hina\ of old verb kataischun^a\, perfective use of kata). The purpose in the third example is {that he might bring to naught} (\hina katarg^si\, make idle, argos\, rare in old Greek, but frequent in Paul). The contrast is complete in each paradox: {the foolish things} (\ta m^{ra}\), {the wild men} (\tous sophous\);

{the weak things} (\ta asthen^), {the strong things} (\ta ischura); {the things that are not} (\ta m^ onta), {and that are despised} (\ta exouthen^mena, considered nothing, perfect passive participle of \exouthene^), {the things that are} (\ta onta). It is a studied piece of rhetoric and powerfully put.

1:29 {That no flesh should glory before God} (\hop^s m^ kauch^s^tai pfsa sarx en^pion tou theou). This is the further purpose expressed by \hop^s for variety and appeals to God's ultimate choice in all three instances. The first aorist middle of the old verb \kauchaomai, to boast, brings out sharply that not a single boast is to be made. The papyri give numerous examples of \en^pion as a preposition in the vernacular, from adjective \en^pious, in the eye of God. One should turn to 2Co 4:7 for Paul's further statement about our having this treasure in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us.

1:30 {Of him} (\ex autou). Out of God. He chose you. {In Christ Jesus} (\en Christ^i I^sou). In the sphere of Christ Jesus the choice was made. This is God's wisdom. {Who was made unto us wisdom from God} (\hos egen^th^ sophia h^min apo theou). Note \egen^th^, became (first aorist passive and indicative), not \^n, was, the Incarnation, Cross, and Resurrection. Christ is the wisdom of God (Co 2:2f.) "both righteousness and sanctification and redemption" (\dikaiousun^ te kai hagianismos kai apolutr^sis), as is made plain by the use of \te--kai--kai. The three words (\dikaiousun^, hagianismos, apolutr^sis) are thus shown to be an epexegetical of \sophia (Lightfoot). All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge in Christ Jesus. We are made righteous, holy, and redeemed in Christ Jesus. Redemption comes here last for emphasis though the foundation of the other two. In Ro 1:17 we see clearly Paul's idea of the God kind of righteousness (\dikaiousun^) in Christ. In Ro 3:24 we have Paul's conception of redemption (\apolutr^sis, setting free as a ransomed slave) in Christ. In Ro 6:19 we have Paul's notion of holiness or sanctification (\hagianismos) in Christ. These great theological terms will call for full discussion in Romans, but they must not be overlooked here. See also Ac 10:35; 24:25; 1Th 4:3-7; 1Co 1:2.

1:31 {That} (\hina). Probably ellipse (\gen^tai to be supplied) as is common in Paul's Epistles (2Th 2:3; 2Co 8:13; Ga 1:20; 2:9; Ro 4:16; 13:1; 15:3). Some explain the imperative \kauchasth“\ as an anacoluthon. The shortened quotation is from Jer 9:24. Deissmann notes the importance of these closing verses concerning the origin of Paul's congregations from the lower classes in the large towns as "one of the most important historical witnesses to Primitive Christianity" (New Light on the N.T., p. 7; Light from the Ancient East, pp. 7, 14, 60, 142).

2:1 {Not with excellency of speech or of wisdom} (\ou kath' huperochⁿ logou [^] sophias\). \Huperochⁿ\ is an old word from the verb \huperechⁿ\ (Php 4:7) and means preeminence, rising above. In N.T. only here and 1Ti 2:2 of magistrates. It occurs in inscriptions of Pergamum for persons of position (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 255). Here it means excess or superfluity, "not in excellence of rhetorical display or of philosophical subtlety" (Lightfoot). {The mystery of God} (\to mustⁿ rion tou theou\). So Aleph A C Copt. like 2:7, but B D L P read \marturion\ like 1:6. Probably {mystery} is correct. Christ crucified is the mystery of God (Col 2:2). Paul did not hesitate to appropriate this word in common use among the mystery religions, but he puts into it his ideas, not those in current use. It is an old word from \mueⁿ\, to close, to shut, to initiate (Php 4:12). This mystery was once hidden from the ages (Col 1:26), but is now made plain in Christ (1Co 2:7; Ro 16:25f.). The papyri give many illustrations of the use of the word for secret doctrines known only to the initiated (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_).

2:2 {For I determined not to know anything among you} (\ou gar ekrina ti eidenai en humin\). Literally, "For I did not decide to know anything among you." The negative goes with \ekrina\, not with \ti\. Paul means that he did not think it fit or his business to know anything for his message beyond this "mystery of God." {Save Jesus Christ} (\ei mⁿ I^soun Christon\). Both the person and the office (Lightfoot). I had no intent to go beyond him and in particular, {and him crucified} (\kai touton estaurⁿ menon\). Literally, {and this one as crucified} (perfect passive participle). This phrase in particular (1:18) was selected by Paul from the start as the centre of his gospel message. He decided to stick to it even after Athens where he was practically laughed out of court. The Cross added to the \scandalon\ of the Incarnation, but Paul kept to the main track on coming to Corinth.

2:3 {I was with you} (\egenomⁿ pros humas\). Rather, "I came to you" (not ⁿ, was). "I not only eschewed all affectation of cleverness or grandiloquence, but I went to the opposite extreme of diffidence and nervous self-effacement" (Robertson and Plummer). Paul had been in prison in Philippi, driven out of Thessalonica and Beroea, politely bowed out of Athens. It is a human touch to see this shrinking as he faced the hard conditions in Corinth. It is a common feeling of the most effective preachers. Cool complacency is not the mood of the finest preaching. See \phobos\ (fear) and \tromos\ (trembling) combined in 2Co 7:15; Php 2:12; Eph 6:5.

2:4 {Not in persuasive words of wisdom} (\ouk en pithois sophias logois\). This looks like a false disclaimer or mock modesty, for surely the preacher desires to be persuasive. This adjective \pithos\ (MSS. \peithos) has not yet been found elsewhere. It seems to be formed directly from \peith\, to persuade, as \pheidon\ (\iphidos\) is from \pheidomai\, to spare. The old Greek form \pithanos\ is common enough and is used by Josephus (Ant. VIII. 9. 1) of "the plausible words of the lying prophet" in 1Ki 13. The kindred word \pithanologia\ occurs in Col 2:4 for the specious and plausible Gnostic philosophers. And gullible people are easy marks for these plausible pulpiteers. Corinth put a premium on the veneer of false rhetoric and thin thinking. {But in demonstration} (\all' en apodeixei\). In contrast with the {plausibility} just mentioned. This word, though an old one from \apodeiknumi\, to show forth, occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. {Spirit} (\pneuma\) here can be the Holy Spirit or inward spirit as opposed to superficial expression and {power} (\dunamis\) is moral power rather than intellectual acuteness (cf. 1:18).

2:5 {That your faith should not stand} (\hina h[^] pistis hum[^]n m[^]i\). Purpose of God, but \m[^]i\ is "not be" merely. The only secure place for faith to find a rest is in God's power, not in the wisdom of men. One has only to instance the changing theories of men about science, philosophy, religion, politics to see this. A sure word from God can be depended on.

2:6 {Among the perfect} (\en tois teleiois\). Paul is not here drawing a distinction between exoteric and esoteric wisdom as the Gnostics did for their initiates, but simply to the necessary difference in teaching for babes (3:1) and adults or grown men (common use of \teleios\ for relative perfection, for adults, as is in 1Co 14:20; Php 3:15; Eph 4:13; Heb 5:14). Some were simply old babes and unable in spite of their years to digest solid spiritual food, "the ample teaching as to the Person of Christ and the eternal purpose of God. Such 'wisdom' we have in the Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians especially, and in a less degree in the Epistle to the Romans. This 'wisdom' is discerned in the Gospel of John, as compared with the other Evangelists" (Lightfoot). These imperfect disciples Paul wishes to develop into spiritual maturity. {Of this world} (\(tou ai“nos toutou\)). This age, more exactly, as in 1:20. This wisdom does not belong to the passing age of fleeting things, but to the enduring and eternal (Ellicott). {Which are coming to naught} (\(t“n katargoumen“n\)). See on 1:28. Present passive participle genitive plural of \katarge“\ . The gradual nullification of these "rulers" before the final and certain triumph of the power of Christ in his kingdom.

2:7 {God's wisdom in a mystery} (\(theou sophian en must“ri“i\)). Two points are here sharply made. It is God's wisdom (note emphatic position of the genitive theou) in contrast to the wisdom of this age. Every age of the world has a conceit of its own and it is particularly true of this twentieth century, but God's wisdom is eternal and superior to the wisdom of any age or time. God's wisdom is alone absolute. See on 2:1 for mystery. It is not certain whether {in a mystery} is to be taken with {wisdom} or {we speak}. The result does not differ greatly, probably with {wisdom}, so long a secret and now at last revealed (Col 1:26; 2Th 2:7). {That hath been hidden} (\(t“n apokekrummen“n\)). See Ro 16:25; Col 1:26; Eph 3:5. Articular perfect passive participle of \apokrupt“\ , more precisely defining the indefinite \sophian\ (wisdom). {Foreordained before the worlds} (\(pro“risen pro t“n ai“n“n\)). This relative clause (\(h“n\)) defines still more closely God's wisdom. Note \pro\ with both verb and substantive (\(ai“n“n\)). Constative aorist of God's elective purpose as shown in Christ crucified (1Co 1:18-24). "It was no afterthought or change of plan" (Robertson and Plummer). {Unto our glory} (\(eis doxan h“m“n\)). "The glory of inward enlightenment as well as of outward exaltation" (Lightfoot).

2:8 {Knoweth} (\(egn“ken\)). Has known, has discerned, perfect active indicative of \gin“sk“\ . They have shown amazing ignorance of God's wisdom. {For had they known it} (\(ei gar egn“san\)). Condition of the second class, determined as unfulfilled, with aorist active indicative in both condition (\(egn“san\)) and conclusion with \an\ (ouk an estaur“san”). Peter in the great sermon at Pentecost commented on the "ignorance" (kata agnoian) of the Jews in crucifying Christ (Ac 3:17) as the only hope for repentance on their part (Ac 3:19). {The Lord of glory} (ton Kurion t^s dox^s). Genitive case \dox^s\, means characterized by glory, "bringing out the contrast between the indignity of the Cross (Heb 12:2) and the majesty of the Victim (Lu 22:69; 23:43)" (Robertson and Plummer). See Jas 2:1; Ac 7:2; Eph 1:17; Heb 9:5.

2:9 {But as it is written} (alla kath^s gegraptai). Elliptical sentence like Rom 15:3 where \gegonen\ (it has happened) can be supplied. It is not certain where Paul derives this quotation as Scripture. Origen thought it a quotation from the _Apocalypse of Elias_ and Jerome finds it also in the _Ascension of Isaiah_. But these books appear to be post-Pauline, and Jerome denies that Paul obtained it from these late apocryphal books. Clement of Rome finds it in the LXX text of Isa 64:4 and cites it as a Christian saying. It is likely that Paul here combines freely Isa 64:4; 65:17; 52:15 in a sort of catena or free chain of quotations as he does in Ro 3:10-18. There is also an anacoluthon for \ha\ (which things) occurs as the direct object (accusative) with \eiden\ (saw) and \^kkousan\ (heard), but as the subject (nominative) with \aneb[^]\ (entered, second aorist active indicative of anabain“, to go up). {Whatsoever} (hosa). A climax to the preceding relative clause (Findlay). {Prepared} (h[^]toimasen). First aorist active indicative of \hetoimaz“\.

The only instance where Paul uses this verb of God, though it occurs of final glory (Lu 2:31; Mt 20:23; 25:34; Mr 10:40; Heb 11:16) and of final misery (Mt 25:41). But here undoubtedly the dominant idea is the present blessing to these who love God (1Co 1:5-7). {Heart} (kardian) here as in Ro 1:21 is more than emotion. The Gnostics used this passage to support their teaching of esoteric doctrine as Hegesippus shows. Lightfoot thinks that probably the apocryphal _Ascension of Isaiah_ and _Apocalypse of Elias_ were Gnostic and so quoted this passage of Paul to support their position. But the next verse shows that Paul uses it of what is now {revealed} and made plain, not of mysteries still unknown.

2:10 {But unto us God revealed them} (h[^]min gar apekalupsen ho theos). So with \gar\ B 37 Sah Cop read instead of \de\ of Aleph A C D. "\De\ is superficially easier; \gar\ intrinsically better"

(Findlay). Paul explains why this is no longer hidden, "for God revealed unto us" the wonders of grace pictured in verse 9. We do not have to wait for heaven to see them. Hence we can utter those things hidden from the eye, the ear, the heart of man. This revelation (\apekalupsen, first aorist active indicative) took place, at "the entry of the Gospel into the world," not "when we were admitted into the Church, when we were baptized" as Lightfoot interprets it. {Through the Spirit} (\dia tou pneumatos). The Holy Spirit is the agent of this definite revelation of grace, a revelation with a definite beginning or advent (constative aorist), an unveiling by the Spirit where "human ability and research would not have sufficed" (Robertson and Plummer), "according to the revelation of the mystery" (Ro 16:25), "the revelation given to Christians as an event that began a new epoch in the world's history" (Edwards). {Searcheth all things} (\panta eraunfi). This is the usual form from A.D. 1 on rather than the old \erauna. The word occurs (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_) for a professional searcher's report and \eraun^tai, searchers for customs officials. "The Spirit is the organ of understanding between man and God" (Findlay). So in Ro 8:27 we have this very verb \erauna again of God's searching our hearts. The Holy Spirit not merely investigates us, but he searches "even the deep things of God" (\kai ta bath^ tou theou). _Profunda Dei_ (Vulgate). Cf. "the deep things of Satan" (Re 2:24) and Paul's language in Ro 11:33 "Oh the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God." Paul's point is simply that the Holy Spirit fully comprehends the depth of God's nature and his plans of grace and so is fully competent to make the revelation here claimed.

2:11 {Knoweth} (\oiden, egn^ken). Second perfect of root \id-, to see and so know, first perfect of \gin^sk-, to know by personal experience, has come to know and still knows. See First John for a clear distinction in the use of \oida and \gin^sk. {The spirit of man that is in him} (\to pneuma tou anthr^pou to en aut^i). The self-consciousness of man that resides in the man or woman (generic term for mankind, \anthr^pos). {The Spirit of God} (\to pneuma tou theou). Note the absence of \to en aut^i. It is not the mere self-consciousness of God, but the personal Holy Spirit in his relation to God the Father. Paul's analogy between the spirit of man and the Spirit of God does not hold clear through and he guards it at this vital point as he does elsewhere as in Ro 8:26 and in the full Trinitarian benediction in 2Co 13:13. \Pneuma\ in itself merely means breath or wind as in Joh 3:8. To know accurately Paul's use of the word in every instance calls for an adequate knowledge of his theology, and psychology. But the point here is plain. God's Holy Spirit is amply qualified to make the revelation claimed here in verses 6-10.

2:12 {But we} (\h^{meis} de). We Christians like {us} (\h^{min}) in verse 10 of the revelation, but particularly Paul and the other apostles. {Received} (\elabomen). Second aorist active indicative of \lamban“\ and so a definite event, though the constative aorist may include various stages. {Not the spirit of the world} (\ou to pneuma tou kosmou). Probably a reference to the wisdom of this age in verse 6. See also Ro 8:4,6,7; 1Co 11:4 (\the pneuma heteron). {But the spirit which is of God} (\alla to pneuma to ek theou). Rather, "from God" (\ek), which proceeds from God. {That we might know} (\hina eid“men). Second perfect subjunctive with \hina\ to express purpose. Here is a distinct claim of the Holy Spirit for understanding (illumination) the Revelation received. It is not a senseless rhapsody or secret mystery, but God expects us to understand "the things that are freely given us by God" (\ta hupo tou theou charisthenta h^{min}). First aorist passive neuter plural articular participle of \charizomai\, to bestow. God gave the revelation through the Holy Spirit and he gives us the illumination of the Holy Spirit to understand the mind of the Spirit. The tragic failures of men to understand clearly God's revealed will is but a commentary on the weakness and limitation of the human intellect even when enlightened by the Holy Spirit.

2:13 {Which things also we speak} (\ha kai laloumen). This onomatopoetic verb \lale“\ (from \la-la), to utter sounds. In the papyri the word calls more attention to the form of utterance while \leg“\ refers more to the substance. But \lale“\ in the N.T. as here is used of the highest and holiest speech. Undoubtedly Paul employs the word purposely for the utterance of the revelation which he has understood. That is to say, there is revelation (verse 10), illumination (verse 12), and inspiration (verse 13). Paul claims therefore the help of the Holy Spirit for the reception of the revelation, for the understanding of it, for the expression of it. Paul claimed this authority for his preaching (1Th 4:2) and for his epistles (2Th 3:14). {Not in words which man's wisdom teacheth} (\ouk en didaktois anthr“pin[^]s sophias logois”). Literally, "not in words taught by human wisdom." The verbal adjective \didaktois\ (from \didask“, to teach) is here passive in idea and is followed by the ablative case of origin or source as in Joh 6:45, \esontai pantes didaktoi theou\ (from Isa 54:13), "They shall all be taught by God." The ablative in Greek, as is well known, has the same form as the genitive, though quite different in idea (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 516). So then Paul claims the help of the Holy Spirit in the utterance (\laloumen\) of the words, "which the Spirit teacheth (\en didaktois pneumatos\), "in words taught by the Spirit" (ablative \pneumatos\ as above). Clearly Paul means that the help of the Holy Spirit in the utterance of the revelation extends to the words. No theory of inspiration is here stated, but it is not _mere_ human wisdom. Paul's own Epistles bear eloquent witness to the lofty claim here made. They remain today after nearly nineteen centuries throbbing with the power of the Spirit of God, dynamic with life for the problems of today as when Paul wrote them for the needs of the believers in his time, the greatest epistles of all time, surcharged with the energy of God. {Comparing spiritual things with spiritual} (\pneumatikois pneumatika sunkrinontes\). Each of these words is in dispute. The verb \sunkrin“, originally meant to combine, to join together fitly. In the LXX it means to interpret dreams (Ge 40:8,22; 41:12) possibly by comparison. In the later Greek it may mean to compare as in 2Co 10:12. In the papyri Moulton and Milligan (_Vocabulary_) give it only for "decide," probably after comparing. But "comparing," in spite of the translations, does not suit well here. So it is best to follow the original meaning to combine as do Lightfoot and Ellicott. But what gender is \pneumatikois\? Is it masculine or neuter like \pneumatika\? If masculine, the idea would be "interpreting (like LXX) spiritual truths to spiritual persons" or "matching spiritual truths with spiritual persons." This is a possible rendering and makes good sense in harmony with verse 14. If \pneumatikois\ be taken as neuter plural (associative instrumental case after \sun\ in \sunkrinontes\), the idea most naturally would be, "combining spiritual ideas (\pneumatika\) with spiritual words" (\pneumatikois\). This again makes good sense in harmony with the first part of verse 13. On the whole this is the most natural way to take it, though various other possibilities exist.

2:14 {Now the natural man} (\psuchikos de anthr“pos\). Note absence of article here, "A natural man" (an unregenerate man).

Paul does not employ modern psychological terms and he exercises variety in his use of all the terms here present as \pneuma\ and \pneumatikos, psuch^ and \psuchikos, sarx\ and \sarkinos\ and \sarkikos\.

A helpful discussion of the various uses of these words in the New Testament is given by Burton in his New Testament Word Studies, pp. 62-68, and in his {Spirit, Soul, and Flesh}. The papyri furnish so many examples of \sarx, pneuma\, and \psuch^ that Moulton and Milligan make no attempt at an exhaustive treatment, but give a few miscellaneous examples to illustrate the varied uses that parallel the New Testament.

\Psuchikos\ is a qualitative adjective from \psuch^ (breath of life like anima, life, soul). Here the Vulgate renders it by _animalis_ and the German by _sinnlich_, the original sense of animal life as in Jude 1:19; Jas 3:15. In 1Co 15:44,46 there is the same contrast between \psuchikos\ and \pneumatikos\ as here. The \psuchikos\ man is the unregenerate man while the \pneumatikos\ man is the renewed man, born again of the Spirit of God. {Receiveth not} (\ou dechetai\). Does not accept, rejects, refuses to accept. In Ro 8:7 Paul definitely states the inability (\oude gar dunatai\) of the mind of the flesh to receive the things of the Spirit untouched by the Holy Spirit. Certainly the initiative comes from God whose Holy Spirit makes it possible for us to accept the things of the Spirit of God. They are no longer "foolishness" (\m^ria\) to us as was once the case (1:23). Today one notes certain of the _intelligentsia_ who sneer at Christ and Christianity in their own blinded ignorance. {He cannot know them} (\ou dunatai gn^nai\). He is not able to get a knowledge (ingressive second aorist active infinitive of gin^sk^). His helpless condition calls for pity in place of impatience on our part, though such an one usually poses as a paragon of wisdom and commiserates the deluded followers of Christ. {They are spiritually judged} (\pneumatik^s anakrinetai\). Paul and Luke are fond of this verb, though nowhere else in the N.T. Paul uses it only in I Corinthians. The word means a sifting process to get at the truth by investigation as of a judge. In Ac 17:11 the Bereans scrutinized the Scriptures. These \psuchikoi\ men are incapable of rendering a decision for they are unable to recognize the facts. They judge by the \psuch^ (mere animal nature) rather than by the \pneuma\ (the renewed spirit).

2:15 {Judgeth all things} (\anakrinei panta\). The spiritual man (\ho pneumatikos\) is qualified to sift, to examine, to decide rightly, because he has the eyes of his heart enlightened (Eph 1:18) and is no longer blinded by the god of this world (2Co 4:4). There is a great lesson for Christians who know by personal experience the things of the Spirit of God. Men of intellectual gifts who are ignorant of the things of Christ talk learnedly and patronizingly about things of which they are grossly ignorant. The spiritual man is superior to all this false knowledge. {He himself is judged of no man} (\autos de hup' oudenos anakrinetai). Men will pass judgment on him, but the spiritual man refuses to accept the decision of his ignorant judges. He stands superior to them all as Polycarp did when he preferred to be burnt to saying, "Lord Caesar" in place of "Lord Jesus." He was unwilling to save his earthly life by the worship of Caesar in place of the Lord Jesus. Polycarp was a \pneumatikos man.

2:16 {For who hath known the mind of the Lord} (\Tis gar egn' noun Kurious). Quotation from Isa 40:13. {That he should instruct him} (\hos sunbibasei auton). This use of \hos (relative {who}) is almost consecutive (result). The \pneumatikos man is superior to others who attempt even to instruct God himself. See on \Ac 9:22; 16:10 for \sunbibaz', to make go together. {But we have the mind of Christ} (\h^meis de noun Christou echomen). As he has already shown (verses 6-13). Thus with the mind (\nous. Cf. Php 2:5; Ro 8:9,27). Hence Paul and all \pneumatikoi men are superior to those who try to shake their faith in Christ, the mystery of God. Paul can say, "I know him whom I have believed." "I believe; therefore I have spoken."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

3:1 {But as unto carnal} (\all' h"s sarkinois\). Latin _carneus_. "As men o' flesh," Braid Scots; "as worldlings," Moffatt. This form in \-inos\ like \lithinos\ in 2Co 3:3 means the material of flesh, "not on tablets of stone, but on fleshen tablets on hearts." So in Heb 7:16. But in Ro 7:14 Paul says, "I am fleshen (\sarkinos\) sold under sin," as if \sarkinos\ represented the extreme power of the \sarx\. Which does Paul mean here? He wanted to speak the wisdom of God among the adults (1Co 2:6), the spiritual (\hoi pneumatikoi\, 2:15), but he was unable to treat them as \pneumatikoi\ in reality because of their seditions and immoralities. It is not wrong to be \sarkinos\, for we all live in the flesh (\en sarki\, Ga 2:20), but we are not to live according to the flesh (\kata sarka\, Ro 8:12). It is not culpable to a babe in Christ (\n^pios\, 1Co 13:11), unless unduly prolonged (1Co 14:20; Heb 5:13f.). It is one of the tragedies of the minister's life that he has to keep on speaking to the church members "as unto babes in Christ" (\h"s n^piois en Christ"i\), who actually glory in their long babyhood whereas they ought to be teachers of the gospel instead of belonging to the cradle roll. Paul's goal was for all the babes to become adults (Col 1:28).

3:2 {I fed you with milk, not with meat} (\gala humas epotisa, ou br"ma\). Note two accusatives with the verb, \epotisa\, first aorist active indicative of \potiz"\, as with other causative verbs, that of the person and of the thing. In the LXX and the papyri the verb often means to irrigate. \Br"ma\ does not mean meat (flesh) as opposed to bread, but all solid food as in "meats and drinks" (Heb 9:7). It is a zeugma to use \epotisa\ with \br"ma\. Paul did not glory in making his sermons thin and watery. Simplicity does not require lack of ideas or dulness. It is pathetic to think how the preacher has to clip the wings of thought and imagination because the hearers cannot go with him. But nothing hinders great preaching like the dulness caused by sin on the part of auditors who are impatient with the high demands of the gospel.

3:3 {For ye are yet carnal} (\eti gar sarkikoi este\).

\Sarkikos\, unlike \sarkinos\, like \ikos\ formations, means adapted to, fitted for the flesh (\sax\), one who lives according to the flesh (\kata sarka\). Paul by \psuchikos\ describes the unregenerate man, by \pneumatikos\ the regenerate man. Both classes are \sarkinoi\ made in flesh, and both may be \sarkikoi\ though the \pneumatikoi\ should not be. The \pneumatikoi\ who continue to be \sarkinoi\ are still babes (\n^pioi\), not adults (\teleioi\), while those who are still \sarkikoi\ (carnal) have given way to the flesh as if they were still \psuchikoi\ (unregenerate). It is a bold and cutting figure, not without sarcasm, but necessary to reveal the Corinthians to themselves. {Jealousy and strife} (\z^los kai eris\). Zeal (\z^los\ from \ze^, to boil) is not necessarily evil, but good if under control. It may be not according to knowledge (Ro 10:2) and easily becomes jealousy (same root through the French jaloux) as zeal. Ardour may be like the jealousy of God (2Co 11:2) or the envy of men (Ac 5:17). \Eris\ is an old word, but used only by Paul in N.T. (see on 1Co 1:11). Wrangling follows jealousy. These two voices of the spirit are to Paul proof that the Corinthians are still \sarkikoi\ and walking according to men, not according to the Spirit of Christ.

3:4 {For when one saith} (\hotan gar leg^i tis\). Indefinite temporal clause with the present subjunctive of repetition (Robertson, Grammar, p. 972). Each instance is a case in point and proof abundant of the strife. {Of Paul} (\Paulou\). Predicate genitive, belong to Paul, on Paul's side. {Of Apollos} (\Apoll^). Same genitive, but the form is the so-called Attic second declension. See the nominative \Apoll^s\ in verse 5. {Men} (\anthr^poi\). Just mere human creatures (\anthr^poi\, generic term for mankind), in the flesh (\sarkinoi\), acting like the flesh (\sarkikoi\), not \pneumatikoi\, as if still \psuchikoi\). It was a home-thrust. Paul would not even defend his own partisans.

3:5 {What then?} (\ti oun;\). He does not say \tis\ (who), but \ti\ (what), neuter singular interrogative pronoun. {Ministers} (\diakonoi\). Not leaders of parties or sects, but merely servants through whom ye believed. The etymology of the word Thayer gives as \dia\ and \konis\ "raising dust by hastening." In the Gospels it is the servant (Mt 20:26) or waiter (Joh 2:5). Paul so describes himself as a minister (Col 1:23,25). The technical sense of deacon comes later (Php 1:1; 1Ti 3:8,12).

{As the Lord gave to him} (\h“s ho Kurios ed“ken). Hence no minister of the Lord like Apollos and Paul has any basis for pride or conceit nor should be made the occasion for faction and strife. This idea Paul enlarges upon through chapters 1Co 3; 4 and it is made plain in chapter 1Co 12.

3:6 {I planted} (\eg“ ephuteusa). First aorist active indicative of old verb \phuteu“. This Paul did as Luke tells us in Ac 18:1-18. {Apollos watered} (\Apoll“s epotisen). Apollos irrigated the church there as is seen in Ac 18:24-19:1. Another aorist tense as in verse 2. {But God gave the increase} (\alla ho theos ^uxanen). Imperfect tense here (active indicative) for the continuous blessing of God both on the work of Paul and Apollos, co-labourers with God in God's field (verse 9). Reports of revivals sometimes give the glory to the evangelist or to both evangelist and pastor. Paul gives it all to God. He and Apollos cooperated as successive pastors.

3:7 {So then neither--neither--but} (\H“ste oute--oute--all'). Paul applies his logic relentlessly to the facts. He had asked {what} (\ti) is Apollos or Paul (verse 5). The answer is here. {Neither is anything} (\ti) {the one who plants nor the one who waters}. God is the whole and we are not anything.

3:8 {Are one} (\hen eisin). The neuter singular again (\hen, not \heis) as with the interrogative \ti and the indefinite \ti. By this bold metaphor which Paul expands he shows how the planter and the waterer work together. If no one planted, the watering would be useless. If no one watered, the planting would come to naught as the dreadful drouth of 1930 testifies while these words are written. {According to his own labour} (\kata ton idion kopon). God will bestow to each the reward that his labour deserves. That is the pay that the preacher is sure to receive. He may get too little or too much here from men. But the due reward from God is certain and it will be adequate however ungrateful men may be.

3:9 {God's fellow-workers} (\theou sunergoi). This old word (co-workers of God) has a new dignity here. God is the major partner in the enterprise of each life, but he lets us work with him. Witness the mother and God with the baby as the product. {God's husbandry} (\theou ge“rgion). God's tilled land (\g^, ergon). The farmer works with God in God's field. Without the sun, the rains, the seasons the farmer is helpless. {God's building} (\theou oikodom^). God is the Great Architect. We work under him and carry out the plans of the Architect. It is building (\oikos\, house, \dem^, to build). Let us never forget that God sees and cares what we do in the part of the building where we work for him.

3:10 {As a wise masterbuilder} (\h^s sophos architekt^n\). Paul does not shirk his share in the work at Corinth with all the sad outcome there. He absolves Apollos from responsibility for the divisions. He denies that he himself is to blame. In doing so he has to praise himself because the Judaizers who fomented the trouble at Corinth had directly blamed Paul. It is not always wise for a preacher to defend himself against attack, but it is sometimes necessary. Factions in the church were now a fact and Paul went to the bottom of the matter. God gave Paul the grace to do what he did. This is the only New Testament example of the old and common word \architekt^n\, our architect. \Tekt^n\ is from \tik^, to beget, and means a begetter, then a worker in wood or stone, a carpenter or mason (Mt 13:55; Mr 6:3). \Archi- is an old inseparable prefix like \archaggelos\ (archangel), \archepiscopos\ (archbishop), \archiereus\ (chiefpriest). \Architekt^n\ occurs in the papyri and inscriptions in an even wider sense than our use of architect, sometimes of the chief engineers. But Paul means to claim primacy as pastor of the church in Corinth as is true of every pastor who is the architect of the whole church life and work. All the workmen (\tektones\, carpenters) work under the direction of the architect (Plato, _Statesman_, 259). "As a wise architect I laid a foundation" (\themelion eth^ka\). Much depends on the wisdom of the architect in laying the foundation. This is the technical phrase (Lu 6:48; 14:29), a cognate accusative for \themelion\. The substantive \themelion\ is from the same root \the\ as \eth^ka\ (\ti-th^mi\). We cannot neatly reproduce the idiom in English. "I placed a placing" does only moderately well. Paul refers directly to the events described by Luke in Ac 18:1-18. The aorist \eth^ka\ is the correct text, not the perfect \tetheika\.

{Another buildeth thereon} (\allos epoikodomei\). Note the preposition \epi\ with the verb each time (10,11,12,14). The successor to Paul did not have to lay a new foundation, but only to go on building on that already laid. It is a pity when the new pastor has to dig up the foundation and start all over again as if an earthquake had come.

{Take heed how he buildeth thereon} (\blepet^ p^s epoikodomei\).

The carpenters have need of caution how they carry out the plans of the original architect. Successive architects of great cathedrals carry on through centuries the original design. The result becomes the wonder of succeeding generations. There is no room for individual caprice in the superstructure.

3:11 {Other foundation} (\themelion allon). The gender of the adjective is here masculine as is shown by \allon. If neuter, it would be \allo. It is masculine because Paul has Christ in mind. It is not here \heteron a different kind of gospel (\heteron euaggelion, Ga 1:6; 2Co 11:4) which is not another (\allo, Ga 1:7) in reality. But another Jesus (2Co 11:4, \allon I'soun) is a reflection on the one Lord Jesus. Hence there is no room on the platform with Jesus for another Saviour, whether Buddha, Mahomet, Dowie, Eddy, or what not. Jesus Christ is the one foundation and it is gratuitous impudence for another to assume the role of Foundation. {Than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus} (\para ton keimenon, hos estin I'sous Christos). Literally, "alongside (\para) the one laid (\keimenon)," already laid (present middle participle of \keimai, used here as often as the perfect passive of \tithêmi\ in place of \tetheimenon). Paul scouts the suggestion that one even in the interest of so-called "new thought" will dare to lay beside Jesus another foundation for religion. And yet I have seen an article by a professor in a theological seminary in which he advocates regarding Jesus as a landmark, not as a goal, not as a foundation. Clearly Paul means that on this one true foundation, Jesus Christ, one must build only what is in full harmony with the Foundation which is Jesus Christ. If one accuses Paul of narrowness, it can be replied that the architect has to be narrow in the sense of building here and not there. A broad foundation will be too thin and unstable for a solid and abiding structure. It can be said also that Paul is here merely repeating the claim of Jesus himself on this very subject when he quoted Ps 118:22f. to the members of the Sanhedrin who challenged his authority (Mr 11:10f.; Mt 21:42-45; Lu 20:17f.). Apostles and prophets go into this temple of God, but Christ Jesus is the chief corner stone (\akrog "naios, Eph 2:20). All believers are living stones in this temple (1Pe 2:5). But there is only one foundation possible.

3:12 {Gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble} (\chrusion, argurion, lithous timious, xula, chorton, kalam^n).

The durable materials are three (gold, silver, marble or precious stones), perishable materials (pieces of wood, hay, stubble), "of a palace on the one hand, of a mud hut on the other" (Lightfoot). Gold was freely used by the ancients in their palaces. Their marble and granite pillars are still the wonder and despair of modern men. The wooden huts had hay (\chortos, grass, as in Mr 6:39) and stubble (\kalam^, old word for stubble after the grain is cut, here alone in the N.T., though in LXX as Ex 5:12) which were employed to hold the wood pieces together and to thatch the roof. It is not made clear whether Paul's metaphor refers to the persons as in God's building in verse 9 or to the character of the teaching as in verse 13. Probably both ideas are involved, for look at the penalty on shoddy work (verse 15) and shoddy men (verse 17). The teaching may not always be vicious and harmful. It may only be indifferent and worthless. A co-worker with God in this great temple should put in his very best effort.

3:13 {The day} (\h^ h^mera). The day of judgment as in 1Th 5:4 (which see), Ro 13:12; Heb 10:25. The work (\ergon) of each will be made manifest. There is no escape from this final testing. {It is revealed in fire} (\en puri apokaluptetai). Apparently "the day" is the subject of the verb, not the work, not the Lord. See 2Th 1:8; 2:8. This metaphor of fire was employed in the O.T. (Da 7:9f.; Mal 4:1) and by John the Baptist (Mt 3:12; Lu 3:16f.). It is a metaphor that must not be understood as purgatorial, but simple testing (Ellicott) as every fire tests ({the fire itself will test}, \to pur auto dokimasei) the quality of the material used in the building, {of what sort it is} (\hopoion estin), qualitative relative pronoun. Men today find, alas, that some of the fireproof buildings are not fireproof when the fire actually comes.

3:14 {If any man's work shall abide} (\ei tinos to ergon menei). Condition of the first class with future indicative, determined as fulfilled, assumed as true. When the fire has done its work, what is left? That is the fiery test that the work of each of us must meet. Suitable reward (Mt 20:8) will come for the work that stands this test (gold, silver, precious stones)

3:15 {Shall be burned} (\kataka^setai). First-class condition again, assumed as true. Second future (late form) passive indicative of \katakai^, to burn down, old verb. Note perfective use of preposition \kata, shall be burned down. We usually say

"burned up," and that is true also, burned up in smoke. {He shall suffer loss} (\z^mi"th^setai). First future passive indicative of \z^mi", old verb from \z^mia (damage, loss), to suffer loss. In Mt 16:26; Mr 8:36; Lu 9:25 the loss is stated to be the man's soul (\psuch^h^) or eternal life. But here there is no such total loss as that. The man's work (\ergon) is burned up (sermons, lectures, books, teaching, all dry as dust). {But he himself shall be saved} (\autos de s"th^setai). Eternal salvation, but not by purgatory. His work is burned up completely and hopelessly, but he himself escapes destruction because he is really a saved man a real believer in Christ. {Yet so as through fire} (\hout"s de h"s dia puros). Clearly Paul means with his work burned down (verse 15). It is the tragedy of a fruitless life, of a minister who built so poorly on the true foundation that his work went up in smoke. His sermons were empty froth or windy words without edifying or building power. They left no mark in the lives of the hearers. It is the picture of a wasted life. The one who enters heaven by grace, as we all do who are saved, yet who brings no sheaves with him. There is no garnered grain the result of his labours in the harvest field. There are no souls in heaven as the result of his toil for Christ, no enrichment of character, no growth in grace.

3:16 {Ye are a temple of God} (\naos theou este). Literally, a sanctuary (\naos, not \hieron\, the sacred enclosure, but the holy place and the most holy place) of God. The same picture of building as in verse 9 (\oikodom^h^), only here the sanctuary itself. {Dwelleth in you} (\en humin oikei). The Spirit of God makes his home (\oikei) in us, not in temples made with hands (Ac 7:48; 17:24).

3:17 {Destroyeth} (\phtheirei). The outward temple is merely the symbol of God's presence, the Shechinah (the Glory). God makes his home in the hearts of his people or the church in any given place like Corinth. It is a terrible thing to tear down ruthlessly a church or temple of God like an earthquake that shatters a building in ruins. This old verb \phtheir" means to corrupt, to deprave, to destroy. It is a gross sin to be a church-wrecker. There are actually a few preachers who leave behind them ruin like a tornado in their path. {Him shall God destroy} (\phtherei touton ho theos). There is a solemn repetition of the same verb in the future active indicative. The condition is the first class and is assumed to be true. Then the punishment is certain and equally effective. The church-wrecker God will wreck. What does Paul mean by "will destroy"? Does he mean punishment here or hereafter? May it not be both? Certainly he does not mean annihilation of the man's soul, though it may well include eternal punishment. There is warning enough here to make every pastor pause before he tears a church to pieces in order to vindicate himself. {Holy} (\hagios\). Hence deserves reverential treatment. It is not the building or house of which Paul speaks as "the sanctuary of God" (\ton naon tou theou\), but the spiritual organization or organism of God's people in whom God dwells, "which temple ye are" (\hoitines este humeis\). The qualitative relative pronoun \hoitines\ is plural to agree with \humeis\ (ye) and refers to the holy temple just mentioned. The Corinthians themselves in their angry disputes had forgotten their holy heritage and calling, though this failing was no excuse for the ringleaders who had led them on. In 6:19 Paul reminds the Corinthians again that the body is the temple (\naos\, sanctuary) of the Holy Spirit, which fact they had forgotten in their immoralities.

3:18 {Let no man deceive himself} (\M^deis heauton exapat\). A warning that implied that some of them were guilty of doing it (\m^ and the present imperative). Excited partisans can easily excite themselves to a pious phrenzy, hypnotize themselves with their own supposed devotion to truth. {Thinketh that he is wise} (\dokei sophos einai\). Condition of first class and assumed to be true. Predicate nominative \sophos\ with the infinitive to agree with subject of \dokei\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1038). Paul claimed to be "wise" himself in verse 10 and he desires that the claimant to wisdom may become wise (\hina gen^tai sophos\, purpose clause with \hina\ and subjunctive) by becoming a fool (\m^ros genesth\, second aorist middle imperative of \ginomai) as this age looks at him. This false wisdom of the world (1:18-20,23; 2:14), this self-conceit, has led to strife and wrangling. Cut it out.

3:19 {Foolishness with God} (\m^ria para t^i the^i\). Whose standard does a church (temple) of God wish, that of this world or of God? The two standards are not the same. It is a pertinent inquiry with us all whose idea rules in our church. Paul quotes Job 5:13. {That taketh} (\ho drassomenos\). Old verb \drassomai\, to grasp with the hand, is used here for the less vivid word in the LXX \katalamban^i\). It occurs nowhere else in the N.T., but appears in the papyri to lay hands on. Job is quoted in the N.T. only here and in Ro 11:35 and both times with variations from the LXX. This word occurs in Ecclesiasticus 26:7; 34:2. In Ps 2:12 the LXX has \draxasthe paideias\, lay hold on instruction. {Craftiness} (\panourgifi\). The \panourgos\ man is ready for any or all work (if bad enough). So it means versatile cleverness (Robertson and Plummer), _astutia_ (Vulgate).

3:20 {And again} (\kai palin\). Another confirmatory passage from Ps 94:11. {Reasonings} (\dialogismous\). More than _cogitationes_ (Vulgate), sometimes disputations (Php 2:14). Paul changes "men" of LXX to wise (\soph“n) in harmony with the Hebrew context. {Vain} (\mataioi\). Useless, foolish, from \mat^, a futile attempt.

3:21 {Wherefore let no one glory in men} (\h“ste m^deis kauchasth“ en anthr“pois\). The conclusion (\h“ste\) from the self-conceit condemned. This particle here is merely inferential with no effect on the construction (\h“s+te\ = and so) any more than \oun\ would have, a paratactic conjunction. There are thirty such examples of \h“ste\ in the N.T., eleven with the imperative as here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 999). The spirit of glorying in party is a species of self-conceit and inconsistent with glorying in the Lord (1:31).

3:22 {Yours} (\hum“n\). Predicate genitive, belong to you. All the words in this verse and 23 are anarthrous, though not indefinite, but definite. The English reproduces them all properly without the definite article except \kosmos\ (the world), and even here just world will answer. Proper names do not need the article to be definite nor do words for single objects like world, life, death. Things present (\enest“ta\, second perfect participle of \enist^mi\)) and things to come divide two classes. Few of the finer points of Greek syntax need more attention than the absence of the article. We must not think of the article as "omitted" (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 790). The wealth of the Christian includes all things, all leaders, past, present, future, Christ, and God. There is no room for partisan wrangling here.

4:1 {Ministers of Christ} (\hup^{retas} Christou\). Paul and all ministers (\diakonous\) of the New Covenant (1Co 3:5) are under-rowers, subordinate rowers of Christ, only here in Paul's Epistles, though in the Gospels (Lu 4:20 the attendant in the synagogue) and the Acts (Ac 13:5) of John Mark. The {so} (\hout^s\) gathers up the preceding argument (3:5-23) and applies it directly by the {as} (\h^s\) that follows. {Stewards of the mysteries of God} (\oikonomos must^{ri}ⁿ theou\). The steward or house manager (\oikos\, house, \nem^a\, to manage, old word) was a slave (\doulos\) under his lord (\kurios\, Lu 12:42), but a master (Lu 16:1) over the other slaves in the house (menservants \paidas\, maidservants \paidiskas\ Lu 12:45), an overseer (\epitropos\) over the rest (Mt 20:8). Hence the under-rower (\hup^{ret}^s\) of Christ has a position of great dignity as steward (\oikonomos\) of the mysteries of God. Jesus had expressly explained that the mysteries of the kingdom were open to the disciples (Mt 13:11). They were entrusted with the knowledge of some of God's secrets though the disciples were not such apt pupils as they claimed to be (Mt 13:51; 16:8-12). As stewards Paul and other ministers are entrusted with the mysteries (see on 1Co 2:7 for this word) of God and are expected to teach them. "The church is the \oikos\ (1Ti 3:15), God the \oikodespot^s\ (Mt 13:52), the members the \oikeioi\ (Ga 6:10; Eph 2:19)" (Lightfoot). Paul had a vivid sense of the dignity of this stewardship (\oikonomia\) of God given to him (Col 1:25; Eph 1:10). The ministry is more than a mere profession or trade. It is a calling from God for stewardship.

4:2 {Here} (\h^{de}\). Either here on earth or in this matter. It is always local. {Moreover} (\loipon\). Like \loipon\ in 1:16 which see, accusative of general reference, as for what is left, besides. {It is required} (\z^{teitai}\). It is sought. Many MSS. read \z^{teite}\, ye seek, an easy change as \ai\ and \e\ came to be pronounced alike (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 186). {That a man be found faithful} (\hina pistos tis heurethⁱ\). Non-final use of \hina\ with first aorist passive subjunctive of \heurisk^a\, the result of the seeking (\z^{te}^a\). Fidelity is the essential requirement in all such human relationships, in other words, plain honesty in handling money like bank-clerks or in other positions of trust like public office.

4:3 {But with me} (emoi de\). The ethical dative of personal relation and interest, "as I look at my own case." Cf. Php 1:21. {It is a very small thing} (eis elachiston estin\). This predicate use of \eis\ is like the Hebrew, but it occurs also in the papyri. The superlative \elachiston\ is elative, very little, not the true superlative, least. "It counts for very little with me." {That I should be judged of you} (hina huph' hum“n anakrith“\). Same use of \hina\ as in verse 2. For the verb (first aorist passive subjunctive of anakrin“\) see on 1Co 2:14f. Paul does not despise public opinion, but he denies "the competency of the tribunal" in Corinth (Robertson and Plummer) to pass on his credentials with Christ as his Lord. {Or of man's judgement} (hupo anthr“pin's h'meras\). Or "by human day," in contrast to the Lord's Day (der Tag) in 3:13. "That_ is the tribunal which the Apostle recognizes; a _human_ tribunal he does not care to satisfy" (Robertson and Plummer). {Yea, I judge not mine own self} (all' oude emauton anakrin“\). \Alla\ here is confirmatory, not adversative. "I have often wondered how it is that every man sets less value on his own opinion of himself than on the opinion of others" (M. Aurelius, xii. 4. Translated by Robertson and Plummer). Paul does not even set himself up as judge of himself.

4:4 {For I know nothing against myself} (ouden gar emaut“i sunoida\). Not a statement of fact, but an hypothesis to show the unreliability of mere complacent self-satisfaction. Note the use of \sunoida\ (second perfect active indicative with dative (disadvantage) of the reflexive pronoun) for guilty knowledge against oneself (cf. Ac 5:2; 12:12; 14:6). {Yet} (all'\). Adversative use of \alla\. {Am I not hereby justified} (ouk en tout“i dedikai“mai\). Perfect passive indicative of state of completion. Failure to be conscious of one's own sins does not mean that one is innocent. Most prisoners plead "not guilty." Who is the judge of the steward of the mysteries of God? It is the Lord "that judgeth me" (ho anakrin“n me\). Probably, who examines me and then passes on my fidelity (pistos\ in verse 2).

4:5 {Wherefore} (h“ste\). As in 3:21 which see. {Judge nothing} (m^ ti krinete\). Stop passing judgment, stop criticizing as they were doing. See the words of Jesus in Mt

7:1. The censorious habit was ruining the Corinthian Church. {Before the time} (\pro kairou). The day of the Lord in 3:13. "Do not therefore anticipate the great judgment (\krisis) by any preliminary investigation (\anakrisis) which must be futile and incomplete" (Lightfoot). {Until the Lord come} (\he"s an elth^i ho kurios). Common idiom of \he"s and the aorist subjunctive with or without \an for a future event. Simple futurity, but held forth as a glorious hope, the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus as Judge. {Who will both bring to light} (\hos kai ph"tisei). Future indicative of this late verb (in papyri also) from \ph"s (light), to turn the light on the hidden things of darkness. {And make manifest} (\kai phaner"sei). (Ionic and late) causative verb \phanero" from \phaneros. By turning on the light the counsels of all hearts stand revealed. {His praise} (\ho epainos). The praise (note article) due him from God (Ro 2:29) will come to each then (\tote) and not till then. Meanwhile Paul will carry on and wait for the praise from God.

4:6 {I have in a figure transferred} (\metesch^matisa). First aorist active (not perfect) indicative of \meta-sch^matiz", used by Plato and Aristotle for changing the form of a thing (from \meta\, after, and \sch^ma\, form or habit, like Latin _habitus_ from \ech"\ and so different from \morph^ as in Php 2:7; Ro 12:2). For the idea of refashioning see Field, _Notes_, p. 169f. and Preisigke, _Fachwörter_). Both Greek and Latin writers (Quintilian, Martial) used \sch^ma for a rhetorical artifice. Paul's use of the word (in Paul only in N.T.) appears also further in 2Co 11:13-15 where the word occurs three times, twice of the false apostles posing and passing as apostles of Christ and ministers of righteousness, and once of Satan as an angel of light, twice with \eis and once with \h"s. In Php 3:21 the word is used for the change in the body of our humiliation to the body of glory. But here it is clearly the rhetorical figure for a veiled allusion to Paul and Apollos "for your sakes" (\dia humas). {That in us ye may learn} (\hina en h^min math^te). Final clause with \hina and the second aorist active subjunctive of \manthan", to learn. As an object lesson in our cases (\en h^min). It is no more true of Paul and Apollos than of other ministers, but the wrangles in Corinth started about them. So Paul boldly puts himself and Apollos to the fore in the discussion of the principles involved. {Not to go beyond the things which are written} (\to M^ huper ha gegraptai). It is difficult to reproduce the Greek idiom in English. The article

\to\ is in the accusative case as the object of the verb \math^te\ (learn) and points at the words "\M^ huper ha gegraptai\," apparently a proverb or rule, and elliptical in form with no principal verb expressed with \m^\, whether "think" (Auth.) or "go" (Revised). There was a constant tendency to smooth out Paul's ellipses as in 2Th 2:3; 1Co 1:26,31. Lightfoot thinks that Paul may have in mind O.T. passages quoted in 1Co 1:19,31; 3:19,20. {That ye be not puffed up} (\hina m^ phusiousthe\). Sub-final use of \hina\ (second use in this sentence) with notion of result. It is not certain whether \phusiousthe\ (late verb form like \phusia^, phusa^, to blow up, to inflate, to puff up), used only by Paul in the N.T., is present indicative with \hina\ like \z^loute\ in Ga 4:17 (cf. \hina gin^skomen\ in 1Jo 5:20) or the present subjunctive by irregular contraction (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 203, 342f.), probably the present indicative. \Phusio^ is from \phusis\ (nature) and so meant to make natural, but it is used by Paul just like \phusa^ or \phusia^ (from \phusa\, a pair of bellows), a vivid picture of self-conceit. {One for the one against the other} (\heis huper tou henos kata tou heterou\). This is the precise idea of this idiom of partitive apposition. This is the rule with partisans. They are "for" (\huper\) the one and "against" (\kata\, down on, the genitive case) the other (\tou heterou\, not merely another or a second, but the different sort, \heterodox).

4:7 {Maketh thee to differ} (\se diakrinei\). Distinguishes thee, separates thee. \Diakrin^ means to sift or separate between (\dia\) as in Ac 15:9 (which see) where \metaxu\ is added to make it plainer. All self-conceit rests on the notion of superiority of gifts and graces as if they were self-bestowed or self-acquired. {Which thou didst not receive} (\ho ouk elabes\). "Another home-thrust" (Robertson and Plummer). Pride of intellect, of blood, of race, of country, of religion, is thus shut out. {Dost thou glory} (\kauchasai\). The original second person singular middle ending \-sai\ is here preserved with variable vowel contraction, \kauchaesai=kauchasai\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 341). Paul is fond of this old and bold verb for boasting. {As if thou hadst not received it} (\h^s m^ lab^ n\). This neat participial clause (second aorist active of \lamban^) with \h^s\ (assumption) and negative \m^s\ punctures effectually the inflated bag of false pride. What pungent questions Paul has asked. Robertson and Plummer say of Augustine, "Ten years before the challenge of Pelagius, the study of St. Paul's writings, and especially of this verse and of Ro 9:16, had crystallized in his mind the distinctively Augustinian doctrines of man's total depravity, of irresistible grace, and of absolute predestination." Human responsibility does exist beyond a doubt, but there is no foundation for pride and conceit.

4:8 {Already are ye filled?} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}d^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde} kekoresmenoi\text{\textasciitilde} este?}$). Perfect passive indicative, state of completion, of $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}korennumi}$, old Greek verb to satiate, to satisfy. The only other example in N.T. is Ac 27:38 which see. Paul may refer to De 31:20; 32:15. But it is keen irony, even sarcasm. Westcott and Hort make it a question and the rest of the sentence also. {Already ye are become rich} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}d^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde} eplout^{\text{\textasciitilde}}sate}$). Note change to ingressive aorist indicative of $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ploute}$, old verb to be rich (cf. 2Co 8:9). "The aorists, used instead of perfects, imply indecent haste" (Lightfoot). "They have got a private millennium of their own" (Robertson & Plummer) with all the blessings of the Messianic Kingdom (Lu 22:29f.; 1Th 2:12; 2Ti 2:12). {Ye have reigned without us} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ch^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde}ris\text{\textasciitilde} h^{\text{\textasciitilde}}m^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde}n\text{\textasciitilde} ebasileusate}$). Withering sarcasm. Ye became kings without our company. Some think that Paul as in 3:21 is purposely employing Stoic phraseology though with his own meanings. If so, it is hardly consciously done. Paul was certainly familiar with much of the literature of his time, but it did not shape his ideas. {I would that ye did reign} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}kai\text{\textasciitilde} ophelon\text{\textasciitilde} ge\text{\textasciitilde} ebasileusate}$). More exactly, "And would at least that ye had come to reign (or become kings)." It is an unfulfilled wish about the past expressed by $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ophelon}$ and the aorist indicative instead of $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ei\text{\textasciitilde} gar}$ and the aorist indicative (the ancient idiom). See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1003, for the construction with particle $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ophelon}$ (an unaugmented second aorist form). {That we also might reign with you} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}hina\text{\textasciitilde} kai\text{\textasciitilde} h^{\text{\textasciitilde}}meis\text{\textasciitilde} humin\text{\textasciitilde} sunbasileus^{\text{\textasciitilde}}men}$). Ironical contrast to $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}ch^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde}ris\text{\textasciitilde} h^{\text{\textasciitilde}}m^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde}n\text{\textasciitilde} ebasileusate}$, just before. Associative instrumental case of $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}humin}$ after $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}sun-}$.

4:9 {Hath set forth us the apostles last} ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}h^{\text{\textasciitilde}}mas\text{\textasciitilde} tous\text{\textasciitilde} apostolous\text{\textasciitilde} eschatous\text{\textasciitilde} apedeixen}$). The first aorist active indicative of $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}apodeiknumi}$, old verb to show, to expose to view or exhibit (Herodotus), in technical sense (cf. 2Th 2:4) for gladiatorial show as in $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}eth^{\text{\textasciitilde}}\text{\textasciitilde}riomach^{\text{\textasciitilde}}sa}$ (1Co 15:32). In this grand pageant Paul and other apostles come last ($\text{\textit{\textbackslash}eschatous}$, predicate accusative after $\text{\textit{\textbackslash}apedeixen}$) as a grand finale. {As men doomed to die} (\h“s epithanation). Late word, here alone in N.T. The LXX (Bel and the Dragon 31) has it for those thrown daily to the lions. Dionysius of Halicarnassus (_A.R_. vii. 35) uses it of those thrown from the Tarpeian Rock. The gladiators would say _morituri salutamus_. All this in violent contrast to the kingly Messianic pretensions of the Corinthians. {A spectacle} (\theatron). Cf. Heb 11:33-40. The word, like our theatre, means the place of the show (Ac 19:29,31). Then, it means the spectacle shown there (\theama\ or \thea), and, as here, the man exhibited as the show like the verb \theatrizomenoi, made a spectacle (Heb 10:33). Sometimes it refers to the spectators (\theatai) like our "house" for the audience. Here the spectators include "the world, both to angels and men" (\t“i kosm“i kai aggelois kai anthr“pois), dative case of personal interest.

4:10 {We--you} (\h^meis--humeis). Triple contrast in keenest ironical emphasis. "The three antitheses refer respectively to teaching, demeanour, and worldly position" (Robertson and Plummer). The apostles were fools for Christ's sake (2Co 4:11; Php 3:7). They made "union with Christ the basis of worldly wisdom" (Vincent). There is change of order (chiasm) in the third ironical contrast. They are over strong in pretension. \Endoxos, illustrious, is one of the 103 words found only in Luke and Paul in the N.T. Notion of display and splendour.

4:11 {Even unto this present hour} (\achri t^s arti h“ras). \Arti (just now, this very minute) accents the continuity of the contrast as applied to Paul. Ten verbs and four participles from 11-13 give a graphic picture of Paul's condition in Ephesus when he is writing this epistle. {We hunger} (\pein“men), {we thirst} (\dips“men), {are naked} (\gumniteuomen), late verb for scant clothing from \gumn^t^s, {are buffeted} (\kolaphizometha), to strike a blow with the fist from \kolaphos and one of the few N.T. and ecclesiastical words and see on Mt 26:67, {have no certain dwelling place} (\astatoumen) from \astatos, strolling about and only here save Anthol. Pal. and Aquila in Isa 58:7. Field in _Notes_, p. 170 renders 1Co 4:11 "and are vagabonds" or spiritual hobos.

4:12 {We toil} (\kopi“men). Common late verb for weariness in toil (Lu 5:5), {working with our own hands} (\ergazomenoi tais idiais chersin) instrumental case \chersin and not simply for himself but also for Aquila and Priscilla as he explains in Ac

20:34. This personal touch gives colour to the outline. Paul alludes to this fact often (1Th 2:9; 2Th 3:8; 1Co 9:6; 2Co 11:7). "Greeks despised manual labour; St. Paul glories in it" (Robertson and Plummer). Cf. Deissmann, Light, etc., p. 317. {Being reviled we bless} (\loidoroumenoi eulogoumen). Almost the language of Peter about Jesus (1Pe 2:23) in harmony with the words of Jesus in Mt 5:44; Lu 6:27. {Being persecuted we endure} (\di'komenoi anechometha). We hold back and do not retaliate. Turn to Paul's other picture of his experiences in the vivid contrasts in 2Co 4:7-10; 6:3-10 for an interpretation of his language here.

4:13 {Being defamed we intreat} (\dusph^moumenoi parakaloumen). The participle \dusph^moumenoi is an old verb (in 1 Macc. 7:41) to use ill, from \dusph^mos, but occurs here only in the N.T. Paul is opening his very heart now after the keen irony above. {As the filth of the world} (\h's perikatharmata tou kosmou). Literally, sweepings, rinsings, cleansings around, dust from the floor, from \perikathair^{\prime}, to cleanse all around (Plato and Aristotle) and so the refuse thrown off in cleansing. Here only in the N.T. and only twice elsewhere. \Katharma was the refuse of a sacrifice. In Pr 21:18 \perikatharma occurs for the scapegoat. The other example is Epictetus iii. 22,78, in the same sense of an expiatory offering of a worthless fellow. It was the custom in Athens during a plague to throw to the sea some wretch in the hope of appeasing the gods. One hesitates to take it so here in Paul, though Findlay thinks that possibly in Ephesus Paul may have heard some such cry like that in the later martyrdoms _Christiani ad leones_. At any rate in 1Co 15:32 Paul says "I fought with wild beasts" and in 2Co 1:9 "I had the answer of death." Some terrible experience may be alluded to here. The word shows the contempt of the Ephesian populace for Paul as is shown in Ac 19:23-41 under the influence of Demetrius and the craftsmen. {The offscouring of all things} (\pant^{\prime}n perips^{\prime}ma). Late word, here only in N.T., though in Tob. 5:18. The word was used in a formula at Athens when victims were flung into the sea, \perips^{\prime}ma h^{\prime}m^{\prime}n genou (Became a \perips^{\prime}ma\ for us), in the sense of expiation. The word merely means scraping around from \peripsa^{\prime}, offscrapings or refuse. That is probably the idea here as in Tob. 5:18. It came to have a complimentary sense for the Christians who in a plague gave their lives for the sick. But it is a bold figure here with Paul of a piece with \perikatharmata.

4:14 {To shame you} (\entrep“n\). Literally, shaming you (present active participle of \entrep“\), old verb to turn one on himself either middle or with reflexive pronoun and active, but the reflexive \heautois\ is not expressed here. See on 2Th 3:14. The harsh tone has suddenly changed.

4:15 {To admonish} (\nouthet“n\). Literally, admonishing (present active participle of \nouthete“\). See on 1Th 5:12,14. {For though ye should have} (\ean gar ech“te\). Third-class condition undetermined, but with prospect of being determined (\ean\ and present subjunctive), "for if ye have." {Tutors} (\paidag“gous\). This old word (\pais\, boy, \ag“gos\, leader) was used for the guide or attendant of the child who took him to school as in Ga 3:24 (Christ being the schoolmaster) and also as a sort of tutor who had a care for the child when not in school. The papyri examples (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_) illustrate both aspects of the paedagogue. Here it is the "tutor in Christ" who is the Teacher. These are the only two N.T. examples of the common word. {I begot you} (\humas egenn“sa\). Paul is their {spiritual father} in Christ, while Apollos and the rest are their {tutors} in Christ.

4:16 {Be ye imitators of me} (\mim“tai mou ginesthe\). "Keep on becoming (present middle imperative) imitators of me (objective genitive)." \Mim“t“s\ is an old word from \mimeomai\, to copy, to mimic (\mimos\). Paul stands for his rights as their spiritual father against the pretensions of the Judaizers who have turned them against him by the use of the names of Apollos and Cephas.

4:17 {Have I sent} (\epempsa\). First aorist active indicative. Probably Timothy had already gone as seems clear from 16:10f. Apparently Timothy came back to Ephesus and was sent on to Macedonia before the uproar in Ephesus (Ac 19:22). Probably also Titus was then despatched to Corinth, also before the uproar. {In every church} (\en pas“i ekkl“sifi\). Paul expects his teachings and practices to be followed in every church (1Co 14:33). Note his language here "my ways those in Christ Jesus." Timothy as Paul's spokesman {will remind} (\anamn“sei\) the Corinthians of Paul's teachings.

4:18 {Some are puffed up} (\ephusi“th“san\). First aorist (effective) passive indicative of \phusio“\ which see on verse 6. {As though I were not coming to you} (\h“s m“erchomenou mou pros humas\). Genitive absolute with particle (assuming it as so) with \m^\ as negative.

4:19 {If the Lord will} (ean ho kurios thel's^i\). Third-class condition. See James 4:15; Ac 18:21; 1Co 16:7 for the use of this phrase. It should represent one's constant attitude, though not always to be spoken aloud. {But the power} (alla t^n dunamin\). The puffed up Judaizers did a deal of talking in Paul's absence. He will come and will know their real strength. II Corinthians gives many evidences of Paul's sensitiveness to their talk about his inconsistencies and cowardice (in particular chs. 2 Co 1; 2; 10; 11; 12; 13). He changed his plans to spare them, not from timidity. It will become plain later that Timothy failed on this mission and that Titus succeeded.

4:21 {With a rod} (en rabd'“i\). The so-called instrumental use of \en\ like the Hebrew (1Sa 17:43). The shepherd leaned on his rod, staff, walking stick. The paedagogue had his rod also. {Shall I come?} (elth“;\). Deliberative subjunctive. Paul gives them the choice. They can have him as their spiritual father or as their paedagogue with a rod.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

5:1 {Actually} (\hol's). Literally, wholly, altogether, like Latin _omnino_ and Greek \pant's (1Co 9:22). So papyri have it for "really" and also for "generally" or "everywhere" as is possible here. See also 6:7. With a negative it has the sense of "not at all" as in 15:29; Mt 5:34 the only N.T. examples, though a common word. {It is reported} (\akouetai). Present passive indicative of \akoua, to hear; so literally, it is heard. "Fornication is heard of among you." Probably the household of Chloe (1:11) brought this sad news (Ellicott). {And such} (\kai toiaut^{). Climactic qualitative pronoun showing the revolting character of this particular case of illicit sexual intercourse. \Porneia is sometimes used (Ac 15:20,29) of such sin in general and not merely of the unmarried whereas \moicheia is technically adultery on the part of the married (Mr 7:21). {As is not even among the Gentiles} (\h^tis oude en tois ethnesin). Height of scorn. The Corinthian Christians were actually trying to win pagans to Christ and living more loosely than the Corinthian heathen among whom the very word "Corinthianize" meant to live in sexual wantonness and license. See Cicero _pro Cluentio_, v. 14. {That one of you hath his father's wife} (\h'ste gunaika tina tou patros echein). "So as (usual force of \h'ste) for one to go on having (\echein, present infinitive) a wife of the (his) father." It was probably a permanent union (concubine or mistress) of some kind without formal marriage like Joh 4:8. The woman probably was not the offender's mother (step-mother) and the father may have been dead or divorced. The Jewish law prescribed stoning for this crime (Le 18:8; 22:11; De 22:30). But the rabbis (Rabbi Akibah) invented a subterfuge in the case of a proselyte to permit such a relation. Perhaps the Corinthians had also learned how to split hairs over moral matters in such an evil atmosphere and so to condone this crime in one of their own members. Expulsion Paul had urged in 2Th 3:6 for such offenders.

5:2 {And ye are puffed up} (\kai humeis pephusi'menoi este). Emphatic position of \humeis (you). It may be understood as a question. Perfect passive periphrastic indicative of the same verb \phusioa used already of the partisans in Corinth

(4:6,19,20). Those of the same faction with this scoundrel justified his rascality. {Did not rather mourn} (\kai ouchi mallon epenth^{^sate}\). Possibly question also and note strong negative form \ouchi\, which favours it. The very least that they could have done (\mallon\ rather than be puffed up) was to mourn for shame (\penthe[“]\, old verb for lamentation) as if for one dead. {That he might be taken away} (\hina arth^{^i}\). The sub-final use of \hina\ of desired result (1:15) so common in the _Koin,_. First aorist passive subjunctive of \air[“]\, to lift up, to carry off. Decent self-respect should have compelled the instant expulsion of the man instead of pride in his rascality.

5:3 {For I verily} (\eg[“] men gar\). Emphatic statement of Paul's own attitude of indignation, \eg[“]\ in contrast with \humeis\. He justifies his demand for the expulsion of the man. {Being absent} (\ap[“]n\). Although absent (concessive participle) and so of \par[“]n\ though present. Each with locative case (\t[“]i s[“]mati, t[“]i pneumatⁱ\). {Have already judged} (\^d[^] kekrika\). Perfect active indicative of \krin[“]\. I have already decided or judged, as though present (\h[“]s par[“]n\). Paul felt compelled to reach a conclusion about the case and in a sentence of much difficulty seems to conceive an imaginary church court where the culprit has been tried and condemned. There are various ways of punctuating the clauses in this sentence in verses 3-5. It is not merely Paul's individual judgment. The genitive absolute clause in verse 4, {ye being gathered together} (\sunachthent[“]n hum[“]n\, first aorist passive participle of \sunag[“]\, in regular assembly) {and my spirit} (\kai tou emou pneumatos\) with the assembly (he means) {and meeting in the name of our Lord Jesus} (\en t[“]i onomati tou Kuriou [h[^]m[“]n] I[^]sou\) with the power of the Lord Jesus (\sun t[^]i dunamei tou Kuriou h[^]m[“]n I[^]sou\), though this clause can be taken with the infinitive to deliver (\paradounai\). It makes good syntax and sense taken either way. The chief difference is that, if taken with "gathered together" (\sunachthent[“]n\) Paul assumes less apostolic prerogative to himself. But he did have such power and used it against Elymas (Ac 13:8ff.) as Peter did against Ananias and Sapphira (Ac 5:1ff.).

5:5 {To deliver such an one unto Satan} (\paradounai ton toiouton t[“]i Satanfi\). We have the same idiom in 1Ti 1:20 used of Hymenius and Alexander. In 2Co 12:7 Paul speaks of his own physical suffering as a messenger (\aggelos\) of Satan. Paul certainly means expulsion from the church (verse 2) and regarding him as outside of the commonwealth of Israel (Eph 2:11f.). But we are not to infer that expulsion from the local church means the damnation of the offender. The wilful offenders have to be expelled and not regarded as enemies, but admonished as brothers (2Th 3:14f.). {For the destruction of the flesh} (\eis olethron t^s sarkos). Both for physical suffering as in the case of Job (Job 2:6) and for conquest of the fleshly sins, remedial punishment. {That the spirit may be saved} (\hina to pneuma s^th i). The ultimate purpose of the expulsion as discipline. Note the use of \to pneuma in contrast with \sarx as the seat of personality (cf. 3:15). Paul's motive is not merely vindictive, but the reformation of the offender who is not named here nor in 2Co 2:5-11 if the same man is meant, which is very doubtful. The final salvation of the man in the day of Christ is the goal and this is to be attained not by condoning his sin.

5:6 {Not good} (\ou kalon). Not beautiful, not seemly, in view of this plague spot, this cancer on the church. They needed a surgical operation at once instead of boasting and pride (puffed up). \Kauch^ma is the thing gloried in. {A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump} (\mikra zum^ holon to phurama zumoi). This proverb occurs _verbatim_ in Ga 5:9. \Zum^ (leaven) is a late word from \ze^, to boil, as is \zumo^, to leaven. The contraction is regular (\-oei=oi) for the third person singular present indicative. See the parables of Jesus for the pervasive power of leaven (Mt 13:33). Some of the members may have argued that one such case did not affect the church as a whole, a specious excuse for negligence that Paul here answers. The emphasis is on the "little" (\mikra\, note position). Lump (\phurama\ from \phura^, to mix, late word, in the papyri mixing a medical prescription) is a substance mixed with water and kneaded like dough. Compare the pervasive power of germs of disease in the body as they spread through the body.

5:7 {Purge out} (\ek katharate). First aorist (effective) active imperative of \ekkathair^, old verb to cleanse out (\ek), to clean completely. Aorist tense of urgency, do it now and do it effectively before the whole church is contaminated. This turn to the metaphor is from the command to purge out the old (\palaian\, now old and decayed) leaven before the passover feast (Ex 12:15f.; 13:7; Zep 1:12). Cf. modern methods of disinfection after a contagious disease. {A new lump} (\neon phurama). Make a fresh start as a new community with the contamination removed. \Neos\ is the root for \neaniskos\, a young man, not yet old (\g^raios). So new wine (\oinon neon\ Mt 9:17). \Kainos\ is fresh as compared with the ancient (\palaaios). See the distinction in Col 3:10; Eph 4:22ff.; 2Co 5:17. {Unleavened} (\azumoi). Without (\a\ privative) leaven, the normal and ideal state of Christians. Rare word among the ancients (once in Plato). They are a new creation (\kain^ ktisis), "exemplifying Kant's maxim that you should treat a man as if he were what you would wish him to be" (Robertson and Plummer). {For our passover also hath been sacrificed, even Christ} (\kai gar to pascha h^m^"n etuth^ Christos). First aorist passive indicative of \thu^, old verb to sacrifice. Euphony of consonants, \th\ to \t\ because of \-th^\. Reference to the death of Christ on the Cross as the Paschal Lamb (common use of \pascha\ as Mr 14:12; Lu 22:7), the figure used long before by the Baptist of Jesus (Joh 1:29). Paul means that the Lamb was already slain on Calvary and yet you have not gotten rid of the leaven.

5:8 {Wherefore let us keep the feast} (\h^"ste heortaz^"men). Present active subjunctive (volitive). Let us keep on keeping the feast, a perpetual feast (Lightfoot), and keep the leaven out. It is quite possible that Paul was writing about the time of the Jewish passover, since it was before pentecost (1Co 16:8). But, if so, that is merely incidental, and his language here is not a plea for the observance of Easter by Christians. {With the leaven of malice and wickedness} (\en zum^i kakias kai pon^rias). Vicious disposition and evil deed. {With the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth} (\en azumois eilikrinias kai al^theias). No word for "bread." The plural of \azumois\ may suggest "elements" or "loaves." \Eilikrinia\ (sincerity) does not occur in the ancient Greek and is rare in the later Greek. In the papyri it means probity in one example. The etymology is uncertain. Boisacq inclines to the notion of \heil^ or \hel^, sunlight, and \krin^, to judge by the light of the sun, holding up to the light. \Al^theia\ (truth) is a common word from \al^th^s\ (true) and this from \a\ privative and \l^th^ (i.e. \lathein, lanthan^, to conceal or hide) and so unconcealed, not hidden. The Greek idea of truth is out in the open. Note Ro 1:18 where Paul pictures those who are holding down the truth in unrighteousness.

5:9 {I wrote unto you in my epistle} (\egrapsa humin en t^i epistol'i). Not the epistolary aorist, but a reference to an epistle to the Corinthians earlier than this one (our First Corinthians), one not preserved to us. What a "find" it would be if a bundle of papyri in Egypt should give it back to us? {To have no company with fornicators} (m^sunanamignusthai pornois). Present middle infinitive with \m^ in an indirect command of a late double compound verb used in the papyri to mix up with (sun-ana-mignusthai, a mi verb). It is in the N.T. only here and verse 11; 2Th 3:14 which see. It is used here with the associative instrumental case (pornois, from pera, pern^mi, to sell, men and women who sell their bodies for lust). It is a pertinent question today how far modern views try to put a veneer over the vice in men and women.

5:10 {Not altogether} (ou pant^s). Not absolutely, not in all circumstances. Paul thus puts a limitation on his prohibition and confines it to members of the church. He has no jurisdiction over the outsiders (this world, tou kosmou toutou). {The covetous} (tois pleonektais). Old word for the over-reachers, those avaricious for more and more (pleon, ech, to have more). In N.T. only here, 6:10; Eph 5:5. It always comes in bad company (the licentious and the idolaters) like the modern gangsters who form a combination of liquor, lewdness, lawlessness for money and power. {Extortioners} (harpaxin). An old adjective with only one gender, rapacious (Mt 7:15; Lu 18:11), and as a substantive robber or extortioner (here and 6:10). Bandits, hijackers, grafters they would be called today. {Idolaters} (eid^lolastrais). Late word for hirelings (latris) of the idols (eid^lon), so our very word idolater. See 6:9; 10:7; Eph 5:5; Re 21:8; 22:15. Nageli regards this word as a Christian formation. {For then must ye needs} (epei "pheilete oun). This neat Greek idiom of epei with the imperfect indicative ("pheilete, from opheil, to be under obligation) is really the conclusion of a second-class condition with the condition unexpressed (Robertson, Grammar, p. 965). Sometimes an is used also as in Heb 10:2, but with verbs of obligation or necessity an is usually absent as here (cf. Heb 9:20). The unexpressed condition here would be, "if that were true" (including fornicators, the covetous, extortioners, idolaters of the outside world). Ara means in that case.

5:11 {But now I write unto you} (nun de egrapsa humin). This is the epistolary aorist referring to this same epistle and not to a previous one as in verse 9. As it is (when you read it) I did write unto you. {If any man that is named a brother be} (\lean tis adelphos onomazomenos ^i\). Condition of the third class, a supposable case. {Or a reviler or a drunkard} (\^loidoros ^methusos\). \Loidoros\ occurs in Euripides as an adjective and in later writings. In N.T. only here and 6:10. For the verb see 1Co 4:12. \Methusos\ is an old Greek word for women and even men (cf. \paroinos\, of men, 1Ti 3:3). In N.T. only here and 6:10. Cf. Ro 13:13. Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 316) gives a list of virtues and vices on counters for Roman games that correspond remarkably with Paul's list of vices here and in 6:10. Chrysostom noted that people in his day complained of the bad company given by Paul for revilers and drunkards as being men with more "respectable" vices! {With such a one, no, not to eat} (\t^i toiout^i m^de sunesthiein\). Associative instrumental case of \toiout^i\ after \sunisthiein\, "not even to eat with such a one." Social contacts with such "a brother" are forbidden

5:12 {For what have I to do?} (\ti gar moi;\). "For what is it to me (dative) to judge those without (\tous exo\)" They are outside the church and not within Paul's jurisdiction. God passes judgment on them.

5:13 {Put away the wicked man} (\exarate ton pon^ron\). By this quotation from De 17:7 Paul clinches the case for the expulsion of the offender (5:2). Note \ex\ twice and effective aorist tense.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

6:1 {Dare any of you?} (\tolmfi tis hum“n;). Does any one of you dare? Rhetorical question with present indicative of \tolma“, old verb from \tolma, daring. Bengel: _grandi verbo notatur laesa majestas Christianorum_. "The word is an argument in itself" (Robertson and Plummer). Apparently Paul has an actual case in mind as in chapter 1Co 5 though no name is called. {Having a matter against his neighbour} (\pragma ech“n pros ton heteron). Forensic sense of \pragma (from \prass“, to do, to exact, to extort as in Lu 3:13), a case, a suit (Demosthenes 1020, 26), with the other or the neighbour as in 10:24; 14:17; Ga 6:4; Ro 2:1. {Go to law} (\krinesthai). Present middle or passive (ch. Ro 3:4) in the same forensic sense as \krith^nai in Mt 5:40. \Krit^s, judge, is from this verb. {Before the unrighteous} (\epi t“n adik“n). This use of \epi with the genitive for "in the presence of" is idiomatic as in 2Co 7:14, \epi Titou, in the case of Titus. The Jews held that to bring a lawsuit before a court of idolaters was blasphemy against the law. But the Greeks were fond of disputatious lawsuits with each other. Probably the Greek Christians brought cases before pagan judges.

6:2 {Shall judge the world} (\ton kosmon krinousin). Future active indicative. At the last day with the Lord Jesus (Mt 19:28; Lu 22:30). {Are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?} (\anaxioi este krit^ri“n elachist“n;). \Anaxios is an old word (\an and \axios), though only here in the N.T. There is dispute as to the meaning of \krit^ria here and in verse 4, old word, but nowhere else in N.T. save in Jas 2:6. Naturally, like other words in \-t^rion (\akroat^rion, auditorium, Ac 25:23), this word means the place where judgment is rendered, or court. It is common in the papyri in the sense of tribunal. In the _Apost. Const. ii. 45 we have \m^ erchesth“ epi krit^rion ethnikon (Let him not come before a heathen tribunal). Hence here it would mean, "Are ye unworthy of the smallest tribunals?" That is, of sitting on the smallest tribunals, of forming courts yourselves to settle such things?

6:3 {How much more, things that pertain to this life?} (\M^ti ge bi“tika;\\). The question expects the answer no and \\ge\\ adds sharp point to Paul's surprised tone, "Need I so much as say?" It can be understood also as ellipsis, "let me not say" (m^tigelē“\\), not to say. \\Bi“tika\\ occurs first in Aristotle, but is common afterwards. In the papyri it is used of business matters. It is from \\bios\\ (manner of life in contrast to \\z“^\\, life principle).

6:4 {If then ye have to judge things pertaining to this life} (bi“tika men oun krit^ria ean ech^te\\). Note emphatic position (proleptic) of \\bi“tika krit^ria\\ (tribunals pertaining to this life, as above). "If ye have tribunals pertaining to this life" (condition of third class, ean ech^te\\). If \\kathizete\\ (do ye set) is indicative and interrogative, then by "who are of no account in the church" (tous exouthen^menous en t^i ekkl^sifi\\) Paul means the heathen as in verse 1. If \\kathizete\\ be imperative, then Paul means the least esteemed members of the church for such unwished for work. It is a harsh term for the heathen, but one of indignation toward Christians.

6:5 {I say this to move you to shame} (pros entrop^n humin legē“\\). Old word \\entrop^\\ from \\entrep“\\, to turn in (1Co 4:14 which see). In N.T. only here and 15:34. {One wise man} (sophos\\). From sarcasm to pathos Paul turns. {Does there not exist} (eni\\, short form for enesti\\)? With double negative \\ouk--oudeis\\, expecting the answer yes. Surely {one} such man exists in the church. {Who} (hos\\). Almost consecutive in idea, of such wisdom that he will be able. {To decide between his brethren} (diakrinai ana meson tou adelphou autou\\). \\Krinai\\ is to judge or decide (first aorist active infinitive of \\krinē“\\ and \\dia\\ (two) carries on the idea of between. Then ana meson makes it still plainer, in the midst as {arbitrator} between brother and brother like ana meson emou kai sou\\ (Ge 23:15). It is even so a condensed expression with part of it unexpressed (ana meson kai tou adelphou autou\\) between brother and his brother. The use of \\adelphos\\ has a sharp reflection on them for their going to heathen judges to settle disputes between brothers in Christ.

6:6 {And that before unbelievers} (kai touto epi apist^“n\\). Climactic force of \\kai\\. The accusative of general reference with \\touto\\, "That there should be disputes about \\bi“tika\\ is bad; that Christian should go to law with Christian is worse; that Christians should do this before unbelievers is worst of all" (Robertson and Plummer).

6:7 {Nay, already it is altogether a defect among you} (\^d men oun hol"s h^{tt}ma humin estin\). "Indeed therefore there is to you already (to begin with, \^d\, before any question of courts) wholly defeat." \H^{tt}ma\ (from \h^{ttaomai}\) is only here, Ro 11:12; Isa 31:8 and ecclesiastical writers. See \h^{ttaomai}\ (from \h^{tt}"n\, less) in 2Co 12:13; 2Pe 2:19f. \Nik^\ was victory and \h^{tta}\ defeat with the Greeks. It is defeat for Christians to have lawsuits (\krimata\, usually decrees or judgments) with one another. This was proof of the failure of love and forgiveness (Col 3:13). {Take wrong} (\adikeisthe\).
Present middle indicative, of old verb \adike"\ (from \adikos\, not right). Better undergo wrong yourself than suffer {defeat} in the matter of love and forgiveness of a brother. {Be defrauded} (\apostereisthe\). Permissive middle again like \adikeisthe\.
Allow yourselves to be robbed (old verb to deprive, to rob) rather than have a lawsuit.

6:8 {Nay, but ye yourselves do wrong and defraud} (\alla humeis adikeite kai apostereite\). "But (adversative \alla\, on the contrary) you (emphatic) do the wronging and the robbing" (active voices) "and that your brethren" (\kai touto adelphous\). Same idiom as at close of verse 6. The very climax of wrong-doings, to stoop to do this with one's brethren in Christ.

6:9 {The unrighteous} (\adikoi\). To remind them of the verb \adike"\ just used. {The Kingdom of God} (\theou basileian\).
Precisely, God's kingdom. {Be not deceived} (\m^{planfsthe}\).
Present passive imperative with negative \m^\. Do not be led astray by plausible talk to cover up sin as mere animal behaviourism. Paul has two lists in verses 9,10, one with repetition of \oute\, neither (fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, effeminate, or \malakoi\, abusers of themselves with men or \arsenokoitai\ or sodomites as in 1Ti 1:10 a late word for this horrid vice, thieves, covetous), the other with \ou\ not (drunkards, revilers, extortioners). All these will fall short of the kingdom of God. This was plain talk to a city like Corinth.
It is needed today. It is a solemn roll call of the damned even if some of their names are on the church roll in Corinth whether officers or ordinary members.

6:11 {And such were some of you} (\kai tauta tines ^te\). A sharp homethrust. Literally, "And these things (\tauta\, neuter plural) were ye (some of you). The horror is shown by \tauta\, but by \tines\ Paul narrows the picture to some, not all. But that was in the past (\te\, imperfect indicative) like Ro 6:17. Thank God the blood of Jesus does cleanse from such sins as these. But do not go back to them. {But ye were washed} (\apelousasthe\). First aorist middle indicative, not passive, of \apolou“. Either direct middle, ye washed yourselves, or indirect middle, as in Ac 22:16, ye washed your sins away (force of apo\). This was their own voluntary act in baptism which was the outward expression of the previous act of God in cleansing (\h^giasth^te\, ye were sanctified or cleansed before the baptism) and justified (\edikai^th^te\, ye were put right with God before the act of baptism). "These twin conceptions of the Christian state in its beginning appear commonly in the reverse order" (Findlay). The outward expression is usually mentioned before the inward change which precedes it. In this passage the Trinity appear as in the baptismal command in Mt 28:19.

6:12 {Lawful} (\exestin\). Apparently this proverb may have been used by Paul in Corinth (repeated in 10:23), but not in the sense now used by Paul's opponents. The "all things" do not include such matters as those condemned in chapter 1Co 5; 6:1-11. Paul limits the proverb to things not immoral, things not wrong _per se_. But even here liberty is not license. {But not all things are expedient} (\all' ou panta sumpherei\). Old word \sumpherei\, bears together for good and so worthwhile. Many things, harmless in themselves in the abstract, do harm to others in the concrete. We live in a world of social relations that circumscribe personal rights and liberties. {But I will not be brought under the power of any} (\all ouk eg^ exousiasth^somai hupo tinos\). Perhaps a conscious play on the verb \exestin\ for \exousiaz^ is from \exousia\ and that from \exestin\. Verb from Aristotle on, though not common (Dion. of Hal., LXX and inscriptions). In N.T. only here, 7:4; Lu 22:25. Paul is determined not to be a slave to anything harmless in itself. He will maintain his self-control. He gives a wholesome hint to those who talk so much about personal liberty.

6:13 {But God shall bring to nought both it and them} (\ho de theos kai taut^n kai tauta katarg^sei\). Another proverb about the adaptation of the belly (\koilia\ and food (\br^mata\, not just flesh), which had apparently been used by some in Corinth to justify sexual license (fornication and adultery). These Gentiles mixed up matters not alike at all (questions of food and sensuality). " We have traces of this gross moral confusion in the circumstances which dictated the Apostolic Letter (Ac 15:23-29), where things wholly diverse are combined, as directions about meats to be avoided and a prohibition of fornication" (Lightfoot). Both the belly (\taut^{\eta}n) and the foods (\tauta) God will bring to an end by death and change. {But the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body} (\to de s^{\eta}ma ou t^{\eta}i porneifi alla t^{\eta}i kuri^{\eta}i, kai ho kurios t^{\eta}i s^{\eta}mati). Paul here boldly shows the fallacy in the parallel about appetite of the belly for food. The human body has a higher mission than the mere gratification of sensual appetite. Sex is of God for the propagation of the race, not for prostitution. Paul had already stated that God dwells in us as the sanctuary of the Holy Spirit (3:16f.). This higher function of the body he here puts forward against the debased Greek philosophy of the time which ignored completely Paul's idea, "the body for the Lord and the Lord for the body" (dative of personal interest in both cases). "The Lord Jesus and \porneia contested for the bodies of Christian men; loyal to him they must renounce _that_, yielding to _that_ they renounce him" (Findlay).

6:14 {Will raise up us} (\h^{\eta}mas exegerei). Future active indicative of \exegeir^{\eta} though the MSS. vary greatly, some having the present and some even the aorist. But the resurrection of the body gives added weight to Paul's argument about the dignity and destiny of the body (_quanta dignitas_, Bengel) which should not be prostituted to sensuality.

6:15 {Members of Christ} (\mel^{\eta} Christou). Old word for limbs, members. Even the Stoics held the body to be common with the animals (Epictetus, _Diss_. l. iii. 1) and only the reason like the gods. Without doubt some forms of modern evolution have contributed to the licentious views of animalistic sex indulgence, though the best teachers of biology show that in the higher animals monogamy is the rule. The body is not only adapted for Christ (verse 13), but it is a part of Christ, in vital union with him. Paul will make much use of this figure further on (12:12-31; Eph 4:11-16; 5:30). {Shall I then take away?} (\arasoun;). First aorist active participle of \air^{\eta}, old verb to snatch, carry off like Latin _rapio_ (our rape). {Make} (\poi^{\eta}s^{\eta}). Can be either future active indicative or first aorist active subjunctive (deliberative). Either makes good sense. The horror of deliberately taking "members of Christ" and making them "members of a harlot" in an actual union staggers Paul and should stagger us. {God forbid} (\m^ genoito). Optative second aorist in a negative wish for the future. {May it not happen!} The word "God" is not here. The idiom is common in Epictetus though rare in the LXX. Paul has it thirteen times and Luke once (Lu 20:16).

6:16 {One body} (\hen s^ma). With the harlot. That union is for the harlot the same as with the wife. The words quoted from Ge 2:24 describing the sexual union of husband and wife, are also quoted and explained by Jesus in Mt 19:5f. which see for discussion of the translation Hebraism with use of \eis. {Saith he} (\ph^sin). Supply either \ho theos (God) or *\h^ graph^ * (the Scripture).

6:17 {One spirit} (\hen pneuma). With the Lord, the inner vital spiritual union with the Lord Jesus (Eph 4:4; 5:30).

6:18 {Flee} (\pheugete). Present imperative. Have the habit of fleeing without delay or parley. Note abruptness of the asyndeton with no connectives. Fornication violates Christ's rights in our bodies (verses 13-17) and also ruins the body itself. {Without the body} (\ektos tou s^matos). Even gluttony and drunkenness and the use of dope are sins wrought on the body, not "within the body" (\entos tou s^matos) in the same sense as fornication. Perhaps the dominant idea of Paul is that fornication, as already shown, breaks the mystic bond between the body and Christ and hence the fornicator (\ho porneu^ n) {sins against his own body} (\eis to idion s^ma hamartanei) in a sense not true of other dreadful sins. The fornicator takes his body which belongs to Christ and unites it with a harlot. In fornication the body is the instrument of sin and becomes the subject of the damage wrought. In another sense fornication brings on one's own body the two most terrible bodily diseases that are still incurable (gonorrhea and syphilis) that curse one's own body and transmit the curse to the third and fourth generation. Apart from the high view given here by Paul of the relation of the body to the Lord no possible father or mother has the right to lay the hand of such terrible diseases and disaster on their children and children's children. The moral and physical rottenness wrought by immorality defy one's imagination.

6:19 {Your body is a temple} (\to s^ma hum^ n naos estin). A sanctuary as in 3:16 which see. Our spirits dwell in our bodies and the Holy Spirit dwells in our spirits. Some of the Gnostics split hairs between the sins of the body and fellowship with God in the spirit. Paul will have none of this subterfuge. One's body is the very shrine for the Holy Spirit. In Corinth was the temple to Aphrodite in which fornication was regarded as consecration instead of desecration. Prostitutes were there as priestesses of Aphrodite, to help men worship the goddess by fornication. {Ye are not your own} (\ouk este heaut“n\). Predicate genitive. Ye do not belong to yourselves, even if you could commit fornication without personal contamination or self-violation. Christianity makes unchastity dishonour in both sexes. There is no double standard of morality. Paul's plea here is primarily to men to be clean as members of Christ's body.

6:20 {For ye were bought with a price} (\^gorasth^te gar tim^s\).

First aorist passive indicative of \agoraz“, old verb to buy in the marketplace (\agora\). With genitive of price. Paul does not here state the price as Peter does in 1Pe 1:19 (the blood of Christ) and as Jesus does in Mt 20:28 (his life a ransom). The Corinthians understood his meaning. {Glorify God therefore in your body} (\doxasate d^ ton theon en t“i s“mati hum“n\).

Passionate conclusion to his powerful argument against sexual uncleanness. \D^ is a shortened form of \^d^ and is an urgent inferential particle. See on ̄Lu 2:15. Paul holds to his high ideal of the destiny of the body and urges glorifying God in it. Some of the later Christians felt that Paul's words could be lightened a bit by adding "and in your spirits which are his," but these words are found only in late MSS. and are clearly not genuine. Paul's argument stands four-square for the dignity of the body as the sanctuary of the Holy Spirit united to the Lord Jesus.

7:1 {Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote} (\peri de h“n egrapsate\). An ellipsis of \peri tout“n\, the antecedent of \peri h“n\, is easily supplied as in papyri. The church had written Paul a letter in which a number of specific problems about marriage were raised. He answers them _seriatim_. The questions must be clearly before one in order intelligently to interpret Paul's replies. The first is whether a single life is wrong. Paul pointedly says that it is not wrong, but good (\kalon\). One will get a one-sided view of Paul's teaching on marriage unless he keeps a proper perspective. One of the marks of certain heretics will be forbidding to marry (1Ti 4:3). Paul uses marriage as a metaphor of our relation to Christ (2Co 11:2; Ro 7:4; Eph 5:28-33). Paul is not here opposing marriage. He is only arguing that celibacy may be good in certain limitations. The genitive case with \haptesthai\ (touch) is the usual construction.

7:2 {Because of fornications} (\dia tas porneias\). This is not the only reason for marriage, but it is a true one. The main purpose of marriage is children. Mutual love is another. The family is the basis of all civilization. Paul does not give a low view of marriage, but is merely answering questions put to him about life in Corinth.

7:3 {Render the due} (t^n opheil^n apodidot“\). Marriage is not simply not wrong, but for many a duty. Both husband and wife have a mutual obligation to the other. "This dictum defends marital intercourse against rigorists, as that of ver. 1 commends celibacy against sensualists" (Findlay).

7:4 {The wife} (h^ gun^). The wife is mentioned first, but the equality of the sexes in marriage is clearly presented as the way to keep marriage undefiled (Heb 13:4). "In wedlock separate ownership of the person ceases" (Robertson and Plummer).

7:5 {Except it be by consent for a season} (ei m^ti [an] ek sumph“nou pros kairon\). If \an\ is genuine, it can either be regarded as like \ean\ though without a verb or as loosely added after \ei m^{ti}\ and construed with it. {That ye may give yourselves unto prayer} (\hina scholas^{te tⁱ proseuchⁱ\). First aorist active subjunctive of \scholaz^{te}\, late verb from \schol^{te}\, leisure (our "school"), and so to have leisure (punctiliar act and not permanent) for prayer. Note private devotions here. {That Satan tempt you not} (\hina m^{peirazⁱ}\). Present subjunctive, that Satan may not keep on tempting you. {Because of your incontinency} (\dia tⁿ akrasian [humⁿ]\). A late word from Aristotle on for \akrateia\ from \akrat^s\ (without self-control, a privative and \krate^{te}\, to control, common old word). In N.T. only here and Mt 23:25 which see.}

7:6 {By way of permission} (\kata sungn^{mⁿ}\). Old word for pardon, concession, indulgence. _Secundum indulgentiam_ (Vulgate). Only here in N.T., though in the papyri for pardon. The word means "knowing together," understanding, agreement, and so concession. {Not of commandment} (\ou kat' epitagⁿ\). Late word (in papyri) from \epitass^{te}\, old word to enjoin. Paul has not commanded people to marry. He has left it an open question.

7:7 {Yet I would} (\thel^{de}\). "But I wish." Followed by accusative and infinitive (\anthr^{pous einai}\). This is Paul's personal preference under present conditions (7:26). {Even as I myself} (\h^{s kai emauton}\). This clearly means that Paul was not then married and it is confirmed by 9:5. Whether he had been married and was now a widower turns on the interpretation of Ac 26:10 "I cast my vote." If this is taken literally (the obvious way to take it) as a member of the Sanhedrin, Paul was married at that time. There is no way to decide. {His own gift from God} (\idion charisma ek theou\). So each must decide for himself. See on 1:7 for \charisma\, a late word from \charizomai\.

7:8 {To the unmarried and to the widows} (\tois agamois kai tais ch^{rais}\). It is possible that by "the unmarried" (masculine plural) the apostle means only men since widows are added and since virgins receive special treatment later (verse 25) and in verse 32 \ho agamos\ is the unmarried man. It is hardly likely that Paul means only widowers and widows and means to call himself a widower by \h^{s kag^{te}}\ (even as I). After discussing marital relations in verses 2-7 he returns to the original question in verse 1 and repeats his own personal preference as in verse 7. He does not say that it is _better_ to be unmarried, but only that it is _good_ (\kalon\ as in verse 1) for them to remain unmarried. \Agamos\ is an old word and in N.T.

occurs only in this passage. In verses 11, 34 it is used of women where the old Greeks would have used \anandros\, without a husband.

7:9 {But if they have not continency} (\ei de ouk egkrateuontai\). Condition of the first class, assumed as true. Direct middle voice \egkrateuontai\, hold themselves in, control themselves. {Let them marry} (\gam^sat^san\). First aorist (ingressive) active imperative. Usual _Koin,_ form in \-t^san\ for third plural. {Better} (\kreitton\). Marriage is better than continued sexual passion. Paul has not said that celibacy is {better} than marriage though he has justified it and expressed his own personal preference for it. The metaphorical use of \purousthai\ (present middle infinitive) for sexual passion is common enough as also for grief (2Co 11:29).

7:10 {To the married} (\tois gegam^kosin\). Perfect active participle of \game^, old verb, to marry, and still married as the tense shows. {I give charge} (\paraggell^). Not mere wish as in verses 7,8. {Not I, but the Lord} (\ouk eg^ alla ho kurios\). Paul had no commands from Jesus to the unmarried (men or women), but Jesus had spoken to the married (husbands and wives) as in Mt 5:31f.; 19:3-12; Mr 10:9-12; Lu 16:18. The Master had spoken plain words about divorce. Paul reenforces his own inspired command by the command of Jesus. In Mr 10:9 we have from Christ: "What therefore God joined together let not man put asunder" (\m^ chorizet^). {That the wife depart not from her husband} (\gunaika apo andros m^ choristh^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive (indirect command after \paraggell^\) of \choriz^, old verb from adverbial preposition \ch^ris\, separately, apart from, from. Here used of divorce by the wife which, though unusual then, yet did happen as in the case of Salome (sister of Herod the Great) and of Herodias before she married Herod Antipas. Jesus also spoke of it (Mr 10:12). Now most of the divorces are obtained by women. This passive infinitive is almost reflexive in force according to a constant tendency in the _Koin,_ (Robertson, Grammar, p. 817).

7:11 {But and if she depart} (\ean de kai ch^risth^i\). Third class condition, undetermined. If, in spite of Christ's clear prohibition, she get separated (ingressive passive subjunctive), {let her remain unmarried} (\menet^ agamos\). Paul here makes no allowance for remarriage of the innocent party as Jesus does by implication. {Or else be reconciled to her husband} (\^t^i andri katallag^h“\). Second aorist (ingressive) passive imperative of \katallass“\, old compound verb to exchange coins as of equal value, to reconcile. One of Paul's great words for reconciliation with God (2Co 5:18-20; Ro 5:10). \Diallass“\ (Mt 5:24 which see) was more common in the older Greek, but \katallass“\ in the later. The difference in idea is very slight, \dia-\ accents notion of exchange, \kat-\ the perfective idea (complete reconciliation). Dative of personal interest is the case of \andri\ . This sentence is a parenthesis between the two infinitives \ch“risth^hnai\ and \aphienai\ (both indirect commands after \paraggell“\). {And that the husband leave not his wife} (kai andra m^h aphienai\). This is also part of the Lord's command (Mr 10:11). \Apolu“\ occurs in Mark of the husband's act and \aphienai\ here, both meaning to send away. Bengel actually stresses the difference between \ch“risth^hnai\ of the woman as like _separatur_ in Latin and calls the wife "pars ignobilior" and the husband "nobilior." I doubt if Paul would stand for that extreme.

7:12 {But to the rest say I, not the Lord} (tois de loipois leg“ eg“, ouch ho Kurios\). Paul has no word about marriage from Jesus beyond the problem of divorce. This is no disclaimer of inspiration. He simply means that here he is not quoting a command of Jesus. {An unbelieving wife} (gunaika apiston\). This is a new problem, the result of work among the Gentiles, that did not arise in the time of Jesus. The form \apiston\ is the same as the masculine because a compound adjective. Paul has to deal with mixed marriages as missionaries do today in heathen lands. The rest (hoi loipoi\) for Gentiles (Eph 2:3) we have already had in 1Th 4:13; 5:6 which see. The Christian husband married his wife when he himself was an unbeliever. The word \apistos\ sometimes means unfaithful (Lu 12:46), but not here (cf. Joh 20:27). {She is content} (suneudokei\). Late compound verb to be pleased together with, agree together. In the papyri. {Let him not leave her} (m^h aphiet“ autⁿ\). Perhaps here and in verses 11,13 \aphi^hmi\ should be translated "put away" like \apolu“\ in Mr 10:1. Some understand \aphi^hmi\ as separation from bed and board, not divorce.

7:13 {Which hath an unbelieving husband} (h^htis echei andra apiston\). Relative clause here, while a conditional one in verse 12 (ei tis\, if any one). Paul is perfectly fair in stating both sides of the problem of mixed marriages.

7:14 {Is sanctified in the wife} (\h^giastai en t^i gunaiki). Perfect passive indicative of \hagiaz^, to set apart, to hallow, to sanctify. Paul does not, of course, mean that the unbelieving husband is saved by the faith of the believing wife, though Hodge actually so interprets him. Clearly he only means that the marriage relation is sanctified so that there is no need of a divorce. If either husband or wife is a believer and the other agrees to remain, the marriage is holy and need not be set aside. This is so simple that one wonders at the ability of men to get confused over Paul's language. {Else were your children unclean} (\epeí ara ta tekna akatharta). The common ellipse of the condition with \epeí: "since, accordingly, if it is otherwise, your children are illegitimate (\akatharta).\" If the relations of the parents be holy, the child's birth must be holy also (not illegitimate). "He is not assuming that the child of a Christian parent would be baptized; that would spoil rather than help his argument, for it would imply that the child was not \hagios till it was baptized. The verse throws no light on the question of infant baptism" (Robertson and Plummer).

7:15 {Is not under bondage} (\ou dedoul^tai). Perfect passive indicative of \doulo^, to enslave, has been enslaved, does not remain a slave. The believing husband or wife is not at liberty to separate, unless the disbeliever or pagan insists on it. Wilful desertion of the unbeliever sets the other free, a case not contemplated in Christ's words in Mt 5:32; 19:9. Luther argued that the Christian partner, thus released, may marry again. But that is by no means clear, unless the unbeliever marries first. {But God hath called us in peace} (\en de eir^n^i kekl^ken h^mas\ or \humas). Perfect active indicative of \kale^, permanent call in the sphere or atmosphere of peace. He does not desire enslavement in the marriage relation between the believer and the unbeliever.

7:16 {For how knowest thou?} (\ti gar oidas;). But what does Paul mean? Is he giving an argument _against_ the believer accepting divorce or _in favour_ of doing so? The syntax allows either interpretation with \ei (if) after \oidas. Is the idea in \ei (if) _hope_ of saving the other or _fear_ of not saving and hence peril in continuing the slavery of such a bondage? The latter idea probably suits the context best and is adopted by most commentators. And yet one hesitates to interpret Paul as _advocating_ divorce unless strongly insisted on by the unbeliever. There is no problem at all unless the unbeliever makes it. If it is a hopeless case, acquiescence is the only wise solution. But surely the believer ought to be sure that there is no hope before he agrees to break the bond. Paul raises the problem of the wife first as in verse 10.

7:17 {Only} (\ei m^). This use of \ei m^ as an elliptical condition is very common (7:5; Ga 1:7,19; Ro 14:14), "except that" like \pl^n. Paul gives a general principle as a limitation to what he has just said in verse 15. "It states the general principle which determines these questions about marriage, and this is afterwards illustrated by the cases of circumcision and slavery" (Robertson and Plummer). He has said that there is to be no compulsory slavery between the believer and the disbeliever (the Christian and the pagan). But on the other hand there is to be no reckless abuse of this liberty, no license. {As the Lord hath distributed to each man} (\hekast^i h^s memeriken ho kurios). Perfect active indicative of \meriz^, old verb from \meros, apart. Each has his lot from the Lord Jesus, has his call from God. He is not to seek a rupture of the marriage relation if the unbeliever does not ask for it. {And so ordain I} (\kai hout^s diatassomai). Military term, old word, to arrange in all the churches (distributed, \dia-). Paul is conscious of authoritative leadership as the apostle of Christ to the Gentiles.

7:18 {Let him not become uncircumcized} (\m^ epispasth^). Present middle imperative of \epispa^, old verb to draw on. In LXX (I Macc. 1:15) and Josephus (_Ant_. XII, V. I) in this sense. Here only in N.T. The point is that a Jew is to remain a Jew, a Gentile to be a Gentile. Both stand on an equality in the Christian churches. This freedom about circumcision illustrates the freedom about Gentile mixed marriages.

7:19 {But the keeping of the commandments of God} (\alla t^r^sis entol^'n theou). Old word in sense of watching (Ac 4:3). Paul's view of the worthlessness of circumcision or of uncircumcision is stated again in Ga 5:6; 6:15; Ro 2:25-29 (only the inward or spiritual Jew counts).

7:20 {Wherein he was called} (\h^i ekl^th^). When he was called by God and saved, whether a Jew or a Gentile, a slave or a freeman.

7:21 {Wast thou called being a bondservant?} (\doulos eklths;). First aorist passive indicative. Wast thou, a slave, called? {Care not for it} (\m^{soi melet}). "Let it not be a care to thee." Third person singular (impersonal) of \melei, old verb with dative \soi. It was usually a fixed condition and a slave could be a good servant of Christ (Col 3:22; Eph 6:5; Tit 2:9), even with heathen masters. {Use it rather} (\mallon chr^{sai}). Make use of what? There is no "it" in the Greek. Shall we supply \eleutherifi (instrumental case after \chr^{sai} or \douleifi)? Most naturally \eleutherifi, freedom, from \eleutheros, just before. In that case \ei kai is not taken as although, but \kai goes with \dunasai, "But if thou canst also become free, the rather use your opportunity for freedom." On the whole this is probably Paul's idea and is in full harmony with the general principle above about mixed marriages with the heathen. \Chr^{sai} is second person singular aorist middle imperative of \chraomai, to use, old and common verb.

7:22 {The Lord's freedman} (\apeleutheros Kuriou). \Apeleutheros is an old word for a manumitted slave, \eleutheros from \erchomai, to go and so go free, \ap- from bondage. Christ is now the owner of the Christian and Paul rejoices to call himself Christ's slave (\doulos). But Christ set us free from sin by paying the ransom (\lutron) of his life on the Cross (Mt 20:28; Ro 8:2; Ga 5:1). Christ is thus the _patronus_ of the _libertus_ who owes everything to his _patronus_. He is no longer the slave of sin (Ro 6:6,18), but a slave to God (Ro 6:22). {Likewise the freeman when called is Christ's slave} (\homoi^s ho eleutheros kl^{theis} doulos estin Christou). Those who were not slaves, but freemen, when converted, are as much slaves of Christ as those who were and still were slaves of men. All were slaves of sin and have been set free from sin by Christ who now owns them all.

7:23 {Ye were bought with a price} (\tim^s gorasth^{te}). See on 6:20 for this very phrase, here repeated. Both classes (slaves and freemen) were purchased by the blood of Christ. {Become not bondservants of men} (\m^{ginesthe douloi anthr^pn}). Present middle imperative of \ginomai with negative \m. Literally, stop becoming slaves of men. Paul here clearly defines his opposition to human slavery as an institution which comes out so powerfully in the Epistle to Philemon. Those already free from human slavery should not become enslaved.

7:24 {With God} (\para the“i\). There is comfort in that. Even a slave can have God at his side by remaining at God's side.

7:25 {I have no commandment of the Lord} (\epitag^n Kuriou ouk ech“\). A late word from \epitass“\, old Greek verb to enjoin, to give orders to. Paul did have (verse 10) a command from the Lord as we have in Matthew and Mark. It was quite possible for Paul to know this command of Jesus as he did other sayings of Jesus (Ac 20:35) even if he had as yet no access to a written gospel or had received no direct revelation on the subject from Jesus (1Co 11:23). Sayings of Jesus were passed on among the believers. But Paul had no specific word from Jesus on the subject of virgins. They call for special treatment, young unmarried women only Paul means (7:25,28,34,36-38) and not as in Re 14:4 (metaphor). It is probable that in the letter (7:1) the Corinthians had asked about this problem. {But I give my judgment} (\gn“m^n de did“mi\). About mixed marriages (12-16) Paul had the command of Jesus concerning divorce to guide him. Here he has nothing from Jesus at all. So he gives no "command," but only "a judgment," a deliberately formed decision from knowledge (2Co 8:10), not a mere passing fancy. {As one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful} (\h“s^le^menos hupo kuriou pistos einai\). Perfect passive participle of \elee“\, old verb to receive mercy (\eleos\). \Pistos\ is predicate nominative with infinitive \einai\). This language, so far from being a disclaimer of inspiration, is an express claim to help from the Lord in the forming of this duly considered judgment, which is in no sense a command, but an inspired opinion.

7:26 {I think therefore} (\nomiz“oun\). Paul proceeds to express therefore the previously mentioned judgment (\gn“m^n\) and calls it his opinion, not because he is uncertain, but simply because it is not a command, but advice. {By reason of the present distress} (\dia t^n enest“san anagk^n\). The participle \enest“san\ is second perfect active of \enist^mi\ and means "standing on" or "present" (cf. Ga 1:4; Heb 9:9). It occurs in 2Th 2:2 of the advent of Christ as not "present." Whether Paul has in mind the hoped for second coming of Jesus in this verse we do not certainly know, though probably so. Jesus had spoken of those calamities which would precede his coming (Mt 24:8ff.) though Paul had denied saying that the advent was right at hand (2Th 2:2). \Anagk^ is a strong word (old and common), either for external circumstances or inward sense of duty. It occurs elsewhere for the woes preceding the second coming (Lu 21:23) and also for Paul's persecutions (1Th 3:7; 2Co 6:4; 12:10). Perhaps there is a mingling of both ideas here. {Namely}. This word is not in the Greek. The infinitive of indirect discourse (\huparchein) after \nomiz“ is repeated with recitative \hoti, "That the being so is good for a man" (\hoti kalon anthr“p“i to hout“s einai). The use of the article \to with \einai compels this translation. Probably Paul means for one (\anthr“p“i, generic term for man or woman) to remain as he is whether married or unmarried. The copula \estin is not expressed. He uses \kalon (good) as in 7:1.

7:27 {Art thou bound to a wife?} (\dedesai gunaiki;). Perfect passive indicative of \de“, to bind, with dative case \gunaiki. Marriage bond as in Ro 7:2. {Seek not to be loosed} (\m^z^tei lusin). Present active imperative with negative \m^\", "Do not be seeking release" (\lusin) from the marriage bond, old word, here only in N.T. {Seek not a wife} (\m^z^tei gunaika). Same construction, Do not be seeking a wife. Bachelors as well as widowers are included in \lelusai (loosed, perfect passive indicative of \lu“). This advice of Paul he only urges "because of the present necessity" (verse 26). Whether he held on to this opinion later one does not know. Certainly he gives the noblest view of marriage in Eph 5:22-33. Paul does not present it as his opinion for all men at all times. Men feel it their duty to seek a wife.

7:28 {But and if thou marry} (\ean de kai gam^s^is). Condition of the third class, undetermined with prospect of being determined, with the ingressive first aorist (late form) active subjunctive with \ean: "But if thou also commit matrimony or get married," in spite of Paul's advice to the contrary. {Thou hast not sinned} (\ouch h^martes). Second aorist active indicative of \hamartan“, to sin, to miss a mark. Here either Paul uses the timeless (gnomic) aorist indicative or by a swift transition he changes the standpoint (proleptic) in the conclusion from the future (in the condition) to the past. Such mixed conditions are common (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1020, 1023). Precisely the same construction occurs with the case of the virgin (\parthenos) except that the old form of the first aorist subjunctive (\g^m^i) occurs in place of the late \gam^s^i above. The MSS. interchange both examples. There is no special point in the difference in the forms. {Shall have tribulation in the flesh} (\thlipsin t̂i sarki hexousin). Emphatic position of \thlipsin (pressure). See 2Co 12:7 \skolops t̂i sarki (thorn in the flesh). {And I would spare you} (\eg“ de hum“n pheidomai). Possibly conative present middle indicative, I am trying to spare you like \agei in Ro 2:4 and \dikaiousathe in Ga 5:4.

7:29 {But this I say} (\touto de pĥmi. Note \pĥmi here rather than \leg“ (verses 8,12). A new turn is here given to the argument about the present necessity. {The time is shortened} (\ho kairos sunestalmenos estin). Perfect periphrastic passive indicative of \sustell“, old verb to place together, to draw together. Only twice in the N.T., here and Ac 5:6 which see. Found in the papyri for curtailing expenses. Calvin takes it for the shortness of human life, but apparently Paul pictures the foreshortening of time (opportunity) because of the possible nearness of and hope for the second coming. But in Philippians Paul faces death as his fate (Php 1:21-26), though still looking for the coming of Christ (3:20). {That henceforth} (\to loipon hina). Proleptic position of \to loipon before \hina and in the accusative of general reference and \hina has the notion of result rather than purpose (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 997). {As though they had none} (\h“s m̂ echontes). This use of \h“s with the participle for an assumed condition is regular and \m̂ in the _Koin,_ is the normal negative of the participle. So the idiom runs on through verse 31.

7:30 {As though they possessed not} (\h“s m̂ katechontes). See this use of \katech“, old verb to hold down (Lu 14:9), to keep fast, to possess, in 2Co 6:10. Paul means that all earthly relations are to hang loosely about us in view of the second coming.

7:31 {Those that use the world} (\hoi chr“menoi ton kosmon). Old verb \chraomai, usually with the instrumental case, but the accusative occurs in some Cretan inscriptions and in late writers according to a tendency of verbs to resume the use of the original accusative (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 468). {As not abusing it} (\h“s m̂ katachr̂menoi). Perfective use of \kata in composition, old verb, but here only in N.T., to use up, use to the full. Papyri give examples of this sense. This is more likely the idea than "abusing" it. {For the fashion of this world passeth away} (\paragei gar to scĥma tou kosmou toutou). Cf. 1Jo 2:17. \Scĥma is the _habitus_, the outward appearance, old word, in N.T. only here and Php 2:7f. \Paragei\ (old word) means "passes along" like a moving panorama (movie show!). Used of Jesus passing by in Jericho (Mt 20:30).

7:32 {Free from cares} (\amerimnous\). Old compound adjective (\a\ privative and \merimna\, anxiety). In N.T. only here and Mt 28:14 which see. {The things of the Lord} (\ta tou Kuriou\). The ideal state (so as to the widow and the virgin in verse 33), but even the unmarried do let the cares of the world choke the word (Mr 4:19). {How he may please the Lord} (\p“s ares^i t“i Kuri“i\). Deliberative subjunctive with \p“s\ retained in an indirect question. Dative case of \Kuri“i\. Same construction in verse 33 with \p“s ares^i t^i gunaiki\ (his wife) and in 34 \p“s ares^i t“i andri\ (her husband).

7:34 {And there is a difference also between the wife and the virgin} (\kai memeristai kai h^ gun^ kai h^ parthenos\). But the text here is very uncertain, almost hopelessly so. Westcott and Hort put \kai memeristai\ in verse 33 and begin a new sentence with \kai h^ gun^\ and add \h^ agamos\ after \h^ gun^\, meaning "the widow and the virgin each is anxious for the things of the Lord" like the unmarried man (\ho agamos\, bachelor or widow) in verse 32. Possibly so, but the MSS. vary greatly at every point. At any rate Paul's point is that the married woman is more disposed to care for the things of the world. But, alas, how many unmarried women (virgins and widows) are after the things of the world today and lead a fast and giddy life.

7:35 {For your own profit} (\pros to hum“n aut“n sumphoron\). Old adjective, advantageous, with neuter article here as substantive, from verb \sumpher“\ . In N.T. here only and 10:33. Note reflexive plural form \hum“n aut“n\ . {Not that I may cast a snare upon you} (\ouch hina brochon humin epibal“\). \Brochon\ is a noose or slip-knot used for lassoing animals, old word, only here in N.T. Papyri have an example "hanged by a noose." \Epibal“\ is second aorist active subjunctive of \epiball“\, old verb to cast upon. Paul does not wish to capture the Corinthians by lasso and compel them to do what they do not wish about getting married. {For that which is seemly} (\pros to eusch^mon\). Old adjective (\eu\, well, \sch^m“n\, shapely, comely, from \sch^ma\, figure). For the purpose of decorum. {Attend upon the Lord} (\euparedron\). Adjective construed with \pros to\, before, late word (Hesychius) from \eu\, well, and \paredros\, sitting beside, "for the good position beside the Lord" (associative instrumental case of \Kuri“i). Cf. Mary sitting at the feet of Jesus (Lu 10:39). {Without distraction} (\aperispast“s). Late adverb (Polybius, Plutarch, LXX) from the adjective \aperispastos (common in the papyri) from \a privative and \perispa“, to draw around (Lu 10:40).

7:36 {That he behaveth himself unseemly} (\asch^monein). Old verb, here only in N.T., from \asch^m“n (1Co 12:23), from \a privative and \sch^ma. Occurs in the papyri. Infinitive in indirect discourse after \nomizei (thinks) with \ei (condition of first class, assumed as true). {If she be past the flower of her age} (\ean ^i huperakmos). Old word, only here in N.T., from \huper (over) and \akm^ (prime or bloom of life), past the bloom of youth, _superadultus_ (Vulgate). Compound adjective with feminine form like masculine. Apparently the Corinthians had asked Paul about the duty of a father towards his daughter old enough to marry. {If need so requireth} (\kai hout“s opheilei ginesthai). "And it ought to happen." Paul has discussed the problem of marriage for virgins on the grounds of expediency. Now he faces the question where the daughter wishes to marry and there is no serious objection to it. The father is advised to consent. Roman and Greek fathers had the control of the marriage of their daughters. "My marriage is my father's care; it is not for me to decide about that" (Hermione in Euripides' _Andromache_, 987). {Let them marry} (\gameit“san). Present active plural imperative (long form).

7:37 {To keep his own virgin daughter} (\t^rein t^n heautou parthenon). This means the case when the virgin daughter does not wish to marry and the father agrees with her, {he shall do well} (\kal“s poi^sei).

7:38 {Doeth well} (\kal“s poiei). So Paul commends the father who gives his daughter in marriage (\gamizei). This verb \gamiz“ has not been found outside the N.T. See on ^Mt 22:30. {Shall do better} (\kreisson poi^sei). In view of the present distress (7:26) and the shortened time (7:29). And yet, when all is said, Paul leaves the whole problem of getting married an open question to be settled by each individual case.

7:39 {For so long time as her husband liveth} (\eph' hoson chronon z^i ho an^r aut^s). While he lives (\t“i z“nti andri) Paul says in Ro 7:2. This is the ideal and is pertinent today when husbands meet their ex-wives and wives meet their ex-husbands. There is a screw loose somewhere. Paul here treats as a sort of addendum the remarriage of widows. He will discuss it again in 1Ti 5:9-13 and then he will advise younger widows to marry. Paul leaves her free here also to be married again, "only in the Lord" (\monon en Kuri“i). Every marriage ought to be "in the Lord." {To be married} (\gam^th^nai) is first aorist passive infinitive followed by the dative relative \h“i\ with unexpressed antecedent \tout“i\.

7:40 {Happier} (\makari“terf). Comparative of \makarios\ used in the Beatitudes (Mt 5:3ff.). {After my judgment} (\kata t^n em^n gn“m^n). The same word used in verse 25, not a command. {I think} (\dok“). From \doke“\, not \nomiz“\ of verse 26. But he insists that he has "the spirit of God" (\pneuma theou) in the expression of his inspired judgment on this difficult, complicated, tangled problem of marriage. But he has discharged his duty and leaves each one to decide for himself.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

9:1 {Am I not free?} (\Ouk eimi eleutheros; \). Free as a Christian from Mosaic ceremonialism (cf. 9:19) as much as any Christian and yet he adapts his moral independence to the principle of considerate love in 8:13. {Am I not an apostle?} (\ouk eimi apostolos; \). He has the exceptional privileges as an apostle to support from the churches and yet he foregoes these. {Have I not seen Jesus our Lord?} (\ouchi I'soun ton Kurion h^m^"n heoraka; \). Proof (15:8; Ac 9:17,27; 18:9; 22:14,17f.; 2Co 12:1ff.) that he has the qualification of an apostle (Ac 1:22) though not one of the twelve. Note strong form of the negative \ouchi\ here. All these questions expect an affirmative answer. The perfect active \heoraka\ from \hora^"\, to see, does not here have double reduplication as in Joh 1:18.

{Are not ye?} (\ou humeis este; \). They were themselves proof of his apostleship.

9:2 {Yet at least I am to you} (\alla ge humin eimi\). An _argumentum ad hominem_ and a pointed appeal for their support. Note use of \alla ge\ in the apodosis (cf. 8:6).

9:3 {My defence} (\h^em^ apologia\). Original sense, not idea of apologizing as we say. See on ^Ac 22:1; 25:16. Refers to what precedes and to what follows as illustration of 8:13. {To them that examine me} (\tois eme anakrinousin\). See on ^1Co 2:15; 4:3. The critics in Corinth were "investigating" Paul with sharp eyes to find faults. How often the pastor is under the critic's spy-glass.

9:4 {Have we no right?} (\M^ ouk echomen exousian; \). Literary plural here though singular in 1-3. The \m^ in this double negative expects the answer "No" while \ouk\ goes with the verb \echomen\. "Do we fail to have the right?" Cf. Ro 10:18f. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1173).

9:5 {Have we no right?} (\M^ ouk echomen exousian; \). Same idiom. {To lead about a wife that is a believer?} (\adelph^n gunaika periagein; \). Old verb \perieg^"\, intransitive in Ac 13:11. Two substantives in apposition, a sister a wife, a common Greek idiom. This is a plea for the support of the preacher's wife and children. Plainly Paul has no wife at this time. {And Cephas} (\kai K`phfs). Why is he singled out by name? Perhaps because of his prominence and because of the use of his name in the divisions in Corinth (1:12). It was well known that Peter was married (Mt 8:14). Paul mentions James by name in Ga 1:19 as one of the Lord's brothers. All the other apostles were either married or had the right to be.

9:6 {Have we not a right to forbear working?} (\ouk echomen exousian m` ergazesthai;). By \^ (or) Paul puts the other side about Barnabas (the only allusion since the dispute in Ac 15:39, but in good spirit) and himself. Perhaps (Hofmann) Paul has in mind the fact that in the first great mission tour (Ac 13; 14), Barnabas and Paul received no help from the church in Antioch, but were left to work their way along at their own charges. It was not till the Philippian Church took hold that Paul had financial aid (Php 4:15). Here both negatives have their full force. Literally, Do we not have (\ouk echomen, expecting the affirmative reply) the right not (\m`, negative of the infinitive \ergazesthai) to do manual labour (usual meaning of \ergazomai\ as in 4:12)?" There was no more compulsion on Paul and Barnabas to support themselves than upon the other workers for Christ. They renounced no rights in being voluntarily independent.

9:7 {What soldier ever serveth?} (\tis strateuetai pote;). "Who ever serves as a soldier?" serves in an army (\stratos). Present middle of old verb \strateu`. {At his own charges} (\idiois ops`niois). This late word \ops`nion (from \opson\, cooked meat or relish with bread, and \`neomai\, to buy) found in Menander, Polybius, and very common in papyri and inscriptions in the sense of rations or food, then for the soldiers' wages (often provisions) or the pay of any workman. So of the wages of sin (Ro 6:23). Paul uses \lab`n ops`nion (receiving wages, the regular idiom) in 2Co 11:8. See Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_; Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, pp. 148,266; _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 168. To give proof of his right to receive pay for preaching Paul uses the illustrations of the soldier (verse 7), the husbandman (verse 7), the shepherd (verse 7), the ox treading out the grain (8), the ploughman (verse 10), the priests in the temple (13), proof enough in all conscience, and yet not enough for some churches who even today starve their pastors in the name of piety. {Who planteth a vineyard?} (\tis phuteuei ampel“na;\). \Ampel“n\ no earlier than Diodorus, but in LXX and in papyri. Place of vines (\ampelos\), meaning of ending \-“n\. {Who feedeth a flock?} (\tis poimainei poimn^“n;\). Cognate accusative, both old words. Paul likens the pastor to a soldier, vinedresser, shepherd. He contends with the world, he plants churches, he exercises a shepherd's care over them (Vincent).

9:8 {Do I speak these things after the manner of men?} (\M^ kata anthr“pon tauta lal“;\). Negative answer expected. Paul uses \kata anthr“pon\ six times (1Co 3:3; 9:8; 15:32; Gal 1:11; 3:15; Ro 3:5). The illustrations from human life are pertinent, but he has some of a higher order, from Scripture. {The law also} (\kai ho nomos\). Perhaps objection was made that the Scripture does not support the practice of paying preachers. That objection is still made by the stingy.

9:9 {Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn} (\ou phim“seis boun alo“nta\). Quotation from De 25:4. Prohibition by \ou\ and the volitive future indicative. \Phimo“\, to muzzle (from \phimos\, a muzzle for dogs and oxen), appears first in Aristophanes (_Clouds_, 592) and not again till LXX and N.T., though in the papyri also. Evidently a vernacular word, perhaps a slang word. See metaphorical use in Mt 22:12,34. \Alo“nta\ is present active participle of the old verb \aloe“\, occurs in the N.T. only here (and verse 10) and 1Ti 5:18 where it is also quoted. It is probably derived from \halos\ or \halon\, a threshing-floor, or the disc of a shield or of the sun and moon. The Egyptians according to the monuments, used oxen to thresh out the grain, sometimes donkeys, by pulling a drag over the grain. The same process may be found today in Andalusia, Italy, Palestine. A hieroglyphic inscription at Eileithyas reads:

"Thresh ye yourselves, O oxen,
Measures of grain for yourselves,
Measures of grain for your masters."

Note \m^ melei\ expects the negative answer, impersonal verb with dative and genitive cases (\theoi\, God, \bo“n\, oxen).

{Altogether} (\pant“s\). But here probably with the notion of doubtless or assuredly. The editors differ in the verse divisions here. The Canterbury Version puts both these questions in verse 10, the American Standard the first in verse 9, the second in verse 10.

9:10 {He that plougheth} (\ho arotri“n). Late verb \arotria“, to plough, for the old \aro“ from \arotron (plough), in LXX and rare in papyri. {In hope of partaking} (\ep' elpidi tou metechain). The infinitive \alofin is not repeated nor is \opheilei though it is understood, "He that thresheth ought to thresh in hope of partaking." He that ploughs hardly refers to the ox at the plough as he that threshes does. The point is that all the workers (beast or man) share in the fruit of the toil.

9:11 {Is it a great matter?} (\mega;). The copula \estin has to be supplied. Note two conditions of first class with \ei, both assumed to be true. On \pneumatika and \sarkika see on ²2:14; 3:3. This point comes out sharply also in Ga 6:6.

9:12 {Over you} (\hum“n). Objective genitive after \exousian. {Do not we yet more?} (\ou mallon h^meis;). Because of Paul's peculiar relation to that church as founder and apostle. {But we bear all things} (\alla panta stegomen). Old verb to cover (\steg^, roof) and so to cover up, to conceal, to endure (1Co 13:7 of love). Paul deliberately declined to use (usual instrumental case with \chraomai) his right to pay in Corinth. {That we may cause no hindrance} (\hina m^ tina enkop^n d“men). Late word \enkop^, a cutting in (cf. _radio_ or telephone) or hindrance from \enkopt^, to cut in, rare word (like \ekkop^) here only in N.T. and once in Vettius Valens. How considerate Paul is to avoid "a hindrance to the gospel of Christ" (\t“i euaggeli“i tou Christou, dative case and genitive) rather than insist on his personal rights and liberties, an eloquent example for all modern men.

9:13 {Sacred things} (\ta hiera). {Of the temple} (\tou hierou). Play on the same word \hierou (sacred). See Nu 18:8-20 for the details. This is a very pertinent illustration. {They which wait upon the altar} (\hoi t“i thusiast^ri“i paredreuontes). Old word \paredreu“, to sit beside, from \par--edros, like Latin _assidere_, and so constant attendance. Only here in the N.T. Locative case \thusiast^ri“i, late word found so far only in LXX, Philo, Josephus, N.T., and ecclesiastical writers. See on ²Mt 5:23.

9:14 {Even so did the Lord ordain} (\hout“s kai ho Kurios dietaxen). Just as God gave orders about the priests in the temple, so did the Lord Jesus give orders for those who preach the gospel to live out of the gospel (\ek tou euaggeliou z'in). Evidently Paul was familiar with the words of Jesus in Mt 10:10; Lu 10:7f. either in oral or written form. He has made his argument for the minister's salary complete for all time.

9:15 {For it were good for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void} (\kalon gar moi mallon apothanein ^ to kauch^ma mou oudeis ken“sei). The tangled syntax of this sentence reflects the intensity of Paul's feeling on the subject. He repeats his refusal to use his privileges and rights to a salary by use of the present perfect middle indicative (\kechr^mai). By the epistolary aorist (\egrapsa) he explains that he is not now hinting for a change on their part towards him in the matter, "in my case" (\en emoi). Then he gives his reason in vigorous language without a copula (\^n\, were): "For good for me to die rather than," but here he changes the construction by a violent anacoluthon. Instead of another infinitive (\ken“sai) after \^ (than) he changes to the future indicative without \hoti or \hina, "No one shall make my glorying void," viz., his independence of help from them. \Keno“ is an old verb, from \kenos, empty, only in Paul in N.T. See on 1Co 1:17.

9:16 {For if I preach} (\ean gar euaggeliz“mai). Third class condition, supposable case. Same construction in verse 16 (\ean m^). {For necessity is laid upon me} (\anagk^ gar moi epikeitai). Old verb, lies upon me (dative case \moi). Jesus had called him (Ac 9:6,15; Ga 1:15f.; Ro 1:14). He could do no other and deserves no credit for doing it. {Woe is me} (\ouai gar moi). Explaining the \anagk^ (necessity). Paul had to heed the call of Christ that he had heard. He had a real call to the ministry. Would that this were the case with every modern preacher.

9:17 {Of mine own will} (\hek“n) {--not of mine own will} (\ak“n). Both common adjectives, but only here in N.T. save \hek“n, also in Ro 8:20. The argument is not wholly clear. Paul's call was so clear that he certainly did his work {willingly} and so had a reward (see on Mt 6:1 for \misthos); but the only {reward} that he had for his willing work (Marcus Dods) was to make the gospel {free of expense} (\adapanon\, verse 18, rare word, here only in N.T., once in inscription at Priene). This was his \misthos. It was glorying (\kauch^ma\, to be able to say so as in Ac 20:33f.). {I have a stewardship} intrusted to me} (\oikonomian pepisteumai). Perfect passive indicative with the accusative retained. I have been intrusted with a stewardship and so would go on with my task like any \oikonomos (steward) even if \ak“n (unwilling).

9:18 {So as not to use to the full} (\eis to m^ katachr^sasthai). \Eis to for purpose with articular infinitive and perfective use of \kata (as in 7:31) with \chr^sasthai (first aorist middle infinitive).

9:19 {I brought myself under bondage} (\emauton edoul“sa). Voluntary bondage, I enslaved myself to all, though free. Causative verb in \-o“ (\doulo“\, from \doulos). The more (\tous pleionas). Than he could have done otherwise. Every preacher faces this problem of his personal attitude and conduct. Note \kerd^s“ (as in verses 20,21,22, but once \hina kerdan“\ in 21, regular liquid future of \kerdain“) with \hina is probably future active indicative (Jas 4:13), though Ionic aorist active subjunctive from \kerda“ is possible (Mt 18:15). "He refuses payment in money that he may make the greater gain in souls" (Edwards).

9:20 {As a Jew} (\h“s Ioudaios). He was a Jew and was not ashamed of it (Ac 18:18; 21:26). {Not being myself under the law} (\m^ “n autos hupo nomon). He was emancipated from the law as a means of salvation, yet he knew how to speak to them because of his former beliefs and life with them (Ga 4:21). He knew how to put the gospel to them without compromise and without offence.

9:21 {To them that are without law} (\tois anomois). The heathen, those outside the Mosaic law (Ro 2:14), not lawless (Lu 22:37; Ac 2:23; 1Ti 1:9). See how Paul bore himself with the pagans (Ac 14:15; 17:23; 24:25), and how he quoted heathen poets. "Not being an outlaw of God, but an inlaw of Christ" (Evans, Estius has it _exlex, inlex_, \m^ “n anomos theou, all' ennomos Christou). The genitive case of \theou and \Christou (specifying case) comes out better thus, for it seems unusual with \anomos and \ennomos, both old and regular adjectives.

9:22 {I became weak} (\egenom^ n asthen^s). This is the chief point, the climax in his plea for the principle of love on the part of the enlightened for the benefit of the unenlightened (chapter 1Co 8). He thus brings home his conduct about renouncing pay for preaching as an illustration of love (8:13).

{All things} (\panta\). {to all men} (\tois pasin\, the whole number) {by all means} (\pant“s\). Pointed play on the word all, {that I may save some} (\hina tinas s“s“\). This his goal and worth all the cost of adaptation. In matters of principle Paul was adamant as about Titus the Greek (Ga 2:5). In matters of expediency as about Timothy (Ac 16:3) he would go half way to win and to hold. This principle was called for in dealing with the problem of eating meat offered to idols (Ro 14:1; 15:1; 1Th 5:14).

9:23 {That I may be a joint partaker thereof} (\hina sunkoin“nos autou gen“mai\). Literally, That I may become co-partner with others in the gospel. The point is that he may be able to share the gospel with others, his evangelistic passion. \Sunkoin“nos\ is a compound word (\sun\, together with, \koin“nos\, partner or sharer). We have two genitives with it in Php 1:7, though \en\ and the locative is used in Re 1:9. It is found only in the N.T. and a late papyrus. Paul does not wish to enjoy the gospel just by himself.

9:24 {In a race} (\en stadi“i\). Old word from \hist^mi\, to place. A stated or fixed distance, 606 3/4 feet, both masculine \stadion\ (Mt 14:24; Lu 24:13) and neuter as here. Most of the Greek cities had race-courses for runners like that at Olympia. {The prize} (\to brabeion\). Late word, in inscriptions and papyri. Latin _brabeum_. In N. T. only here and Php 3:14. The victor's prize which only one could receive. {That ye may attain} (\hina katalab^te\). Final use of \hina\ and perfective use of \kata-\ with \lab^te\ (effective aorist active subjunctive, grasp and hold). Old verb \katalamban“\ and used in Php 3:12ff.

9:25 {That striveth in the games} (\ho ag“nizomenos\). Common verb for contest in the athletic games (\ag“n\), sometimes with the cognate accusative, \ag“na ag“nizomai\ as in 1Ti 6:12; 2Ti 4:7. Probably Paul often saw these athletic games. {Is temperate in all things} (\panta egkrateuetai\). Rare verb, once in Aristotle and in a late Christian inscription, and 1Co 7:9 and here, from \egkrat^s\, common adjective for one who controls himself. The athlete then and now has to control himself (direct middle) in all things (accusative of general reference). This is stated by Paul as an athletic axiom. Training for ten months was required under the direction of trained judges. Abstinence from wine was required and a rigid diet and regimen of habits.

{A corruptible crown} (\phtharton stephanon\). \Stephanos\ (crown) is from \steph^, to put around the head, like the Latin _corona_, wreath or garland, badge of victory in the games. In the Isthmian games it was of pine leaves, earlier of parsley, in the Olympian games of the wild olive. "Yet these were the most coveted honours in the whole Greek world" (Findlay). For the crown of thorns on Christ's head see Mt 27:29; Mr 15:17; Joh 19:2,5. \Diad^ma\ (diadem) was for kings (Re 12:3). Favourite metaphor in N.T., the crown of righteousness (2Ti 4:8), the crown of life (Jas 1:12), the crown of glory (1Pe 5:4), the crown of rejoicing (1Th 2:9), description of the Philippians (Php 4:1). Note contrast between \phtharton\ (verbal adjective from \phtheir^, to corrupt) like the garland of pine leaves, wild olive, or laurel, and \aphtharton\ (same form with \a\ privative) like the crown of victory offered the Christian, the amaranthine (unfading rose) crown of glory (1Pe 5:4).

9:26 {So} (\hout^s\). Both with \trech^ (run) and \pukteu^ (fight). {As not uncertainly} (\h^s ouk ad^l^s\). Instead of exhorting them further Paul describes his own conduct as a runner in the race. He explains \hout^s\, \Ad^l^s\ old adverb, only here in N.T. His objective is clear, with Christ as the goal (Php 3:14). He kept his eye on Christ as Christ watched him. {Fight} (\pukteu^). Paul changes the metaphor from the runner to the boxer. Old verb (only here in N.T.) from \pukt^s\ (pugilist) and that from \pugm^ (fist). See on ^Mr 7:3). {As not beating the air} (\h^s ouk aera der^n\). A boxer did this when practising without an adversary (cf. doing "the daily dozen") and this was called "shadow-fighting" (\skiamachia\). He smote something more solid than air. Probably \ou\ negatives \aera\, though it still occurs with the participle as a strong and positive negative.

9:27 {But I buffet my body} (\alla hup^piaz^ mou to s^ma\). In Aristophanes, Aristotle, Plutarch, from \hup^pion\, and that from \hupo\ and \ops\ (in papyri), the part of the face under the eyes, a blow in the face, to beat black and blue. In N.T. only here and Lu 18:5 which see. Paul does not, like the Gnostics, consider his \sarx\ or his \s^ma\ sinful and evil. But "it is like the horses in a chariot race, which must be kept well in hand by whip and rein if the prize is to be secured" (Robertson and Plummer). The boxers often used boxing gloves (\cestus\, of ox-hide bands) which gave telling blows. Paul was not willing for his body to be his master. He found good as the outcome of this self-discipline (2Co 12:7; Ro 8:13; Col 2:23; 3:5). {And bring it into bondage} (\kai doulag“g“). Late compound verb from \doulag“gos, in Diodorus Siculus, Epictetus and substantive in papyri. It is the metaphor of the victor leading the vanquished as captive and slave. {Lest by any means} (\m^p“s). Common conjunction for negative purpose with subjunctive as here (\gen“mai, second aorist middle). {After that I have preached to others} (\allois k^r-xas). First aorist active participle of \k^russ“ (see on 1:23), common verb to preach, from word \k^rux (herald) and that is probably the idea here. A \k^rux at the games announced the rules of the game and called out the competitors. So Paul is not merely a herald, but a competitor also. {I myself should be rejected} (\autos adokimos gen“mai). Literally, "I myself should become rejected." \Adokimos is an old adjective used of metals, coin, soil (Heb 6:8) and in a moral sense only by Paul in N.T. (1Co 9:27; 2Co 13:5-7; Ro 1:28; Tit 1:16; 2Ti 3:8). It means not standing the test (\dokimos from \dokimaz“). Paul means rejected for the {prize}, not for the entrance to the race. He will fail to win if he breaks the rules of the game (Mt 7:22f.). What is the prize before Paul? Is it that {reward} (\misthos) of which he spoke in verse 18, his glorying of preaching a free gospel? So Edwards argues. Most writers take Paul to refer to the possibility of his rejection in his personal salvation at the end of the race. He does not claim absolute perfection (Php 3:12) and so he presses on. At the end he has serene confidence (2Ti 4:7) with the race run and won. It is a humbling thought for us all to see this wholesome fear instead of smug complacency in this greatest of all heralds of Christ.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

10:1 {For} (\gar\). Correct text, not \de\. Paul appeals to the experience of the Israelites in the wilderness in confirmation of his statement concerning himself in 9:26f. and as a powerful warning to the Corinthians who may be tempted to flirt with the idolatrous practices of their neighbours. It is a real, not an imaginary peril. {All under the cloud} (\pantes hupo tⁿ nephelⁿ\). They all marched under the pillar of cloud by day (Ex 13:21; 14:19) which covered the host (Nu 14:14; Ps 95:39). This mystic cloud was the symbol of the presence of the Lord with the people.

10:2 {Were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea} (\pantes eis ton M^{us}^n ebaptisanto en tⁱ nephelⁱ kai en tⁱ thalassⁱ\). The picture is plain enough. The mystic cloud covered the people while the sea rose in walls on each side of them as they marched across. B K L P read \ebaptisanto\ (causative first aorist middle, got themselves baptized) while Aleph A C D have \ebaptisth^{san}\ (first aorist passive, were baptized). The immersion was complete for all of them in the sea around them and the cloud over them. Moses was their leader then as Christ is now and so Paul uses \eis\ concerning the relation of the Israelites to Moses as he does of our baptism in relation to Christ (Ga 3:27).

10:3 {The same spiritual meat} (\to auto pneumatikon br^{ma}\). Westcott and Hort needlessly bracket to \auto\. \Br^{ma}\ is food, not just flesh. The reference is to the manna (Ex 16:13ff.) which is termed "spiritual" by reason of its supernatural character. Jesus called himself the true bread from heaven (Joh 6:35) which the manna typified.

10:4 {For they drank of a spiritual rock that followed them} (\epinon ek pneumatik^s akolouthous^s petras\). Change to the imperfect \epinon\ shows their continual access to the supernatural source of supply. The Israelites were blessed by the water from the rock that Moses smote at Rephidim (Ex 17:6) and at Kadesh (Nu 20:11) and by the well of Beer (Nu 21:16). The rabbis had a legend that the water actually followed the Israelites for forty years, in one form a fragment of rock fifteen feet high that followed the people and gushed out water. Baur and some other scholars think that Paul adopts this "Rabbinical legend that the water-bearing Rephidim rock journeyed onwards with the Israelites" (Findlay). That is hard to believe, though it is quite possible that Paul alludes to this fancy and gives it a spiritual turn as a type of Christ in allegorical fashion. Paul knew the views of the rabbis and made use of allegory on occasion (Ga 4:24). {And the rock was Christ} (h^petra de ^n ho Christos). He definitely states here in symbolic form the preexistence of Christ. But surely "we must not disgrace Paul by making him say that the pre-incarnate Christ followed the march of Israel in the shape of a lump of rock" (Hofmann). He does mean that Christ was the source of the water which saved the Israelites from perishing (Robertson and Plummer) as he is the source of supply for us today.

10:5 {With most of them} (en tois pleiosin aut^n). "A mournful understatement," for only two (Caleb and Joshua) actually reached the Promised Land (Nu 14:30-32). All the rest were rejected or \adokimoi (9:27). {Were overthrown} (katestr^th^san). First aorist passive indicative of \katastr^nnumi, old compound verb, to stretch or spread down as of a couch, to lay low (Euripides), as if by a hurricane. Powerful picture of the desolation wrought by the years of disobedience and wanderings in the desert by this verb quoted from Nu 14:16.

10:6 {Were our examples} (tupoi h^m^en egen^th^san). More exactly, examples for us (objective genitive h^m^en, not subjective genitive, of us). The word \tupoi (our types) comes from \tupt^, to strike, and meant originally the mark of a blow as the print of the nails (Joh 20:25), then a figure formed by a blow like images of the gods (Ac 7:43), then an example to be imitated (1Pe 5:3; 1Ti 4:12; 1Th 1:7; 2Th 3:9), or to be avoided as here, and finally a type in a doctrinal sense (Ro 5:14; Heb 9:24). {To the intent we should not lust after} (eis to m^einai h^mas epithum^tas). Purpose expressed by \eis with the articular infinitive \to einai and the accusative of general reference with \epithum^tas (lusts) in the predicate.

10:7 {Neither be ye idolaters} (m^de eid^lolastrai ginesthe). Literally, stop becoming idolaters, implying that some of them had already begun to be. The word \eid^lolastr^s seems to be a Christian formation to describe the Christian view. Eating \ta eid“lothuta\ might become a stepping-stone to idolatry in some instances. {Drink} (\pein\). Short form for \piein\, sometimes even \pin\ occurs (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 204). {To play} (\paizein\). This old verb to play like a child occurs nowhere else in the N.T., but is common in the LXX and it is quoted here from Ex 32:6. In idolatrous festivals like that witnessed by Moses when he saw the people singing and dancing around the golden calf (Ex 32:18f.).

10:8 {Neither let us commit fornication} (\m^de porneu“men\). More exactly, And let us cease practicing fornication as some were already doing (1Co 6:11; 7:2). The connection between idolatry and fornication was very close (see Jowett, _Epistles of Paul_, II, p. 70) and see about Baal-Peor (Nu 25:1-9). It was terribly true of Corinth where prostitution was part of the worship of Aphrodite. {In one day} (\mifi h^merfi\). An item that adds to horror of the plague in Nu 25:9 where the total number is 24,000 instead of 23,000 as here for one day.

10:9 {Neither let us tempt the Lord} (\m^de ekpeiraz“men ton Kurion\). So the best MSS. instead of Christ. This compound occurs in LXX and in N.T. always about Christ (here and Mt 4:7; Lu 4:12; 10:25). Let us cease sorely (\ek-) tempting the Lord by such conduct. {And perished by the serpents} (\kai hupo t“n ophe“n ap“llunto\). Vivid imperfect middle (cf. aorist middle \ap“lonto\ in verse 10), were perishing day by day. The story is told in Nu 21:6. The use of \hupo\ for agent with the intransitive middle of \apollumi\ is regular. Note the Ionic uncontracted genitive plural \ophe“n\ rather than \oph“n\.

10:10 {Neither murmur ye} (\m^de gogguzete\). Implying that some of them were murmuring. For this late picturesque onomatopoetic verb see on Mt 20:11. The reference seems to be to Nu 16:41f. after the punishment of Korah. {By the destroyer} (\hupo tou olothreutou\). This word, from \olothreu“\ (late verb from \olethros\, destruction) occurs only here, so far as known. The reference is to the destroying angel of Ex 12:23 (\ho olothreu“n\).

10:11 {Now these things happened unto them} (\tauta de sunebainon ekeinois\). Imperfect tense because they happened from time to time. {By way of example} (\tupik“s\). Adverb in sense of \tupoi\ in verse 6. Only instance of the adverb except in ecclesiastical writers after this time, but adjective \tupikos\ occurs in a late papyrus. {For our admonition} (\pros nouthesian h^m^“n\). Objective genitive (\h^m^“n\) again. \Nouthesia\ is late word from \nouthete“\ (see on ̄Ac 20:31; 1Th 5:12,14) for earlier \nouthet^sis\ and \nouthetia\). {The ends of the ages have come} (\ta tel^ t^“n ai^“n^“n kat^nt^ken\). Cf. Heb 9:26 \h^ sunteleia t^“n ai^“n^“n\, the consummation of the ages (also Mt 13:40). The plural seems to point out how one stage succeeds another in the drama of human history. \Kat^nt^ken\ is perfect active indicative of \katanta“, late verb, to come down to (see on ̄Ac 16:1). Does Paul refer to the second coming of Christ as in 7:26? In a sense the ends of the ages like a curtain have come down to all of us.

10:12 {Lest he fall} (\m^ pes^i\). Negative purpose with \m^ and second aorist active subjunctive of \pipt“\.

10:13 {Hath taken} (\eil^phen\). Perfect active indicative of \lamban“. {But such as man can bear} (\ei m^ anthr^“pinos\). Except a human one. Old adjective meaning falling to the lot of man. {Above that ye are able} (\huper ho dunasthe\). Ellipsis, but plain. There is comfort in that God is faithful, trustworthy (\pistos\). {The way of escape} (\t^“n ekbasin\). "The way out" is always there right along with (\sun\) the temptation. This old word only here in N.T. and Heb 13:7 about death. It is cowardly to yield to temptation and distrustful of God.

10:14 {Wherefore} (\dioper\). Powerfully Paul applies the example of the Israelites to the perilous state of the Corinthians about idolatry. See on verse ̄7 for word \eid^“lolatrea\.

10:15 {As to wise men} (\h^“s phronimois\). No sarcasm as in 2Co 11:19, but plea that they make proper use of the mind (\phren\) given them.

10:16 {The cup of blessing} (\to pot^rion t^s eulogias\). The cup over which we pronounce a blessing as by Christ at the institution of the ordinance. {A communion of the blood of Christ} (\koin^“nia tou haimatos tou Christou\). Literally, a participation in (objective genitive) the blood of Christ. The word \koin^“nia\ is an old one from \koin^“nos\, partner, and so here and Php 2:1; 3:10. It can mean also fellowship (Ga 2:9) or contribution (2Co 8:4; Php 1:5). It is, of course, a spiritual participation in the blood of Christ which is symbolized by the cup. Same meaning for \koin^“nia\ in reference to "the body of Christ." {The bread which we break} (\ton arton hon kl“men). The loaf. Inverse attraction of the antecedent (\arton) to the case (accusative) of the relative (\hon) according to classic idiom (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 488). \Artos probably from \ar“, to join or fit (flour mixed with water and baked). The mention of the cup here before the bread does not mean that this order was observed for see the regular order of bread and then cup in 11:24-27.

10:17 {One bread} (\heis artos). One loaf. {Who are many} (\hoi polloi). The many. {We all} (\hoi pantes). We the all, the whole number, \hoi pantes being in apposition with the subject {we} (\h^meis\ unexpressed). {Partake} (\metechomen). Have a part with or in, share in. See on 9:12; Heb 2:14; 5:13 (partaking of milk). {Of the one bread} (\tou henos artou). Of the one loaf, the article \tou referring to one loaf already mentioned. {One body} (\hen s“ma). Here the mystical spiritual body of Christ as in 12:12f., the spiritual kingdom or church of which Christ is head (Col 1:18; Eph 5:23).

10:18 {After the flesh} (\kata sarka). The literal Israel, the Jewish people, not the spiritual Israel (\Isra^l kata pneuma) composed of both Jews and Gentiles, the true children of faith (Ro 2:28; 9:8; Gal 3:7). {Communion with the altar} (\koin“noi tou thusiast^riou). Same idea in \koin“noi participators in, partners in, sharers in (with objective genitive). The word \thusiast^rion is from late verb \thusiaz“, to offer sacrifice, and that from \thusia, sacrifice, and that from \thu“, common verb to slay, to sacrifice (verse 20). The Israelites who offer sacrifices have a spiritual participation in the altar.

10:19 {A thing sacrificed to idols} (\eid“lothuton). See on 7:Ac 15:29; 1Co 8:1,4. {Idol} (\eid“lon). Image of a god. See on 7:Ac 7:41; 15:20; 1Co 8:4,7.

10:20 {But I say that} (\all' hoti). The verb \ph^mi (I say) must be repeated from verse 19 before \hoti. {To demons, and not to God} (\daimoniois kai ou the“i). Referring to LXX text of De 32:17. It is probable that by \ou the“i Paul means "to a no-god" as also in De 32:21 \ep' ouk ethnei (by a no-people). This is Paul's reply to the heathen who claimed that they worshipped the gods represented by the images and not the mere wood or stone or metal idols. The word \daimonia is an adjective \daimonios from \daim“n, an inferior deity, and with same idea originally, once in this sense in N.T. (Ac 17:18). Elsewhere in N.T. it has the notion of evil spirits as here, those spiritual forces of wickedness (Eph 6:12) that are under the control of Satan. The word \daimonia\, so common in the Gospels, occurs in Paul's writings only here and 1Ti 4:1. Demonology is a deep and dark subject here pictured by Paul as the explanation of heathenism which is a departure from God (Ro 1:19-23) and a substitute for the worship of God. It is a terrible indictment which is justified by the licentious worship associated with paganism then and now.

10:21 {Ye cannot} (\ou dunasthe\). Morally impossible to drink the Lord's cup and the cup of demons, to partake of the Lord's table and the table of demons. {Of the table of the Lord} (\trapez[^]s Kuriou\). No articles, but definite idea. \Trapeza\ is from \tetra\ (four) and \peza\ (a foot), four-footed. Here {table} means, as often, what is on the table. See Lu 22:30 where Jesus says "at my table" (\epi t[^]s trapez[^]s mou\), referring to the spiritual feast hereafter. Here the reference is plainly to the Lord's Supper (\Kuriakon deipnon\, 1Co 11:20). See allusions in O.T. to use of the table in heathen idol feasts (Isa 65:11; Jer 7:18; Eze 16:18f.; 23:41). The altar of burnt-offering is called the table of the Lord in Mal 1:7 (Vincent).

10:22 {Provoke to jealousy} (\paraz[^]loumen\). The very word used in De 32:21 of the insolence of the old Israelites. Quoted in Ro 10:19. Such double-dealing now will do this very thing. {Stronger than he} (\ischuroteroi autou\). Comparative adjective followed by the ablative.

10:23 See on ^6:12 for {lawful} (\exestin\) and {expedient} (\sumpherei\). {Edify not} (\ouk oikodomei\). Build up. Explanation of {expedient} (\sumpherei\).

10:24 {Let no man seek his own} (\m[^]deis to heautou z[^]teit[^]\). This is Paul's rule for social relations (1Co 13:5; Ga 6:2; Ro 14:7; 15:2; Php 2:1ff.) and is the way to do what is expedient and what builds up. {His neighbour's good} (\to tou heterou\). Literally, "the affair of the other man." Cf. \ton heteron\ in Ro 13:8 for this idea of \heteros\ like \ho pl[^]sion\ (the nigh man, the neighbour) in Ro 15:2. This is loving your neighbour as yourself by preferring your neighbour's welfare to your own (Php 2:4).

10:25 {In the shambles} (\en makellⁱ\). Only here in N.T. A transliterated Latin word _macellum_, possibly akin to \maceria\ and the Hebrew word for enclosure, though occurring in Ionic and Laconian and more frequent in the Latin. It occurs in Dio Cassius and Plutarch and in the papyri and inscriptions for "the provision market." Deissmann (Light from the Ancient East, p. 276) says: "In the Macellum at Pompeii we can imagine to ourselves the poor Christians buying their modest pound of meat in the Corinthian Macellum (1Co 10:25), with the same life-like reality with which the Diocletian maximum tariff called up the picture of the Galilean woman purchasing her five sparrows." {Asking no questions for conscience sake} (\m^{den} anakrinontes dia tⁿ suneid^{sin}\). As to whether a particular piece of meat had been offered to idols before put in the market. Only a part was consumed in the sacrifices to heathen gods. The rest was sold in the market. Do not be over-scrupulous. Paul here champions liberty in the matter as he had done in 8:4.

10:26 This verse gives the reason for Paul's advice. It is a quotation from Ps 24:1 and was a common form of grace before meals. {Fulness} (\pl^rma\). Old word from \pl^{ro}\, to fill, here that with which a thing is filled, whatever fills the earth.

10:27 {Biddeth you} (\kalei humas\). To a general banquet, but not to a temple feast (8:10) which is prohibited. If a pagan invites Christians to their homes to a banquet, one is to act like a gentleman.

10:28 {But if any man say unto you} (\ean de tis humin eipⁱ\). Condition of third class. Suppose at such a banquet a "weak" brother makes the point to you: "This hath been offered in sacrifice" (\touto hierothuton estin\). \Hierothuton\, late word in Plutarch, rare in inscriptions and papyri, only here in N.T. {Eat not} (\m^{esthiete}\). Present imperative with \m\ prohibiting the habit of eating then. Pertinent illustration to the point of doing what is expedient and edifying. {That shewed it} (\ton m^{nusanta}\). First aorist active articular participle (accusative case because of \dia\ from \m^{nu}\, old verb, to point out, to disclose. See Lu 20:37.

10:29 {For why is my liberty judged by another conscience?} (\hina ti gar h^{eleutheria} mou krinetai hupo all^s suneid^{se}s;\). Supply \gen^{tai}\ (deliberative subjunctive) after \ti\ Paul deftly puts himself in the place of the strong brother at such a banquet who is expected to conform his conscience to that of the weak brother who makes the point about a particular piece of meat. It is an abridgment of one's personal liberty in the interest of the weak brother. Two individualities clash. The only reason is love which builds up (8:2 and all of chapter 1Co 13). There is this eternal collision between the forces of progress and reaction. If they work together, they must consider the welfare of each other.

10:30 Paul carries on the supposed objective to his principle of love. Why incur the risk of being evil spoken of (\blasph[^]moumai) for the sake of maintaining one's liberty? Is it worth it? See Ro 14:6 where Paul justifies the conscience of one who eats the meat and of one who does not. Saying grace over food that one should not eat seems inconsistent. We have this very word _blaspheme_ in English.

10:31 {To the glory of God} (\eis doxan theou). This is the ruling motive in the Christian's life, not just having his own way about whims and preferences.

10:32 {Give no occasion of stumbling} (\aproskopoi). Late word and in papyri, only three times in N.T. (here; Php 1:10; Ac 24:16). See on Acts 24:16. Here in active sense, not tripping others by being a stumbling-block, as in Sirach 32:21, but passive in Ac 24:16.

10:33 {Mine own profit} (\to emoutou sumpheron). Old word from \sumpher“, to bear together, and explains use of verb in verse 23. {That they may be saved} (\hina s“th“sin). First aorist passive subjunctive of \s“z“, to save, with \hina purpose clause with same high motive as in 9:22. This is the ruling passion of Paul in his dealings with men.

11:1 {Imitators of me} (\mim^ˆtai mou\). In the principle of considerate love as so clearly shown in chapters 1Co 8-10 and in so far as (\kath^ˆs\ Paul is himself an imitator of Christ. The preacher is a leader and is bound to set an example or pattern (\tupos\ for others (Tit 2:7). This verse clearly belongs to the preceding chapter and not to chapter 11.

11:2 {Hold fast the traditions} (\tas paradoseis katechete\). Hold down as in 15:2. \Paradosis\ (tradition) from \paradid^ˆmi\ (\pared^ˆka\, first aorist active indicative) is an old word and merely something handed on from one to another. The thing handed on may be bad as in Mt 15:2f. (which see) and contrary to the will of God (Mr 7:8f.) or it may be wholly good as here. There is a constant conflict between the new and the old in science, medicine, law, theology. The obscurantist rejects all the new and holds to the old both true and untrue. New truth must rest upon old truth and is in harmony with it.

11:3 {But I would have you know} (\thel^ˆ de humas eidenai\). But I wish you to know, censure in contrast to the praise in verse 2. {The head of Christ is God} (\kephal^ˆ tou Christou ho theos\). Rather, God is the head of Christ, since \kephal^ˆ is anarthrous and predicate.

11:4 {Having his head covered} (\kata kephal^ˆs ech^ˆn\). Literally, having a veil (\kalumma\ understood) down from the head (\kephal^ˆs\ ablative after \kata\ as with \kata\ in Mr 5:13; Ac 27:14). It is not certain whether the Jews at this time used the _tallith_, "a four-corned shawl having fringes consisting of eight threads, each knotted five times" (Vincent) as they did later. Virgil (Aeneid _iii., 545) says: "And our heads are shrouded before the altar with a Phrygian vestment." The Greeks (both men and women) remained bareheaded in public prayer and this usage Paul commends for the men.

11:5 {With her head unveiled} (\akatakalupt^ˆi t^ˆi kephal^ˆi\). Associative instrumental case of manner and the predicative adjective (compound adjective and feminine form same as masculine), "with the head unveiled." Probably some of the women had violated this custom. "Amongst Greeks only the \hetairai\, so numerous in Corinth, went about unveiled; slave-women wore the shaven head--also a punishment of the adulteress" (Findlay). Cf. Nu 5:18. {One and the same thing as if she were shaven} (hen kai to auto t'i exur^men^i\). Literally, "One and the same thing with the one shaven" (associative instrumental case again, Robertson, Grammar_, p. 530). Perfect passive articular participle of the verb \xura^, later form for the old \xure^\. It is public praying and prophesying that the Apostle here has in mind. He does not here condemn the act, but the breach of custom which would bring reproach. A woman convicted of adultery had her hair shorn (Isa 7:20). The Justinian code prescribed shaving the head for an adulteress whom the husband refused to receive after two years. Paul does not tell Corinthian Christian women to put themselves on a level with courtesans.

11:6 {Let her also be shorn} (kai keirasth^\). Aorist middle imperative of \keir^, to shear (as sheep). Let her cut her hair close. A single act by the woman. {If it is a shame} (ei de aischron\). Condition of first class assumed to be true. \Aischron\ is old adjective from \aischos\, bareness, disgrace. Clearly Paul uses such strong language because of the effect on a woman's reputation in Corinth by such conduct that proclaimed her a lewd woman. Social custom varied in the world then as now, but there was no alternative in Corinth. {To be shorn or shaven} (to keirasthai kai xurasthai\). Articular infinitives subject of copula \estin\ understood, \keirasthai\ first aorist middle, \xurasthai\ present middle. Note change in tense. {Let her be veiled} (katakalyptesth^\). Present middle imperative of old compound \kata-kalupt^, here alone in N.T. Let her cover up herself with the veil (down, kata\, the Greek says, the veil hanging down from the head).

11:7 {The image and glory of God} (eik^ n kai doxa theou\). Anarthrous substantives, but definite. Reference to Ge 1:28; 2:26 whereby man is made directly in the image (eik^ n\) of God. It is the moral likeness of God, not any bodily resemblance. Ellicott notes that man is the glory (doxa\) of God as the crown of creation and as endowed with sovereignty like God himself. {The glory of the man} (doxa andros\). Anarthrous also, man's glory. In Ge 2:26 the LXX has \anthr^pos\ (Greek word for both male and female), not \an^r\ (male) as here. But the woman (\gun^\) was formed from the man (\an^r\). This priority of the male (verse 8) gives a certain superiority to the male. On the other hand, it is equally logical to argue that woman is the crown and climax of all creation, being the last.

11:9 {For the woman} (\dia t^n gunaika\). Because of (\dia\ with accusative case) the woman. The record in Genesis gives the man (\an^r\) as the origin (\ek\) of the woman and the reason for (\dia\) the creation (\ektisth^\, first aorist passive of ktiz“\, old verb to found, to create, to form) of woman.

11:10 {Ought} (\opheilei\). Moral obligation therefore (\dia touto\, rests on woman in the matter of dress that does not (\ouk opheilei\ in verse 7) rest on the man.) {To have a sign of authority} (\exousian echein\). He means \s^meion exousias\ (symbol of authority) by \exousian\, but it is the sign of authority of the man over the woman. The veil on the woman's head is the symbol of the authority that the man with the uncovered head has over her. It is, as we see it, more a sign of subjection (\hypotag^s\, 1Ti 2:10) than of authority (\exousias\). {Because of the angels} (\dia tous angelous\). This startling phrase has caused all kinds of conjecture which may be dismissed. It is not preachers that Paul has in mind, nor evil angels who could be tempted (Ge 6:1f.), but angels present in worship (cf. 1Co 4:9; Ps 138:1) who would be shocked at the conduct of the women since the angels themselves veil their faces before Jehovah (Isa 6:2).

11:11 {Howbeit} (\pl^n\). This adversative clause limits the preceding statement. Each sex is incomplete without (\ch^ris\, apart from, with the ablative case) the other. {In the Lord} (\en Kuri^i\). In the sphere of the Lord, where Paul finds the solution of all problems.

11:12 {Of} (\ek\) {--by} (\dia\). Ever since the first creation man has come into existence by means of (\dia\ with genitive) the woman. The glory and dignity of motherhood. Cf. _The Fine Art of Motherhood_ by Ella Broadus Robertson.

11:13 {Is it seemly?} (\prepon estin;\). Periphrastic present indicative rather than \prepei\). See on ^Mt 3:15. Paul appeals to the sense of propriety among the Corinthians.

11:14 {Nature itself} (\h^ phusis aut^\). He reenforces the appeal to custom by the appeal to nature in a question that expects the affirmative answer (\oude). \Phusis, from old verb \phu“, to produce, like our word nature (Latin _natura_), is difficult to define. Here it means native sense of propriety (cf. Ro 2:14) in addition to mere custom, but one that rests on the objective difference in the constitution of things.

11:15 {Have long hair} (\komfi). Present active subjunctive of \koma“ (from \kom^, hair), old verb, same contraction (\-a^i=fi) as the indicative (\aei = fi), but subjunctive here with \ean in third class condition. Long hair is a glory to a woman and a disgrace to a man (as we still feel). The long-haired man! There is a papyrus example of a priest accused of letting his hair grow long and of wearing woollen garments. {For a covering} (\anti peribolaïou). Old word from \periball“ to fling around, as a mantle (Heb 1:12) or a covering or veil as here. It is not in the place of a veil, but answering to (\anti, in the sense of \anti\ in Joh 1:16), as a permanent endowment (\dedotai, perfect passive indicative).

11:16 {Contentious} (\philoneikos). Old adjective (\philos, neikos), fond of strife. Only here in N.T. If he only existed in this instance, the disputatious brother. {Custom} (\sun^theïan). Old word from \sun^th^s (\sun, ^thos), like Latin _consuetudo_, intercourse, intimacy. In N.T. only here and 8:7 which see. "In the sculptures of the catacombs the women have a close-fitting head-dress, while the men have the hair short" (Vincent).

11:17 {This} (\touto). Probably the preceding one about the head-dress of women, and transition to what follows. {I praise you not} (\ouk epain“). In contrast to the praise in 11:2. {For the better} (\eis to kreisson). Neuter articular comparative of \kratus, but used as comparative of \kalos, good. Attic form \kreitton. {For the worse} (\eis to h^sson). Old comparative from \h^ka, softly, used as comparative of \kakos, bad. In N.T. only here and 2Co 12:15.

11:18 {First of all} (\pr“ton men). There is no antithesis (\deuteron de, secondly, or \epeita de, in the next place) expressed. This is the primary reason for Paul's condemnation and the only one given. {When ye come together in the church} (\sunerchomen“n h^m“n en ekkl^sifi). Genitive absolute. Here \ekkl^sia has the literal meaning of assembly. {Divisions} (\schismata). Accusative of general reference with the infinitive \huparchein\ in indirect discourse. Old word for cleft, rent, from \schiz“\ . Example in papyri for splinter of wood. See on 1:10. Not yet formal cleavages into two or more organizations, but partisan divisions that showed in the love-feasts and at the Lord's Supper. {Partly} (\meros ti\). Accusative of extent (to some part) like \panta\ in 10:33. He could have said \ek merous\ as in 13:9. The rumours of strife were so constant (I keep on hearing, \akou“\).

11:19 {Must be} (\dei einai\). Since moral conditions are so bad among you (cf. chapters 1 to 6). Cf. Mt 18:7. {Heresies} (\haireseis\). The schisms naturally become {factions} or {parties}. Cf. strifes (\erides\) in 1:11. See on ¯Ac 15:5 for \haireseis\, a choosing, taking sides, holding views of one party, heresy (our word). "Heresy is theoretical schism, schism practical heresy." Cf. Tit 3:10; 2Pe 2:1. In Paul only here and Ga 5:20. {That} (\hina\). God's purpose in these factions makes {the proved ones} (\hoi dokimoi\) become {manifest} (\phaneroi\). "These \haireseis\ are a magnet attracting unsound and unsettled minds" (Findlay). It has always been so. Instance so-called Christian Science, Russellism, New Thought, etc., today.

11:20 {To eat the Lord's Supper} (\Kuriakon deipnon phagein\). \Kuriakos\, adjective from \Kurios\, belonging to or pertaining to the Lord, is not just a biblical or ecclesiastical word, for it is found in the inscriptions and papyri in the sense of imperial (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 358), as imperial finance, imperial treasury. It is possible that here the term applies both to the \Agap^ or Love-feast (a sort of church supper or club supper held in connection with, before or after, the Lord's Supper) and the Eucharist or Lord's Supper. \Deipnon\, so common in the Gospels, only here in Paul. The selfish conduct of the Corinthians made it impossible to eat a Lord's Supper at all.

11:21 {Taketh before} (\prolambanei\). Before others. Old verb to take before others. It was conduct like this that led to the complete separation between the Love-feast and the Lord's Supper. It was not even a common meal together (\koinon deipnon\), not to say a Lord's \deipnon\ . It was a mere {grab-game}. {This one is hungry} (\hos de peinfì\). Demonstrative \hos\ . Nothing is left for him at the love-feast. {Another is drunken} (\hos de methuei\). Such disgusting conduct was considered shameful in heathen club suppers. "Hungry poor meeting intoxicated rich, at what was supposed to be a supper of the Lord" (Robertson and Plummer). On \methuˆˆ\, to be drunk, see on ˆMt 24:49; Ac 2:15.

11:22 {What? Have ye not houses?} (\Mˆ gar oikias ouk echete;|)
The double negative (\mˆ--ouk|) in the single question is like the idiom in 9:4f. which see. \Mˆ\ expects a negative answer while \ouk\ negatives the verb \echete|. "For do you fail to have houses?" Paul is not approving gluttony and drunkenness but only expressing horror at their sacrilege (despising, \kataphroneite|) of the church of God. {That have not} (\tous mˆ echontas|). Not those without houses, but those who have nothing, "the have-nots" (Findlay) like 2Co 8:12, in contrast with \hoi echontes\ "the haves" (the men of property). {What shall I say to you?} (\ti eipˆˆ humin;|) Deliberative subjunctive that well expresses Paul's bewilderment.

11:23 {For I received of the Lord} (\ego gar parelabon apo tou Kuriou|). Direct claim to revelation from the Lord Jesus on the origin of the Lord's Supper. Luke's account (Lu 22:17-20) is almost identical with this one. He could easily have read I Corinthians before he wrote his Gospel. See 15:3 for use of both \parelabon\ and \paredˆˆka|. Note \para\ in both verbs. Paul received the account from (\para--apo|) the Lord and passed it on from himself to them, a true \paradosis\ (tradition) as in 11:2. {He was betrayed} (\paredideto|). Imperfect passive indicative (irregular form for \paredidoto, Robertson, Grammar, p. 340). Same verb as \paredˆˆka\ (first aorist active indicative just used for "I delivered").

11:24 {When he had given thanks} (\eucharistˆsas|). First aorist active participle of \eucharisteˆˆ\ from which word our word Eucharist comes, common late verb (see on ˆ1:14). {Which is for you} (\to huper humˆˆn|). \Klˆˆmenon\ (broken) of the Textus Receptus (King James Version) is clearly not genuine. Luke (Lu 22:19) has \didomenon\ (given) which is the real idea here. As a matter of fact the body of Jesus was not broken (Joh 19:36). The bread was broken, but not the body of Jesus. {In remembrance of me} (\eis tˆn emˆn anamnˆsin|). The objective use of the possessive pronoun \emˆn|. Not my remembrance of you, but your remembrance of me. \Anamnˆsis|, from \anamimnˆskˆˆ\, to remind or to recall, is an old word, but only here in N.T. save Lu 22:19 which see.

11:25 {After supper} (\meta to deipnˆsai|). \Meta\ and the articulard aorist active infinitive, "after the dining" (or the supping) as in Lu 22:20. {The new covenant} (\h^kain^diath^k^). For \diath^k^ see on ^Mt 26:28. For \kainos see on ^Lu 5:38; 22:20. The position of \estin before \en t^i haimati (in my blood) makes it a secondary or additional predicate and not to be taken just with \diath^k^ (covenant or will). {As oft as ye drink it} (\hosakis an pin^te). Usual construction for general temporal clause of repetition (\an and the present subjunctive with \hosakis). So in verse 26.

11:26 {Till he come} (\achri hou elth^i). Common idiom (with or without \an) with the aorist subjunctive for future time (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 975). In Lu 22:18 we have \he^s hou elth^i. The Lord's Supper is the great preacher (\kataggellete) of the death of Christ till his second coming (Mt 26:29).

11:27 {Unworthily} (\anaxi^s). Old adverb, only here in N.T., not genuine in verse 29. Paul defines his meaning in verse 29f. He does not say or imply that we ourselves must be "worthy" (\axioi) to partake of the Lord's Supper. No one would ever partake on those terms. Many pious souls have abstained from observing the ordinance through false exegesis here. {Shall be guilty} (\enochos estai). Shall be held guilty as in Mt 5:21f. which see. Shall be guilty of a crime committed against the body and blood of the Lord by such sacrilege (cf. Heb 6:6; 10:29).

11:28 {Let a man prove himself} (\dokimazet^ anthr^pos heauton). Test himself as he would a piece of metal to see if genuine. Such examination of one's motives would have made impossible the disgraceful scenes in verses 20ff.

11:29 {If he discern not the body} (\m^ diakrin^ n to s^ma). So-called conditional use of the participle, "not judging the body." Thus he eats and drinks judgment (\krima) on himself. The verb \dia-krin^ is an old and common word, our {dis-criminate}, to distinguish. Eating the bread and drinking the wine as symbols of the Lord's body and blood in death probes one's heart to the very depths.

11:30 {And not a few sleep} (\kai koim^ntai hikanoi). Sufficient number (\hikanoi) are already asleep in death because of their desecration of the Lord's table. Paul evidently had knowledge of specific instances. A few would be too many.

11:31 {But if we discerned ourselves} (\|ei de heautous diekrinomen\). This condition of the second class, determined as unfulfilled, assumes that they had not been judging themselves discriminatingly, else they would not be judged (\|ekrinometha\). Note distinction in the two verbs.

11:32 {Ye are chastened of the Lord} (\|hupo tou Kuriou paideuometha\). On this sense of \|paideu“, from \|pais\, child, to train a child (Ac 7:22), to discipline with words (2Ti 2:25), to chastise with scourges see on \|Lu 23:16 (Heb 12:7), and so by afflictions as here (Heb 12:6). \|Hupo tou Kuriou\ can be construed with \|krinomenoi\ instead of with \|paideuometha\.

{With the world} (\|sun t“i kosm“i\). Along with the world. Afflictions are meant to separate us from the doom of the wicked world. Final use of \|hina m^ \| here with \|katakrith“men\ (first aorist passive subjunctive).

11:33 {Wait one for another} (\|all“lous ekdechesthe\). As in Joh 5:3; Ac 17:16. That is common courtesy. Wait in turn. Vulgate has \|_invicem expectate_.

11:34 {At home} (\|en oik“i\). If so hungry as all that (verse 22). {The rest} (\|ta loipa\). He has found much fault with this church, but he has not told all. {I will set in order} (\|diataxomai\). Not even Timothy and Titus can do it all.

{Whensoever I come} (\|h“s an elth“i\). Common idiom for temporal clause of future time (conjunction like \|h“s\ with \|an\ and aorist subjunctive \|elth“i).

12:1 {Now concerning spiritual gifts} (\peri de t'n pneumatik'n\). Clearly one of the items asked about in the letter to Paul (7:1) and introduced precisely as the problem of meats offered to idols (8:1). This question runs to the end of chapter 14. Plainly much trouble had arisen in Corinth in the exercise of these gifts.

12:2 {Ye were led away} (\apagomenoi\). The copula \^te\ is not expressed (common ellipsis) with the participle (periphrastic imperfect passive), but it has to be supplied to make sense. Some scholars would change \hote\ (when) to \pote\ (once) and so remove the difficulty. {Unto those dumb idols} (\pros ta eid'la ta aph'na\). "Unto the idols the dumb." See Ps 95:5-7 for the voicelessness (\a-ph'na\, old adjective, without voice, \ph'n^\) of the idols. Pagans were led astray by demons (1Co 10:19f.). {Howsoever ye might be led} (\h's an ^gesthe\). Rather, "as often as ye were led." For this use of \h's an\ for the notion of repetition, regular _Koin,_ idiom, see Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 974. Cf. \hopou an\ in Mr 6:56.

12:3 {Wherefore I give you to understand} (\dio gn'riz' humin\). Causative idea (only in Aeschylus in old Greek) in papyri (also in sense of recognize) and N.T., from root \gn'\ in \gin'sk'\, to know. {Speaking in the Spirit of God} (\en pneumatī theou lal'n\). Either sphere or instrumentality. No great distinction here between \lale'\ (utter sounds) and \leg'\ (to say). {Jesus is anathema} (\anathema I'sous\). On distinction between \anathema\ (curse) and \anath^ma\ (offering Lu 21:5) see discussion there. In LXX \anath^ma\ means a thing devoted to God without being redeemed, doomed to destruction (Le 27:28f.; Jos 6:17; 7:12). See 1Co 16:22; Ga 1:8f.; Ro 9:3. This blasphemous language against Jesus was mainly by the Jews (Ac 13:45; 18:6). It is even possible that Paul had once tried to make Christians say \Anathema I'sous\ (Ac 26:11). {Jesus is Lord} (\Kurios I'sous\). The term \Kurios\, as we have seen, is common in the LXX for God. The Romans used it freely for the emperor in the emperor worship. "Most important of all is the early establishment of a polemical parallelism between the cult of Christ and the cult of Caesar in the application of the term \Kurios\, 'lord.' The new texts have here furnished quite astonishing revelations" (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 349). Inscriptions, ostraca, papyri apply the term to Roman emperors, particularly to Nero when Paul wrote this very letter (_ib._, p. 353f.): "One with 'Nero Kurios' quite in the manner of a formula (without article, like the 'Kurios Jesus' in 1Co 12:3." "The battle-cries of the spirits of error and of truth contending at Corinth"(Findlay). One is reminded of the demand made by Polycarp that he say \Kurios Caesar\ and how each time he replied \Kurios I^sous\. He paid the penalty for his loyalty with his life. Lighthearted men today can say "Lord Jesus" in a flippant or even in an irreverent way, but no Jew or Gentile then said it who did not mean it.

12:4 {Diversities} (\diaireseis\). Old word for distinctions, differences, distributions, from \diaire"\, to distribute, as \diairoun\ (dividing, distributing) in verse 11. Only here in the N.T. {Of gifts} (\charismat^"n\). Late word and chiefly in Paul (cf. Ro 12:6) in N.T. (except 1Pe 4:19), but some examples in papyri. It means a favour (from \charizomai) bestowed or received without any merit as in Ro 1:11.

12:5 {Of ministrations} (\diakoni^"n\). This old word is from \diakonos\ and has a general meaning of service as here (Ro 11:13) and a special ministration like that of Martha (Lu 10:40) and the collection (1Co 16:15; 2Co 8:4).

12:6 {Of workings} (\energ^mat^"n\). Late word, here only in N.T., the effect of a thing wrought (from \energe^"\, to operate, perform, energize). Paul uses also the late kindred word \energeia\ (Col 1:29; 2:12) for efficiency. {Who worketh all things in all} (\ho energ^"n ta panta en pasin\). Paul is not afraid to say that God is the Energy and the Energizer of the Universe. "I say that the magnet floats in space by the will of God" (Dr. W. R. Whitney, a world figure in science). This is his philosophic and scientific theory of the Cosmos. No one has shown Paul's philosophy and science to be wrong. Here he is speaking only of spiritual gifts and results as a whole, but he applies this principle to the universe (\ta panta\) in Col 1:16 (of Christ) and in Ro 11:36 (of God). Note the Trinity in these verses: the same Spirit (verse 4), the same Lord (Jesus) in verse 5, the same God (the Father) in verse 6.

12:7 {Manifestation} (\phaner“sis\). Late word, in papyri, in N.T. only here and 2Co 4:2, from \phanero“\, to make manifest (\phaneros\). Each instance of the whole (verse 6) is repeatedly given (\didotai\, present passive indicative of did“mi\). {To profit withal} (\pros to sumpheron\). See on 6:12; 10:23,33 for Paul's guiding principle in such matters.

12:8 {To one} (\h“i men\). Demonstrative \hos\ with \men\ in dative case, to this one. The distribution or correlation is carried on by \all“i de\ (verses 8,9,10), \heter“i de\ (verses 9,10) for variety, nine manifestations of the Spirit's work in verses 8-10. {The Word of wisdom} (\logos sophias\). Old words. \Logos\ is reason, then speech. Wisdom is intelligence, then practical action in accord with it. Here it is speech full of God's wisdom (2:7) under the impulse of the Spirit of God. This gift is placed first (revelation by the Spirit). {The word of knowledge} (\logos gn“se“s\). This gift is insight (illumination) according to (\kata\) the same Spirit.

12:9 {Faith} (\pistis\). Not faith of surrender, saving faith, but wonder-working faith like that in 13:2 (Mt 17:20; 21:21). Note here \en t“i aut“i pneumatì\ (in the same Spirit) in contrast with \dia\ and \kata\ in verse 8. {Gifts of healings} (\charismata iamat“n\). \Iama\, old word from \iaomai\, common in LXX, in N.T. only in this chapter. It means acts of healing as in Ac 4:30 (cf. Jas 5:14) and Lu 7:21 (of Jesus). Note \en\ here as just before.

12:10 {Workings of miracles} (\energ“mata duname“n\). Workings of powers. Cf. \energ“n dunameis\ in Ga 3:5; Heb 2:4 where all three words are used (\s“meia\, signs, \terata\, wonders, \dunameis\, powers). Some of the miracles were not healings as the blindness on Elymas the sorcerer. {Prophecy} (\proph“teia\). Late word from \proph“t“s\ and \proph“mi\, to speak forth. Common in papyri. This gift Paul will praise most (chapter 1Co 14). Not always prediction, but a speaking forth of God's message under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. {Discernings of spirits} (\diakriseis pneumat“n\). \Diakrisis\ is old word from \diakrin“\ (see 11:29) and in N.T. only here; Ro 14:1; Heb 5:14. A most needed gift to tell whether the gifts were really of the Holy Spirit and supernatural (cf. so-called "gifts" today) or merely strange though natural or even diabolical (1Ti 4:1; 1Jo 4:1f.). {Divers kinds of tongues} (\gen“gl“ss“n\). No word for "divers" in the Greek. There has arisen a great deal of confusion concerning the gift of tongues as found in Corinth. They prided themselves chiefly on this gift which had become a source of confusion and disorder. There were varieties (kinds, \gen^) in this gift, but the gift was essentially an ecstatic utterance of highly wrought emotion that edified the speaker (14:4) and was intelligible to God (14:2,28). It was not always true that the speaker in tongues could make clear what he had said to those who did not know the tongue (14:13): It was not mere gibberish or jargon like the modern "tongues," but in a real language that could be understood by one familiar with that tongue as was seen on the great Day of Pentecost when people who spoke different languages were present. In Corinth, where no such variety of people existed, it required an interpreter to explain the tongue to those who knew it not. Hence Paul placed this gift lowest of all. It created wonder, but did little real good. This is the error of the Irvingites and others who have tried to reproduce this early gift of the Holy Spirit which was clearly for a special emergency and which was not designed to help spread the gospel among men. See on Ac 2:13-21; 10:44-46; 19:6. {The interpretation of tongues} (\herm^neia gl^ss^"n\). Old word, here only and 14:26 in N.T., from \herm^neu^" from \Herm^s\ (the god of speech). Cf. on \diern^neu^" in Lu 24:27; Ac 9:36. In case there was no one present who understood the particular tongue it required a special gift of the Spirit to some one to interpret it if any one was to receive benefit from it.

12:11 {Worketh} (\energei\). The same word that was used in verse 6 of God. {Severally} (\idifi\). Separately. {Even as he will} (\kath^s bouletai\). Hence there is no occasion for conceit, pride, or faction (4:7).

12:12 {So also is Christ} (\hout^s kai ho Christos\). One would naturally expect Paul here to say \hout^s kai to s^ma tou Christou\ (so also is the body of Christ). He will later call Christ the Head of the Body the Church as in Col 1:18,24; Eph 5:23,30. Aristotle had used \s^ma\ of the state as the body politic. What Paul here means is Christ as the Head of the Church has a body composed of the members who have varied gifts and functions like the different members of the human body. They are all vitally connected with the Head of the body and with each other. This idea he now elaborates in a remarkable manner.

12:13 {Were we all baptized into one body} (\h^meis pantes eis hen s^ma ebaptisth^men\). First aorist passive indicative of \baptiz“\ and so a reference to a definite past event with each of them of different races, nations, classes, when each of them put on the outward badge of service to Christ, the symbol of the inward changes already wrought in them by the Holy Spirit (Ga 3:27; Ro 6:2ff.). {And were all made to drink of one Spirit} (\kai pantes hen pneuma epotisth^men\). First aorist passive indicative of \potiz“\, old verb, to give to drink. The accusative \hen pneuma\ is retained in the passive as often with verbs that in the active take two accusatives. The reference is to a definite act in the past, probably to the inward experience of the Holy Spirit symbolized by the act of baptism.

12:14 {Is not one member} (\ouk estin hen melos\). The point sounds like a truism, but it is the key to the whole problem of church life both local and general. Vincent refers to the fable of the body and the members by Menenius Agrippa (Livy, II, 32), but it was an old parable. Socrates pointed out how absurd it would be if feet and hands should work against one another when God made them to cooperate (Xen., _Mem_. II. iii. 18). Seneca alludes to it as does Marcus Aurelius and Marcus Antoninus.

12:15 {If the foot shall say} (\ean eip^i ho pous\). Condition of third class (\ean\ and second aorist subjunctive |eip^i\). In case the foot say. {I am not of the body} (\ouk eimi ek tou s^matos\). I am independent of the body, not dependent on the body. {It is not therefore not of the body} (\ou para touto ouk estin ek tou s^matos\). Thinking or saying so does not change the fact. \Para touto\ here means "alongside of this" (cf. IV Macc. 10:19) and so "because of," a rare use (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 616). The two negatives (\ou--ouk\) do not here destroy one another. Each retains its full force.

12:16 Points explained precisely as in verse 15.

12:17 {If the whole body were an eye} (\ei holon to s^ma ophthalmos\). The eye is the most wonderful organ and supremely useful (Nu 10:31), the very light of the body (Lu 11:34). And yet how grotesque it would be if there were nothing else but a great round rolling eye! A big "I" surely! {The smelling} (\h^osphr^sis\). Old word from \osphrainomai\, to smell. Here alone in N.T.

12:18 {But now} (\nun de\). But as things are, in contrast to that absurdity. {Hath God set} (\ho theos etheto\). Second aorist middle indicative. God did it and of himself. {Even as it pleased him} (\kath“s ^thel^sen). Why challenge God's will? Cf. Ro 9:20.

12:19 {One member} (\hen melos). Paul applies the logic of verse 17 to any member of the body. The application to members of the church is obvious. It is particularly pertinent in the case of a "church boss."

12:20 {Many members, but one body} (\polla mel^, hen de s“ma). The argument in a nutshell, in one epigram.

12:21 {Cannot say} (\ou dunatai eipein). And be truthful. The superior organs need the inferior ones (the eye, the hand, the head, the feet).

12:22 {Nay, much rather} (\alla poll“i mallon). Adversative sense of \alla, on the contrary. So far from the more dignified members like the eye and the head being independent of the subordinate ones like the hands and feet, they are "much more" (_argumentum a fortiori_, "by much more" \poll“i mallon\, instrumental case) in need of them. {Those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary} (\ta dokounta mel^ tou s“matos asthenestera huparchein anagkaia estin). Things are not always what they seem. The vital organs (heart, lungs, liver, kidneys) are not visible, but life cannot exist without them.

12:23 {We bestow} (\peritithemen). Literally, We place around as if a garland (Mr 15:17) or a garment (Mt 27:28). {More abundant comeliness} (\eusch^mosun^ n perissoteran). One need only mention the mother's womb and the mother's breast to see the force of Paul's argument here. The word, common in old Greek, from \eusch^m“n (\eu\, well, \sch^ma\, figure), here only in N.T. One may think of the coal-miner who digs under the earth for the coal to keep us warm in winter. So \asch^m“n (deformed, uncomely), old word, here only in N.T., but see 7:36 for \asch^mone“.

12:24 {Tempered the body together} (\sunekerasen to s“ma). First aorist active indicative of \sunkerannumi, to mix together, old word, but in N.T. only here and Heb 4:2. Plato used this very word of the way God compounded (\sunekerasato) the various elements of the body in creating soul and body. Paul rejects the idea of the later Gnostics that matter is evil and the physical organs degrading. He gives a noble picture of the body with its wonderful organs planned to be the temple of God's Spirit (6:19) in opposition to the Epicurean sensualists in Corinth. {To that part which lacked} (\t“i husteroumen“i\). It is a true instinct that gives superior honour to the unseen organs of life.

12:25 {That there should be no schism} (\hina m[^] i schisma\). Purpose of God in his plan for the body. Trouble in one organ affects the whole body. A headache may be due to trouble elsewhere and usually is. {Have the same care} (\to auto merimn“sin\). The very verb \merimna“\ used by Jesus of our anxiety (Mt 6:27,31). Paul here personifies the parts of the body as if each one is anxious for the others. The modern knowledge of the billions of cells in the body co-working for the whole confirms Paul's argument.

12:26 {Suffer with it} (\sunpaschei\). Medical term in this sense in Hippocrates and Galen. In N.T only here and Ro 8:17 (of our suffering with Christ). One of Solon's Laws allowed retaliation by any one for another's injuries. Plato (Republic, V, 462) says the body politic "feels the hurt" as the whole body feels a hurt finger. {Rejoice with it} (\sunchairei\). This is fortunately true also. One may tingle with joy all over the body thanks to the wonderful nervous system and to the relation between mind and matter. See 13:6 for joy of love with truth.

12:27 {Severally} (\ek merous\). See Ro 11:25 \apo merous\ (in part). Each has his own place and function in the body of Christ.

12:28 {God hath set some} (\hous men etheto ho theos\). See verse 18 for \etheto ho theos\. Note middle voice (for his own use). Paul begins as if he means to say \hous men apostolous, hous de proph[^]tas\ (some apostles, some prophets), but he changes the construction and has no \hous de\, but instead \pr“ton, deutron, epeita\ (first, second, then, etc.). {In the church} (\en t[^]i ekkl[^]sifi\). The general sense of \ekkl[^]sia\ as in Mt 16:18 and later in Col 1:18,24; Eph 5:23,32; Heb 12:23. See list also in Eph 4:11. See on Mt 10:2 for \apostolous\, the official title given the twelve by Jesus, and claimed by Paul though not one of the twelve. {Prophets} (\proph[^]tas\). For-speakers for God and Christ. See the list of prophets and teachers in Ac 13:1 with Barnabas first and Saul last. Prophets are needed today if men will let God's Spirit use them, men moved to utter the deep things of God. {Teachers} (\didaskalous\). Old word from \didask“\, to teach. Used to the Baptist (Lu 3:12), to Jesus (Joh 3:10; 13:13), and of Paul by himself along with \apostolos\ (1Ti 2:7). It is a calamity when the preacher is no longer a teacher, but only an exhorter. See Eph 4:11. {Then miracles} (\epeita dunameis\). Here a change is made from the concrete to the abstract. See the reverse in Ro 12:7. See these words (\dunameis, iam^t“n, gl“ss“n\ in verses 9,10 with \gl“ss“n\, last again. But these two new terms (helps, governments). {Helps} (\antil^mpseis\). Old word, from \antilambanomai\, to lay hold of. In LXX, common in papyri, here only in N.T. Probably refers to the work of the deacons, help rendered to the poor and the sick. {Governments} (\kubern^seis\). Old word from \kuberna“\ (cf. \Kubern^t^s\ in Ac 27:11) like Latin _gubernare_, our govern. So a governing. Probably Paul has in mind bishops (\episcopoi\ or elders (\presbuteroi\), the outstanding leaders (\hoi proistamenoi\ in 1Th 5:12; Ro 12:8; hoi h^goumenoi\ in Ac 15:22; Heb 13:7,17,24). Curiously enough, these two offices (pastors and deacons) which are not named specifically are the two that survive today. See Php 1:1 for both officers.

12:29 {Are all} (\m^pantes\). The \m^ expects a negative answer with each group.

12:30 {Do all interpret?} (\m^pantes dierm^neuousin?\). He adds this query to the list in 28, but it is in 10.

12:31 {The greater gifts} (\ta charismata ta meizona\). Paul unhesitatingly ranks some spiritual gifts above others. \Z^lo“\ here has good sense, not that of envy as in Ac 7:9; 1Co 13:4. {And a still more excellent way} (\kai eti kath' huperbol^nhodon\). In order to gain the greater gifts. "I show you a way _par excellence_, " beyond all comparison (superlative idea in this adjunct, not comparative), like \kath' huperbol^n eis huperbol^n\ (2Co 4:17). \Huperbol^ is old word from \huperball“\, to throw beyond, to surpass, to excel (2Co 3:10; Eph 1:19). "I show you a supremely excellent way." Chapter 1Co 13 is this way, the way of love already laid down in 8:1 concerning the question of meats offered to idols (cf. 1Jo 4:7). Poor division of chapters here. This verse belongs with chapter 1Co 13.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

13:1 {With the tongues} (\tais gl“ssais\). Instrumental case. Mentioned first because really least and because the Corinthians put undue emphasis on this gift. Plato (Symposium, 197) and many others have written on love, but Paul has here surpassed them all in this marvellous prose-poem. It comes like a sweet bell right between the jangling noise of the gifts in chapters 12 and 14. It is a pity to dissect this gem or to pull to pieces this fragrant rose, petal by petal. Fortunately Paul's language here calls for little comment, for it is the language of the heart. "The greatest, strongest, deepest thing Paul ever wrote" (Harnack). The condition (\ean\ and present subjunctive, \al“ kai m^ ech“\, though the form is identical with present indicative) is of the third class, a supposable case. {But have not love} (\agap^n de m^ ech“\). This is the crux of the chapter. Love is the way par excellence of 12:31. It is not yet clearly certain that \agap^ (a back-formation from \agapa“) occurs before the LXX and the N.T. Plutarch used \agap^sis\.

Deissmann (Bible Studies, p. 198) once suspected it on an inscription in Pisidia. It is still possible that it occurs in the papyri (Prayer to Isis). See Light from the Ancient East, p. 75 for details. The rarity of \agap^ made it easier for Christians to use this word for Christian love as opposed to \er“s\ (sexual love). See also Moffatt's Love in the N.T. (1930) for further data. The word is rare in the Gospels, but common in Paul, John, Peter, Jude. Paul does not limit \agap^ at all (both toward God and man). Charity (Latin caritas) is wholly inadequate. "Intellect was worshipped in Greece, and power in Rome; but where did St. Paul learn the surpassing beauty of love?" (Robertson and Plummer). Whether Paul had ever seen Jesus in the flesh, he knows him in the spirit. One can substitute Jesus for love all through this panegyric. {I am become} (\gegona\). Second perfect indicative in the conclusion rather than the usual future indicative. It is put vividly, "I am already become." Sounding brass (\chalchos ^ch“n\). Old words. Brass was the earliest metal that men learned to use. Our word echoing is ^ch“n\, present active participle. Used in Lu 21:25 of the roaring of the sea. Only two examples in N.T. {Clanging cymbal} (\kumbalon alalazon\). Cymbal old word, a hollow basin of brass. \Alalaz“, old onomatopoetic word to ring loudly, in lament (Mr 5:38), for any cause as here. Only two N.T. examples.

13:2 The ecstatic gifts (verse 1) are worthless. Equally so are the teaching gifts (prophecy, knowledge of mysteries, all knowledge). Crasis here in \kan=kai ean\. Paul is not condemning these great gifts. He simply places love above them and essential to them. Equally futile is wonder-working faith "so as to remove mountains" (h“ste or^ methistanein) without love. This may have been a proverb or Paul may have known the words of Jesus (Mt 17:20; 21:21). {I am nothing} (\outhen eimi\). Not \outheis\, nobody, but an absolute zero. This form in \th\ rather than \d\ (\ouden\)) had a vogue for a while (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 219).

13:3 {Bestow to feed} (\Ps“mis“\). First aorist active subjunctive of \ps“miz“, to feed, to nourish, from \ps“mos\, morsel or bit, and so to feed, by putting a morsel into the mouth like infant (or bird). Old word, but only here in N.T. {To be burned} (\hina kauth^s“mai\). First future passive subjunctive (Textus Receptus), but D \kauth^soma\ (future passive indicative of \kai“, old word to burn). There were even some who courted martyrdom in later years (time of Diocletian). This Byzantine future subjunctive does not occur in the old MSS. (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 876). Aleph A B here read \kauch^s“mai\, first aorist middle subjunctive of \kauchaomai\ (so Westcott and Hort), "that I may glory." This is correct. {It profiteth me nothing} (\ouden “pheloumai\). Literally, I am helped nothing. \Ouden\ in the accusative case retained with passive verb. See two accusatives with \“phele“\ in 14:6. Verb is old and from \ophelos\ (profit).

13:4 Verses 4-7 picture the character or conduct of love in marvellous rhapsody. {Suffereth long} (\makrothumei\). Late _Koin,_ word (Plutarch) from \makros\, long, \thumos\, passion, ardour. Cf. Jas 5:7f. {Is kind} (\chr^steuetai\). From \chr^stos\ (useful, gracious, kind) and that from \chraomai\, to use. Not found elsewhere save in Clement of Rome and Eusebius. "Perhaps of Paul's coining" (Findlay). Perhaps a vernacular word ready for Paul. Gentle in behaviour. {Envieth not} (\ou z^loi\). Present active indicative of \z^lo“\ (contraction \oei=oi\, same as subjunctive and optative forms). Bad sense of \z^los\ from \ze“, to boil, good sense in 12:31. Love is neither jealous nor envious (both ideas). {Vaunteth not itself} (\ou perpereuetai). From \perperos\, vainglorious, braggart (Polybius, Epictetus) like Latin _perperus_. Only here in N.T. and earliest known example. It means play the braggart. Marcus Anton. V. 5 uses it with \areskeuomai\, to play the toady. {Is not puffed up} (\ou phusioutai\). Present direct middle indicative of \phusio“\ from \phusis\ (late form for \phusa“, phusia“ from \phusa\, bellows), to puff oneself out like a pair of bellows. This form in Herodas and Menander. Is not arrogant. See on 4:6.

13:5 {Doth not behave itself unseemly} (\ouk asch^hmonei\). Old verb from \asch^hm“n\ (12:23). In N.T. only here and 7:36. Not indecent. {Seeketh not its own} (\ou z^htei ta heaut^hs\). Its own interests (10:24,33). {Is not provoked} (\ou paroxunetai\). Old word. In N.T. only here and Ac 17:16 which see. Irritation or sharpness of spirit. And yet Paul felt it in Athens (exasperation) and he and Barnabas had \paroxusmos\ (paroxysm) in Antioch (15:39). See good sense of \paroxusmos\ in Heb 10:24. {Taketh not account of evil} (\ou logizetai to kakon\). Old verb from \logos\, to count up, to take account of as in a ledger or note-book, "the evil" (\to kakon\) done to love with a view to settling the account.

13:6 {Rejoiceth not in unrighteousness} (\ou chairei\). See Ro 1:32 for this depth of degradation. There are people as low as that whose real joy is in the triumph of evil. {But rejoiceth with the truth} (\sunchairei de t^hi al^htheifi\). Associative instrumental case after \sun-\ in composition. Truth personified as opposed to unrighteousness (2Th 2:12; Ro 2:8). Love is on the side of the angels. Paul returns here to the positive side of the picture (verse 4) after the remarkable negatives.

13:7 {Beareth all things} (\panta stegei\). \Steg“\ is old verb from \steg“\, roof, already in 1Co 9:12; 1Th 3:1,5 which see. Love covers, protects, forbears (_suffert_, Vulgate). See 1Pe 4:8 "because love covers a multitude of sins" (\hoti agap^h kaluptei ph^hthos hamarti“n\), throws a veil over. {Believeth all things} (\panta pisteuei\). Not gullible, but has faith in men. {Hopeth all things} (\panta elpizei\). Sees the bright side of things. Does not despair. \Endureth all things\ (\panta hupomenei\). Perseveres. Carries on like a stout-hearted soldier. If one knows Sir Joshua Reynolds's beautiful painting of the Seven Virtues (the four cardinal virtues of the Stoics--temperance, prudence, fortitude, justice--and the three Christian graces--faith, hope, love), he will find them all exemplified here as marks of love (the queen of them all).

13:8 {Love never faileth} (\H^ agap^ oudepote piptei\). New turn for the perpetuity of love. \Piptei\ correct text, not \ekpiptei\, as in Lu 16:17. Love survives everything. {They shall be done away} (\katarg^th^sontai\). First future passive of \katarge“. Rare in old Greek, to make idle (\argos\), inoperative. All these special spiritual gifts will pass. It is amazing how little of human work lasts. {They shall cease} (\pausontai\). Future middle indicative of \pau“, to make cease. They shall make themselves cease or automatically cease of themselves.

13:9 {In part} (\ek merous\). See on 12:27. As opposed to the whole.

13:10 {That which is perfect} (\to teleion\). The perfect, the full-grown (\telos\, end), the mature. See on 2:6. \Hotan elth^i\ is second aorist subjunctive with \hotan\, temporal clause for indefinite future time.

13:11 {A child} (\n^pios\). See on 3:1 for \n^pios\ in contrast with \teleios\ (adult). {I spake} (\elaloun\). Imperfect active, I used to talk. {I felt} (\ephronoun\). Imperfect active, I used to think. Better, I used to understand. {I thought} (\elogizom^n\). Imperfect middle, I used to reason or calculate. {Now that I am become} (\hote gegona\). Perfect active indicative \gegona\, I have become a man (\an^r\ and remain so (Eph 4:14). {I have put away} (\kat^rg^ka\). Perfect active indicative. I have made inoperative (verse 8) for good.

13:12 {In a mirror} (\di' esoptrou\). By means of a mirror (\esoptron\, from \opt“, old word, in papyri). Ancient mirrors were of polished metal, not glass, those in Corinth being famous. {Darkly} (\en ainigmati\). Literally, in an enigma. Old word from \ainissomai\, to express obscurely. This is true of all ancient mirrors. Here only in N.T., but often in LXX. "To see a friend's face in a cheap mirror would be very different from looking at the friend" (Robertson and Plummer). {Face to face} (\pros“pon pros pros“pon\). Note triple use of \pros\ which means facing one as in Joh 1:1. \Pros“pon\ is old word from \pros\ and \ops\, eye, face. {Shall I know} (\epign“somai\). I shall fully (\epi-) know. Future middle indicative as \gin“sk“ (I know) is present active and \epegñ“sth^ñ\ (I was fully known) is first aorist passive (all three voices).

13:13 {Abideth} (\menei\). Singular, agreeing in number with \pistis\ (faith), first in list. {The greatest of these} (\meiz“n tout“n\). Predicative adjective and so no article. The form of \meiz“n\ is comparative, but it is used as superlative, for the superlative form \megistos\ had become rare in the _Koin,_ (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 667ff.). See this idiom in Mt 11:11; 18:1; 23:11. The other gifts pass away, but these abide forever. Love is necessary for both faith and hope. Does not love keep on growing? It is quite worth while to call attention to Henry Drummond's famous sermon _The Greatest Thing in the World_ and to Dr. J.D. Jones's able book _The Greatest of These_. Greatest, Dr. Jones holds, because love is an attribute of God.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

14:1 {Follow after love} (\di“kete tⁿ agapⁿ\). As if a veritable chase. Paul comes back to the idea in 12:31 (same use of \z^{loute}\) and proves the superiority of prophecy to the other spiritual gifts not counting faith, hope, love of 13:13. {But rather that ye may prophesy} (\mallon de hina proph^{teu}te\). Distinct aim in view as in verse 5. Old verb from \proph^ts\, common in N.T. Present subjunctive, "that ye may keep on prophesying."

14:2 {For no man understandeth} (\oudeis gar akouei\). Literally, hears, gets the sense, understands. Verb \akou“\ used either of hearing the sound only or getting the idea (cf. Ac 9:7; 22:9). {Mysteries} (\must^{ria}\). Unexplained mysteries (1Co 2:7).

14:3 {Edification} (\oikodomⁿ\). Building up. {Comfort} (\parakl^{sin}\). Encouragement, calling to one's side. {Consolation} (\paramuthian\). Old word (from \para, muthos, paramutheomai\ 1Th 2:12 which see, a stimulating word), nowhere else in N.T., but \paramuthion\ in Php 2:1 with \parakl^{sis}\ as here. Edification, cheer, incentive in these words.

14:4 {The church} (\ekkl^{sian}\). No article, literally, "a church" (local use). Not \h^e ekkl^{sia}\.

14:5 {Except he interpret} (\ektos ei m^e dierm^{neu}i\). Pleonastic combination of \ektos\ (preposition except) and \ei m^e\ (if not, unless) as in 15:2; 1Ti 5:19. For use of \ei\ with subjunctive rather than \ean\ see Php 3:12 (common enough in the _Koin_, _Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1017f., condition of third class). On the verb see on 12:30; Lu 24:27; Ac 9:36. {Receive} (\labⁱ\). Second aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \lamban“\, may get edification.

14:6 {If I come} (\ean elth“\). Third class condition, supposable case (aorist subjunctive). {What shall I profit you} (\ti humas “phel^s“\). Two accusatives with this verb (see 13:3). {Unless I speak} (\ean m^e lal^s“\). Second condition (also third class) with the one conclusion (cf. 1Ti 2:5).

14:7 {Things without life} (\|apsucha\). Without a soul (\|a\| privative, \|psuch^\) or life. Old word only here in N.T. {Pipe} (\|aulos\). Old word (from \|a“, \|au“, \|to blow), only here in N.T. {Harp} (\|kithara\). Old word. Stringed instrument as pipe, a wind instrument. {If they give not a distinction in the sounds} (\|ean diastol^ˆn tois phthoggois m^ d^“i\). Third class condition with second aorist active subjunctive \|d^“i\ from \|did^“mi\. Common word in late Greek for difference (\|diastell“, \|to send apart). In N.T. only here and Ro 3:22; 10:12. \|Phthoggos\ old word (from \|phtheggomai\) for musical sounds vocal or instrumental. In N.T. only here and Ro 10:18.

14:8 {An uncertain voice} (\|ad^lon ph^“n^ˆn\). Old adjective (\|a\| privative, \|d^los\, \|manifest). In N.T. only here and Lu 11:44. Military trumpet (\|salpigx\) is louder than pipe or harp. {Shall prepare himself} (\|paraskeuasetai\). Direct middle future indicative of \|paraskeuaz^“\, old verb, in N.T. only here, 2Co 9:2ff.; Ac 10:10. From \|para, skeu^ (|preparation).

14:9 {Unless ye utter speech easy to be understood} (\|ean m^ eus^mon logon d^“te\). Condition of third class again (\|ean\| and aorist subjunctive). \|Eus^mon\ (\|eu\, \|well, \|s^ma\, \|sign) is old word, here only in N.T., well-marked, distinct, clear. Good enunciation, a hint for speakers. {Ye will be speaking into the air} (\|esesthe eis aera lalountes\). Periphrastic future indicative (linear action). Cf. \|aera der^“n\ (beating the air) in 9:26. Cf. our talking to the wind. This was before the days of radio.

14:10 {It may be} (\|ei tuchoi\). Condition of fourth class (\|ei\| and aorist optative of \|tugchan“, \|), if it should happen. Common enough idiom. Cf. \|tuchon\ in 16:6. {Without signification} (\|aph^“non\). Old adjective (\|a\| privative and \|ph^“n^\). Without the faculty of speech (12:2; Ac 8:32; 2Pe 2:16).

14:11 {The meaning of the voice} (\|t^ˆn dunamin t^s ph^“n^s\). The power (force) of the voice. {A barbarian} (\|barbaros\). Jargon, \|bar-bar\. The Egyptians called all \|barbarous\ who did not speak their tongue. The Greeks followed suit for all ignorant of Greek language and culture. They divided mankind into Hellenes and Barbarians. {Unto me} (\|en emoi\). In my case, almost like a dative.

14:12 {Zealous of spiritual gifts} (\|z^l^“tai pneumat^“n\). Zealots for spirits. So it looked. {That ye may abound} (\hina perisseu^te\). Purpose clause with the object by prolepsis stated beforehand "for the edification of the church."

14:13 {Let him pray that he may interpret} (\proseuchesth^ hina dierm^neu^i\). Else he had better cease talking in a tongue.

14:14 {But my understanding is unfruitful} (\ho de nous mou akarpou\). My intellect (\nous\) gets no benefit (\akarpou\, without fruit) from rhapsodical praying that may even move my spirit (\pneuma\).

14:15 {With the understanding also} (\kai t^i nou\). Instrumental case of \nou\. Paul is distinctly in favour of the use of the intellect in prayer. Prayer is an intelligent exercise of the mind. {And I will sing with the understanding also} (\psal^ de kai t^i nou\). There was ecstatic singing like the rhapsody of some prayers without intelligent words. But Paul prefers singing that reaches the intellect as well as stirs the emotions. Solos that people do not understand lose more than half their value in church worship. \Psall^ originally meant to play on strings, then to sing with an accompaniment (Eph 5:19), and here apparently to sing without regard to an instrument.

14:16 {Else if thou bless with the spirit} (\epeí ean eulog^is en pneumatí\). Third class condition. He means that, if one is praying and praising God (10:16) in an ecstatic prayer, the one who does not understand the ecstasy will be at a loss when to say "amen" at the close of the prayer. In the synagogues the Jews used responsive amens at the close of prayers (Neh 5:13; 8:6; 1Ch 16:36; Ps 106:48). {He that filleth the place of the unlearned} (\ho anapl^r^ n ton topon tou idi^ tou\). Not a special part of the room, but the position of the \idi^ tou\ (from idios, one's own), common from Herodotus for private person (Ac 4:13), unskilled (2Co 11:6), uninitiated (unlearned) in the gift of tongues as here and verses 23f. {At thy giving of thanks} (\epi t^i s^i eucharistifi\). Just the prayer, not the Eucharist or the Lord's Supper, as is plain from verse 17.

14:18 {More than you all} (\pant^ n hum^ n mallon\). Ablative case after \mallon\. Astonishing claim by Paul that doubtless had a fine effect.

14:19 {Howbeit in church} (\alla en ekkl^sifi\). Private ecstasy is one thing (cf. 2Co 12:1-9) but not in church worship. {That I may instruct} (\hina kat^ch^s^). Final clause with \hina. For the rare verb \kat^che^ see on Lu 1:4; Ac 18:25.

14:20 {Be not children in mind} (\m^ paidia gines^{the} tais phresin). "Cease becoming children in your intellects," as some of them evidently were. Cf. Heb 5:11-14 for a like complaint of intellectual dulness for being old babies. {In malice be ye babes} (\t^i kakifi n^piazete). {Be men} (\teleioi gines^{the}). Keep on becoming adults in your minds. A noble and a needed command, pertinent today.

14:21 {In the law it is written} (\en t^i nom^i gegraptai). Isa 28:11f. Freely quoted.

14:22 {For a sign} (\eis s^meion). Like the Hebrew and occasional _Koin_ idiom also.

14:23 {Will they not say that ye are mad?} (\ouk erousin hoti maines^{the}?). These unbelievers unacquainted (\idi^tai) with Christianity will say that the Christians are raving mad (see on Ac 12:15; 26:24). They will seem like a congregation of lunatics.

14:24 {He is reproved by all} (\elegchetai hupo pant^n). Old word for strong proof, is undergoing conviction. {Is judged} (\anakrinetai). Is tested. Cf. 1Co 2:15; 4:3f.

14:25 {That God is among you indeed} (\hoti ont^s en humin estin). Recitative \hoti and direct quotation from Isa 45:15 (Hebrew rather than the LXX). "Really (\ont^s\ Lu 24:34) God is in you."

14:26 {When ye come together} (\hotan sunerch^sthe). Present middle subjunctive, repetition, whenever ye come together, in contrast with special case (\ean sunelth^i\, second aorist subjunctive) in verse 23.

14:27 {By two} (\kata duo). According to two, ratio. {Or at most} (\^to pleiston). Adverbial accusative, "or at the most." {Three} (\treis). \Kata to be repeated. {And that in turn} (\kai ana meros). One at a time and not over three in all.

14:28 {But if there be no interpreter} (\ean de m^i dierm^neut^s). Third class condition. Earliest known instance and possibly made by Paul from verb in verse 27. Reappears in Byzantine grammarians. {Keep silence in church} (\sigat“ en ekkl^hsifi). Linear action (present active imperative). He is not even to speak in a tongue once. He can indulge his private ecstasy with God.

14:29 {By two or three} (\duo ^ treis\). No \kata\ here as in verse 27. Let two or three prophets speak. {Let the others discern} (\hoi alloi diakrinet“san). Whether what is said is really of the Spirit. Cf. 12:10 \diakriseis pneumat“n).

14:30 {Let the first keep silence} (\ho pr“tos sigat“\). To give the next one a chance.

14:31 {One by one} (\kath' ena\). Regular idiom.

14:32 {The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets} (\pneumata proph^ht“n proph^htais hupotassetai). A principle that some had forgotten.

14:33 {Not of confusion} (\ou--katastasias\). God is not a God of disorder, but of peace. We need this reminder today. {As in all the churches of the saints} (\h“s en pasais tais ekkl^hsiais t“n hagi“n\). Orderly reverence is a mark of the churches. This is a proper conclusion of his argument as in 11:16.

14:34 {Keep silence in the churches} (\en tais ekkl^hsiais sigat“san\). The same verb used about the disorders caused by speakers in tongues (verse 28) and prophets (30). For some reason some of the women were creating disturbance in the public worship by their dress (11:2-16) and now by their speech. There is no doubt at all as to Paul's meaning here. In church the women are not allowed to speak (\lalein\) nor even to ask questions. They are to do that {at home} (\en oik“i\). He calls it a shame (\aischron\) as in 11:6 (cf. Eph 5:12; Tit 1:11). Certainly women are still in subjection (\hupotassesth“san) to their husbands (or ought to be). But somehow modern Christians have concluded that Paul's commands on this subject, even 1Ti 2:12, were meant for specific conditions that do not apply wholly now. Women do most of the teaching in our Sunday schools today. It is not easy to draw the line. The daughters of Philip were prophetesses. It seems clear that we need to be patient with each other as we try to understand Paul's real meaning here.

14:37 {The commandment of the Lord} (\Kuriou entol). The prophet or the one with the gift of tongues or the disturbing woman would be quick to resent the sharp words of Paul. He claims inspiration for his position.

14:40 {Decently and in order} (\eusch^{mon}“s kai kata taxin). That is surely a good rule for all matters of church life and worship. It applies also to the function of women in church service.

(1 Corinthians: Chapter 14)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

15:1 {I make known} (\gn“riz“\). See on 12:3 for this common verb. As if in reproach. {The gospel which I preached unto you} (\to euaggelion ho eu^ggelisam^h n humin\). Cognate accusative, "the gospel which I gospelized unto you." Note augment \^ after \eu-\ like compound verb with preposition. Note repetition of relative (\ho, en h“i, di hou, and \tini\ like relative) without \kai\ (and), asyndeton.

15:2 {In what words I preached it unto you} (\tini logoi eu^ggelisam^h n humin\). Almost certainly \tis\ (\tini logoi, locative or instrumental, in or with) here is used like the relative \hos\ as is common in papyri (Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 93f.; Robertson, Grammar, p. 737f.). Even so it is not clear whether the clause depends on \gn“riz“\ like the other relatives, but most likely so. {If we hold it fast} (\ei katechete\). Condition of first class. Paul assumes that they are holding it fast. {Except ye believed in vain} (\ektos ei m^ eik^i episteusate\). For \ektos ei m^ see on 14:5. Condition of first class, unless in fact ye did believe to no purpose (\eik^i, old adverb, only in Paul in N.T.). Paul holds this peril over them in their temptation to deny the resurrection.

15:3 {First of all} (\en pr“tois\). Among first things. _In primis_. Not to time, but to importance. {Which I also received} (\ho kai parelabon\). Direct revelation claimed as about the institution of the Lord's Supper (11:23) and same verbs used (\pared“ka, parelabon\). Four items given by Paul in explaining "the gospel" which Paul preached. Stanley calls it (verses 1-11) the creed of the early disciples, but "rather a sample of the exact form of the apostle's early teaching, than a profession of faith on the part of converts" (Vincent). The four items are presented by four verbs (died, \apethanen, was buried, \etaph^, hath been raised, \eg^gertai, appeared, \“phth^). {Christ died} (\Christos apethanen\). Historical fact and crucial event. {For our sins} (\huper t“n hamarti“n h^m“n\). \Huper\ means literally over, in behalf, even instead of (Ga 3:13), where used of persons. But here much in the sense of \peri\ (Ga 1:14) as is common in _Koin,_. In 1Pe 3:18 we have \peri hamarti“n, huper adik“n\ {According to the Scriptures} (\k*ata tas graphas*\). As Jesus showed (Lu 22:37; 24:25) and as Peter pointed out (Ac 2:25-27; 3:35) and as Paul had done (Ac 13:24f.; 17:3). Cf. Ro 1:2ff.

15:4 {And that he was buried} (\k*ai hoti etaph*^). Note \hoti\ repeated before each of the four verbs as a separate item. Second aorist passive indicative of \thapt“\, old verb, to bury. This item is an important detail as the Gospels show. {And that he hath been raised} (\k*ai hoti eg*^gertai). Perfect passive indicative, not \^gerth^ like {rose} of the King James' Version. There is reason for this sudden change of tense. Paul wishes to emphasize the permanence of the resurrection of Jesus. He is still risen. {On the third day} (\t^i h^merfi t^i trit^i). Locative case of time. Whether Paul had seen either of the Gospels we do not know, but this item is closely identified with the fact of Christ's resurrection. We have it in Peter's speech (Ac 10:40) and Jesus points it out as part of prophecy (Lu 24:46). The other expression occasionally found "after three days" (Mr 10:34) is merely free vernacular for the same idea and not even Mt 12:40 disturbs it. See on ^Lu 24:1 for record of the empty tomb on the first day of the week (the third day).

15:5 {And that he appeared to Cephas} (\k*ai hoti “phth*^ K^phfi\). First aorist passive indicative of the defective verb \hora“\, to see. Paul means not a mere "vision," but actual appearance. John uses \ephaner“th^ (\i*oh 21:14*) from \phanero“\, to make manifest, of Christ's appearance to the seven by the Sea of Galilee. Peter was listed first (\p*r*“tos\) among the Apostles (Mt 10:2). Jesus had sent a special message to him (Mr 16:7) after his resurrection. This special appearance to Peter is made the determining factor in the joyful faith of the disciples (Lu 24:34), though mentioned incidentally here. Paul had told all these four facts to the Corinthians in his preaching. He gives further proof of the fact of Christ's resurrection. There are ten appearances given besides the one to Paul. Nine are in the Gospels (Mary Magdalene in John and Mark, the other women in Matthew, the two going to Emmaus in Luke, Simon Peter in Luke and I Corinthians, the ten apostles and others in Luke and John and Mark, the eleven and others in John, the seven by the sea in John, to over five hundred in Galilee in Matthew and Paul and Mark, to the apostles in Jerusalem in Luke and Mark and Acts and I Corinthians) and one in I Corinthians above (to James). It will be seen that Paul mentions only five of the ten, one, that to James, not given elsewhere. What he gives is conclusive evidence of the fact, particularly when re-enforced by his own experience (the sixth appearance mentioned by Paul). The way to prove this great fact is to start with Paul's own witness given in this undoubted Epistle. The natural way to understand Paul's adverbs of time here is chronological: {then} (\eita\), {then} (\epeita\), {then} (\epeita\), {then} (\eita\), {last of all} (\eschaton pant“n\). {To the twelve} (\tois d“deka\). The technical name. Only ten were present, for Judas was dead and Thomas was absent (Joh 20:24).

15:6 {To above five hundred brethren at once} (\epan“pentakosiois adelphois ephapax\). \Epan“\ here is just an adverb with no effect on the case. As a preposition with the ablative see Mt 5:14. This incident is the one described in Mt 28:16 the prearranged meeting on the mountain in Galilee. The strength of this witness lies in the fact that the majority (\hoi pleious\) of them were still living when Paul wrote this Epistle, say spring of A.D. 54 or 55, not over 25 years after Christ's resurrection.

15:7 {To James} (\Iak“b“i\). The brother of the Lord. This fact explains the presence of the brothers of Jesus in the upper room (Ac 1:14). {To all the apostles} (\tois apostolois pasin\). The Ascension of Christ from Olivet.

15:8 {As unto one born out of due time} (\h“sperei t“i ektr“mati\). Literally, as to the miscarriage (or untimely birth). Word first occurs in Aristotle for abortion or miscarriage and occurs in LXX (Nu 12:12; Job 3:16) and papyri (for miscarriage by accident). The verb \titr“sk“\ means to wound and \ek\ is out. Paul means that the appearance to him came after Jesus had ascended to heaven.

15:9 {The least} (\ho elachistos\). True superlative, not relative. Explanation of the strong word \ektr“ma\ just used. See Eph 3:8 where he calls himself "less than the least of all saints" and 1Ti 1:15 the "chief" (\pr“tos\) of sinners. Yet under attack from the Judaizers Paul stood up for his rank as equal to any apostle (2Co 11:5f.,23). {Because I persecuted the church of God} (\edi“xa t^n ekkl’sian tou theou\). There were times when this terrible fact confronted Paul like a nightmare. Who does not understand this mood of contrition?

15:10 {What I am} (\ho eimi). Not, {who} (\hos), but {what} (\ho), neuter singular. His actual character and attainments. All "by the grace of God" (\chariti theou). {I laboured more abundantly than they all} (\perissoteron aut“n pant“n ekopiasa). This is sober fact as shown by the Acts and Paul's Epistles. He had tremendous energy and used it. Genius is work, Carlyle said. Take Paul as a specimen.

15:11 {So we preach, and so ye believed} (\hout“s k^russomen, kai hout“s episteusate). This is what matters both for preacher and hearers. This is Paul's gospel. Their conduct in response to his message was on record.

15:12 {Is preached} (\k^russetai). Personal use of the verb, Christ is preached. {How say some among you?} (\p“s legousin en humin tines?). The question springs naturally from the proof of the fact of the resurrection of Christ (verses 1-11) and the continual preaching which Paul here assumes by condition of the first class (\ei--k^russetai). There were sceptics in Corinth, possibly in the church, who denied the resurrection of dead people just as some men today deny that miracles happen or ever did happen. Paul's answer is the resurrection of Christ as a fact. It all turns on this fact.

15:13 {Neither hath Christ been raised} (\oude Christos eg^gertai). He turns the argument round with tremendous force. But it is fair.

15:14 {Vain} (\kenon). _Inanis_, Vulgate. Old word, empty. Both Paul's preaching and their faith are empty if Christ has not been raised. If the sceptics refuse to believe the fact of Christ's resurrection, they have nothing to stand on.

15:15 {False witnesses of God} (\pseudomartures tou theou). Late word, but \pseudomarture“, to bear false witness, old and common. The genitive (\tou theou) can be either subjective (in God's service) or objective (concerning God). Either makes good sense. {Because we witnessed of God} (\hoti emartur^samen kata tou theou). Vulgate has _adversus Deum_. This is the more natural way to take \kata and genitive, {against God} not as equal to \peri (concerning). He would indeed make God play false in that case, {if so be that the dead are not raised} (\eiper ara nekroi ouk egeirontai). Condition of first class, assumed as true. Note both \per\ intensive particle {indeed} and \ara\ inferential particle {therefore}.

15:16 Repeats the position already taken in verse 13.

15:17 {Vain} (\mataia\). Old word from adverb \mat^n\ (Mt 15:9), devoid of truth, a lie. Stronger word than \kenon\ in verse 14. {Ye are yet in your sins} (\eti este en tais hamartiais hum^'n\). Because the death of Christ has no atoning value if he did not rise from the dead. In that case he was only a man like other men and did not die for our sins (verse 3).

15:18 {Then also} (\ara kai\). Inevitable inference. {Have perished} (\ap^'lonto\). Did perish. Second aorist middle indicative of \apollumi\, to destroy, middle, to perish (delivered up to eternal misery). Cf. 8:11.

15:19 {We have hoped} (\^lpikotes esmen\). Periphrastic perfect active indicative. Hope limited to this life even if "in Christ." {Only} (\monon\) qualifies the whole clause. {Most pitiable} (\eleeinoterai\). Comparative form, not superlative, of old adjective \eleeinos\, to be pitied, pitiable. If our hope is limited to this life, we have denied ourselves what people call pleasures and have no happiness beyond. The Epicureans have the argument on us. Paul makes morality turn on the hope of immortality. Is he not right? Witness the breaking of moral ties today when people take a merely animal view of life.

15:20 {But now} (\nuni de\). Emphatic form of \nun\ with \-i\ added (cf. 12:18). It is the logical triumph of Paul after the _reductio ad impossibile_ (Findlay) of the preceding argument. {The first-fruits} (\aparch^'\). Old word from \aparchomai\, to offer firstlings or first-fruits. In LXX for first-fruits. In papyri for legacy-duty, entrance-fee, and also first-fruits as here. See also verse 23; 16:15; Ro 8:23, etc. Christ is "first-born from the dead" (Col 1:18). Others raised from the dead died again, but not so Jesus. {That sleep} (\t^'n kekoim^'men^'n\). Perfect middle participle as in Mt 27:52 which see. Beautiful picture of death from which word (\koimaomai\) comes our \cemetery\.

15:21 {By man also} (\dai di' anthr^'pou\). That is Jesus, the God-man, the Second Adam (Ro 5:12). The hope of the resurrection of the dead rests in Christ.

15:22 {Shall be made alive} (\z“opoithsontai\). First future passive indicative of \z“opoie“\, late verb (Aristotle) to give life, to restore to life as here. In verse 36 \z“opoieitai\ is used in the sense of natural life as in Joh 5:21; 6:63 of spiritual life. It is not easy to catch Paul's thought here. He means resurrection (restoration) by the verb here, but not necessarily eternal life or salvation. So also \pantes\ may not coincide in both clauses. All who die die in Adam, all who will be made alive will be made alive (restored to life) in Christ. The same problem occurs in Ro 5:18 about "all," and in verse 19 about "the many."

15:23 {Order} (\tagmati\). Old military term from \tass“, to arrange, here only in N.T. Each in his own division, troop, rank. {At his coming} (\en tⁱ parousifi\). The word \parousia\ was the technical word "for the arrival or visit of the king or emperor" and can be traced from the Ptolemaic period into the second century A.D. (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, p. 368). "Advent-coins were struck after a parousia of the emperor." Paul is only discussing "those that are Christ's" (3:23; Ga 5:24) and so says nothing about judgment (cf. 1Th 2:19; 3:13; 4:15; 5:23).

15:24 {Then cometh the end} (\eita to telos\). No verb \ginetai\ in the Greek. Supply "at his coming," the end or consummation of the age or world (Mt 13:39,49; 1Pe 4:7), {When he shall deliver up} (\hotan paradid“i\). Present active subjunctive (not optative) of \paradid“mi\ with \hotan\, whenever, and so quite indefinite and uncertain as to time. Present subjunctive rather than aorist \parad“i\ because it pictures a future proceeding. {To God, even the Father} (\t“i the“i kai patri\). Better, "to the God and Father" or to "His God and Father." The Kingdom belongs to the Father. {When he shall have abolished} (\hotan katarg“s“i\). First aorist active subjunctive with \hotan\, indefinite future time. Simply, "whenever he shall abolish," no use in making it future perfect, merely aorist subjunctive. On \katarge“\ see 1Co 6:13; 13:8,10,11. {Rule} (\arch“n\), {authority} (\exousian\), {power} (\dunamin\). All forms of power opposing the will of God. Constative aorist tense covering the whole period of conflict with final victory as climax.

15:25 {Till he hath put} (\achri hou th“i\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \tith“mi\, "till he put" (no sense in saying "hath put," merely effective aorist tense for climax. \Achri (hou), mechri (hou), he"s (hou)\ all are used for the same idea of indefinite future time.)

15:26 {The last enemy that shall be abolished is death} (\eschatos echthros katargeitai ho thanatos\). A rather free translation. Literally, "death (note article, and so subject) is done away (prophetic or futuristic use of present tense of same verb as in verse 24), the last enemy" (predicate and only one "last" and so no article as in 1Jo 2:18).

15:27 {He put} (\hupetaxen\). First aorist active of \hupotass“, to subject. Supply God (\theos\ as subject (Ps 8:7). See Heb 2:5-9 for similar use. Cf. Ps 8. {But when he saith} (\hotan de eip^i\). Here Christ must be supplied as the subject if the reference is to his future and final triumph. The syntax more naturally calls for God as the subject as before. Either way makes sense. But there is no need to take \eip^i\ (second aorist active subjunctive) as _a futurum exactum_, merely "whenever he shall say." {Are put in subjection} (\hupotetaktai\). Perfect passive indicative, state of completion, final triumph. {It is evident that} (\d^lon hoti\). Supply \estin\ (is) before \hoti\.

{He is excepted who did subject} (\ektos tou hupotaxantos\). "Except the one (God) who did subject (articular aorist active participle) the all things to him (Christ)."

15:28 {And when all things have been subjected} (\hotan de hupotag^i ta panta\). Second aorist passive subjunctive of \hupotass“, not perfect. Merely, "when the all things are subjected unto him." The aorist subjunctive has given translators a deal of needless trouble in this passage. It is prophecy, of course. {That God may be all in all} (\hina ^i ho theos panta en pasin\). The final goal of all God's redemptive plans as Paul has so well said in Ro 11:36. Precisely this language Paul will use of Christ (Col 3:11).

15:29 {Else} (\epoi\). Otherwise, if not true. On this use of \epoi\ with ellipsis see on ^5:10; 7:14. {Which are baptized for the dead} (\hoi baptizomenoi huper t^"n nekr^"n\). This passage remains a puzzle. Stanley gives thirteen interpretations, no one of which may be correct. Over thirty have been suggested. The Greek expositors took it to be about the dead (\huper\ in sense of \peri\ as often as in 2Co 1:6) since baptism is a burial and a resurrection (Ro 6:2-6). Tertullian tells of some heretics who took it to mean baptized in the place of dead people (unsaved) in order to save them. Some take it to be baptism over the dead. Others take it to mean that Paul and others were in peril of death as shown by baptism (see verse 30). {At all} (hol“s). See on 5:1.

15:30 {Why do we also stand in jeopardy every hour?} (ti kai h^{meis} kinduneuomen pasan h“ran?). We also as well as those who receive baptism which symbolizes death. Old verb from kindunos (peril, danger), in N.T. only here and Lu 8:23. Paul's Epistles and Acts (especially chapter Ac 19) throw light on Paul's argument. He was never out of danger from Damascus to the last visit to Rome. There are perils in Ephesus of which we do not know (2Co 1:8f.) whatever may be true as to an Ephesian imprisonment. G. S. Duncan (St. Paul's Ephesian Ministry, 1930) even argues for several imprisonments in Ephesus. The accusative of time (pasan h“ran) naturally means all through every hour (extension).

15:31 {I protest by that glorying in you} (n^tn humeteran kauch^{sin}). No word for "I protest." Paul takes solemn oath by the use of n^t (common in Attic) with the accusative. Only here in N.T., but in LXX (Ge 42:15f.). For other solemn oaths by Paul see 2Co 1:18,23; 11:10f.,31; Ro 9:1. For kauch^{sis} see on 1Th 2:19. The possessive pronoun (humeteran) is objective as emⁿ in 1Co 11:24. {I die daily} (kath' h^{meran} apothn^{sk}). I am in daily peril of death (2Co 4:11; 11:23; Ro 8:36).

15:32 {After the manner of men} (kata anthr“pon). Like men, for applause, money, etc. (4:9ff.; Php 3:7). {If I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus} (ei eth^{riomach}sa en Ephes“i). Late verb from th^{riomachos}, a fighter with wild beasts. Found in inscriptions and in Ignatius. Those who argue for an Ephesian imprisonment for Paul and Ephesus as the place where he wrote the imprisonment epistles (see Duncan's book just mentioned) take the verb literally. There is in the ruins of Ephesus now a place called St. Paul's Prison. But Paul was a Roman citizen and it was unlawful to make such a one be a th^{riomachos}. If he were cast to the lions unlawfully, he could have prevented it by claiming his citizenship. Besides, shortly after this Paul wrote II Corinthians, but he does not mention so unusual a peril in the list in 2Co 11:23f. The incident, whatever it was, whether literal or figurative language, took place before Paul wrote I Corinthians. {What doth it profit me?} (\ti moi to ophelos?). What the profit to me? {Let us eat and drink} (\phag“men kai pi“men). Volitive second aorist subjunctives of \esthi“ and \pin“. Cited from Isa 22:13. It is the outcry of the people of Jerusalem during the siege of Jerusalem by the Assyrians. At Anchiale near Tarsus is a statue of Sardanapalus with the inscription: "Eat, drink, enjoy thyself. The rest is nothing." This was the motto of the Epicureans. Paul is not giving his own view, but that of people who deny the resurrection.

15:33 {Be not deceived} (\m^ planfsthe). Do not be led astray (\plana“) by such a false philosophy of life. {Evil company} (\homiliai kakai). Evil companionships. Old word, \homilia, from \homilos (a crowd, gang, bunch). Only here in N.T. Good manners (\^th^). Old word (kin to \ethos) custom, usage, morals. Good morals here. This line of poetry (iambic) occurs in Menander. It may be a current proverb. Paul could have gotten it from either source.

15:34 {Awake up righteously} (\ekn^psate dikai“s). Wake up as if from drunkenness. \Ekn^ph“, only here in N.T. sin not (\m^ hamartanete). Stop sinning. {No knowledge of God} (\agn“sian theou). Old word for ignorance, in N.T. only here and 1Pe 2:15. Ignorance of God, agnosticism. Some today (agnostics) even take pride in it instead of shame (\entrop^n\, turning in on oneself). See on 7:5 for \entrop^.

15:35 {But some one will say} (\alla erei tis). Paul knows what the sceptics were saying. He is a master at putting the standpoint of the imaginary adversary. {How} (\p“s). This is still the great objection to the resurrection of our bodies. Granted that Jesus rose from the dead, for the sake of argument, these sceptics refuse to believe in the possibility of our resurrection. It is the attitude of Matthew Arnold who said, "Miracles do not happen." Scientifically we know the "how" of few things. Paul has an astounding answer to this objection. Death itself is the way of resurrection as in the death of the seed for the new plant (verses 36f.). {With what manner of body} (\poi“i s“mati). This is the second question which makes plainer the difficulty of the first. The first body perishes. Will that body be raised? Paul treats this problem more at length (verses 38-54) and by analogy of nature (Cf. Butler's famous _Analogy_). It is a spiritual, not a natural, body that is raised. \S“ma here is an organism. {Flesh} (\sarx) is the

\s“ma\ for the natural man, but there is spiritual (\pneumatikon\)\s“ma\ for the resurrection.

15:36 {Thou foolish one} (\aphr“n\). Old word (\a\ privative, \p hr^ n\), lack of sense. It is a severe term and justified by the implication "that the objector plumes himself on his acuteness" (Robertson and Plummer). Proleptic position of \su\ (thou) sharpens the point. Sceptics (agnostics) pose as unusually intellectual (the intelligentsia), but the pose does not make one intelligent. {Except it die} (\ean m^ apothan^ i\). Condition of third class, possibility assumed. This is the answer to the "how" question. In plant life death precedes life, death of the seed and then the new plant.

15:37 {Not the body which shall be} (\ou to s“ma to gen^somenon\). Articular future participle of \ginomai\, literally, "not the body that will become." The new {body} (\s“ma\) is not yet in existence, but only the seed (\kokkos\, grain, old word, as in Mt 13:31). {It may chance} (\ei tuchoi\). Fourth class condition as in 14:10 which see. Paul is rich in metaphors here, though usually not so (Howson, _Metaphors of St. Paul_). Paul was a city man. We sow seeds, not plants (bodies). The butterfly comes out of the dying worm.

15:38 {A body of its own} (\idion s“ma\). Even under the microscope the life cells or germ plasm may seem almost identical, but the plant is quite distinct. On \sperma\, seed, old word from \speir“\, to sow, see on ~Mt 13:24f.

15:39 {The same flesh} (\h^ aut^ sarx\). Paul takes up animal life to show the great variety there is as in the plant kingdom.
Even if evolution should prove to be true, Paul's argument remains valid. Variety exists along with kinship. Progress is shown in the different kingdoms, progress that even argues for a spiritual body after the body of flesh is lost. {Of beasts} (\kt^ n“n\). Old word, from \ktaomai\, to possess, and so property. See Lu 10:34. {Of birds} (\pt^ n“n\). Old word from \petomai\, to fly, winged, flying. Only here in N.T.

15:40 {Celestial} (\epourania\). Old word, from \epi\, upon, \ouranos\, heaven, existing in heaven. Paul now rises higher in the range of his argument, above the merely {terrestrial} (\epigeia\, upon earth, \epi, ge\) bodies. He has shown differences in the bodies here on earth in plants and in the animal kingdom and now he indicates like differences to be seen in the heavens above us. {Is one} (\hetera men) {--is another} (\hetera de). Antithesis that admits glory for bodies on earth and bodies in the heavens. Experience does not argue against a glory for the spiritual body (Php 3:21).

15:41 {For one star differeth from another star in glory} (\ast^r gar asteros diapherei en dox^i). A beautiful illustration of Paul's point. \Asteros is the ablative case after \diapherei (old verb \diapher^\", Latin _differo_, our _differ_, bear apart). On \ast^r see Mt 2:7 and \astron Lu 21:25. Stars differ in magnitude and brilliancy. The telescope has added more force to Paul's argument. {In glory} (\en dox^i). Old word from \doke^\", to think, to seem. So opinion, estimate, then the shekinah glory of God in the LXX, glory in general. It is one of the great words of the N.T. Jesus is termed the glory in Jas 2:1.

15:42 {So is the resurrection of the dead} (\hout^s kai h^ anastasis t^"n nekr^"n). Paul now applies his illustrations to his argument to prove the kind of body we shall have after the resurrection. He does it by a series of marvellous contrasts that gather all his points. The earthly and the risen beings differ in duration, value, power (Wendt). {It is sown} (\speiretai). In death, like the seed (37). {In incorruption} (\en aphtharsifi). Late word from \a privative and \phtheir^\", to corrupt. In LXX, Plutarch, Philo, late papyrus of a Gnostic gospel, and quotation from Epicurus. Vulgate _incorruptio_. The resurrection body has undergone a complete change as compared with the body of flesh like the plant from the seed. It is related to it, but it is a different body of glory.

15:43 {In weakness} (\en astheneifi). Lack of strength as shown in the victory of death. {In power} (\en dunamei). Death can never conquer this new body, "conformed to the body of His glory" (Php 3:21).

15:44 {A natural body} (\s^"ma psuchikon). See on 2:14 for this word, a difficult one to translate since \psuch^\" has so many meanings. Natural is probably as good a rendering as can be made, but it is not adequate, for the body here is not all \psuch^\" either as soul or life. The same difficulty exists as to a spiritual body (\s^"ma pneumatikon). The resurrection body is not wholly \pneuma. Caution is needed here in filling out details concerning the \psuch^\" and the \pneuma. But certainly he means to say that the "spiritual body" has some kind of germinal connection with the "natural body," though the development is glorious beyond our comprehension though not beyond the power of Christ to perform (Php 3:21). The force of the argument remains unimpaired though we cannot follow fully into the thought beyond us. {If there is} (\ei estin\). "If there exists" (\estin\ means this with accent on first syllable), a condition of first class assumed as true. {There is also} (\estin kai\). There exists also.

15:45 {Became a living soul} (\egeneto eis psuch^hn z^hsan\). Hebraistic use of \eis\ in predicate from LXX. God breathed a soul (\psuch^h\) into "the first man." {The last Adam became a life-giving spirit} (\ho eschatos Adam eis pneuma z^hopoion\). Supply \egeneto\ (became). Christ is the crown of humanity and has power to give us the new body. In Ro 5:12-19 Paul calls Christ the Second Adam.

15:46 {Howbeit that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural} (\all' ou pr^hton to pneumatikon, alla to psuchikon\). Literally, "But not first the spiritual, but the natural." This is the law of growth always.

15:47 {Earthly} (\cho^hkos\). Late rare word, from \chous\, dust. {The second man from heaven} (\ho deuterios anthr^hpos ex ouranou\). Christ had a human (\psuchikon\) body, of course, but Paul makes the contrast between the first man in his natural body and the Second Man in his risen body. Paul saw Jesus after his resurrection and he appeared to him "from heaven." He will come again from heaven.

15:48 {As is the earthly} (\hoios ho choikos\). Masculine gender because of \anthr^hpos\ and correlative pronouns (\hoios, toioutoi\) of character or quality. All men of dust (\cho^hkoi\) correspond to "the man of dust" (\ho cho^hkos\), the first Adam. {As is the heavenly} (\hoios ho epouranios\). Christ in his ascended state (1Th 4:16; 2Th 1:7; Eph 2:6,20; Php 3:20f.).

15:49 {We shall also bear} (\phoresomen kai\). Old MSS. (so Westcott and Hort) read \phores^hmen kai\. Volitive aorist active subjunctive, Let us also bear. Ellicott strongly opposes the subjunctive. It may be merely the failure of scribes to distinguish between long o and short o. Paul hardly means to say that our attaining the resurrection body depends on our own efforts! A late frequentative form of \pher“\.

15:50 {Cannot inherit} (\kl^{ronom}sai ou dunantai\). Hence there must be a change by death from the natural body to the spiritual body. In the case of Christ this change was wrought in less than three days and even then the body of Jesus was in a transition state before the Ascension. He ate and could be handled and yet he passed through closed doors. Paul does not base his argument on the special circumstances connected with the risen body of Jesus.

15:51 {A mystery} (\must^{rion}\). He does not claim that he has explained everything. He has drawn a broad parallel which opens the door of hope and confidence. {We shall not all sleep} (\pantes ou koimthsometha\). Future passive indicative of \koimaomai\, to sleep. Not all of us shall die, Paul means. Some people will be alive when he comes. Paul does not affirm that he or any then living will be alive when Jesus comes again. He simply groups all under the phrase "we all." {But we shall all be changed} (\pantes de allag^{sometha}\). Second future passive indicative of \allass“\. Both living and dead shall be changed and so receive the resurrection body. See this same idea at more length in 1Th 4:13-18.

15:52 {In a moment} (\en atomⁱ\). Old word, from \a\ privative and \temn“\, to cut, indivisible: Scientific word for _atom_ which was considered indivisible, but that was before the day of electrons and protons. Only here in N.T. {In the twinkling of an eye} (\en ripⁱ ophthalmou\). Old word \rip^ from \ript“\, to throw. Only here in N.T. Used by the Greeks for the flapping of a wing, the buzz of a gnat, the quivering of a harp, the twinkling of a star. {At the last trump} (\en tⁱ eschatⁱ salpiggi\). Symbolical, of course. See on 1Th 4:16; Mt 24:31.

15:53 {Must put on} (\dei endusasthai\). Aorist (ingressive) middle infinitive, put on as a garment. {Immortality} (\athanasian\). Old word from \athanatos\, undying, and that from \a\ privative and \thn^{sk}“\, to die. In N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:16 where God is described as having immortality.

15:54 {Shall have put on} (\endus^{tai}\). First aorist middle subjunctive with \hotan\ whenever, merely indefinite future, no _futurum exactum_, merely meaning, "whenever shall put on," not "shall have put on." {Is swallowed up} (\katepoth^). First aorist passive indicative of \katapin“, old verb to drink down, swallow down. Perfective use of \kata- where we say "up," "swallow up." Timeless use of the aorist tense. Paul changes the active voice \katepien in Isa 25:8 to the passive. Death is no longer victory. Theodotion reads the Hebrew verb (_bulla_, for _billa_,) as passive like Paul. It is the "final overthrow of the king of Terrors" (Findlay) as shown in Heb 2:15.

15:55 {Victory} (\nikos\). Late form of \nik^\. {O death} (\thanate\). Second instance. Here Paul changes Hades of the LXX for Hebrew Sheol (Hos 13:14) to death. Paul never uses Hades. {Thy sting} (\sou to kentron\). Old word from \kentre“, to prick, as in Ac 26:14. In Re 9:10 of the sting of locusts, scorpions. The serpent death has lost his poison fangs.

15:56 {The power of sin} (\h^ dunamis t^s hamartias\). See Ro 4:15; 5:20; 6:14; 7; Ga 2:16; 3:1-5:4 for Paul's ideas here briefly expressed. In man's unrenewed state he cannot obey God's holy law.

15:57 {But thanks be to God} (\t^i de the^i charis\). Exultant triumph through Christ over sin and death as in Ro 7:25.

15:58 {Be ye steadfast, unmovable} (\hedraioi ginesthe, ametakin^toi\). "Keep on becoming steadfast, unshaken." Let the sceptics howl and rage. Paul has given rational grounds for faith and hope in Christ the Risen Lord and Saviour. Note practical turn to this great doctrinal argument. {Work} (\ergon\), {labour} (\kopos\, toil). The best answer to doubt is work.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

16:1 {Now concerning the collection for the saints} (\peri de t^s logias t^s eis tous hagious\). Paul has discussed all the problems raised by the Corinthians. Now he has on his own heart the collection for the saints in Jerusalem (see chapters 2Co 8; 9). This word \logia\ (or \-eia\) is now known to be derived from a late verb \logeu\, to collect, recently found in papyri and inscriptions (Deissmann, Bible Studies_, p. 143). The word \logia\ is chiefly found in papyri, ostraca, and inscriptions that tell of religious collections for a god or a temple (Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East_, p. 105). The introduction of this topic may seem sudden, but the Corinthians were behind with their part of it. They may even have asked further about it. Paul feels no conflict between discussion of the resurrection and the collection. {So also do ye} (\hout^s kai humas poi^{sate}\). Paul had given orders (\dietaxa\) to the churches of Galatia and now gives them like commands. As a matter of fact, they had promised a long time before this (2Co 8:10; 9:1-5). Now do what you pledged.

16:2 {Upon the first day of the week} (\kata mian sabbatou\). For the singular \sabbatou\ (sabbath) for week see Lu 18:12; Mr 16:9. For the use of the cardinal \mian\ in sense of ordinal \pr^tn\ after Hebrew fashion in LXX (Robertson, Grammar_, p. 672) as in Mr 16:2; Lu 24:1; Ac 20:7. Distributive use of \kata\ also. {Lay by him in store} (\par' heautⁱ tithetthsaurizⁿ\). By himself, in his home. Treasuring it (cf. Mt 6:19f. for \th^{sauriz}\). Have the habit of doing it, \tithet\ (present imperative). {As he may prosper} (\hoti ean euod^{tai}\). Old verb from \eu\, well, and \hodos\, way or journey, to have a good journey, to prosper in general, common in LXX. In N.T. only here and Ro 1:10; 3Jo 1:2. It is uncertain what form \euod^{tai}\ is, present passive subjunctive, perfect passive indicative, or even perfect passive subjunctive (Moulton, Prolegomena_, p. 54). The old MSS. had no accents. Some MSS. even have \euodthi\ (first aorist passive subjunctive). But the sense is not altered. \Hoti\ is accusative of general reference and \ean\ can occur either with the subjunctive or indicative. This rule for giving occurs also in 2Co 8:12. Paul wishes the collections to be made before he comes.

16:3 {When I arrive} (\hotan paragen“mai). Whenever I arrive, indefinite temporal conjunction \hotan and second aorist middle subjunctive. {Whomsoever ye shall approve by letters} (\hous ean dokimasˆte di' epistol“n). Indefinite relative with \ean and aorist subjunctive of \dokimaz“ (to test and so approve as in Php 1:10). "By letters" to make it formal and regular and Paul would approve their choice of messengers to go with him to Jerusalem (2Co 8:20ff.). Curiously enough no names from Corinth occur in the list in Ac 20:4. {To carry} (\apenegkein). Second aorist active infinitive of \apopher“, to bear away. {Bounty} (\charin). Gift, grace, as in 2Co 8:4-7. As a matter of fact, the messengers of the churches (\apostoloi ekkliˆsi“n\ 2Co 8:23) went along with Paul to Jerusalem (Ac 20:4f.).

16:4 {And if it be meet for me to go also} (\ean de axion ˆi tou kame poreuesthai). "If the collection be worthy of the going as to me also." Condition of third class (\ean--ˆi) and the articular infinitive in the genitive (\tou) after \axion. The accusative of general reference (\kame\, me also) with the infinitive. So the awkward phrase clears up.

16:5 {When I shall have passed through Macedonia} (\hotan Makedonian dielth“). "Whenever I pass through (second aorist active subjunctive of \dierchomai) Macedonia" (see construction in verse 3). {I do pass through} (\dierchomai). I plan to pass through, futuristic use of present indicative.

16:6 {It may be} (\tuchon). Neuter accusative of second aorist active participle of \tugchan“ used as an adverb (in Plato and Xenophon, but nowhere else in N.T.). {Or even winter} (\ˆ kai paracheimas“). Future active of late verb \paracheimaz“ (\cheim“n\, winter). See on Ac 27:12; 28:11; Tit 3:12. He did stay in Corinth for three months (Ac 20:3), probably the coming winter. {Whithersoever I go} (\hou ean poreu“mai). Indefinite local clause with subjunctive. As a matter of fact, Paul had to flee from a conspiracy in Corinth (Ac 20:3).

16:7 {Now by the way} (\arti en parod“i). Like our "by the way" (\parodos), incidentally. {If the Lord permit} (\ean ho Kurios epitrepsˆi). Condition of the third class. Paul did everything \en Kuri“i (Cf. Ac 18:21).

16:8 {Until Pentecost} (\he“s tˆs Pentˆkostˆs). He writes them in the spring before pentecost. Apparently the uproar by Demetrius hurried Paul away from Ephesus (Ac 20:1).

16:9 {For a great and effectual door is opened unto me} (\thura gar moi ane“igen megalˆ kai energˆs). Second perfect active indicative of \anoigˆ\, to open. Intransitive, stands wide open at last after his years there (Ac 20:31). A wide open door. What does he mean by \energˆs\? It is a late word in the _Koin,_. In the papyri a medical receipt has it for "tolerably strong." The form \energus\ in the papyri is used of a mill "in working order," of "tilled land," and of "wrought iron." In the N.T. it occurs in Phm 1:6; Heb 4:12 of "the word of God" as "\energˆs\" (powerful). Paul means that he has at least a great opportunity for work in Ephesus. {And there are many adversaries} (\kai antikeimenoi polloi). "And many are lying opposed to me," lined up against me. These Paul mentions as a reason for staying in, not for leaving, Ephesus. Read Ac 19 and see the opposition from Jews and Gentiles with the explosion under the lead of Demetrius. And yet Paul suddenly leaves. He hints of much of which we should like to know more (1Co 15:32; 2Co 1:8f.).

16:10 {That he be without fear} (\hina aphob“s genˆtai). Evidently he had reason to fear the treatment that Timothy might receive in Corinth as shown in 4:17-21.

16:11 {For I expect him} (\ekdechomai gar auton). Apparently later Timothy had to return to Ephesus without much success before Paul left and was sent on to Macedonia with Erastus (Ac 19:22) and Titus sent to Corinth whom Paul then arranged to meet in Troas (2Co 2:12).

16:12 {And it was not at all his will to come now} (\kai pant“s ouk ˆn thelˆma hina nun elthˆi). Adversative use of \kai\ = "but." Apollos had left Corinth in disgust over the strife there which involved him and Paul (1Co 1-4). He had had enough of partisan strife over preachers.

16:13 {Watch ye} (\grˆgoreite). Stay awake. Late present from \egrˆgora\ second perfect of \egeirˆ\, to awake. {Quit you like men} (\andrizeithe). Play the man. Middle voice, show yourselves men. From \anˆr\, a man.

16:15 {Ye know} (\oidate). _Koin, _ form for second perfect indicative used as present of \hora“. Parenthetical clause through rest of the verse. Stephanas is mentioned also in 1:16 and in 16:17. For \aparch“ see on 15:20,23. {They have set themselves} (\etaxan heautous\). Remarkable statement worthy of attention today. This noble family appointed themselves to be ministers to the saints that needed it (the poor and needy). Personal work for Christ is still the only way to win the world for Christ, voluntary personal work. If all Christians did it!

16:16 {That ye also be in subjection unto such} (\hina kai humeis hupotass^sthe tois toioutois\). This is the exhortation begun in verse 15. The family of Stephanas took the lead in good works. Do ye also follow such leaders. This is our great problem today, to find great leaders and many loyal followers. This would solve all church problems, great leadership and great following. Lend a hand.

16:17 {At the coming} (\epi t^i parousifi\). At the coming here of Stephanas, etc., the very word used of the \parousia\ of Christ (15:23). {That which was lacking on your part they supplied} (\to humeteron huster^ma houtoi anepl^r^san\). Either "these filled up my lack of you" or "these filled up your lack of me." Either makes perfectly good sense and both were true. Which Paul meant we cannot tell.

16:18 {For they refreshed my spirit and yours} (\anepausan gar to emon pneuma kai to hum^n\). They did both. The very verb used by Jesus in Mt 11:28 for the refreshment offered by him to those who come to him, fellowship with Jesus, and here fellowship with each other.

16:19 {The churches of Asia} (\hai ekkl^siai t^s Asias\). True of the Roman province (Ac 10:10,26; Col 1:6; 2:1; 4:13,16). The gospel spread rapidly from Ephesus. {With the church that is in their house} (\sun t^i kat' oikon aut^n ekkl^sifi\). Paul had long ago left the synagogue for the school house of Tyrannus (Ac 19:9). But Aquila and Prisca opened their house here for the services. The churches had to meet where they could. Paul had laboured and lived with this family in Corinth (Ac 18:2) and now again in Ephesus (Ac 18:19; 20:34). It was their habit wherever they lived (Ro 16:5).

16:20 {With a holy kiss} (\en phil^mati hagi^i\). In the synagogue men kissed men and women kissed women. This was the Christian custom at a later date and apparently so here. See 1Th 5:26; 2Co 13:12; Ro 3:8; 1Pe 5:14. It seems never to have been promiscuous between the sexes.

16:21 {Of me Paul with mine own hand} (t̃i em̃i cheiri Paulou).

Literally, "With the hand of me Paul." The genitive \Paulou is in apposition with the possessive pronoun \em̃i which is in the instrumental case just as in 2Th 3:17, the sign in every Epistle. He dictated, but signed at the end. If we only had that signature on that scrap of paper.

16:22 \Anathema. The word seems a bit harsh to us, but the refusal to love Christ (\ou philei) on the part of a nominal Christian deserves \anathema (see on 12:3 for this word).

\Maran atha. This Aramaic phrase means "Our Lord (\maran) cometh (\atha)" or, used as a proleptic perfect, "has come." It seems to be a sort of watchword (cf. 1Th 4:14ff.; Jas 5:7f.; Php 4:5; Re 1:7; 3:11; 22:20), expressing the lively hope that the Lord will come. It was a curious blunder in the King James Version that connected \Maran atha with \Anathema.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(1 Corinthians: Chapter 16)

1:1 {And Timothy} (\kai Timotheos). Timothy is with Paul, having been sent on to Macedonia from Ephesus (Ac 19:22). He is in no sense co-author any more than Sosthenes was in 1Co 1:1. {In all Achaia} (\en hol'i t'i Achaifi). The Romans divided Greece into two provinces (Achaia and Macedonia). Macedonia included also Illyricum, Epirus, and Thessaly. Achaia was all of Greece south of this (both Attica and the Peloponnesus). The restored Corinth was made the capital of Achaia where the pro-consul resided (Ac 18:12). He does not mention other churches in Achaia outside of the one in Corinth, but only "saints" (\hagiois). Athens was in Achaia, but it is not clear that there was as yet a church there, though some converts had been won (Ac 17:34), and there was a church in Cenchreae, the eastern port of Corinth (Ro 16:1). Paul in 2Co 9:2 speaks of Achaia and Macedonia together. His language here would seem to cover the whole (\hol'i, all) of Achaia in his scope and not merely the environment around Corinth.

1:2 Identical with 1Co 1:3 which see.

1:3 {Blessed} (\eulog'tos). From old verb \euloge', to speak well of, but late verbal in LXX and Philo. Used of men in Ge 24:31, but only of God in N.T. as in Lu 1:68 and chiefly in Paul (2Co 11:31; Ro 1:25). Paul has no thanksgiving or prayer as in 1Co 1:4-9, but he finds his basis for gratitude in God, not in them. {The God and Father} (\ho theos kai pat'r). So rightly, only one article with both substantives as in 2Pe 1:1. Paul gives the deity of Jesus Christ as our Lord (\Kuriou), but he does not hesitate to use the language here as it occurs. See 1Pe 1:3; Eph 1:3 where the language is identical with that here. {The father of mercies} (\ho pat'r t' "n oiktirm' "n) and God of all comfort (\kai theos pas's parakl'se's). Paul adds an item to each word. He is the compassionate Father characterized by mercies (\oiktirm' "n, old word from \oikteir' "n, to pity, and here in plural, emotions and acts of pity). He is the God of all comfort (\parakl'se's, old word from \parakale' "n, to call to one's side, common with Paul). Paul has already used it of God who gave eternal comfort (2Th 2:16). The English word comfort is from the Latin _confortis_ (brave together). The word used by Jesus of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter or Paraklete is this very word (Joh 14:16; 16:7). Paul makes rich use of the verb \parakale“\ and the substantive \parakl^sis\ in this passage (3-7). He urges all sorrowing and troubled hearts to find strength in God.

1:4 {In all our affliction} (\epi pas^i t^i thlipsei h^m“n\). \Thlipsis\ is from \thlib“, to press, old and common word, as tribulation is from Latin _tribulum_ (roller). See on ^Mt 13:21 and 1Th 1:6. The English affliction is Latin _afflictio_ from _ad-fligere_, to strike on. {That we may be able to comfort} (\eis to dunasthai h^mas parakalein\). Purpose clause with \eis\ and the articular infinitive with the accusative of general reference, a common idiom. Paul here gives the purpose of affliction in the preacher's life, in any Christian's life, to qualify him for ministry to others. Otherwise it will be professional and perfunctory. {Wherewith} (\h^s\). Genitive case of the relative attracted to that of the antecedent \parakl^se“s\). The case of the relative here could have been either the accusative \h^n\ with the passive verb retained as in Mr 10:38 or the instrumental \h^i\). Either is perfectly good Greek (cf. Eph 1:6; 4:1). Personal experience of God's comfort is necessary before we can pass it on to others.

1:5 {The sufferings of Christ} (\ta path^mata tou Christou\). Subjective genitive, Christ's own sufferings. {Abound unto us} (\perisseuei eis h^mas\). Overflow unto us so that we suffer like sufferings and become fellow sufferers with Christ (4:10f.; Ro 8:17; Php 3:10; Col 1:24). {Through Christ} (\dia tou Christou\). The overflow (\perisseuei\) of comfort comes also through Christ. Is Paul thinking of how some of the Jewish Christians in Corinth have become reconciled with him through Christ? Partnership with Christ in suffering brings partnership in glory also (Ro 8:17; 1Pe 4:13).

1:6 {Whether} (\eite\) {--or} (\eite\). The alternatives in Paul's experience (afflicted \thlibometha\, comforted \parakaloumetha\) work out for their good when they are called on to endure like sufferings "which we also suffer" (\h“n kai h^meis paschomen\). The relative \h“n\ is attracted from neuter accusative plural \ha\ to genitive case of the antecedent \path^mat“n\ (sufferings).

1:7 {Our hope for you} (\h^ elpis h^m“n huper hum“n). The old word \elpis, from \elpiz“, to hope, has the idea of waiting with expectation and patience. So here it is "steadfast" (\bebaia, stable, fast, from \bain“\, to plant the feet down). {Partakers} (\koin“noi). Partners as in Lu 5:10.

1:8 {Concerning our affliction} (\huper t^s thlipse“s h^m“n). Manuscripts read also \peri for in the _Koin,_ \huper\ (over) often has the idea of \peri\ (around). Paul has laid down his philosophy of afflictions and now he cites a specific illustration in his own recent experience. {In Asia} (\en Asifi). Probably in Ephesus, but what it was we do not know whether sickness or peril. We do know that the disciples and the Asiarchs would not allow Paul to face the mob in the amphitheatre gathered by Demetrius (Ac 20:30f.). In Ro 16:4 Paul says that Prisca and Aquila laid down their necks for him, risked their very lives for him. It may have been a later plot to kill Paul that hastened his departure from Ephesus (Ac 20:1). He had a trial so great that "we were weighed down exceedingly beyond our power" (\kath' huperbol^ n huper dunamin ebar^th^men). Old verb from \baros, weight, \barus, weighty. First aorist passive indicative. See on 1Co 12:31 for \kath' huperbol^ n\ (cf. our hyperbole). It was beyond Paul's power to endure if left to himself. {Insomuch that we despaired even of life} (\h“ste exapor^th^nai h^mas kai tou z^in). Usual clause of result with \h“ste and the infinitive. First aorist passive infinitive \exapor^th^nai, late compound for utter despair (perfective use of \ex\ and at a complete loss, \a\ privative and \poros\, way). There seemed no way out. {Of life} (\tou z^in). Ablative case of the articular infinitive, of living.

1:9 {Yea} (\alla). Confirmatory use as in 7:11, rather than adversative. {The answer of death} (\to apokrima tou thanatou). This late word from \apokrinomai, to reply, occurs nowhere else in N.T., but is in Josephus, Polybius, inscriptions and papyri (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 257; Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_), and always in the sense of decision or judgment rendered. But Vulgate renders it by _responsum_ and that idea suits best here, unless Paul conceives God as rendering the decision of death. {We ourselves have had within ourselves} (\autoi en heautois esch^kamen). Regular perfect of \ech“, to have. And still have the vivid recollection of that experience. For this lively dramatic use of the present perfect indicative for a past experience see also \esch^ka\ in 2:13 (Moulton, _Prolegomena_, p. 143f.; Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 896f.). {That we should not trust in ourselves} (\hina m^pepoithotes “men eph’ heautois\). A further purpose of God in affliction beyond that in verse 4. "This dreadful trial was sent to him in order to give him a precious spiritual lesson (12:7-10)" (Robertson and Plummer). Note periphrastic perfect active subjunctive of \peith^, to persuade. {In} (\epi\), upon, both ourselves and God.

1:10 {Out of so great a death} (\ek t^likoutou thanatou\). He had considered himself as good as dead. {Delivered} (\erusato\) {--will deliver} (\rusetai\). Old verb \ru^, middle, \ruomai\, draw oneself, as out of a pit, rescue. So Paul faces death without fear. {On whom we have set our hope} (\eis hon ^lpikamen\). Perfect active indicative of \elpiz^\. We still have that hope, emphasized by \eti rusetai\ (he will still deliver).

1:11 {Ye also helping together on our behalf} (\sunupourgount^ kai hum^ n huper h^m^ n\). Genitive absolute with present active participle of late compound verb (\sun\ and \hupourge^\. for \hupo\ and \ergon\). Paul relied on God and felt the need of the prayer of God's people. {By means of many} (\ek poll^ n pros^ p^ n\). \Pros^pon\ means face (\pros, ops\). The word is common in all Greek. The papyri use it for face, appearance, person. It occurs twelve times in II Corinthians. It certainly means face in eight of them (3:7,13,18; 8:24; 10:1,7; 11:20). In 5:12 it means outward appearance. It may mean face or person here, 2:10; 4:6. It is more pictorial to take it here as face "that out of many upturned faces" thanks may be given (\hina--eucharist^ th^ i\ first aorist passive subjunctive) for the gift to us by means of many (\dia pollon\). It is indeed a difficult sentence to understand.

1:12 {Glorying} (\kauch^sis\). Act of glorying, while in verse 14 \kauch^ma\ is the thing boasted of. {The testimony of our conscience} (\to marturion t^s suneid^se^s h^m^ n\). In apposition with \kauch^sis\. {Sincerity of God} (\eilikrineifi tou theou\). Like \dikaiousun^ theou\ (Ro 1:17; 3:21), the God-kind of righteousness. So the God-kind (genitive case) of sincerity. Late word from \eilikrin^s\. See on 1Co 5:8. {Not in fleshly wisdom} (\ouk en sophifi sarkik^ i\). See on 1Co 1:17; 2:4,13f. Paul uses \sarkikos\ five times and it occurs only twice elsewhere in N.T. See on 1Co 3:3. {We behaved ourselves} (\anestraph^men\).

Second aorist passive indicative of \anastreph“, old verb, to turn back, to turn back and forth, to walk. Here the passive is used as in late Greek as if middle. {More abundantly to you-ward} (\perissoter“s pros humas\). They had more abundant opportunity to observe how scrupulous Paul was (Ac 18:11).

1:13 {Than what ye read} (\all' ^ha anagin“skete\). Note comparative conjunction \^ (than) after \all\ and that after \alla\ (other things, same word in reality), "other than." Read in Greek (\anagin“sk“) is knowing again, recognizing. See on ~Ac 8:30. {Or even acknowledge} (\^ kai epigin“skete\). Paul is fond of such a play on words (\anagin“skete, epigin“skete\) or paronomasia. Does he mean "read between the lines," as we say, by the use of \epi\ (additional knowledge)? {Unto the end} (\he“s telous\). The report of Titus showed that the majority now at last understood Paul. He hopes that it will last (1Co 1:8).

1:14 {As also ye did acknowledge us in part} (\kath“s kai epegn“te h^mas apo merous\). Gracious acknowledgment (second aorist active indicative of \epign“sk“) to the original Pauline party (1Co 1:12; 3:4) that he had seemed to care so little for them. And now in his hour of victory he shows that, if he is their ground of glorying, they are his also (cf. 1Th 2:19f.; Php 2:16).

1:15 {Confidence} (\pepoith^sei\). This late word (LXX Philo, Josephus) is condemned by the Atticists, but Paul uses it a half dozen times (3:4 also). {I was minded to come} (\eboulom^n elthein\). Imperfect, I was wishing to come, picturing his former state of mind. {Before unto you} (\proteron pros humas\). This was his former plan (\proteron\) while in Ephesus to go to Achaia directly from Ephesus. This he confesses in verse 16 "and by you to pass into Macedonia." {That ye might have a second benefit} (\hina deuteran charin sch^te\). Or second "joy" if we accept \charan\ with Westcott and Hort. This would be a real second blessing (or joy) if they should have two visits from Paul.

1:16 {And again} (\kai palin\). This would have been the second benefit or joy. But he changed his plans and did not make that trip directly to Corinth, but came on to Macedonia first (Ac 19:21; 20:1f.; 1Co 16:2; 2Co 2:12). {To be set forward by you} (\huph' hum“n propemphth^nai\). First aorist passive infinitive of \propemp“. Paul uses this same verb in Ro 15:24 for the same service by the Roman Christians on his proposed trip to Spain. The Corinthians, especially the anti-Pauline party, took advantage of Paul's change of plans to criticize him sharply for vacillation and flippancy. How easy it is to find fault with the preacher! So Paul has to explain his conduct.

1:17 {Did I shew fickleness?} (\m^{ti} ara tⁱ elaphrifi?). An indignant negative answer is called for by \m^{ti}. The instrumental case of \elaphrifi is regular after \echr^{am}n from \chraomai, to use. \Elaphria is a late word for levity from the old adjective, \elaphros, light, agile (2Co 10:17; Mt 11:30). Here only in N.T. {Purpose} (\bouleuomai). Paul raises the question of fickleness about any of his plans. {Yea yea} (\Nai nai) {--nay nay} (\ou ou). See a similar repetition in Mt 5:37. It is plain in Jas 5:12 where "the yea" is "yea" and "the nay" is "nay." That seems to be Paul's meaning here, "that the Yea may be yea and the Nay may be nay."

1:18 {Is not yea and nay} (\ouk estin nai kai ou). He is not a Yes and No man, saying Yes and meaning or acting No. Paul calls God to witness on this point.

1:19 {Was not Yea and Nay} (\ouk egeneto nai kai ou). "Did not become Yes and No." {But in him is yea} (\alla Nai en autⁱ gegonen). Rather, "But in him Yes has become yes," has proved true. So Paul appeals to the life of Christ to sustain his own veracity.

1:20 {In him is the yea} (\en autⁱ to Nai). Supply \gegonen from the preceding sentence, "In him was the Yea come true." This applies to all God's promises. {The Amen} (\to Amⁿ). In public worship (1Co 14:16).

1:21 {Establishes} (\bebaiⁿ). Present active participle from \bebaios, firm. An apt metaphor in Corinth where confirmation of a bargain often took place (\bebai^{sis}) as Deissmann shows (_Bible Studies_, p. 109) and as verse 22 makes plain. {Anointed} (\chrisas). From \chriⁿ, to anoint, old verb, to consecrate, with the Holy Spirit here as in 1Jo 2:20.

1:22 {Sealed us} (\sphragisamenos h^{mas}). From \sphragizⁿ old verb, common in LXX and papyri for setting a seal to prevent opening (Da 6:17), in place of signature (1Ki 21:18). Papyri examples show a wide legal use to give validity to documents, to guarantee genuineness of articles as sealing sacks and chests, etc. (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 238; Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). {The earnest of the Spirit} (\ton arrab“na tou pneumatou\). A word of Semitic origin (possibly Phoenician) and spelled both \arab“n\ and \arrab“n\. It is common in the papyri as earnest money in a purchase for a cow or for a wife (a dowry). In N.T. only here; 5:5; Eph 1:14. It is part payment on the total obligation and we use the very expression today, "earnest money." It is God, says Paul, who has done all this for us and God is Paul's pledge that he is sincere. He will come to Corinth in due time. This earnest of the Spirit in our hearts is the witness of the Spirit that we are God's.

1:23 {But I call God for a witness upon my soul} (\Eg“ de martura ton theon epikaloumai epi t^n em^n psuch^n\). Solemn attestation, "calling heaven to witness is frequent in literature from Homer onwards" (Plummer). Thus God is described above (cf. 1Th 2:5,10; Ro 1:9; Ga 1:20; Php 1:8). {To spare you} (\pheidomenos hum“n\). Present middle participle (causal rather than final) of \pheidomai\, old verb, to hold back, to spare. Ablative case \hum“n\.

1:24 {We have lordship over} (\kurieuomen\). Old verb from \kurios\, to be lord of or over. See Lu 22:25. {Helpers of your joy} (\sunergoi t^s charas hum“n\). Co-workers (1Co 3:8) in your joy. A delicate correction to present misapprehension (\epanorth“sis\).

2:1 {That I would not come again to you with sorrow} (\to m^ palin en lup^i pros humas elthein). Articular second aorist active infinitive with negative \m^ in apposition with \touto\ (this) preceding. What does Paul mean by "again" (palin)? Had he paid another visit besides that described in Ac 18 which was in sorrow (en lup^i)? Or does he mean that having had one joyful visit (that in Ac 18) he does not wish the second one to be in sorrow? Either interpretation is possible as the Greek stands and scholars disagree. So in 12:14 "The third time I am ready to come" may refer to the proposed second visit (1:15f.) and the present plan (a third). And so as to 13:1. There is absolutely no way to tell clearly whether Paul had already made a second visit. If he had done so, it is a bit odd that he did not plainly say so in 1:15f. when he is apologizing for not having made the proposed visit ("a second benefit").

2:2 {Who then?} (\kai tis?). For this use of \kai see on Mr 10:26; Joh 9:36. The \kai accepts the condition (first class ei--lup) and shows the paradox that follows. \Lupe is old word from \lup^ (sorrow) in causative sense, to make sorry.
{Maketh glad} (\euphrain^n). Present active participle of old word from \eu, well, and \phr^n, mind, to make joyful, causative idea like \lupe.

2:3 {I wrote this very thing} (\egrapsa touto auto). Is this (and \egrapsa in verses 4,9,12) the epistolary aorist referring to the present letter? In itself that is possible as the epistolary aorist does occur in the N.T. as in 8:18; 9:3 (Robertson, Grammar, p. 854f.). If not epistolary aorist as seems improbable from the context and from 7:8-12, to what Epistle does he refer? To 1Co 5 or to a lost letter? It is possible, of course, that, when Paul decided not to come to Corinth, he sent a letter. The language that follows in verses 3,4; 7:8-12 can hardly apply to I Corinthians. {Should have sorrow} (\lup^n sch). Second aorist (ingressive) active subjunctive of \ech, should get sorrow, after \hina m^ negative final particles. {From them of whom} (\aph' h^n).
Antecedent omitted, \apo tout^n aph' h^n (from those from whom).

{I ought} (\edei me\). Imperfect for unrealized present obligation as often and like English. {Having confidence} (\pepoith"s\). Second perfect active participle of \peith"\" (1:9).

2:4 {Anguish} (\sunoch^s\). Ablative case after \ek\ (out of). Old word from \sunech"\", to hold together. So contraction of heart (Cicero, _contractio animi_), a spiritual _angina pectoris_. In N.T. only here and Lu 21:25. {With many tears} (\dia poll"n dakru"n\). He dictated that letter "through tears" (accompanied by tears). Paul was a man of heart. He writes to the Philippians with weeping (\klai"n\) over the enemies of the Cross of Christ (Php 3:18). He twice mentions his tears in his speech at Miletus (Ac 20:19-31). {But that ye might know the love} (\alla t^n agap^n hina gn"te\). Proleptic position of \agap^n\ and ingressive second aorist active subjunctive \gn"te\", come to know.

2:5 {If any} (\ei tis\). Scholars disagree whether Paul refers to 1Co 5:1, where he also employs \tis, toioutos\, and \Satanfs\ as here, or to the ringleader of the opposition to him. Either view is possible. In both cases Paul shows delicacy of feeling by not mentioning the name. {But in part} (\alla apo merous\). "But to some extent to you all." The whole Corinthian Church has been injured in part by this man's wrongdoing. There is a parenthesis ({that I press not too heavily}, \hina m^ epibar"\") that interrupts the flow of ideas. \Epibare"\", to put a burden on (\epi, baros\), is a late word, only in Paul in N.T. (here and 1Th 2:9; 2Th 3:8). He does not wish to give pain by too severe language.

2:6 {Punishment} (\epitimia\). Late word for old Greek to \epitimion\ (so papyri), from \epitima"\", to show honour to, to award, to adjudge penalty. Only here in N.T. {By the many} (\hupo t"n pleion"n\). By the more, the majority. If Paul refers to the case in 1Co 5, they had taken his advice and expelled the offender.

2:7 {So that on the contrary} (\h"ste tounantion\). The natural result expressed by \h"ste\ and the infinitive. \Tounantion\ is by crasis for \to enantion\ and accusative of general reference. {Rather} (\mallon\). Absent in some MSS. {Lest by any means} (\m^ p"s\). Negative purpose. {Swallowed up} (\katapoth^i\). First aorist passive subjunctive of \katapin"\", to drink down (1Co

15:54). {With his overmuch sorrow} (\t^i perissoterfi lup^i\). Instrumental case, "by the more abundant sorrow" (comparative of adjective \perissos\).

2:8 {To confirm} (\kur^sai\). First aorist active infinitive of old verb \kuro^, to make valid, to ratify, from \kuros\ (head, authority). In N.T. only here and Ga 3:15.

2:9 {That I might know the proof of you} (\hina gn^ t^n dokim^ n hum^ n\). Ingressive second aorist active subjunctive, come to know. \Dokim^ is proof by testing. Late word from \dokimos\ and is in Dioscorides, medical writer in reign of Hadrian. Earliest use in Paul and only in him in N.T. (2Co 2:9; 8:2; 9:13; 13:3; Ro 5:4; Php 2:22). {Obedient} (\hup^kooi\). Old word from \hupakou^, to give ear. In N.T. only in Paul (2Co 2:9; Php 2:8; Ac 7:39).

2:10 {In the person of Christ} (\en pros^ p^ i Christou\). More exactly, "in the presence of Christ," before Christ, in the face of Christ. Cf. \en^ pion tou theou\ (4:2) in the eye of God, \en^ pion Kuriou\ (8:21).

2:11 {That no advantage may be gained over us} (\hina m^ pleonekt^ th^ men\). First aorist passive subjunctive after \hina m^ (\i>negative purpose) of \pleonekte^, old verb from \pleonekt^s\, a covetous man (1Co 5:10f.), to take advantage of, to gain, to overreach. In N.T. only in 1Th 4:6; 2Co 2:11; 7:2; 12:17f. "That we may not be overreached by Satan." {His devices} (\autou ta no^ mata\). \No^ ma\ from \noe^ to use the \nous\ is old word, especially for evil plans and purposes as here.

2:12 {To Troas} (\eis t^n Tr^ iada\). Luke does not mention this stop at Troas on the way from Ephesus to Macedonia (Ac 20:1f.), though he does mention two other visits there (Ac 16:8; 20:6). {When a door was opened unto me} (\thuras moi ane^ igmen^ s\). Genitive absolute with second perfect passive participle of \anoignumi\. Paul used this very metaphor in 1Co 16:9. He will use it again in Col 4:3. Here was an open door that he could not enter.

2:13 {I had no relief} (\ouk esch^ ka anesin\). Perfect active indicative like that in 1:9, vivid dramatic recital, not to be treated as "for" the aorist (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 896, 898ff.). He still feels the shadow of that restlessness.

\Anesis\, from \ani^mi\, to let up, to hold back, is old word for relaxing or release (Ac 24:34). {For my spirit} (\t^i pneumati mou). Dative of interest. {Because I found not Titus} (\t^i m^heurein me Titon). Instrumental case of the articular infinitive with negative \m^ and accusative of general reference \me\, "by the not finding Titus as to me." {Taking my leave of them} (\apotaxamenos autois\). First aorist middle participle of \apotass^, old verb, to set apart, in middle in late Greek to separate oneself, to bid adieu to as in Mr 6:46.

2:14 {But thanks be unto God} (\t^i de the^i charis). Sudden outburst of gratitude in contrast to the previous dejection in Troas. Surely a new paragraph should begin here. In point of fact Paul makes a long digression from here to 6:10 on the subject of the Glory of the Christian Ministry as Bachmann points out in his _Kommentar_ (p. 124), only he runs it from 2:12-7:1 (_Aus der Tiefe in die Hohe_, Out of the Depths to the Heights). We can be grateful for this emotional outburst, Paul's rebound of joy on meeting Titus in Macedonia, for it has given the world the finest exposition of all sides of the Christian ministry in existence, one that reveals the wealth of Paul's nature and his mature grasp of the great things in service for Christ. See my _The Glory of the Ministry (An Exposition of II Cor. 2:12-6:10)_. {Always} (\pantote\). The sense of present triumph has blotted out the gloom at Troas. {Leadeth in triumph} (\thriambeuonti\). Late common _Koin_, word from \thriambos\ (Latin _triumphus_, a hymn sung in festal processions to Bacchus). Verbs in \-eu^ (like \math^teu^, to make disciples) may be causative, but no example of \thriambeu^ has been found with this meaning. It is always to lead in triumph, in papyri sometimes to make a show of. Picture here is of Paul as captive in God's triumphal procession. {The savour} (\t^n osm^n). In a Roman triumph garlands of flowers scattered sweet odour and incense bearers dispensed perfumes. The knowledge of God is here the aroma which Paul had scattered like an incense bearer.

2:15 {A sweet savour of Christ} (\Christou eu^dia\). Old word from \eu\, well, and \oz^, to smell. In N.T. only here and Php 4:18; Eph 5:2. In spreading the fragrance of Christ the preacher himself becomes fragrant (Plummer). {In them that are perishing} (\en tois apollumenois\). Even in these if the preacher does his duty.

2:16 {From death unto death} (\ek thanatou eis thanaton\). From one evil condition to another. Some people are actually hardened by preaching. {And who is sufficient for these things?} (\kai pros tauta tis hikanos?\). Rhetorical question. In himself no one is. But some one has to preach Christ and Paul proceeds to show that he is sufficient. {For we are not as the many} (\ou gar esmen h“s hoi polloi\). A bold thing to say, but necessary and only from God (3:6).

2:17 {Corrupting} (\kap^leuontes\). Old word from \kap^los\, a huckster or peddler, common in all stages of Greek for huckstering or trading. It is curious how hucksters were suspected of corrupting by putting the best fruit on top of the basket. Note Paul's solemn view of his relation to God as a preacher ({from God} \ek theou\, {in the sight of God} \katenanti theou\, {in Christ} \en Christ“i\).

3:1 {To commend ourselves?} (\heautous sunistanein?). Late (_Koin,_) form of \sunist^mi, to place one with another, to introduce, to commend. Paul is sensitive over praising himself, though his enemies compelled him to do it. {Epistles of commendation} (\sustatik^"n epistol^"n). Late verbal adjective from \sunist^mi and often in the papyri and in just this sense. In the genitive case here after \chr^izomen. Such letters were common as seen in the papyri (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 226). N.T. examples of commending individuals by letters occur in Ac 15:25f.; 18:27 (Apollos), 1Co 16:10f. (Timothy); Ro 16:1 (Phoebe with the verb \sunist^mi); Col 4:10 (Mark); 2Co 8:22f. (Titus and his companion).

3:2 {Ye are our epistle} (\h^ epistol^ h^m^"n humeis este). Bold turn. Paul was writing in their hearts. {Known and read} (\gin^skomen^ kai anagin^skomen^). Play on the word. Literally true. Professing Christians are the Bible that men read and know.

3:3 {An epistle of Christ} (\epistol^ Christou). He turns the metaphor round and round. They are Christ's letter to men as well as Paul's. {Not with ink} (\ou melani). Instrumental case of \melas, black. Plato uses \to melan for ink as here. See also 2Jo 1:12; 3Jo 1:13. {Of stone} (\lithinai). Composed of stone (\lithos\ and ending -inos). {Of flesh} (\sarkinai). "Fleshen" as in 1Co 3:1; Ro 7:14.

3:4 {Through Christ} (\dia tou Christou). It is not self-conceit on Paul's part, but through Christ.

3:5 {Of ourselves} (\aph' heaut^"n). Starting from ourselves (reflexive pronoun). {As from ourselves} (\h^s ex haut^"n). He says it over again with preposition \ex (out of). He has no originating power for such confidence. {Sufficiency} (\hikanot^s). Old word, only here in N.T.

3:6 {Who also made us sufficient for such confidence} (\hos kai hikan^sen h^mas). Late causative verb from \hikanos (verse 5) first aorist active indicative, "who (God) rendered us fit." In N.T. only here and Col 1:12. {As ministers of a new covenant}

(\diakonous kain^s diath^k^s\). Predicate accusative with \hikan^sen\). For \diath^k^s\ see on ^Mt 26:28 and for \diakonos\ on ^Mt 20:26 and for \kain^s\ (fresh and effective) on ^Lu 5:38. Only God can make us that.

3:7 {Of death} (\tou thanatou\). Subjective genitive, marked by death in its outcome (cf. 1Co 15:56; Ga 3:10). The letter kills. {Engraven on stones} (\entetup^men^ lithois\). Perfect passive participle of \entupo^, late verb, to imprint a figure (\tupos\). Used by Aristias (67) of the "inlaid" work on the table sent by Ptolemy Philadelphus to Jerusalem. \Lithois\ in locative case. {Came with glory} (\egen^th^ en dox^i\). In glory. As it did, condition of first class, assumed as true. See Ex 34:29,35. {Look steadfastly} (\atenisai\). Late verb from \aten^s\ (stretched, intent, tein^ and |a| intensive) as in Lu 4:20; Ac 3:4. {Was passing away} (\katargoumen^n\). Late verb, to render of no effect, and present passive participle here as in 1Co 2:6.

3:8 {How shall not rather?} (\p^s ouchi mallon?). _Argumentum a minore ad majus_ (from the less to the greater). {Of the spirit} (\tou pneumatou\). Marked by the spirit. Picture of the Christian ministry now.

3:9 {Of condemnation} (\t^s katakrise^s\). Genitive, that brings condemnation because unable to obey the law. {Is glory} (\doxa\). No copula, but makes the figure bolder. Paul freely admits the glory for the old dispensation. {Of righteousness} (\t^s dikaiosun^s\). Marked by and leading to righteousness. See 11:15. {Much more} (\poll^i mallon\). Instrumental case, by much more. {Exceed} (\perisseuei\). Overflow.

3:10 {In this respect} (\en tout^i t^i merei\). The glory on the face of Moses was temporary, though real, and passed away (verse 7), a type of the dimming of the glory of the old dispensation by the brightness of the new. The moon makes a dim light after the sun rises, "is not glorified" (\ou dedoxastai\, perfect passive indicative of |doxaz^|). {By reason of the glory that surpasseth} (\heineken t^s huperballous^s dox^s\). The surpassing (\huper-ball^, throwing beyond) glory. Christ as the Sun of Righteousness has thrown Moses in the shade. Cf. the claims of superiority by Christ in Mt 5-7.

3:11 {Passeth away} (\katargoumenon\). In process of disappearing before the gospel of Christ. {Remaineth} (\menon). The new ministry is permanent. This claim may be recommended to those who clamour for a new religion. Christianity is still alive and is not dying. Note also \en dox^i, in glory, in contrast with \dia dox^s, with glory. {Boldness} (\parr^sifi). Instrumental case after \chr^metha. Old word, \panr^sis=parr^sis, telling it all, absolute unreservedness. Surely Paul has kept nothing back here, no mental reservations, in this triumphant claim of superiority.

3:13 {Put a veil upon his face} (\etitheï kalumma epi to pros^pon autou). Imperfect active of \tith^mi, used to put (Ex 34:33). {That the children of Israel should not look steadfastly} (\pros to m^atenisai tous huious). Purpose expressed by \pros and the articular infinitive with negative \m^ and the accusative of general reference. The Authorized Version had a wrong translation here as if to hide the glory on his face.

3:14 {But their minds were hardened} (\alla ep^r^th^ta no^mata aut^n). Their thoughts (\no^mata) literally. \P^ro^ (first aorist passive indicative here) is late verb from \p^ros, hard skin, to cover with thick skin (callus), to petrify. See on Mr 6:52; 8:17. {Of the old covenant} (\t^s palaias diath^k^s). The Old Testament. \Palaios (ancient) in contrast to \kainos (fresh, verse 6). See Mt 13:52. {The same veil} (\to auto kalumma). Not that identical veil, but one that has the same effect, that blinds their eyes to the light in Christ. This is the tragedy of modern Judaism. {Unlifted} (\m^ anakaluptomenon). Present passive participle of \anakalupt^, old verb, to draw back the veil, to unveil. {Is done away} (\katargeitai). Same verb as in verses 7,11.

3:15 {Whensoever Moses is read} (\h^nika an anagin^sk^tai M^us^s). Indefinite temporal clause with \h^nika an and the present passive subjunctive. {A veil lieth upon their heart} (\epi t^n kardian aut^n keitai). Vivid and distressing picture, a fact that caused Paul agony of heart (Ro 9:1-5). With wilful blindness the rabbis set aside the word of God by their tradition in the time of Jesus (Mr 7:8f.).

3:16 {It shall turn} (\epistrepsei). The heart of Israel. {The veil is taken away} (\periaireitai to kalumma). Present passive indicative of \periaire^, old verb, to take from around, as of anchors (Ac 27:40), to cut loose (Ac 28:13), for hope to be taken away (Ac 27:20). Here Paul has in mind Ex 34:34 where we find of Moses that \peri^ireito to kalumma\ (the veil was taken from around his face) whenever he went before the Lord. After the ceremony the veil is taken from around (\peri-) the face of the bride.

3:17 {Now the Lord is the Spirit} (\ho de Kurios to pneuma estin\). Some, like E. F. Scott (The Spirit in the N.T.), take \Kurios\ here to be Christ and interpret Paul as denying the personality of the Holy Spirit, identifying Christ and the Holy Spirit. But is not Bernard right here in taking \Kurios\ (Lord) in the same sense here as in Ex 34:34 (\enanti Kuriou\, before the Lord), the very passage that Paul is quoting? Certainly, the Holy Spirit is interchangeably called in the N.T. the Spirit of God and the Spirit of Christ (Ro 8:9f.). Christ dwells in us by the Holy Spirit, but the language here in 2Co 3:17 should not be pressed unduly (Plummer. See also P. Gardner, The Religious Experience of St. Paul, p. 176f.). Note "the Spirit of the Lord" here. {Liberty} (\eleutheria\). Freedom of access to God without fear in opposition to the fear in Ex 34:30. We need no veil and we have free access to God.

3:18 {We all} (\h^meis pantes\). All of us Christians, not merely ministers. {With unveiled face} (\anakekalummen^i pros^p^i\). Instrumental case of manner. Unlike and like Moses. {Reflecting as in a mirror} (\katoptrizomenoi\). Present middle participle of \katoptriz^~, late verb from \katoptron\, mirror (\kata, optron\, a thing to see with). In Philo (Legis Alleg. iii. 33) the word means beholding as in a mirror and that idea suits also the figure in 1Co 13:12. There is an inscription of third century B.C. with \egkatoptrisasthai eis to hud^r\, to look at one's reflection in the water. Plutarch uses the active for mirroring or reflecting and Chrysostom takes it so here. Either makes good sense. The point that Paul is making is that we shall not lose the glory as Moses did. But that is true if we keep on beholding or keep on reflecting (present tense). Only here in N.T. {Are transformed} (\metamorphoumetha\). Present passive (are being transformed) of \metamorpho^~, late verb and in papyri. See on Mt 17:2; Mr 9:2 where it is translated "transfigured." It is the word used for heathen mythological metamorphoses. {Into the same image} (\t^n aut^n eikona\). Accusative retained with passive verb \metamorphoumetha\, Into the likeness of God in Christ (1Co 15:48-53; Ro 8:17,29; Col 3:4; 1Jo 3:2). {As from the Lord the Spirit} (\kathaper apo Kuriou pneumatos\). More likely, "as from the Spirit of the Lord."

4:1 {We faint not} (\ouk egkakoumen). Present active indicative of \egkake, late verb (\en, kakos) to behave badly in, to give in to evil, to lose courage. In Symmachus (LXX), Polybius, and papyri. It is the faint-hearted coward. Paul speaks of himself (literary plural). Can he not speak for all of us?

4:2 {But we have renounced} (\alla apeipametha). Indirect middle second aorist (timeless aorist) indicative of \apeipon (defective verb) with \a of first aorist ending, to speak forth, to speak off or away from. Common verb in the active, but rare in middle and only here in N.T. {The hidden things of shame} (\ta krupta t's aischun's). They do attack the minister. His only safety is in instant and courageous defiance to all the powers of darkness. It is a terrible thing to see a preacher caught in the toils of the tempter. {In craftiness} (\en panourgifi). Old word from \panourgos (\pan, ergon), a doer of any deed (good or bad), clever, cunning, deceitful. See on Lu 20:23. {Handling deceitfully} (\dolountes). Present active participle of \dolo, from \dolos, deceit (from \del, to catch with bait), old and common verb, in papyri and inscriptions, to ensnare, to corrupt with error. Only here in N.T. Used of adulterating gold or wine. {To every conscience of men} (\pros pfsan suneid'sin anthr'p'n). Not to whim, foible, prejudice. See 3:1-6 for "commending" (\sunistanontes).

4:3 {It is veiled in them that are perishing} (\en tois apollumenois estin kekalummenon). Periphrastic perfect passive of \kalupt, to veil in both condition (first class) and conclusion. See on 2:15f. for "the perishing."

4:4 {The god of this world} (\ho theos tou ai'nos toutou). "Age," more exactly, as in 1Co 1:20. Satan is "the god of this age," a phrase nowhere else in the N.T., but Jesus uses the same idea in Joh 12:31; 14:30 and Paul in Eph 2:2; 6:12 and John in 1Jo 5:19. Satan claimed the rule over the world in the temptations with Jesus. {Blinded} (\etuphl'sen). First aorist active of \tuphlo, old verb to blind (\tuphlos, blind). They refused to believe (\apist'n) and so Satan got the power to blind their thoughts. That happens with wilful disbelievers. {The light} (\ton ph“tismon). The illumination, the enlightening. Late word from \photiz“, to give light, in Plutarch and LXX. In N.T. only in 2Co 4:4,6. Accusative case of general reference here with the articular infinitive (\eis to m^ augasai\ that should not dawn). That is, if \augasai\ is intransitive as is likely, though it is transitive in the old poets (from \aug^, radiance. Cf. German _Auge_=eye). If it is transitive, the idea would be "that they should not see clearly the illumination, etc."

4:5 {For we preach not ourselves} (\ou gar heautous k^russomen). Surely as poor and disgusting a topic as a preacher can find. {But Christ Jesus as Lord} (\alla Christon I^soun Kurion). \Kurion\ is predicate accusative in apposition. {As your servants for Jesus' sake} (\doulous hum“n dia I^soun). Your bond-slave for the sake of Jesus. This is the sufficient reason for any preacher's sacrifice, "for Jesus' sake."

4:6 {God who said} (\ho theos ho eip“n). Paraphrase of Ge 1:3. {Who shined} (\hos elampsen). Like a lamp in the heart (cf. Mt 5:15). Miners carry a lamp on the forehead, Christians carry one in their hearts lit by the Spirit of God. {To give the light} (\pros ph“tismon). For the illumination. {In the face of Jesus Christ} (\en pros“p“i I^sou Christou). The Christian who looks on the face of Jesus Christ as Moses looked upon the glory of God will be able to give the illumination of the knowledge of the glory of God. See 2:10 for \pros“pon\.

4:7 {This treasure} (\ton th^sauron touton). On \th^sauron\ see Mt 6:19-21. It is the power of giving the illumination of the knowledge of the glory of God (verse 6). "The power is limitless, but it is stored in very unlikely receptacles" (Plummer). This warning Paul gives in contrast (\de) with the exultation of verse 6 (Bernard). {In earthen vessels} (\en ostrakinois skeuesin). This adjective is common in the LXX with \skeuos, aggos\ and \aggeion\. It occurs again in 2Ti 2:20 with \skeu^\. It is found also in the papyri with \skeuos\ as here. It is from \ostrakon\, baked clay (same root as \osteon\, bone), so many fragments of which are found in Egypt with writing on them. We are but earthen jars used of God for his purposes (Ro 9:20ff.) and so fragile. {The exceeding greatness} (\h^ huperbol^). See on 1Co 12:31 for this word, "the preeminence of the power." This is God's purpose (\hina--i). God, not man, is the {dynamo} (\dunamis). It comes from God (\tou theou, ablative) and does not originate with us (\m^ex h^m^“n).

4:8 {Pressed} (\thlibomenoi). From \thlib^“, to press as grapes, to contract, to squeeze. Series of present passive participles here through verse 9 that vividly picture Paul's ministerial career. {Yet not straitened} (\all' ou stenoch^“roumenoi). Each time the exception is stated by \all' ou. From \stenoch^“re^“ (\stenoch^“ros, from \stenos, narrow, \ch^“ros, space), to be in a narrow place, to keep in a tight place. Late verb, in LXX and papyri. In N.T. only here and 2Co 6:12. {Yet not unto despair} (\all' ouk exaporoumenoi). Late perfective compound with \ex- of \exapore^“. A very effective play on words here, lost, but not lost out.

4:9 {Forsaken} (\egkataleipomenoi). Double compound of old verb \eg-kata-leip^“, to leave behind, to leave in the lurch. {Smitten down} (\kataballomenoi). As if overtaken. {Destroyed} (\apollumenoi). Perishing as in verse 3. Was Paul referring to Lystra when the Jews stoned him and thought him dead?

4:10 {Bearing about} (\peripherontes). Ignatius was called \Theophoros, God-bearer. See 1Co 15:31 where Paul says "I die daily" and Php 3:10; Col 1:24. {The dying of Jesus} (\t^“n nekr^“sin tou I^sou). Late word from \nekro^“, to put to death. In Galen. In N.T. only here and Ro 4:19.

4:11 {Are alway delivered unto death} (\eis thanaton paradidometha). This explains verse 10.

4:12 {Death worketh in us} (\ho thanatos en h^min ενεργηται). Middle voice present tense of the old verb to operate, be at work. Physical death works in him while spiritual life (paradox) works in them.

4:13 {According to that which is written} (\kata to gegrammenon). This formula in legal documents in the papyri (_Bible Studies_, p. 250). Paul makes adaptation of the words in Ps 95:1. {We also believe} (\kai h^meis pisteuomen). Like the Psalmist. And therefore can speak with effect. Otherwise useless. {Shall present us with you} (\kai parast^sei sun h^min). This shows that Paul was not certain that he would be alive when Jesus comes as has been wrongly inferred from 1Co 7:29; 10:11; 15:51.

4:15 {Being multiplied through the many} (\pleonasasa dia tⁿ pleionⁿ\). Late word \pleonazⁿ\ from \pleon\, more, "making more through the more," with play on \pleon\. One can think of Bunyan's Grace Abounding.

4:16 {Wherefore we faint not} (\dio ouk egkakoumen\). Repeats from verse 1. {Our outward man} (\ho exⁿ h^m anthr^{pos}\), {our inward man} (\ho esⁿ h^m anthr^{pos}\). In Ro 7:22; Col 3:9; Eph 4:22f., we have the inward man and the outward for the higher and the lower natures (the spirit and the flesh). "Here the decay (\diaphtheiretai\) of the bodily organism is set over against the growth in grace (\anakainoutai\, is refreshed) of the man himself" (Bernard). Plato (Republ. ix, p. 589) has \ho entos anthr^{pos}\. Cf. "the hidden man of the heart" (1Pe 3:4). {Day by day} (\h^m merfi kai h^m merfi\). This precise idiom is not in LXX nor rest of N.T. It may be colloquial use of locative in repetition.

4:17 {Our light affliction which is for the moment} (\to parautika elaphron t^s thlipse^s h^m anthr^{pos}\). Literally, "the for the moment (old adverb \parautika\, here only in N.T.) lightness (old word, in N.T. only here and Mt 11:30)." {More and more exceedingly} (\kath' huperbolⁿ eis huperbolⁿ\). Like piling Pelion on Ossa, "according to excess unto excess." See on 1Co 12:31. {Eternal weight of glory} (\aiⁿ nion baros dox^s\). Careful balancing of words in contrast (affliction vs. glory, lightness vs. weight, for the moment vs. eternal).

4:18 {While we look not} (\mⁿ skopountⁿ h^m anthr^{pos}\). Genitive absolute with participle of \skopeⁿ\ from \skopos\, goal. {Temporal} (\proskaira\). Rather temporary, for a season (\pros kairon\). Late word. See on Mt 13:21. See 1Co 13:12; Heb 11:1.

5:1 {If--be dissolved} (\ean--kataluth^i). Third class condition, \ean and first aorist passive subjunctive. The very word used (\katalu^a) for striking down a tent. {The earthly house of our tabernacle} (\h^ epigeios h^m^ n oikia tou sk^nos). Rather, "If our earthly (see on 1Co 15:40 for \epigeios) house of the tent (\sk^nos, another form of \sk^n^, tent, from root \ska, to cover)." Appositive genitive, the house (\oikia) is the tent. {We have} (\echomen). Present indicative. We possess the title to it now by faith. "Faith is the title-deed (\hupostasis) to things hoped for" (Heb 11:7). {A building from God} (\oikodom^ n ek theou). This \oikodom^ (found in Aristotle, Plutarch, LXX, etc., and papyri, though condemned by Atticists) is more substantial than the \sk^nos. {Not made with hands} (\acheiropoi^ton). Found first in Mr 14:58 in charge against Jesus before the Sanhedrin (both the common verbal \cheiropoi^ton\ and the newly made vernacular \acheiropoi^ton, same verbal with \a\ privative). Elsewhere only here and Col 2:11. Spiritual, eternal home.

5:2 {To be clothed upon with our habitation which is from heaven} (\to oik^t^rion h^m^ n to ex ouranou endusasthai). First aorist middle infinitive of late verb \ependu^a, double compound (\ep, en) to put upon oneself. Cf. \ependut^s for a fisherman's linen blouse or upper garment (Joh 21:7). \Oik^t^rion is old word used here of the spiritual body as the abode of the spirit. It is a mixed metaphor (putting on as garment the dwelling-place).

5:3 {Being clothed} (\endusamenoi). First aorist middle participle, having put on the garment. {Naked} (\gumnoi). That is, disembodied spirits, "like the souls in Sheol, without form, and void of all power of activity" (Plummer).

5:4 {Not for that we would be unclothed} (\eph' h^ i ou thelomen ekdusasthai). Rather, "For that (\eph' h^ i) we do not wish to put off the clothing, but to put it on" (\all' endusasthai). The transposition of the negative \ou weakens the sense. Paul does not wish to be a mere disembodied spirit without his spiritual garment. {That what is mortal may be swallowed up of life} (\hina katapothⁱ to thn^{ton} hupo t^s z^{“s}\). "Only what is mortal perishes; the personality, consisting of soul and body, survives," (Plummer). See on 1:22 for "the earnest of the spirit."

5:6 {At home in the body} (\end^{mountes} en tⁱ s^{“mati}\). Rare verb \end^{me}“\ from \end^{mos}\ (one among his own people as opposed to \ekd^{mos}\, one away from home). Both \ekd^{me}“\ (more common in the old Greek) and \end^{me}“\ occur in the papyri with the contrast made by Paul here.

5:7 {By sight} (\dia eidous\). Rather, by appearance.

5:8 {We are of good courage} (\tharroumen\). Good word for cheer and same root as \tharse“\ (Mt 9:2,22). Cheer up. {Are willing rather} (\eudokoumen\). Rather, "We are well-pleased, we prefer" if left to ourselves. Cf. Php 1:21f. Same \eudoke“\ used in Lu 3:22. {To be at home with the Lord} (\end^msai pros ton Kurion\). First aorist (ingressive) active infinitive, to attain that goal is bliss for Paul.

5:9 {We make it our aim} (\philotimoumetha\). Old and common verb, present middle, from \philotimos\ (\philos, tim[^]\, fond of honour), to act from love of honour, to be ambitious in the good sense (1Th 4:11; 2Co 5:9; Ro 15:20). The Latin _ambitio_ has a bad sense from _ambire_, to go both ways to gain one's point. {To be well-pleasing to him} (\euairetoi autⁱ einai\). Late adjective that shows Paul's loyalty to Christ, his Captain. Found in several inscriptions in the _Koin,_ period (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 214; Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_).

5:10 {Before the judgment-seat of Christ} (\emprosthen tou b^{matos} tou Christou\). Old word \b^{ma}\, a step (from \bain[“]\), a platform, the seat of the judge (Mt 27:19). Christ is Saviour, Lord, and Judge of us all (\tous pantas\, the all). {That each may receive} (\hina komis^{tai} hekastos\). Receive as his due, \komiz[“]\ means, old verb. See on Mt 25:27. {Bad} (\phaulon\). Old word, akin to German _faul_, worthless, of no account, base, wicked.

5:11 {The fear of the Lord} (\ton phobon tou Kuriou\). Many today regard this a played-out motive, but not so Paul. He has in mind verse 10 with the picture of the judgment seat of Christ. {We persuade} (\peithomen\). Conative present active, we try to persuade. It is always hard work. {Unto God} (\the*“i*\). Dative case. God understands whether men do or not. {That we are made manifest} (\pephaner*“sthai*\). Perfect passive infinitive of \phanero“\ in indirect discourse after \elpiz“\ . Stand manifested, state of completion.

5:12 {As giving you occasion of glorying} (\aphormⁿ didontes humin kauch^{matos}\). An old Greek word (\apo, horm[^]\, onset, rush), a base of operations, material with which to glory, as we say "a tip" only much more. {That ye may have wherewith to answer} (\hina ech^{te} te pros\). Literally, "That ye may have something against (for facing those, etc.)." Paul wishes his champions in Corinth to know the facts. {In appearance, and not in heart} (\en pros*“p“i kai m^{en} kardifi*\). He means the Judaizers who were braggarts about their orthodox Judaism.

5:13 {Whether we are beside ourselves} (\eite exest^{men}\). Second aorist active indicative of \exist^{mi}\, old verb, here to stand out of oneself (intransitive) from \ekstasis\, ecstasy, comes as in Mr 5:42. It is literary plural, for Paul is referring only to himself. See on 1:6 for \eite--eite\ . It is a condition of the first class and Paul assumes as true the charge that he was crazy (if I was crazy) for the sake of argument. Festus made it later (Ac 26:24). He spoke with tongues (1Co 14:18) and had visions (2Co 12:1-6) which probably the Judaizers used against him. A like charge was made against Jesus (Mr 3:21). People often accuse those whom they dislike with being a bit off.

5:14 {The love of Christ} (\h[^] agap[^] tou Christou\). Subjective genitive, Christ's love for Paul as shown by verse 15. {Constraineth us} (\sunechei h[^] mas\). Old and common verb, to hold together, to press the ears together (Ac 7:57), to press on every side (Lu 8:45), to hold fast (Lu 22:63), to hold oneself to (Ac 18:5), to be pressed (passive, Lu 12:50; Php 1:23). So here Paul's conception of Christ's love for him holds him together to his task whatever men think or say. {Judging this} (\krinantas touto\). Having reached this conclusion, ever since his conversion (Ga 1:17f.). {One died for all} (\heis huper pant*“n apethanen*\). This is the central tenet in Paul's theology and Christology. \Huper\ (over) here is used in the sense of substitution as in Joh 11:50; Ga 3:13, death in behalf so that the rest will not have to die. This use of \huper\ is common in the papyri (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 631). In fact, \huper\ in this sense is more usual in Greek than \anti, pro\ or any other preposition. {Therefore all died} (\ara hoi pantes apethanon\). Logical conclusion (\ara\, corresponding), the one died for the all and so the all died when he did, all the spiritual death possible for those for whom Christ died. This is Paul's gospel, clear-cut, our hope today.

5:15 {Should no longer live unto themselves} (\hina m^keti heautois z^sin\). The high doctrine of Christ's atoning death carries a correspondingly high obligation on the part of those who live because of him. Selfishness is ruled out by our duty to live "unto him who for their sakes died and rose again."

5:16 {Henceforth} (\apo tou nun\). From the time that we gained this view of Christ's death for us. {After the flesh} (\kata sarka\). According to the flesh, the fleshy way of looking at men. He, of course, knows men "in the flesh" (\en t^i sarki\), but Paul is not speaking of that. Worldly standards and distinctions of race, class, cut no figure now with Paul (Ga 3:28) as he looks at men from the standpoint of the Cross of Christ. {Even though we have known Christ after the flesh} (\ei kai egn^kamen kata sarka Christon\). Concessive clause (\ei kai\, if even or also) with perfect active indicative. Paul admits that he had once looked at Christ \kata sarka\, but now no longer does it. Obviously he uses \kata sarka\ in precisely the same sense that he did in verse 15 about men. He had before his conversion known Christ \kata sarka\, according to the standards of the men of his time, the Sanhedrin and other Jewish leaders. He had led the persecution against Jesus till Jesus challenged and stopped him (Ac 9:4). That event turned Paul clean round and he no longer knows Christ in the old way \kata sarka\. Paul may or may not have seen Jesus in the flesh before his death, but he says absolutely nothing on that point here.

5:17 {A new creature} (\kain^ ktisis\). A fresh start is made (\kain^). \Ktisis\ is the old word for the act of creating (Ro 1:20), but in N.T. by metonymy it usually bears the notion of \ktisma\, the thing created or creature as here. {The old things are passed away} (\ta archaia par^lthen\). Did pass by, he means. Second aorist active of \parerchomai\, to go by. The ancient (\archaia\)) way of looking at Christ among other things. And yet today there are scholars who are trying to revive the old prejudiced view of Jesus Christ as a mere man, a prophet, to give us "a reduced Christ." That was once Paul's view, but it passed by forever for him. It is a false view and leaves us no gospel and no Saviour. {Behold, they are become new} (\idou, gegone kaina\). Perfect active indicative of \ginomai\, have become new (fresh, \kaina\) to stay so.

5:18 {Who reconciled us to himself through Christ} (\tou katallaxantos h^mas heaut^i dia Christou\). Here Paul uses one of his great doctrinal words, \katallass^\", old word for exchanging coins. \Diallass^\", to change one's mind, to reconcile, occurs in N.T. only in Mt 5:24 though in papyri (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 187), and common in Attic. \Katallass^\" is old verb, but more frequent in later writers. We find \sunallass^\" in Ac 7:26 and \apokatallass^\" in Col 1:20f.; Eph 2:16 and the substantive \katallag^\" in Ro 5:11; 11:15 as well as here. It is hard to discuss this great theme without apparent contradiction. God's love (Joh 3:16) provided the means and basis for man's reconciliation to God against whom he had sinned. It is all God's plan because of his love, but God's own sense of justice had to be satisfied (Ro 3:26) and so God gave his Son as a propitiation for our sins (Ro 3:25; Col 1:20; 1Jo 2:2; 4:10). The point made by Paul here is that God needs no reconciliation, but is engaged in the great business of reconciling us to himself. This has to be done on God's terms and is made possible through (\dia\) Christ. {And gave unto us the ministry of reconciliation} (\kai dontos h^min t^n diakonian t^s katallag^s\). It is a ministry marked by reconciliation, that consists in reconciliation. God has made possible through Christ our reconciliation to him, but in each case it has to be made effective by the attitude of each individual. The task of winning the unreconciled to God is committed to us. It is a high and holy one, but supremely difficult, because the offending party (the guilty) is the hardest to win over. We must be loyal to God and yet win sinful men to him.

5:19 {To wit, that} (\h^s hoti\). Latin puts it _quoniam quidem_. It is an unclassical idiom, but occurs in the papyri and inscriptions (Moulton, _Prol_, p. 212; Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1033). It is in Es 4:14. See also 2Co 11:21; 2Th 2:2. It probably means "how that." {Not reckoning} (\m^ logizomenos\). What Jesus did (his death for us) stands to our credit (Ro 8:32) if we make our peace with God. This is our task, "the word of reconciliation," that we may receive "the righteousness of God" and be adopted into the family of God.

5:20 {We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ} (\huper Christou oun presbeuomen\). Old word from \presbus\, an old man, first to be an old man, then to be an ambassador (here and Eph 6:20 with \en halus`i\ in a chain added), common in both senses in the Greek. "The proper term in the Greek East for the Emperor's Legate" (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 374), in inscriptions and papyri. So Paul has a natural pride in using this dignified term for himself and all ministers. The ambassador has to be _persona grata_ with both countries (the one that he represents and the one to which he goes). Paul was Christ's _Legate_ to act in his behalf and in his stead. {As though God were intreating by us} (\h`s tou theou parakalountos di' h`m`n\). Genitive absolute with \h`s\ used with the participle as often to give the reason (apparent or real). Here God speaks through Christ's Legate. {Be ye reconciled to God} (\katallag`te t`i the`i\). Second aorist passive imperative of \katallass`\ and used with the dative case. "Get reconciled to God," and do it now. This is the ambassador's message as he bears it to men from God.

5:21 {Him who knew no sin} (\ton m` gnonta hamartian\). Definite claim by Paul that Jesus did not commit sin, had no personal acquaintance (\m` gnonta\, second aorist active participle of \gin`sk`) with it. Jesus made this claim for himself (Joh 8:46). This statement occurs also in 1Pe 2:22; Heb 4:15; 7:26; 1Jo 3:5. Christ was and is "a moral miracle" (Bernard) and so more than mere man. {He made to be sin} (\hamartian epoi`sen\). The words "to be" are not in the Greek. "Sin" here is the substantive, not the verb. God "treated as sin" the one "who knew no sin." But he knew the contradiction of sinners (Heb 12:3). We may not dare to probe too far into the mystery of Christ's suffering on the Cross, but this fact throws some light on the tragic cry of Jesus just before he died: "My God, My God, why didst thou forsake me?" (Mt 27:46). {That we might become} (\hina h`meis gen`metha\). Note "become." This is God's purpose (\hina\) in what he did and in what Christ did. Thus alone can we obtain God's righteousness (Ro 1:17).

6:1 {Working together with him} (\sunergountes\). We are co-workers, partners with God (1Co 3:9), in this work of grace. {In vain} (\eis kenon\). Into emptiness. The plan of God, the work of Christ on the Cross, the pleas of the ambassador may all be nullified by the recipient of the message.

6:2 {Behold, now is the acceptable time} (\idou nun kairos euprosdektos\). Here is another "Pauline parenthesis" (Plummer) as in 5:7 by the quotation from Isa 49:8. The LXX has \dektos\ (\dektoi\) verbal of \dechomai\, but Paul employs the double compound (\eu, pros, dektos\), well-received. It occurs in Aristophanes, Plutarch, inscription, etc.

6:3 {Giving no occasion of stumbling in any thing} (\m^demian en m^deni didontes proskop^n\). \Proskop^, late word (Polybius, LXX), from \proskopt^, to strike against, to stumble. Only here in N.T. Note double negative in the Greek. {That the ministry be not blamed} (\hina m^ m^m^th^i h^ diakonia\). Negative purpose (\hina m^). First aorist passive subjunctive of old verb \m^maomai\ from \m^mos\, blot, blemish. One can read with profit J. A. Hutton's Warrack Lectures, _That the Ministry Be Not Blamed_.

6:4 {But in everything commending ourselves} (\all' en panti sunistanontes heautous\). Paul gives a marvellous summary of his argument about the dignity and glory of ministers of Christ as {ministers of God} (\h^s theou diakonoi\) under three aspects, the first with {in} (\en\) verses 3-7a, the second with {by} (\dia\) verses 7b,8, the third with {as} (\h^s\) verses 9-10. The negative view with \en\ we have in verse 3, then the positive in verses 4-7a. Each word carries a story that can be filled in from Paul's own life as a preacher with an echo in that of us all. {In distresses} (\en stenoch^riais\). In tight places (12:10). Late word from \stenoch^re^ (see on 4:8).

6:5 {In stripes} (\en pl^gais\). In blows, wounds (Lu 10:30; 12:48; Ac 16:23,33). Our plague. {In tumults} (\en akatastasiais\). See on 1Co 14:33). Instabilities, often from politics. {In watchings} (\en agrupniais\). In sleeplessnesses, instances of insomnia. Old word, in N.T. only here and 11:27. Paul knew all about this.

6:6 {In love unfeigned} (\en agap^i anupokrit^i\). Late and rare word (\a\ privative and \hupokritos\, from \hupokrinomai\). This is the only love that is worth while (Ro 12:9).

6:7 {On the right hand and on the left} (\t^"n dexi^"n kai arister^"n\). Offensive weapons (\hopl^"n\ on the right, defensive on the left. See 1Th 5:8; Eph 6:11 for Paul's description of the panoply of God and Ro 6:13 for the phrase "weapons of righteousness," the only kind that will stand the strain. See also Book of Wisdom 5:18ff.

6:8 {By glory and dishonour} (\dia dox^s kai atimias\). Here \dia\ is no longer instrument, but state or condition. \Doxa\ here is glory. See Ro 9:21; 2Ti 2:20 for contrast between honour and dishonour (\tim^, atimia\). {By evil report and good report} (\dia dusph^mias kai euph^mias\). Play on the words with prefixes \dus-\ and \eu-\ and \ph^m^\. \Dusph^mia\ is a late word, only here in N.T. \Euph^mia\, old and common word, only here in N.T. {As deceivers and yet true} (\h^"s planoι kai al^theis\). Paul takes up \h^"s\ now in place of \dia\ which succeeded \en\. Note use of \kai\ in sense of "and yet" (adversative). \Planos\ is late word (Diodorus, Josephus) for wandering, vagabond, impostor (cf. \plana^"\", to lead astray, used of Christ, Joh 7:12). In N.T. only here; Mt 27:63 (of Christ by Pharisees); 2Jo 1:7. "In the Clementines St. Paul is expressly described by his adversaries as \planos\ and as disseminating deceit (\plan^"n\)" (Bernard). Such slander from one's enemies is praise.

6:9 {As unknown and yet well known} (\h^"s agnooumenoi kai epiginoskomenoi\). "As ignored (as nonentities, obscure, without proper credentials 3:2) and yet fully recognized (by all who really matter as in 11:6)." {And behold, we live} (\kai idou z^"men\). Cf. the hazards of his life (1:8; 4:10; 11:23). His whole career is full of paradox).

6:10 {Always rejoicing} (\aei chairontes\). Even in sorrow (11:9; 1Th 5:16; Ro 5:3-5; 9:2; Php 2:18,27; 3:1; 4:4,15). {Yet making many rich} (\pollous de ploutizontes\). Old word from \ploutos\ (wealth), to enrich. Spiritual riches Paul has in mind as in 1Co 1:5 (cf. Mt 5:37). {As having nothing and yet possessing all things} (\hˆs mˆden echontes kai panta katechontes). Contrast between \mˆden (nothing) and \panta (all things, cf. 1Co 3:22) and \echˆ (to have) and \katechˆ (to hold down, to hold fast). Play on words (simple and compound) as in 3:2; 4:8. Climax of Paul's panegyric on the Christian ministry. He now resumes the thread of the story broken off in 2:14.

6:11 {Our mouth is open unto you} (\to stoma hˆmˆn aneˆˆigen pros humas). Second perfect active indicative of \anoigˆ and intransitive, stand open. He has kept back nothing in his portrayal of the glory of the ministry as the picture of the open mouth shows. {Our heart is enlarged} (\hˆ kardia hˆmˆn peplatuntai). Perfect passive indicative of old verb \platunˆ, to broaden, from \platus, broad. In N T. only here and Mt 23:5 (cf. phylacteries). Hence his freedom of speech for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks" (Mt 12:34).

6:12 {Ye are not straitened in us} (\ou stenochˆˆreisthe en hˆmin). The same figure as in verse 11. See on 4:8 for \stenochˆˆreˆ. There is no restraint in me (my heart). My adversaries may have caused some of you to tighten up your affections (\splugchna\ for affection as in Jas 5:11; 1Pe 3:8).

6:13 {Now for a recompense in like kind} (\tˆn de autˆn antimisthian). No example of this expressive word outside of this passage and Ro 1:27 and later Christian writers. Paul may have found it in use in the _Koin,_ vernacular or he may have coined it from \antimisthos, remunerating (paying back). There is no verb here to explain the accusative which may be the accusative of general reference or the object of a verb not expressed. {Be ye also enlarged} (\platunthˆte kai humeis). As I have been (verse 11). First aorist passive imperative of \platunˆ.

6:14 {Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers} (\mˆ ginesthe heterozugountes apistois). No other example of this verb has yet been found, though the adjective from which it is apparently formed, \heterozugos (yoked with a different yoke) occurs in Le 19:19 of the union of beasts of different kinds. In De 22:10 we read: "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together." Literally, "Stop becoming (\mˆ ginesthe\ present imperative, not \mˆ genˆsthe\ aorist subj.) unequally yoked with unconverted heathen (unbelievers). Some were already guilty. Marriage is certainly included, but other unions may be in mind. Cf. Eph 5:7. Paul gives as the reason (gar) for this prohibition five words in questions to distinguish the contrasts. {Fellowship} (metoch). Sharing with and followed by associative instrumental case of dikaïosunē (righteousness) and iniquity (anomia). A pertinent challenge today when church members wink at violations of laws of the land and laws of God. {Communion} (koinōnia). Partnership to light (phōtī dative case) with (pros), facing darkness.

6:15 {Concord} (sumphōnēsis). Symphony. Late word from sumphōnē, only here and ecclesiastical writers, though sumphōnēma in the papyri. {Belial} (Belial). Transliteration of Hebrew word for worthlessness and applied to Satan (Book of Jubilees 1.20) as here. Paul graphically sums up the contrast between Christ and Belial (Satan), the heads of the contending forces of good and evil. {Portion} (meris). The fourth of the words. Here by "unbeliever" (apistou) Paul means "disbeliever," not just an unconverted man who yet approves Christ.

6:16 {Agreement} (sunkatathesis). Fifth of these words. Late word, but common, though here only in N.T. Approved by putting together the votes. In the papyri ek sunkatatheseōs means "by agreement." On the temple of God and idols see 1Co 10:14-22. See Lu 23:51 for the verb sunkatatithēmi. {For we are the temple of the living God} (hēmeis gar naos theou esmen zōntos). We, not temples (Ac 7:48; 17:24; 1Co 3:16; 6:19). {As God said} (kath' hōs eipen ho theos). A paraphrase and catena of quotations, what J. Rendel Harris calls Testimonia (from Le 26:11f.; Isa 52:11; Eze 20:34; 37:27; 2Sa 7:8,14). Plummer notes that at the beginning "I will dwell in them" (enoikēs en autois) is not in any of them. "As God said" points to Le 26:12; Eze 37:27.

6:17 {Saith the Lord} (legei Kurios). Isa 52:5; Eze 20:33. Cf. Re 18:4. {Unclean thing} (akathartou). Or unclean person. Genitive case is the same for both.

6:18 {Saith the Lord Almighty} (legei Kurios pantokratōr). 2Sa 7:8. This use of eis is a Hebraism for Hebrew le instead of predicate nominative. Pantokratōr (pfs, krateō, Ruler of all) is common in the LXX. Occurs also in the inscriptions and papyri. In the N.T. only here and in Revelation.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

7:1 {These promises} (\tautas tas epaggelias\). So many and so precious (2Pe 2:4 \epaggelmata\; Heb 11:39f.). {Let us cleanse ourselves} (\katharis“men heautous\). Old Greek used \kathair“\ (in N.T. only in Joh 15:2, to prune). In _Koin, _\kathariz“\ occurs in inscriptions for ceremonial cleansing (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 216f.). Paul includes himself in this volitive aorist subjunctive. {From all defilement} (\apo pantos molusmou\). Ablative alone would have done, but with \apo\ it is plainer as in Heb 9:14. \Molusmos\ is a late word from \molun“\, to stain (see on 1Co 8:7), to pollute. In the LXX, Plutarch, Josephus. It includes all sorts of filthiness, physical, moral, mental, ceremonial, "of flesh and spirit." Missionaries in China and India can appreciate the atmosphere of pollution in Corinth, for instance. {Perfecting holiness} (\epitelountes hagiosun^{\n}\). Not merely negative goodness (cleansing), but aggressive and progressive (present tense of \epitele“\) holiness, not a sudden attainment of complete holiness, but a continuous process (1Th 3:13; Ro 1:4; 1:6).

7:2 {Open your hearts to us} (\ch“r^{\sate h^{\mas}\). Old verb (from \ch“ros\, place), to leave a space, to make a space for, and transitive here as in Mt 19:11. He wishes no further \stenoch“ria\, tightness of heart, in them (6:12). "Make room for us in your hearts." He makes this plea to all, even the stubborn minority. {We wronged no man} (\oudena^{\dik^{\samen}\). A thing that every preacher ought to be able to say. Cf. 4:2; 1Th 2:3; Ac 20:26f. {We corrupted no man} (\oudena ephtheiramen\). We ruined no one. "It may refer to money, or morals, or doctrine" (Plummer). He is answering the Judaizers. {We took advantage of no man} (\oudena epleonekt^{\samen}\). That charge was made in Thessalonica (1Th 4:6) which see for this late verb and also on 2Co 2:11. He got the best of (note \pleon\ more in the root) no one in any evil way.

7:3 {Not to condemn you} (\pros katakrisin ou\). "Not for condemnation." Late word from \katakrin“\, found in Vettius Valens, and here only in N.T. {To die together and live together} (\eis to sunapothanein kai sunz^{\in}\). "For the dying together

(second aorist ingressive active infinitive of \sunapothn^{sk}“) and living together (present active infinitive).“ One article (|to|) with both infinitives. You are in our hearts to share death and life.

7:4 {I overflow with joy in all our affliction}

(|huperperisseuomai tⁱ charfi epi pfsⁱ tⁱ thlipsei h^m“n|). A thoroughly Pauline sentiment. \Perisseu“ means to overflow, as we have seen. \Huper-perisseu“ (late word, so far only here and Byzantine writers) is to have a regular flood. Vulgate _superabundo_.

7:5 {When we had come} (|elthontⁿ h^m“n|). Genitive absolute with second aorist active participle of \erchomai|. Paul now returns to the incident mentioned in 2:12 before the long digression on the glory of the ministry. {Had no relief}

(|oudemian esch^{ken} anesin|). Perfect active indicative precisely as in 2:13 which see, "has had no relief" (dramatic perfect).

{Afflicted} (|thlibomenoi|). Present passive participle of \thlib“ as in 4:8, but with anacoluthon, for the nominative case agrees not with the genitive h^m“n nor with the accusative h^{mas} in verse 6. It is used as if a principal verb as in 9:11; 11:6; Ro 12:16 (Moulton, _Prolegomena_, p. 182; Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 1132-35). {Without were fightings} (|ex^{then} machai|). Asyndeton and no copula, a parenthesis also in structure. Perhaps pagan adversaries in Macedonia (cf. 1Co 15:32). {Within were fears} (|es^{then} phoboi|). Same construction. "Mental perturbations" (Augustine) as in 11:28.

7:6 {Cormforteth} (|parakalⁿ|). See on 1:3-7 for this word.

{The lowly} (|tous tapeinous|). See on Mt 11:29. Literally, low on the ground in old sense (Eze 17:24). Low in condition as here; Jas 1:9. In 2Co 10:1 regarded as abject. In this sense in papyri. "Humility as a sovereign grace is the creation of Christianity" (Gladstone, _Life_, iii, p. 466). {By the coming} (|en tⁱ parousifi|). Same use of \parousia as in 1Co 16:7 which see. See also 2Co 7:7; 10:10.

7:7 {Wherewith} (|hⁱ|). Either locative case with preceding \en or instrumental of the relative with \pareklth (first aorist passive indicative). "The manner in which Paul, so to speak, _fondles_ this word (|parakale“) is most beautiful" (Vincent).

{In you} (|eph' humin|). Over you, upon you. {Your longing} (|tⁿ humⁿ epipoth^{sin}|). Late word from \epipothe“ (|epi|, directive, longing towards, yearning). Only here in N.T.

{Mourning} (\odurmon\). Old word from \oduromai\, to lament. Only here in N.T. {So that I rejoiced yet more} (\h“ste me mallon char^nai\). Result expressed by \h“ste\ and the second aorist passive infinitive of \chair“\ with accusative of general reference.

7:8 {Though} (\ei kai\). If also. Paul treats it as a fact. {With my epistle} (\en t^i epistol^i\). The one referred to in 2:3f. {I do not regret it} (\ou metamelomai\). This verb really means "repent" (be sorry again) which meaning we have transferred to \metanoē“, to change one's mind (not to be sorry at all). See Mt 21:30; 27:3 for the verb \metamelomai\, to be sorry, to regret as here. Paul is now glad that he made them sorry. {Though I did regret} (\ei kai metemelom^n\). Imperfect indicative in the concessive clause. I was in a regretful mood at first. {For I see} (\blep“ gar\). A parenthetical explanation of his present joy in their sorrow. B D do not have \gar\. The Latin Vulgate has _videns_ (seeing) for \blep“n\. {For a season} (\pros h“ran\). Cf. 1Th 2:17. It was only "for an hour."

7:9 {Now I rejoice} (\nun chair“\). Now that Titus has come and told him the good news from Corinth (2:12f.). This was the occasion of the noble outburst in 2:12-6:10. {Unto repentance} (\eis metanoian\). Note the sharp difference here between "sorrow" (\lup^)\ which is merely another form of \metamelomai\ (regret, remorse) and "repentance" (\metanoia\) or change of mind and life. It is a linguistic and theological tragedy that we have to go on using "repentance" for \metanoia\. But observe that the "sorrow" has led to "repentance" and was not itself the repentance. {After a godly sort} (\kata theon\). In God's way. "God's way as opposed to man's way and the devil's way" (Plummer). It was not mere sorrow, but a change in their attitude that counted. {That ye might suffer loss by us in nothing} (\hina en m^deni z^mi“th^te ex hum“n\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \z^mio“, old verb to suffer damage. See on Mt 16:26. This was God's intention and so he overruled their sorrow to good.

7:10 {For godly sorrow} (\h^ gar kata theon lup^)\. "For the sorrow according to God" (God's ideal, verse 9). {Worketh repentance unto salvation a repentance without regret} (\metanoian eis s“t^rian ametamel^ton ergazetai\). This clause alone should have prevented the confusion between mere "sorrow" (\lup^\) as indicated in \metamelomai\, to regret (to be sorry again) and "change of mind and life" as shown by \metanoian\ (\metanoē\)) and wrongly translated "repentance." The sorrow according to God does work this "change of mind and life" unto salvation, a change "not to be regretted" (\ametamel^ton\, an old verbal adjective of \metamelomai\ and \a\ privative, but here alone in N.T.). It agrees with \metanoian\, not \s^t^rian\. {But the sorrow of the world} (\h^de tou kosmou lup^). In contrast, the kind of sorrow that the world has, grief "for failure, not for sin" (Bernard), for the results as seen in Cain, Esau (his tears!), and Judas (remorse, \metemel^th^). Works out (perfective use of \kat-) death in the end.

7:11 {This selfsame thing} (\auto touto\). "This very thing," "the being made sorry according to God" (\to kata theon lup^th^nai\), articular first aorist passive infinitive with which \auto touto\ agrees and the proleptic subject of the verb \kateirgasato\. {Earnest care} (\spoud^n\). Diligence, from \speud^, to hasten. Cf. Ro 12:11. {Yea} (\alla\). Not adversative use of \alla\, but copulative as is common (half dozen examples here). {Clearing of yourselves} (\apologia\). In the old notion of \apologia\ (self-vindication, self-defence) as in 1Pe 3:15. {Indignation} (\aganakt^sin\). Old word, only here in N.T. From \aganakteo\ (Mr 10:14, etc.). {Avenging} (\ekdik^sin\). Late word from \ekdike^, to avenge, to do justice (Lu 18:5; 21:22), vindication from wrong as in Lu 18:7, to secure punishment (1Pe 2:14). {Pure} (\hagnous\). Kin to \hagios\ (\haz^, to reverence), immaculate.

7:12 {But that your earnest care for us might be made manifest} (\all' heineken tou phaner^th^nai t^n spoud^n hum^an t^n huper h^m^an\). So the correct text, not "our care for you." Easy to interchange Greek \hum^an\ (your) and \h^m^an\ (our). Usual construction with preposition \heneken\ and genitive of articular infinitive with accusative of general reference.

7:13 {We joyed the more exceedingly} (\perissoter^s mallon echar^men\). Double comparative (pleonastic use of \mallon\, more, with \perissoter^s\, more abundantly) as is common in the _Koin_, (Mr 7:36; Php 1:23). {For the joy of Titus} (\epi t^i charfi Titou\). On the basis of (\epi\) the joy of Titus who was proud of the outcome of his labours in Corinth. {Hath been refreshed} (\anapepautai\). Perfect passive indicative of \anapau^\. Cf. 1Co 16:18 for this striking verb.

7:14 {If--I have gloried} (\ei--kekauch^{mai}\). Condition of first class. On this verb see 1Co 3:21; 2Co 5:12. {I was not put to shame} (\ou kat^{ischunth}ⁿ\). First aorist passive indicative of \kataischun^{ai}\. Paul had assured Titus, who hesitated to go after the failure of Timothy, that the Corinthians were sound at bottom and would come round all right if handled properly. Paul's joy is equal to that of Titus. {In truth} (\en al^{theifi}\). In the sharp letter as well as in I Corinthians. He had not hesitated to speak plainly of their sins. {Our glorying before Titus} (\h^{kauch}^{sis epi Titou}\). The two things were not inconsistent and were not contradictory as the outcome proved.

7:15 {Whilst he remembereth} (\anamimn^{skomenou}\). Present middle participle of \anamimn^{skomai}\, to remind, in the genitive case agreeing with \autou\ (his, of him). {The obedience of you all} (\t^{n pant}^{n hum}^{n hupakou}ⁿ\). A remarkable statement of the complete victory of Titus in spite of a stubborn minority still opposing Paul. {With fear and trembling} (\meta phobou kai tromou\). He had brought a stern message (1Co 5:5) and they had trembled at the words of Titus (cf. Eph 6:5; Php 2:12). Paul had himself come to the Corinthians at first with a nervous dread (1Co 2:3).

7:16 {I am of good courage} (\tharr^{ai}\). The outcome has brought joy, courage, and hope to Paul.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

8:1 {The grace} (\t^n charin). As manifested in the collection in the churches, poor as they were. The Romans had lacerated Macedonia (Livy, XLV. 30).

8:2 {Proof} (\dokim^i). Tests as of metals as in 2:9. {Abundance} (\perisseia). Late word from \perisseu^{\}, to overflow. {Their deep poverty} (\h^kata bathous pt^cheia aut^{\}). \Pt^cheia is old word from \pt^cheu^{\}, to be a beggar, as of Jesus in 8:9 (from \pt^chos\, cowering in fear and poverty, as in Lu 14:13, but ennobled by Christ as in Mt 5:3; 2Co 8:9). Poverty down deep. Strabo (LX 419) has \kata bathous, down to the bottom. {Liberality} (\haplot^tos). From \haplous, single, simple (Mt 6:22). "The passage from single-mindedness or simplicity to liberality is not quite obvious" (Plummer). Perhaps "heartiness" supplies the connecting link. See also 9:11-13.

8:3 {Beyond their power} (\para dunamin). "Alongside" with accusative like \huper dunamin in 1:8. Field (_Ot. Nov._) quotes Josephus (_Ant_. iii. 6, 1) for \kata dunamin and \para dunamin as here. Few give \kata dunamin (according to actual ability). Paul commends this high pressure collection because of the emergency. {Of their own accord} (\authairetoi). Old verbal adjective (\autos, hairetos\ from \haireomai\, to choose), of their own initiative, voluntary. Only here and verse 17 in N.T. Papyri often have \hekousi^{\} kai \authairet^{\} (willingly and voluntarily).

8:4 {Beseeching us with much intreaty in regard of this grace} (\meta poll^s parakl^se^{\} s deomenoi h^m^{\} n t^n charin). Literally, "with much intreaty begging of us the favour and the partnership in the ministry to the saints." The accusative (\charin) after \deomai is unusual. By \charis Paul means the privilege of giving (cf. Ac 24:27). Apparently Paul had been reluctant to press the Macedonians because of their manifest poverty. They demanded the right to have a share in it.

8:5 {We had hoped} (\lpisamen). First aorist active indicative of \elpiz“\, "Expected," he means. They went beyond his hopes about them. {First they gave their own selves} (\heautous ed“kan pr“ton\). First aorist active indicative of \did“mi\ (k aorist). "Themselves they gave first." That is the explanation of the generous giving.

8:6 {Insomuch that we exhorted Titus} (\eis to parakalesai h^mas Titon\). Use of \eis to\ and the infinitive for result with accusative of general reference (\h^mas\). See Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1003. {He had made a beginning before} (\proen^rxato\). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb \pro-en-archomai\, still found only here and verse 10, to make a start before others. {Complete} (\epitelesei\). First aorist (effective) active subjunctive of \epitele“\, to finish, with perfective use of \epi\ in composition.

8:7 {In this grace also} (\kai en taut^i t^i chariti\). This gifted church (1Co 12-14) had fallen behind in the grace of giving. Kindly irony in this allusion.

8:8 {Proving} (\dokimaz“n\). Testing and so proving. {The sincerity also of your love} (\kai to t^s humeteras agap^s gn^sion\). Old adjective, contraction of \genesios\ (\ginomai\), legitimately born, not spurious. A collection is a test of one's love for Christ, not the only test, but a real one.

8:9 {Though he was rich} (\plousios “n\). Concessive present participle “n\ from \eimi\, to be. {Be became poor} (\ept“cheusen\). Ingressive aorist active indicative of \pt“cheu“\ (see verse 2 on pt“cheia\). {Through his poverty} (\t^i ekeinou pt“cheifi\). Instrumental case, by means of. {Might become rich} (\plout^s^te\). Ingressive first aorist active subjunctive of \ploute“\, to be rich with \hina\ (that). See on ^Lu 1:53; 1Co 4:8.

8:10 {Judgment} (\gn“m^n\). Deliberate opinion, but not a "command" (\epitag^ verse 8). Cf. 1Co 7:25. {A year ago} (\apo perusi\). From last year. {Not only to do, but also to will} (\ou monon to poi^sai, alla kai to thelein\). Articular infinitives the objects of \proen^rxasthe\ on which verb see verse 6). That is to say, the Corinthians promised before any others.

8:11 {The readiness to will} (\h^ prothumia tou thelein\). Old word from \prothumos\ (\pro, thumos), forwardness, eagerness (Ac 17:11). They were quick to pledge. {The completion also} (\kai to epitelesai). The finishing also (articular first aorist active infinitive). {Out of your ability} (\ek tou echein). "Out of the having," literally, and so, "out of what you can give" (verse 12).

8:12 {Is there} (\prokeitai). Lies before one. Old word. {Acceptable} (\euprosdektos). See on 6:2. {According as a man hath} (\katho ean ech^i). Indefinite comparative clause with \ean\ and present subjunctive \echei\. Clearly God does not expect us to give what we do not have. {Not according as he hath not} (\ou katho ouk echei). Note present indicative rather than subjunctive because a specific case is presented. See 9:7; Mr 12:43.

8:13 {Others may be eased} (\allois anesis). "Release to others." {Ye distressed} (\humin thlipsis). "To you tribulation." The verb \^i\ (present subjunctive) with \hina\ is not expressed.

8:14 {By equality} (\ex isot^tos). Old word from \isos\, fair, equal. In N.T. only here and Col 4:1. {Abundancy} (\perisseuma). Late word from \perisseu^{\ like \perisseia\ (verse 2) Cf. Mt 12:34. {Want} (\huster^ma). Late word from \hustere^{\, to be in want. See also 9:12; Lu 21:4 (cf. \huster^sis\ in Mr 12:44).

8:16 {Which putteth} (\t^i didonti). Present active articular participle, "who is continually giving." Hence Titus is full of zealous care for you.

8:17 {Very earnest} (\spoudaioteros). "More earnest than ordinarily," comparative adjective.

8:18 {We have sent with him} (\sunepempsamen met' autou). Epistolary aorist. {The brother} (\ton adelphon). This may be, probably is, Luke who may also be the brother of Titus (see also 12:18) according to a common Greek idiom where the article is used as "his." But this idiom is not necessary. As a matter of fact, we do not know who this brother is. {Is spread through all the churches} (\dia pas^{\ n t^{\ n ekkli^si^{\ n). No verb in the Greek (ellipsis).

8:19 {But who was also appointed} (\alla kai cheirotone^{theis}). Anacoluthon. The first aorist passive participle \cheirotone^{theis} is from \cheirotone^{theis}, old verb to stretch out the hands (\cheir tein^{theis}) and so to vote in public. The idea is that this brother was chosen by the churches, not by Paul. Only here in N.T. save Ac 14:23 where it means to appoint without notion of raising the hands. In Ac 10:41 we have \procheirotone^{theis}. {To travel with us} (\sunekd^{mos}). Late word for travelling companion. So in the inscriptions (\sun^{theis}\, together with, \ekd^{mos}\, away from home).

8:20 {Avoiding this} (\stellomenoi touto). Present middle participle of \stell^{theis}, old verb, to set, to arrange. So "arranging for ourselves this." {That any man should blame us} (\m^{theis} tis h^{theis} mas m^{theis} s^{theis} tai). Literally, "lest any one blame us" (negative purpose with \m^{theis}\ and first aorist middle subjunctive of \m^{theis} meomai. See on 7:3, only other N.T. example). {Bounty} (\hadrot^{theis} ti). Old word from \hadros, thick, stout, ripe, rich, great as in 1Ki 1:9; 2Ki 10:6. Only here in N.T.

8:21 {We take thought} (\pronoumen). Old verb, to plan beforehand (\pro-) as in Ro 12:17; 1Ti 5:8. {But also in the sight of men} (\alla kai en^{theis} pion anthr^{theis} p^{theis} n). It is not enough for one's financial accounts to be honourable (\kala) as God sees them, but they should be so kept that men can understand them also. A timely warning. Paul took the utmost pains that no suspicion could be attached to him in this collection.

8:22 {Our brother} (\ton adelphon h^{theis} m^{theis} n). Not Paul's personal brother, but a brother in Christ, one whom Paul had tested and was willing to trust. It may have been Tychicus or Apollos, but we do not know.

8:23 {About Titus} (\huper Titou). There is no verb expressed. Supply "inquire." He endorses Titus up to the hilt. He is "my partner" (\koin^{theis} nos emos) and "fellow-worker" (\sunergos). {Messengers of the churches} (\apostoloi ekk^{theis} l^{theis} si^{theis} n). Apostles in the general sense of "sent ones" (from \apostell^{theis}\, to send) by the churches and responsible to the churches for the handling of the funds. {The glory of Christ} (\doxa Christou). Financial agents, please observe.

8:24 {The proof of your love} (\t^{theis} n^{theis} endeixin t^{theis} s^{theis} agap^{theis} s^{theis} hum^{theis} n). There is a word here for pastors and deacons who try to protect the churches from the denominational representatives of kingdom causes. {In the face of the churches} (\eis pros“pon t“n ekkl^si“n). A great host is pictured as watching how the Corinthians will treat these duly accredited agents in the collection (Titus and the other two brethren). It requires courage to stand by such representatives of great causes before stingy saints.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(2 Corinthians: Chapter 8)

9:1 {Superfluous} (\perisson\). All the same he does write. "The writing" (\to graphein\)) ought to be superfluous.

9:2 {I glory} (\kauch"mai\). Present middle indicative. I still am glorying, in spite of the poor performance of the Corinthians. {Hath been prepared} (\pareskeuastai\). Perfect passive indicative of \paraskeuaz"\, to make ready, "stands prepared." {Stirred up} (\^rethise\). First aorist active indicative of \erethiz"\ (from \ereth", to excite), to excite in a good sense here, in a bad sense in Col 3:21, the only N.T. examples. {Very many of them} (\tous pleionas\). The more, the majority.

9:3 {I sent} (\epempsa\). Not literary plural with this epistolary aorist as in 18,22. {That ye may be prepared} (\hina pareskeuasmenoi ^te\). Perfect passive subjunctive in the final clause, "that ye may really be prepared," "as I said" (\kath"s elegon\)) and not just say that ye are prepared. Paul's very syntax tells against them.

9:4 {If there come with me any of Macedonia and find you unprepared} (\ean elth"sin sun emoi Makedones kai heur"sin humas aparaskeuastous\). Condition of third class (undetermined, but stated as a lively possibility) with \ean\ and the second aorist active subjunctive (\elth"sin, heur"sin\), a bold and daring challenge. \Aparaskeuastos\ is a late and rare verbal adjective from \paraskeuaz"\ with \a\ privative, only here in the N.T. {Lest by any means we should be put to shame} (\m^p"s kataischunth"men h^meis\). Negative purpose with first aorist passive subjunctive of \kataischun"\ (see on 7:14) in the literary plural. {That we say not, ye} (\hina m^leg"men humeis\). A delicate syntactical turn for what he really has in mind. He does wish that they become ashamed of not paying their pledges. {Confidence} (\hupostasei\). This word, common from Aristotle on, comes from \huphist^mi\, to place under. It always has the notion of substratum or foundation as here; 11:17; Heb 1:3. The papyri give numerous examples (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary) of the word for "property" in various aspects. So in Heb 11:1 "faith is the title-deed of things hoped for." In the LXX it represents fifteen different Hebrew words.

9:5 {I thought} (\heg^sam^n). Epistolary aorist again. See Php 2:25 for the expression here. {Go before} (\proelth^sin). Second aorist active of \proerchomai. Go to you before I come. {Make up beforehand} (\prokatartis^si). Late and rare double compound verb \prokatartiz^s (in Hippocrates). Only here in N.T. See \katartiz^s in 1Co 1:10. {Your afore-promised bounty} (\t^n proep^ggelmen^n eulogian hum^n). "Blessing" (\eulogia) literally, but applied to good deeds also as well as good words (Ge 33:11). Note third use of "pro" before. He literally rubs it in that the pledge was overdue. {That the same might be ready} (\taut^n hetoim^n einai). Here the infinitive alone (\einai) is used to express purpose without \h^ste or \eis to or \pros to with the accusative of general reference (\taut^n). The feminine form \hetoim^n is regular (1Pe 1:5) though \hetoimos also occurs with the feminine like the masculine (Mt 25:10). {And not of extortion} (\kai m^h^s pleonexian). "And not as covetousness." Some offerings exhibit covetousness on the part of the giver by their very niggardliness.

9:6 {Sparingly} (\pheidomen^s). Late and rare adverb made from the present middle participle \pheidomenos from \pheidomai, to spare. It occurs in Plutarch (Alex. 25).

9:7 {He hath purposed} (\pro^ir^tai). Perfect middle indicative of \proaireomai, to choose beforehand, old verb, here only in N.T. Permanent purpose also. {Not grudgingly} (\m^ek lup^s). The use of \m^ rather than \ou shows that the imperative \poieit^s (do) or \didot^s (give) is to be supplied. Not give as out of sorrow. {Or of necessity} (\^ex anagk^s). As if it were like pulling eye-teeth. {For God loveth a cheerful giver} (\hilaron gar dot^n agapfi ho theos). Our word "hilarious" comes from \hilaron which is from \hilaos (propitious), an old and common adjective, only here in N.T.

9:8 {Is able} (\dunatei). Late verb, not found except here; 13:3; Ro 14:4. So far a Pauline word made from \dunatos, able. {All sufficiency} (\pfsan autarkeian). Old word from \autark^s (Php 4:11), common word, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 6:6). The use of this word shows Paul's acquaintance with Stoicism. Paul takes this word of Greek philosophy and applies it to the Christian view of life as independent of circumstances. But he does not accept the view of the Cynics in the avoidance of society. Note threefold use of "all" here (\en panti, pantote, pfsan\, in everything, always, all sufficiency).

9:9 {As it is written} (\kath“s gegraptai). Ps 92:3,9. Picture of the beneficent man. {He hath scattered abroad} (\eskorpisen). First aorist active indicative of \skorpiz“, to scatter, _Koin,_ verb for \skedannumi of the Attic. Probably akin to \skorpios (scorpion) from root \skarp, to cut asunder. See on ˘Mt 12:30. It is like sowing seed. {To the poor} (\tois pen^sin). Old word from \penamai, to work for one's living. Latin _penuria_ and Greek \peina“, to be hungry, are kin to it. Only N.T. instance and to be distinguished from \pt“chos, beggar, abjectly poor.

9:10 {Supplieth} (\epichor^g“n). Late _Koin,_ compound verb from \epi and \chor^ge“, just below (1Pe 4:11). \Chor^gos is old word for leader of a chorus (\choros, h^geomai) or chorus-leader. The verb means to furnish a chorus at one's own expense, then to supply in general. N.T. examples of \epichor^ge“ are 2Co 9:10; Ga 3:15; Col 2:19; 2Pe 1:5. {Shall multiply} (\pl^thunei). Future active indicative of \pl^thun“, old verb from \pl^thus, fulness. Cf. Ac 6:1. {Fruits} (\gen^mata). Correct reading (from \ginomai\, to become) and not \genn^mata (from \genna“\, to beget). This spelling is supported by LXX where Thackeray shows that \gen^mata in LXX refers to vegetables and \genn^mata to animals. The papyri support this distinction (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_).

9:11 {Enriched} (\ploutizomenoi). Present passive participle of \ploutiz“ for which see on ˘1Co 1:5; 2Co 6:10 only other N.T. examples. {Liberality} (\haplot^ta). See on ˘8:2. Anacoluthon with nominative participle too far from \perisseu^te for agreement. More like the independent use of the participle.

9:12 {Service} (\leitourgias). Old word from \le“s (people, laos), \leitos like \d^mosios, public, and \ergon, work. So public service either in worship to God (Lu 1:23) or benefaction to others (2Co 9:12; Php 2:30). Our word liturgy is this word. {Filleth up} (\estin prosanapl^rousa). Present active periphrastic indicative of double compound verb \prosanapl^ro“, _Koin,_ word, here and 11:9 only in N.T., to fill up by adding to. The Corinthians simply added to the total from others. {Unto God} (\t“i the“i). Dative case and with a certain suddenness as at close of verse 11, really a parenthesis between in the somewhat tangled sentence.

9:13 {Seeing that they glorify God} (\doxazontes ton theon\). Anacoluthon again. The nominative participle used independently like \ploutizomenoi\ in verse 11. {Obedience} (\hupotag̃i\). Late and rare word from \hupotass̃\, to subject, middle to obey. Only in Paul in N.T. {Of your confession} (\t̃s homologias hum̃n\). Old word from \homologẽ\ (\homologos, homou, leg̃\), to say together. It is either to profess (Latin _profiteor_, to declare openly) or to confess (Latin _confiteor_, to declare fully, to say the same thing as another). Both confess and profess are used to translate the verb and each idea is present in the substantive. Only the context can decide. Actions speak louder than words. The brethren in Jerusalem will know by this collection that Gentiles make as good Christians as Jews. {For the liberality of your contribution} (\haplot̃ti t̃s koiñnias\). This is the point that matters just now. Paul drives it home. On this use of \koiñnia\ see on 8:4.

9:14 {While they themselves long after you} (\aut̃n epipothount̃n\). Genitive absolute of present active participle of \epipothẽ\ (5:2). {In you} (\eph' humin\). Upon you.

9:15 {Thanks be to God} (\charis t̃i thẽi\). Third time (verses 11,12,15). {For his unspeakable gift} (\epi t̃i anekdĩg̃t̃i autou d̃refi\). One of Paul's gems flashed out after the somewhat tangled sentence (verses 10-14) like a gleam of light that clears the air. Words fail Paul to describe the gift of Christ to and for us. He may have coined this word as it is not found elsewhere except in ecclesiastical writers save as a variant (B L) for \adĩg̃ton\ in Aristeas 99 (\thaumasmon anekdĩg̃ton\, "wonder beyond description," Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). See similar word in Ro 11:33 (\anexichniasta\, unsearchable) and Eph 3:8.

10:1 {Now I Paul myself} (\Autos de eg“ Paulos\). Cf. Ga 5:2. Paul now turns to the third part of the epistle in chapters 10-13 in which he vigorously defends himself against the accusations of the stubborn minority of Judaizers in Corinth. Great ministers of Christ through the ages have had to pass through fiery trials like these. Paul has shown the way for us all. He speaks of himself now plainly, but under compulsion, as is clear. It may be that at this point he took the pen from the amanuensis and wrote himself as in Ga 6:11. {By the meekness and gentleness of Christ} (\dia tes praut[^]tos kai epieikias tou Christou\). This appeal shows (Plummer) that Paul had spoken to the Corinthians about the character of Christ. Jesus claimed meekness for himself (Mt 11:29) and felicitated the meek (Mt 5:5) and he exemplified it abundantly (Lu 23:34). See on Mt 5:15; 1Co 4:21 for this great word that has worn thin with us. Plutarch combines \praut[^]s\ with \epieikia\ as Paul does here. Matthew Arnold suggested "sweet reasonableness" for \epieikeia\ in Plato, Aristotle, Plutarch. It is in the N.T. only here and Ac 24:4 (\to epieikes\ in Php 4:5). In Greek Ethics the equitable man was called \epieik[^]s\, a man who does not press for the last farthing of his rights (Bernard). {Lowly among you} (\tapeinos en humin\). The bad use of \tapeinos\, the old use, but here alone in N.T. in that meaning. Socrates and Aristotle used it for littleness of soul. Probably Paul here is quoting one of the sneers of his traducers in Corinth about his humble conduct while with them (1Co 2:23; 2Co 7:6) and his boldness (\ap“n tharr“\ when away (1Co 7:16). "It was easy to satirize and misrepresent a depression of spirits, a humility of demeanour, which were either the direct results of some bodily affliction, or which the consciousness of this affliction had rendered habitual" (Farrar). The words stung Paul to the quick.

10:2 {I beseech} (\deomai\). So here, but \parakal“\ in verse 1. Perhaps, "I beg" suits the new turn here. {That I may not when present show courage} (\to m[^] par“n tharr[^]sai\). Articular infinitive (aorist active of \tharre“) in the accusative case with negative \m[^]\ the direct object of \deomai\. Literally, "I beg the not when present (\par“n\ nominative present participle agreeing with subject of \tharr“ in spite of being in the accusative infinitive clause, \to m^ tharr^sai\) showing courage." The example of humility in Christ makes Paul drop "from magisterial exhortation to earnest entreaty" (Plummer). {As if we walked according to the flesh} (\h“s kata sarka peripatountas). Another sneering charge as made plain by the use of \h“s\ with the participle for the alleged reason.

10:3 {In the flesh} (\en sarki). But that is a very different thing from walking \kata sarka\ according to the standards of the flesh as his enemies charged. It is easy enough to make insinuations. {We war} (\strateuometha). Literary plural again after \logizomai\ in verse 2. Old word to lead an army (\stratos). In N.T. only in the middle as here. Paul admits that he fights, but only the devil and his agents even if wearing the livery of heaven. Paul knew the Roman army well. He knows how to use the military metaphor.

10:4 {The weapons of our warfare} (\ta hopla t^s strateias). \Strateia\ (old word, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 1:18) is {campaign} and not army as some MSS. have (\stratia). But both \strateia\ and \stratia\ occur in the papyri for the same word (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 181f.). For \hopla\ (Latin _arma_) see on 6:7; Rom 6:13; 13:12. {Of the flesh} (\sarkika). See on 1Co 3:3; 2Co 1:12. They had accused him of artifices and craft. {Mighty before God} (\dunata t“i the“i). This dative of personal interest (ethical dative) can be like \asteios t“i the“i\ (Ac 7:20), in God's eyes, as it looks to God. {To the casting down of strongholds} (\pros kathairesin ochur“mat“n). \Kathairesis\ is old word from \kathaire“, to take down, to tear down walls and buildings. Carries on the military metaphor. \Ochur“ma\ is old word, common in the Apocrypha, from \ochuro“, to fortify, and that from \ochuros\ (from \ech“, to hold fast). Nowhere else in N.T. In Cilicia the Romans had to tear down many rocky forts in their attacks on the pirates.

10:5 {Casting down imaginations} (\logismous kathairountes). The same military figure (\kathairesis) and the present active participle agreeing with \strateuometha\ in verse 3 (verse 4 a parenthesis). The reasonings or imaginations (\logismous, old word from \logizomai, to reckon, only here in N.T. and Ro 2:15) are treated as forts or citadels to be conquered. {Every high thing that is exalted} (\pan hups“ma epairomenon). Same metaphor. \Hups“ma\ from \hupso“\ is late _Koin,_ word (in LXX, Plutarch, Philo, papyri) for height and that figure carried on by \epairomenon\. Paul aims to pull down the top-most perch of audacity in their reasonings against the knowledge of God. We need Paul's skill and courage today. {Bringing every thought into captivity} (\aichmal“tizontes pfn no^ma\). Present active participle of \aichmal“tiz“, common _Koin,_ verb from \aichmal“tos\, captive in war (\aichm^, spear, \hal“tos\ verbal of \haliskomai\, to be taken). See on ^Lu 21:24. Paul is the most daring of thinkers, but he lays all his thoughts at the feet of Jesus. For \no^ma\ (device) see on ^2:11. {To the obedience of Christ} (\eis t^ n hupako^ n tou Christou\). Objective genitive, "to the obedience unto Christ." That is Paul's conception of intellectual liberty, freedom in Christ. Deissmann (_St. Paul_ , p. 141) calls this "the mystic genitive."

10:6 {Being in readiness} (\en hetoim“i echontes\). This very idiom occurs in Polybius, Philo, etc. "Holding in readiness." In 12:14 we have \hetoim“s ech“\ for the same idea (adverb \hetoim“s\). {Disobedience} (\parako^ n\). Rare word (Plato, papyri) hearing amiss (aside), failing to hear, refusing to heed (cf. Mt 18:17 for same idea in parakou“). In N.T. only here; Ro 5:19; Heb 2:2. In contrast with \hupako^ \ (obedience) rather than the common \apeithia\ (Ro 11:30,32). {When your obedience shall be fulfilled} (\hotan pl^ r“ th^ i hum“ n h^ hupako^ \). Indefinite temporal clause with \hotan\ and first aorist passive subjunctive. Paul expects that the whole church will become obedient to Christ's will soon as came true.

10:7 {Ye look} (\Blepete\). Either indicative or imperative. Either makes sense but the indicative the best sense. {Before your face} (\kata pros“pon\). They ought to look below the surface. If it is imperative, they should see the facts. {That he is Christ's} (\Christou einai\). Predicate genitive in indirect discourse).

10:8 {Somewhat abundantly} (\perissoteron ti\). Comparative, "somewhat more abundantly" than I have, in order to show that he is as true a minister of Christ as his accusers are. Concessive (conditional) clause of third class. For \ean te\ see Ro 14:8. {I shall not be put to shame} (\ouk aischunth^ somai\). As a convicted impostor or pretentious boaster (Plummer). First future passive, singular number (not literary plural as in verse 7).

10:9 {As if I would terrify you by my letters} (\h“s an ekphobein humas dia t“n epistol“n\). This use of \h“s an\ with the infinitive is seen in the papyri (Moulton, _Prolegomena_, p. 167) and it is not \an\ in the apodosis (Robertson, _Grammar_, pp. 974, 1040). The active of this old compound verb means to frighten, to terrify. Here only in N.T. It is common in the LXX (Job 7:14; 33:16). Note plural (letters) here and cf. 1Co 5:9; 2Co 2:3.

10:10 {They say} (\phasin\). Reading of B old Latin Vulgate, but Westcott and Hort prefer \ph^sin\ (says one, the leader). This charge Paul quotes directly. {Weighty and strong} (\bareiai kai ischurai\). These adjectives can be uncomplimentary and mean "severe and violent" instead of "impressive and vigorous." The adjectives bear either sense. {His bodily presence} (\h^ parousia tou s“matos\). This certainly is uncomplimentary. "The presence of his body." It seems clear that Paul did not have a commanding appearance like that of Barnabas (Ac 14:12). He had some physical defect of the eyes (Ga 4:14) and a thorn in the flesh (2Co 12:7). In the second century _Acts of Paul and Thecla_ he is pictured as small, short, bow-legged, with eye-brows knit together, and an aquiline nose. A forgery of the fourth century in the name of Lucian describes Paul as "the bald-headed, hook-nosed Galilean." However that may be, his accusers sneered at his personal appearance as "weak" (\asthen^s\). {His speech of no account} (\ho logos exouthen^menos\). Perfect passive participle of \exouthene“, to treat as nothing (cf. 1Co 1:28). The Corinthians (some of them) cared more for the brilliant eloquence of Apollos and did not find Paul a trained rhetorician (1Co 1:17; 2:1,4; 2Co 11:6). He made different impressions on different people. "Seldom has any one been at once so ardently hated and so passionately loved as St. Paul" (Deissmann, _St. Paul_, p. 70). "At one time he seemed like a man, and at another he seemed like an angel" (_Acts of Paul and Thecla_). He spoke like a god at Lystra (Ac 14:8-12), but Eutychus went to sleep on him (Ac 20:9). Evidently Paul winced under this biting criticism of his looks and speech.

10:11 {What we are} (\hoioi esmen\). Rather, "what sort" (\hoioi\), not \ho\ (what) nor \hoi\ (who). Literary plural. \Hoios\ is qualitative just as \toioutoi\ (such). Paul's quality in his letters when absent (\apontes\) and in his deeds when present (\parontes\) is precisely the same.

10:12 {To number or compare ourselves} (\enkrinai ^ sunkrinai\). Paronomasia here, play on the two words. \Enkrinai\ is first aorist active infinitive of old verb, but here only in N.T., to judge among, to judge one as worthy to be numbered among as here. The second verb \sunkrinai\ (first aorist active infinitive of \sunkrin, old verb, in N.T. only here and 1Co 2:13) originally meant to combine as in 1Co 2:13 (which see), but here it has the sense of "compare" not found in the old Greek. The papyri use it to mean to decide. Plummer suggests "to pair and compare" for the play on the words here. {Measuring themselves by themselves} (\en heautois heautous metrountes\). Or "in themselves." Keenest sarcasm. Setting themselves up as the standards of orthodoxy these Judaizers always measure up to the standard while Paul falls short. {Comparing themselves with themselves} (\sunkrinontes heautous heautois\). Associate instrumental case \heautois\ after \sunkrinontes\ (verb just explained). Paul is not keen to fall into the trap set for him. {Are without understanding} (\ou sunifsin\). The regular form for present active indicative third plural of \suni^mi\, to comprehend, to grasp. Some MSS. have the late form \suniousin\ (omega form \suni^i). It is a hard thing to see, but it is true. These men do not see their own picture so obvious to others (Eph 5:17; 1Ti 1:7). Cf. Mr 8:17.

10:13 {Beyond our measure} (\eis ta ametra\). "Into the unmeasured things," "the illimitable." Old word, here only in N.T. {Of the province} (\tou kanonos\). Old word (\kanna\ like Hebrew) a reed, a measuring rod. Numerous papyri examples for measuring rod and rules (our word canon). Only twice in N.T., here (also verse 15,16) and Ga 6:16 (rule to walk by). {To reach even unto you} (\ephikesthai achri kai hum^n\). Second aorist middle infinitive of \ephekneomai\, old verb, only here and verse 14 in N.T. Paul's measuring-rod extends to Corinth.

10:14 {We stretch not ourselves overmuch} (\ou huperekteinomen heautous\). Apparently Paul made this double compound verb to express his full meaning (only in Gregory Nazianzen afterwards). "We do not stretch ourselves out beyond our rights." {We came even as far as unto you} (\achri kai hum^n ephthasamen\). First aorist active indicative of \phthan^i\, to come before, to precede, the original idea which is retained in Mt 12:28 (Lu 11:20) and may be so here. If so, it means "We were the first to come to you" (which is true, Ac 18:1-18).

10:15 {In other men's labours} (\en allotriois kopois).
\Allotrios\ means belonging to another as in Lu 16:12. Paul founded the church in Corinth. {As your faith groweth} (\auxanomen^s t^s piste^s). Genitive absolute of the present passive participle of \auxan^a\, to grow. {We shall be magnified} (\megalunth^{nai}). First aorist passive infinitive of \megalun^a\, old verb (Lu 1:46) to make great (cf. Php 1:20 of Christ).
Indirect discourse after \elpida\ (hope) with the construction of \elpiz^a\, to hope.

10:16 {Even unto the parts beyond you} (\eis ta huperekeina humⁿ). Compound adverb (\huper, ekeina\, beyond those places) used as preposition. Found only here and in ecclesiastical writers. {Things ready to our hand} (\ta hetoima). He had a plenty besides that he could use.

10:17 Paul quotes Pr 27:2.

10:18 {Is approved} (\dokimos). Accepted (from \dechomai) by the Lord. The Lord accepts his own recommendation (\sunist^{sin}, see on 2Co 3:1f.).

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

11:1 {Would that ye could bear with me} (\ophelon aneichesthe mou\). _Koin,_ way of expressing a wish about the present, \ophelon\ (as a conjunction, really second aorist active indicative of \opheil“\ without augment) and the imperfect indicative instead of \eithe\ or \ei gar\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1003). Cf. Re 3:15. See Ga 5:12 for future indicative with \ophelon\ and 1Co 4:8 for aorist. \Mou\ is ablative case after \aneichesthe\ (direct middle, hold yourselves back from me). There is a touch of irony here. {Bear with me} (\anechesthe mou\). Either imperative middle or present middle indicative (ye do bear with me). Same form. {In a little foolishness} (\mikron ti aphrosun^s\). Accusative of general reference (\mikron ti\). "Some little foolishness" (from \aphr“n\, foolish). Old word only in this chapter in N.T.

11:2 {With a godly jealousy} (\theou z^l“i\). Instrumental case of \z^los\. With a jealousy of God. {I espoused} (\h^rmosam^n\). First aorist middle indicative of \harmoz“\, old verb to join, to fit together (from \harmos\, joint). Common for betrothed, though only here in N.T. The middle voice indicates Paul's interest in the matter. Paul treats the Corinthians as his bride.

11:3 {The serpent beguiled Eve} (\ho ophis ex^pat^sen Heuan\). Paul's only mention of the serpent in Eden. The compound \exapata“\ means to deceive completely. {Lest by any means} (\m^p“s\). Common conjunction after verbs of fearing. {Corrupted} (\phthar^i\). Second aorist passive subjunctive with \m^p“s\ of \phtheir“\, to corrupt.

11:4 {Another Jesus} (\allon I^soun\). Not necessarily a different Jesus, but any other "Jesus" is a rival and so wrong. That would deny the identity. {A different spirit} (\pneuma heteron\). This is the obvious meaning of \heteron\ in distinction from \allon\ as seen in Ac 4:12; Ga 1:6f. But this distinction in nature or kind is not always to be insisted on. {A different gospel} (\euaggelion heteron\). Similar use of \heteron\. {Ye do well to bear with him} (\kal“s anechesthe\). Ironical turn again. "Well do you hold yourselves back from him"

(the coming one, whoever he is). Some MSS. have the imperfect \aneichesthe\ (did bear with).

11:5 {That I am not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles} (\m^den huster^kenai t^"n huperlian apostol^"n\). Perfect active infinitive of \hustere^"\, old verb to fall short with the ablative case. The rare compound adverb \huperlian\ (possibly in use in the vernacular) is probably ironical also, "the super apostles" as these Judaizers set themselves up to be. "The extra-super apostles" (Farrar). Also in 12:11. He is not referring to the pillar-apostles of Ga 2:9.

11:6 {Rude in speech} (\idi^"t^s t^"i log^"i\). Locative case with \idi^"t^s\ for which word see on ^Ac 4:13; 1Co 14:16,23,24. The Greeks regarded a man as \idi^"t^s\ who just attended to his own affairs (\ta idia\) and took no part in public life. Paul admits that he is not a professional orator (cf. 10:10), but denies that he is unskilled in knowledge (\all' ou t^"i gn^"sei\). {Among all men} (\en pfsin\). He has made his mastery of the things of Christ plain among all men. He knew his subject.

11:7 {In abasing myself} (\emauton tapein^"n\). Humbling myself by making tents for a living while preaching in Corinth. He is ironical still about "doing a sin" (\hamartian epoi^"sa\). {For nought} (\d^"rean\). _Gratis_. Accusative of general reference, common adverb. It amounts to sarcasm to ask if he did a sin in preaching the gospel free of expense to them "that ye may be exalted."

11:8 {I robbed} (\esul^"sa\). Old verb to despoil, strip arms from a slain foe, only here in N.T. He allowed other churches to do more than their share. {Taking wages} (\lab^"n ops^"nion\). For \ops^"nion\ see on ^1Co 9:7; Ro 6:17. He got his "rations" from other churches, not from Corinth while there.

11:9 {I was not a burden to any man} (\ou katenark^"sa outhenos\). First aorist active indicative of \katanarka^"\. Jerome calls this word one of Paul's _cilicisms_ which he brought from Cilicia. But the word occurs in Hippocrates for growing quite stiff and may be a medical term in popular use. \Narka^"\ means to become numb, torpid, and so a burden. It is only here and 12:13f. Paul "did not benumb the Corinthians by his demand for pecuniary aid" (Vincent). {From being burdensome} (\abar^"\). Old adjective, free from weight or light (\a\ privative and \baros\, weight) . See on 1Th 2:9 for same idea. Paul kept himself independent.

11:10 {No man shall stop me of this glorying} (\h^kauch^sis haut^ ou phrag^setai eis eme). More exactly, "This glorying shall not be fenced in as regards me." Second future passive of \phrass^, to fence in, to stop, to block in. Old verb, only here in N.T. {In the regions of Achaia} (\en tois klimasin t^s Achaias). \Klima\ from \klin^, to incline, is _Koin_, word for declivity slope, region (our climate). See chapter 1Co 9 for Paul's boast about preaching the gospel without cost to them.

11:11 {God knoweth} (\ho theos oiden). Whether they do or not. He knows that God understands his motives.

11:12 {That I may cut off occasion} (\hina ekkops^ t^ n aphorm^ n). Purpose clause with \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \ekkopt^, old verb to cut out or off (Mt 3:10; 5:30). See 2Co 5:12 for \aphorm^ n\ {From them which desire an occasion} (\t^ n thelont^ n aphorm^ n). Ablative case after \ekkops^\. There are always some hunting for occasions to start something against preachers. {They may be found} (\heureth^ sin). First aorist passive subjunctive of \heurisk^, to find with final conjunction \hina\.

11:13 {False apostles} (\pseudapostoloi). From \pseud^s, false, and \apostolos\. Paul apparently made this word (cf. Re 2:2). In verse 26 we have \pseudadelphos, a word of like formation (Ga 2:4). See also \pseudochristoi\ and \pseudoproph^tai\ in Mr 13:22. {Deceitful} (\dolioi). Old word from \dolos\ (lure, snare), only here in N.T. (cf. Ro 16:18). {Fashioning themselves} (\metasch^matizomenoi). Present middle (direct) participle of the old verb \metasch^matiz^ for which see on 1Co 4:6. Masquerading as apostles of Christ by putting on the outward habiliments, posing as ministers of Christ ("gentlemen of the cloth," nothing but cloth). Paul plays with this verb in verses 13,14,15.

11:14 {An angel of light} (\aggelon ph^tos). The prince of darkness puts on the garb of light and sets the fashion for his followers in the masquerade to deceive the saints. "Like master like man." Cf. 2:11; Ga 1:8. This terrible portrayal reveals the depth of Paul's feelings about the conduct of the Judaizing leaders in Corinth. In Ga 2:4 he terms those in Jerusalem "false brethren."

11:15 {As ministers of righteousness} (\h“s diakonoi dikaiosun^s\). Jesus (Joh 10:1-21) terms these false shepherds thieves and robbers. It is a tragedy to see men in the livery of heaven serve the devil.

11:16 {Let no man think me foolish} (\m^{tis me doxⁱ aphrona einai\). Usual construction in a negative prohibition with \m^{\ and the aorist subjunctive \doxⁱ\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 933). {But if ye do} (\ei de m^{ge}\). Literally, "But if not at least (or otherwise)," that is, If you do think me foolish. {Yet as foolish} (\kan h“s aphrona\). "Even if as foolish." Paul feels compelled to boast of his career and work as an apostle of Christ after the terrible picture just drawn of the Judaizers. He feels greatly embarrassed in doing it. Some men can do it with complete composure (_sang froid_).}}

11:17 {Not after the Lord} (\ou kata Kurion\). Not after the example of the Lord. He had appealed to the example of Christ in 10:1 (the meekness and gentleness of Christ). Paul's conduct here, he admits, is not in keeping with that. But circumstances force him on.

11:18 {After the flesh} (\kata sarka\). It is \kata sarka\ not \kata Kurion\. {I also} (\kag“\). But he knows that it is a bit of foolishness and not like Christ.

11:19 {Gladly} (\h^{de}“s\). Irony again. Cf. \kalos\ in 11:4 (Mr 7:9). So as to \phronimoi ontes\ (being wise).

11:20 {For ye bear with a man} (\anechesthe gar\). " You tolerate tyranny, extortion, craftiness, arrogance, violence, and insult" (Plummer). Sarcasm that cut to the bone. Note the verb with each of the five conditional clauses (enslaves, devours, takes captive, exalteth himself, smites on the face). The climax of insult, smiting on the face.

11:21 {By way of disparagement} (\kata atimian\). Intense irony. Cf. 6:8. {As though} (\h“s hoti\). Presented as the charge of another. "They more than tolerate those who trample on them while they criticize as 'weak' one who shows them great consideration" (Plummer). After these prolonged explanations Paul "changes his tone from irony to direct and masterful assertion" (Bernard). {I am bold also} (\tolm“ kag“\). Real courage. Cf. 10:2,12.

11:22 {So am I} (\kag“\). This is his triumphant refrain with each challenge.

11:23 {As one beside himself} (\paraphron“n\). Present active participle of \paraphrone“\. Old verb from \paraphr“n\ (\para, phr^{\hat{n}}\), beside one's wits. Only here in N.T. Such open boasting is out of accord with Paul's spirit and habit. {I more} (\huper eg“\). This adverbial use of \huper\ appears in ancient Greek (Euripides). It has no effect on \eg“\, not "more than I," but "I more than they." He claims superiority now to these "superextra apostles." {More abundant} (\perissoter“s\). See on 7:15. No verbs with these clauses, but they are clear. {In prisons} (\en phulakais\). Plural also in 6:5. Clement of Rome (_Cor_. V.) says that Paul was imprisoned seven times. We know of only five (Philippi, Jerusalem, Caesarea, twice in Rome), and only one before II Corinthians (Philippi). But Luke does not tell them all nor does Paul. Had he been in prison in Ephesus? So many think and it is possible as we have seen. {Above measure} (\hyperballont“s\). Old adverb from the participle \hyperballont“n\ (\hyperball“\, to hurl beyond). Here only in N.T. {In deaths oft} (\en thanatois pollakis\). He had nearly lost his life, as we know, many times (1:9f.; 4:11).

11:24 {Five times received I forty stripes save one} (\pentakis tesserakonta para mian elabon\). The Acts and the Epistles are silent about these Jewish floggings (Mt 27:36). See on 7:Lu 12:47 for omission of \pl^gas\ (stripes). Thirty-nine lashes was the rule for fear of a miscount (De 25:1-3). Cf. Josephus (_Ant_. IV. 8, 1, 21).

11:25 {Thrice was I beaten with rods} (\tris errabdisth^{\hat{n}}\). Roman (Gentile) punishment. It was forbidden to Roman citizens by the _Lex Porcia_, but Paul endured it in Philippi (Ac 16:23,37), the only one of the three named in Acts. First aorist passive of \rabdiz“\, from \rabdōs\, rod, _Koin_, word, in N.T. only here and Ac 16:22 which see. {Once was I stoned} (\hapax elithasth^{\hat{n}}\). Once for all \hapax\ means. At Lystra (Ac 14:5-19). On \lithaz“\ _Koin_, verb from \lithos\, see on 7:Ac 5:26. {Thrice I suffered shipwreck} (\tris enauag^{\hat{s}}a\). First aorist active of \nauage“\, from \nauagos\, shipwrecked (\naus\, ship, agnumi\, to break). Old and common verb, in N.T. only here and 1Ti 1:19. We know nothing of these. The one told in Ac 27 was much later. What a pity that we have no data for all these varied experiences of Paul. {Night and day} (\nuchth^meron) Rare word. Papyri give \nukt^mar with the same idea (night-day). {Have I been in the deep} (\en t^i buth^i pepoi^ka). Vivid dramatic perfect active indicative of \poie^\", "I have done a night and day in the deep." The memory of it survives like a nightmare. \Buthos is old word (only here in N.T.) for bottom, depth of the sea, then the sea itself. Paul does not mean that he was a night and day under the water, not a Jonah experience, only that he was far out at sea and shipwrecked. This was one of the three shipwrecks-already named.

11:26 {In journeyings} (\hodoiporiais). Locative case of old word, only here in N.T. and Joh 4:6, from \hodoiporos, wayfarer. {In perils} (\kindunois). Locative case of \kindunos, old word for danger or peril. In N.T. only this verse and Ro 8:35. The repetition here is very effective without the preposition \en (in) and without conjunctions (asyndeton). They are in contrasted pairs. The rivers of Asia Minor are still subject to sudden swellings from floods in the mountains. Cicero and Pompey won fame fighting the Cilician pirates and robbers (note \l^ist^\"n\, not \klept^\"n\, thieves, brigands or bandits on which see Mt 26:55). The Jewish perils (\ek genous\, from my race) can be illustrated in Ac 9:23,29; 13:50; 14:5; 17:5,13; 18:12; 23:12; 24:27, and they were all perils in the city also. Perils from the Gentiles (\ex ethn^\"n) we know in Philippi (Ac 16:20) and in Ephesus (Ac 19:23f.). Travel in the mountains and in the wilderness was perilous in spite of the great Roman highways. {Among false brethren} (\en pseudadelphois). Chapters 2Co 10; 11 throw a lurid light on this aspect of the subject.

11:27 {In labour and travail} (\kop^i kai mochth^i). Both old words for severe work, combined here as in 1Th 2:9; 2Th 3:8, "by toil and moil" (Plummer). The rest of the list is like the items in 2Co 6:4ff. {In cold} (\en psuchei). Old word from \psuch^\", to cool by blowing. See Ac 28:2. See the picture of the aged Paul later in the Roman dungeon (2Ti 4:9-18).

11:28 {Besides those things that are without} (\ch^ris t^\"n parektos). Probably, "apart from those things beside these just mentioned." Surely no man ever found glory in such a peck of troubles as Paul has here recounted. His list should shame us all today who are disposed to find fault with our lot. {That which presseth upon me daily} (\h^ epistasis moi h^ kath' h^meran). For this vivid word \epistasis see Ac 24:12, the only other place in the N.T. where it occurs. It is like the rush of a mob upon Paul. {Anxiety for all the churches} (\h^merimna pas^“n t^“n ekkl^si^“n\). Objective genitive after \merimna\ (distractions in different directions, from \meriz^“) for which word see on ^Mt 13:22. Paul had the shepherd heart. As apostle to the Gentiles he had founded most of these churches.

11:29 {I burn} (\puroumai\). Present passive indicative of \puro^“\, old verb to inflame (from \pur\, fire). When a brother stumbles, Paul is set on fire with grief.

11:30 {The things that concern my weakness} (\ta t^s astheneias mou\). Like the list above.

11:31 {I am not lying} (\ou pseudomai\). The list seems so absurd and foolish that Paul takes solemn oath about it (cf. 1:23). For the doxology see Ro 1:25; 9:5.

11:32 {The governor under Aretas} (\ho ethnarch^s Hareta\). How it came to pass that Damascus, ruled by the Romans after B.C. 65, came at this time to be under the rule of Aretas, fourth of the name, King of the Nabatheans (II Macc. 5:8), we do not know. There is an absence of Roman coins in Damascus from A.D. 34 to 62. It is suggested (Plummer) that Caligula, to mark his dislike for Antipas, gave Damascus to Aretas (enemy of Antipas). {Guarded} (\ephrourei\). Imperfect active of \phroure^“\, old verb (from \phrouros\, a guard) to guard by posting sentries. In Ac 9:24 we read that the Jews kept watch to seize Paul, but there is no conflict as they cooperated with the guard set by Aretas at their request. {To seize} (\piasai\). Doric first aorist active infinitive of \piez^“\ (Lu 6:38) for which see on ^Ac 3:7.

11:33 {Through a window} (\dia thuridos\). For this late word see on ^Ac 20:9, the only N.T. example. {Was I let down} (\echalasth^“n\). First aorist passive of \chala^“\, the very word used by Luke in Ac 9:25. {In a basket} (\en sargan^i\). Old word for rope basket whereas Luke (Ac 9:25) has \en sphuridi\ (the word for the feeding of the 4,000 while \kophinos\ is the one for the 5,000). This was a humiliating experience for Paul in this oldest city of the world whither he had started as a conqueror over the despised Christians.

12:1 {I must needs glory} (\kauchasthai dei\). This is the reading of B L Latin Syriac, but Aleph D Bohairic have \de\ while K M read \d^. The first is probably correct. He must go on with the glorying already begun, foolish as it is, though it is not expedient (\ou sumpheron\). {Visions} (\optasias\). Late word from \optaz^\. See on ^Lu 1:22; Ac 26:19. {Revelations of the Lord} (\apokalupseis Kuriou\). Unveilings (from \apokalupt^\. as in Re 1:1). See on ^2Th 1:7; 1Co 1:7; 14:26. Paul had both repeated visions of Christ (Ac 9:3; 16:9; 18:9; 22:17; 27:23f.) and revelations. He claimed to speak by direct revelation (1Co 11:23; 15:3; Ga 1:12; Eph 3:3, etc.).

12:2 {I know a man} (\oida anthr^pon\). Paul singles out one incident of ecstasy in his own experience that he declines to describe. He alludes to it in this indirect way as if it were some other personality. {Fourteen years ago} (\pro et^n dekatessar^n\). Idiomatic way of putting it, the preposition \pro\ (before) before the date (Robertson, _Grammar, p. 621f.) as in Joh 12:1. The date was probably while Paul was at Tarsus (Ac 9:30; 11:25). We have no details of that period. {Caught up} (\harpagenta\). Second aorist passive participle of \harpaz^\. to seize (see on Mt 11:12). {Even to the third heaven} (\he^s tritou ouranou\). It is unlikely that Paul alludes to the idea of seven heavens held by some Jews (_Test. of the Twelve Pat._, Levi ii. iii.). He seems to mean the highest heaven where God is (Plummer).

12:3 {I do not know} (\ouk oida\). Paul declines to pass on his precise condition in this trance. We had best leave it as he has told it.

12:4 {Into Paradise} (\eis paradeison\). See on ^Lu 23:43 for this interesting word. Paul apparently uses paradise as the equivalent of the third heaven in verse 2. Some Jews (_Book of the Secrets of Enoch_, chapter viii) make Paradise in the third heaven. The rabbis had various ideas (two heavens, three, seven). We need not commit Paul to any "celestial gradation" (Vincent). {Unspeakable words} (\arr^ta r^mata\). Old verbal adjective (\a\ privative, |r^ˆtos| from |re^ˆ|), only here in N.T. {Not lawful} (|ouk exon|). Copula |estin| omitted. Hence Paul does {not} give these words.

12:5 {But on mine own behalf} (|huper de emautou|). As if there were two Pauls. In a sense there were. He will only glory in the things mentioned above, the things of his weaknesses (11:30).

12:6 {I shall not be foolish} (|ouk esomai aphr^ˆn|). Apparent contradiction to 11:1,16. But he is here speaking of the Paul "caught up" in case he should tell the things heard (condition of the third class, |ean| and first aorist subjunctive |thel^ˆs^ˆ|). {Of me} (|eis eme|). To my credit, almost like dative (cf. |en emoi| in 1Co 14:11).

12:7 {By reason of the exceeding greatness} (|t^ˆi huperbol^ˆi|). Instrumental case, "by the excess." {That I should not be exalted overmuch} (|hina m^ˆ huperair^ˆmai|). Present passive subjunctive in final clause of |huperair^ˆ|, old verb to lift up beyond, only here in N.T. This clause is repeated at the end of the sentence. {A thorn in the flesh} (|skolops t^ˆi sarki|). This old word is used for splinter, stake, thorn. In the papyri and inscriptions examples occur both for splinter and thorn as the meaning. In the LXX it is usually thorn. The case of |t^ˆi sarki| can be either locative (in) or dative (for). What was it? Certainly it was some physical malady that persisted. All sorts of theories are held (malaria, eye-trouble, epilepsy, insomnia, migraine or sick-headache, etc.). It is a blessing to the rest of us that we do not know the particular affliction that so beset Paul. Each of us has some such splinter or thorn in the flesh, perhaps several at once. {Messenger of Satan} (|aggelos Satana|). Angel of Satan, the affliction personified. {Buffet} (|kolaphiz^ˆi|). See on Mt 26:67; 1Co 4:11 for this late and rare word from |kolaphos|, fist. The messenger of Satan kept slapping Paul in the face and Paul now sees that it was God's will for it to be so.

12:8 {Concerning this thing} (|huper toutou|). More likely, "concerning this messenger of Satan." {That it might depart from me} (|hina apost^ˆi aph' emou|). Second aorist active (intransitive) subjunctive of |aphist^ˆmi| in final clause, "that he stand off from me for good."

12:9 {He hath said} (|eir^ˆken|). Perfect active indicative, as if a final word. Paul probably still has the thorn in his flesh and needs this word of Christ. {Is sufficient} (\arkei\). Old word of rich meaning, perhaps kin to Latin _arceo_, to ward off against danger. Christ's grace suffices and abides. {Is perfected} (\teleitai\). Present passive indicative of \tele“\, to finish. It is linear in idea. Power is continually increased as the weakness grows. See Php 4:13 for this same noble conception. The human weakness opens the way for more of Christ's power and grace. {Most gladly rather} (\h^dista mallon\). Two adverbs, one superlative (\h^dista\), one comparative (\mallon\). "Rather" than ask any more (thrice already) for the removal of the thorn or splinter "most gladly will I glory in my weaknesses." Slowly Paul had learned this supreme lesson, but it will never leave him (Ro 5:2; 2Ti 4:6-8). {May rest upon me} (\episk^h^s^i ep' eme\). Late and rare verb in first aorist active subjunctive with \hina\ (final clause), to fix a tent upon, here upon Paul himself by a bold metaphor, as if the Shechinah of the Lord was overshadowing him (cf. Lu 9:34), the power (\dunamis\) of the Lord Jesus.

12:10 {Wherefore I take pleasure} (\dio eudok“\). For this noble word see on ^Mt 3:17; 2Co 5:8. The enemies of Paul will have a hard time now in making Paul unhappy by persecutions even unto death (Php 1:20-26). He is not courting martyrdom, but he does not fear it or anything that is "for Christ's sake" (\huper Christou\). {For when} (\hotan gar\). "For whenever," indefinite time. {Then I am strong} (\tote dunatos eimi\). At that very time, but not in myself, but in the fresh access of power from Christ for the emergency.

12:11 {I am become foolish} (\gegona aphr^h^“n\). Perfect active indicative of \ginomai\. In spite of what he said in verse 6 that he would not be foolish if he gloried in the other Paul. But he feels that he has dropped back to the mood of 11:1,16. He has been swept on by the memory of the ecstasy. {For I ought to have been commended by you} (\eg^h^gar ^p^heilon hup^h^ hum^h^“n sunistasthai\). Explanation of "ye compelled me." Imperfect active \^p^heilon\ of \opheil^h^“, to be under obligation, and the tense here expresses an unfulfilled obligation about the present. But \sunistasthai\ is present passive infinitive, not aorist or perfect passive. He literally means, "I ought now to be commended by you" instead of having to glorify myself. He repeats his boast already made (11:5f.), that he is no whit behind "the super-extra apostles" (the Judaizers), "though I am nothing" (\ei kai ouden eimi\). Even boasting himself against those false apostles causes a reaction of feeling that he has to express (cf. 1Co 15:9; 1Ti 1:15f.).

12:12 {Of an apostle} (\(tou apostolou\). "Of the apostle" (definite article). Note the three words here for miracles wrought by Paul (\(s^meia\, signs, \(terata\, wonders, \(dunameis\, powers or miracles) as in Heb 2:4.

12:13 {Wherein ye were made inferior} (\(ho h^ss^th^te\). First aorist passive indicative of \(h^ssoomai\, the text of Aleph B D instead of the usual \(h^tt^th^te\ from the common \(h^ttaomai\ to be inferior or less from the comparative \(h^tt^n\. See \(h^ss^n\ in verse 15. \(Ho\ is the neuter accusative with the passive verb (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 479). {Forgive me this wrong} (\(charisasthe moi t^n adikian taut^n\). Consummate irony to the stingy element in this church (cf. 11:9).

12:14 {Third time I am ready to come} (\(triton touto hetoim^s ech^\). Had he been already twice or only once? He had changed his plans once when he did not go (1:15f.). He will not change his plans now. This looks as if he had only been once (that in Ac 18). Note the third use of \(katanarka^\ (11:9; 12:13,14). They need not be apprehensive. He will be as financially independent of them as before. "I shall not sponge on you." {Not yours, but you} (\(ou ta hum^n, alla humas\). The motto of every real preacher. {To lay up} (\(th^saurizein\). For this use of the verb see 1Co 16:2 (Mt 6:19-21; Jas 5:3).

12:15 {I will most gladly spend and be spent} (\(h^dista dapan^s^ kai ekdapan^th^somai\). Both future active of old verb \(dapana^\ (Mr 5:26) to spend money, time, energy, strength and the future passive of \(ekdapana^\, late compound to spend utterly, to spend out, (\(ek-\), to spend wholly. Only here in N.T.

12:16 {I did not myself burden you} (\(eg^ ou katebar^sa humas\). First aorist active of late verb \(katabare^\, to press a burden down on one. Only here in N.T. {Crafty} (\(panourgos\). Old word from \(pan\, all, and \(ergo\, to do anything (good or bad). Good sense is skilful, bad sense cunning. Only here in N.T. and Paul is quoting the word from his enemies. {With guile} (\(dol^i\). Instrumental case of \(dolos\, bait to catch fish with. The enemies of Paul said that he was raising this big collection for himself. Moffatt has done well to put these charges in quotation marks to make it plain to readers that Paul is ironical.

12:17 {Did I take advantage} (\epleonekt^sa). Paul goes right to the point without hedging. For this verb from \pleon and \ech^s, to have more, see on 2Co 2:11; 7:2. {By any one of them} (\tina--di' autou). An anacoluthon for \tina is left in the accusative without a verb and \di' autou takes up the idea, "as to any one by him." {Whom} (\h^s n). The genitive relative is attracted from the accusative \hous into the case of the unexpressed antecedent \touton. \M^s expects the negative answer as does \m^ti in 18.

12:18 {The brother} (\ton adelphon). Probably the brother of Titus (cf. 8:18). {Did Titus take advantage of you?} (\m^ti epleonekt^sen humas Titos?). That puts the issue squarely. {By the same Spirit} (\t^i aut^i pneumat^i). That translation refers to the Holy Spirit and makes the case instrumental. The locative case, "in the same spirit," makes it mean that Paul's attitude is the same as that of Titus and most likely is correct, for "in the same steps" (\tois autois ichnesin) is in locative case.

12:19 {Ye think all this time} (\palai dokeite). Progressive present indicative, "for a long time ye have been thinking." {We are excusing ourselves} (\apologoumetha). He is not just apologizing, but is in deadly earnest, as they will find out when he comes.

12:20 {Lest by any means, when I come, I should find you not such as I would} (\m^p^s elth^s n ouch hoious thel^s heur^s humas). An idiomatic construction after the verb of fearing (\phoboumai) with \m^p^s as the conjunction and with \ouch as the negative of the verb \heur^s (second aorist active subjunctive of \heurisk^s), \m^s the conjunction, \ouch the negative. See Robertson, Grammar, p. 995. {And I be found} (\kag^s heureth^s). Same construction with first aorist passive subjunctive. {Such as ye would not} (\hoion ou thelete). Neat change in voice just before and position of the negative here. {Lest by any means} (\m^p^s). Still further negative purpose by repeating the conjunction. With graphic pen pictures Paul describes what had been going on against him during his long absence. {Backbitings} (\katalaliai). Late and rare word. In N.T. only here and 1Pe 2:1. If it only existed nowhere else! {Whisperings} (\psithurismo^i). Late word from \psithuriz^s, to whisper into one's ear. An onomatopoeic word for the sibilant murmur of a snake charmer (Ec 10:11). Only here in N.T.

{Swellings} (\phusi“seis\). From \phusio“\, to swell up, late word only here and in ecclesiastical writers. Did Paul make up the word for the occasion? See on 1Co 4:6 for verb. {Tumults} (\akatastasiai\). See on 2Co 6:5.

12:21 {When I come again} (\palin elthontos mou\). Genitive absolute. Paul assumes it as true. {Lest my God humble me} (\m^tapein“s^i me ho theos mou\). Negative final clause (\m^ and first aorist active subjunctive), going back to \phoboumai\ in 20. He means a public humiliation as his fear. The conduct of the church had been a real humiliation whether he refers to a previous visit or not. {That have sinned heretofore} (\t“n pro^mart^kot“n\). Genitive plural of the articular perfect active participle of \proamartan“\ to emphasize continuance of their sinful state as opposed to \m^ metano^sant“n\ (did not repent) in the aorist tense.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(2 Corinthians: Chapter 12)

13:1 {The third time I am coming} (\triton erchomai\). Either the third that he had planned to come or that he had been twice. The warning is made by quoting De 19:15.

13:2 {As when I was present the second time} (\h"s par"n to deuteron\). This translation assumes the second visit as already made. It is a natural way to take the Greek \h"s par"n\. But \h"s\ with \par"n\ can also mean "as if present" the second time (Authorized Version). Probably "as when" is the more natural rendering, but the other cannot be ruled entirely out in view of 1:15-23. {If I come again} (\ean elth" eis to palin\). Condition of third class. The use of \palin\ of itself suits the idea that Paul had not yet made the second visit as it means simply "again" or "back," but in Mt 26:44 we find \palin ek tritou\ (again a third time) and so it is not decisive.

13:3 {A proof of Christ} (\dokim"n tou Christou\). He will give it to them. "I will not spare." He will show that Christ speaks "in me" (\en emoi\).

13:4 {But we shall live with him through the power of God} (\alla z"somen sun aut"i ek duname"s theou\). So real is Paul's sense of his union with Christ.

13:5 {Unless indeed ye be reprobate} (\ei m"ti adokimoi este\). Paul challenged his opposers in Corinth to try (\peirazete\) themselves, to test (\dokimazete\) themselves, whether they were "in the faith" (\en t"i pistei\), a much more vital matter for them than trying to prove Paul a heretic. Such tests can be made, unless, alas, they are "reprobate" (\adokimoi\, the very adjective that Paul held up before himself as a dreadful outcome to be avoided, 1Co 9:27).

13:6 {That ye shall know} (\hoti epign"sesthe\). Such a testing of themselves will give them full knowledge that Paul is not {reprobate} (\adokimos\). The best way for vacillating Christians to stop it is to draw close to Christ.

13:7 {Though we be as reprobate} (\h"meis de h"s adokimoi "men\).

Literally, "And that" (\hina de). Paul wishes them to do no wrong (\kakon m^den). He has no desire to exercise his apostolic authority and "appear approved" (\dokimoi phan^men, second aorist passive subjunctive of \phain^{\}). He had far rather see them do "the noble thing" (\to kalon) even if it should make him appear disapproved after all that he has said.

13:8 {Against the truth} (\kata t^s al^theias). He means in the long run. We can hinder and hold down the truth by evil deeds (Ro 1:18), but in the end the truth wins.

13:9 {For we rejoice} (\chairomen gar). Paul had far rather be weak in the sense of failing to exercise his apostolic power because they did the noble thing. He is no Jonah who lamented when Ninevah repented. {Your perfecting} (\hum^{\}n katartisin). Late word from \katartiz^{\}, to fit, to equip (see verb in verse 11). In Plutarch, only here in N.T.

13:10 {That I may not when present deal sharply} (\hina par^{\}n apotom^{\}s chr^{\}s^{\}mai). Late adverb from \apotomos, curt, cut off. In N.T. only here and Tit 1:13.

13:12 {With a holy kiss} (\en hagi^{\}i phil^{\}mati). In the Jewish synagogues where the sexes were separated, men kissed men, the women, women. This apparently was the Christian custom also. It is still observed in the Coptic and the Russian churches. It was dropped because of charges made against the Christians by the pagans. In England in 1250 Archbishop Walter of York introduced a "pax-board" which was first kissed by the clergy and then passed around. Think of the germ theory of disease and that kissing tablet!

13:13 {The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all} (\h^{\} charis tou Kuriou I^{\}sou Christou kai h^{\} agap^{\} tou theou kai h^{\} koin^{\}nia tou hagiou pneumatou meta pant^{\}n hum^{\}n). This benediction is the most complete of them all. It presents the persons of the Trinity in full form. From 2Th 3:17 it appears that Paul wrote the greeting or benediction with his own hand. We know from Ro 15:19 that Paul went round about unto Illyricum before, apparently, he came on to Corinth. When he did arrive (Ac 20:1-3) the troubles from the Judaizers had disappeared. Probably the leaders left after the coming of Titus and the brethren with this Epistle. The reading of it in the church would make a stir of no small proportions. But it did the work.

(2 Corinthians: Chapter 13)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {Not from men, neither through men} (\ouk ap' anthr'p'n oude di' anthr'pou\). The bluntness of Paul's denial is due to the charge made by the Judaizers that Paul was not a genuine apostle because not one of the twelve. This charge had been made in Corinth and called forth the keenest irony of Paul (2Co 10-12). In Ga 1; 2 Paul proves his independence of the twelve and his equality with them as recognized by them. Paul denies that his apostleship had a human source (\ouk ap' anthr'p'n\) and that it had come to him through (\di' anthr'pou\) a human channel (Burton). {But through Jesus Christ and God the Father} (\alla dia I'sou Christou kai theou patros\). The call to be an apostle came to Paul through Jesus Christ as he claimed in 1Co 9:1 and as told in Ac 9:4-6; 22:7ff.; 26:16ff. He is apostle also by the will of God. {Who raised him from the dead} (\tou egeirantos auton ek nekr'n\). And therefore Paul was qualified to be an apostle since he had seen the Risen Christ (1Co 9:1; 15:8f.). This verb \egeir\ is often used in N.T. for raising from the sleep of death, to wake up the dead.

1:2 {All the brethren which are with me} (\hoi sun emoi pantes adelphoi\). The same phrase in Php 4:21 in distinction from the saints in verse 22. Probably the small company of travelling companions. {Unto the churches of Galatia} (\tais ekklesi'ais t's Galatias\). A circular letter therefore to all the churches in the province (both South Galatia and North Galatia if he really laboured there).

1:3 {Grace to you and peace} (\charis humin kai eir'n^). As in I Thess., II Thess., I Cor., II Cor. (already written) and in all the later Epistles save that in I and II Timothy "mercy" is added. But this customary salutation (see on 1Th 1:1) is not a perfunctory thing with Paul. He uses it here even when he has so much fault to find just as he did in I and II Corinthians.

1:4 {For our sins} (\huper t'n hamarti'n\). Some MSS. have \peri\ (concerning). In the _Koin,_ this use of \huper\ as like \peri\ has come to be common. He refers to the death of Christ (cf. 1Co 15:3; Ga 2:20; Ro 5:6f.). As a rule \peri\ occurs of things, \huper\ of persons. {Deliver} (exel^{tai}\). Second aorist middle subjunctive (final clause with hop^s\) of \exaire“, old verb to pluck out, to rescue (Ac 23:27). "Strikes the keynote of the epistle. The gospel is a rescue, an emancipation from a state of bondage" (Lightfoot). {Out of this present evil world} (ek tou ai^{nos} tou enest^{tos} pon^{rou}\). Literally, "out of the age the existing one being evil." The predicate position of \pon^{rou}\ calls emphatic attention to it. Each word here is of interest and has been already discussed. See on [~]Mt 13:22 for \aiⁿ\, Mt 6:23 for \pon^{ros}\. \Enest^{tos}\ is genitive masculine singular of \enest^s\ second perfect (intransitive) participle of \enist^{mi}\ for which see on [~]2Th 2:12; 1Co 3:22; 7:26. It is present as related to future (Ro 8:38; Heb 9:9). {According to the will of God} (kata to the^lma tou theou\). Not according to any merit in us.

1:5 {To whom be the glory} (hⁱ h^{doxa}\). No verb in the Greek. For like doxologies see Ro 9:5; 11:36; 16:27; Eph 3:21; 1Ti 1:17.

1:6 {Ye are so quickly removing} (hout^s tache^s metatithes^{the}\). The present middle indicative of \metatith^{mi}\, to change places, to transfer. "You are transferring yourselves" and doing it "so quickly" either from the time of their conversion or most likely from the time when the Judaizers came and tempted them. So easily some of them are falling victims to these perverters of the gospel. That is a continuous amazement (thaumaz^a\) to Paul and to men today that so many are so silly and so gullible to modern as to ancient charlatans. {Unto a different gospel} (eis heteron euaggelion\). See on [~]2Co 11:4 for distinction between \allo\ and \heteron\ as here. It is not here or there a mere difference in emphasis or spirit as in [~]Php 1:18 so long as Christ is preached. These men as in 2Co 11:4 preach "another Jesus" and a "different gospel" and so have fallen away from grace and have done away with Christ (Ga 5:4). Hence the vehemence of Paul's words.

1:7 {Which is not another} (ho ouk estin allo\). It is no "gospel" (good news) at all, but a yoke of bondage to the law and the abolition of grace. There is but one gospel and that is of grace, not works. The relative \ho\ (which) refers to \heteron euaggelion\ (a different gospel) "taken as a single term and designating the erroneous teachings of the Judaizers" (Burton). {Only} (ei m[^]\). Literally, "except," that is, "Except in this sense," "in that it is an attempt to pervert the one true gospel" (Lightfoot). {Who disturb you} (\(hoi tarassontes\)). The disturbers. This very verb \tarass“\ is used in Ac 17:8 of the Jews in Thessalonica who "disturbed" the politarchs and the people about Paul. {Would pervert} (\(thelontes metastrepsai\)). "Wish to turn about," change completely as in Ac 2:20; Jas 4:9. The very existence of the gospel of Christ was at stake.

1:8 {If we} (\(ean h^meis\)). Condition of third class (\(ean\ and aorist middle subjunctive \(euaggelis^tai\)). Suppose I (literary plural) should turn renegade and preach "other than" (\(par' ho\)), "contrary to that which we preached." Preachers have turned away from Christ, alas, and preached "humanism" or some other new-fangled notion. The Jews termed Paul a renegade for leaving Judaism for Christianity. But it was before Paul had seen Christ that he clung to the law. Paul is dogmatic and positive here, for he knows that he is standing upon solid ground, the fact of Christ dying for us and rising again. He had seen the Risen Jesus Christ. No angel can change Paul now. {Let him be anathema} (\(anathema est“\)). See on 1Co 12:3 for this word.

1:9 {So say I now again} (\(kai arti palin leg“\)). Paul knows that he has just made what some will consider an extreme statement. But it is a deliberate one and not mere excitement. He will stand by it to the end. He calls down a curse on any one who proclaims a gospel to them contrary to that which they had received from him.

1:10 {Am I persuading?} (\(peith““?\)). Conative present, trying to persuade like \z^t“ areskein\ (seeking to please) where the effort is stated plainly. See 2Co 5:11. {I should not be} (\(ouk an^m^n\)). Conclusion of second class condition, determined as unfulfilled. Regular construction here (\(ei\ and imperfect indicative in the condition \^reskon, ouk an\ and imperfect in the conclusion). About pleasing men see on 1Th 2:4. In Col 3:22; Eph. 6:6 Paul uses the word "men-pleasers" (\(anthr“pareskoi\)).

1:11 {Which was preached} (\(to euaggelisthen\)). Play on the word \euaggelion\ by first aorist passive participle of \euaggeliz“, "the gospel which was gospelized by me." {It is not after man} (\(ouk estin kata anthr“pon\)). Not after a human standard and so he does not try to conform to the human ideal. Paul alone (1Co 3:3; 9:8; 15:32; Ro 3:15) in the N.T. uses this old and common idiom.

1:12 {Nor was I taught it} (\oute edidachthⁿ\). He did not receive it "from man" (\para anthr^pⁿ\, which shuts out both apo\ and dia\ of verse 1), whether Peter or any other apostle, nor was he taught it in the school of Gamaliel in Jerusalem or at the University of Tarsus. He "received" his gospel in one way, "through revelation of Jesus Christ" (\di' apokalypse^s I^{sou} Christou\). He used \parelabon\ in 1Co 15:3 about the reception of his message from Christ. It is not necessary to say that he had only one (because of the aorist active \parelabon\, from \paralamban^a\, for it can very well be constative aorist) revelation (unveiling) from Christ. In fact, we know that he had numerous visions of Christ and in 1Co 11:23 he expressly says concerning the origin of the Lord's Supper: "I received (\parelabon\, again) from the Lord." The Lord Jesus revealed his will to Paul.

1:13 {My manner of life} (\tⁿ emⁿ anastrophⁿ\). Late word in this sense from Polybius on from \anastrephomai\. In the older writers it meant literally "return" or "turning back." See 1Pe 1:15. It is absent in this sense in the papyri though the verb is common. {In the Jews' religion} (\en tⁱ Ioudaismⁱ\). "In Judaism." The word in N.T. only here and next verse, already in II Macc. 2:21; 8:1; 14:38; IV Macc. 4:26. In these passages it means the Jewish religion as opposed to the Hellenism that the Syrian Kings were imposing upon the Jews. So later Justin Martyr (386 D) will use \Christianismos\ for Christianity. Both words are made from verbs in \-iz^a\. {Beyond measure} (\kath' huperbolⁿ\). "According to excess" (throwing beyond, \huperbolⁿ\). {I persecuted} (\edi^akon\). Imperfect active, "I used to persecute" (see Ac 7-9 for the facts). {Made havock of it} (\eporthoun autⁿ\). Customary action again, imperfect of old verb \porthe^a\, to lay waste, to sack. In N.T. only here, verse 23, and Ac 9:31 (used by Christians in Damascus of Saul after his conversion of his former conduct, the very word of Paul here). Paul heard them use it of him and it stuck in his mind.

1:14 {I advanced} (\proekopton\). Imperfect active again of \prokopt^a\, old verb, to cut forward (as in a forest), to blaze a way, to go ahead. In N.T. only here, Ro 13:12; 2Ti 2:16; 3:9,13. Paul was a brilliant pupil under Gamaliel. See Php 3:4-6. He was in the lead of the persecution also. {Beyond many of mine own age} (\huper pollous sunⁱliki^atas\). Later compound form for the Attic $\text{\h^liki}^{\text{t}}\text{s}$ which occurs in Dion Hal. and inscriptions (from \sun , with, and \h^likia , age). Paul modestly claims that he went "beyond" (huper) his fellow-students in his progress in Judaism. {More exceedingly zealous} ($\text{\perissoter}^{\text{s}}\text{z}^{\text{lot}}\text{s}$). Literally, "more exceedingly a zealot." See on \Ac 1:13; 21:20; 1Co 14:12. Like Simon Zelotes. {For the traditions of my fathers} ($\text{\textit{t}}^{\text{n}}\text{patrik}^{\text{n}}\text{mou}\text{\paradose}^{\text{n}}$). Objective genitive after $\text{\z}^{\text{lot}}\text{s}$. $\text{\Patrik}^{\text{n}}$ only here in N.T., though old word from \pat^{r} (father), paternal, descending from one's father. For $\text{\patr}^{\text{ios}}$ see Ac 22:3,14. Tradition (\paradosis) played a large part in the teaching and life of the Pharisees (Mr 7:1-23). Paul now taught the Christian tradition (2Th 2:15).

1:15 {It was the good pleasure of God} ($\text{\eudok}^{\text{sen}}\text{ho}\text{theos}$). Paul had no doubt about God's purpose in him (1Th 2:8). {Who separated me} ($\text{\ho}\text{aphorisas}\text{me}$). $\text{\Aphoriz}^{\text{}}$ is old word (from \apo and \horos) to mark off from a boundary or line. The Pharisees were the separatists who held themselves off from others. Paul conceives himself as a spiritual Pharisee "separated unto the gospel of God" (Ro 1:1, the same word $\text{\aph}^{\text{ris}}\text{menos}$). Before his birth God had his plans for him and called him.

1:16 {To reveal his Son in me} ($\text{\apokalupsai}\text{ton}\text{huion}\text{autou}\text{en}\text{emoi}$). By "in me" ($\text{\en}\text{emoi}$) Paul can mean to lay emphasis on his inward experience of grace or he may refer objectively to the vision of Christ on the way to Damascus, "in my case." Paul uses $\text{\en}\text{emoi}$ in this sense (in my case) several times (verse 24; 2Co 13:3; Php 1:30; 1Ti 1:16). Once (1Co 14:11) $\text{\en}\text{emoi}$ is almost equivalent to the dative (to me). On the whole Lightfoot seems correct here in taking it to mean "in my case," though the following words suit either idea. Certainly Paul could not preach Christ among the Gentiles without the rich inward experience and in the objective vision he was called to that task. {I conferred not with flesh and blood} ($\text{\ou}\text{prosanethem}^{\text{n}}\text{sarki}\text{kai}\text{haimati}$). Second aorist middle indicative of $\text{\prosanatith}^{\text{mi}}$, old verb, double compound (\pros, ana), to lay upon oneself in addition, to betake oneself to another, to confer with, dative case as here. In N.T. only here and 2:6.

1:17 {Before me} ($\text{\pro}\text{emou}$). The Jerusalem apostles were genuine apostles, but so is Paul. His call did not come from them nor did he receive confirmation by them. {Into Arabia} ($\text{\eis}\text{Arabian}$). This visit to Arabia has to come between the two visits to Damascus which are not distinguished in Ac 9:22f. In verse 23 Luke does speak of "considerable days" and so we must place the visit to Arabia between verses 22,23.

1:18 {Then after three years} (\epeita meta tria et^). A round number to cover the period from his departure from Jerusalem for Damascus to his return to Jerusalem. This stay in Damascus was an important episode in Paul's theological readjustment to his new experience. {To visit Cephas} (\histor^sai K^phfn). First aorist infinitive of \histore^, old verb (from \hist^r, one who knows by inquiry), to gain knowledge by visiting. Only here in N.T. If we turn to Ac 9:26-30, we shall see that the visit of two weeks to Peter came after Barnabas endorsed Paul to the suspicious disciples in Jerusalem and probably while he was preaching in the city. It was a delightful experience, but Peter did not start Paul upon his apostleship. He visited him as an equal. Peter no doubt had much to say to Paul.

1:19 {Except James the brother of the Lord} (\ei m^ Iak^bon ton adelphon tou Kuriou). James the son of Zebedee was still living at that time. The rest of the twelve were probably away preaching and James, brother of the Lord, is here termed an apostle, though not one of the twelve as Barnabas is later so called. Paul is showing his independence of and equality with the twelve in answer to the attacks of the Judaizers.

1:20 {I lie not} (\ou pseudomai). So important does he deem the point that he takes solemn oath about it.

1:21 {Into the region of Syria and Cilicia} (\eis ta klimata t^s Syrias kai t^s Kilikias). This statement agrees with the record in Ac 9:30. On \klimata, see 2Co 11:10. Paul was not idle, but at work in Tarsus and the surrounding country.

1:22 {And I was still unknown} (\m^n de agnoumenos). Periphrastic imperfect passive of \agnoe^, not to know. {By face} (\t^i pros^p^i). Associative instrumental case. {Of Judea} (\t^s Ioudaias). As distinct from Jerusalem, for he had once scattered the church there and had revisited them before coming to Tarsus (Ac 9:26-30). In Ac 9:31 the singular of \ekkl^sia is used, but in a geographic sense for Judea, Samaria, and Galilee.

1:23 {They only heard} (\monon akouontes ^san). Periphrastic imperfect, "They were only hearing from time to time." {That once persecuted us} (\ho di“k“n h^mas pote\). Present active articular participle, a sort of participle of antecedent time suggested by \pote\, "the one who used to persecute us once upon a time." {The faith} (\t^ n pistin\). Here used in the sense of "the gospel" as in Ac 6:7.

1:24 {They glorified} (\edoxazon\). Imperfect, kept on doing it. {In me} (\en emoi\). In my case as in 1:16.

2:1 {Then after the space of fourteen years I went up again} (\epeita dia dekatessar“n et“n palin aneb^n) This use of \dia for interval between is common enough. Paul is not giving a recital of his visits to Jerusalem, but of his points of contact with the apostles in Jerusalem. As already observed, he here refers to the Jerusalem Conference given by Luke in Ac 15 when Paul and Barnabas were endorsed by the apostles and elders and the church over the protest of the Judaizers who had attacked them in Antioch (Ac 15:1f.). But Paul passes by another visit to Jerusalem, that in Ac 11:30 when Barnabas and Saul brought alms from Antioch to Jerusalem and delivered them to "the elders" with no mention of the apostles who were probably out of the city since the events in Ac 12 apparently preceded that visit and Peter had left for another place (Ac 12:17). Paul here gives the inside view of this private conference in Jerusalem that came in between the two public meetings (Ac 15:4,6-29). {With Barnabas} (\meta Barnabf). As in Ac 15:2. {Taking Titus also with me} (\sunparalab“n kai Titon). Second aorist active participle of \sunparalamban“ the very verb used in Ac 15:37f. of the disagreement between Paul and Barnabas about Mark. Titus is not mentioned in Acts 15 nor anywhere else in Acts for some reason, possibly because he was Luke's own brother. But his very presence was a challenge to the Judaizers, since he was a Greek Christian.

2:2 {By revelation} (\kata apokalupsin). In Ac 15:2 the church sent them. But surely there is no inconsistency here. {I laid before them} (\anethem^n autois). Second aorist middle indicative of old word \anatith^mi, to put up, to place before, with the dative case. But who were the "them" (\autois)? Evidently not the private conference for he distinguishes this address from that, "but privately" (\kat' idian). Just place Ac 15:4f. beside the first clause and it is clear: "I laid before them the gospel which I preach among the Gentiles," precisely as Luke has recorded. Then came the private conference after the uproar caused by the Judaizers (Ac 15:5). {Before them who were of repute} (\tois dokousin). He names three of them (Cephas, James, and John). James the Lord's brother, for the other James is now dead (Ac 12:1f.). But there were others also, a select group of real leaders. The decision reached by this group would shape the decision of the public conference in the adjourned meeting. So far as we know Paul had not met John before, though he had met Peter and James at the other visit. Lightfoot has much to say about the Big Four (St. Paul and the Three) who here discuss the problems of mission work among Jews and Gentiles. It was of the utmost importance that they should see eye to eye. The Judaizers were assuming that the twelve apostles and James the Lord's brother would side with them against Paul and Barnabas. Peter had already been before the Jerusalem Church for his work in Caesarea (Ac 11:1-18). James was considered a very loyal Jew. {Lest by any means I should be running or had run in vain} (m^p^s eis kenon trech^ edramon). Negative purpose with the present subjunctive (trech^) and then by a sudden change the aorist indicative (edramon), as a sort of afterthought or retrospect (Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 201; Robertson, Grammar, p. 988). There are plenty of classical parallels. See also 1Th 3:5 for both together again.

2:3 {Being a Greek} (Hell^n n). Concessive participle, though he was a Greek. {Was compelled to be circumcised} (nagkasth^ peritm^th^nai). First aorist passive indicative of anagkaz^ and first aorist passive infinitive of peritemn^. Curiously enough some scholars interpret this language to mean that Paul voluntarily had Titus circumcised, instead of being compelled to do it, an impossible view in my opinion in the light of verse 5 and wholly inconsistent with the whole context. Paul means that he stood his ground against compulsion and all force.

2:4 {But because of the false brethren privately brought in} (dia de tous pareisaktous pseudadelphous). Late verbal adjective pareisaktos from the double compound verb pareisag^, found in papyri in the sense of brought in by the side or on the sly as here. Evidently some of the Judaizers or sympathizers whom Paul had not invited had come in as often happens. Paul terms them "false brethren" like "the false apostles" in 2Co 11:13 of the Judaizers in Corinth. {Who came in privily} (hoitines pareis^lthon). Repetition of the charge of their slipping in unwanted (pareiserchomai, late double compound, in Plutarch, in N.T. only here and Ro 5:20). {To spy out} (kataskop^sai). First aorist active infinitive of kataskope^, old Greek verb from kataskopos, a spy, to reconnoitre, to make a treacherous investigation. {That they might bring us into bondage} (\hina h^mas katadoul"sousin\). Future active indicative of this old compound, to enslave completely (\kata-\) as in 2Co 11:20. Nowhere else in N.T. This was their purpose (\hina\ and future active indicative of this causative verb). It was as serious a conflict as this. Spiritual liberty or spiritual bondage, which?

2:5 {No, not for an hour} (\oude pros h"ran\). Pointed denial that he and Barnabas yielded at all "in the way of subjection" (\t^i hupotag^i\, in the subjection demanded of them). The compromisers pleaded for the circumcision of Titus "because of the false brethren" in order to have peace. The old verb \eik"\, to yield, occurs here alone in the N.T. See 2Co 9:13 for \hupotag^\. {The truth of the gospel} (\h^ al^theia tou euaggeliou\). It was a grave crisis to call for such language. The whole problem of Gentile Christianity was involved in the case of Titus, whether Christianity was to be merely a modified brand of legalistic Judaism or a spiritual religion, the true Judaism (the children of Abraham by faith). The case of Timothy later was utterly different, for he had a Jewish mother and a Greek father. Titus was pure Greek.

2:6 {Somewhat} (\ti\). Something, not somebody. Paul refers to the Big Three (Cephas, James, and John). He seems a bit embarrassed in the reference. He means no disrespect, but he asserts his independence sharply in a tangled sentence with two parentheses (dashes in Westcott and Hort). {Whatever they were} (\hopoioi pote ^san\). Literally, "What sort they once were." {Hopoioi} is a qualitative word (1Th 1:9; 1Co 3:13; Jas 1:24). Lightfoot thinks that these three leaders were the ones who suggested the compromise about Titus. That is a possible, but not the natural, interpretation of this involved sentence. The use of \de\ (but) in verse 6 seems to make a contrast between the three leaders and the pleaders for compromise in verses 4f. {They, I say, imparted nothing to me} (\emoi gar ouden prosanethento\). He starts over again after the two parentheses and drops the construction \apo t"n dokount"n\ and changes the construction (anacoluthon) to \hoi dokountes\ (nominative case), the men of reputation and influences whom he names in verses 8f. See the same verb in 1:16. They added nothing in the conference to me. The compromisers tried to win them, but they finally came over to my view. Paul won his point, when he persuaded Peter, James, and John to agree with him and Barnabas in their contention for freedom for the Gentile Christians from the bondage of the Mosaic ceremonial law.

2:7 {But contrariwise} (\alla tounantion). But on the contrary (accusative of general reference, \to enantion). So far from the three championing the cause of the Judaizers as some hoped or even the position of the compromisers in verses 4f., they came boldly to Paul's side after hearing the case argued in the private conference. This is the obvious interpretation rather than the view that Peter, James, and John first proposed the circumcision of Titus and afterwards surrendered to Paul's bold stand. {When they saw} (\idontes). After seeing, after they heard our side of the matter. {That I had been intrusted with the gospel of the uncircumcision} (\hoti pepisteumai to euaggelion t's akrobustias). Perfect passive indicative of \pisteu, to intrust, which retains the accusative of the thing (\to euaggelion) in the passive voice. This clear-cut agreement between the leaders "denotes a distinction of sphere, and not a difference of type" (Lightfoot). Both divisions in the work preach the same "gospel" (not like 1:6f., the Judaizers). It seems hardly fair to the Three to suggest that they at first championed the cause of the Judaizers in the face of Paul's strong language in verse 5.

2:8 {He that wrought for Peter unto the apostleship of the circumcision} (\ho gar energ^sas Petr^i eis apostol^n t's peritom^s). Paul here definitely recognizes Peter's leadership (apostleship, \apostol^n\, late word, already in Ac 1:25; 1Co 9:2) to the Jews and asserts that Peter acknowledges his apostleship to the Gentiles. This is a complete answer to the Judaizers who denied the genuineness of Paul's apostleship because he was not one of the twelve.

2:9 {They who were reputed to be pillars} (\hoi dokountes stuloi einai). They had that reputation (\dokountes) and Paul accepts them as such. \Stuloi, old word for pillars, columns, as of fire (Re 10:1). So of the church (1Ti 3:15). These were the Pillar Apostles. {Gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship} (\dexias ed^kan emoi kai Barnabfi koin^nias). Dramatic and concluding act of the pact for cooperation and coordinate, independent spheres of activity. The compromisers and the Judaizers were brushed to one side when these five men shook hands as equals in the work of Christ's Kingdom.

2:10 {Only} (\monon). One item was emphasized. {We should remember} (\mn^moneu“men). Present active subjunctive, "that we should keep on remembering." {Which very thing} (\ho--auto touto). Repetition of relative and demonstrative, tautology, "which this very thing." In fact Barnabas and Saul had done it before (Ac 11:30). It was complete victory for Paul and Barnabas. Paul passes by the second public meeting and the letters to Antioch (Ac 15:6-29) and passes on to Peter's conduct in Antioch.

2:11 {I resisted him to the face} (\kata pros“pon aut“i antest^n). Second aorist active indicative (intransitive) of \anthist^mi. "I stood against him face to face." In Jerusalem Paul faced Peter as his equal in rank and sphere of work. In Antioch he looked him in the eye as his superior in character and courage. {Because he stood condemned} (\hoti kategn“smenos ^n). Periphrastic past perfect passive of \kataginosk“, old verb to know against, to find fault with. In N.T. only here and 1Jo 3:20f.

2:12 {For before that certain came from James} (\pro tou gar elthein tinas apo Iak“bou). The reason (\gar) for Paul's condemnation of Peter. Articular infinitive in the genitive after \pro with the accusative of general reference (\tinas), "for before the coming as to some from James." Does Paul mean to say that these "certain" ones had been sent by James to Antioch to inspect the conduct of Peter and the other Jewish brethren? Some scholars think so. No doubt these brethren let the idea get out that they were emissaries "from James." But that idea is inconsistent with the position of James as president of the conference and the author of the resolution securing liberty to the Gentile Christians. No doubt these brethren threatened Peter to tell James and the church about his conduct and they reminded Peter of his previous arraignment before the Jerusalem Church on this very charge (Ac 11:1-18). As a matter of fact the Jerusalem Conference did not discuss the matter of social relations between Jews and Gentiles though that was the charge made against Peter (Ac 11:1ff.). {He did eat with the Gentiles} (\meta t“n ethn“n sun^sthien). It was his habit (imperfect tense). {He drew back} (\hupestellen). Imperfect tense, inchoative action, "he began to draw himself (\heauton) back." Old word \hupostell“. See middle voice to disassemble (Ac 20:20,27), to shrink (Heb 10:38). {Separated himself}

(\aph“rizen heauton\). Inchoative imperfect again, "began to separate himself" just like a Pharisee (see on 1:15) and as if afraid of the Judaizers in the Jerusalem Church, perhaps half afraid that James might not endorse what he had been doing. {Fearing them that were of the circumcision} (\phoboumenos tous ek peritom^s\). This was the real reason for Peter's cowardice. See Ac 11:2 for "\hoi ek peritom^s\ (they of the circumcision), the very phrase here. It was not that Peter had changed his views from the Jerusalem resolutions. It was pure fear of trouble to himself as in the denials at the trial of Christ.

2:13 {Dissembled likewise with him} (\sunupekrith^san aut“i kai\). First aorist passive indicative of the double compound verb \sunupokrinomai\, a late word often in Polybius, only here in N.T. One example in Polybius means to pretend to act a part with. That idea here would help the case of the rest of the Jews, but does not accord with Paul's presentation. {Insomuch that even Barnabas} (\h“ste kai Barnabas\). Actual result expressed by \h“ste\ and the indicative and \kai\ clearly means "even." {Was carried away with their dissimulation} (\sunap^hchth^s aut“n tⁱ hupokrisei\). First aorist passive indicative of \sunapag^h\, old verb, in N.T. only here and 2Pe 3:17. \Hupokrisei\ is in the instrumental case and can only mean hypocrisy in the bad sense (Mt 23:28), not merely acting a part. It was a solemn moment when Paul saw the Jerusalem victory vanish and even Barnabas desert him as they followed the timid cowardice of Peter. It was _Paulus contra mundum_ in the cause of spiritual freedom in Christ.

2:14 {But when I saw} (\All' hote eidon\). Paul did see and saw it in time to speak. {That they walked not uprightly} (\hoti orthopodousin\). Present active indicative retained in indirect discourse, "they are not walking straight." \Orthopode“\ (\orthos\, straight, \pous\, foot). Found only here and in later ecclesiastical writers, though \orthopodes bainontes\ does occur. {According to the truth of the gospel} (\pros tⁿ al^htheian tou euaggeliou\). Just as in 2:5. Paul brought them to face (\pros\) that. {I said unto Cephas before them all} (\eipon t“i K^hphfi emprosthen pant“n\). {Being a Jew} (\Ioudaios huparch“n\, though being a Jew). Condition of first class, assumed as true. It was not a private quarrel, but a matter of public policy. One is a bit curious to know what those who consider Peter the first pope will do with this open rebuke by Paul, who was in no sense afraid of Peter or of all the rest. {As do the Gentiles} (\ethnik“s\). Late adverb, here only in N.T. Like Gentiles. {As do the Jews} (\Ioudaik“s\). Only here in N.T., but in Josephus. {To live as do the Jews} (\Ioudaizein\). Late verb, only here in the N.T. From \Ioudaios\, Jew. Really Paul charges Peter with trying to compel (conative present, \anagkazeis\) the Gentiles to live all like Jews, to Judaize the Gentile Christians, the very point at issue in the Jerusalem Conference when Peter so loyally supported Paul. It was a bold thrust that allowed no reply. But Paul won Peter back and Barnabas also. If II Peter is genuine, as is still possible, he shows it in 2Pe 3:15. Paul and Barnabas remained friends (Ac 15:39f.; 1Co 9:6), though they soon separated over John Mark.

2:15 {Not sinners of the Gentiles} (\ouk ex ethn“n hamart“loi\). The Jews regarded all Gentiles as "sinners" in contrast with themselves (cf. Mt 26:45 "sinners" and Lu 18:32 "Gentiles"). It is not clear whether verses 15-21 were spoken by Paul to Peter or whether Paul is now simply addressing the Galatians in the light of the controversy with Peter. Burton thinks that he is "mentally addressing Peter, if not quoting from what he said to him."

2:16 {Is not justified} (\ou dikaioutai\). Present passive indicative of \dikaio“, an old causative verb from \dikaio\, righteous (from \dike\, right), to make righteous, to declare righteous. It is made like \axio“, to deem worthy, and \koino“, to consider common. It is one of the great Pauline words along with \dikaio\, righteousness. The two ways of getting right with God are here set forth: by faith in Christ Jesus (objective genitive), by the works of the law (by keeping all the law in the most minute fashion, the way of the Pharisees). Paul knew them both (see Ro 7). In his first recorded sermon the same contrast is made that we have here (Ac 13:39) with the same word \dikaio“, employed. It is the heart of his message in all his Epistles. The terms faith (\pistis\), righteousness (\dikaio\), law (\nomos\), works (\erga\) occur more frequently in Galatians and Romans because Paul is dealing directly with the problem in opposition to the Judaizers who contended that Gentiles had to become Jews to be saved. The whole issue is here in an acute form. {Save} (\ean m^). Except. {Even we} (\kai h^meis\). We Jews believed, had to believe, were not saved or justified till we did believe. This very point Peter had made at the Jerusalem Conference (Ac 15:10f.). He quotes Ps 143:2. Paul uses \dikaiosun^ in two senses (1) Justification, on the basis of what Christ has done and obtained by faith. Thus we are set right with God. Ro 1-5. (2) Sanctification. Actual goodness as the result of living with and for Christ. Ro 6-8. The same plan exists for Jew and Gentile.

2:17 {We ourselves were found sinners} (\heureth^men kai autoi hamart^loi\). Like the Gentiles, Jews who thought they were not sinners, when brought close to Christ, found that they were. Paul felt like the chief of sinners. {A minister of sin} (\hamartias diakonos\). Objective genitive, a minister to sin. An illogical inference. We were sinners already in spite of being Jews. Christ simply revealed to us our sin. {God forbid} (\m^genoito\). Literally, "May it not happen." Wish about the future (\m^ and the optative).

2:18 {A transgressor} (\parabat^n\). Peter, by his shifts had contradicted himself helplessly as Paul shows by this condition. When he lived like a Gentile, he tore down the ceremonial law. When he lived like a Jew, he tore down salvation by grace.

2:19 {I through the law died to the law} (\eg^ dia nomou nom^i apethanon\). Paradoxical, but true. See Rom 7:4,6 for picture of how the law waked Paul up to his real death to the law through Christ.

2:20 {I have been crucified with Christ} (\Christ^i sunestaur^mai\). One of Paul's greatest mystical sayings. Perfect passive indicative of \sustauro^ with the associative instrumental case (\Christ^i\). Paul uses the same word in Ro 6:6 for the same idea. In the Gospels it occurs of literal crucifixion about the robbers and Christ (Mt 27:44; Mr 15:32; Joh 19:32). Paul died to the law and was crucified with Christ. He uses often the idea of dying with Christ (Ga 5:24; 6:14; Ro 6:8; Col 2:20) and burial with Christ also (Ro 6:4; Col 2:12). {No longer I} (\ouketi eg^). So complete has become Paul's identification with Christ that his separate personality is merged into that of Christ. This language helps one to understand the victorious cry in Ro 7:25. It is the union of the vine and the branch (Joh 15:1-6). {Which is in the Son of God} (\t^i tou huiou tou theou\). The objective genitive, not the faith of the Son of God. {For me} (\huper emou\). Paul has the closest personal feeling toward Christ. "He appropriates to himself, as Chrysostom observes, the love which belongs equally to the whole world. For Christ is indeed the personal friend of each man individually" (Lightfoot).

2:21 {I do not make void the grace of God} (\ouk athet“ t^ⁿ charin tou theou). Common word in LXX and Polybius and on, to make ineffective (\a\ privative and \tith^mi\, to place or put). Some critic would charge him with that after his claim to such a close mystic union with Christ. {Then Christ died for nought} (\ara Christos d“rean apethanen). Condition of first class, assumed as true. If one man apart from grace can win his own righteousness, any man can and should. Hence (\ara\, accordingly) Christ died gratuitously (\d“rean), unnecessarily. Adverbial accusative of \d“rea, a gift. This verse is a complete answer to those who say that the heathen (or any mere moralist) are saved by doing the best that they know and can. No one, apart from Jesus, ever did the best that he knew or could. To be saved by law (\dia nomou) one has to keep all the law that he knows. That no one ever did.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

3:1 {Who did bewitch you?} (\tis humas ebaskanen?). Somebody "fascinated" you. Some aggressive Judaizer (5:7), some one man (or woman). First aorist active indicative of \baskain“, old word kin to \phask“\ (\bask“), to speak, then to bring evil on one by feigned praise or the evil eye (hoodoo), to lead astray by evil arts. Only here in the N.T. This popular belief in the evil eye is old (De 28:54) and persistent. The papyri give several examples of the adjective \abaskanta\, the adverb \abaskant“s\ (unharmed by the evil eye), the substantive \baskania\ (witchcraft). {Before whose eyes Jesus Christ was openly set forth crucified} (\hois kat' ophthalmous I'sous Christos proegraph^ estaur“menos). Literally, "to whom before your very eyes Jesus Christ was portrayed as crucified." Second aorist passive indicative of \prograph“, old verb to write beforehand, to set forth by public proclamation, to placard, to post up. This last idea is found in several papyri (Moulton and Milligan's Vocabulary) as in the case of a father who posted a proclamation that he would no longer be responsible for his son's debts. \Graph“\ was sometimes used in the sense of painting, but no example of \prograph“\ with this meaning has been found unless this is one. With that idea it would be to portray, to picture forth, a rendering not very different from placarding. The foolish Galatians were without excuse when they fell under the spell of the Judaizer. \Estaur“menos\ is perfect passive participle of \stauro“, the common verb to crucify (from \stauros\, stake, cross), to put on the cross (Mt 20:19), same form as in 1Co 2:2.

3:2 {This only} (\touto monon). Paul strikes at the heart of the problem. He will show their error by the point that the gifts of the Spirit came by the hearing of faith, not by works of the law.

3:3 {Are ye now perfected in the flesh?} (\nun sarki epiteleisthe?). Rather middle voice as in 1Pe 5:9, finishing of yourselves. There is a double contrast, between \enarxamenoi\ (having begun) and \epiteleisthe\ (finishing) as in 2Co 8:6; Php 1:6, and also between "Spirit" (\pneumati) and flesh (\sarki). There is keen irony in this thrust.

3:4 {Did ye suffer?} (\epathete?). Second aorist active indicative of \pasch~, to experience good or ill. But alone, as here, it often means to suffer ill (\tosauta, so many things). In North Galatia we have no record of persecutions, but we do have records for South Galatia (Ac 14:2,5,19,22). {If it be indeed in vain} (\ei ge kai eik~i). On \eik~i see 1Co 15:2; Ga 4:11. Paul clings to hope about them with alternative fears.

3:5 {Supplieth} (\epichor~g~n). It is God. See on ~2Co 9:10 for this present active participle. Cf. Php 1:19; 2Pe 1:5. {Worketh miracles} (\energ~n dunameis). On the word \energe~ see 1Th 2:13; 1Co 12:6. It is a great word for God's activities (Php 2:13). "In you" (Lightfoot) is preferable to "among you" for \en humin\ (1Co 13:10; Mt 14:2). The principal verb for "doeth he it" (\poiei) is not expressed. Paul repeats the contrast in verse 2 about "works of the law" and "the hearing of faith."

3:6 {It was reckoned unto him for righteousness} (\elogisth~ eis dikaiosun~n). First aorist passive indicative of \logizomai. See on ~1Co 13:5 for this old word. He quotes Ge 15:6 and uses it at length in Ro 4:3ff. to prove that the faith of Abraham was reckoned "for" (\eis, good Koin, idiom though more common in LXX because of the Hebrew) righteousness before he was circumcised. James (Jas 2:23) quotes the same passage as proof of Abraham's obedience to God in offering up Isaac (beginning to offer him). Paul and James are discussing different episodes in the life of Abraham. Both are correct.

3:7 {The same are sons of Abraham} (\houtoi huioi eisin Abraham). "These are." This is Paul's astounding doctrine to Jews that the real sons of Abraham are those who believe as he did, "they which be of faith" (\hoi ek piste~s), a common idiom with Paul for this idea (verse 9; Ro 3:26; 4:16; 14:23), those whose spiritual sonship springs out of (\ek) faith, not out of blood. John the Baptist denounced the Pharisees and Sadducees as vipers though descendants of Abraham (Mt 3:7; Lu 3:7) and Jesus termed the Pharisees children of the devil and not spiritual children of Abraham (not children of God) in Joh 8:37-44.

3:8 {Foreseeing} (\proidousa). Second aorist active participle of \proora~. The Scripture is here personified. Alone in this sense of "sight," but common with \legei or \eipen\ (says, said) and really in verse 22 "hath shut up" (\sunekleisen). {Would justify } (\dikaioi\). Present active indicative, "does justify."

{Preached the gospel beforehand} } (\proeu^ggelisato\). First aorist middle indicative of \proeuaggelizomai\ with augment on \a\ though both \pro\ and \eu\ before it in composition. Only instance in N.T. It occurs in Philo. and Schol. Soph. This Scripture announced beforehand the gospel on this point of justification by faith. He quotes the promise to Abraham in Ge 12:3; 18:18, putting \panta ta ethn^ (all the nations) in 18:18 for \pfsai hai phulai\ (all the tribes) of the earth. It is a crucial passage for Paul's point, showing that the promise to Abraham included all the nations of the earth. The verb \eneuloge\ (future passive here) occurs in the LXX and here only in N.T. (not Ac 3:25 in correct text). {In thee} (\en soi\). "As their spiritual progenitor" (Lightfoot).

3:9 {With} (\sun\). Along with, in fellowship with. {The faithful} (\t^i pist^i\). Rather, "the believing" (cf. verse 6).

3:10 {Under a curse} (\hupo kataran\). Picture of the curse hanging over them like a Damocles' blade. Cf. Ro 3:9 "under sin" (\huph' hamartian\). The word for "curse" (\katara\) is an old one (\kata\, down, \ara\, imprecation), often in LXX, in N.T. only here and 13; Jas 3:10; 2Pe 2:14. Paul quotes De 27:26, the close of the curses on Mt. Ebal. He makes a slight explanatory modification of the LXX changing \logois\ to \gegrammenois en t^i bibli^i\). The idea is made clearer by the participle (\gegrammenois\ and \bibli^i\ (book). The curse becomes effective only when the law is violated. {Cursed} (\epikataratos\). Verbal adjective from \epikataromai\, to imprecate curses, late word, common in LXX. In N.T. only here and verse 13, but in inscriptions also (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 96). The emphasis is on "continueth" (\emmenei\ and "all" (\pfsin\).

3:11 {In the sight of God} (\para t^i the^i\). By the side of (\para\) God, as God looks at it, for the simple reason that no one except Jesus has ever kept _all_ the law, God's perfect law.

3:12 {The law is not of faith} (\ho nomos ouk estin ek piste^s\). Law demands complete obedience and rests not on mercy, faith, grace.

3:13 {Redeemed us} (\h^mas ex^gorasen\). First aorist active of the compound verb \exagoraz“\ (Polybius, Plutarch, Diodorus), to buy from, to buy back, to ransom. The simple verb \agoraz“\ (1Co 6:20; 7:23) is used in an inscription for the purchase of slaves in a will (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 324). See also Ga 4:5; Col 4:5; Eph 5:16. Christ purchased us {from the curse of the law} (\ek t^s kataras tou nomou\). "Out from (\ek\ repeated) under (\hupo\ in verse 10) the curse of the law." {Having become a curse for us} (\genomenos huper h^m“n katara\). Here the graphic picture is completed. We were under (\hupo\) a curse, Christ became a curse {over} (\huper\) us and so between us and the overhanging curse which fell on him instead of on us. Thus he bought us out (\ek\) and we are free from the curse which he took on himself. This use of \huper\ for substitution is common in the papyri and in ancient Greek as in the N.T. (Joh 11:50; 2Co 5:14f.). {That hangeth on a tree} (\ho kremamenos epi xulou\). Quotation from De 21:23 with the omission of \hupo theou\ (by God). Since Christ was not cursed by God. The allusion was to exposure of dead bodies on stakes or crosses (Jos 10:26). \Xulon\ means wood, not usually tree, though so in Lu 23:31 and in later Greek. It was used of gallows, crosses, etc. See Ac 5:30; 10:39; 1Pe 2:24. On the present middle participle from the old verb \kremannumi\, to hang, see on [~]Mt 18:6; Ac 5:30.

3:14 {That upon the Gentiles} (\hina eis ta ethn[^]\). Final clause (\hina\ and \gen[^]tai\, aorist middle subjunctive). {That we might receive} (\hina lab[^]“men\). Second final clause coordinate with the first as in 2Co 9:3. So in Christ we all (Gentile and Jew) obtain the promise of blessing made to Abraham, through faith.

3:15 {After the manner of men} (\kata anthr[^]“pon\). After the custom and practice of men, an illustration from life. {Though it be but a man's covenant, yet when it hath been confirmed} (\hom[^]“s anthr[^]“pou kekur[^]“men[^]n diath[^]k[^]n\). Literally, "Yet a man's covenant ratified." On \Diath[^]k[^]\ as both covenant and will see on [~]Mt 26:28; 1Co 11:25; 2Co 3:6; Heb 9:16f. On \kuro[^]“, to ratify, to make valid, see on [~]2Co 2:8. Perfect passive participle here, state of completion, authoritative confirmation. {Maketh it void} (\athetei\). See on [~]2:21 for this verb. Both parties can by agreement cancel a contract, but not otherwise. {Addeth thereto} (\epidiatassetai\). Present middle indicative of the double compound verb \epidiatassomai\, a word found nowhere else as yet. But inscriptions use \diatassomai, diataxis, diatag[^], diatagma\ with the specialized meaning to "determine by testamentary disposition" (Deissmann, _Light from the Ancient East_, p. 90). It was unlawful to add (\epi\) fresh clauses or specifications (\diataxeis\).

3:16 {But as of one} (\all' h[^]s eph' henos\). But as in the case of one. {Which is Christ} (\hos estin Christos\). Masculine relative agreeing with \Christos\ though \sperma\ is neuter. But the promise to Abraham uses \sperma\ as a collective substantive and applies to all believers (both Jews and Gentiles) as Paul has shown in verses 7-14, and as of course he knew full well Here Paul uses a rabbinical refinement which is yet intelligible. The people of Israel were a type of the Messiah and he gathers up the promise in its special application to Christ. He does not say that Christ is specifically referred to in Ge 13:15 or 17:7f.

3:17 {Now this I say} (\touto de leg[^]\). Now I mean this. He comes back to his main point and is not carried afield by the special application of \sperma\ to Christ. {Confirmed beforehand by God} (\prokekur[^]men[^]n hupo tou theou\). Perfect passive participle of \prokuro[^]\, in Byzantine writers and earliest use here. Nowhere else in N.T. The point is in \pro\ and \hupo tou theou\ (by God) and in \meta\ (after) as Burton shows. {Four hundred and thirty years after} (\meta tetrakosia kai triakonta et[^]\). Literally, "after four hundred and thirty years." This is the date in Ex 12:40 for the sojourn in Egypt (cf. Ge 15:13). But the LXX adds words to include the time of the patriarchs in Canaan in this number of years which would cut the time in Egypt in two. Cf. Ac 7:6. It is immaterial to Paul's argument which chronology is adopted except that "the longer the covenant had been in force the more impressive is his statement" (Burton). {Doth not disannul} (\ouk akuroi\). Late verb \akuro[^]\, in N.T. only here and Mt 15:6; Mr 7:13 (from \a\ privative and \kuros\, authority). On \katarg[^]sai\ see 1Co 1:28; 2:6; 15:24,26.

3:18 {The inheritance} (\h[^] kl[^]ronomia\). Old word from \kl[^]ronomos\, heir (\kleros\, lot, nemomai, to distribute). See on Mt 21:38; Ac 7:5. This came to Israel by the promise to Abraham, not by the Mosaic law. So with us, Paul argues. {Hath granted} (\kecharistai\). Perfect middle indicative of \charizomai\. It still holds good after the law came.

3:19 {What then is the law?} (\ti oun ho nomos?\). Or, why then the law? A pertinent question if the Abrahamic promise antedates it and holds on afterwards. {It was added because of transgressions} (\t'“n parabase“n charin proseteth^). First aorist passive of \prostith^mi, old verb to add to. It is only in apparent contradiction to verses 15ff., because in Paul's mind the law is no part of the covenant, but a thing apart "in no way modifying its provisions" (Burton). \Charin is the adverbial accusative of \charis which was used as a preposition with the genitive as early as Homer, in favour of, for the sake of. Except in 1Jo 3:12 it is post-positive in the N.T. as in ancient Greek. It may be causal (Lu 7:47; 1Jo 3:12) or telic (Tit 1:5,11; Jude 1:16). It is probably also telic here, not in order to create transgressions, but rather "to make transgressions palpable" (Ellicott), "thereby pronouncing them to be from that time forward transgressions of the law" (Rendall). \Parabasis, from \parabain, is in this sense a late word (Plutarch on), originally a slight deviation, then a wilful disregarding of known regulations or prohibitions as in Ro 2:23. {Till the seed should come} (\achris an elth^i to sperma). Future time with \achris an and aorist subjunctive (usual construction). Christ he means by \to sperma as in verse 16. {The promise hath been made} (\ep^ggeltai). Probably impersonal perfect passive rather than middle of \epaggellomai as in II Macc. 4:27. {Ordained through angels} (\diatageis di' aggel'“n). Second aorist passive participle of \diatass (see on Mt 11:1). About angels and the giving of the law see on De 33:2 (LXX); Ac 7:38,52; Heb 2:2; Josephus (_Ant_. XV. 5. 3). {By the hand of a mediator} (\en cheiri mesitou). \En cheiri is a manifest Aramaism or Hebraism and only here in the N.T. It is common in the LXX. \Mesit^s, from \mesos is middle or midst, is a late word (Polybius, Diodorus, Philo, Josephus) and common in the papyri in legal transactions for arbiter, surety, etc. Here of Moses, but also of Christ (1Ti 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24).

3:20 {Is not a mediator of one} (\henos ouk estin). That is, a middleman comes in between two. The law is in the nature of a contract between God and the Jewish people with Moses as the mediator or middleman. {But God is one} (\ho de theos heis estin). There was no middleman between God and Abraham. He made the promise directly to Abraham. Over 400 interpretations of this verse have been made!

3:21 {Against the promises} (\kata t'“n epaggeli'“n). A pertinent question again. Far from it (\m^ genoito). {Which could make alive} (\ho dunamenos z“opoi`sai). First aorist active infinitive of \z“opoie“, late compound (\z“os\, alive, \poie“\, to make) verb for which see 1Co 15:22. Spiritual life, he means, here and hereafter. {Verily} (\ont“s). "Really" (cf. Mr 11:32; Lu 24:34). Condition and conclusion (\an ^n) of second class, determined as unfulfilled. He had already said that Christ died to no purpose in that case (2:21).

3:22 {Hath shut up} (\sunekleisen). Did shut together. First aorist active indicative of \sunklei“, old verb to shut together, on all sides, completely as a shoal of fish in a net (Lu 5:6). So verse 23; Ro 11:32. {Under sin} (\hupo hamartian). See \hupo kataran in verse 10. As if the lid closed in on us over a massive chest that we could not open or as prisoners in a dungeon. He uses \ta panta (the all things), the totality of everything. See Ro 3:10-19; 11:32. {That} (\hina). God's purpose, personifying scripture again. {Might be given} (\doth`i). First aorist passive subjunctive of \did“mi with \hina.

3:23 {Before faith came} (\pro tou elthein t`n pistin). "Before the coming (second aorist active infinitive of \erchomai\, definite event) as to the Faith" (note article, meaning the faith in verse 22 made possible by the historic coming of Christ the Redeemer), the faith in Christ as Saviour (verse 22). {We were kept in ward under the law} (\hyper nomon ephrouroumetha). Imperfect passive of \phroure“, to guard (from \phrouros\, a guard). See on \Ac 9:24; 2Co 11:32. It was a long progressive imprisonment. {Unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed} (\eis t`n mellousan pistin apokaluphth`nai). "Unto the faith (verse 22 again) about to be revealed." \Mell“ and the first aorist passive infinitive (regular idiom).

3:24 {Our tutor unto Christ} (\paidag“gos hum“n eis Christon). See 1Co 4:15 for the only other N.T. example of this old and common word for the slave employed in Greek and Roman families of the better class in charge of the boy from about six to sixteen. The paedagogue watched his behaviour at home and attended him when he went away from home as to school. Christ is our Schoolmaster and the law as paedagogue kept watch over us till we came to Christ. {That we might be justified by faith} (\hina ek piste`s dikai“th“men). This is the ultimate purpose of the law as paedagogue. {Now that faith is come} (\elthous` s t`s piste“s). Genitive absolute, "the faith (the time of the faith spoken of in verse 23) having come." {Under a tutor} (\hupo paidag^{gon}\). The pedagogue is dismissed. We are in the school of the Master.

3:26 {For ye are all sons of God} (\pantes gar huioi theou este\). Both Jews and Gentiles (3:14) and in the same way "through faith in Christ Jesus" (\dia t^s piste^s en Christⁱ I^{sou}\). There is no other way to become "sons of God" in the full ethical and spiritual sense that Paul means, not mere physical descendants of Abraham, but "sons of Abraham," "those by faith" (verse 7). The Jews are called by Jesus "the sons of the Kingdom" (Mt 8:12) in privilege, but not in fact. God is the Father of all men as Creator, but the spiritual Father only of those who by faith in Christ Jesus receive "adoption" (\huiiothesia\) into his family (verse 5; Ro 8:15,23). Those led by the Spirit are sons of God (Ro 8:14).

3:27 {Were baptized into Christ} (\eis Christon ebaptisth^{te}\). First aorist passive indicative of \baptiz^o\. Better, "were baptized unto Christ" in reference to Christ. {Did put on Christ} (\Christon enedusasthe\). First aorist middle indicative of \endu^o\ (\-n^o\). As a badge or uniform of service like that of the soldier. This verb is common in the sense of putting on garments (literally and metaphorically as here). See further in Paul (Ro 13:14; Col 3:9f.; Eph 4:22-24; 6:11,14). In 1Th 5:8 Paul speaks of "putting on the breastplate of righteousness." He does not here mean that one enters into Christ and so is saved by means of baptism after the teaching of the mystery religions, but just the opposite. We are justified by faith in Christ, not by circumcision or by baptism. But baptism was the public profession and pledge, the soldier's _sacramentum_, oath of fealty to Christ, taking one's stand with Christ, the symbolic picture of the change wrought by faith already (Ro 6:4-6).

3:28 {There can be neither} (\ouk eni\). Not a shortened form of \enesti\, but the old lengthened form of \en\ with recessive accent. So \ouk eni\ means "there is not" rather than "there cannot be," a statement of a fact rather than a possibility, as Burton rightly shows against Lightfoot. {One man} (\heis\). No word for "man" in the Greek, and yet \heis\ is masculine, not neuter \hen\, "One moral personality" (Vincent). The point is that "in Christ Jesus" race or national distinctions ("neither Jew nor Greek") do not exist, class differences ("neither bond nor free," no proletarianism and no capitalism) vanish, sex rivalry ("no male and female") disappears. This radical statement marks out the path along which Christianity was to come in the sphere (en) and spirit and power of Christ. Candour compels one to confess that this goal has not yet been fully attained. But we are on the road and there is no hope on any way than on "the Jesus Road."

3:29 {If ye are Christ's} (ei de humeis Christou). This is the test, not the accident of blood, pride of race or nation, habiliments or environment of dress or family, whether man or woman. Thus one comes to belong to the seed of Abraham and to be an heir according to promise.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

4:1 {So long as} (\ep'h' hoson chronon\). "For how long a time," incorporation of the antecedent (\chronon\) into the relative clause. {The heir} (\ho kl^ronomos\). Old word (\kl^ros\, lot, \nemomai\, to possess). Illustration from the law of inheritance carrying on the last thought in 3:29. {A child} (\n^pios\). One that does not talk (\n^, epos\, word). That is a minor, an infant, immature intellectually and morally in contrast with \teleioi\, full grown (1Co 3:1; 14:20; Php 3:15; Eph 4:13). {From a bondservant} (\doulou\). Slave. Ablative case of comparison after \diapherei\ for which verb see on ^Mt 6:26. {Though he is lord of all} (\Kurios pant^"n ^n\). Concessive participle \^"n\, "being legally owner of all" (one who has the power, \ho ech^"n kuros\).

4:2 {Under guardians} (\hupo epitropous\). Old word from \epitrep^"\, to commit, to intrust. So either an overseer (Mt 20:8) or one in charge of children as here. It is common as the guardian of an orphan minor. Frequent in the papyri as guardian of minors. {Stewards} (\oikonomous\). Old word for manager of a household whether freeborn or slave. See Lu 12:42; 1Co 4:2. Papyri show it as manager of an estate and also as treasurer like Ro 16:23. No example is known where this word is used of one in charge of a minor and no other where both occur together. {Until the time appointed of the father} (\achri t^s prothesmias tou patros\). Supply \h^meras\ (day), for \prothesmios\ is an old adjective "appointed beforehand" (\pro, thesmos\, from \tith^mi\). Under Roman law the _tutor_ had charge of the child till he was fourteen when the curator took charge of him till he was twenty-five. Ramsay notes that in Graeco-Phrygia cities the same law existed except that the father in Syria appointed both tutor and curator whereas the Roman father appointed only the tutor. Burton argues plausibly that no such legal distinction is meant by Paul, but that the terms here designate two functions of one person. The point does not disturb Paul's illustration at all.

4:3 {When we were children} (\hote ^men n^pioi\). Before the epoch of faith came and we (Jews and Gentiles) were under the law as paedagogue, guardian, steward, to use all of Paul's metaphors. {We were held in bondage} (\h^meis ^metha dedoul^menoì). Periphrastic past perfect of \doulo^, to enslave, in a permanent state of bondage. {Under the rudiments of the world} (\hupo ta stoicheia tou kosmou). \Stoichos is row or rank, a series. So \stoicheion is any first thing in a \stoichos like the letters of the alphabet, the material elements in the universe (2Pe 3:10), the heavenly bodies (some argue for that here), the rudiments of any act (Heb 5:12; Ac 15:10; Ga 5:1; 4:3,9; Col 2:8,20). The papyri illustrate all the varieties in meaning of this word. Burton has a valuable excursus on the word in his commentary. Probably here (Lightfoot) Paul has in mind the rudimentary character of the law as it applies to both Jews and Gentiles, to all the knowledge of the world (\kosmos\ as the orderly material universe as in Col 2:8,20). See on ^Mt 13:38; Ac 17:24; 1Co 3:22. All were in the elementary stage before Christ came.

4:4 {The fulness of the time} (\to pl^r^ma tou chronou). Old word from \pl^ro^, to fill. Here the complement of the preceding time as in Eph 1:10. Some examples in the papyri in the sense of complement, to accompany. God sent forth his preexisting Son (Php 2:6) when the time for his purpose had come like the \prothesmia of verse 2. {Born of a woman} (\genomenon ek gunaikos). As all men are and so true humanity, "coming from a woman." There is, of course, no direct reference here to the Virgin Birth of Jesus, but his deity had just been affirmed by the words "his Son" (\ton huion autou), so that both his deity and humanity are here stated as in Ro 1:3. Whatever view one holds about Paul's knowledge of the Virgin Birth of Christ one must admit that Paul believed in his actual personal preexistence with God (2Co 8:9; Php 2:5-11), not a mere existence in idea. The fact of the Virgin Birth agrees perfectly with the language here. {Born under the law} (\genomenon hupo nomon). He not only became a man, but a Jew. The purpose (\hina) of God thus was plainly to redeem (\exagoras^i\, as in 3:13) those under the law, and so under the curse. The further purpose (\hina) was that we (Jew and Gentile) might receive (\apolab^men\, second aorist active subjunctive of \apolamban^), not get back (Lu 15:27), but get from (\apo) God the adoption (\t^n huiothesian). Late word common in the inscriptions (Deissmann, ^Bible Studies_, p. 239) and occurs in the papyri also and in Diogenes Laertes, though not in LXX. Paul adopts this current term to express his idea (he alone in the N.T.) as to how God takes into his spiritual family both Jews and Gentiles who believe. See also Ro 8:15,23; 9:4; Eph 1:5. The Vulgate uses _adoptio filiorum_. It is a metaphor like the others above, but a very expressive one.

4:6 {Because ye are sons} (\hoti este huioi). This is the reason for sending forth the Son (4:4 and here). We were "sons" in God's elective purpose and love. \Hoti is causal (1Co 12:15; Ro 9:7). {The Spirit of his Son} (\to pneuma tou huioi autou). The Holy Spirit, called the Spirit of Christ (Ro 8:9f.), the Spirit of Jesus Christ (Php 1:19). The Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father and from the Son (Joh 15:26). {Crying, Abba, Father} (\krazon Abba ho pat^r). The participle agrees with \pneuma neuter (grammatical gender), not neuter in fact. An old, though rare in present as here, onomatopoetic word to croak as a raven (Theophrastus, like Poe's _The Raven_), any inarticulate cry like "the unuttered groanings" of Ro 8:26 which God understands. This cry comes from the Spirit of Christ in our hearts. \Abba is the Aramaic word for father with the article and \ho pat^r translates it. The articular form occurs in the vocative as in Joh 20:28. It is possible that the repetition here and in Ro 8:15 may be "a sort of affectionate fondness for the very term that Jesus himself used" (Burton) in the Garden of Gethsemane (Mr 14:36). The rabbis preserve similar parallels. Most of the Jews knew both Greek and Aramaic. But there remains the question why Jesus used both in his prayer. Was it not natural for both words to come to him in his hour of agony as in his childhood? The same thing may be true here in Paul's case.

4:7 {No longer a bondservant} (\ouketi doulos). Slave. He changes to the singular to drive the point home to each one. The spiritual experience (3:2) has set each one free. Each is now a son and heir.

4:8 {To them which by nature are not gods} (\tois phusei m^ ousi theois). In 1Co 10:20 he terms them "demons," the "so-called gods" (1Co 8:5), worshipping images made by hands (Ac 17:29).

4:9 {Now that ye have come to know God} (\nun de gnontes). Fine example of the ingressive second aorist active participle of \gin^sk^, come to know by experience through faith in Christ. {Rather to be known of God} (\mallon de gn^sthentes hupo theou). First aorist passive participle of the same verb. He quickly turns it round to the standpoint of God's elective grace reaching them (verse 6). {How} (p“s). "A question full of wonder" (Bengel). See 1:6. {Turn ye back again?} (epistrephete palin?). Present active indicative, "Are ye turning again?" See \metatithesthe\ in 1:6. {The weak and beggarly rudiments} (ta asthen kai pt“cha stoicheia). The same \stoicheia\ in verse 3 from which they had been delivered, "weak and beggarly," still in their utter impotence from the Pharisaic legalism and the philosophical and religious legalism and the philosophical and religious quests of the heathen as shown by Angus's The Religious Quests of the Graeco-Roman World. These were eagerly pursued by many, but they were shadows when caught. It is pitiful today to see some men and women leave Christ for will o' the wisps of false philosophy. {Over again} (palin an“then). Old word, from above (an“) as in Mt 27:51, from the first (Lu 1:3), then "over again" as here, back to where they were before (in slavery to rites and rules).

4:10 {Ye observe} (parat reisthe). Present middle indicative of old verb to stand beside and watch carefully, sometimes with evil intent as in Lu 6:7, but often with scrupulous care as here (so in Dio Cassius and Josephus). The meticulous observance of the Pharisees Paul knew to a nicety. It hurt him to the quick after his own merciful deliverance to see these Gentile Christians drawn into this spider-web of Judaizing Christians, once set free, now enslaved again. Paul does not itemize the "days" (Sabbaths, fast-days, feast-days, new moons) nor the "months" (Isa 66:23) which were particularly observed in the exile nor the "seasons" (passover, pentecost, tabernacles, etc.) nor the "years" (sabbatical years every seventh year and the Year of Jubilee). Paul does not object to these observances for he kept them himself as a Jew. He objected to Gentiles taking to them as a means of salvation.

4:11 {I am afraid of you} (phoboumai humas). He shudders to think of it. {Lest by any means I have bestowed labour upon you in vain} (m^ p“s eik i kekopiaka eis humas). Usual construction after a verb of fearing about what has actually happened (m^ p“s) and the perfect active indicative of kopia“, to toil wearily). A fear about the future would be expressed by the subjunctive. Paul fears that the worst has happened.

4:12 {Be as I am} (ginesthe h“s eg“). Present middle imperative, "Keep on becoming as I am." He will not give them over, afraid though he is.

4:13 {Because of an infirmity of the flesh} (\di' astheneian t's sarkos\). All that we can get from this statement is the fact that Paul's preaching to the Galatians "the first time" or "the former time" (\to proteron\, adverbial accusative) was due to sickness of some kind whether it was eye trouble (4:15) which was a trial to them or to the thorn in the flesh (2Co 12:7) we do not know. It can be interpreted as applying to North Galatia or to South Galatia if he had an attack of malaria on coming up from Perga. But the narrative in Ac 13; 14 does not read as if Paul had planned to pass by Pisidia and by Lycaonia but for the attack of illness. The Galatians understood the allusion for Paul says "Ye know" (\oidate\).

4:14 {A temptation to you in my flesh} (\ton peirasmon hum' n en t'i sarki mou\). "Your temptation (or trial) in my flesh." Peirasmon can be either as we see in Jas 1:2,12ff. If trial here, it was a severe one. {Nor rejected} (\oude exeptusate\). First aorist active indicative of \ekptu'\, old word to spit out (Homer), to spurn, to loathe. Here only in N.T. Clemen (Primitive Christianity, p. 342) thinks it should be taken literally here since people spat out as a prophylactic custom at the sight of invalids especially epileptics. But Plutarch uses it of mere rejection. {As an angel of God} (\h's aggelon theou\), {as Christ Jesus} (\h's Christon I'soun\). In spite of his illness and repulsive appearance, whatever it was. Not a mere "messenger" of God, but a very angel, even as Christ Jesus. We know that at Lystra Paul was at first welcomed as Hermes the god of oratory (Ac 14:12f.). But that narrative hardly applies to these words, for they turned against Paul and Barnabas then and there at the instigation of Jews from Antioch in Pisidia and Iconium.

4:15 {That gratulation of yourselves} (\ho makarismos hum' n\). "Your felicitation." Rare word from \makariz'\, to pronounce happy, in Plato, Aristotle, Plutarch. See also Ro 4:6,9. You no longer felicitate yourselves on my presence with you. {Ye would have plucked out your eyes and given them to me} (\tous ophthalmous hum' n exoruxantes ed' kate moi\). This is the conclusion of a condition of the second class without \an\ expressed which would have made it clearer. But see Joh 16:22,24; Ro 7:7 for similar examples where the context makes it plain without \an\). It is strong language and is saved from hyperbole by "if possible" (\ei dunaton). Did Paul not have at this time serious eye trouble?

4:16 {Your enemy} (\echthros hum“n). Active sense of \echthros, hater with objective genitive. They looked on Paul now as an enemy to them. So the Pharisees and Judaizers generally now regarded him. {Because I tell you the truth} (\al^theu“n humin). Present active participle of \al^theu“, old verb from \al^th^s, true. In N.T. only here and Eph 4:15. "Speaking the truth." It is always a risky business to speak the truth, the whole truth. It may hit and hurt.

4:17 {They zealously seek you} (\z^lousin humas). \Z^lo“ is an old and a good word from \z^los (zeal, jealousy), but one can pay court with good motives or evil. So here in contrast with Paul's plain speech the Judaizers bring their fawning flattery. {To shut you out} (\ekkleisai humas). From Christ as he will show (5:4). {That ye may seek them} (\hina autous z^loute). Probably present active indicative with \hina as in \phusious (1Co 4:6) and \gin“skomen (1Jo 5:20). The contraction \-o^te would be \-“te, not \-oute (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 325).

4:18 {To be zealously sought in a good matter} (\z^lousthai en kal“i). Present passive infinitive. It is only in an evil matter that it is bad as here (\ou kalos). {When I am present} (\en t“i pareinai me). "In the being present as to me."

4:19 {I am in travail} (\“din“). I am in birth pangs. Old word for this powerful picture of pain. In N.T. only here, verse 27; Re 12:2. {Until Christ be formed in you} (\mechris hou morph“th^i Christos en humin). Future temporal clause with \mechris hou (until which time) and the first aorist passive subjunctive of \morpho“, late and rare verb, in Plutarch, not in LXX, not in papyri, only here in N.T. This figure is the embryo developing into the child. Paul boldly represents himself as again the mother with birth pangs over them. This is better than to suppose that the Galatians are pregnant mothers (Burton) by a reversal of the picture as in 1Th 2:7.

4:20 {I could with} (\^thelon). Imperfect active, I was wishing like Agrippa's use of \eboulom^n in Ac 25:22, "I was just wishing. I was longing to be present with you just now (\arti)."
{To change my voice} (\allaxai t^n ph“n^ n mou). Paul could put his heart into his voice. The pen stands between them. He knew the power of his voice on their hearts. He had tried it before. {I am perplexed} (\aporoumai). I am at a loss and know not what to do. \Apore“ is from \a privative and \poros, way. I am lost at this distance from you. {About you} (\en humin). In your cases. For this use of \en see 2Co 7:16; Ga 1:24.

4:21 {That desire to be under the law} (\hoi hupo nomon thelontes einai). "Under law" (no article), as in 3:23; 4:4, legalistic system. Paul views them as on the point of surrender to legalism, as "wanting" (\thelontes) to do it (1:6; 3:3; 4:11,17). Paul makes direct reference to these so disposed to "hear the law." He makes a surprising turn, but a legitimate one for the legalists by an allegorical use of Scripture.

4:22 {By the handmaid} (\ek t's paidisk's). From Ge 16:1. Feminine diminutive of \pais, boy or slave. Common word for damsel which came to be used for female slave or maidservant (Lu 12:45) or doorkeeper like Mt 26:29. So in the papyri.

4:23 {Is born} (\gegenn'tai). Perfect passive indicative of \genna“, stand on record so. {Through promise} (\di' epaggelias). In addition to being "after the flesh" (\kata sarka).

4:24 {Which things contain an allegory} (\hatina estin all'goroumena). Literally, "Which things are allegorized" (periphrastic present passive indicative of \all'gore“). Late word (Strabo, Plutarch, Philo, Josephus, ecclesiastical writers), only here in N.T. The ancient writers used \ainittomai to speak in riddles. It is compounded of \allo, another, and \agoreu“, to speak, and so means speaking something else than what the language means, what Philo, the past-master in the use of allegory, calls the deeper spiritual sense. Paul does not deny the actual historical narrative, but he simply uses it in an allegorical sense to illustrate his point for the benefit of his readers who are tempted to go under the burden of the law. He puts a secondary meaning on the narrative just as he uses \tupik“s in 1Co 10:11 of the narrative. We need not press unduly the difference between allegory and type, for each is used in a variety of ways. The allegory in one sense is a speaking parable like Bunyan's _Pilgrim's Progress_, the Prodigal Son in Lu 15, the Good Shepherd in Joh 10. But allegory was also used by Philo and by Paul here for a secret meaning not obvious at first, one not in the mind of the writer, like our illustration which throws light on the point. Paul was familiar with this rabbinical method of exegesis (Rabbi Akiba, for instance, who found a mystical sense in every hook and crook of the Hebrew letters) and makes skilful use of that knowledge here. Christian preachers in Alexandria early fell victims to Philo's allegorical method and carried it to excess without regard to the plain sense of the narrative. That startling style of preaching survives yet to the discredit of sound preaching. Please observe that Paul says here that he is using allegory, not ordinary interpretation. It is not necessary to say that Paul intended his readers to believe that this allegory was designed by the narrative. He illustrates his point by it. {For these are} (\hautai gar eisin). Allegorically interpreted, he means. {From Mount Sinai} (\apo orous Sinf). Spoken from Mount Sinai. {Bearing} (\genn“sa). Present active participle of \genna“, to beget of the male (Mt 1:1-16), more rarely as here to bear of the female (Lu 1:13,57). {Which is Hagar} (\h^tis estin Hagar). Allegorically interpreted.

4:25 {This Hagar} (\to Hagar). Neuter article and so referring to the word Hagar (not to the woman, \h^ Hagar) as applied to the mountain. There is great variety in the MSS. here. The Arabians are descendants of Abraham and Hagar (her name meaning wanderer or fugitive). {Answereth to} (\suntoichei). Late word in Polybius for keeping step in line (military term) and in papyri in figurative sense as here. Lightfoot refers to the Pythagorean parallels of opposing principles (\sunstoichiai) as shown here by Paul (Hagar and Sarah, Ishmael and Isaac, the old covenant and the new covenant, the earthly Jerusalem and the heavenly Jerusalem). That is true, and there is a correlative correspondence as the line is carried on.

4:26 {The Jerusalem that is above} (\h^ an“ Ierousal^m). Paul uses the rabbinical idea that the heavenly Jerusalem corresponds to the one here to illustrate his point without endorsing their ideas. See also Re 21:2. He uses the city of Jerusalem to represent the whole Jewish race (Vincent).

4:27 {Which is our mother} (\h^tis estin m^t^r h^m“n). The mother of us Christians, apply the allegory of Hagar and Sarah to us. The Jerusalem above is the picture of the Kingdom of God. Paul illustrates the allegory by quoting Isa 54:1, a song of triumph looking for deliverance from a foreign yoke. {Rejoice} (\euphranth^{ti}\). First aorist passive imperative of \euphrain“\.

{Break forth} (\r^{xon}\). First aorist active imperative of \r^{gnumi}\, to rend, to burst asunder. Supply \euphrosunⁿ\ (joy) as in Isa 49:13. {The desolate} (\t^s er^{mou}\). The prophet refers to Sarah's prolonged barrenness and Paul uses this fact as a figure for the progress and glory of Christianity (the new Jerusalem of freedom) in contrast with the old Jerusalem of bondage (the current Judaism). His thought has moved rapidly, but he does not lose his line.

4:28 {Now we} (\h^{meis} de\). Some MSS. have \humeis de\ (now ye).
In either case Paul means that Christians (Jews and Gentiles) are children of the promise as Isaac was (\kata Isaak\, after the manner of Isaac).

4:29 {Persecuted} (\edi^{ken}\). Imperfect active of \di^k“, to pursue, to persecute. Ge 21:9 has in Hebrew "laughing," but the LXX has "mocking." The Jewish tradition represents Ishmael as shooting arrows at Isaac. {So now} (\houtos kai nun\) the Jews were persecuting Paul and all Christians (1Th 2:15f.).

4:30 {Cast out} (\ekbale\). Second aorist active imperative of \ekball“\, Quotation from Ge 21:10 (Sarah to Abraham) and confirmed in 21:12 by God's command to Abraham. Paul gives allegorical warning thus to the persecuting Jews and Judaizers.
{Shall not inherit} (\ou m^{kl^{ronom}sei}\). Strong negative (\ou m[^]\ and future indicative). "The law and the gospel cannot co-exist. The law must disappear before the gospel" (Lightfoot).
See 3:18,29 for the word "inherit."

4:31 {But of the freewoman} (\alla t^s eleutheras\). We are children of Abraham by faith (3:7).

5:1 {With freedom} (\tⁱ eleutherifi). Rather dative case instead of instrumental, "for freedom," "for the (article) freedom that belongs to us children of the freewoman" (4:31). {Did Christ set us free} (\h^{mas} Christos ^{leuther}“sen). Effective aorist active indicative of \eleuthero“ (from ^{erchomai}, to go, go free). {Stand fast therefore} (\st^{kete}oun). See on Mr 3:31; 1Co 16:13 for this late word from perfect stem of \hist^{mi}, "keep on standing therefore," "stay free since Christ set you free." {Be not entangled again} (\m^{palin} enechesthe). "Stop being held in by a yoke of bondage." Common word for ensnare by trap. The Judaizers were trying to lasso the Galatians for the old yoke of Judaism.

5:2 {I Paul} (\eg^{Paulos}). Asserts all his personal and apostolic authority. For both words see also 1Th 2:16; 2Co 10:1; Col 1:23; Eph 3:1. {If ye receive circumcision} (\ean peritemn^{sthe}). Condition of third class and present passive subjunctive, a supposable case, but with terrible consequences, for they will make circumcision a condition of salvation. In that case Christ will help them not at all.

5:3 {A debtor} (\opheilet^s). Common word from \opheil“, to owe for one who has assumed an obligation. See on [˘]Mt 6:12. See Ga 3:10. He takes the curse on himself.

5:4 {Ye are severed from Christ} (\kat^{rg^{th^{te}}} apo Christou). First aorist passive of \katarge“, to make null and void as in Ro 7:2,6. {Who would be justified by the law} (\hoitines en nomⁱ dikaious^{the}). Present passive conative indicative, "ye who are trying to be justified in the law." {Ye are fallen away from grace} (\t^s charitos exepesate). Second aorist active indicative of \ekpipt[“] (with |a| variable vowel of the first aorist) and followed by the ablative case. "Ye did fall out of grace," "ye left the sphere of grace in Christ and took your stand in the sphere of law" as your hope of salvation. Paul does not mince words and carries the logic to the end of the course. He is not, of course, speaking of occasional sins, but he has in mind a far more serious matter, that of substituting law for Christ as the agent in salvation.

5:5 {For we} (\h^meis gar). We Christians as opposed to the legalists. {Through the Spirit by faith} (\pneumati ek piste“s). By the Spirit (Holy Spirit) out of faith (not law). Clear-cut repetition to make it plain.

5:6 {Availleth anything} (\ischuei ti). Old word to have strength (\isch-s). See on ¹Mt 5:13. Neither Jew nor Greek has any recommendation in his state. See 3:28. All stand on a level in Christ. {Faith working through love} (*\pistis di' agap^s energoumen^ *). Middle voice of \energe“ and "through love," "the moral dynamic" (Burton) of Paul's conception of freedom from law.

5:7 Who did hinder you? (\tis humas enekopsen?). First aorist active indicative of \enkopt“, to cut in on one, for all the world like our use of one cutting in on us at the telephone. For this late verb see on ¹Ac 24:4; 1Th 2:18. Note the singular \tis. There was some ringleader in the business. Some one "cut in" on the Galatians as they were running the Christian race and tried to trip them or to turn them.

5:8 {This persuasion} (*\h^ peismon^ *). "The art of persuasion," the effort of the Judaizers to persuade you. Only here and in ecclesiastical writers.

5:9 This proverb Paul has in 1Co 5:6. It is merely the pervasive power of leaven that is involved in the proverb as in Mt 13:33, not the use of leaven as a symbol of evil.

5:10 {Whosoever he be} (*\hostis ean^i *). Indefinite relative clause with \ean and subjunctive. It seems unlikely that Paul knew precisely who the leader was. In 1:6 he uses the plural of the same verb \tarass“ and see also \anastatountes in verse 12.

5:11 {Why am I still persecuted?} (\ti eti di“komai?). Some of the Judaizers even circulated the slander that Paul preached circumcision in order to ruin his influence.

5:12 {I would} (\ophelon). Would that, used as conjunction in wishes. See on ¹Co 4:2; 2Co 11:1. Here a wish about the future with future indicative. {They which unsettle you} (\hoi anastatountes humas). Late verb from \anastatos, driven from one's abode, and in papyri in this sense as well as in sense of upsetting or disturbing one's mind (boy's letter) as here. In Ac 17:6; 21:38 we have it in sense of making a commotion. {Cut themselves off} (\apokopsontai\). Future middle of \apokopt\, old word to cut off as in Ac 27:32, here to mutilate.

5:13 {Ye were called for freedom} (\ep' eleutherifi ekl'th'te\). The same point as in 5:1 made plainer by the use of \ep\ (on the basis of, for the purpose of). See 1Th 4:7 for this use of \epi\. {Only use not} (\monon m^\). No word for "use" in the Greek. Probably supply \trepete\ or \strephe\, "turn not your liberty into an occasion for the flesh" (\eis aphorm^n t'i sarki\), as a spring board for license. On \aphorm^\, see on 2Co 5:12. Liberty so easily turns to license.

5:14 {Even in this} (\en t'i\). Just the article with \en\, "in the," but it points at the quotation from Le 19:18. Jews (Lu 10:29) confined "neighbour" (\pl'sion\) to Jews. Paul uses here a striking paradox by urging obedience to the law against which he has been arguing, but this is the moral law as proof of the new love and life. See also Ro 13:8, precisely as Jesus did (Mt 22:40).

5:15 {If ye bite and devour one another} (\ei all'lous daknete kai katesthiete\). Condition of first class assumed as true. Two common and old verbs often used together of wild animals, or like cats and dogs. {That ye be not consumed one of another} (\m^ hup' all'l'n anal'th'te\). Negative final clause with first aorist passive subjunctive of \analisk\, old word to consume or spend. In N.T. only here and Lu 9:54. There is a famous story of two snakes that grabbed each other by the tail and each swallowed the other.

5:16 {Ye shall not fulfil} (\ou m^ teles'te\). Rather, "Ye will not fulfil." Strong double negative with aorist active subjunctive. {The lust of the flesh} (\epithumian sarkos\). Bad sense here as usual in Paul, but not so in 1Th 2:17; Php 1:23. The word is just craving or longing (from \epi, thumos\, yearning after).

5:17 {Lusteth against} (\epithumei kata\). Like a tug of war. This use of \sarx\ as opposed to the Spirit (Holy Spirit) personifies \sarx\. Lightfoot argues that \epithumei\ cannot be used with the Spirit and so some other verb must be supplied for it. But that is wholly needless, for the verb, like \epithumia\, does not mean evil desire, but simply to long for. Christ and Satan long for the possession of the city of Man Soul as Bunyan shows. {Are contrary the one to the other} (\all^lois antikeitai\). Are lined up in conflict, face to face (\anti-), a spiritual duel (cf. Christ's temptations), with dative case of personal interest (\all^lois\). {That ye may not do} (\hina m^poi^te\). "That ye may not keep on doing" (present active subjunctive of poie“\). {That ye would} (\ha ean thel^te\). "Whatever ye wish" (indefinite relative with ean\ and present subjunctive).

5:18 {Under the law} (\hupo nomon\). Instead of "under the flesh" as one might expect. See Ga 3:2-6 for contrast between law and spirit. The flesh made the law weak (Rom 8:3; Heb 9:10,13). They are one and the same in result. See same idea in Ro 8:14. Note present tense of \agesthe\ (if you are continually led by the Spirit). See verse 23.

5:19 {Manifest} (\phanera\). Opposed to "hidden" (\krupta\). Ancient writers were fond of lists of vices and virtues. Cf. Stalker's sermons on _The Seven Cardinal Virtues_ and _The Seven Deadly Sins_. There are more than seven in this deadly list in verses 19-21. He makes the two lists in explanation of the conflict in verse 17 to emphasize the command in verses 13f. There are four groups in Paul's list of manifest vices: (1) Sensual sins like fornication (\porneia\, prostitution, harlotry), uncleanness (\akatharsia\, moral impurity), lasciviousness (\aselgeia\, wantonness), sexual vice of all kinds prevailed in heathenism. (2) Idolatry (\eid^latreia\, worship of idols) and witchcraft (\pharmakeia\ from pharmakon\, a drug, the ministering of drugs), but the sorcerers monopolized the word for a while in their magical arts and used it in connection with idolatry. In N.T. only here and Re 18:23. See Ac 19:19 \perierga\, curious arts. (3) Personal relations expressed by eight words, all old words, sins of the spirit, like enmities (\exthrai\, personal animosities), strife (\eris\, rivalry, discord), jealousies (\z^los\ or \z^loi\, MSS. vary, our very word), wraths (\thumoi\, stirring emotions, then explosions), factions (\eritheiai\, from erithos\, day labourer for hire, worker in wool, party spirit), divisions (\dichostasiai\, splits in two, dica\ and stasis), heresies (\haireseis\, the very word, but really choosings from haireomai\, preferences), envyings (\phthonoi\, feelings of ill-will). Surely a lively list. (4) {Drunkenness} (\methai\, old word and plural, drunken excesses, in N.T. only here and Lu 21:34; Ro 13:13), revellings (\k“moi\, old word also for drinking parties like those in honour of Bacchus, in N.T. only here and Ro 13:13; 1Pe 4:3). {And such like} (\kai ta homoia toutois\). And the things like these (associative instrumental \toutois\ after \homoia\, like). It is not meant to be exhaustive, but it is representative.

5:21 {Forewarn} (\proleg“\) {--did forewarn} (\proeipon\). Paul repeats his warning given while with them. He did his duty then. Gentile churches were peculiarly subject to these sins. But who is not in danger from them? {Practise} (\prassontes\). \Prass“\ is the verb for habitual practice (our very word, in fact), not \poie“\ for occasional doing. The {habit} of these sins is proof that one is not in the Kingdom of God and will not inherit it.

5:22 {The fruit of the Spirit} (\ho karpos tou pneumatos\). Paul changes the figure from {works} (\erga\) in verse 19 to fruit as the normal out-cropping of the Holy Spirit in us. It is a beautiful tree of fruit that Paul pictures here with nine luscious fruits on it: {Love} (\agap^). Late, almost Biblical word. First as in 1Co 13, which see for discussion as superior to \philia\ and \er“s\). {Joy} (\chara\). Old word. See on 1Th 1:6. {Peace} (\eir^n^). See on 1Th 1:1. {Long-suffering} (\makrothumia\). See on 2Co 6:6. {Kindness} (\chr^stot^s\). See on 2Co 6:6. {Goodness} (\agath“sun^). See on 2Th 1:11. {Faithfulness} (\pistis\). Same word as "faith." See on Mt 23:33; 1Co 13:7,13. {Meekness} (\praut^s\). See on 1Co 4:21; 2Co 10:1. {Temperance} (\egkrateia\). See on Ac 24:25. Old word from \egkrat^s\, one holding control or holding in. In N.T. only in these passages and 2Pe 1:6. Paul has a better list than the four cardinal virtues of the Stoics (temperance, prudence, fortitude, justice), though they are included with better notes struck. Temperance is alike, but kindness is better than justice, long-suffering than fortitude, love than prudence.

5:24 {Crucified the flesh} (\t^n sarka estaur“san\). Definite event, first aorist active indicative of \stauro“\ as in 2:19 (mystical union with Christ). Paul uses \sarx\ here in the same sense as in verses 16,17,19, "the force in men that makes for evil" (Burton). {With} (\sun\). "Together with," emphasizing "the completeness of the extermination of this evil force" and the guarantee of victory over one's passions and dispositions toward evil.

5:25 {By the Spirit let us also walk} (\pneumati kai stoich“men\). Present subjunctive (volitive) of \stoiche“, "Let us also go on walking by the Spirit." Let us make our steps by the help and guidance of the Spirit.

5:26 {Let us not be} (\m^gin“metha\). Present middle subjunctive (volitive), "Let us cease becoming vainglorious" (\kenodoxoi\), late word only here in N.T. (\kenos, doxa\). Once in Epictetus in same sense. {Provoking one another} (\all^lous prokaloumenoi\). Old word \prokale“, to call forth, to challenge to combat. Only here in N.T. and in bad sense. The word for "provoke" in Heb 10:24 is \paroxusmon\ (our "paroxysm"). {Envy} (\phthonountes\). Old verb from \phthonos\. Only here in N.T.

6:1 {If a man be overtaken} (\ean kai prol^mphth^i anthr^pos).

Condition of third class, first aorist passive subjunctive of \prolamban^s, old verb to take beforehand, to surprise, to detect. {Trespass} (\parapt^mati). Literally, a falling aside, a slip or lapse in the papyri rather than a wilful sin. In Polybius and Diodorus. _Koin,_ word. {Ye which are spiritual} (\hoi pneumatikoi). See on 1Co 3:1. The spiritually led (5:18), the spiritual experts in mending souls. {Restore} (\katartizete). Present active imperative of \katartiz^s, the very word used in Mt 4:21 of mending nets, old word to make \artios, fit, to equip thoroughly. {Looking to thyself} (\skop^n seauton). Keeping an eye on as in 2Co 4:18 like a runner on the goal. {Lest thou also be tempted} (\m^ kai su peirasth^is). Negative purpose with first aorist passive subjunctive. Spiritual experts (preachers in particular) need this caution. Satan loves a shining mark.

6:2 {Bear ye one another's burdens} (\all^l^n ta bar^bastazete). Keep on bearing (present active imperative of \bastaz^s, old word, used of Jesus bearing his Cross in Joh 19:17. \Baros means weight as in Mt 20:12; 2Co 4:17. It is when one's load (\phortion, verse 5) is about to press one down. Then give help in carrying it.) {Fulfil} (\anapl^r^sate). First aorist active imperative of \anapl^ro^s, to fill up, old word, and see on Mt 23:32; 1Th 2:16; 1Co 14:16. Some MSS. have future indicative (\anapl^r^sete).

6:3 {Something when he is nothing} (\ti m^den ^n). Thinks he is a big number being nothing at all (neuter singular pronouns). He is really zero. {He deceiveth himself} (\phrenapatfi heauton). Late compound word (\phr^n, mind, \apata^s, lead astray), leads his own mind astray. Here for first time. Afterwards in Galen, ecclesiastical and Byzantine writers. He deceives no one else.

6:5 {Each shall bear his own burden} (\to idion phortion bastasei). \Phortion is old word for ship's cargo (Ac 27:10). Christ calls his \phortion light, though he terms those of the Pharisees heavy (Mt 23:4), meant for other people. The terms are thus not always kept distinct, though Paul does make a distinction here from the \bar^ in verse 2.

6:6 {That is taught} (\ho kat^choumenos\). For this late and rare verb \kat^che^, see on 1Lu 1:4; Ac 18:25; 1Co 14:19. It occurs in the papyri for legal instruction. Here the present passive participle retains the accusative of the thing. The active (\t^i kat^chounti\)) joined with the passive is interesting as showing how early we find paid teachers in the churches. Those who receive instruction are called on to "contribute" (better than "communicate" for \koin^neit^\) for the time of the teacher (Burton). There was a teaching class thus early (1Th 5:12; 1Co 12:28; Eph 4:11; 1Th 5:17).

6:7 {Be not deceived} (\m^planfsthe\). Present passive imperative with \m^, "stop being led astray" (\plana^, common verb to wander, to lead astray as in Mt 24:4f.). {God is not mocked} (\ou mukt^rizetai\). This rare verb (common in LXX) occurs in Lysias. It comes from \mukt^r\ (nose) and means to turn the nose up at one. That is done towards God, but never without punishment, Paul means to say. In particular, he means "an evasion of his laws which men think to accomplish, but, in fact, cannot" (Burton). {Whatsoever a man soweth} (\ho ean speir^i anthr^pos\). Indefinite relative clause with \ean\ and the active subjunctive (either aorist or present, form same here). One of the most frequent of ancient proverbs (Job 4:8; Arist., Rhet. iii. 3). Already in 2Co 9:6. Same point in Mt 7:16; Mr 4:26f. {That} (\touto\). That very thing, not something different. {Reap} (\therisei\). See on 1Mt 6:26 for this old verb.

6:8 {Corruption} (\phthoran\). For this old word from \phtheir^, see on 1Co 15:42. The precise meaning turns on the context, here plainly the physical and moral decay or rottenness that follows sins of the flesh as all men know. Nature writes in one's body the penalty of sin as every doctor knows. {Eternal life} (\z^ai^nion\). See on 1Mt 25:46 for this interesting phrase so common in the Johannine writings. Plato used \ai^nios\ for perpetual. See also 2Th 1:9. It comes as nearly meaning "eternal" as the Greek can express that idea.

6:9 {Let us not be weary in well-doing} (\to kalon poiountes m^enkak^men\). Volitive present active subjunctive of \enkake^ on which see Lu 18:1; 2Th 3:13; 2Co 4:1,16 (\en, kakos, evil). Literally, "Let us not keep on giving in to evil while doing the good." It is curious how prone we are to give in and to give out in doing the good which somehow becomes prosy or insipid to us. {In due season} (\kair“i idi“i\). Locative case, "at its proper season" (harvest time). Cf. 1Ti 2:6; 6:15 (plural). {If we faint not} (\m^ ekluomenoi\). Present passive participle (conditional) with \m^. Cf. \eklu“, old verb to loosen out. Literally, "not loosened out," relaxed, exhausted as a result of giving in to evil (\enkak“men\).

6:10 {As we have opportunity} (\h“s kairon ech“men\). Indefinite comparative clause (present subjunctive without \an). "As we have occasion at any time." {Let us work that which is good} (\ergaz“metha to agathon\). Volitive present middle subjunctive of \ergazomai\, "Let us keep on working the good deed." {Of the household of faith} (\tous oikeious t^s piste“s\). For the obvious reason that they belong to the same family with necessary responsibility.

6:11 {With how large letters} (\p^likois grammasin\). Paul now takes the pen from the amanuensis (cf. Ro 16:22) and writes the rest of the Epistle (verses 11-18) himself instead of the mere farewell greeting (2Th 3:17; 1Co 16:21; Col 4:18). But what does he mean by "with how large letters"? Certainly not "how large a letter." It has been suggested that he employed large letters because of defective eyesight or because he could only write ill-formed letters because of his poor handwriting (like the print letters of children) or because he wished to call particular attention to this closing paragraph by placarding it in big letters (Ramsay). This latter is the most likely reason. Deissmann, (St. Paul, p. 51) argues that artisans write clumsy letters, yes, and scholars also. Milligan (Documents, p. 24; Vocabulary, etc.) suggests the contrast seen in papyri often between the neat hand of the scribe and the big sprawling hand of the signature. {I have written} (\egrapsa\). Epistolary aorist. {With mine own hand} (\t^i em^i cheiri\). Instrumental case as in 1Co 16:21.

6:12 {To make a fair show} (\eupros“p^sai\). First aorist active infinitive of \eupros“pe“, late verb from \eupros“pos\, fair of face (\eu, pros“pon\). Here only in N.T., but one example in papyri (Tebt. I. 19 12 B.C. 114) which shows what may happen to any of our N.T. words not yet found elsewhere. It is in Chrysostom and later writers. {They compel} (\anagkazousin\). Conative present active indicative, "they try to compel." {For the cross of Christ} (\t*“i staur“i tou Christou*\). Instrumental case (causal use, Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 532). Cf. 2Co 2:13. "For professing the cross of Christ" (Lightfoot).

6:13 {They who receive circumcision} (\hoi peritemnomenoi\). Present causative middle of \peritemn“, those who are having themselves circumcised. Some MSS. read \hoi peritetm^hmenoi\), "they who have been circumcised" (perfect passive participle). Probably the present (\peritemnomenoi\) is correct as the harder reading.

6:14 {Far be it from me} (\emoi m^h genoito\). Second aorist middle optative of \ginomai\ in a negative (\m^h\) wish about the future with dative case: "May it not happen to me." See 2:17. The infinitive \kauchfsthai\ (to glory) is the subject of \genoito\ as is common in the LXX, though not elsewhere in the N.T. {Hath been crucified unto me} (\emoi estaur^htai\). Perfect passive indicative of \stauro“, stands crucified, with the ethical dative again (\emoi\). This is one of the great sayings of Paul concerning his relation to Christ and the world in contrast with the Judaizers. Cf. 2:19f.; 3:13; 4:4f.; 1Co 1:23f.; Ro 1:16; 3:21ff.; 4:25; 5:18. {World} (\kosmos\) has no article, but is definite as in 2Co 5:19. Paul's old world of Jewish descent and environment is dead to him (Php 3:3f.).

6:15 {A new creature} (\kain^h ktisis\). For this phrase see on 2Co 5:17.

6:16 {By this rule} (\t*“i kanoni tout“i*\). For \kan^hn\, see on 2Co 10:13,15f.

6:17 {From henceforth} (\tou loipou\). Usually \to loipon\, the accusative of general reference, "as for the rest" (Php 3:1; 4:8). The genitive case (as here and Eph 6:10) means "in respect of the remaining time." {The marks of Jesus} (\ta stigmata tou I^hsou\). Old word from \stiz“, to prick, to stick, to sting. Slaves had the names or stamp of their owners on their bodies. It was sometimes done for soldiers also. There were devotees also who stamped upon their bodies the names of the gods whom they worshipped. Today in a round-up cattle are given the owner's mark. Paul gloried in being the slave of Jesus Christ. This is probably the image in Paul's mind since he bore in his body brandmarks of suffering for Christ received in many places (2Co 6:4-6; 11:23ff.), probably actual scars from the scourgings (thirty-nine lashes at a time). If for no other reason, listen to me by reason of these scars for Christ and "let no one keep on furnishing trouble to me."

6:18 The farewell salutation is much briefer than that in 2Co 13:13, but identical with that in Phm 1:25. He calls them "brethren" (adelphoi) in spite of the sharp things spoken to them.

1:1 {Of Christ Jesus} (\Christou I'sou\). So B D, though Aleph A L have \I'sou Christou\. Paul is named as the author and so he is. Otherwise the Epistle is pseudepigraphic. {By the will of God} (\dia thel'matos theou\). As in 1Co 1:1; 2Co 1:1; Ro 1:1. {At Ephesus} (\en Ephes'í\). In Aleph and B these words are inserted by later hands, though both MSS. give the title \Pros Ephesious\. Origen explains the words \tois hagiois tois ousin\ as meaning "the saints that are" (genuine saints), showing that his MSS. did not have the words \en Ephes'í\. The explanation of the insertion of these words has already been given in the remarks on "The Destination" as one copy of the general letter that was preserved in Ephesus. It is perfectly proper to call it the Epistle to the Ephesians if we understand the facts.

1:3 {Blessed} (\eulog'tos\). Verbal of \euloge'~, common in the LXX for Hebrew _baruk_ (Vulgate _benedictus_) and applied usually to God, sometimes to men (Ge 24:31), but in N.T. always to God (Lu 1:68), while \eulog'menos\ (perfect passive participle) is applied to men (Lu 1:42). "While \eulog'menos\ points to an isolated act or acts, \eulog'tos\ describes the intrinsic character" (Lightfoot). Instead of the usual \eucharistoumen\ (Col 1:3) Paul here uses \eulog'tos\, elsewhere only in 2Co 1:3 in opening, though in a doxology in Ro 1:25; 9:5; 2Co 11:31. The copula here is probably \estin\ (is), though either \est'~\ (imperative) or \ei'\ (optative as wish) will make sense. {The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\ho theos kai pat'r tou Kuriou h'm'~n I'sou Christou\). \Kai\ is genuine here, though not in Col 1:3. The one article (\ho\) with \theos kai pat'r\ links them together as in 1Th 1:3; 3:11,13; Ga 1:4. See also the one article in 2Pe 1:1,11. In Eph 1:17 we have \ho theos tou Kuriou h'm'~n I'sou Christou\, and the words of Jesus in Joh 20:17. {Who hath blessed us} (\ho eulog'sas humfs\). First aorist active participle of \euloge'~, the same word, antecedent action to the doxology (\eulog'tos\). {With} (\en\). So-called instrumental use of \en\ though {in} is clear. {Every spiritual blessing} (\pas~i eulogifi pneumatik'í\). Third use of the root \eulog\ (verbal, verb, substantive). Paul lovingly plays with the idea. The believer is a citizen of heaven and the spiritual blessings count for most to him. {In the heavenly places in Christ} (\en tois epouraniois en Christ“i). In four other places in Eph. (1:20; 2:6; 3:10; 6:12). This precise phrase (with en) occurs nowhere else in the N.T. and has a clearly local meaning in 1:20; 2:6; 3:10, doubtful in 6:12, but probably so here. In 2:6 the believer is conceived as already seated with Christ. Heaven is the real abode of the citizen of Christ's kingdom (Php 3:20) who is a stranger on earth (Php 1:27; Eph 2:19). The word \epouranios (heavenly) occurs in various passages in the N.T. in contrast with \ta epigeia (the earthly) as in Joh 3:12; 1Co 15:40,48,49; Php 2:10, with \patris (country) in Heb 11:16, with \kl“sis (calling) in Heb 3:1, with \d“rea (gift) in Heb 6:4, with \basileia (kingdom) in 2Ti 4:18.

1:4 {Even as he chose us in him} (\kath“s exelexato h^mfs en aut“i). First aorist middle indicative of \ekleg“, to pick out, to choose. Definitive statement of God's elective grace concerning believers in Christ. {Before the foundation of the world} (\pro katabol“s kosmou). Old word from \kataball“, to fling down, used of the deposit of seed, the laying of a foundation. This very phrase with \pro in the Prayer of Jesus (Joh 17:24) of love of the Father toward the Son. It occurs also in 1Pe 1:20. Elsewhere we have \apo (from) used with it (Mt 25:34; Lu 11:50; Heb 4:3; 9:26; Re 13:8; 17:8). But Paul uses neither phrase elsewhere, though he has \apo t“n ai“n“n (from the ages) in Eph 3:9. Here in Eph 1:3-14. Paul in summary fashion gives an outline of his view of God's redemptive plans for the race. {That we should be} (\einai h^mfs). Infinitive of purpose with the accusative of general reference (\h^mfs). See Col 1:22 for the same two adjectives and also \katen“pion autou.

1:5 {Having foreordained us} (\Proorisas h^mfs). First aorist active participle of \prooriz“, late and rare compound to define or decide beforehand. Already in Ac 4:28; 1Co 2:7; Ro 8:29. See also verse 11. Only other N.T. example in verse 11. To be taken with \exelexato either simultaneous or antecedent (causal). {Unto adoption as sons} (\eis huiiothesian). For this interesting word see Ga 4:5; Ro 8:15; 9:4. {Unto himself} (\eis auton). Unto God. {According to the good pleasure of his will} (\kata t^“n eudokian tou thel^matos autou). Here \eudokian means {purpose} like \boul^“n in verse 11 rather than {benevolence}

(good pleasure). Note the preposition \kata\ here for standard.

1:6 {To the praise} (\eis epainon\). Note the prepositions in this sentence. {Which} (\h^s\). Genitive case of the relative \h^n\ (cognate accusative with \echarit^sen\ (he freely bestowed), late verb \charito^ (from \charis\, grace), in N.T. attracted to case of antecedent \charitos\ only here and Lu 1:28. {In the Beloved} (\en t^i ^gap^men^i\). Perfect passive participle of \agapa^\. This phrase nowhere else in the N.T. though in the Apostolic Fathers.

1:7 {In whom} (\en h^i\). Just like Col 1:14 with \parapt^mat^nan\ (trespasses) in place of \hamarti^nan\ (sins) and with the addition of \dia tou haimatos autou\ (through his blood) as in Col 1:20. Clearly Paul makes the blood of Christ the cost of redemption, the ransom money (\lutron\, Mt 20:28; Mr 10:45; \antilutron\, 1Ti 2:6). See Col 1:9.

1:8 {According to the riches of his grace} (\kata to ploutos t^s charitos autou\). A thoroughly Pauline phrase, riches of kindness (Ro 2:4), riches of glory (Col 1:27; Eph 3:16; Php 4:19), riches of fulness of understanding (Col 2:7), riches of Christ (Eph 3:8), and in Eph 2:7 "the surpassing riches of grace." {Which} (\h^s\). Genitive attracted again to case of antecedent \charitos\.

1:9 {The mystery of his will} (\to must^rion tou thel^matos autou\). Once hidden, now revealed as in Col 1:26 which see. See also Col 2:3. {Which he purposed} (\h^n proetheto\). Second aorist middle of \protith^mi\, old verb, for which see Ro 1:13; 3:25.

1:10 {Unto a dispensation of the fulness of the times} (\eis oikonomian tou pl^r^matos t^nan kair^nan\). See Col 1:25 for \oikonomian\. In Ga 4:4 "the fulness of the time" (\to pl^r^ma tou chronou\) the time before Christ is treated as a unit, here as a series of epochs (\kair^nan\). Cf. Mr 1:15; Heb 1:1. On \pl^r^ma\ see also Ro 11:26; Eph 3:19; 4:13. {To sum up} (\anakephalai^sasthai\). Purpose clause (amounting to result) with first aorist middle infinitive of \anakephalaio^, late compound verb \ana\ and \kephalaio^ (from \kephalaion\, Heb 8:1, and that from \kephal^, head), to head up all things in Christ, a literary word. In N.T. only here and Ro 13:9. For the headship of Christ in nature and grace see Col 1:15-20.

1:11 {In him} (\en aut“i\). Repeats the idea of \en t“i Christ“i\ of verse 10. {We were made a heritage} (\ekl“r“th^men\). First aorist passive of \kl^ro“, an old word, to assign by lot (\kl^ros\), to make a \kl^ros\ or heritage. So in LXX and papyri. Only time in N.T., though \proskl^ro“\ once also (Ac 17:4). {Purpose} (\prothesin\). Common substantive from \protith^mi\, a setting before as in Ac 11:23; 27:13.

1:12 {To the end that we should be} (\eis to einai h^mfs\). Final clause with \eis\ to and the infinitive \einai\ (see the mere infinitive \einai\ in verse 4) and the accusative of general reference. {Who had before hoped in Christ} (\tous pro^lpikotas en t“i Christ“i\). Articular perfect active participle of \proelpiz“, late and rare compound (here only in N.T.) and the reference of \pro\ not clear. Probably the reference is to those who like Paul had once been Jews and had now found the Messiah in Jesus, some of whom like Simeon and Anna had even looked for the spiritual Messiah before his coming.

1:13 {Ye also} (\kai humeis\). Ye Gentiles (now Christians), in contrast to \h^mfs\ (we) in 12. {In whom} (\en h“i\). Repeated third time (once in verse 11, twice in 13), and note \ho\ or \hos\ in 14. {Ye were sealed} (\esphragisth^te\). First aorist passive indicative of \sphragiz“, old verb, to set a seal on one as a mark or stamp, sometimes the marks of ownership or of worship of deities like \stigmata\ (Ga 6:17). Marked and authenticated as God's heritage as in 4:30. See 2Co 1:22 for the very use of the metaphor here applied to the Holy Spirit even with the word \arrab“n\ (earnest). {Spirit} (\pneumati\). In the instrumental case.

1:14 {An earnest} (\arrab“n\). See 2Co 1:22 for discussion of \arrab“n\. Here "of promise" (\t^s epaggelias\) is added to the Holy Spirit to show that Gentiles are also included in God's promise of salvation. {Of our inheritance} (\t^s kl^ronomias h^m“n\). God's gift of the Holy Spirit is the pledge and first payment for the final inheritance in Christ. {Of God's own possession} (\t^s peripoi^se“s\). The word {God's} is not in the Greek, but is implied. Late and rare word (from \peripoie“, to make a survival) with the notion of obtaining (1Th 5:9; 2Th 3:14) and then of preserving (so in the papyri). So in 1Pe 2:9; Heb 10:39, and here. God has purchased us back to himself. The sealing extends (\eis\) to the redemption and to the glory of God.

1:15 {And which ye shew toward all the saints} (\kai tⁿ eis pantas tous hagiou\). The words "ye show" do not occur in the Greek. The Textus Receptus has \ten agapⁿ\ (the love) before \tⁿ\ supported by D G K L Syr., Lat., Copt., but Aleph A B P Origen do not have the word \agapⁿ\. It could have been omitted, but is probably not genuine. The use of the article referring to \pistin\ and the change from \en\ to \eis\ probably justifies the translation "which ye shew toward."

1:16 {I do not cease} (\ou pauomai\). Singular present middle, while in Col 1:9 Paul uses the plural (literary, or including Timothy), \ou pauometha\.

1:17 {The Father of glory} (\ho pat^r t^s dox^s\). The God characterized by glory (the Shekinah, Heb 9:5) as in Ac 7:2; 1Co 2:8; 2Co 1:3; Jas 2:1. {That--may give} (\hina--dⁱ\). In Col 1:9 \hina\ is preceded by \aitoumenoi\, but here the sub-final use depends on the general idea asking in the sentence. The form \dⁱ\ is a late _Koin,_ optative (second aorist active) for the usual \doi\ . It occurs also in 2Th 3:16; Ro 15:5; 2Ti 1:16,18 in the text of Westcott and Hort. Here B 63 read \dⁱ\ (like Joh 15:16) second aorist active subjunctive, the form naturally looked for after a primary tense (\pauomai\). This use of the volitive optative with \hina\ after a primary tense is rare, but not unknown in ancient Greek. {A spirit of wisdom and revelation} (\pneuma sophias kai apokalypse^s\). The Revised Version does not refer this use of \pneuma\ to the Holy Spirit (cf. Ga 6:1; Ro 8:15), but it is open to question if it is possible to obtain this wisdom and revelation apart from the Holy Spirit. {In the knowledge of him} (\en epign^s autou\). In the full knowledge of Christ as in Colossians.

1:18 {Having the eyes of your heart enlightened} (\peph^{tismenous} tous ophthalmous t^s kardias humⁿ\). A beautiful figure, the heart regarded as having eyes looking out toward Christ. But the grammar is difficult. There are three possible interpretations. One is an anacoluthon, the case of \peph^{tismenous}\ being changed from the dative \humin\ (to you) to the accusative because of the following infinitive like \eklexamenous\ (Ac 15:22) after \apostolois\ . Another way of explaining it is to regard it as a tertiary predicate of \dⁱ\, a loose expansion of \pneuma\ . The third way is to regard the construction as the accusative absolute, a rare idiom possible in Ac 26:3; 1Co 16:3; 1Ti 2:6. In this case, the participle merely agrees with \tous ophthalmous\, not with \humin\, "the eyes of your heart having been enlightened." Otherwise \tous ophthalmous\ is the accusative retained after the passive participle. {That ye may know} (\eis to eidenai\). Final use of \eis to\ and the infinitive (second perfect of \oida) as in verse 12. Note three indirect questions after \eidenai\ (what the hope \tis h^ elpis\, what the riches \tis ho ploutos\, and what the surpassing greatness \kai ti to huperballon megethos). When the Holy Spirit opens the eyes of the heart, one will be able to see all these great truths. {In the saints} (\en tois hagiois\). Our riches is in God, God's is in his saints.

1:19 {The exceeding greatness of his power} (\to huperballon megethos t^s duname^s autou\). \Megethos\ is an old word (from \megas), but here only in N.T. \Huperballon\, present active participle of \huperball^~, reappears in 2:7; 3:19 and seen already in 2Co 3:10; 9:14. To enlightened eyes the greatness of God's power is even more "surpassing."

1:20 {Which he wrought} (\en^rg^ken\). Reading of A B rather than aorist \en^rg^sen\. Perfect active indicative, "which he has wrought." \H^n\ is cognate accusative of the relative referring to \energeian\ (energy) with \en^rg^ken\ and note also \kratous\ (strength) and \ischuos\ (might), three words trying to express what surpasses (\huperballon\) expression or comprehension. {Made him to sit} (\kathisas\). First aorist active participle of \kathiz^~ in causative sense as in 1Co 6:4. Metaphorical local expression like \dexifi\ and \en tois epour aniois\.

1:21 {Far above all rule} (\huperan^~ pas^s arch^s\). Late compound adverbial preposition (\huper, an^~) with the ablative case. In N.T. only here and Heb 9:5. As in Col 1:16, so here Paul claims primacy for Jesus Christ above all angels, aeons, what not. These titles all were used in the Gnostic speculations with a graduated angelic hierarchy. {World} (\ai^~ni\). "Age." See this identical expression in Mt 12:32 for the present time (Gal 1:4; 1Ti 6:17) and the future life (Eph 2:7; Lu 20:35). Both combined in Mr 10:30; Lu 18:30.

1:22 {He put all things in subjection} (\panta hupetaxen\). First aorist active indicative of \hupotass^~, quoted from Ps 8:7 as in 1Co 15:27. {Gave him to be head} (\auton ed^ken kephal^n\).

{Gave} (\ed“ken\, first aorist active indicative of \did“mi) to the church (the universal spiritual church or kingdom as in Col 1:18,24) Christ as Head (\kephal^n\, predicate accusative). This conception of \ekkl^sia\ runs all through Ephesians (3:10,21; 5:23,24,25,27,29,32).

1:23 {Which} (\h^tis\). "Which in fact is," explanatory use of \h^tis\ rather than \h^. {The fulness of him that filleth all in all} (\to pl^r“ma tou ta panta en pfsin pl^roumenou\). This is probably the correct translation of a much disputed phrase. This view takes \pl^r“ma\ in the passive sense (that which is filled, as is usual, Col 1:19) and \pl^roumenou\ as present middle participle, not passive. All things are summed up in Christ (1:10), who is the \pl^r“ma\ of God (Col 1:19), and in particular does Christ fill the church universal as his body. Hence we see in Ephesians the Dignity of the Body of Christ which is ultimately to be filled with the fulness (\pl^r“ma\) of God (3:19) when it grows up into the fulness (\pl^r“ma\) of Christ (4:13,16).

2:1 {And you did he quicken} (\kai humfs). The verb for {did he quicken} does not occur till verse 5 and then with \h^mfs (us) instead of \humfs (you). There is a like ellipsis or anacoluthon in Col 1:21,22, only there is no change from \humfs to \h^mfs. {When ye were dead} (\ontas nekrous). Present active participle referring to their former state. Spiritually dead. {Trespases and sins} (\parapt^masin kai hamartiais). Both words (locative case) though only one in verse 5.

2:2 {According to the course of this world} (\kata ton ai^na tou kosmou toutou). Curious combinations of \ai^n (a period of time), \kosmos (the world in that period). See 1Co 1:20 for "this age" and 1Co 3:9 for "this world." {The prince of the power of the air} (\ton archonta t^s exousias tou aeros). \A^r was used by the ancients for the lower and denser atmosphere and \aith^r for the higher and rarer. Satan is here pictured as ruler of the demons and other agencies of evil. Jesus called him "the prince of this world" (\ho arch^n tou kosmou toutou, Joh 16:11). {That now worketh} (\tou nun energountos). Those who deny the existence of a personal devil cannot successfully deny the vicious tendencies, the crime waves, in modern men. The power of the devil in the lives of men does explain the evil at work "in the sons of disobedience" (\en tois huiois t^s apethias). In 5:6 also. A Hebrew idiom found in the papyri like "sons of light" (1Th 5:5).

2:3 {We also all} (\kai h^meis pantes). We Jews. {Once lived} (\anestraph^men pote). Second aorist passive indicative of \anastreph^, old verb, to turn back and forth, to live (2Co 1:12). Cf. \pote periepat^sate, of the Gentiles in verse 2. {The desires} (\ta thel^mata). Late and rare word except in LXX and N.T., from \thel^, to will, to wish. Plural here "the wishes," "the wills" of the flesh like \tais epithumiais t^s sarkos just before. Gentiles had no monopoly of such sinful impulses. {Of the mind} (\t^n dianoia^n). Plural again, "of the thoughts or purposes." {Were by nature children of wrath} (\^metha tekna phusei org^s). This is the proper order of these words which have been the occasion of much controversy. There is no article with \tekna\. Paul is insisting that Jews as well as Gentiles ("even as the rest") are the objects of God's wrath (\org^s\) because of their lives of sin. See Ro 2:1-3:20 for the full discussion of this to Jews unpalatable truth. The use of \phusei\ (associative instrumental case of manner) is but the application of Paul's use of "all" (\pantes\) as shown also in Ro 3:20; 5:12. See \phusei\ of Gentiles in Ro 2:14. The implication of original sin is here, but not in the form that God's wrath rests upon little children before they have committed acts of sin. The salvation of children dying before the age of responsibility is clearly involved in Ro 5:13f.

2:4 {But God} (\ho de theos\). Change in the structure of the sentence here, resuming verse 1 after the break. {Being rich in mercy} (\plousios "n en eleei\). More than \ele^m^"n\ (being merciful). {Wherewith} (\h^"n\). Cognate accusative with \^gap^sen\ (loved).

2:5 {Even when we were dead} (\kai ontas h^mfs nekrous\). Repeats the beginning of verse 1, but he changes \humfs\ (you Gentiles) to \h^mfs\ (us Jews). {Quickened us together with Christ} (\sunez^"poi^sen t^"i Christ^"i\). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb \sunz^"opoie^"\ as in Col 2:13 which see. Associative instrumental case in \Christ^"i\). Literal resurrection in the case of Jesus, spiritual in our case as pictured in baptism. {By grace have ye been saved} (\chariti este ses^"smeno\). Instrumental case of \chariti\ and perfect passive periphrastic indicative of \s^"z^"\. Parenthetical clause interjected in the sentence. All of grace because we were dead.

2:6 {In Christ Jesus} (\en Christ^"i I^sou\). All the preceding turns on this phrase. See Col 3:1 for the word \sun^geiren\). {Made to sit with him} (\sunekathisen\). First aorist active indicative of \sunkathiz^"\, old causative verb, but in N.T. only here and Lu 22:55.

2:7 {That he might shew} (\hina endeix^tai\). Final clause with \hina\ and first aorist middle subjunctive of \endeiknumi\). See 1:7 for "riches of grace" and 1:19 for "exceeding" (\hyperballon\). {In kindness toward us} (\en chr^stot^"ti eph' h^mfs\). See Ro 2:7 for this word from \chr^stos\ and that from \chraomai\, here God's benignity toward us.

2:8 {For by grace} (\t^"i gar chariti\). Explanatory reason. "By the grace" already mentioned in verse 5 and so with the article. {Through faith} (\dia piste"s\). This phrase he adds in repeating what he said in verse 5 to make it plainer. "Grace" is God's part, "faith" ours. {And that} (\kai touto\). Neuter, not feminine \taut^\, and so refers not to \pistis\ (feminine) or to \charis\ (feminine also), but to the act of being saved by grace conditioned on faith on our part. Paul shows that salvation does not have its source (\ex hum"n\, out of you) in men, but from God. Besides, it is God's gift (\d"ron\) and not the result of our work.

2:9 {That no man should glory} (\hina m^tis kauch^s^tai\). Negative final clause (\hina m^\) with first aorist middle subjunctive of \kauchaomai\. It is all of God's grace.

2:10 {Workmanship} (\poi^ma\). Old word from \poie"\" with the ending \-mat\ meaning result. In N.T. only here and Re 1:20. {Created} (\ktisthentes\). First aorist passive participle of \ktiz"\", not the original creation as in Col 1:16; Eph 3:9, but the moral and spiritual renewal in Christ, the new birth, as in Eph 2:15; 4:24. {For good works} (\epi ergois agathois\). Probably the true dative of purpose here with \epi\ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 605). Purpose of the new creation in Christ. {Which} (\hois\). Attraction of the relative \ha\ (accusative after pro^toimasen) to case of the antecedent \ergois\. {Afore prepared} (\pro^toimasen\). First aorist active indicative of \pro^toimaz"\", old verb to make ready beforehand. In N.T. only here and Ro 9:23. Good works by us were included in the eternal foreordination by God. {That we should walk in them} (\hina en autois peripat^s"men\). Expexegetic final clause explanatory of the election to good works.

2:11 {Wherefore} (\dio\). This conjunction applies to the Gentile Christians the arguments in 2:1-10. {That aforetime ye} (\hoti pote humeis\). No verb is expressed, but in verse 12 Paul repeats \hoti en t"i kair"i ekein"i\ (for pote) "that at that time" and inserts \^te\ (ye were). {Uncircumcision} (\akrobustia\), {circumcision} (\peritom^s\). The abstract words are used to describe Gentiles and Jews as in Ga 5:6; Rom 2:27. {Made by hands} (\cheiropoi^tou\). Agreeing with \peritom^s\). Verbal (Mr 14:58) from \cheiropoie"\" like \acheiropoi^tos\ in Col 2:11.

2:12 {Separate from Christ} (\ch"ris Christou\). Ablative case with adverbial preposition \ch“ris\, describing their former condition as heathen. {Alienated from the commonwealth of Israel} (\ap^llotri“menoi t^s politeias tou Isra^l\). Perfect passive participle of \apallotrio“, for which see Col 1:21. Here followed by ablative case \politeias\, old word from \politeu“, to be a citizen (Php 1:27) from \polit^s\ and that from \polis\ (city). Only twice in N.T., here as commonwealth (the spiritual Israel or Kingdom of God) and Ac 22:28 as citizenship. {Strangers from the covenants of the promise} (\xenoi t“n diath^k“n t^s epaggelias\). For \xenos\ (Latin _hospes_), as stranger see Mt 25:35,38,43f., as guest-friend see Ro 16:23. Here it is followed by the ablative case \diath^k“n\. {Having no hope} (\elpida m^ echontes\). No hope of any kind. In Ga 4:8 \ouk\ (strong negative) occurs with \eidotes theon\, but here \m^ gives a more subjective picture (1Th 4:5). {Without God} (\atheoi\). Old Greek word, not in LXX, only here in N.T. Atheists in the original sense of being without God and also in the sense of hostility to God from failure to worship him. See Paul's words in Ro 1:18-32. "In the world" (\en t“i kosm“i\) goes with both phrases. It is a terrible picture that Paul gives, but a true one.

2:13 {But now} (\nuni de\). Strong contrast, as opposed to "at that time." {Afar off} (\makran\). Adverb (accusative feminine adjective with \hodon\ understood). From the \politeia\ and its hope in God. {Are made nigh} (\egen^th^te eggus\). First aorist passive indicative of \ginomai\, a sort of timeless aorist. Nigh to the commonwealth of Israel in Christ. {In the blood of Christ} (\en t“i haimati tou Christou\). Not a perfunctory addition, but essential (1:7), particularly in view of the Gnostic denial of Christ's real humanity.

2:14 {For he is our peace} (\autos gar estin h^ eir^h^ h^m“n\). He himself, not just what he did (necessary as that was and is). He is our peace with God and so with each other (Jews and Gentiles). {Both one} (\ta amphotera hen\). "The both" (Jew and Gentile). Jesus had said "other sheep I have which are not of this fold" (Joh 10:16). {One} (\hen\) is neuter singular (oneness, unity, identity) as in Ga 3:28. Race and national distinctions vanish in Christ. If all men were really in Christ, war would disappear. {Brake down the middle wall of partition} (\to mesotoichon tou phragmou lusas\). "Having loosened (first aorist active participle of \lu“, see Joh 2:19) the middle-wall (late word, only here in N.T., and very rare anywhere, one in papyri, and one inscription) of partition (\phragmou, old word, fence, from \phrass“, to fence or hedge, as in Mt 21:33). In the temple courts a partition wall divided the court of the Gentiles from the court of Israel with an inscription forbidding a Gentile from going further (Josephus, _Ant_. VIII. 3, 2). See the uproar when Paul was accused of taking Trophimus beyond this wall (Ac 21:28).

2:15 {Having abolished} (\katarg^sas). First aorist active participle of \katarge“, to make null and void. {The enmity} (\t^n echthran). But it is very doubtful if \t^n echthran (old word from \echthros, hostile, Lu 23:12) is the object of \katarg^sas. It looks as if it is in apposition with to \mesotoichon and so the further object of \lusas. The enmity between Jew and Gentile was the middle wall of partition. And then it must be decided whether "in his flesh" (\en t^i sarki autou) should be taken with \lusas and refer especially to the Cross (Col 1:22) or be taken with \katarg^sas. Either makes sense, but better sense with \lusas. Certainly "the law of commandments in ordinances" (\ton nomon t^“n entol“n en dogmasin) is governed by \katarg^sas. {That he might create} (\hina ktis^i). Final clause with first aorist active subjunctive of \ktiz“. {The twain} (\tous duo). The two men (masculine here, neuter in verse 14), Jew and Gentile. {One new man} (\eis hena kainon anthr“pon). Into one fresh man (Col 3:9-11) "in himself" (\en haut“i). Thus alone is it possible. {Making peace} (\poi“n eir^n^n). Thus alone can it be done. Christ is the peace-maker between men, nations, races, classes.

2:16 {And might reconcile} (\kai apokatallax^i). Final clause with \hina understood of first aorist active subjunctive of \apokatallax“ for which see Col 1:20,22. {Them both} (\tous amphoteros). "The both," "the two" (\tous duo), Jew and Gentile. {In one body} (\en heni s“mati). The "one new man" of verse 15 of which Christ is Head (1:23), the spiritual church. Paul piles up metaphors to express his idea of the Kingdom of God with Christ as King (the church, the body, the commonwealth of Israel, oneness, one new man in Christ, fellow-citizens, the family of God, the temple of God). {Thereby} (\en aut“i). On the Cross where he slew the enmity (repeated here) between Jew and Gentile.

2:17 {Preached peace} (\eu^ggelisato eir^n^n). First aorist middle of \euaggeliz“. "He gospelized peace" to both Jew and Gentile, "to the far off ones" (\tois makran) and "to the nigh ones" (\tois eggus). By the Cross and after the Cross Christ could preach that message.

2:18 {Through him} (\di' autou\). Christ. {We both} (\hoi amphoterōi). "We the both" (Jew and Gentile). {Our access} (\tⁿ prosag“gⁿ). The approach, the introduction as in Ro 5:2. {In one Spirit} (\en heni pneumatī). The Holy Spirit. {Unto the Father} (\pros ton patera\). So the Trinity as in 1:13f. The Three Persons all share in the work of redemption.

2:19 {So then} (\ara oun\). Two inferential particles (accordingly therefore). {No more} (\ouketi\). No longer. {Sojourners} (\paroikoi\). Old word for dweller by (near by, but not in). So Ac 7:6,29; 1Pe 2:11 (only other N.T. examples). Dwellers just outside the house or family of God. {Fellow-citizens} (\sunpolitai\, old, but rare word, here only in N.T.), members now of the \politeia\ of Israel (verse 12), the opposite of \xenoī kai paroikoi\. {Of the household of God} (\oikeioi tou theou\). Old word from \oikos\ (house, household), but in N.T. only here, Ga 6:10; 1Ti 5:8. Gentiles now in the family of God (Ro 8:29).

2:20 {Being built upon} (\epoikodom^{thentes}\). First aorist passive participle of \epoikodome“, for which double compound verb see 1Co 3:10; Co; 2:17. {The foundation} (\epi tⁱ themeli“i\). Repetition of \epi\ with the locative case. See 1Co 3:11 for this word. {Of the apostles and prophets} (\ton apostol“n kai proph“tⁿ\). Genitive of apposition with \themeli“i\, consisting in. If one is surprised that Paul should refer so to the apostles, he being one himself, Peter does the same thing (2Pe 3:2). Paul repeats this language in 3:5. {Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone} (\ont^s akrog“nianiou autou *Christou I*ˆsou\). Genitive absolute. The compound \akrog“niaios\ occurs only in the LXX (first in Isa 28:16) and in the N.T. (here, 1Pe 2:6). \Lithos\ (stone) is understood. Jesus had spoken of himself as the stone, rejected by the Jewish builders (experts), but chosen of God as the head of the corner (Mt 21:42), \eis kephalⁿ g[“]nias\. "The \akrog“niaios\ here is the primary foundation-stone at the angle of the structure by which the architect fixes a standard for the bearings of the walls and cross-walls throughout" (W. W. Lloyd).

2:21 {Each several building} (\pfsa oikodom^). So without article Aleph B D G K L. \Oikodom^ is a late word from \oikos\ and \dem^, to build for building up (edification) as in Eph 4:29, then for the building itself as here (Mr 13:1f.). Ordinary Greek idiom here calls for "every building," not for "all the building" (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 772), though it is not perfectly clear what that means. Each believer is called a \naos theou\ (1Co 3:16). One may note the plural in Mr 13:1 (\oikodomai\) of the various parts of the temple. Perhaps that is the idea here without precise definition of each \oikodom^. But there are examples of \pfs\ without the article where "all" is the idea as in \pfs^s ktise^s\ (all creation) in Col 1:15. {Fitly framed together} (\sunarmologoumen^). Double compound from \sun\ and \harmologos\ (binding, \harmos\, joint and \leg^), apparently made by Paul and in N.T. only here and Eph 4:16. Architectural metaphor. {Into a holy temple} (\eis naon hagian\). The whole structure with all the \oikodomai\. Another metaphor for the Kingdom of God with which compare Peter's "spiritual house" (\oikos pneumatikos\) in which each is a living stone being built in (1Pe 2:5).

2:22 {Ye also are builded together} (\kai humeis sunoikodomeisthe\). Ye Gentiles also. Present passive indicative (continuous process) of common old verb \sunoikodome^, to build together with others or out of varied materials as here. Only here in N.T. In 1Pe 2:5 Peter uses \oikodomeisthe\ for the same process. {For a habitation} (\eis katoik^rion\). Late word (LXX), in N.T. only here and Re 18:2. From \katoike^, to dwell, as Eph 3:17. Possibly each of us is meant here to be the "habitation of God in the Spirit" and all together growing (\auxei) "into a holy temple in the Lord," a noble conception of the brotherhood in Christ.

3:1 {For this cause} (\toutou charin\). Use of \charin\ (accusative of \charis) as a preposition with the genitive and referring to the preceding argument about God's elective grace. It is possible that Paul started to make the prayer that comes in verses 14-21 when he repeats \toutou charin\. If so, he is diverted by his own words "the prisoner of Christ Jesus in behalf of you Gentiles" (\ho desmios tou Christou I'sou huper hum' n t' n ethn' n) to set forth in a rich paragraph (1-13) God's use of him for the Gentiles.

3:2 {If so be that ye have heard} (\ei ge ^kousate\). Condition of first class with \ei\ and first aorist active indicative and with the intensive particle \ge\ that gives a delicate touch to it all. On \oikonomian\ (stewardship, dispensation) see 1:9; 3:9; Col 1:25.

3:3 {By revelation} (\kata apokalupsin\). Not essentially different from \di' apokalypse's\ (Gal 1:12). This was Paul's qualification for preaching "the mystery" (\to must' rion\). See 1:9. {As I wrote afore} (\kath' s proegrapsa\). First aorist active indicative of \prograph' as in Ro 15:4, not picture forth as Ga 3:1. But when and where? Epistolary aorist for this Epistle? That is possible. A previous and lost Epistle as in 1Co 5:9? That also is abstractly possible. To the preceding discussion of the Gentiles? Possible and also probable. {In few words} (\en olig' i\). Not = \pro oligou\, shortly before, but as in Ac 26:28 "in brief space or time" = \sunton's\ (Ac 24:4), "briefly."

3:4 {Whereby} (\pros ho\). "Looking to which," "according to which." {When ye read} (\anagin' skontes\). This Epistle will be read in public. {My understanding in the mystery of Christ} (\t' n sunesin mou en t' i must' ri' i tou Christou\). My "comprehension" (\sunesin\, Col 1:9; 2:2). Every sermon reveals the preacher's grasp of "the mystery of Christ." If he has no insight into Christ, he has no call to preach.

3:5 {In other generations} (\heterais geneais\). Locative case of time. He had already claimed this revelation for himself (verse 3). Now he claims it for all the other apostles and prophets of God.

3:6 {To wit}. Not in the Greek. But the infinitive (\einai) clause is epexegetical and gives the content of the revelation, a common idiom in the N.T. \Ta ethn^ is in the accusative of general reference. Paul is fond of compounds with \sun and here uses three of them. {Fellow-heirs} (\sunkl^ronoma). Late and rare (Philo, inscriptions and papyri). See also Ro 8:17. {Fellow-members of the body} (\suns^ma). First found here and only here save in later ecclesiastical writers. Preuschen argues that it is equivalent to \sundoulos in Col 1:7 (\s^ma\ in sense of \doulos). {Fellow-partakers} (\sunmetocha). Another late and rare word (Josephus). Only here in N.T. In one papyrus in sense of joint possessor of a house.

3:7 For this verse see Col 1:25; Eph 1:19f.; 3:2.

3:8 {Unto me who am less than the least of all saints} (\emoi t^i elachistoter^i pant^an hagi^an). Dative case \emoi with \eloth^. The peculiar form \elachistoter^i (in apposition with \emoi) is a comparative (\-teros) formed on the superlative \elachistos. This sort of thing was already done in the older Greek like \eschatoteros in Xenophon. It became more common in the _Koin, _. So the double comparative \meizoteran in 3Jo 1:4. The case of \hagi^an is ablative. This was not mock humility (15:19), for on occasion Paul stood up for his rights as an apostle (2Co 11:5). {The unsearchable riches of Christ} (\to anexichniaston ploutos tou Christou). \Anexichniastos (\a\ privative and verbal of \exichniaz^a\, to track out, \ex\ and \ichnos\, track) appears first in Job 5:9; 9:10. Paul apparently got it from Job. Nowhere else in N.T. except Ro 11:33. In later Christian writers. Paul undertook to track out the untrackable in Christ.

3:9 {To make see} (\ph^tisai). First aorist active infinitive of \photiz^a, late verb, to turn the light on. With the eyes of the heart enlightened (Eph 1:18) one can then turn the light for others to see. See Col 1:26.

3:10 {To the intent that} (\hina). Final clause. {Might be made known} (\gn^risth^i). First aorist passive subjunctive of \gn^riz^a with \hina. The mystery was made known to Paul (3:3) and now he wants it blazoned forth to all powers (Gnostic aeons or what not). {Through the church} (\dia t^s ekkl^{sias}\). The wonderful body of Christ described in chapter Eph 2. {The manifold wisdom of God} (\h[^] polupoikilos sophia tou theou\). Old and rare word, much-variegated, with many colours. Only here in N.T. \Poikilos\ (variegated) is more common (Mt 4:24).

3:11 {According to the eternal purpose} (\kata prothesin t^{“n} ai^{“n}“n\). "According to the purpose (1:11) of the ages." God's purpose runs on through the ages. "Through the ages one eternal purpose runs."

3:12 {In confidence} (\en pepoith[^]sei\). Late and rare word from \pepoitha\. See 2Co 1:15. {Through our faith in him} (\dia t^s piste^{“s} autou\). Clearly objective genitive \autou\ (in him).

3:13 {That ye faint not} (\m[^] enkakein\). Object infinitive with \m[^] after \aitoumai\. The infinitive (present active) \enkakein\ is a late and rare word (see already Lu 18:1; 2Th 3:13; 2Co 4:1,16; Ga 6:9) and means to behave badly in, to give in to evil (\en, kakos\). Paul urges all his apostolic authority to keep the readers from giving in to evil because of his tribulations for them. {Your glory} (\doxa hum^{“n}\). As they could see.

3:14 {I bow my knees} (\kampt[“] ta gonata mou\). He now prays whether he had at first intended to do so at 3:1 or not. Calvin supposes that Paul knelt as he dictated this prayer, but this is not necessary. This was a common attitude in prayer (Lu 22:41; Ac 7:40; 20:36; 21:5), though standing is also frequent (Mr 11:25; Lu 18:11,13).

3:15 {Every family} (\pfsa patria\). Old word (\patra\ is the usual form) from \pat[^]r\, descent from a common ancestor as a tribe or race. Some take it here as = \patrot[^]s\, fatherhood, but that is most unlikely. Paul seems to mean that all the various classes of men on earth and of angels in heaven get the name of family from God the Father of all.

3:16 {That he would grant you} (\hina d^{“i} humin\). Sub-final clause with \hina\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \did^{“mi}\, to give. There are really five petitions in this greatest of all Paul's prayers (one already in 1:16-23), two by the infinitives after \hina d^{“i}\ (\kratai^{“th}^nai, katoik[^]sai\), two infinitives after \hina exischus[^]te\ (\katalabesthai, gn^{“nai}\), and the last clause \hina pl[^]r^{“th}^te\). Nowhere does Paul sound such depths of spiritual emotion or rise to such heights of spiritual passion as here. The whole seems to be coloured with "the riches of His glory." {That ye may be strengthened} (\kratai“thˆnai). First aorist passive infinitive of \krataio“, late and rare (LXX, N.T.) from \krataios, late form from \kratos (strength). See Lu 1:80. Paul adds \dunamei (with the Spirit). Instrumental case. {In the inward man} (\eis ton es“anthr“pon). Same expression in 2Co 4:16 (in contrast with the outward \ex“\, man) and in Ro 7:22.

3:17 {That Christ may dwell} (\katoikˆsai ton Christon). Another infinitive (first aorist active) after \hina d“i. \Katoike“ is an old verb to make one's home, to be at home. Christ (\Christon\ accusative of general reference) is asked to make his home in our hearts. This is the ideal, but a deal of fixing would have to be done in our hearts for Christ. {Being rooted and grounded in love} (\en agapˆi erriz“menoi kai tethemeli“menoi). But it is not certain whether \en agapˆi should go with these participles or with the preceding infinitive \katoikˆsai (dwell). Besides, these two perfect passive participles (from \rizo“\, old verb, in N.T. only here and Col 2:7, and from \themelio“\, see also Col 1:23) are in the nominative case and are to be taken with \hina exischusˆte and are proleptically placed before \hina. Verse 18 should really begin with these participles. Paul piles up metaphors (dwelling, rooted, grounded).

3:18 {That ye may be strong} (\hina exischusˆte). Sub-final clause again with \hina and the first aorist active subjunctive of \exischu“, a late and rare compound (from \ex, ischu“) to have full strength. Here only in N.T. {To apprehend} (\katalabesthai). Second aorist middle infinitive of \katalamban“, old and common verb, to lay hold of effectively (\kata-), here with the mind, to grasp (Ac 25:25). {With all the saints} (\sun pasin tois hagiois). No isolated privilege. Fellowship open to all. Paul gives a rectangular (four dimension) measure of love (breadth \platos\, length \mˆkos\, height \hupsos\, depth \bathos\, all common enough words).

3:19 {And to know} (\gn“nai te). Second aorist active infinitive with \exischusˆte. {Which passeth knowledge} (\tˆn huperballousan tˆs gn“se“s). Ablative case \gn“se“s after \huperballousan (from \huperball“). All the same Paul dares to scale this peak. {That ye may be filled with all the fulness of God} (\hina plˆr“thˆte eis pfn to plˆr“ma tou theou). Final clause again (third use of \hina\ in the sentence) with first aorist passive subjunctive of \pl^ro^ and the use of \eis\ after it. One hesitates to comment on this sublime climax in Paul's prayer, the ultimate goal for followers of Christ in harmony with the injunction in Mt 5:48 to be perfect (teleioi) as our heavenly Father is perfect. There is nothing that any one can add to these words. One can turn to Ro 8:29 again for our final likeness to God in Christ.

3:20 {That is able to do} (\t^i dunamen^i poi^sai\). Dative case of the articular participle (present middle of \dunamai). Paul is fully aware of the greatness of the blessings asked for, but the Doxology ascribes to God the power to do them for us. {Above all} (\huper panta\). Not simply \panta\, but \huper\ beyond and above all. {Exceedingly abundantly} (\huperekperissou\). Late and rare double compound (\huper, ek, perissou\) adverb (LXX, 1Th 3:10; 5:13; Eph 3:20). It suits well Paul's effort to pile Pelion on Ossa. {That we ask} (\h^ n aitoumetha\). Ablative of the relative pronoun attracted from the accusative \ha\ to the case of the unexpressed antecedent \tout^ n\). Middle voice (\aitoumetha\). "we ask for ourselves." {Or think} (\^ nooumen\). The highest aspiration is not beyond God's "power" (\dunamin\) to bestow.

3:21 {In the church} (\en t^i ekkl^sifi\). The general church, the body of Christ. {And in Christ Jesus} (\kai en Christ^i I^sou\). The Head of the glorious church.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Ephesians: Chapter 3)

4:1 {Wherewith ye were called} (\h^s ekl^th^te\). Attraction of the relative \h^s\ to the genitive of the antecedent \kl^se^s\ (calling) from the cognate accusative \h^n\ with \ekl^th^te\ (first aorist passive indicative of kale^s\, to call). For the list of virtues here see Col 3:12. To \anechomenoi all^l^n\ (Col 3:13) Paul here adds "in love" (\en agap^i\), singled out in Col 3:14.

4:3 {The unity} (\t^n henot^ta\). Late and rare word (from heis\, one), in Aristotle and Plutarch, though in N.T. only here and verse 13. {In the bond of peace} (\en t^i sundesm^i t^s eir^h^s\). In Col 3:14 \agap^h\ (love) is the \sundesmos\ (bond). But there is no peace without love (verse 2).

4:4 {One body} (\hen s^ma\). One mystical body of Christ (the spiritual church or kingdom, cf. 1:23; 2:16). {One Spirit} (\hen pneuma\). One Holy Spirit, grammatical neuter gender (not to be referred to by "it," but by "he"). {In one hope} (\en mifi elpidi\). The same hope as a result of their calling for both Jew and Greek as shown in chapter 2.

4:5 {One Lord} (\heis Kurios\). The Lord Jesus Christ and he alone (no series of aeons). {One faith} (\mia pistis\). One act of trust in Christ, the same for all (Jew or Gentile), one way of being saved. {One baptism} (\hen baptisma\). The result of baptizing (\baptisma\), while \baptismos\ is the act. Only in the N.T. (\baptismos\ in Josephus) and ecclesiastical writers naturally. See Mr 10:38. There is only one act of baptism for all (Jews and Gentiles) who confess Christ by means of this symbol, not that they are made disciples by this one act, but merely so profess him, put Christ on publicly by this ordinance.

4:6 {One God and Father of all} (\heis theos kai pat^r pant^n\). Not a separate God for each nation or religion. One God for all men. See here the Trinity again (Father, Jesus, Holy Spirit). {Who is over all} (\ho epi pant^n\), {and through all} (\kai dia pant^n\), {and in all} (\kai en pfsin\). Thus by three prepositions (\epi, dia, en) Paul has endeavoured to express the universal sweep and power of God in men's lives. The pronouns (\pant“n, pant“n, pfsin) can be all masculine, all neuter, or part one or the other. The last "in all" is certainly masculine and probably all are.

4:7 {According to the measure of the gifts of Christ} (\kata to metron t’s d“reas tou Christou). Each gets the gift that Christ has to bestow for his special case. See 1Co 12:4ff.; Ro 12:4-6.

4:8 {Wherefore he saith} (\dio legei). As a confirmation of what Paul has said. No subject is expressed in the Greek and commentators argue whether it should be \ho theos\ (God) or \h^graph^ (Scripture). But it comes to God after all. See Ac 2:17. The quotation is from Ps 68:18, a Messianic Psalm of victory which Paul adapts and interprets for Christ's triumph over death. {He led captivity captive} (\ichmal“teusen aichmal“sian). Cognate accusative of \aichmal“sian, late word, in N.T. only here and Re 13:10. The verb also (\aichmal“teu“) is from the old word \aichmal“tos, captive in war (in N.T. only in Lu 4:18), in LXX and only here in N.T.

4:9 {Now this} (\to de). Paul picks out the verb \anabas\ (second aorist active participle of \anabain“\, to go up), changes its form to \aneb^ (second aorist indicative), and points the article (\to) at it. Then he concludes that it implied a previous \katabas\ (coming down). {Into the lower parts of the earth} (\eis ta kat“tera t’s g^s). If the \anabas is the Ascension of Christ, then the \katabas would be the Descent (Incarnation) to earth and \t’s g^s would be the genitive of apposition. What follows in verse 10 argues for this view. Otherwise one must think of the death of Christ (the descent into Hades of Ac 2:31).

4:10 {Is the same also} (\autos estin). Rather, "the one who came down (\ho katabas\, the Incarnation) is himself also the one who ascended (\ho anabas\, the Ascension)." {Far above} (\huperan“). See 1:21. {All the heavens} (\pant“n t“n ouran“n). Ablative case after \huperan“. For the plural used of Christ's ascent see Heb 4:14; 7:27. Whether Paul has in mind the Jewish notion of a graded heaven like the third heaven in 2Co 12:2 or the seven heavens idea one does not know. {That he might fill all things} (\hina pl’r“s^i ta panta). This purpose we can understand, the supremacy of Christ (Col 2:9f.).

4:11 {And he gave} (\kai autos ed'ken). First aorist active indicative of \did'mi. In 1Co 12:28 Paul uses \etheto (more common verb, appointed), but here repeats \ed'ken from the quotation in verse 8. There are four groups (\tous men, \tous de three times, as the direct object of \ed'ken). The titles are in the predicate accusative (\apostolous, proph^tas, poimenas kai didaskalous). Each of these words occurs in 1Co 12:28 (which see for discussion) except \poimenas (shepherds). This word \poim^n is from a root meaning to protect. Jesus said the good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep (Joh 10:11) and called himself the Good Shepherd. In Heb 13:20 Christ is the Great Shepherd (cf. 1Pe 2:25). Only here are preachers termed shepherds (Latin _pastores_) in the N.T. But the verb \poimain', to shepherd, is employed by Jesus to Peter (Joh 21:16), by Peter to other ministers (1Pe 5:2), by Paul to the elders (bishops) of Ephesus (Ac 20:28). Here Paul groups "shepherds and teachers" together. All these gifts can be found in one man, though not always. Some have only one.

4:12 {For the perfecting} (\pros ton katartismon). Late and rare word (in Galen in medical sense, in papyri for house-furnishing), only here in N.T., though \katartisis in 2Co 13:9, both from \katartiz', to mend (Mt 4:21; Ga 6:1). "For the mending (repair) of the saints." {Unto the building up} (\eis oikodom^n). See 2:21. This is the ultimate goal in all these varied gifts, "building up."

4:13 {Till we all attain} (\mechri katant^s'men hoi pantes). Temporal clause with purpose idea with \mechri and the first aorist active subjunctive of \katanta', late verb, to come down to the goal (Php 3:11). "The whole" including every individual. Hence the need of so many gifts. {Unto the unity of the faith} (\eis t^n henot^ta t^s piste's). "Unto oneness of faith" (of trust) in Christ (verse 3) which the Gnostics were disturbing. {And of the knowledge of the Son of God} (\kai t^s epign'se's tou huiou tou theou). Three genitives in a chain dependent also on \t^n henot^ta, "the oneness of full (\epi-) knowledge of the Son of God," in opposition to the Gnostic vagaries. {Unto a full-grown man} (\eis andra teleion). Same figure as in 2:15 and \teleios in sense of adult as opposed to \n^pioi (infants) in 14. {Unto the measure of the stature} (\eis metron h^likias). So apparently \h^likia here as in Lu 2:52, not age (Joh 9:21). Boys rejoice in gaining the height of a man. But Paul adds to this idea "the fulness of Christ" (\tou pl^r^matos tou Christou), like "the fulness of God" in 3:19. And yet some actually profess to be "perfect" with a standard like this to measure by! No pastor has finished his work when the sheep fall so far short of the goal.

4:14 {That we may be no longer children} (\hina m^keti "men n^pioi). Negative final clause with present subjunctive. Some Christians are quite content to remain "babes" in Christ and never cut their eye-teeth (Heb 5:11-14), the victims of every charlatan who comes along. {Tossed to and fro} (\klud^"nizomenoi). Present passive participle of \klud^"nizomai, late verb from \klud^"n (wave, Jas 1:6), to be agitated by the waves, in LXX, only here in N.T. One example in Vettius Valens. {Carried about} (\peripheromenoi). Present passive participle of \peripher^", old verb, to carry round, whirled round "by every wind (\anem^"i, instrumental case) of teaching." In some it is all wind, even like a hurricane or a tornado. If not anchored by full knowledge of Christ, folks are at the mercy of these squalls. {By the sleight} (\en t^i kubifi). "In the deceit," "in the throw of the dice" (\kubia, from \kubos, cube), sometimes cheating. {In craftiness} (\en panourgifi). Old word from \panourgos (\pan, ergon, any deed, every deed), cleverness, trickiness. {After the wiles of error} (\pros t^"n methodian t^s plan^s). \Methodia is from \methodeu^" (\meta, hodos) to follow after or up, to practise deceit, and occurs nowhere else (Eph 4:13; 6:11) save in late papyri in the sense of method. The word \plan^s (wandering like our "planet") adds to the evil idea in the word. Paul has covered the whole ground in this picture of Gnostic error.

4:15 {In love} (\en agap^i). If truth were always spoken only in love! {May grow into him} (\aux^s^"men eis auton). Supply \hina and then note the final use of the first aorist active subjunctive. It is the metaphor of verse 13 (the full-grown man). We are the body and Christ is the Head. We are to grow up to his stature.

4:16 {From which} (\ex hou). Out of which as the source of energy and direction. {Fitly framed} (\sunarmologoumenon). See 2:21 for this verb. {Through that which every joint supplieth} (\dia pas^s haph^s t^s epichor^gias). Literally, "through every joint of the supply." See Col 2:19 for \haph^" and Php 1:19 for the late word \epichor^gia (only two examples in N.T.) from \epichor^{ge}“, to supply (Col 2:19). {In due measure} (\en metrⁱ). Just "in measure" in the Greek, but the assumption is that each part of the body functions properly in its own sphere. {Unto the building up of itself} (\eis oikodomⁿ heautou\). Modern knowledge of cell life in the human body greatly strengthens the force of Paul's metaphor. This is the way the body grows by cooperation under the control of the head and all "in love" (\en agapⁱ).

4:17 {That ye no longer walk} (\m^keti humas peripatein\). Infinitive (present active) in indirect command (not indirect assertion) with accusative \humas\ of general reference. {In vanity of their mind} (\en mataiot^{ti} tou noos autⁿ). "In emptiness (from \mataios\, late and rare word. See Ro 8:20) of their intellect (\noos\, late form for earlier genitive \nou\, from \nous\).

4:18 {Being darkened} (\eskot^{menoi} ontes\). Periphrastic perfect passive participle of \skoto^{ge}“, old verb from \skotos\ (darkness), in N.T. only here and Re 9:2; 16:10. {In their understanding} (\tⁱ dianoifi\). Locative case. Probably \dianoia\ (\dia, nous\) includes the emotions as well as the intellect (\nous\). It is possible to take \ontes\ with \ap^llоти^{menoi} (see 2:12) which would then be periphrastic (instead of \eskot^{menoi}) perfect passive participle. {From the life of God} (\t^s z^{“s} tou theou\). Ablative case \z^{“s} after \ap^llotti^{menoi} (2:12). {Because of the ignorance} (\dia tⁿ agnoian\). Old word from \agnoe^{ge}“, not to know. Rare in N.T. See Ac 3:17. {Hardening} (\p^{“r}“sin\). Late medical term (Hippocrates) for callous hardening. Only other N.T. examples are Mr 3:5; Ro 11:25.

4:19 {Being past feeling} (\ap^{lg}kotes\). Perfect active participle of \apalge^{ge}“, old word to cease to feel pain, only here in N.T. {To lasciviousness} (\tⁱ aselgeifi\). Unbridled lust as in 2Co 12:21; Ga 5:19. {To work all uncleanness} (\eis ergasian akatharsias pas^s). Perhaps prostitution, "for a trading (or work) in all uncleanness." Certainly Corinth and Ephesus could qualify for this charge. {With greediness} (\en pleonexifi\). From \pleonekt^s“, one who always wants more whether money or sexual indulgence as here. The two vices are often connected in the N.T.

4:20 {But ye did not so learn Christ} (\Humeis de ouch hout^{“s} emathete ton Christon). In sharp contrast to pagan life (hout's). Second aorist active indicative of manthan.

4:21 {If so be that} (ei ge). "If indeed." Condition of first class with aorist indicatives here, assumed to be true (kousate kai edidachthete). {Even as truth is in Jesus} (kath's estin altheia en t'i I'sou). It is not clear what Paul's precise idea is here. The Cerinthian Gnostics did distinguish between the man Jesus and the aeon Christ. Paul here identifies Christ (verse 20) and Jesus (verse 21). At any rate he flatly affirms that there is "truth in Jesus" which is in direct opposition to the heathen manner of life and which is further explained by the exegetical infinitives that follow (apothesthai, ananeousthai de, kai endusasthai).

4:22 {That ye put away} (apothesthai). Second aorist middle infinitive of apotithmi with the metaphor of putting off clothing or habits as apotheste in Col 3:8 (which see) with the same addition of "the old man" (ton palaion anthr'pon) as in Col 3:9. For anastrophē (manner of life) see Ga 1:13. {Which waxeth corrupt} (ton phtheiromenon). Either present middle or passive participle of phtheir, but it is a process of corruption (worse and worse).

4:23 {That ye be renewed} (ananeousthai). Present passive infinitive (exegetical, like apothesthai, of altheia en t'i I'sou) and to be compared with anakainoumenon in Col 3:10. It is an old verb, ananeo, to make new (young) again; though only here in N.T. {The spirit} (t'i pneumatī). Not the Holy Spirit, but the human spirit.

4:24 {Put on} (endusasthai). First aorist middle infinitive of endu (-n), for which see Col 3:10. {The new man} (ton kainon anthr'pon). "The brand-new (see 2:15) man," though ton neon in Col 3:10. {After God} (kata theon). After the pattern God, the new birth, the new life in Christ, destined to be like God in the end (Ro 8:29).

4:25 {Wherefore} (dio). Because of putting off the old man, and putting on the new man. {Putting away} (apothemenoi). Second aorist middle participle of apotithmi (verse 22). {Lying} (pseudos), {truth} (altheian) in direct contrast. {Each one} (hekastos). Partitive apposition with laleite. See Col 3:8 m pseudeste.

4:26 {Be ye angry and sin not} (\orgizesthe kai m[^] hamartanete\).

Permissive imperative, not a command to be angry. Prohibition against sinning as the peril in anger. Quotation from Ps 4:4.

{Let not the sun go down upon your wrath} (\ho h[^]lios m[^] epiduet[“]epi parorgism[“]i\). Danger in settled mood of anger. \Parorgismos\ (provocation), from \parorgiz[“]\, to exasperate to anger, occurs only in LXX and here in N.T.

4:27 {Neither give place to the devil} (\m[^]de didote topon t[“]i diabol[“]i\). Present active imperative in prohibition, either stop doing it or do not have the habit. See Ro 12:19 for this idiom.

4:28 {Steal no more} (\m[^]keti kleptet[“]\). Clearly here, cease stealing (present active imperative with \m[^]keti). {The thing that is good} (\to agathon\). "The good thing" opposed to his stealing and "with his hands" (\tais chersin\, instrumental case) that did the stealing. See 2Th 3:10. Even unemployment is no excuse for stealing. {To give} (\metadidonai\). Present active infinitive of \metadid[“]mi\, to share with one.

4:29 {Corrupt} (\sapro\). Rotten, putrid, like fruit (Mt 7:17f.), fish (Mt 13:48), here the opposite of \agathos\ (good). {For edifying as the need may be} (\pros oikodom[^]n t[^]s chreias\). "For the build-up of the need," "for supplying help when there is need." Let no other words come out. {That it may give} (\hina d[“]i\). For this elliptical use of \hina\ see on 5:33.

4:30 {Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God} (\m[^]lupeite to pneuma to hagion tou theou\). "Cease grieving" or "do not have the habit of grieving." Who of us has not sometimes grieved the Holy Spirit? {In whom} (\en h[“]i\). Not "in which." {Ye were sealed} (\esphragisth[^]te\). See 1:13 for this verb, and 1:14 for \apolutr[“]se[“]s\, the day when final redemption is realized.

4:31 {Bitterness} (\pikria\). Old word from \pikros\ (bitter), in N.T. only here and Ac 8:23; Ro 3:14; Heb 12:15. {Clamour} (\kraug[^]\). Old word for outcry (Mt 25:6; Lu 1:42). See Col 3:8 for the other words. {Be put away} (\arth[^]t[“]\). First aorist passive imperative of \air[“]\, old verb, to pick up and carry away, to make a clean sweep.

4:32 {Be ye kind to one another} (\ginesthe eis all[^]lous chr[^]stoi). Present middle imperative of \ginomai\, "keep on becoming kind (chr[^]stos, used of God in Ro 2:4) toward one another." See Col 3:12f. {Tenderhearted} (eusplagchnoi). Late word (eu, splagchna) once in Hippocrates, in LXX, here and 1Pe 3:8 in N.T.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

5:1 {Imitators of God} (\mim^ˆtai tou theou). This old word from \mimeomai Paul boldly uses. If we are to be like God, we must imitate him.

5:2 {An offering and a sacrifice to God} (\prosphoran kai thusian t^ˆi the^ˆi). Accusative in apposition with \heauton (himself). Christ's death was an offering to God "in our behalf" (\huper h^ˆm^ˆn) not an offering to the devil (Anselm), a ransom (\lutron) as Christ himself said (Mt 20:28), Christ's own view of his atoning death. {For an odour of a sweet smell} (\eis osm^ˆn eu^ˆdias). Same words in Php 4:18 from Le 4:31 (of the expiatory offering). Paul often presents Christ's death as a propitiation (Ro 3:25) as in 1Jo 2:2.

5:3 {Or covetousness} (\^ˆpleonexia). In bad company surely. Debasing like sensuality. {As becometh saints} (\kath^ˆs prepei hagiois). It is "unbecoming" for a saint to be sensual or covetous.

5:4 {Filthiness} (\aischrot^ˆs). Old word from \aischros (base), here alone in N.T. {Foolish talking} (\m^ˆrologia). Late word from \m^ˆrologos (\m^ˆros, logos), only here in N.T. {Jesting} (\eutrapelia). Old word from \eutrapelos (\eu, trep^ˆ\, to turn) nimbleness of wit, quickness in making repartee (so in Plato and Plutarch), but in low sense as here ribaldry, scurrility, only here in N.T. All of these disapproved vices are \hapax legomena in the N.T. {Which are not befitting} (\ha ouk an^ˆken). Same idiom (imperfect with word of propriety about the present) in Col 3:18. Late MSS. read \ta ouk an^ˆkonta like \ta m^ˆkath^ˆkonta in Ro 1:28.

5:5 {Ye know of a surety} (\iste gin^ˆskontes). The correct text has \iste, not \este. It is the same form for present indicative (second person plural) and imperative, probably indicative here, "ye know." But why \gin^ˆskontes added? Probably, "ye know recognizing by your own experience." {No} (\pfs--ou). Common idiom in the N.T. like the Hebrew = _oudeis_ (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 732). {Covetous man} (\pleonekt^ˆs, pleon ech“\). Old word, in N.T. only here and 1Co 5:10f.; 6:10. {Which is} (\(ho estin\)). So Aleph B. A D K L have \hos\ (who), but \ho\ is right. See Col 3:14 for this use of \ho\ (which thing is). On \eid“lolatr^s\ (idolater) see 1Co 5:10f. {In the Kingdom of Christ and God} (\(en t^i basileifi tou Christou kai theou\)). Certainly the same kingdom and Paul may here mean to affirm the deity of Christ by the use of the one article with \Christou kai theou\). But Sharp's rule cannot be insisted on here because \theos\ is often definite without the article like a proper name. Paul did teach the deity of Christ and may do it here.

5:6 {With empty words} (\(kenois logos\)). Instrumental case. Probably Paul has in mind the same Gnostic praters as in Col 2:4f. See 2:2.

5:7 {Partakers with them} (\(sunmetochoi aut“n\)). Late double compound, only here in N.T., joint (\(sun\)) shares with (\(metochoi\)) them (\(aut“n\)). These Gnostics.

5:8 {But now light} (\(nun de ph“s\)). Jesus called his disciples the light of the world (Mt 5:14).

5:9 {The fruit of light} (\(ho karpos tou ph“tos\)). Two metaphors (fruit, light) combined. See Ga 5:22 for "the fruit of the Spirit." The late MSS. have "spirit" here in place of "light." {Goodness} (\(agathosun^i\)). Late and rare word from \agathos\). See 2Th 1:11; Ga 5:22.

5:10 {Proving} (\(dokimazontes\)). Testing and so proving.

5:11 {Have no fellowship with} (\(m^ sunkoin“neite\)). No partnership with, present imperative with \m^\. Followed by associative instrumental case \ergois\ (works). {Unfruitful} (\(akarpois\)). Same metaphor of verse 9 applied to darkness (\(skotos\)). {Reprove} (\(elegchete\)). Convict by turning the light on the darkness.

5:12 {In secret} (\(kruph^i\)). Old adverb, only here in N.T. Sin loves the dark. {Even to speak of} (\(kai legein\)). And yet one must sometimes speak out, turn on the light, even if to do so is disgraceful (\(aischron\), like 1Co 11:6).

5:13 {Are made manifest by the light} (\(hupo tou ph“tos phaneroutai\). Turn on the light. Often the preacher is the only man brave enough to turn the light on the private sins of men and women or even those of a community.

5:14 {Wherefore he saith} (\(dio legei\)). Apparently a free adaptation of Isa 26:19; 60:1. The form \anasta\ for \anast^{thi}\ (second person singular imperative second aorist active of \anist^{mi}\) occurs in Ac 12:7. {Shall shine} (\(epiphausei\)). Future active of \epiphausk[“]\, a form occurring in Job (Job 25:5; 31:26), a variation of \epiph[“]sk[“]\. The last line suggests the possibility that we have here the fragment of an early Christian hymn like 1Ti 3:16.

5:15 {Carefully} (\(akrib[“]s\). Aleph B 17 put \akrib[“]s\ before \p[“]s\ (how) instead of \p[“]s akrib[“]s\ (how exactly ye walk) as the Textus Receptus has it. On \akrib[“]s\ (from \akrib[^]s\) see Mt 2:8; Lu 1:3. {Unwise} (\(asophoi\). Old adjective, only here in N.T.

5:16 {Redeeming the time} (\(exagorazomenoi ton kairon\). As in Col 4:5 which see.

5:17 {Be ye not foolish} (\(m[^] ginsthe aphrones\). "Stop becoming foolish."

5:18 {Be not drunken with wine} (\(m[^] methuskesthe oin[“]i\). Present passive imperative of \methusk[“]\, old verb to intoxicate. Forbidden as a habit and to stop it also if guilty. Instrumental case \oin[“]i\. {Riot} (\(as[“]tia\). Old word from \as[“]tos\ (adverb \as[“]t[“]s\ in Lu 15:13), in N.T. only here, Tit 1:6; 1Pe 4:4. {But be filled with the Spirit} (\(alla pl[^]rousthe en pneumatⁱ\). In contrast to a state of intoxication with wine.

5:19 {To the Lord} (\(t[“]i Kuri[“]i\). The Lord Jesus. In Col 3:16 we have \t[“]i the[“]i\ (to God) with all these varieties of praise, another proof of the deity of Christ. See Col 3:16 for discussion.

5:20 {In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\(en onomati tou Kuriou h[^]m[“]n I[^]sou Christou\). Jesus had told the disciples to use his name in prayer (Joh 16:23f.). {To God, even the Father} (\(t[“]i the[“]i kai patri\). Rather, "the God and Father."

5:21 {Subjecting yourselves to one another} (\(hupotassomenoi all^lois\). Present middle participle of \hupotass^{\,}, old military figure to line up under (Col 3:18). The construction here is rather loose, coordinate with the preceding participles of praise and prayer. It is possible to start a new paragraph here and regard \hupotassomenoi\ as an independent participle like an imperative.

5:22 {Be in subjection}. Not in the Greek text of B and Jerome knew of no MS. with it. K L and most MSS. have \hupotassesthe\ like Col 3:18, while Aleph A P have \hupotassesth^san\ (let them be subject to). But the case of \andrasin\ (dative) shows that the verb is understood from verse 21 if not written originally. \Idiois\ (own) is genuine here, though not in Col 3:18. {As unto the Lord} (\h^s t^i Kuri^i\). So here instead of \h^s an^ken en Kuri^i\ of Col 3:18.

5:23 {For the husband is the head of the wife} (\hoti an^r estin kephal^ t^s gunaikos\). "For a husband is head of the (his) wife." No article with \an^r\ or \kephal^\. {As Christ also is the head of the church} (\h^s kai ho Christos kephal^ t^s ekkl^sias\). No article with \kephal^\. "as also Christ is head of the church." This is the comparison, but with a tremendous difference which Paul hastens to add either in an appositional clause or as a separate sentence. {Himself the saviour of the body} (\autos s^t^r tou s^matos\). He means the church as the body of which Christ is head and Saviour.

5:24 {But} (\alla\). Perhaps, "nevertheless," in spite of the difference just noted. Once again the verb \hupotass^{\,} has to be supplied in the principal clause before \tois andrasin\ either as indicative (\hupotassontai\)) or as imperative (\hupotassesth^san\).

5:25 {Even as Christ also loved the church} (\kath^s kai ho Christos ^gap^sen t^n ekkl^sian\). This is the wonderful new point not in Col 3:19 that lifts this discussion of the husband's love for his wife to the highest plane.

5:26 {That he might sanctify it} (\hina aut^n hacias^i\). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the first aorist active subjunctive of \hagiaz^{\,}. Jesus stated this as his longing and his prayer (Joh 17:17-19). This was the purpose of Christ's death (verse 25). {Having cleansed it} (\katharisas\). First aorist active participle of \kathariz^{\,}, to cleanse, either simultaneous action or antecedent. {By the washing of water} (\t*“i loutr“i tou hudatos*\). If \loutron\ only means bath or bathing-place (= \loutron\), then \loutr*“i*\ is in the locative. If it can mean bathing or washing, it is in the instrumental case. The usual meaning from Homer to the papyri is the bath or bathing-place, though some examples seem to mean bathing or washing. Salmond doubts if there are any clear instances. The only other N.T. example of \loutron\ is in Tit 3:5. The reference here seems to be to the baptismal bath (immersion) of water, "in the bath of water." See 1Co 6:11 for the bringing together of \apelousasthe\ and \h[^]giasth[^]te\. Neither there nor here does Paul mean that the cleansing or sanctification took place in the bath save in a symbolic fashion as in Ro 6:4-6. Some think that Paul has also a reference to the bath of the bride before marriage. Still more difficult is the phrase "with the word" (\en r[^]mati\). In Joh 17:17 Jesus connected "truth" with "sanctify." That is possible here, though it may also be connected with \katharisas\ (having cleansed). Some take it to mean the baptismal formula.

5:27 {That he might present} (\hina parast[^]s[^]i\). Final clause with \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \parist[^]mi\ (see Col 1:22 for parallel) as in 2Co 11:2 of presenting the bride to the bridegroom. Note both \autos\ (himself) and \heaut[“]i\ (to himself). {Glorious} (\endoxon\). Used of splendid clothing in Lu 7:25. {Spot} (\spilos\). Late word, in N.T. only here and 2Pe 2:13, but \spilo[“]\, to defile in Jas 3:6; Jude 1:23. {Wrinkle} (\rutida\). Old word from \ru[“]\, to contract, only here in N.T. {But that it should be holy and without blemish} (\all' hina [~]i hagia kai am[“]mos\). Christ's goal for the church, his bride and his body, both negative purity and positive.

5:28 {Even so ought} (\hout[“]s opheilousin\). As Christ loves the church (his body). And yet some people actually say that Paul in 1Co 7 gives a degrading view of marriage. How can one say that after reading Eph 5:22-33 where the noblest picture of marriage ever drawn is given?

5:29 {Nourisheth} (\ektrephei\). Old compound with perfective sense of \ek\ (to nourish up to maturity and on). In N.T. only here and 6:4. {Cherisheth} (\thalpei\). Late and rare word, once in a marriage contract in a papyrus. In N.T. only here and 1Th 2:7. Primarily it means to warm (Latin _foveo_), then to foster with tender care as here. {Even as Christ also} (\kath“s kai ho Christos\). Relative (correlative) adverb pointing back to \hout“s\ at the beginning of the sentence (verse 28) and repeating the statement in verse 25.

5:30 {Of his flesh and of his bones} (\ek t^s sarkos autou kai ek t“n oste“n autou\). These words are in the Textus Receptus (Authorized Version) supported by D G L P cursives Syriac, etc., though wanting in Aleph A B 17 Bohairic. Certainly not genuine.

5:31 {For this cause} (\anti toutou\). "Answering to this" = \heneken toutou\ of Ge 2:24, in the sense of \anti\ seen in \anth' h“n\ (Lu 12:3). This whole verse is a practical quotation and application of the language to Paul's argument here. In Mt 19:5 Jesus quotes Ge 2:24. It seems absurd to make Paul mean Christ here by \anthr“pos\ (man) as some commentators do.

5:32 {This mystery is great} (\to must^rion touto mega estin\). For the word "mystery" see 1:9. Clearly Paul means to say that the comparison of marriage to the union of Christ and the church is the mystery. He makes that plain by the next words. {But I speak} (\eg“ de leg“\). "Now I mean." Cf. 1Co 7:29; 15:50. {In regard of Christ and of the church} (\eis Christon kai [eis] t^n ekkl^sian\). "With reference to Christ and the church." That is all that \eis\ here means.

5:33 {Nevertheless} (\pl^n\). "Howbeit," not to dwell unduly (Abbott) on the matter of Christ and the church. {Do ye also severally love} (\kai humeis hoi kath' hena hekastos agapft“\). An unusual idiom. The verb \agapft“\ (present active imperative) agrees with \hekastos\ and so is third singular instead of \agapfte\ (second plural) like \humeis\. The use of \hoi kath' hena\ after \humeis\ = "ye one by one" and then \hekastos\ takes up (individualizes) the "one" in partitive apposition and in the third person. {Let the wife see that she fear} (\h^gun^ hina phob^tai\). There is no verb in the Greek for "let see" (\blepet“\). For this use of \hina\ with the subjunctive as a practical imperative without a principal verb (an elliptical imperative) see Mr 5:23; Mt 20:32; 1Co 7:29; 2Co 8:7; Eph 4:29; 5:33 (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 994). "Fear" (\phob^tai\, present middle subjunctive) here is "reverence."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

6:1 {Right} (\dikaion). In Col 3:20 it is \euareston (well-pleasing).

6:2 {Which} (\h^tis). "Which very" = "for such is." {The first commandment with promise} (\entol^pr^t^ en epaggelifi). \En here means "accompanied by" (Alford). But why "with a promise"? The second has a general promise, but the fifth alone (Ex 20:12) has a specific promise. Perhaps that is the idea. Some take it to be first because in the order of time it was taught first to children, but the addition of \en epaggelifi here to \pr^t^ points to the other view.

6:3 {That it may be well with thee} (\hina eu soi gen^tai). From Ex 20:12, "that it may happen to thee well." {And thou mayest live long on the earth} (\kai es^i makrochronios epi t^s g^s). Here \es^i (second person singular future middle) takes the place of \gen^i in the LXX (second person singular second aorist middle subjunctive). \Makrochronios is a late and rare compound adjective, here only in N.T. (from LXX, Ex 20:12).

6:4 {Provoke not to anger} (\m^ parorgizete). Rare compound, both N.T. examples (here and Ro 10:19) are quotations from the LXX. The active, as here, has a causative sense. Parallel in sense with \m^ erethizete in Col 3:21. Paul here touches the common sin of fathers. {In the chastening and admonition of the Lord} (\en paideifi kai nouthesifi tou kuriou). \En is the sphere in which it all takes place. There are only three examples in the N.T. of \paideia, old Greek for training a \pais (boy or girl) and so for the general education and culture of the child. Both papyri and inscriptions give examples of this original and wider sense (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). It is possible, as Thayer gives it, that this is the meaning here in Eph 6:4. In 2Ti 3:16 adults are included also in the use. In Heb 12:5,7,11 the narrower sense of "chastening" appears which some argue for here. At any rate \nouthesia (from \nous, tith^mi), common from Aristophanes on, does have the idea of correction. In N.T. only here and 1Co 10:11; Tit 3:10.

6:5 {With fear and trembling} (\meta phobou kai tromou\). This addition to Col 3:22.

6:6 {But as servants of Christ} (\all' h"s douloi Christou\). Better "slaves of Christ" as Paul rejoiced to call himself (Php 1:1). {Doing the will of God} (\poiountes to thel^{ma} tou theou\). Even while slaves of men.

6:7 {With good will} (\met' eunoias\). Not in Col. Old word from \eunoos\, only here in N.T. as \eunoe" is in N.T. only in Mt 5:25.

6:8 {Whatsoever good thing each one doeth} (\hekastos ean ti poi^si agathon\). Literally, "each one if he do anything good." Condition of third class, undetermined, but with prospect. Note use here of \agathon\ rather than \adikon\ (one doing wrong) in Col 3:25. So it is a reward (\komisetai\) for good, not a penalty for wrong, though both are true, "whether he be bond or free" (\eite doulos eite eleutheros\).

6:9 {And forbear threatening} (\anientes tⁿ apeilⁿ\). Present active participle of \ani^{mi}\, old verb, to loosen up, to relax. "Letting up on threatening." \Apeilⁿ is old word for threat, in N.T. only here and Ac 4:29; 9:1. {Both their Master and yours} (\kai autⁿ kai humⁿ ho kurios\). He says to "the lords" (\hoi kurioi\) of the slaves. Paul is not afraid of capital nor of labour. {With him} (\par' autⁱ\). "By the side of him (God)."

6:10 {Finally} (\tou loipou\). Genitive case, "in respect of the rest," like Ga 6:17. D G K L P have the accusative \to loipon\ (as for the rest) like 2Th 3:1; Php 3:1; 4:8. {Be strong in the Lord} (\endunamousthe en kuriⁱ\). A late word in LXX and N.T. (Ac 9:22; Ro 4:20; Php 4:13), present passive imperative of \endunamo", from \en\ and \dunamis\, to empower. See 1:10 for "in the strength of his might." Not a hendiadys.

6:11 {Put on} (\endusas the\). Like 3:12. See also 4:24. {The whole armour} (\tⁿ panoplian\). Old word from \panoplos\ (wholly armed, from \pan, hoplon). In N.T. only Lu 11:22; Eph 6:11,13. Complete armour in this period included "shield, sword, lance, helmet, greaves, and breastplate" (Thayer). Our "panoply." Polybius gives this list of Thayer. Paul omits the lance (spear). Our museums preserve specimens of this armour as well as the medieval coat-of-mail. Paul adds girdle and shoes to the list of Polybius, not armour but necessary for the soldier. Certainly Paul could claim knowledge of the Roman soldier's armour, being chained to one for some three years. {That ye may be able to stand} (\pros to dunasthai humfs st^nai\). Purpose clause with \pros to\ and the infinitive (\dunasthai\)) with the accusative of general reference (\humfs\)) and the second aorist active infinitive \st^nai\ (from hist^mi) dependent on \dunasthai\). Against (\pros\). Facing. Another instance of \pros\ meaning "against" (Col 2:23). {The wiles of the devil} (\tas methodias tou diabolou\). See already 4:14 for this word. He is a crafty foe and knows the weak spots in the Christian's armour.

6:12 {Our wrestling is not} (\ouk estin h^min h^ pal^). "To us the wrestling is not." \Pal^ is an old word from \pall^, to throw, to swing (from Homer to the papyri, though here only in N.T.), a contest between two till one hurls the other down and holds him down (\katech^). Note \pros\ again (five times) in sense of "against," face to face conflict to the finish. {The world-rulers of this darkness} (\tous kosmokratoras tou skotous toutou\). This phrase occurs here alone. In Joh 14:30 Satan is called "the ruler of this world" (\ho arch^ n tou kosmou toutou\). In 2Co 4:4 he is termed "the god of this age" (\ho theos tou ai^ nos toutou\). The word \kosmokrat^r\ is found in the Orphic Hymns of Satan, in Gnostic writings of the devil, in rabbinical writings (transliterated) of the angel of death, in inscriptions of the Emperor Caracalla. These "world-rulers" are limited to "this darkness" here on earth. {The spiritual hosts of wickedness} (\ta pneumatika t^s pon^rias\). No word for "hosts" in the Greek. Probably simply, "the spiritual things (or elements) of wickedness." \Pon^ria\ (from pon^ros) is depravity (Mt 22:18; 1Co 5:8). {In the heavenly places} (\en tois epouraniois\). Clearly so here. Our "wrestling" is with foes of evil natural and supernatural. We sorely need "the panoply of God" (furnished by God).

6:13 {Take up} (\analabete\). Second aorist active imperative of \analamban^, old word and used (\analab^ n\)) of "picking up" Mark in 2Ti 4:11. {That ye may be able to withstand} (\hina dun^th^te antist^nai\). Final clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \dunamai\ with \antist^nai\ (second aorist active infinitive of anthist^mi, to stand face to face, against). {And having done all to stand} (\kai hapanta katergasa menoi st^nai\). After the fight (wrestle) is over to stand

(\st^{nai}\) as victor in the contest. Effective aorist here.

6:14 {Stand therefore} (\st^{te oun}\). Second aorist active imperative of \hist^{mi}\ (intransitive like the others).

Ingressive aorist here, "Take your stand therefore" (in view of the arguments made). {Having girded your loins with truth} (\periz^{samenoi tⁿ osphun hum^{n en al^{theifi}}\). First aorist middle participle (antecedent action) of \periz^{nnu}\, old verb, to gird around, direct middle (gird yourselves) in Lu 12:37; but indirect here with accusative of the thing, "having girded your own loins." So \endusamenoi\ (having put on) is indirect middle participle. {The breast-plate of righteousness} (\ton^{th^{raka t^s dikaiousun^s}\). Old word for breast and then for breastplate. Same metaphor of righteousness as breastplate in 1Th 5:8.}}

6:15 {Having shod} (\hupod^{samenoi}\). "Having bound under" (sandals). First aorist middle participle of \hupode\, old word, to bind under (Mr 6:9; Ac 12:8, only other N.T. example). {With the preparation} (\en^{hetoimasifi}\). Late word from \hetoimaz\, to make ready, only here in N.T. Readiness of mind that comes from the gospel whose message is peace.

6:16 {Taking up} (\analabontes\). See verse 13. {The shield of faith} (\ton^{thureon t^s piste^s}\). Late word in this sense a large stone against the door in Homer, from \thura\, door, large and oblong (Latin _scutum_), \aspis\ being smaller and circular, only here in N.T. {To quench} (\sbesai\). First aorist active infinitive of \sbennumi\, old word, to extinguish (Mt 12:20). {All the fiery darts} (\panta ta bel^{ta pepur^{mena}}\). \Belos\ is an old word for missile, dart (from \ball\, to throw), only here in N.T. \Pepur^{mena}\ is perfect passive participle of \puro\, old verb, to set on fire, from \pur\ (fire). These darts were sometimes ablaze in order to set fire to the enemies' clothing or camp or homes just as the American Indians used to shoot poisoned arrows.

6:17 {The helmet of salvation} (\t^{n perikephalaian tou s^{t^{riou}}\). Late word (\peri, kephal\, head, around the head), in Polybius, LXX, 1Th 5:8; Eph 6:17 alone in N.T. {Which is the word of God} (\ho estin to r^{ma tou theou}\). Explanatory relative (\ho\ referring to the sword (\machairan\). The sword given by the Spirit to be wielded as offensive weapon (the others defensive) by the Christian is the word of God. See Heb 4:12} where the word of God is called "sharper than any two-edged sword."

6:18 {At all seasons} (\en panti kair“i\). "On every occasion." Prayer is needed in this fight. The panoply of God is necessary, but so is prayer.

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

6:19 {That utterance may be given unto me} (\hina moi doth^i logos\). Final clause with \hina\ and first aorist passive subjunctive of \did“mi\, to give. See a like request in Col 4:3. Paul wishes their prayer for courage for himself.

6:20 {For which I am an ambassador in chains} (\huper hou presbeu“ en halusei\). "For which mystery" of the gospel (verse 19). \Presbeu“\ is an old word for ambassador (from \presbus\, an old man) in N.T. only here and 2Co 5:20. Paul is now an old man (\presbut^s\, Phm 1:9) and feels the dignity of his position as Christ's ambassador though "in a chain" (\en halusei\, old word \halusis\, from \a\ privative and \lu“\, to loosen). Paul will wear a chain at the close of his life in Rome (2Ti 1:16). {In it} (\en aut“i\). In the mystery of the gospel. This is probably a second purpose (\hina\), the first for utterance (\hina doth^i\), this for boldness (\hina parr^sias“mai\, first aorist middle subjunctive, old word to speak out boldly). See 1Th 2:2. See Col 4:4 for "as I ought."

6:21 {That ye also may know} (\hina eid^te kai humeis\). Final clause with \hina\ and second perfect subjunctive active of \oida\. For Tychicus, see Col 4:7f.

6:22 {That ye may know} (\hina gn“te\). Second aorist active subjunctive of \gin“sk“\. Just as in Col 4:8 he had not written \hina eid^te\ in verse 21. {Our state} (\ta peri h^m“n\). "The things concerning us," practically the same as \ta kat' eme\ of verse 21. See both phrases in Col 4:7,8.

6:23 {Love and faith} (\agap^ meta piste“s\). Love of the brotherhood accompanied by faith in Christ and as an expression of it.

6:24 {In uncorruptness} (\en aphtharsifi\). A never diminishing love. See 1Co 15:42 for \aphtharsia\.

Robertson's New Testament Word Studies
(Ephesians: Chapter 6)

1:1 {Paul} (\Paulos\). He does not mention his apostleship as he usually does. Omitted also in I and II Thess. and Philemon.
{Timothy} (\Timotheos\). In no sense the author, but associated with Paul because with him here in Rome as in Corinth when I and II Thessalonians written and in Ephesus when I Corinthians sent and in Macedonia when II Corinthians written. Timothy was with Paul when the Philippian church was founded (Ac 16:1,13; 17:14). He had been there twice since (Ac 19:22; 20:3f.). {To all the saints} (\pfsi tois hagiois\). The word saint (\hagios\) here is used for the professing Christians as in 1Co 1:2 which see as well as Ro 1:7 for the origin of the word. The word "all" (\pfsi\) means that all individual believers are included. Paul employs this word frequently in Philippians. {In Christ Jesus} (\en Christ“i I’sou\). The centre for all Christian relations and activities for Paul and for us. {In Philippi} (\en Philippois\). See on Ac 16:12 for discussion of this name. {With the bishops} (\sun episkopois\). "Together with bishops," thus singled out from "all the saints." See Ac 20:17,28 for the use of this most interesting word as equivalent to \presbuteros\ (elder). It is an old word from \episkeptomai\, to look upon or after, to inspect, so the overseer or superintendent. In the second century \episcopos\ (Ignatius) came to mean one superior to elders, but not so in the N.T. The two New Testament church officers are here mentioned (bishops or elders and deacons). The plural is here employed because there was usually one church in a city with several pastors (bishops, elders). {And deacons} (\kai diakonois\). Technical sense here of the other church officers as in 1Ti 3:8-13, not the general use as in Mt 22:13. The origin of the office is probably seen in Ac 6:1-6. The term is often applied to preachers (1Co 3:5; 2Co 3:6). The etymology (\dia, konis\) suggests raising a dust by hastening.

1:3 {Upon} (\epi\). Basis of the thanksgiving. {All} (\pfs“i\). Note frequent use of "all" here (\pfs“i, pantote\, always, \pfs“i, again, \pant“n hum“n\, you all). The use of "you all" recurs several times (4,7 _bis_, 8).

1:4 {With joy} (\meta charas\). Keynote of the Epistle. Paul is a happy prisoner as in Philippi when he and Silas sang praises at midnight though in prison (Ac 16:25).

1:5 {For your fellowship} (\epi t'i koin“nifi hum“n). "On the basis of your contribution" as in 2Co 8:4; 9:13; Ac 2:42. The particular kind of "partnership" or "fellowship" involved is the contribution made by the Philippians for the spread of the gospel (1:7 |sugkoin“nous| and 4:14 where |sugkoin“n^santes| occurs). {In furtherance of the gospel} (\eis to euaggelion). "For the gospel." {From the first day until now} (\apo t's pr“t's h^meras achri tou nun). As when in Thessalonica (Php 4:15f.), in Corinth (Ac 18:5; 2Co 11:7-10), and now in Rome.

1:6 {Being confident} (\pepoith“s). Second perfect active of \peith“, to persuade. {This very thing} (\auto touto). Accusative of the inner object with \pepoith“s, "this thing itself." {Will perfect it} (\epitelesei). Future active indicative of \epitele“, will fully (\epi-) finish. God began and God will consummate it (see 2Co 8:6; Ga 3:3 where both words occur together as here), but not without their cooperation and partnership. {Until the day of Jesus Christ} (\achri h^meras Christou I^sou). The second coming as in verse 10. See 1Th 5:2,4; 2Th 1:10; 2:2; 1Co 1:18; 3:13; 2Co 1:14; Ro 13:12. Paul never sets the time for the Lord's return, but he is cheered by that blessed hope.

1:7 {Because I have you in my heart} (\dia to echein me en t'i kardifi humas). Or "because you hold me in your heart." Literally, "because of the holding me (or you) in the heart as to you (or me)." One accusative is the object of the infinitive \echain, the other is the accusative of general reference. There is no way to decide which is the idea meant except to say that love begets love. The pastor who, like Paul, holds his people in his heart will find them holding him in their hearts. {In the defence} (\en t'i apologifi). Old word (our word apology, but not our idea of apologizing), in the original sense in Ac 22:1; 25:16. So also in verse 16 below. {Confirmation} (\bebai“sei). Old word from \bebaio“ (\bebaios, bain“), to make stable. In N.T. only here and Heb 6:16 about oath. {Partakers with me of grace} (|sugkoin“nous mou t's charitos). Literally, "my co-sharers in grace" (objective genitive). "Grace prompted them to alleviate his imprisonment, to cooperate with him in defending and propagating the gospel, and to suffer for its sake" (Vincent, _Int. Crit. Comm._).

1:8 {My witness} (\martus mou\). Same solemn oath in Ro 1:9. {I long after} (\epipoth^{\}). Longing (\pothos\) directed toward (\epi\) the Philippians. Old word, chiefly in Paul in N.T. {In the tender mercies} (\en splagchnois\). Literally "in the bowels" as the seat of the affections.

1:9 {May abound} (\perisseu^i\). Present active subjunctive of \perisseu^{\}, may keep on overflowing, a perpetual flood of love, "yet more and more" (\eti mallon kai mallon\), but with necessary limitations (river banks), "in knowledge" (\en epign^{\} sei\, in full knowledge) "and all discernment" (\pfs^i aisth^{\} sei\). The delicate spiritual perception (\aisth^{\} sis\, old word from aisthanomai, only here in N.T. as the verb only in Lu 9:45 in N.T.) can be cultivated as in \aisth^{\} t^{\} rion\ (Heb 5:14)

1:10 {So that ye may} (\eis to humas\). Either purpose or result (\eis to\ plus infinitive as in Ro 1:11,20; 3:26, etc.).

{Approve the things that are excellent} (\dokimazein ta diapheronta\). Originally, "test the things that differ." Cf. same idiom in Ro 2:28. The verb was used for assaying metals. Either sense suits this context, but the first step is to distinguish between good and evil and that is not always easy in our complex civilization. {Sincere} (\eilikrineis\). Old word of uncertain origin from \krin^{\}, to judge, by \heil^{\} (sunlight) or to sift by rapid rolling (\eilos\). At any rate it means pure, unsullied. {Void of offence} (\aproskopoi\). Alpha privative \pros\ and \kopt^{\}, to cut, "not stumbled against" (not causing others to stumble) or if active "not stumbling against." Passive sense probably, not active as in 1Co 10:32. Common in the papyri, though not in ancient Greek writers.

1:11 {Fruits of righteousness} (\karpon dikaiosun^{\} s\). Singular, collective idea, fruit of righteousness. Accusative case retained with perfect passive participle.

1:12 {The things which happened unto me} (\ta kat' eme\). "The things concerning me" = "my affairs" as common in Josephus. {Have fallen out rather} (\mallon el^{\} luthen\). "Have come rather." Second perfect active indicative of \erchomai\, {Unto the progress} (\eis prokop^{\} n\). Late word from \prokopt^{\}, common verb, to cut or strike forward, but this late substantive does not occur in classical Greek. It is a technical term in Stoic philosophy for "progress toward wisdom" and it appears also in the papyri and the LXX. In N.T. only here, verse 25; 1Ti 4:15.

1:13 {Throughout the whole praetorian guard} (\en hol“i t“i prait“ri“i\). There were originally ten thousand of these picked soldiers, concentrated in Rome by Tiberius. They had double pay and special privileges and became so powerful that emperors had to court their favour. Paul had contact with one after another of these soldiers. It is a Latin word, but the meaning is not certain, for in the other New Testament examples (Mt 27:27; Mr 15:16; Joh 18:28,33; 19:9; Ac 23:35) it means the palace of the provincial governor either in Jerusalem or Caesarea. In Rome "palace" would have to be the emperor's palace, a possible meaning for Paul a provincial writing to provincials (Kennedy). Some take it to mean the camp or barracks of the praetorian guard. The Greek, "in the whole praetorium," allows this meaning, though there is no clear example of it. Mommsen and Ramsay argue for the judicial authorities (_*praefecti praetorio*_) with the assessors of the imperial court. At any rate Paul, chained to a soldier, had access to the soldiers and the officials.

1:14 {The most of the brethren} (\tous pleionas t“n adelph“n\). "The more part of the brethren." The comparative with the article with the sense of the superlative as often in the _Koin,_. {In the Lord} (\en Kuri“i\). It is not clear whether this phrase is to be connected with "brethren" or with "being confident" (\pepoithotas\), probably with \pepoithotas\. If so, then "through my bonds" (\tois desmois mou\) would be the instrumental case and mean that by means of Paul's bonds the brethren "are more abundantly bold" (\perissoter“s tolmfin\).

1:15 {Even of envy and strife} (\kai dia phthonon kai erin\). "Even because of" (accusative after dia\). Surely the lowest of motives for preaching Christ. Envy is an old word and an old sin and strife (\eris\) is more rivalry than schism. It is petty and personal jealousy of Paul's power and prowess by the Judaizers in Rome whom Paul has routed in the east, but who now exult at the opportunity of annoying their great antagonist by their interpretation of Christ. Jealousy is always against those of one's own class or profession as preachers with preachers, doctors with doctors. {Of goodwill} (\di' eudokian\). Because of goodwill toward Paul.

1:16 {Of love} (\ex agap“s\). Out of love to Paul as well as to Christ. Put 1Co 13 here as a flash-light.

1:17 {Of faction} (\ex eritheias\). Out of partisanship. From \eritheu“\, to spin wool, and that from \erithos\, a hireling. The papyri examples suit the idea of selfish ambition (Moulton and Milligan's _Vocabulary_). See 2Co 12:20; Ga 5:20. {Not sincerely} (\ouch hagn“s\). "Not purely," that is with mixed and impure motives. {To raise up affliction for my bonds} (\thlipsin egeirein tois desmois mou\). Now that Paul is down they jump on him in mean and nagging ways. Dative case in \desmois\. "To make my chains gall me" (Lightfoot).

1:18 {What then?} (\ti gar?\). Sharp problem put up to Paul by the conduct of the Judaizers. {Only that} (\pl^n hoti\). Same idiom in Ac 20:23. \Pl^n\ is adverb \pleon\ (more besides). As a preposition \pl^n\ means "except." This essential thing Paul sees in spite of all their envy and selfishness that Christ is preached. {Whether in pretence} (\eite prophasei\). Either from \prophain“\, to shew forth, or \proph^mi\, to speak forth, the ostensible presentation often untrue. See Ac 27:30. Paul sees clearly through the pious pretence of these Judaizers and rejoices that people get some knowledge of Christ. Some Christ is better than no Christ. {Yea, and will rejoice} (\alla kai char^somaì\). Note affirmative, not adversative, use of \alla\.

Volitive use of the future (second future passive) indicative (\char^somaì\) of \chair“\.

Paul is determined to rejoice in spite of the efforts of the Judaizers to prod him to anger.

1:19 {Will turn} (\apob^setai\). Future middle indicative of \apobain“\, old verb, to come from, to come back, to turn out.

{To my salvation} (\eis s“t^rian\). For his release from prison as he strongly hopes to see them again (1:26). Lightfoot takes the word to be Paul's eternal salvation and it must be confessed that verse 20 (the close of this sentence) does suit that idea best. Can it be that Paul carried both conceptions in the word here? {Supply} (\epichor^gias\). Late and rare word (one example in inscription of first century A.D.). In N.T. only here and Eph 4:16. From the late verb \epichor^ge“\ (double compound, \epi, choros, h^geomaì\, to furnish supply for the chorus) which see in 2Co 9:10; Ga 3:5.

1:20 {Earnest expectation} (\apokaradokian\). In Paul alone from \apokaradoke“\ (in papyri). See on Ro 8:19 for only other example. {Shall be magnified} (\megalunth^setai\). Future passive indicative of \megalun“\, old verb, to make great, from \megas\

(great). See Ac 19:17. {In my body} (\en t“i s“mati mou\). See Ro 12:1f. It is harder often to make Christ great in the body than in the spirit.

1:21 {For to me} (\emoi gar\). Fine example of the ethical dative. Paul gives his own view of living. {To live is Christ} (\to z^in Christos\). No copula (\estin\), but \to z^in\ (the act of living present active infinitive) is the subject as is shown by the article \to\. Living is coextensive with Christ. {Gain} (\kerdos\). Old word for any gain or profit, interest on money (so in papyri). In N.T. only here, Php 3:7; Tit 1:11. {To die} (\to apothanein\, second aorist active infinitive, single act) is to cash in both principal and interest and so to have more of Christ than when living. So Paul faces death with independence and calm courage.

1:22 {If this is the fruit of my work} (\touto moi karpos ergou\). There is no \ei\ (if) here in the Greek, but \touto\ (this) seems to be resumptive and to repeat the conditional clause just before. If so, \kai\ just after means {then} and introduces the conclusion of the condition. Otherwise \touto\ introduces the conclusion and \kai\ means {and}. {I wot not} (\ou gn“riz“\). "I know not." It seems odd to preserve the old English word "wot" here. But it is not clear that \gn“riz“\ (old causative verb from \gin“sk“) means just to know. Elsewhere in the N.T., as in Lu 2:15; Ro 9:22, it means to make known, to declare. The papyri examples mean to make known. It makes perfectly good sense to take its usual meaning here, "I do not declare what I shall choose."

1:23 {I am in a strait} (\sunechomai\). "I am held together." Present passive indicative of the common compound verb \sunech“\, to hold together, to hem together as in Lu 8:45. "I am hemmed in on both sides" (Lightfoot). {Betwixt the two} (\ek t“n duo\). "From the two (sides).\" Pressure to live on, pressure to die and be with Christ. {To depart} (\eis to analusai\). Purpose clause, \eis to\ and the aorist active infinitive \analusai\, old compound verb, to unloose (as threads), to break up, to return (Lu 12:36, only other N.T. example), to break up camp (Polybius), to weigh anchor and put out to sea, to depart (often in old Greek and papyri). Cf. \katalu“\ in 2Co 5:1 for tearing down the tent. {Very far better} (\poll“i mallon kreisson\). Double comparative (triple Lightfoot calls it because of \poll“i) like Isocrates and the _Koin,_ often. See 2Co 7:13 for \perissoter“s mallon\, \Poll“i\ is the instrumental case of measure (by much).

1:24 {In the flesh} (\en t`i sarki\). So B D G, but Aleph A C do not have \en\, Unnecessary with \epimen“, to abide by (common verb).

1:25 {And abide with you all} (\kai paramen“ pfsin humin\). Common Pauline idiom to repeat the simple verb (\men“) as a compound (\paramen“, future active indicative), old verb, to remain beside followed by locative case. See same idiom in \chair“, sunchair“\ (Php 2:17).

1:26 {In Christ Jesus in me} (\en Christ“i I`sou en emoi\). "In Christ Jesus" as the basis for the glorying (\kauch`ma\), "in me" as the instance in point. {Through my presence} (\dia t`s em`s parousias\). The word so often used of the second coming of Christ, but here in its ordinary sense as in 2:12; 1Co 16:17.

1:27 {Let your manner of life} (\politeuesthe\). Old verb from \polit`s\, citizen, and that from \polis\, city, to be a citizen, to manage a state's affairs, to live as a citizen. Only twice in N.T., here and Ac 23:1. Philippi as a colony possessed Roman citizenship and Paul was proud of his own possession of this right. The Authorized Version missed the figure completely by the word "conversation" which did refer to conduct and not mere talk as now, but did not preserve the figure of citizenship. Better render, "Only do ye live as citizens." {Striving} (\sunathlountes\). Rather, "striving together" as in an athletic contest. Late and rare word (Diodorus). "The very energy of the Christian faith to produce energetic individualities" (Rainy). "Striving in concert" (Lightfoot). {For the faith} (\t`i pistei\). For the teaching of the gospel, objective sense of \pistis\ (faith).

1:28 {Affrighted} (\pturomenoi\). Present passive participle of \ptur“, old verb, to frighten. The metaphor is of a timid or scared horse and from \ptoe“\ (\ptoa\, terror). "Not startled in anything." {By the adversaries} (\hupo t`n antikeimen“n\). These men who were lined up against (present middle participle of antikeimai) may have been Jews or Gentiles or both. See 2Th 2:4 for this late verb. Any preacher who attacks evil will have opposition. {Evident token} (\endeixis\). Old word for proof. See 2Co 8:24; Ro 3:25f. "An Attic law term" (Kennedy) and only in

Paul in N.T. {Perdition} (\ap“leias\). "Loss" in contrast with "salvation" (\s“t^rias\). {And that} (\kai touto\). Idiomatic adverbial accusative. "It is a direct indication from God. The Christian gladiator does not anxiously await the signal of life or death from the fickle crowd" (Lightfoot).

1:29 {In the behalf of Christ} (\to huper Christou\). Literally, "the in behalf of Christ." But Paul divides the idea and uses the article to again both with \pisteuein\ and with \paschein\. Suffering in behalf of Christ is one of God's gifts to us.

1:30 {Conflict} (\ag“na\). Athletic or gladiatorial contest as in 1Ti 6:12; 2Ti 4:7. The Philippians saw Paul suffer (Ac 16:19-40; 1Th 2:2) as now they have heard about it in Rome.

2:1 {If} (\ei\). Paul uses four conditions in this verse, all of the first class, assuming the condition to be true. {Comfort} (\parakl^{sis}\). Rather, "ground of appeal to you in Christ." See 1Co 1:10; Eph 4:1. {Consolation} (\paramuthion\). Old word from \paramutheomai\, persuasive address, incentive. {Of love} (\agap^s\). Objective genitive, "in love" (undefined as in 1Co 13). {Fellowship} (\koin^{nia}\). Partnership in the Holy Spirit "whose first fruit is love" (Ga 5:22). {Any tender mercies} (\tis splagchna\). Common use of this word for the nobler \viscera\ and so for the higher emotions. But \tis\ is masculine singular and \splagchna\ is neuter plural. Lightfoot suggests an error of an early transcriber or even of the amanuensis in writing \ei tis\ instead of \ei tina\.

2:2 {Fulfil} (\pl^r^{sate}\). Better here, "fill full." Paul's cup of joy will be full if the Philippians will only keep on having unity of thought and feeling (\to auto phron^{te}\, present active subjunctive, keep on thinking the same thing). {Being of one accord} (\sunpsuchoi\). Late word here for the first time, from \sun\ and \psuch[^]\, harmonious in soul, souls that beat together, in tune with Christ and with each other. {Of one mind} (\to hen phronountes\). "Thinking the one thing." Like clocks that strike at the same moment. Perfect intellectual telepathy. Identity of ideas and harmony of feelings.

2:3 {Through vainglory} (\kata kenodoxian\). Late word, only here in N.T., from \kenodoxos\ (\kenos, doxa\, Ga 5:26, only here in N.T.), empty pride. {In lowliness of mind} (\tⁱ tapeinophrosunⁱ\). Late and rare word. Not in O.T. or early Greek writers. In Josephus and Epictetus in bad sense (pusillanimity). For ostentatious humility in Co 2:18,23. One of the words, like \tapeinos\ (Mt 11:29) and \tapeinophrⁿ\ (1Pe 3:8, here alone in N.T.) that Christianity has ennobled and dignified (Ac 20:19). {Better than himself} (\huperechontas heautⁿ\). Present active participle of \huperechⁿ\ in intransitive sense to excel or surpass with the ablative, "excelling themselves." See Ro 12:10.

2:4 {Looking} (\skopountes\). Present active participle of \skope“\ from \skopos\ (aim, goal). Not keeping an eye on the main chance for number one, but for the good of others.

2:5 {Have this mind in you} (\touto phroneite en humin\). "Keep on thinking this in you which was also in Christ Jesus" (\ho kai en Christ“i I’sou\). What is that? Humility. Paul presents Jesus as the supreme example of humility. He urges humility on the Philippians as the only way to secure unity.

2:6 {Being} (\huparch“n\). Rather, "existing," present active participle of \huparch“\ . In the form of God (\en morph“i theou\). \Morph“\ means the essential attributes as shown in the form. In his preincarnate state Christ possessed the attributes of God and so appeared to those in heaven who saw him. Here is a clear statement by Paul of the deity of Christ. {A prize} (\harpagmon\). Predicate accusative with \h“g“sato\ . Originally words in \-mos\ signified the act, not the result (\-ma\). The few examples of \harpagmos\ (Plutarch, etc.) allow it to be understood as equivalent to \harpagma\, like \baptismos\ and \baptisma\ . That is to say Paul means a prize to be held on to rather than something to be won ("robbery"). {To be on an equality with God} (\to einai isa theoi\). Accusative articular infinitive object of \h“g“sato\, "the being equal with God" (associative instrumental case the“i\ after isa\). \Isa\ is adverbial use of neuter plural with \einai\ as in Re 21:16. {Emptied himself} (\heauton eken“se\). First aorist active indicative of \keno“\, old verb from \kenos\, empty. Of what did Christ empty himself? Not of his divine nature. That was impossible. He continued to be the Son of God. There has arisen a great controversy on this word, a \Kenosis\ doctrine. Undoubtedly Christ gave up his environment of glory. He took upon himself limitations of place (space) and of knowledge and of power, though still on earth retaining more of these than any mere man. It is here that men should show restraint and modesty, though it is hard to believe that Jesus limited himself by error of knowledge and certainly not by error of conduct. He was without sin, though tempted as we are. "He stripped himself of the insignia of majesty" (Lightfoot).

2:7 {The form of a servant} (\morph“n doulou\). He took the characteristic attributes (\morph“n\ as in verse 6) of a slave. His humanity was as real as his deity. {In the likeness of men} (\en homoi“mati anthr“p“n\). It was a likeness, but a real likeness (Kennedy), no mere phantom humanity as the Docetic Gnostics held. Note the difference in tense between \huparch“n\ (eternal existence in the \morph^ of God) and \genomenos\ (second aorist middle participle of \ginomai\, becoming, definite entrance in time upon his humanity).

2:8 {In fashion} (\sch^mati\). Locative case of \sch^ma\, from \ech“, to have, to hold. Bengel explains \morph^ by _forma_, \homoi“ma\ by _similitudo_, \sch^ma\ by _habitus_. Here with \sch^ma\ the contrast "is between what He is in Himself, and what He _appeared_ in the eyes of men" (Lightfoot). {He humbled himself} (\etapein“sen heauton\). First aorist active of \tapeino“, old verb from \tapeinos\. It is a voluntary humiliation on the part of Christ and for this reason Paul is pressing the example of Christ upon the Philippians, this supreme example of renunciation. See Bruce's masterpiece, _The Humiliation of Christ_. {Obedient} (\hup^koos\). Old adjective, giving ear to. See Ac 7:39; 2Co 2:9. {Unto death} (\mechri thanatou\). "Until death." See "until blood" (\mechris haimatos\, Heb 12:4). {Yea, the death of the cross} (\thanatou de staurou\). The bottom rung in the ladder from the Throne of God. Jesus came all the way down to the most despised death of all, a condemned criminal on the accursed cross.

2:9 {Wherefore} (\dio\). Because of which act of voluntary and supreme humility. {Highly exalted} (\huperups“se\). First aorist indicative of \huperupso“\ (\huper\ and \hupsos\) late and rare word (LXX and Byzantine). Here only in N.T. Because of Christ's voluntary humiliation God lifted him above or beyond (\huper\) the state of glory which he enjoyed before the Incarnation. What glory did Christ have after the Ascension that he did not have before in heaven? What did he take back to heaven that he did not bring? Clearly his humanity. He returned to heaven the Son of Man as well as the Son of God. {The name which is above every name} (\to onoma to huper pan onoma\). What name is that? Apparently and naturally the name {Jesus}, which is given in verse 10. Some think it is "Jesus Christ," some "Lord," some the ineffable name Jehovah, some merely dignity and honour.

2:10 {That in the name of Jesus every knee should bow} (\hina en t“i onomati I^sou pan gonu kamps^i\). First aorist active subjunctive of \kampt“, old verb, to bend, to bow, in purpose clause with \hina\. Not perfunctory genuflections whenever the name of Jesus is mentioned, but universal acknowledgment of the majesty and power of Jesus who carries his human name and nature to heaven. This universal homage to Jesus is seen in Ro 8:22; Eph 1:20-22 and in particular Re 5:13. {Under the earth} (\katakthoni“n). Homeric adjective for departed souls, subterranean, simply the dead. Here only in the N.T.

2:11 {Should confess} (\exomolog^stai). First aorist middle subjunctive of \exomologeomai with \hina for purpose. {Lord} (\Kurios). Peter (Ac 2:36) claimed that God made Christ "Lord." See also 1Co 8:6; 12:3; Ro 10:9. Kennedy laments that the term Lord has become one of the most lifeless in the Christian vocabulary, whereas it really declares the true character and dignity of Jesus Christ and "is the basis and the object of worship."

2:12 {Not as in my presence only} (\m^h“s en tⁱ parousifi monon). B and a few other MSS. omit \h“s. The negative \m^h goes with the imperative \katergazesthe (work out), not with \hup^kousate (obeyed) which would call for \ouch. {Much more} (\poll“i mallon). They are not to render eye-service only when Paul is there, but much more when he is away. {Work out} (\katergazesthe). Perfective use of \kata (down) in composition, work on to the finish. This exhortation assumes human free agency in the carrying on the work of one's salvation. {With fear and trembling} (\meta phobou kai tromou). "Not slavish terror, but wholesome, serious caution" (Vincent). "A nervous and trembling anxiety to do right" (Lightfoot). Paul has no sympathy with a cold and dead orthodoxy or formalism that knows nothing of struggle and growth. He exhorts as if he were an Arminian in addressing men. He prays as if he were a Calvinist in addressing God and feels no inconsistency in the two attitudes. Paul makes no attempt to reconcile divine sovereignty and human free agency, but boldly proclaims both.

2:13 {Which worketh in you} (\ho energ“n en humin). Articular present active participle of \energe“ from \energ^sos (\en, ergon) one at work, common verb from Aristotle on, to be at work, to energize. God is the Energy and the Energizer of the universe. Modern scientists, like Eddington, Jeans, and Whitney, are not afraid to agree with Paul and to put God back of all activity in nature. {Both to will and to work} (\kai to thelein kai to energein). "Both the willing and the working (the energizing)." God does it all, then. Yes, but he puts us to work also and our part is essential, as he has shown in verse 12, though secondary to that of God. {For his good-pleasure} (\huper t̂s eudokias\). So Whitney puts "the will of God" behind gravitation and all the laws of nature.

2:14 {Without murmurings} (\ch“ris goggusm“n\). See on Ac 6:1 for this late onomatopoetic word from \gogguz“, to mutter, to grumble. {Disputings} (\dialogism“n\). Or questionings as in Lu 24:38. The grumblings led to disputes.

2:15 {That ye may be} (\hina gen^sthe\). Rather, "that ye may become" (second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\, to become). {Blameless} (\amemptoi\). Free from censure (\memphomai\, to blame). {Harmless} (\akeraioi\). Unmixed, unadulterated as in Ro 16:19. {Without blemish} (\am“ma\). Without spot, "unblemished in reputation and in reality" (Vincent). {In the midst of} (\meson\). Preposition with genitive. {Crooked} (\skolias\). Old word, curved as opposed to \orthos\, straight. See on Ac 2:40. {Perverse} (\diestrammen^s\). Perfect passive participle of \diastreph“, to distort, to twist, to turn to one side (\dia\, in two). Old word. See Mt 17:17; Ac 13:10.

2:16 {As lights in the world} (\h“s ph“st^res en kosm“i\). As luminaries like the heavenly bodies. Christians are the light of the world (Mt 5:14) as they reflect the light from Christ (Joh 1:4; 8:12), but here the word is not \ph“s\ (light), but \ph“st^res\ (luminaries, stars). The place for light is the darkness where it is needed. {Holding forth} (\epechontes\). Present active participle of \epech“. Probably not connected with the preceding metaphor in \ph“st^res\. The old meaning of the verb \epech“ is to hold forth or to hold out (the word of life as here). The context seems to call for "holding fast." It occurs also with the sense of attending to (Ac 3:5). {That I may have} (\emoi\). Ethical dative, "to me as a ground of boasting."

2:17 {And if I am offered} (\ei kai spendomai\). Though I am poured out as a libation. Old word. In N.T. only here and 2Ti 4:6. Paul pictures his life-blood as being poured upon (uncertain whether heathen or Jewish offerings meant and not important) the sacrifice and service of the faith of the Philippians in mutual service and joy (both \chair“ and \sunchair“ twice in the sentence). Joy is mutual when the service is mutual. Young missionaries offer their lives as a challenge to other Christians to match their money with their blood.

2:19 {That I also may be of good comfort} (\hina kag“ eupsuch“\).

Present subjunctive with \hina\ in purpose clause of the late and rare verb \eupsuche“, from \eupsuchos\ (cheerful, of good spirit). In papyri and \eupsuchei\ (be of good cheer) common in sepulchral inscriptions. {When I know} (\gnous\). Second aorist active participle of \gin“sk“\.

2:20 {Likeminded} (\isopsuchon\). Old, but very rare adjective (\isos, psuch^), like \isotimos\ in 2Pe 1:1. Only here in N.T.

Likeminded with Timothy, not with Paul. {Truly} (\gn^si“s\).

"Genuinely." Old adverb, only here in N.T., from \gn^sios\ (Php 4:3), legitimate birth, not spurious.

2:21 {They all} (\hoi pantes\). "The whole of them." Surely Luke was away from Rome at this juncture.

2:22 {The proof} (\t^ n dokim^ n\). "The test" as of metals (2Co 2:9; 9:13). Three times they had seen Timothy (Ac 16:13; 19:22; 20:3f.). {With me} (\sun emoi\). Paul's delicacy of feeling made him use \sun\ rather than \emoi\ alone. Timothy did not serve Paul. {In furtherance of} (\eis\). See Php 1:5 for this use of \eis\.

2:23 {So soon as I shall see} (\h“s an aphid“\). Indefinite temporal clause with \h“s an\ and the second aorist active subjunctive of \aphora“\. The oldest MSS. (Aleph A B D) have \aphid“\ (old aspirated form) rather than \apid“\. {How it will go with me} (\ta peri eme\). On the force of \apo\ with \hora“\ (look away) see Heb 12:2. "The things concerning me," the outcome of the trial. Cf. 1Co 4:17,19.

2:24 {In the Lord} (\en Kuri“i\). Not a perfunctory use of this phrase. Paul's whole life is centred in Christ (Ga 2:20).

2:25 {I counted it} (\h^ g^ sam^ n\). Epistolary aorist from the point of view of the readers. {Epaphroditus} (\Epaphroditon\). Common name, though only in Philippians in N.T., contracted into Epaphras, though not the same man as Epaphras in Col 1:7. Note one article \ton\ (the) with the three epithets given in an ascending scale (Lightfoot), brother (\adelphon\, common sympathy), fellow-worker (\sunergon\, common work), fellow-soldier (\sunstrati“tˆn, common danger as in Phm 1:2).

\Mou\ (my) and \hum“n\ (your) come together in sharp contrast.
{Messenger} (\apostolon). See 2Co 8:23 for this use of \apostolos as messenger (missionary). {Minister} (\leitourgon).
 See on ˆRo 13:6; 15:16 for this ritualistic term.

2:26 {He longed after} (\epipoth“n ˆn). Periphrastic imperfect of \epipothe“\ (Php 1:8), "he was yearning after." {You all} (\pantas humas\). So again (1:5,7,8). {Was sore troubled}
(\adˆmon“n\). Periphrastic imperfect again (repeat |ˆn) of the old word \adˆmone“ either from an unused \adˆm“n (\a\ privative and |dˆmos, away from home, homesick) or from \adˆm“n, adˆsai
(discontent, bewilderment). The _Vocabulary_ of Moulton and Milligan gives one papyrus example in line with the latter etymology. See already Mt 26:37; Mr 14:33. In any case the distress of Epaphroditus was greatly increased when he knew that the Philippians (the home-folks) had learned of his illness,
 "because ye had heard that he was sick" (\dioti ˆkousate hoti ˆsthenˆse), "because ye heard that he fell sick" (ingressive aorist). {He was sick} (\ˆsthenˆse). Ingressive aorist, "he did become sick." {Nigh unto death} (\paraplˆsion thanat“i). Only example in N.T. of this compound adverbial preposition (from the adjective \paraplˆsios) with the dative case.

2:28 {Ye may rejoice} (\charˆte). Second aorist passive subjunctive with \hina in final clause of \chair“, to rejoice.
{That I may be the less sorrowful} (\kag“ alupoteros “). Present subjunctive with \hina and comparative of old compound adjective \alupos (\a\ privative and |lupˆ, more free from grief).
 Beautiful expression of Paul's feelings for the Philippians and for Epaphroditus.

2:29 {In honour} (\entimous). Old compound adjective (\en, timˆ), prized, precious (Lu 7:2; 14:8; 1Pe 2:4,6). Predicate accusative. Noble plea in behalf of Christ's minister.

2:30 {Hazarding his life} (\paraboleusamenos tˆi psuchˆi). First aorist middle participle of \paraboleu“\ (from the adjective \parabolos\), to place beside. The old Greek writers used \paraballomai, to expose oneself to danger. But Deissmann (_Light from the Ancient East_, p. 88) cites an example of \paraboleusamenos from an inscription at Olbia or the Black Sea of the second century A.D. where it plainly means "exposing himself to danger" as here. Lightfoot renders it here "having gambled with his life." The word \parabolani\ (riskers) was applied to the Christians who risked their lives for the dying and the dead.

3:1 {Finally} (\to loipon\). Accusative of general reference, literally, "as for the rest." So again in 4:8. It (or just loipon) is a common phrase towards the close of Paul's Epistles (2Th 3:1; 2Co 13:11). In Eph 6:10 we have \tou loipou\ (genitive case). But Paul uses the idiom elsewhere also as in 1Co 7:29; 1Th 4:1 before the close of the letter is in sight. It is wholly needless to understand Paul as about to finish and then suddenly changing his mind like some preachers who announce the end a half dozen times. {To write the same things} (\ta auta graphein\). Present active articular infinitive, "the going on writing the same things." What things? He has just used \chairete\ (go on rejoicing) again and he will repeat it in 4:4. But in verse 2 he uses \blepete\ three times. At any rate Paul, as a true teacher, is not afraid of repetition. {Irkesome} (\okn^ron\). Old adjective from \okne^, to delay, to hesitate. It is not tiresome to me to repeat what is "safe" (\asphales\) for you. Old adjective from \a\ privative and \sphall^, to totter, to reel. See Ac 21:34.

3:2 {Beware} (\blepete\). Three times for urgency and with different epithet for the Judaizers each time. {The dogs} (\tous kunas\). The Jews so termed the Gentiles which Jesus uses in a playful mood (\kunariois\, little dogs) to the Syro-Phoenician woman (Mt 15:26). Paul here turns the phrase on the Judaizers themselves. {The evil workers} (\tous kakous ergatas\). He had already called the Judaizers "deceitful workers" (\ergatai dolioi\ in 2Co 11:13. {The concision} (\t^n katatom^n\). Late word for incision, mutilation (in contrast with \peritom^, circumcision). In Symmachus and an inscription. The verb \katatemn^ is used in the LXX only of mutilations (Le 21:5; 1Ki 18:28).

3:3 {For we} (\h^meis gar\). We believers in Christ, the children of Abraham by faith, whether Jew or Gentile, the spiritual circumcision in contrast to the merely physical (Ro 2:25-29; Col 2:11; Eph 2:11). See Ga 5:12 for \apotemnein\ (to cut off) in sense of mutilation also. {By the Spirit of God} (\pneumati theou\). Instrumental case, though the dative case as the object of \latreu“\ makes good sense also (worshipping the Spirit of God) or even the locative (worshipping in the Spirit of God). {No} (\ouk\). Actual condition rather than \m^ with the participle. {In the flesh} (\en sarki\). Technical term in Paul's controversy with the Judaizers (2Co 11:18; Gal 6:13f.). External privileges beyond mere flesh.

3:4 {Might have} (\ech“n\). Rather, "even though myself having." {Confidence} (\pepoith^sin\). Late word, condemned by the Atticists, from \pepoitha\ (just used). See 2Co 1:15; 3:4.

3:5 {Thinketh to have confidence} (\dokei pepoithenai\). Second perfect active infinitive. Old idiom, "seems to himself to have confidence." Later idiom like Mt 3:9 "think not to say" and 1Co 11:16, "thinks that he has ground of confidence in himself." {I yet more} (\eg“ mallon\). "I have more ground for boasting than he" and Paul proceeds to prove it in the rest of verses 5,6. {Circumcised the eighth day} (\peritom^i okta^meros\). "In circumcision (locative case) an eighth day man." Use of the ordinal with persons like \tetartaioi\ (Joh 11:39). Ishmaelites were circumcised in the thirteenth year, proselytes from Gentiles in mature age, Jews on the eighth day (Lu 2:21). {Of the stock of Israel} (\ek genous Isra^l\). Of the original stock, not a proselyte. {Benjamin} (\Beniamin\). Son of the right hand (that is, left-handed), son of Rachel. The first King, Saul (Paul's own Hebrew name) was from this little tribe. The battle cry of Israel was "After thee, O Benjamin" (Jud 5:14). {A Hebrew of the Hebrews} (\Ebraios ex Ebrai“n\). Of Hebrew parents who retained the characteristic qualities in language and custom as distinct from the Hellenistic Jews (Ac 6:1). Paul was from Tarsus and knew Greek as well as Aramaic (Ac 21:40; 22:2) and Hebrew, but he had not become Hellenized. {A Pharisee} (\Pharisaioi\). In distinction from the Sadducees (Ga 1:14) and he continued a Pharisee in many essential matters like the doctrine of the resurrection (Ac 23:6). Cf. 2Co 11:22.

3:6 {As touching zeal} (\kata z^los\). So the old MSS. treating \z^los\ as neuter, not masculine. He was a zealot against Christianity, "persecuting the church" (\di“k“n t^h ekkl^sian\). He was the ringleader in the persecution from the death of Stephen till his own conversion (Ac 8:1-9:9). {Found blameless} (\genomenos amemptos\). "Having become blameless" (Ga 1:14). He knew and practised all the rules of the rabbis. A marvellous record, scoring a hundred in Judaism.

3:7 {Were gain to me} (\en moi kerd^). "Were gains (plural, see on 1:21) to me (ethical dative)." Paul had natural pride in his Jewish attainments. He was the star of hope for Gamaliel and the Sanhedrin. {Have I counted} (\h^g^mai^). Perfect middle indicative, state of completion and still true. {Loss} (\z^mian^). Old word for damage, loss. In N.T. only in Phil. and Ac 27:10,21. Debit side of the ledger, not credit.

3:8 {Yea, verily, and} (\alla men oun ge kai^). Five particles before Paul proceeds (yea, indeed, therefore, at least, even), showing the force and passion of his conviction. He repeats his affirmation with the present middle indicative (\h^goumai^), "I still count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge (\to huperechon^, the surpassingness, neuter articular participle of \huperech^, Php 2:3) of Christ Jesus my Lord." {Dung} (\skubala^). Late word of uncertain etymology, either connected with \sk^r^ (dung) or from \es kunas ball^, to fling to the dogs and so refuse of any kind. It occurs in the papyri. Here only in the N.T. {That I may gain Christ} (\hina Christon kerd^s^). First aorist active subjunctive of \kerda^, Ionic form for \kerdain^ with \hina^ in purpose clause. Paul was never satisfied with his knowledge of Christ and always craved more fellowship with him.

3:9 {Be found in him} (\heureth^ en aut^i^). First aorist (effective) passive subjunctive with \hina^ of \heurisk^. At death (2Co 5:3) or when Christ comes. Cf. 2:8; Ga 2:17. {Through faith in Christ} (\dia piste^s Christou^). The objective genitive \Christou^, not subjective, as in Ga 2:16,20; Ro 3:22. Explained further by \epi t^i pistei^ (on the basis of faith) as in Ac 3:16.

3:10 {That I may know him} (\tou gn^nai auton^). Genitive of the articular second aorist (ingressive) active infinitive (purpose) of \gin^sk^, to have personal acquaintance or experience with. This is Paul's major passion, to get more knowledge of Christ by experience. {The power of his resurrection} (\t^n dunamin t^s anastase^s autou^). Power (Lightfoot) in the sense of assurance to believers in immortality (1Co 15:14f.; Ro 8:11), in the triumph over sin (Ro 4:24f.), in the dignity of the body (1Co 6:13ff.; Php 3:21), in stimulating the moral and spiritual life (Ga 2:20; Ro 6:4f.; Col 2:12; Eph 2:5). See Westcott's _The Gospel of the Resurrection_, ii, 31. {The fellowship of his sufferings} ($\{t^{\wedge}n\ koin^{\wedge}n\ ian\ t^{\wedge}n\ path^{\wedge}mat^{\wedge}n\ autou\}$). Partnership in (objective genitive) his sufferings, an honour prized by Paul (Co 1:24). {Becoming conformed to his death} ($\{summorphizomenos\ t^{\wedge}i\ thanat^{\wedge}i\ autou\}$). Present passive participle of $\{summorphiz^{\wedge}\}$, late verb from $\{summorphos\}$, found only here and ecclesiastical writers quoting it. The Latin Vulgate uses $\{configuro\}$. See Ro 6:4 for $\{sumphutoi\}$ in like sense and 2Co 4:10. "The agony of Gethsemane, not less than the agony of Calvary, will be reproduced however faintly in the faithful servant of Christ" (Lightfoot). "In this passage we have the deepest secrets of the Apostle's Christian experience unveiled" (Kennedy).

3:11 {If by any means I may attain} ($\{ei\ p^{\wedge}s\ katant^{\wedge}s^{\wedge}\}$). Not an expression of doubt, but of humility (Vincent), a modest hope (Lightfoot). For $\{ei\ p^{\wedge}s\}$, see Ro 1:10; 11:14 where $\{paraz^{\wedge}l^{\wedge}s^{\wedge}\}$ can be either future indicative or aorist subjunctive like $\{katant^{\wedge}s^{\wedge}\}$ here (see subjunctive $\{katalab^{\wedge}\}$ in verse 12), late compound verb $\{katanta^{\wedge}\}$. {Resurrection} ($\{exanastasin\}$). Late word, not in LXX, but in Polybius and one papyrus example. Apparently Paul is thinking here only of the resurrection of believers out from the dead and so double $\{ex\}$ ($\{ten\ exanastasin\ t^{\wedge}n\ ek\ nekr^{\wedge}n\}$). Paul is not denying a general resurrection by this language, but emphasizing that of believers.

3:12 {Not that} ($\{ouch\ hoti\}$). To guard against a misunderstanding as in Joh 6:26; 12:6; 2Co 1:24; Php 4:11,17. {I have already obtained} ($\{^{\wedge}d^{\wedge} elabon\}$). Rather, "I did already obtain," constative second aorist active indicative of $\{lamban^{\wedge}\}$, summing up all his previous experiences as a single event. {Or am already made perfect} ($\{^{\wedge}d^{\wedge} tetelei^{\wedge}mai\}$). Perfect passive indicative (state of completion) of $\{teleio^{\wedge}\}$, old verb from $\{teleios\}$ and that from $\{telos\}$ (end). Paul pointedly denies that he has reached a spiritual impasse of non- development. Certainly he knew nothing of so-called sudden absolute perfection by any single experience. Paul has made great progress in Christlikeness, but the goal is still before him, not behind him. {But I press on} ($\{di^{\wedge}k^{\wedge} de\}$). He is not discouraged, but encouraged. He keeps up the chase (real idea in $\{di^{\wedge}k^{\wedge}\}$, as in 1Co 14:1; Ro 9:30; 1Ti 6:11). {If so be that} ($\{ei\ kai\}$). "I follow after." The condition (third class, $\{ei--katalab^{\wedge}\}$, second aorist active subjunctive of $\{katalamban^{\wedge}\}$) is really a sort of purpose clause or aim. There are plenty of examples in the _Koin,_ of the use of \ei\ and the subjunctive as here (Robertson, _Grammar_, p. 1017), "if I also may lay hold of that for which (\ep{h}' h' i, purpose expressed by \ep{i}) I was laid hold of (\katel'mphth'n, first aorist passive of the same verb \katalamban“) by Christ Jesus." His conversion was the beginning, not the end of the chase.

3:13 {Not yet} (\oup“\). But some MSS. read \ou\ (not). {To have apprehended} (\kateil'phenai\). Perfect active infinitive of same verb \katalamban“\ (perfective use of \kata\, to grasp completely). Surely denial enough. {But one thing} (\hen de\). No verb in the Greek. We can supply \poi“\ (I do) or \di“k“\ (I keep on in the chase), but no verb is really needed. "When all is said, the greatest art is to limit and isolate oneself" (Goethe), concentration. {Forgetting the things which are behind} (\ta men opis“ epilanthanomenos\). Common verb, usually with the genitive, but the accusative in the _Koin,_ is greatly revived with verbs. Paul can mean either his old pre-Christian life, his previous progress as a Christian, or both (all of it). {Stretching forward} (\epekteinomenos\). Present direct middle participle of the old double compound \epektein“\ (stretching myself out towards). Metaphor of a runner leaning forward as he runs.

3:14 {Toward the goal} (\kata skopon\). "Down upon the goal," who is Jesus himself to whom we must continually look as we run (Heb 12:2). The word means a watchman, then the goal or mark. Only here in N.T. {Unto the prize} (\eis to brabeion\). Late word (Menander and inscriptions) from \brabeus\ (umpire who awards the prize). In N.T. only here and 1Co 9:24. {Of the high calling} (\t's an“ kl'se“s\). Literally, "of the upward calling." The goal continually moves forward as we press on, but yet never out of sight.

3:15 {As many as be perfect} (\hosoi teleioi\). Here the term \teleioi\ means relative perfection, not the absolute perfection so pointedly denied in verse 12. Paul here includes himself in the group of spiritual adults (see He 5:13). {Let us be thus minded} (\touto phron“men\). Present active volitive subjunctive of \phrone“\. "Let us keep on thinking this," viz. that we have not yet attained absolute perfection. {If ye are otherwise minded} (\ei ti heter“s phroneite\). Condition of first class, assumed as true. That is, if ye think that ye are absolutely perfect. {Shall God reveal unto you} (\ho theos humin apokalupsei\). He turns such cases over to God. What else can he do with them? {Whereunto we have already come} (\eis ho ephthasamen\). First aorist active indicative of \phthan“, originally to come before as in 1Th 4:15, but usually in the _Koin, simply to arrive, attain to, as here.

3:16 {By that same rule let us walk} (\t“i aut“i stoichein\) Aleph A B do not have \kanoni (rule). Besides \stoichein is the absolute present active infinitive which sometimes occurs instead of the principal verb as in Ro 12:15. Paul means simply this that, having come thus far, the thing to do is to go "in the same path" (\t“i aut“i) in which we have been travelling so far. A needed lesson for Christians weary with the monotony of routine in religious life and work.

3:17 {Imitators together of me} (\sunmim^tai mou\). Found only here so far, though Plato uses \summimeisthai. "Vie with each other in imitating me" (Lightfoot). {Mark} (\skopeite\). Old verb from \skopos (verse 14). "Keep your eyes on me as goal." Mark and follow, not avoid as in Ro 16:17. {An ensample} (\tupon\). Originally the impression left by a stroke (Joh 20:25), then a pattern (mould) as here (cf. 1Th 1:7; 1Co 10:6,11; Ro 5:14; 6:17).

3:18 {I told you often} (\pollakis elegon\). Imperfect active, repetition in Paul's warnings to them. {Even weeping} (\kai klai“n\). Deep emotion as he dictated the letter and recalled these recreant followers of Christ (cf. 2Co 2:4). {The enemies of the cross of Christ} (\tous echthrous tou staurou tou Christou\). Either the Judaizers who denied the value of the cross of Christ (Ga 5:11; 6:12,14) or Epicurean antinomians whose loose living gave the lie to the cross of Christ (1Jo 2:4).

3:19 {Whose god is the belly} (\hou to theos h^ koilia\). The comic poet Eupolis uses the rare word \Koiliodaim“n for one who makes a god of his belly and Seneca speaks of one who _abdomini servit_. Sensuality in food, drink, sex then as now mastered some men. These men posed as Christians and gloried in their shame. {Who mind earthly things} (\hoi ta epigeia phronountes\). Anacoluthon. The nominative does not refer to \polloi at the beginning, but with the accusative \tous echthrous in between. See Mr 12:40.

3:20 {Our citizenship} (\h^m^“n to politeuma\). Old word from \pilateu“\ (Php 1:27), but only here in N.T. The inscriptions use it either for citizenship or for commonwealth. Paul was proud of his Roman citizenship and found it a protection. The Philippians were also proud of their Roman citizenship. But Christians are citizens of a kingdom not of this world (Joh 18:36). Milligan (_Vocabulary_) doubts if commentators are entitled to translate it here: "We are a colony of heaven," because such a translation reverses the relation between the colony and the mother city. But certainly here Paul's heart is in heaven. {We wait for} (\apekdechometha\). Rare and late double compound (perfective use of prepositions like wait out) which vividly pictures Paul's eagerness for the second coming of Christ as the normal attitude of the Christian colonist whose home is heaven.

3:21 {Shall fashion anew} (\metasch^matisei\). Future active indicative of \metasch^matiz“\ for which see 1Co 4:6; 2Co 11:13ff. {Conformed to} (\summorphon\). For which (\sun, morph^\) see Ro 8:29, only N.T. examples. With associative instrumental case. The body of our state of humiliation will be made suitable to associate with the body of Christ's glory (1Co 15:54f.). {According to the working} (\kata t^“n energeian\). "According to the energy." If any one doubts the power of Christ to do this transformation, Paul replies that he has power "even to subject all things unto himself."

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

4:1 {Longed for} (\epipoth^{toi}\). Late and rare verbal adjective (here alone in N.T.) from \epipothe^{ai}\. {So stand fast} (\houto st^{kete}\). Present active imperative of \st^k\ (late present from perfect \hest^{ka}\ from \hist^{mi}\). See 1:27. They were tempted to defection. Standing firm is difficult when a panic starts.

4:2 {Euodia} (\Euodian\). This name means literally "prosperous journey" (\eu, hodos\). It occurs in the inscriptions. {Syntyche} (\Suntuchⁿ\). From \suntugchan^{ai}\, to meet with and so "pleasant acquaintance" or "good-luck." Occurs in the inscriptions and identified with Lydia by some. Klopper suggests that each of these rival women had church assemblies in their homes, one a Jewish-Christian church, the other a Gentile-Christian church. Vincent doubts the great influence of women in Macedonia held by Lightfoot who also suggests that these two were ladies of rank or perhaps deaconesses of the church in Philippi. Schinz suggests that in such a pure church even slight bickerings would make a real disturbance. "It may have been accidental friction between two energetic Christian women" (Kennedy).

4:3 {True yokefellow} (\gn^{sie} sunzuge\). All sorts of suggestions have been made here, one that it was Lydia who is termed Paul's wife by the word \sunzuge\. Unfortunately for that view \gn^{sie}\ is masculine vocative singular. Some have suggested it as a proper name though it is not found in the inscriptions, but the word does occur as an appellative in one. Lightfoot even proposes Epaphroditus, the bearer of the Epistle, certainly a curious turn to take to address him. After all it matters little that we do not know who the peacemaker was. {Help these women} (\sunlambanou autais\). Present middle imperative of \sunlamban^{ai}\, to seize (Mt 26:55), to conceive (Lu 1:24), then to take hold together with one (associative instrumental case), to help as here (Lu 5:7). "Take hold with them." {They laboured with me} (\sun^{thl}san moi\). First aorist active indicative of \sunathle^{ai}\ (for which see 1:27) with associative instrumental case (\moi\). {With Clement also} (\meta kai Kl^{mentos}\). There is no evidence that he was Clement of Rome as the name is common. {In the book of life} (\|en bibl“i z“^s\). The only instance of this expression in the N.T. outside of the Apocalypse (3:5; 13:8; 17:8, etc.). Hence real Christians in spite of their bickerings.

4:4 {Again I will say} (\|palin er“\). Future active indicative of defective verb \|eipon|. {Rejoice} (\|chairete\). Present active imperative as in 3:1, repeated for emphasis in spite of discouragements. Not in the sense of "Farewell" here.

4:5 {Your forbearance} (\|to epieikes hum“n\). "Your gentleness," "your sweet reasonableness" (Matthew Arnold), "your moderation." Old adjective (\|epi, eikos\) as in Jas 3:17; 1Ti 3:3. Article and neuter singular here= \|h^ epieikeia\ (Ac 24:4; 2Co 10:1) like to \|chr^ston\ in Ro 2:4. {The Lord is at hand} (\|ho kurios eggus\). "The Apostle's watchword" (Lightfoot), as in 1Co 16:22 (\|Maran atha\, Aramaic equivalent, Our Lord cometh). Unless, indeed, \|eggus\ here means near in space instead of {nigh} in time.

4:6 {In nothing be anxious} (\|m^den merimnfte\). Present imperative in prohibition, "stop being anxious." See \|m^ merimnfte\ in Mt 6:31. {With thanksgiving} (\|meta eucharistias\). In all the forms of prayer here named thanksgiving should appear.

4:7 {The peace of God} (\|h^ eir^ n^ tou theou\). See in 2Th 3:16 "the Lord of peace" (\|ho Kurios t^s eir^ n^s\) and verse 9 for "the God of peace" (\|ho theos t^s eir^ n^s\). {Shall guard} (\|phrou^sei\). "Shall garrison," future active indicative of \|phroure“, old verb from \|phrouros\ (\|pro-horos, proora“, to see before, to look out). See Ac 9:24; 2Co 11:32. God's peace as a sentinel mounts guard over our lives as Tennyson so beautifully pictures Love as doing.

4:8 {Finally} (\|to loipon\). See on ^3:1. {Whatsoever} (\|hosa\). Thus he introduces six adjectives picturing Christian ideals, old-fashioned and familiar words not necessarily from any philosophic list of moral excellencies Stoic or otherwise. Without these no ideals can exist. They are pertinent now when so much filth is flaunted before the world in books, magazines and moving-pictures under the name of realism (the slime of the gutter and the cess-pool). {Honourable} (\|semna\). Old word from \|seb“, to worship, revere. So revered, venerated (1Ti 3:8).

{Pure} (\hagna\). Old word for all sorts of purity. There are clean things, thoughts, words, deeds. {Lovely} (\prosphil^). Old word, here only in N.T., from \pros\ and \phile^, pleasing, winsome. {Of good report} (\euph^ma\). Old word, only here in N.T., from \eu\ and \ph^m^, fair-speaking, attractive. ({If there be any} (\ei tis\). Paul changes the construction from \hosa\ (whatsoever) to a condition of the first class, as in 2:1, with two substantives. {Virtue} (\aret^). Old word, possibly from \aresk^, to please, used very often in a variety of senses by the ancients for any mental excellence or moral quality or physical power. Its very vagueness perhaps explains its rarity in the N.T., only four times (Php 4:8; 1Pe 2:9; 2Pe 1:3,5). It is common in the papyri, but probably Paul is using it in the sense found in the LXX (Isa 42:12; 43:21) of God's splendour and might (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 95) in connection with "praise" (\epainos\) as here or even meaning praise. {Think on these things} (\tauta logizesthe\). Present middle imperative for habit of thought. We are responsible for our thoughts and can hold them to high and holy ideals.

4:9 {In me} (\en emoi\). Paul dares to point to his life in Philippi as an illustration of this high thinking. The preacher is the interpreter of the spiritual life and should be an example of it. {These things do} (\tauta prassete\). Practise as a habit (\prass^, not \poie^).

4:10 {I rejoice} (\echar^n\). Second aorist passive indicative of \chair^, a timeless aorist. I did rejoice, I do rejoice. {Greatly} (\megal^s\). Old adverb, only here in N.T., from \megas\ (great). {Now at length} (\^d^ pote\). In N.T. only here and Ro 1:10. \Pote\ is indefinite past (interval), \^d^ immediate present. {Ye have revived} (\anethalete\). Second aorist active indicative of old poetic word (Homer), \anathall^, to sprout again, to shoot up, to blossom again. So in the LXX five times, though rare and literary word. {Your thought for me} (\to huper emou phronein\). Accusative case of the articular present active infinitive the object of \anethalete\ used transitively. "You caused your thinking of me to bloom afresh." {Wherein} (\eph' h^i\). "In which," "upon which" (locative case). A loose reference to Paul's interests as involved in their thinking of him. {Ye did indeed take thought} (\kai ephroneite\). Imperfect active, "ye were also (or had been also) thinking." {Ye lacked opportunity} (\^kaireisthe\). Imperfect middle of \akaireomai\, late and rare word, here only in N.T., from \akairos\ (|a| privative, |kairos|), not to have a chance, the opposite of \eukaire“\ (Mr 6:31).

4:11 {In respect of want} (|kath' huster^sin|). Late and rare word from \hustere“, to be behind or too late, only here and Mr 12:44 in N.T. {I have learned} (|emathon|). Simply, "I did learn" (constative second aorist active indicative of |manthan|), to learn, looking at his long experience as a unit). {In whatsoever state I am} (|en hois eimi|). "In what things (circumstances) I am." {To be content} (|autark^s einai|). Predicate nominative with the infinitive of the old adjective \autark^s\ (from |autos| and |arke|), to be self-sufficient), self-sufficing. Favourite word with the Stoics, only here in N.T., though \autarkeia\ occurs in 2Co 9:8; 1Ti 6:6. Paul is contented with his lot and he learned that lesson long ago. Socrates said as to who is wealthiest: "He that is content with least, for \autarkeia\ is nature's wealth."

4:12 {I know how} (|oida|). Followed by the infinitive \oida\ has this sense. So here twice, with \tapeinousthai\, to be humbled, from \tapeinos\, and with \perisseuein\, to overflow. {Have I learned the secret} (|memu^mai|). Perfect passive indicative of \mue“, old and common word from \mu“, to close (Latin _mutus_), and so to initiate with secret rites, here only in N.T. The common word \must^rion\ (mystery) is from \must^s\ (one initiated) and this from \mue“, to initiate, to instruct in secrets. Paul draws this metaphor from the initiatory rites of the pagan mystery-religions. {To be filled} (|chortazesthai|). Old verb from \chortos\ (grass, hay) and so to fatten like an animal. {To be hungry} (|peinfin|). Old verb from \peina\ (hunger) and kin to \pen^s\, poor man who has to work for his living (|penomai|).

4:13 {I can do all things} (|panta ischu|). Old verb to have strength (|ischus|). {In him that strengtheneth me} (|en t^i endunamounti me|). Late and rare verb (in LXX) from adjective \endunamos\ (|en, dunamis|). Causative verb to empower, to pour power into one. See same phrase in 1Ti 1:12 \t^i endunam“santi me\ (aorist tense here). Paul has such strength so long as Jesus keeps on putting power (|dunamis|) into him.

4:14 {That ye had fellowship} (|sunkoin^santes|). First aorist active participle (simultaneous action with the principal verb \kal“s epoiˆsate\). "Ye did well contributing for my affliction."

4:15 {In the beginning of the gospel} (\en archˆi tou euaggeliou\). After he had wrought in Philippi (2Th 2:13). {Had fellowship} (\ekoin“nˆsen\). "Had partnership" (first aorist active indicative). {In the matter} (\eis logon\). "As to an account." No other church opened an account with Paul. {Of giving and receiving} (\dose“s kai lˆmpse“s\). Credit and debit. A mercantile metaphor repeated in verse 17 by \eis logon hum“n\ (to your account). Paul had to keep books then with no other church, though later Thessalonica and Beroea joined Philippi in support of Paul's work in Corinth (2Co 11:8f.). {But ye only} (\ei mˆ humeis monoĩ\). Not even Antioch contributed anything but good wishes and prayers for Paul's work (Ac 13:1-3).

4:16 {Once and again} (\kai hapax kai dis\). "Both once and twice" they did it "even in Thessalonica" and so before Paul went to Corinth." See the same Greek idiom in 1Th 2:18.

4:17 {I seek for} (\epizˆt“\). Old verb, in N.T. only here and Ro 11:7 (linear present, I am seeking for). Lightfoot calls it "the Apostle's nervous anxiety to clear himself" of wanting more gifts. Why not say his delicate courtesy?

4:18 {I have all things} (\apech“panta\). As a receipt in full in appreciation of their kindness. \Apech“\ is common in the papyri and the ostraca for "receipt in full" (Deissmann, _Bible Studies_, p. 110). See Mt 6:2,5,16. {I am filled} (\peplˆr“mai\). Perfect passive indicative of \plˆro“\."Classical Greek would hardly use the word in this personal sense" (Kennedy). {An odour of a sweet smell} (\osmˆn eu“dias\). \Osmˆ\, old word from \oz“\, to smell. \Eu“dia\, old word from \eu\ and \oz“\."In Eph 5:2 both words come together as here and in 2Co 2:15 we have \eu“dia\ (only other N.T. example) and in verse 2Co 2:16 \osmˆ\ twice. \Eu“dias\ here is genitive of quality. {Sacrifice} (\thusian\). Not the act, but the offering as in Ro 12:1. {Well-pleasing} (\euaireston\). As in Ro 12:1.

4:19 {According to his riches in glory} (\kata to ploutos autou en doxˆi\). God has an abundant treasure in glory and will repay the Philippians for what they have done for Paul. The spiritual reward is what spurs men into the ministry and holds them to it.

4:20 {The glory} (\hˆ doxa\). "The doxology flows out of the joy of the whole epistle" (Bengel).

4:21 {They that are of Caesar's household} (hoi ek t's Kaisaros oikias\). Not members of the imperial family, but some connected with the imperial establishment. The term can apply to slaves and freedmen and even to the highest functionaries. Christianity has begun to undermine the throne of the Caesars. Some day a Christian will sit on this throne. The gospel works upward from the lower classes. It was so at Corinth and in Rome. It is true today. It is doubtful if Nero had yet heard of Paul for his case may have been dismissed by lapse of time. But this obscure prisoner who has planted the gospel in Caesar's household has won more eternal fame and power than all the Caesars combined. Nero will commit suicide shortly after Paul has been executed. Nero's star went down and Paul's rose and rises still.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

1:1 {Of Christ Jesus} (\|Christou I'sou\). This order in the later epistles shows that \|Christos\ is now regarded as a proper name and not just a verbal adjective (Anointed One, Messiah). Paul describes himself because he is unknown to the Colossians, not because of attack as in Ga 1:1. {Timothy} (\|Timotheos\). Mentioned as in I and II Thess. when in Corinth, II Cor. when in Macedonia, Phil. and Philemon when in Rome as here.

1:2 {At Colossae} (\|en Kolossais\). The spelling is uncertain, the MSS. differing in the title (\|Kolassaeis\) and here (\|Kolossais\). Colossae was a city of Phrygia on the Lycus, the tributaries of which brought a calcareous deposit of a peculiar kind that choked up the streams and made arches and fantastic grottoes. In spite of this there was much fertility in the valley with two other prosperous cities some ten or twelve miles away (Hierapolis and Laodicea). "The church at Colossae was the least important of any to which Paul's epistles were addressed" (Vincent). But he had no greater message for any church than he here gives concerning the Person of Christ. There is no more important message today for modern men.

1:3 {God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ} (\|"i the"i patri tou kuriou h'm"n I'sou Christou\). Correct text without \|kai\ (and) as in 3:17, though usually "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2Co 1:3; 11:31; Ro 15:6; 1Pe 1:3; Re 1:6). In verse 2 we have the only instance in the opening benediction of an epistle when the name of "Jesus Christ" is not joined with "God our Father." {Always} (\|pantote\). Amphibolous position between \|eucharistoumen\ (we give thanks) and \|proseuchomenoi\ (praying). Can go with either.

1:4 {Having heard of} (\|akousantes\). Literary plural unless Timothy is included. Aorist active participle of \|akou" of antecedent action to \|eucharistoumen\. Epaphras (verse 8) had told Paul. {Your faith in Jesus Christ} (\|t^n pistin hum"n en I'sou Christ"i\). See Eph 1:15 for similar phrase. No article is needed before \|en\ as it is a closely knit phrase and bears the same sense as the objective genitive in Ga 2:16 (\|dia piste“s Christou I'sou\\, by faith in Christ Jesus). {Which ye have} (\\h^n echete\\). Probably genuine (Aleph A C D), though B omits it and others have the article (\\t^n\\). There is a real distinction here between \\en\\ (sphere or basis) and \\eis\\ (direction towards), though they are often identical in idea.

1:5 {Because of the hope} (\\dia t^n elpida\\). See Ro 8:24. It is not clear whether this phrase is to be linked with \\eucha istoumen\\ at the beginning of verse 3 or (more likely) with \\t^*n agap^*n\\ just before. Note also here \\pistis\\ (faith), \\agap^n\\ (love), \\elpis\\ (hope), though not grouped together so sharply as in 1Co 13:13. Here hope is objective, the goal ahead. {Laid up} (\\apokeimein^n\\). Literally, "laid away or by." Old word used in Lu 19:20 of the pound laid away in a napkin. See also \\apoth^sauriz“\\, to store away for future use (1Ti 6:19). The same idea occurs in Mt 6:20 (treasure in heaven) and 1Pe 1:4 and it is involved in Phm 3:20. {Ye heard before} (\\pro^kousate\\). First aorist indicative active of this old compound \\proakou“\\, though only here in the N.T. Before what? Before Paul wrote? Before the realization? Before the error of the Gnostics crept in? Each view is possible and has advocates. Lightfoot argues for the last and it is probably correct as is indicated by the next clause. {In the word of the truth of the gospel} (\\en t^*i log^i t^*s al^*theias tou euaggeliou\\). "In the preaching of the truth of the gospel" (Ga 2:5,14) which is come (\\parontos\\, present active participle agreeing with euaggeliou\\, being present, a classical use of pareimi\\ as in Ac 12:20). They heard the pure gospel from Epaphras before the Gnostics came.*

1:6 {In all the world} (\\en panti t^*i kosm^*i\\). A legitimate hyperbole, for the gospel was spreading all over the Roman Empire. {Is bearing fruit} (\\estin karpophoroumenon\\). Periphrastic present middle indicative of the old compound \\karpophore“\\, from \\karpophoros\\ (Ac 14:17) and that from \\karpos\\ and \\pher“\\. The periphrastic present emphasizes the continuity of the process. See the active participle \\karpophorountes\\ in verse 10. {Increasing} (\\auxanomenon\\). Periphrastic present middle of \\auxan“\\. Repeated in verse 10. The growing and the fruit-bearing go on simultaneously as always with Christians (inward growth and outward expression). {Ye heard and knew} (\\^*kousate kai epegn^*te\\). Definite aorist indicative. They heard the gospel from Epaphras and at once recognized and accepted (ingressive second aorist active of \epigin“sk“, to know fully or in addition). They fully apprehended the grace of God and should be immune to the shallow vagaries of the Gnostics.

1:7 {Of Epaphras} (\apo Epaphrf\). "From Epaphras" who is the source of their knowledge of Christ. {On our behalf} (\huper h^m“n\). Clearly correct (Aleph A B D) and not \huper hum“n\ (on your behalf). In a true sense Epaphras was Paul's messenger to Colossae.

1:8 {Who also declared} (\ho kai d^l“sas\). Articular first aorist active participle of \d^lo“, old verb, to make manifest. Epaphras told Paul about their "love in the Spirit," grounded in the Holy Spirit.

1:9 {That ye may be filled with} (\hina pl^r“th^te\). First aorist (effective) passive subjunctive of \pl^ro“, to fill full. {The knowledge of his will} (\t^n epign“sin tou thel^matos autou\). The accusative case is retained with this passive verb. \Epign“sis\ is a _Koin,_ word (Polybius, Plutarch, etc.) for additional (\epi\) or full knowledge. The word is the keynote of Paul's reply to the conceit of Gnosticism. The cure for these intellectual upstarts is not ignorance, not obscurantism, but more knowledge of the will of God. {In all spiritual wisdom and understanding} (\en pas^i sophifi kai sunesei pneumatik^i\). Both \pasei\ (all) and \pneumatik^i\ (spiritual) are to be taken with both \sophifi\ and \sunesei\ . In Eph 1:8 Paul uses \phron^sei\ (from \phr^n\, intellect) rather than \sunesei\ (grasp, from \suni^mi\, to send together). \Sunesis\ is the faculty of deciding in particular cases while \sophia\ gives the general principles (Abbott). Paul faces Gnosticism with full front and wishes the freest use of all one's intellectual powers in interpreting Christianity. The preacher ought to be the greatest man in the world for he has to deal with the greatest problems of life and death.

1:10 {To walk worthily of the Lord} (\peripat^sai axi“s tou Kuriou\). This aorist active infinitive may express purpose or result. Certainly this result is the aim of the right knowledge of God. "The end of all knowledge is conduct" (Lightfoot). See 1Th 2:12; Php 1:27; Eph 4:1 for a like use of \axi“s\ (adverb) with the genitive. {In the knowledge of God} (\t^i epign“sei tou theou\). Instrumental case, "by means of the full knowledge of God." This is the way for fruit-bearing and growth to come. Note both participles (\karpophorountes kai auxanomenoi) together as in verse 6. {Unto all pleasing} (\eis pfsan areskian). In order to please God in all things (1Th 4:1). \Areskia is late word from \areskeu, to be complaisant (Polybius, Plutarch) and usually in bad sense (obsequiousness). Only here in N.T., but in good sense. It occurs in the good sense in the papyri and inscriptions.

1:11 {Strengthened} (\dunamoumenoi). Present passive participle of late verb \dunamo (from \dunamis), to empower, "empowered with all power." In LXX and papyri and modern Greek. In N.T. only here and Heb 11:34 and MSS. in Eph 6:10 (W H in margin). {According to the might of his glory} (\kata to kratos t's dox's autou). \Kratos is old word for perfect strength (cf. \krate\, kratilos). In N.T. it is applied only to God. Here his might is accompanied by glory (_Shekinah_). {Unto all patience and longsuffering} (\eis pfsan hupomon^n kai makrothumian). See both together also in Jas 5:10f.; 2Co 6:4,6; 2Ti 3:10. \Hupomon^n is remaining under (\hupomen) difficulties without succumbing, while \makrothumia is the long endurance that does not retaliate (Trench).

1:12 {Who made us meet} (\t'i hikan"santi h^mfs). Or "you" (\humfs). Dative case of the articular participle of \hikano, late verb from \hikanos and in N.T. only here and 2Co 3:6 (which see), "who made us fit or adequate for." {To be partakers} (\eis merida). "For a share in." Old word for share or portion (from \meros) as in Ac 8:21; 16:12; 2Co 6:15 (the only other N.T. examples). {Of the inheritance} (\tou kl^rou). "Of the lot," "for a share of the lot." Old word. First a pebble or piece of wood used in casting lots (Ac 1:26), then the allotted portion or inheritance as here (Ac 8:21). Cf. Heb 3:7-4:11. {In light} (\en t'i ph"ti). Taken with \merida (portion) "situated in the kingdom of light" (Lightfoot).

1:13 {Delivered} (\erusato). First aorist middle indicative of \ruomai, old verb, to rescue. This appositional relative clause further describes God the Father's redemptive work and marks the transition to the wonderful picture of the person and work of Christ in nature and grace in verses 14-20, a full and final answer to the Gnostic depreciation of Jesus Christ by speculative philosophy and to all modern efforts after a "reduced" picture of Christ. God rescued us out from (\ek) the power (\exousias) of the kingdom of darkness (\skotous) in which we were held as slaves. {Translated} (\metest^{sen}\). First aorist active indicative of \methist^{mi}\ and transitive (not intransitive like second aorist \metest[^]\). Old word. See 1Co 13:2. Changed us from the kingdom of darkness to the kingdom of light. {Of the Son of his love} (\tou huiou t^s agap^{^s} autou\). Probably objective genitive (\agap^{^s}\), the Son who is the object of the Father's love like \agap^{^tos}\ (beloved) in Mt 3:17. Others would take it as describing love as the origin of the Son which is true, but hardly pertinent here. But Paul here rules out the whole system of aeons and angels that the Gnostics placed above Christ. It is Christ's Kingdom in which he is King. He has moral and spiritual sovereignty.

1:14 {In whom} (\en h^{“i}\). In Christ as in Eph 1:7. This great sentence about Christ carries on by means of three relatives (\en h^{“i}\ 14, \hos\ 15, \hos\ 18) and repeated personal pronoun (\autos\), twice with \hoti\ (15,19), thrice with \kai\ (17,18,20), twice alone (16,20). {Our redemption} (\tⁿ apolutr^{“sin}\). See on Ro 3:24 for this great word (_Koin, _), a release on payment of a ransom for slave or debtor (Heb 9:15) as the inscriptions show (Deissmann, _Light, etc., p. 327). {The forgiveness of our sins} (\tⁿ aphisin t^{“n} hamarti^{“n}\). Accusative case in apposition with \apolutr^{“sin}\ as in Eph 1:7 ({remission}, sending away, \aphesis\, after the {redemption} \apolutr^{“sis}\, buying back). Only here we have \hamarti^{“n}\ (sins, from \hamartan[“]\, to miss) while in Eph 1:7 we find \parapt^{“mat}“n\ (slips, fallings aside, from \parapipt[“]\).

1:15 {The image} (\eik^{“n}\). In predicate and no article. On \eik^{“n}\, see 2Co 4:4; 3:18; Ro 8:29; Col 3:10. Jesus is the very stamp of God the Father as he was before the Incarnation (Joh 17:5) and is now (Php 2:5-11; Heb 1:3). {Of the invisible God} (\tou theou tou aoratou\). But the one who sees Jesus has seen God (Joh 14:9). See this verbal adjective (\a\ privative and \hora[“]\) in Ro 1:20. {The first born} (\pr^{“totokos}\). Predicate adjective again and anarthrous. This passage is parallel to the \Logos\ passage in Joh 1:1-18 and to Heb 1:1-4 as well as Php 2:5-11 in which these three writers (John, author of Hebrews, Paul) give the high conception of the Person of Christ (both Son of God and Son of Man) found also in the Synoptic Gospels and even in Q (the Father, the Son). This word (LXX and N.T.) can no longer be considered purely "Biblical" (Thayer), since it is found In inscriptions (Deissmann, _Light, etc., p. 91) and in the papyri (Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary, etc.). See it already in Lu 2:7 and Aleph for Mt 1:25; Ro 8:29. The use of this word does not show what Arius argued that Paul regarded Christ as a creature like "all creation" (\pfs^s ktise"s\, by metonymy the act regarded as result). It is rather the comparative (superlative) force of \pr"tos\ that is used (first-born of all creation) as in Col 1:18; Ro 8:29; Heb 1:6; 12:23; Re 1:5. Paul is here refuting the Gnostics who pictured Christ as one of the aeons by placing him before "all creation" (angels and men). Like \eik"n\ we find \pr"totokos\ in the Alexandrian vocabulary of the \Logos\ teaching (Philo) as well as in the LXX. Paul takes both words to help express the deity of Jesus Christ in his relation to the Father as \eik"n\ (Image) and to the universe as \pr"totokos\ (First-born).

1:16 {All things} (\ta panta\). The universe as in Ro 11:35, a well-known philosophical phrase. It is repeated at the end of the verse. {In him were created} (\en aut"i ektisth^). Paul now gives the reason (\hoti\, for) for the primacy of Christ in the work of creation (16f.). It is the constative aorist passive indicative \ektisth^ (\from \ktiz", old verb, to found, to create (Ro 1:25)). This central activity of Christ in the work of creation is presented also in Joh 1:3; Heb 1:2 and is a complete denial of the Gnostic philosophy. The whole of creative activity is summed up in Christ including the angels in heaven and everything on earth. God wrought through "the Son of his love." All earthly dignities are included. {Have been created} (\ektistai\). Perfect passive indicative of \ktiz", "stand created," "remain created." The permanence of the universe rests, then, on Christ far more than on gravity. It is a Christo-centric universe. {Through him} (\di' autou\). As the intermediate and sustaining agent. He had already used \en aut"i\ (in him) as the sphere of activity. {And unto him} (\kai eis auton\). This is the only remaining step to take and Paul takes it (1Co 15:28) See Eph 1:10 for similar use of \en aut"i\ of Christ and in Col 1:19; 20 again we have \en aut"i, di' autou, eis auton\ used of Christ. See Heb 2:10 for \di' hon\ (because of whom) and \di' hou\ (by means of whom) applied to God concerning the universe (\ta panta\). In Ro 11:35 we find \ex autou kai di' autou kai eis auton ta panta\ referring to God. But Paul does not use \ex\ in this connection of Christ, but only \en\, \dia\, and \eis\.

See the same distinction preserved in 1Co 8:6 (\ex\ of God, \dia\, of Christ).

1:17 {Before all things} (\pro pant“n). \Pro with the ablative case. This phrase makes Paul's meaning plain. The precedence of Christ in time and the preeminence as Creator are both stated sharply. See the claim of Jesus to eternal timeless existence in Joh 8:58; 17:5. See also Re 23:13 where Christ calls himself the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning (\arch^) and the End (\telos). Paul states it also in 2Co 8:9; Php 2:6f. {Consist} (\sunest^ken). Perfect active indicative (intransitive) of \sunist^mi, old verb, to place together and here to cohere, to hold together. The word repeats the statements in verse 16, especially that in the form \ektistai. Christ is the controlling and unifying force in nature. The Gnostic philosophy that matter is evil and was created by a remote aeon is thus swept away. The Son of God's love is the Creator and the Sustainer of the universe which is not evil.

1:18 {The head of the body} (\h^ kephal^ tou s“matos). Jesus is first also in the spiritual realm as he is in nature (verses 18-20). Paul is fond of the metaphor of the body (\s“ma) for believers of which body Christ is the head (\kephal^) as seen already in 1Co 11:3; 12:12,27; Ro 12:5. See further Col 1:24: 2:19; Eph 1:22f.; 4:2,15; 5:30. {The church} (\t^s ekkl^sias) Genitive case in explanatory apposition with \tou s“matos. This is the general sense of \ekkl^sia, not of a local body, assembly, or organization. Here the contrast is between the realm of nature (\ta panta) in verses 15-17 and the realm of spirit or grace in verses 18-20. A like general sense of \ekkl^sia occurs in Eph 1:22f.; 5:24-32; Heb 12:23. In Eph 2:11-22 Paul uses various figures for the kingdom of Christ (commonwealth \politeia\, verse 12, one new man \eis hena kainon anthr“pon\, verse 15, one body \en heni s“mati\, verse 16, family of God \oikeioi tou theou\, verse 19, building or temple \oikodom^ and \naos\, verses 20-22). {Who} (\hos). Causal use of the relative, "in that he is." {The beginning} (\h^ arch^). It is uncertain if the article (\h^) is genuine. It is absolute without it. Christ has priority in time and in power. See Re 3:14 for his relation as \arch^ to creation and 1Co 15:20,23 for \aparch^ used of Christ and the resurrection and Ac 3:14 for \arch^gos used of him as the author of life and Heb 2:10 of Jesus and salvation and Heb 12-2 of Jesus as the pioneer of faith. {That in all things he might have the preeminence} (\hina gen^ˆtai en pfsin autos pr^ˆteu^ˆn). Purpose clause with \hina\ and the second aorist middle subjunctive of \ginomai\, "that he himself in all things (material and spiritual) may come to (\gen^ˆtai\, not \i\, be) hold the first place" (\pr^ˆteu^ˆn\, present active participle of \pr^ˆteu^ˆ\, old verb, to hold the first place, here only in the N.T.). Christ is first with Paul in time and in rank. See Re 1:5 for this same use of \pr^ˆtotokos\ with \t^ˆn nekr^ˆn\ (the dead).

1:19 {For it was the good pleasure of the Father} (\hoti eudok^ˆsen\). No word in the Greek for "the Father," though the verb calls for either \ho theos\ or \ho pat^ˆr\ as the subject. This verb \eudoke^ˆ\ is common in the N.T. for God's will and pleasure (Mt 3:17; 1Co 10:5). {All the fulness} (\pfn to pl^ˆr^ˆma\). The same idea as in 2:9 \pfn to pl^ˆr^ˆma t^ˆs theot^ˆtos\ (all the fulness of the Godhead). "A recognized technical term in theology, denoting the totality of the Divine powers and attributes" (Lightfoot). It is an old word from \pl^ˆro^ˆ\, to fill full, used in various senses as in Mr 8:20 of the baskets, Ga 4:10 of time, etc. The Gnostics distributed the divine powers among various aeons. Paul gathers them all up in Christ, a full and flat statement of the deity of Christ. {Should dwell} (\katoik^ˆsai\). First aorist active infinitive of \katoike^ˆ\, to make abode or home. All the divine attributes are at home in Christ (\en aut^ˆi\).

1:20 {Through him} (\di' autou\). As the sufficient and chosen agent in the work of reconciliation (\apokatallaxai\, first aorist active infinitive of \apokatallass^ˆ\, further addition to \eudok^ˆsen\, was pleased). This double compound (\apo, kata\ with \allass^ˆ\) occurs only here, verse 22; Eph 2:16, and nowhere else so far as known. Paul's usual word for "reconcile" is \katallass^ˆ\ (2Co 5:18-20; Ro 5:10), though \diallass^ˆ\ (Mt 5:24) is more common in Attic. The addition of \apo\ here is clearly for the idea of complete reconciliation. See on 2Co 5:18-20 for discussion of \katallass^ˆ\, Paul's great word. The use of \ta panta\ (the all things, the universe) as if the universe were somehow out of harmony reminds us of the mystical passage in Ro 8:19-23 which see for discussion. Sin somehow has put the universe out of joint. Christ will set it right. {Unto himself} (\eis auton\). Unto God, though \auton\ is not reflexive unless written \hauton\). {Having made peace} (\eir^ˆnopoi^ˆsas\). Late and rare compound (Pr 10:10 and here only in N.T.) from \eir^{no}poios\, peacemaker (Mt 5:9; here only in N.T.). In Eph 2:15 we have \poiⁿ eirⁿ\ (separate words) {making peace}. Not the masculine gender, though agreeing with the idea of Christ involved even if \pl^r“ma\ be taken as the subject of \eudok^{sen}\, a participial anacoluthon (construction according to sense as in 2:19). If \theos\ be taken as the subject of \eudok^{sen}\ the participle \eir^{no}poi^{sas}\ refers to Christ, not to \theos\ (God). {Through the blood of his cross} (\dia tou haimatos tou staurou autou\). This for the benefit of the Docetic Gnostics who denied the real humanity of Jesus and as clearly stating the _causa medians_ (Ellicott) of the work of reconciliation to be the Cross of Christ, a doctrine needed today. {Or things in the heavens} (\eite ta en tois ouranois\). Much needless trouble has been made over this phrase as if things in heaven were not exactly right. It is rather a hypothetical statement like verse 16 not put in categorical form (Abbott), _universitas rerum_ (Ellicott).

1:21 {And you} (\kai humfs\). Accusative case in a rather loose sentence, to be explained as the object of the infinitive \parast^{sai}\ in verse 22 (note repeated humfs there) or as the anticipated object of \apokat^{llaxen}\ if that be the genuine form in verse 22. It can be the accusative of general reference followed by anacoluthon. See similar idiom in Eph 2:1,12. {Being in time past alienated} (\pote ontas ap^{llo}tri“menous\). Periphrastic perfect passive participle (continuing state of alienation) of \apallotrio“, old word from Plato on, to estrange, to render \allotrios\ (belonging to another), alienated from God, a vivid picture of heathenism as in Ro 1:20-23. Only other N.T. examples in Eph 2:12; 4:18. \Enemies\ (\exthrous\). Old word from \echthos\ (hatred). Active sense here, {hostile} as in Mt 13:28; Ro 8:7, not passive {hateful} (Ro 11:28). {In your mind} (\tⁱ dianoifi\). Locative case. \Dianoia\ (\dia, nous\), mind, intent, purpose. Old word. It is always a tragedy to see men use their minds actively against God. {In your evil works} (\en tois ergois tois pon^{rois}\). Hostile purpose finds natural expression in evil deeds.

1:22 {Yet now} (\nuni de\). Sharpened contrast with emphatic form of \nun\, "now" being not at the present moment, but in the present order of things in the new dispensation of grace in Christ. {Hath he reconciled} (\apokat^{llaxen}\). First aorist (effective, timeless) active indicative (a sort of parenthetical anacoluthon). Here B reads \apokatallag^{te}\, be ye reconciled like \katallag^{te}\ in 2Co 5:20 while D has \apokatallagentes\. Lightfoot prefers to follow B here (the hard reading), though Westcott and Hort only put it in the margin. On the word see verse 20. {In the body of his flesh} (\en tⁱ s^{ma} t^s sarkos autou\). See the same combination in 2:11 though in Eph 2:14 only \sarki\ (flesh). Apparently Paul combines both \s^{ma}\ and \sarx\ to make plain the actual humanity of Jesus against incipient Docetic Gnostics who denied it. {Through death} (\dia tou thanatou\). The reconciliation was accomplished by means of Christ's death on the cross (verse 20) and not just by the Incarnation (the body of his flesh) in which the death took place. {To present} (\parast^{sai}\). First aorist active (transitive) infinitive (of purpose) of \parist^{mi}\, old verb, to place beside in many connections. See it used of presenting Paul and the letter from Lysias to Felix (Ac 23:33). Repeated in Col 2:28. See also 2Co 11:2; 2Co 4:14. Paul has the same idea of his responsibility in rendering an account for those under his influence seen in Heb 13:17. See Ro 12:1 for use of living sacrifice. {Holy} (\hagious\). Positively consecrated, separated unto God. Common in N.T. for believers. Haupt holds that all these terms have a religious and forensic sense here. {Without blemish} (\am^{mos}\). Without spot (Php 2:15). Old word \a\ privative and \m^{mos}\ (blemish). Common in the LXX for ceremonial purifications. {Unreproveable} (\anegkl^{tous}\). Old verbal adjective from \a\ privative and \egkale^{ai}\, to call to account, to pick flaws in. These three adjectives give a marvellous picture of complete purity (positive and negative, internal and external). This is Paul's ideal when he presents the Colossians "before him" (\katen^{pion autou}\), right down in the eye of Christ the Judge of all.

1:23 {If so be that ye continue in the faith} (\ei ge epimenete tⁱ pistei\). Condition of the first class (determined as fulfilled), with a touch of eagerness in the use of \ge\ (at least). \Epi\ adds to the force of the linear action of the present tense (continue and then some). {Pistei} is in the locative case (in faith). {Grounded} (\tethemeli^{menoi}\). Perfect passive participle of \themelio^{ai}\, old verb from \themelios\ (adjective, from \thema\ from \tith^{mi}\, laid down as a foundation, substantive, 1Co 3:11f.). Picture of the saint as a building like Eph 2:20. {Steadfast} (\hedraioi\). Old adjective from \hedra\ (seat). In N.T. only here, 1Co 7:37; 15:58.

Metaphor of seated in a chair. {Not moved away} (\m^metakinoumenoi). Present passive participle (with negative \m^) of \metakine^, old verb, to move away, to change location, only here in N.T. Negative statement covering the same ground. {From the hope of the gospel} (\apo t^s elpidos tou euaggeliou). Ablative case with \apo. The hope given by or in the gospel and there alone. {Which ye heard} (\hou ^kousate). Genitive case of relative either by attraction or after ^kousate. The Colossians had in reality heard the gospel from Epaphras. {Preached} (\k^ruchthentos). First aorist passive participle of \k^russ^, to herald, to proclaim. {In all creation} (\en pas^i ktisei). \Ktisis is the act of founding (Ro 1:20) from \ktiz^ (verse 16), then a created thing (Ro 1:25), then the sum of created things as here and Re 3:14. It is hyperbole, to be sure, but Paul does not say that all men are converted, but only that the message has been heralded abroad over the Roman Empire in a wider fashion than most people imagine. {A minister} (\diakonos). General term for service (\dia, konis\, raising a dust by speed) and used often as here of preachers like our "minister" today, one who serves. Jesus used the verb \diakon^sai of himself (Mr 10:45). Our "deacon" is this word transliterated and given a technical meaning as in Php 1:1.

1:24 {Now I rejoice} (\nun chairomen). This is not a new note for Paul. See him in jail in Philippi (Ac 16:25) and in 2Co 11:16-33; Ro 5:3; Php 2:18. {Fill up on my part} (\antanapl^r^). Very rare double compound verb (here only in N.T.) to fill (\pl^ro^) up (\ana), in turn (\anti). It is now Paul's "turn" at the bat, to use a baseball figure. Christ had his "turn," the grandest of all and suffered for us all in a sense not true of any one else. It is the idea of balance or correspondence in \anti as seen in Demosthenes's use of this verb (_De Symm_, p. 282), "the poor balancing the rich." And yet Christ did not cause suffering to cease. There is plenty left for Paul and for each of us in his time. {That which is lacking} (\ta huster^mata). "The left-overs," so to speak. Late word from \hustere^, to come behind, to be left, to fail. See Lu 21:4; 1Th 3:10; 2Co 8:14; 9:12. {For his body's sake} (\huper tou s^matos autou). As Paul showed in his exultation in suffering in 2Co 11:16-33, though not in the same sense in which Christ suffered and died for us as Redeemer. Paul attaches no atoning value whatever to his own sufferings for the church (see also verse 18).

1:25 {According to the dispensation of God} (\kata tⁿ oikonomian tou theou). "According to the economy of God." An old word from \oikonome^a\, to be a house steward (\oikos, nem^a) as in Lu 16:2-4; 1Co 9:17; Eph 1:9; 3:9. It was by God's stewardship that Paul was made a minister of Christ. {To fulfil the word of God} (\pl^r“sai ton logon tou theou). First aorist active infinitive of purpose (\pl^rro^a), a fine phrase for a God-called preacher, to fill full or to give full scope to the Word of God. The preacher is an expert on the word of God by profession. See Paul's ideal about preaching in 2Th 3:1.

1:26 {The mystery} (\to must^rion). See on 1Co 2:7 for this interesting word from \must^s\ (initiate), from \mue^a\, to wink, to blink. The Gnostics talked much of "mysteries." Paul takes their very word (already in common use, Mt 13:11) and uses it for the gospel. {Which hath been hid} (\to apokekrummenon). Perfect passive articular participle from \apokrupt^a\, old verb, to hide, to conceal from (1Co 2:7; Eph 3:9). {But now it hath been manifested} (\nun de ephaner^a“th). First aorist passive indicative of \phanero^a\, to make manifest (\phaneros). The construction is suddenly changed (anacoluthon) from the participle to the finite verb.

1:27 {God was pleased} (\thel^sen ho theos). First aorist active indicative of \thel^a\, to will, to wish. "God willed" this change from hidden mystery to manifestation. {To make known} (\gn^a“risai). First aorist active infinitive of \gn^a“riz^a\ (from \gin^a“sk^a). Among the Gentiles (\en tois ethnesin). This is the crowning wonder to Paul that God had included the Gentiles in his redemptive grace, "the riches of the glory of this mystery" (\to ploutos t^s dox^s tou must^riou toutou) and that Paul himself has been made the minister of this grace among the Gentiles (Eph 3:1-2). He feels the high honour keenly and meets the responsibility humbly. {Which} (\ho). Grammatical gender (neuter) agreeing with \must^riou\ (mystery), supported by A B P Vulg., though \hos\ (who) agreeing with \Christos\ in the predicate is read by Aleph C D L. At any rate the idea is simply that the personal aspect of "this mystery" is "Christ in you the hope of glory" (\Christos en humin h^a elpis t^s dox^s). He is addressing Gentiles, but the idea of \en\ here is in, not among. It is the personal experience and presence of Christ in the individual life of all believers that Paul has in mind, the indwelling Christ in the heart as in Eph 3:17. He constitutes also the hope of glory for he is the \Shekinah\ of God. Christ is our hope now (1Ti 1:1) and the consummation will come (Ro 8:18).

1:28 {Whom} (hon\). That is, "Christ in you, the hope of glory." {We proclaim} (kataggellomen\). Paul, Timothy and all like-minded preachers against the Gnostic depreciation of Christ. This verb originally (Xenophon) meant to denounce, but in N.T. it means to announce (aggell\) throughout (kata\), to proclaim far and wide (Ac 13:5). {Admonishing} (nouthetountes\). Old verb from \nouthet^s\, admonisher (from \n*ous*, \tith^mi\). See already Ac 20:31; 1Th 5:12,14; 2Th 3:15, etc. Warning about practice and teaching (didaskontes\) about doctrine. Such teaching calls for "all wisdom" {Every man} (panta anthr^pon\). Repeated three times. "In opposition to the doctrine of an intellectual exclusiveness taught by the false teachers" (Abbott). {That we may present} (hina parast^s^men\). Final use of \hina\ and first aorist active subjunctive of \parist^mi\, for which see 1:22, the final presentation to Christ. {Perfect} (teleion\). Spiritual adults in Christ, no longer babes in Christ (Heb 5:14), mature and ripened Christians (4:22), the full-grown man in Christ (Eph 4:13). The relatively perfect (Php 3:15) will on that day of the presentation be fully developed as here (Col 4:12; Eph 4:13). The Gnostics used \teleios\ of the one fully initiated into their mysteries and it is quite possible that Paul here has also a sidewise reference to their use of the term.

1:29 {Whereunto} (\eis ho\). That is "to present every man perfect in Christ." {I labour also} (\kai kopi^"). Late verb \kopia^", from \kopos\ (toil), to grow weary from toil (Mt 11:28), to toil on (Php 2:16), sometimes for athletic training. In papyri. {Striving} (\ag^"nizomenos\). Present middle participle of common verb \ag^"nizomai\ (from \ag^"n\, contest, as in 2:1), to contend in athletic games, to agonize, a favourite metaphor with Paul who is now a prisoner. {Working} (\energeian\). Our word "energy." Late word from \energ^s\ (\en, ergon\), efficiency (at work). Play on the word here with the present passive participle of \energe^", energoumen^n\ (energy energized) as in Eph 1:19f. Paul was conscious of God's "energy" at work in him "mightily" (\en dunamei\), "in power" like dynamite.

[\[Previous\]](#) [\[Next\]](#)

2:1 {How greatly I strive} (\h^{likon} ag^{na ech}). Literally, "how great a contest I am having." The old adjectival relative \h^{likos} (like Latin _quantus_) is used for age or size in N.T. only here and Jas 3:5 (twice, how great, how small). It is an inward contest of anxiety like the \merimna for all the churches (2Co 11:28). \Ag^{na} carries on the metaphor of \ag^{nizomenos} in 1:29. {For them at Laodicea} (\t^{n en Laodikifi}). {Supply} \huper as with \huper humⁿ. Paul's concern extended beyond Colossae to Laodicea (4:16) and to Hierapolis (4:13), the three great cities in the Lycus Valley where Gnosticism was beginning to do harm. Laodicea is the church described as lukewarm in Re 3:14. {For as many as have not seen my face} (\hosoi ouch heorakan to pros^{pon mou}). The phrase undoubtedly includes Hierapolis (4:13), and a few late MSS. actually insert it here. Lightfoot suggests that Hierapolis had not yet been harmed by the Gnostics as much as Colossae and Laodicea. Perhaps so, but the language includes all in that whole region who have not seen Paul's face in the flesh (that is, in person, and not in picture). How precious a real picture of Paul would be to us today. The antecedent to \hosoi is not expressed and it would be \toutⁿ after \huper. The form \heorakan (perfect active indicative of \hora^{na}\ instead of the usual \he^{rakan}\ has two peculiarities |o| in Paul's Epistles (1Co 9:1) instead of |a| (see Joh 1:18 for \he^{rakan}) and |-an| by analogy in place of |-asin|, which short form is common in the papyri. See Lu 9:36 \he^{rakan}).

2:2 {May be comforted} (\parakl^{th sin}). First aorist passive subjunctive of \parakale^{na} (for which see 2Co 1:3-7) in final clause with \hina. {Being knit together} (\sunbibasthentes). First aorist passive participle of \sunbibaz^{na}, old verb, causal of \bain^{na}, to make go together, to coalesce in argument (Ac 16:10), in spiritual growth (Col 2:19), in love as here. Love is the \sundesmos (3:14) that binds all together. {Unto all riches} (\eis pan ploutos). Probably some distinction intended between \en (in love as the sphere) and \eis (unto as the goal). {Of the full assurance of understanding} (\t^s pl^{rophorias} t^s sunese^s). On \pl^{rophoria}, see 1Th 1:5.

From \pl^rophore" (see Lu 1:1) and only in N.T. (1Th 1:5; Col 2:2; Heb 6:11; 10:22), Clement of Rome (_Cor_. 42) and one papyrus example. Paul desires the full use of the intellect in grasping the great mystery of Christ and it calls for the full and balanced exercise of all one's mental powers. {That they may know} (\eis epign"sin\). "Unto full knowledge." This use of \epign"sis\ (full, additional knowledge) is Paul's reply to the Gnostics with the limited and perverted \gn"sis\ (knowledge). {The mystery of God, even Christ} (\tou must^riou tou theou, Christou\). The MSS. differ widely here, but this is Westcott and Hort's reading. Genitive (objective) with \epign"sin\ and \Christou\ in apposition. Christ is "the mystery of God," but no longer hidden, but manifested (1:26) and meant for us to know to the fulness of our capacity.

2:3 {In whom} (\en h"i\). This locative form can refer to \must^riou\ or to \Christou\. It really makes no difference in sense since Christ is the mystery of God. {All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge} (\pantes hoi th^sauroi t^s sophias kai gn"se"s\). See on Mt 2:11; 6:19-21 for this old word, our thesaurus, for coffer, storehouse, treasure. Paul confronts these pretentious intellectuals (Gnostics) with the bold claim that Christ sums up all wisdom and knowledge. These treasures are hidden (\apokruphoi\, old adjective from \apokrupt", to hide away, Mr 4:22) whether the Gnostics have discovered them or not. They are there (in Christ) as every believer knows by fresh and repeated discovery.

2:4 {This I say} (\touto leg"). Paul explains why he has made this great claim for Christ at this point in his discussion. {May delude} (\paralogiz^tai\). Present middle subjunctive of \paralogizomai\, old verb, only here in N.T., from \para\ and \logizomai\, to count aside and so wrong, to cheat by false reckoning, to deceive by false reasoning (Epictetus). {With persuasiveness of speech} (\en pithanologi^fi\). Rare word (Plato) from \pithanos\ and \logos\, speech, adapted to persuade, then speciously leading astray. Only here in N.T. One papyrus example. The art of persuasion is the height of oratory, but it easily degenerates into trickery and momentary and flashy deceit such as Paul disclaimed in 1Co 2:4 (\ouk en pithois sophias logois\) where he uses the very adjective \pithos\ (persuasive) of which \pithanos\ (both from \peith") is another form. It is curious how winning champions of error, like the Gnostics and modern faddists, can be with plausibility that catches the gullible.

2:5 {Though} (\ei kai\). Not \kai ei\ (even if). {Yet} (\alla\).

Common use of \alla\ in the apodosis (conclusion) of a conditional or concessive sentence. {Your order} (\tⁿ taxin\).

The military line (from tass“\), unbroken, intact. A few stragglers had gone over to the Gnostics, but there had been no panic, no breach in the line. {Steadfastness} (\stere“ma\). From \stereo“\ (from stereos\) to make steady, and probably the same military metaphor as in \taxin\ just before. The solid part of the line which can and does stand the attack of the Gnostics. See Ac 16:5 where the verb \stereo“\ is used with \pistis\ and 1Pe 5:9 where the adjective \stereos\ is so used. In 2Th 3:6,8,11 Paul speaks of his own \taxis\ (orderly conduct).

2:6 {As therefore ye received} (\h“s oun parelabete\). Second aorist active indicative of \paralamban“\ in same sense as in 1Th 4:1; Php 4:9 (both manthan“\ and paralamban“) that is like \manthan“\, to learn (1:7), from Epaphras and others.

{Christ Jesus the Lord} (\ton Christon I^{soun} ton Kurion\). This peculiar phrase occurs nowhere else by Paul. We have often \ho Christos\ (the Christ or Messiah) as in Php 1:15, \I^{sous} Christos\ (Jesus Christ), \Christos I^{sous}\ (Christ Jesus), \ho Kurios I^{sous}\ (the Lord Jesus, very often), but nowhere else \ho Christos I^{sous}\ and \I^{sous} ho Kurios\. Hence it is plain that Paul here meets the two forms of Gnostic heresy about the Person of Christ (the recognition of the historical Jesus in his actual humanity against the Docetic Gnostics, the identity of the Christ or Messiah with this historical Jesus against the Cerinthian Gnostics, and the acknowledgment of him as Lord). "As therefore ye received the Christ (the Messiah), Jesus the Lord." Ye were taught right. {Walk in him} (\en aut“i peripateite\). "Go on walking in him" (present active indicative of peripate“). Stick to your first lessons in Christ.

2:7 {Rooted} (\erriz“menoi\). Perfect passive participle of old verb \rizo“\ from \riza\, root. In N.T. only here and Eph 3:17.

Paul changes the figure from walk to growing tree. {Builded up in him} (\epoikodomoumenoi en aut“i\). Present passive participle (rooted to stay so) of \epoikodome“\, old verb, to build upon as in 1Co 3:10,12. The metaphor is changed again to a building as continually going up (present tense). {Stablished} (\bebaioumenoi\). Present passive participle of \bebaio“\, old verb from \bebaios\ (from bain“\, bai“), to make firm or stable.

{In your faith} (t̃i pistei). Locative case, though the instrumental case, {by your faith}, makes good sense also. {Even as ye were taught} (kath̃s edidachth̃te). First aorist passive indicative of \didask̃, an allusion to \parelabete in verse 6 and to \emathete in 1:7. {In thanksgiving} (en eucharistifi). Hence they had no occasion to yield to the blandishments of the Gnostic teachers.

2:8 {Take heed} (blepete). Present active imperative second person plural of \blep̃, common verb for warning like our "look out," "beware," "see to it." {Lest there shall be any one} (m̃tis estai). Negative purpose with the future indicative, though the aorist subjunctive also occurs as in 2Co 12:6. {That maketh spoil of you} (ho sulag̃g̃n). Articular present active participle of \sulag̃ge, late and rare (found here first) verb (from \sul̃, booty, and \ag̃, to lead, to carry), to carry off as booty a captive, slave, maiden. Only here in N.T. Note the singular here. There was some one outstanding leader who was doing most of the damage in leading the people astray. {Through his philosophy} (dia t̃s philosophias). The only use of the word in the N.T. and employed by Paul because the Gnostics were fond of it. Old word from \philosophos (\philos, sophos, one devoted to the pursuit of wisdom) and in N.T. only in Ac 17:18. Paul does not condemn knowledge and wisdom (see verse 2), but only this false philosophy, "knowledge falsely named" (\pseud̃numos gñsis, 1Ti 6:20), and explained here by the next words. {And vain deceit} (kai keñs apat̃s). Old word for trick, guile, like riches (Mt 13:22). Descriptive of the philosophy of the Gnostics. {Tradition} (paradosin). Old word from \paradid̃mi, a giving over, a passing on. The word is colourless in itself. The tradition may be good (2Th 2:15; 3:6) or bad (Mr 7:3). Here it is worthless and harmful, merely the foolish theories of the Gnostics. {Rudiments} (stoicheia). Old word for anything in a \stoichos (row, series) like the letters of the alphabet, the materials of the universe (2Pe 3:10,12), elementary teaching (Heb 5:12), elements of Jewish ceremonial training (Ac 15:10; Gal 4:3,9), the specious arguments of the Gnostic philosophers as here with all their aeons and rules of life. {And not after Christ} (kai ou kata Christon). Christ is the yardstick by which to measure philosophy and all phases of human knowledge. The Gnostics were measuring Christ by their philosophy as many men are doing today. They have it backwards. Christ is the measure for all human knowledge since he is the Creator and the Sustainer of the universe.

2:9 {For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily} (\hoti en aut^i katoikei pfn to pl^r^ma t^s theot^tos s^matik^s). In this sentence, given as the reason (\hoti, because) for the preceding claim for Christ as the measure of human knowledge Paul states the heart of his message about the Person of Christ. There dwells (at home) in Christ not one or more aspects of the Godhead (the very \essence\ of God, from \theos, deitas) and not to be confused with \theiotes in Ro 1:20 (from \theios\, the {quality} of God, _divinitas_), here only in N.T. as \theiot^s only in Ro 1:20. The distinction is observed in Lucian and Plutarch. \Theiot^s occurs in the papyri and inscriptions. Paul here asserts that "all the \pl^r^ma of the Godhead," not just certain aspects, dwells in Christ and in bodily form (\s^matik^s, late and rare adverb, in Plutarch, inscription, here only in N.T.), dwells now in Christ in his glorified humanity (Php 2:9-11), "the body of his glory" (\t^i s^mati t^s dox^s). The fulness of the God-head was in Christ before the Incarnation (Joh 1:1,18; Php 2:6), during the Incarnation (Joh 1:14,18; 1Jo 1:1-3). It was the Son of God who came in the likeness of men (Php 2:7). Paul here disposes of the Docetic theory that Jesus had no human body as well as the Cerinthian separation between the man Jesus and the aeon Christ. He asserts plainly the deity and the humanity of Jesus Christ in corporeal form.

2:10 {Ye are made full} (\este pepl^r^menoi). Periphrastic perfect passive indicative of \pl^ro^s, but only one predicate, not two. Christ is our fulness of which we all partake (Joh 1:16; Eph 1:23) and our goal is to be made full of God in Christ (Eph 3:19). "In Christ they find the satisfaction of every spiritual want" (Peake). {The head} (\h^ kaphal^s). There is no other place for Christ. He is first (1:18) in time and in rank. All rule and authority comes after Christ whether angels, aeons, kings, what not.

2:11 {Ye were also circumcised} (\kai perietm^th^te). First aorist passive indicative of \peritemn^s, to circumcise. But used here as a metaphor in a spiritual sense as in Ro 2:29 "the circumcision of the heart." {Not made with hands} (\acheiropoi^t^i). This late and rare negative compound verbal occurs only in the N.T. (Mr 14:58; 2Co 5:1; Col 2:11) by merely adding \a privative to the old verbal \cheiropoi^tos (Ac 7:48;

Eph 2:11), possibly first in Mr 14:58 where both words occur concerning the temple. In 2Co 5:1 the reference is to the resurrection body. The feminine form of this compound adjective is the same as the masculine. {In the putting off} (\en tⁱ apekdusei\). As if an old garment (the fleshly body). From \apekduomai\ (Col 2:15, possibly also coined by Paul) and occurring nowhere else so far as known. The word is made in a perfectly normal way by the perfective use of the two Greek prepositions (\apo, ek\), "a resource available for and generally used by any real thinker writing Greek" (Moulton and Milligan, _Vocabulary_). Paul had as much right to mint a Greek compound as any one and surely no one ever had more ideas to express and more power in doing it. {Of Christ} (\tou Christou\). Specifying genitive, the kind of circumcision that belongs to Christ, that of the heart.

2:12 {Having been buried with him in baptism} (\suntaphentes autⁱ en tⁱ baptismati\). Second aorist passive participle of \sunthapt^{ai}\, old word, in N.T. only here and Ro 6:4, followed by associative instrumental case (\autⁱ\). Thayer's Lexicon says: "For all who in the rite of baptism are plunged under the water, thereby declare that they put faith in the expiatory death of Christ for the pardon of their past sins." Yes, and for all future sins also. This word gives Paul's vivid picture of baptism as a symbolic burial with Christ and resurrection also to newness of life in him as Paul shows by the addition "wherein ye were also raised with him" (\en hⁱ kai sun^{gerth}te\). "In which baptism" (\baptismati\, he means). First aorist passive indicative of \sunegeir^{ai}\, late and rare verb (Plutarch for waking up together), in LXX, in N.T. only in Col 2:12; 3:1; Eph 2:6. In the symbol of baptism the resurrection to new life in Christ is pictured with an allusion to Christ's own resurrection and to our final resurrection. Paul does not mean to say that the new life in Christ is caused or created by the act of baptism. That is grossly to misunderstand him. The Gnostics and the Judaizers were sacramentalists, but not so Paul the champion of spiritual Christianity. He has just given the spiritual interpretation to circumcision which itself followed Abraham's faith (Ro 4:10-12). Cf. Ga 3:27. Baptism gives a picture of the change already wrought in the heart "through faith" (\dia t^s piste^s\). {In the working of God} (\t^s energeias tou theou\). Objective genitive after \piste^s\. See 1:29 for \energeia\.

God had power to raise Christ from the dead (\tou egeirantos\, first aorist active participle of \egeir“\, the fact here stated) and he has power (energy) to give us new life in Christ by faith.

2:13 {And you} (\kai humas\). Emphatic position, object of the verb \sunez“opoi^sen\ (did he quicken) and repeated (second humfs\). You Gentiles as he explains. {Being dead through your trespasses} (\nekrous ontas tois parapt“masin\). Moral death, of course, as in Ro 6:11; Eph 2:1,5. Correct text does not have \en\, but even so \parapt“masin\ (from \parapipt“\, to fall beside or to lapse, Heb 6:6), a lapse or misstep as in Mt 6:14; Ro 5:15-18; Ga 6:1, can be still in the locative, though the instrumental makes good sense also. {And the uncircumcision of your flesh} (\kai t^i akroboustifi t^s sarkos hum“n\). "Dead in your trespasses and your alienation from God, of which the uncircumcision of your flesh was a symbol" (Abbott). Clearly so, "the uncircumcision" used merely in a metaphorical sense. {Did he quicken together with him} (\sunez“opoi^sen sun aut“i\). First aorist active indicative of the double compound verb \sunz“opoie“\, to make alive (\z“os, poie“\) with (\sun\, repeated also with \aut“i\, associative instrumental), found only here and in Eph 2:5, apparently coined by Paul for this passage. Probably \theos\ (God) is the subject because expressly so stated in Eph 2:4f. and because demanded by \sun aut“i\ here referring to Christ. This can be true even if Christ be the subject of \^rken\ in verse 14. {Having forgiven us} (\charisamenos h^min\). First aorist middle participle of \charizomai\, common verb from \charis\ (favour, grace). Dative of the person common as in 3:13. The act of forgiving is simultaneous with the quickening, though logically antecedent.

2:14 {Having blotted out} (\exaleipsas\). And so "cancelled." First aorist active participle of old verb \exaleiph“\, to rub out, wipe off, erase. In N.T. only in Ac 3:19 (LXX); Re 3:5; Col 2:14. Here the word explains \charisamenos\ and is simultaneous with it. Plato used it of blotting out a writing. Often MSS. were rubbed or scraped and written over again (palimpsests, like Codex C). {The bond written in ordinances that was against us} (\to kath' h^m“n cheirophon tois dogmasin\). The late compound \cheirophon\ (\cheir\, hand, \graph“\) is very common in the papyri for a certificate of debt or bond, many of the original \cheirophona\ (handwriting, "chirography"). See Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 247. The signature made a legal debt or bond as Paul says in Phm 1:18f.: "I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it." Many of the papyri examples have been "crossed out" thus X as we do today and so cancelled. One decree is described as "neither washed out nor written over" (Milligan, N. T. Documents, p. 16). Undoubtedly "the handwriting in decrees" (dogmasin, the Mosaic law, Eph 2:15) was against the Jews (Ex 24:3; De 27:14-26) for they accepted it, but the Gentiles also gave moral assent to God's law written in their hearts (Ro 2:14f.). So Paul says "against us" (kath' h'm'n) and adds "which was contrary to us" (ho ^n hupenantion h'min) because we (neither Jew nor Gentile) could not keep it. Hupenantios is an old double compound adjective (hupo, en, antios) set over against, only here in N.T. except Heb 10:27 when it is used as a substantive. It is striking that Paul has connected the common word cheirophon for bond or debt with the Cross of Christ (Deissmann, Light, etc., p. 332). {And he hath taken it out of the way} (kai ^rken ek tou mesou). Perfect active indicative of air, old and common verb, to lift up, to bear, to take away. The word used by the Baptist of Jesus as "the Lamb of God that bears away (air'n) the sin of the world" (Joh 1:29). The perfect tense emphasizes the permanence of the removal of the bond which has been paid and cancelled and cannot be presented again. Lightfoot argues for Christ as the subject of ^rken, but that is not necessary, though Paul does use sudden anacolutha. God has taken the bond against us "out of the midst" (ek tou mesou). Nailing it to the cross (pros^l'sas auto t'i staur'i). First aorist active participle of old and common verb pros^lo, to fasten with nails to a thing (with dative staur'i). Here alone in N.T., but in III Macc. 4:9 with the very word staur'i. The victim was nailed to the cross as was Christ. "When Christ was crucified, God nailed the Law to His cross" (Peake). Hence the "bond" is cancelled for us. Business men today sometimes file cancelled accounts. No evidence exists that Paul alluded to such a custom here.

2:15 {Having put off from himself} (apekdusamenos). Only here and 3:9 and one MS. of Josephus (apekdus). Both apodu and ekdu occur in ancient writers. Paul simply combines the two for expression of complete removal. But two serious problems arise here. Is God or Christ referred to by apekdusamenos? What is meant by "the principalities and the powers" (tas archas kai tas exousias)? Modern scholars differ radically and no full discussion can be attempted here as one finds in Lightfoot, Haupt, Abbott, Peake. On the whole I am inclined to look on God as still the subject and the powers to be angels such as the Gnostics worshipped and the verb to mean "despoil" (American Standard Version) rather than "having put off from himself." In the Cross of Christ God showed his power openly without aid or help of angels. {He made a show of them} (\edeigmatisen\). First aorist active indicative of \deigmatiz“\, late and rare verb from \deigma\ (Jude 1:7), an example, and so to make an example of. Frequent in the papyri though later than \paradeigmatiz“\ and in N.T. only here and Mt 1:19 of Joseph's conduct toward Mary. No idea of disgrace is necessarily involved in the word. The publicity is made plain by "openly" (\en parr^sifi\). {Triumphing over them on it} (\thriambeusas autous en aut“i\). On the Cross the triumph was won. This late, though common verb in _Koin_,_ writers (\ekthriambeu“\ in the papyri) occurs only twice in the N.T., once "to lead in triumph" (2Co 2:14), here to celebrate a triumph (the usual sense). It is derived from \thriambos\, a hymn sung in festal procession and is kin to the Latin _triumphus_ (our triumph), a triumphal procession of victorious Roman generals. God won a complete triumph over all the angelic agencies (\autous\, masculine regarded as personal agencies). Lightfoot adds, applying \thriambeusas\ to Christ: "The convict's gibbet is the victor's car." It is possible, of course, to take \aut“i\ as referring to \cheirophon\ (bond) or even to Christ.

2:16 {Let no one judge you} (\m^tis humas krinet“\). Prohibition present active imperative third singular, forbidding the habit of passing judgment in such matters. For \krin“\ see on ^Mt 7:1. Paul has here in mind the ascetic regulations and practices of one wing of the Gnostics (possibly Essenic or even Pharisaic influence). He makes a plea for freedom in such matters on a par with that in 1Co 8-9; Ro 14; 15. The Essenes went far beyond the Mosaic regulations. For the Jewish feasts see on ^Ga 4:10. Josephus (_Ant_. III. 10, 1) expressly explains the "seventh day" as called "_sabbata_" (plural form as here, an effort to transliterate the Aramaic _sabbathah_).

2:17 {A shadow} (\skia\). Old word, opposed to substance (\s“ma\, body). In Heb 10:1 \skia\ is distinguished from \eik“n\ (picture), but here from \s“ma\ (body, substance). The \s“ma\ (body) casts the \skia\ (shadow) and so belongs to Christ (\Christou\, genitive case).

2:18 {Rob you of your prize} (\katabrabeuet“\). Late and rare compound (\kata, brabeu“\, Col 3:15) to act as umpire against one, perhaps because of bribery in Demosthenes and Eustathius (two other examples in Preisigke's _Worterbuch_), here only in the N.T. So here it means to decide or give judgment against. The judge at the games is called \brabeus\ and the prize \brabeion\ (1Co 9:24; Php 3:14). It is thus parallel to, but stronger than, \krinet\ in verse 16. {By a voluntary humility} (\thel“n en tapeinophrosun^i\). Present active participle of \thel“\, to wish, to will, but a difficult idiom. Some take it as like an adverb for "wilfully" somewhat like \thelontas\ in 2Pe 3:5. Others make it a Hebraism from the LXX usage, "finding pleasure in humility." The Revised Version margin has "of his own mere will, by humility." Hort suggested \en ethelotapeinophrosun^i\ (in gratuitous humility), a word that occurs in Basil and made like \ethelothr^skia\ in verse 23. {And worshipping of the angels} (\kai thr^skeifi t“n aggel“n\). In 3:12 humility (\tapeinophrosun^n\) is a virtue, but it is linked with worship of the angels which is idolatry and so is probably false humility as in verse 23. They may have argued for angel worship on the plea that God is high and far removed and so took angels as mediators as some men do today with angels and saints in place of Christ. {Dwelling in the things which he hath seen} (\ha heoraken embateu“n\). Some MSS. have "not," but not genuine. This verb \embateu“\ (from \embat^s\, stepping in, going in) has given much trouble. Lightfoot has actually proposed \kenembateu“n\ (a verb that does not exist, though \kenembate“\ does occur) with \ai“ra\, to tread on empty air, an ingenious suggestion, but now unnecessary. It is an old word for going in to take possession (papyri examples also). W. M. Ramsay (_Teaching of Paul_, pp. 287ff.) shows from inscriptions in Klaros that the word is used of an initiate in the mysteries who "set foot in" (\enebateusen\) and performed the rest of the rites. Paul is here quoting the very work used of these initiates who "take their stand on" these imagined revelations in the mysteries. {Vainly puffed up} (\eik^i phusioumenos\). Present passive participle of \phusio“\, late and vivid verb from \phusa\, pair of bellows, in N.T. only here and 1Co 4:6,18f.; 8:1. Powerful picture of the self-conceit of these bombastic Gnostics.

2:19 {Not holding fast the Head} (\ou krat“n t^ⁿ kephal^n\). Note negative \ou\, not \m^\", actual case of deserting Christ as the Head. The Gnostics dethroned Christ from his primacy (1:18) and placed him below a long line of aeons or angels. They did it with words of praise for Christ as those do now who teach Christ as only the noblest of men. The headship of Christ is the keynote of this Epistle to the Colossians and the heart of Paul's Christology. {From whom} (\ex hou\). Masculine ablative rather than \ex h^s\ (\kephal^s\) because Christ is the Head. He develops the figure of the body of which Christ is Head (1:18,24). {Being supplied} (\epichor^goumenon\). Present passive participle (continuous action) of \epichor^ge^, for which interesting verb see already 2Co 9:10; Ga 3:5 and further 2Pe 1:5. {Knit together} (\sunbibazomenon\). Present passive participle also (continuous action) of \sunbibaz^, for which see Col 2:2. {Through the joints} (\dia t^"n haph^"n\). Late word \haph^ (\from |hapt^, to fasten together), connections (_junctura_ and _nexus_ in the Vulgate). {And bonds} (\kai sundesm^"n\). Old word from \sunde^, to bind together. Aristotle and Galen use it of the human body. Both words picture well the wonderful unity in the body by cells, muscles, arteries, veins, nerves, skin, glands, etc. It is a marvellous machine working together under the direction of the head. {Increaseth with the increase of God} (\auxei t^"n aux^sin tou theou\). Cognate accusative (\aux^sin) with the old verb \auxei\.

2:20 {If ye died} (\ei apethanete\). Condition of the first class, assumed as true, \ei\ and second aorist active indicative of \apothn^sk^, to die. He is alluding to the picture of burial in baptism (2:12). {From the rudiments of the world} (\apo t^"n stoichei^"n tou kosmou\). See 2:8. {As though living in the world} (\h^"s z^"ntes en kosm^"i\). Concessive use of the participle with \h^"s\. The picture is that of baptism, having come out (F. B. Meyer) on the other side of the grave, we are not to act as though we had not done so. We are in the Land of Beulah. {Why do ye subject yourselves to ordinances?} (\ti dogmatizesthe?\). Late and rare verb (three examples in inscriptions and often in LXX) made from \dogma\, decree or ordinance. Here it makes good sense either as middle or passive. In either case they are to blame since the bond of decrees (2:14) was removed on the Cross of Christ. Paul still has in mind the rules of the ascetic wing of the Gnostics (2:16ff.).

2:21 {Handle not, nor taste, nor touch} (\m^ haps^i m^de geus^i m^de thig^is\). Specimens of Gnostic rules. The Essenes took the Mosaic regulations and carried them much further and the Pharisees demanded ceremonially clean hands for all food. Later ascetics (the Latin commentators Ambrose, Hilary, Pelagius) regard these prohibitions as Paul's own instead of those of the Gnostics condemned by him. Even today men are finding that the noble prohibition law needs enlightened instruction to make it effective. That is true of all law. The Pharisees, Essenes, Gnostics made piety hinge on outward observances and rules instead of inward conviction and principle. These three verbs are all in the aorist subjunctive second person singular with \m^, a prohibition against handling or touching these forbidden things. Two of them do not differ greatly in meaning. \Haps^i\ is aorist middle subjunctive of \hapt^, to fasten to, middle, to cling to, to handle. \Thig^is\ is second aorist active subjunctive of \thiggan^, old verb, to touch, to handle. In N.T. only here and Heb 11:28; 12:20. \Geus^i\ is second aorist middle subjunctive of \geu^, to give taste of, only middle in N.T. to taste as here.

2:22 {Are to perish with the using} (\estin eis phthoran t^i apochr^sei). Literally, "are for perishing in the using." \Phthora\ (from \phtheir^) is old word for decay, decomposition. \Apochr^sis\ (from \apochraomai, to use to the full, to use up), late and rare word (in Plutarch), here only in N.T. Either locative case here or instrumental. These material things all perish in the use of them.

2:23 {Which things} (\hatina). "Which very things," these ascetic regulations. {Have indeed a show of wisdom} (\estin logon men echonta sophias). Periphrastic present indicative with \estin\ in the singular, but present indicative \echonta\ in the plural (\hatina). \Logon sophias\ is probably "the repute of wisdom" (Abbott) like Plato and Herodotus. \Men\ (in deed) has no corresponding \de\. {In will-worship} (\en ethelothr^skifi). This word occurs nowhere else and was probably coined by Paul after the pattern of \ethelodouleia, to describe the voluntary worship of angels (see 2:18). {And humility} (\kai tapeinophrosun^i). Clearly here the bad sense, "in mock humility." {And severity to the body} (\kai apheidifi s^matos). Old word (Plato) from \apheid^s, unsparing (\a\ privative, \pheidomai, to spare). Here alone in N.T. Ascetics often practice flagellations and other hardships to the body. {Not of any value} (\ouk en tim^i tini). \Tim^ usually means honour or price. {Against the indulgence of the flesh} (\pros pl^smon^ n t^s sarkos). These words are sharply debated along with \tim^ just before. It is not unusual for \pros\ to be found in the sense of "against" rather than "with" or "for." See \pros\ in sense of {against} in 3:13; Eph 6:11f.; 2Co 5:12; 1Co 6:1. \Pl^smon^ is an old word from \pimpl^mi\, to fill and means satiety. It occurs here only in the N.T. Peake is inclined to agree with Hort and Haupt that there is a primitive corruption here. But the translation in the Revised Version is possible and it is true that mere rules do not carry us very far in human conduct as every father or mother knows, though we must have some regulations in family and state and church. But they are not enough of themselves.
