PATRISTIC STUDY

BY

HENRY BARCLAY SWETE, D.D., LITT.D., REGIUS PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.
39 PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON
NEW YORK AND BOMBAY
1902

All rights reserved
IN IPSAITEM CATHOLICA ECCLESIA MAGNOPERE
CURANDUM EST UT ID TENEAMUS QUOD UBIQUE
QUOD SEMPER QUOD AB OMNIBUS CREDITUM EST.
This little book has for its aim to draw the attention of the younger clergy of the Church of England to the vast store of wisdom which has been bequeathed to them by the ancient Catholic Church.

The Fathers are often quoted, but in the hurry of the times they are perhaps seldom read. Yet quotation is safe only in the hands of the careful student. Knowledge gained at second hand is not merely of little worth, but may easily become mischievous both to its possessor and to the Church.

It is the hope of the writer that his attempt to map out the field of Patristic learning may serve to stimulate and guide personal study, and not be regarded as in any sense a substitute for it.

H. B. S.

Cambridge, Christmas Eve, 1901.
CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTORY

Apostolic and post-Apostolic Christian literature —Neglect of the latter—Its claim on the attention of the English clergy—Origin of the name "Fathers"—Narrower and wider use—Limits of the subject—Classification . 1-10

CHAPTER II

FATHERS OF THE FIRST TWO CENTURIES

Contents

CHAPTER III

Fathers of the Third Century

CHAPTER IV

Post-Nicene Fathers (Greek and Eastern)

CHAPTER V

Post-Nicene Fathers (Latin)

Contents

Cassian—Honoratus—Hilary of Arles—Vincentius. Western poets and historians.
Gregory the Great—Bede . . . 115–141

CHAPTER VI
COURSES AND METHODS OF PATRISTIC STUDY

Two modes of approaching the study—(1) General reading: Method—Suggested course; (2) Reading for a special purpose: Use of the Fathers by the student of Biblical criticism—Exegesis—History—Dogmatic theology—Christian antiquities—Pastoralia . . 142–179

CHAPTER VII
HELP TO PATRISTIC STUDY

Early editions—Migne's Cursus completus—Editions of separate Fathers or works—Translations—Introductions to Patristics—General Bibliography of the subject . 180–194
CHAPTER I
INTRODUCTORY

The literary remains of the Apostolic age in the providence of God have become the common property of Christendom. Admitted into the canon of Holy Scripture, translated into the language of every civilised people, circulated by great societies established for that end, the Gospels and Epistles, the Acts and the Apocalypse are in the hands of all Christians who can read their mother tongue. A widely different fate has overtaken the post-Apostolic literature of the Ancient Church. If the names of some of the more eminent 'Fathers' are familiar to all educated men, few are attracted to the study of their writings. A grotesque misrepresentation associates the Fathers with dulness and ignorance. It is assumed that the writings which record the history, the life, and the thought of the Christian Church during the centuries which followed the death of St. John are destitute of literary merit or spiritual profit. Our age rightly interests itself in the recovery of the merest fragment that can throw light on the pagan civili-sations of Egypt and Babylonia; it has comparatively little sympathy with the study of Christian antiquity.

Unhappily this neglect of the Fathers is not limited to the laity. Times are changed since George Herbert wrote: "The country parson hath read the Fathers also and the Schoolmen and the later writers, or a good proportion of all."¹ Multiplied engagements forbid the wider reading which once was possible; even the professed student is compelled by the exacting claims of every department of knowledge to limit himself to one corner of the great field. Yet Patristic studies demand a place in the reading of the clergy next after that of the New Testament. The parson, whether his work lie in town or in country, is bound to acquaint himself with some at least of the great Christian writers who followed the Apostles. And there is no study, except that of Holy Scripture, which he will find more profitable. The very struggle to overcome linguistic difficulties and to get at the exact meaning of a writer who lived under conditions wholly different from his own, cannot fail to stimulate and to instruct. Moreover, the parish priest of the twentieth century will find in the greater writers of the Ancient Church much direct help for his daily work; sermons, catechisings, pastoral intercourse, personal life, will be enriched by converse with the pastors and teachers of other times.

On the English clergy the Fathers have an especial claim. In England the Reformation rested largely on an appeal to Christian antiquity. Thus the preface to the first Prayer-book of Edward VI. testifies to Cranmer's desire to produce an order of service "agreeable to the mind and purpose of the old Fathers." At the visitation of his cathedral church in 1550, the Archbishop made it an article of inquiry "whether there be a library within this church, and in the same St. Augustine's works, Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, Hierome, Ambrose, Chrysostome, Cyprian, Theophylact."¹ In his sermon preached at Paul's Cross in 1560, Jewel offered to surrender to the Romanists if any learned men among them were "able to bring any one sufficient sentence out of any old Catholic doctor or father" in support of their distinctive practices.² The canons of 1571 directed preachers to teach "what the Catholic fathers and ancient bishops have gathered" out of Scripture.³ Puritanism struck out new lines, but the Church of England persisted in her first attitude.⁴ As a consequence, Patristic

² Parker Society, Jewel's Works, i. p. 20 f.
³ Cardwell, Synodalia, i. p. 126 f.
studies found a home in England, and the writings of the best exponents of the mind of the English Church, such as Hooker and Pearson, Andrewes and Bull, are steeped in the thought and language of the Fathers. In the last century the Anglican appeal to Christian antiquity was revived by the Tractarian movement, and nothing better could be desired for those who inherit the traditions of the school of Keble and Pusey than that they should patiently verify their views of Catholic doctrine and discipline by a first-hand study of the Patristic writings. It is, indeed, much to be wished that the clergy of every school would bring their convictions to the same test. An adequate knowledge of the Fathers is an excellent corrective to partial views of truth, rebuking the disposition to substitute a narrower Christianity for "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Something must be said at starting as to the history of the term 'Fathers,' in its application to the authors of the older post-Apostolic literature of the Church.

In the Old Testament the patriarchs are described as the fathers of Israel.¹ This use was taken over by the Apostolic Church, which regarded the Christian Society as the heir of Israel, and Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as its spiritual ¹ See e.g. Gen. 1. 24 (LXX.), Exod. iii. 13, 15, Deut. 1. 8.

The term 'Fathers'

progenitors. As an official title 'father' was in use among the Scribes, but the Church, bearing in mind the Lord's warning against the arrogant spirit which they displayed, did not bestow it either on the Apostles or their immediate successors. At the martyrdom of Polycarp a mob composed of Jews and Pagans shouted, "This is the Christians' father;" but there is no evidence to shew that bishops were already addressed in this style by their flocks. In the West, however, in Cyprian's time, the bishop's title was papa, a tribute of affectionate loyalty echoed in the Prayer-book phrase "reverend father in God." But it is not before the fourth century that we find the teachers of a past generation described as "fathers," in the sense of being spiritual parents and guides. Athanasius defends the use of ὅμοούσιος, on the ground that it was employed before the Nicene Council by certain 'fathers,' i.e. by Dionysius of Alexandria and his namesake of Rome, who flourished in the middle of the third century. From that time it became the fashion to appeal to earlier Church authorities under this designation. Thus the Council of Constantinople in 381 refers 1 Acts iii. 13, vii. 2, 12; Rom. iv. 12, 16; 2 Pet. iii. 4; Clem. R. Cor. 4 (where see Lightfoot's note).

2 Matt. xxiii. 8 ff.
3 Yet cf. 1 Cor. iv. 14 f.; Gal. iv. 19; 1 Pet. v. 13; and see Aug. enarr. in Ps. xlv. 32, "patres missi sunt apostoli."
5 Ath. ep. ad Afræs 6, ἐκ πατέρων ἔξωτες τὸν μαθητὴν.
to the Creed of the 318 fathers at Nicaea, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 in like manner quotes the Creed of the 150 fathers at Constantinople. The example of these great Councils was followed by later theological writers, who began to rely upon the support of their more eminent predecessors. A dictum of "our holy father Athanasius," or "our holy father Gregory the Theologian," came to be regarded as a conclusive test of orthodoxy.

The Fathers, then, in the stricter sense of the term, are the great champions of orthodox belief, whose writings became the standard of Catholic truth. To the greatest of these the distinguishing title of "Doctors" was subsequently assigned; thus Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome, and Gregory the Great are known as the four Latin doctors, whilst Athanasius, Basil the Great, Gregory of Nazianzus, and John Chrysostom attained a similar position among the fathers of the Greek East. The more general designation was given to all Christian writers who possessed the notes of antiquity, orthodoxy, sanctity, and ecclesiastical approbation. But it is also used to cover all ancient Christian writers without distinction. Thus the Abbé Migne has given to his great Patrologia the secondary title, sive bibliotheca omnium Patrum, Doctorum, Scriptorumque ecclesiasticorum; and among the last class he includes not a few writers who certainly are not models of orthodoxy, such as Origen, Theodore of Mopsuestia, and even Pelagius.

1 See Bright, Canons, pp. xxi., xxxiii.

Perhaps it is to be regretted that a term which properly has a restricted use should have been adopted as a general name for a mass of literature which is far from being homogeneous; for this larger purpose, Jerome's title, "ecclesiastical writers," would be at once more accurate and less open to misconstruction. But "Fathers," "Patristics," "Patrology," are terms now so universally accepted, that it would be hopeless or at least pedantic to endeavour to supersede them. We shall therefore follow the example of Migne, and under 'Patristic Study' include the study of all ancient Christian writings subsequent to the Apostolic age, whether Catholic or heretical.

It is a more difficult matter to decide how far our subject ought to be pursued. The terminus a quo of Patristic literature is readily fixed; the terminus ad quem may be placed at an earlier or later date, according to the student's point of view. Migne carries his Latin Patrology down to the early years of the thirteenth century, and his Greek Patrology to the Fall of Constantinople. From the standpoint of the editor of cursus completus there is much to be said for these limits; it is doubtless convenient to include in one collection all the writers of Latin Christen-

---

1 De viris illustri, prolog.: "hortaris ut ecclesiasticos scriptores in ordinem digeram."
dom to the age of the great Schoolmen, and all Greek Christian writers who lived before the fall of the Byzantine Empire. But for our present purpose this range is far too wide. With the fewest exceptions the freshness and independence which entitle earlier writers to take their place among the "parents of Christian thought and belief and life,"¹ disappear altogether after the times of Gregory the Great in the West and John of Damascus in the East. Even this period must be considerably shortened in view of the limits imposed upon us by the plan of these handbooks. We shall confine ourselves almost exclusively to Fathers of the first five centuries, referring students who wish to carry their reading further to larger works upon Patristics, of which there is happily no lack.

The Fathers of the first five centuries are broken into two well-defined groups by the First General Council and the Conversion of the Empire. Writings of the Ante-Nicene period possess a more or less clearly marked character of primitive simplicity which is wanting in those which follow the Nicene settlement. But with this broad line of cleavage it is possible to combine other classifications. In both periods the Fathers may be divided according to language, or according to locality. Each great centre of ancient Christian life can boast of characteristic writers. Edessa, Antioch, Jerusalem, Caesarea, Asia Minor, Constantinople, Alexandria, Carthage, Rome, Gaul and Spain, even Britain and Ireland, gave birth to representative teachers, whose extant writings are valuable monuments of local Christian history and opinion. Again, there are certain successions or schools of Christian writers, partly corresponding with one or other of these local groups, partly independent of them; such as the Apostolic Fathers, the Greek Apologists, the Latin Apologists, the Alexandrians, the Antiochenes, the Cappadocians, the school of Lerins. Each of these groups is marked by the unity which comes from a common purpose or a common type of thought. Once more, the Patristic writings may be classified according to their contents and literary character. Every form of literary composition is to be found among them. They comprise letters, apologies, homilies, histories, polemical treatises, commentaries, dialogues, orations, poems. Many of the Fathers have left us specimens of their work in more than one of these departments, and according to this system of classification their names would appear perhaps again and again. There is some inconvenience in such an arrangement, but it serves a purpose of its own. It enables the specialist to see at a glance what materials are supplied by the Fathers for the interpretation of a Biblical text, the history of a dogma, or the elucidation of any subject upon which he may happen to be engaged.

Classification

In a later chapter we shall have occasion to take note of the results of these various groupings. But our first business will be to make a cursory survey of the whole field; and here we shall follow the chronological order, dealing successively with the Fathers of the first three centuries and the Post-Nicene Fathers, Greek and Latin. When this has been done, we shall be prepared to consider methods and courses of Patristic study, and the helps which offer themselves to the student in his earlier attempts to grapple with the difficulties of ancient Christian literature.
CHAPTER II

THE FATHERS OF THE FIRST TWO CENTURIES

1. The Apostolic Fathers

In 1672 J. B. Cotelier, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, published at Paris a collection of the earliest post-Apostolic writings under the title Patres aevi apostolici, sive SS. Patrum qui temporibus apostolicis floruerunt... opera. The work included Barnabas, Clement of Rome, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp; later editors have added to the series the Teaching of the Apostles, the Letter to Diognétus, and the fragments of certain lost writings. For the sake of brevity it is usual to describe these remains of a primitive Christian literature as the Apostolic Fathers (patres apostolici).¹

Three of these writers have a special claim to be regarded as apostolici viri. Clement of Rome, Ignatius of Antioch, Polycarp of Smyrna, were not only younger contemporaries and perhaps personal disciples of apostles,¹ but bishops of churches in which the apostolic tradition was still fresh. Their letters—for like the Apostles, they used the pen only for the purpose of correspondence—offer a first-hand picture of the life of the Christian societies in the age which follows the death of St. John.

¹ The term seems to have been first used by Ittig in his Bibliotheca Patrum Apostolicorum (1699); cf. Lightfoot, Clement, i. p. 8.

11

Clement, the earliest of the three, writes to the Church at Corinth in the name of the sister Church at Rome. He was possibly a freedman of T. Flavius Clemens, who was consul with his cousin, the Emperor Domitian, in a.d. 95. A strongly supported tradition of the second century represents him as Bishop of the Roman Church, second in succession after St. Peter and St. Paul. In any case, he writes as the mouthpiece of his Church.² The letter begins: "The Church of God which sojourneth at Rome to the Church of God which sojourneth at Corinth," and continues in this strain to the end. The interest of the Epistle consists chiefly in the light which it throws upon the internal affairs of two important churches at the close of the Apostolic age. The darkness which follows the death of St. Paul is lifted for the moment, and the two Christian communities to which the Apostle wrote his longest letters in the sixth decade of the first century, appear as they were in the last years of Domitian. At Rome persecution has broken out afresh (cc. 1, 7), but though in peril the Roman Church is strong in the fellowship of a common faith and love. Organisation has been so far matured that the separate congregations in private houses, to which St. Paul refers (Rom. xvi.), have coalesced into a single community officered by presbyters and deacons (cc. 40–42), and expressing its unity in an orderly worship, in which the elements of a liturgical use can already be discovered.¹ At Corinth, as at Rome, the presbyterate has been securely established, but the party spirit for which the Corinthians had attained a bad pre-eminence in the days of St. Paul has recently run so high that certain presbyters of blameless life have been deposed, and grave scandal has been caused in the face of a pagan population (cc. 46, 47). The Roman letter is a protest against these irregularities; the Church of the Imperial city regards herself as specially concerned in the spiritual interests of the Church at Corinth, a city which was in direct and frequent communication with Rome. But the authority which is claimed is that of the Church, not of the Bishop of Rome, and the intervention of the Roman Church does not go beyond an offer of admonition and advice.

¹ Lightfoot, op. cit., p. 4.
² Cf. Hermas, vii. ii. 4; and see Lightfoot, op. cit., i. p. 359.

¹ See Lightfoot, op. cit., i. p. 382 ff.
The seven genuine letters of Ignatius were written on his way from Antioch to Rome, where he suffered for the faith "within a few years of A.D. 110, before or after."¹ His road passed through Asia Minor, and his letters were written during his sojourn there. From Smyrna he wrote to Ephesus, Magnesia, Tralles, and Rome; from Troas to Philadelphia, and to Smyrna and its Bishop, Polycarp. These letters differ widely in character from the Epistle of Clement. Ignatius does not write in the name of his Church, but in his own name; each letter begins, "Ignatius, who is also Theophorus."² While Clement disguises his personality, the personality of Ignatius reveals itself in every sentence. So striking a figure does not meet us again in Ante-Nicene times, or even in the history of the Ancient Church. Ignatius is not, indeed, a great thinker like Origen, or a great theologian like Athanasius, or a scholar like Eusebius of Cæsarea; but his passionate devotion, his exuberant fancy, his magnificent contempt of the world, his audacious quaintness of style and thought, produce an impression which is unique. The writer of these letters lives and speaks to us; his voice and manner can be imitated, as a fourth century inter-

¹ Lightfoot, Ignatius, i. p. 30. Harnack, Chronologie, p. 719: "probably towards the end of Trajan's reign (110–117)."
² "Theophorus was a second name of Ignatius and nothing more" (Lightfoot, op. cit., p. 26; cf. Zahn's note on Ign., Eph. inscr.).
polator discovered, but they could not have been imagined. In some respects he reminds us of the author of the Apocalypse; the wrecked grammar, the disjointed sentences, the repetitions, the gorgeous but inconceivable imagery of the Apocalypse, reappear in the Ignatian Epistles, and in one passage he speaks of himself as one who might hope to receive direct revelations from the Lord. Yet he is not ordinarily in an apocalyptic frame of mind; he deals with such practical topics as Church polity and doctrine. He is the first Church writer who places the episcopal office in sharp contrast with the presbyterate, and enforces the claim of the threefold ministry. While Clement insists only on submission to the presbyters, Ignatius makes subordination to the Bishop a first duty both of clergy and people. In writing to the Roman Church, indeed, he makes no reference to the episcopate; that Church was “filtered clear from every alien colouring matter,” and had less need of the safeguards of a monarchical government. But in Asia Minor, which was “a hotbed of false doctrine and schismatical tendencies,” Ignatius saw that the safety of the Churches was bound up with the maintenance of the episcopal order, and he incidentally discloses the fact that the episcopate as distinct from the presbyterate was already

2 Lightfoot, Ignatius, i. p. 360 f.
4 Ign., Rom. inser.
5 Lightfoot, Ignatius, i. p. 398.
established from Antioch to Ephesus. His testimony to the Church teaching of the time is not less valuable. A form of Docetism was abroad which undermined belief in the reality of the Incarnation, and drew Christians away from the assemblies of the Church and from the Eucharist. In warning the Churches against this danger, Ignatius reveals his own belief. He insists on the reality of the Virgin Birth, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection. He grasps firmly both the Godhead and the Manhood of our Lord. On the other hand, he uses theological terms which were avoided by Catholic writers of a later date. To characterise the Son as at once "generate and ingenerate," i.e. begotten as man, but unbegotten as God, has an unorthodox sound in ears accustomed to the more careful language of the fourth century.¹ Yet while such expressions vouch for the early date of the Ignatian Epistles, they do not convict them of a blameworthy lack of precision. No writer can be expected to be upon his guard against heresies as yet unborn. On the other hand, it may be doubted whether Ignatius, in whatever age he might have lived, would have strictly conformed himself to the religious phraseology of his times. There is in him a vein of mysticism which suggests that he is to be ranked with Clement of Alexandria and the Pseudo-Dionysius, St. Bernard of Clairvaux and Tauler, rather than with the great champions of dogmatic orthodoxy. But he is not the less interesting or instructive because he stands alone in his own generation, and is not in verbal accord with those who followed him in the defence of the Catholic faith.

¹ See Lightfoot, Ign., ii. p. 90 ff.
Recensions of the Ignatian Letters 17

The Longer Greek recension of the Ignatian letters contains, besides the seven genuine Epistles in an interpolated form, six others, viz.: a correspondence between Ignatius and Mary of Cassobola, and letters purporting to be written by Ignatius to the Tarsians, Philippians, and Antiochenes, and to one Hero. Lightfoot has convincingly shewn that these interpolations and forgeries are due to a writer of the fourth century, and of Syrian origin; and more recently Brightman, following in the steps of Lagarde, Harnack, and Funk, has identified the Pseudo-Ignatius with the compiler of the Apostolical Constitution.

A Syriac version published in 1849 by Canon W. Cureton, which contains only three Epistles (Ephesians, Romans, Polycarp) in a shortened form, was believed by Cureton to represent the whole of the genuine remains of Ignatius. But his contention has been disproved by Lightfoot, who regards the Curetonian Syriac as an abridgment of a Syriac version of the Longer Recension.

1 Liturgies, Eastern and Western, i., p. xxvii.
Patristic Study

Shortly after Ignatius left Philippi on his way to Rome, a letter was addressed to the Philippian Church by Polycarp, the Bishop of Smyrna to whom Ignatius wrote from Troas. The Philippians had asked Polycarp for a word of counsel, and also for copies of the letters of Ignatius. Polycarp’s reply is a model of unaffected piety, but destitute of the spiritual genius which marks the Ignatian Epistles. Perhaps the consciousness that he was lacking in aptness for literary composition led him to fall back more distinctly than Ignatius upon the writings of the first generation, for it has been noticed by writers on the Canon that Polycarp’s letter “contains far more references to the New Testament than any other work of the first age.”¹ But the interest of his short Epistle lies chiefly in the fact that it is an early work of one of the most representative Christians of sub-apostolic times. Born about A.D. 70,² Polycarp had been brought in early life under the influence of St. John. When he wrote to the Philippians, he had still forty years of his life before him. Like Ignatius, he sealed his faith by martyrdom (A.D. 155);³ this event is described in a letter addressed by his own Church to the Church of Philomelium in Phrygia,⁴ one of the most touching and stimulating of early Christian documents.

² Lightfoot, Supernatural Religion, p. 90.
³ See Studia Biblica, i. p. 200.
⁴ It was intended, however, for general circulation among Christians, for the writer adds, καὶ πάσαις ταῖς κατὰ πάντα τόπον τῆς ἁγίας καὶ καθολικῆς ἐκκλησίας παρουκλαί.

The remaining writings of the sub-Apostolic age lack the personal interest of the letters of these three great primitive bishops, but each of them is characteristic of some phase of primitive Christianity and will reward careful study.

The Epistle of Barnabas, if the work of the companion of St. Paul, might have fairly claimed a place within the canon, or in a supplement to the canon, where the great Sinaitic MS. of the Bible (Cod. Ψ) actually puts it.¹ But the strongly anti-Judaic attitude of the writer does not accord with what we know of St. Barnabas; and if the latter died, as there is reason to think, before the fall of Jerusalem, this epistle cannot have been his work, for it refers to the destruction of the Temple. On the whole, the conditions implied are such as would lead us to assign it to some Alexandrian Christian who lived during the reign of Hadrian.² In this case the epistle is of much interest as the earliest monument of Alexandrian Christianity, and as throwing light on the relation in which the early Alexandrian Church stood to Judaism. The attitude is uncompromising, yet it does not display the antagonism towards the Old Testament which came to a head in the heresy of Marcion. In its general aim this epistle bears a resemblance to another epistle which was also in early times sometimes ascribed to Barnabas, viz. the Epistle to the Hebrews. But, as Bishop Westcott has shewn, there are points of contrast between the two works which exclude the possibility of both being from the same hand. “Both exhibit characteristic principles of the Alexandrian school, but in the one case [Hebrews] they are modified, as it were, by an instinctive sense of their due relation to the whole system of Christianity; in the other [Barnabas] they are subjected to no restraint, and usurp an independent and absolute authority.” Nevertheless the Epistle of Barnabas is an honest attempt, according to the writer’s light, to find the Gospel in the Law; and it preserves incidentally much curious information as to Jewish and Christian practices, and the method of Old Testament exegesis which was in vogue in the early Alexandrian Church.

¹ Between the Apocalypse and the Shepherd.
² Harnack (Chronologie, pp. 427 ff., 720) would date it A.D. 130–1; Lightfoot prefers A.D. 70–79.

A few other epistolary writings of the second century may be mentioned here. Eusebius quotes (H.E. iv. 23) from the letters of 2 A specimen of this extravagance may be found in Barnabas, c. 9, where it is said that the 318 (717) servants of Abraham represent our Lord and His Cross (T = the Cross: IH = Ἰησοῦς).

Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, and (vi. 12) from those of Serapion, Bishop of Antioch: also (v. 23, 24) from a correspondence on the Paschal controversy which passed between Polycrates, Bishop of Ephesus, and Victor, Bishop of Rome, and other letters on the same subject by various bishops and churches. The letter of the Smyrnaeán Church on the martyrdom of Polycarp has been referred to already; with it may be classed the equally famous letter of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons, relating to the Gallican martyrdoms of A.D. 177 (Eus. v. 1 ff.).

The literature of the sub-apostolic age, so far as it has been reviewed hitherto, is exclusively epistolary. Other types, however, find a place within the period, though in less abundance.

The Teaching of the Apostles (Διδαχή τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων) is a primitive manual of Christian life and Church order. In its present form it is clearly a composite work. The substance of the first part (c. 1–6), which is purely ethical, seems to have been borrowed from a Jewish source known as The Two Ways; the second part (c. 7–16) deals with such peculiarly Christian topics as Baptism, the Eucharist, the Ministry, both itinerant and local, the hope of the Second Coming. The date of the compilation is uncertain; Harnack ventures only to say that it falls between the accession of Hadrian and that of M. Aurelius (A.D. 131–160).
Some at least of the conditions are those of an earlier time; apostles (in the looser sense) and prophets still go their rounds; the local ministry consists only of bishops (i.e. presbyters) and deacons. On the other hand, forms of thanksgiving are already provided for use at the Agape or Eucharist; fasting is prescribed on Wednesdays and Fridays; baptism is to be administered by trine immersion or (if need be) by trine affusion. Altogether, the discovery of this little book has thrown a flood of fresh light on primitive Christianity, and it suggests that many of the liturgical developments which appear in later writings had their beginning in days not far removed from the lifetime of the Apostles. But it must be borne in mind that since the Teaching comes to us from an obscure corner of the sub-apostolic Church—from Egypt, probably, or Syria—it may not accurately represent the practice of the great Churches of Asia Minor and the West.

The Teaching was printed first in 1883 by the Greek metropolitan, Philotheos Bryennios, from a MS. dated 1056, belonging to the Patriarchal Library at Jerusalem.¹ A διδαχή (or διδαχαι) τῶν ἀποστόλων is mentioned by Eus. H.E. iii. 25; and the book, as we now

¹ For a full description of this codex see Papadopoulos Ἰερουσαλημικὴ βιβλιοθήκη, i. p. 134, where there is an excellent photograph of the first page of the Didache.
The 'Shepherd' of Hermas have it, is quoted by a succession of Christian writers, beginning with Clement of Alexandria. Other books of the same general character are the Egyptian Church Order, the Syriac Didascalia, the so-called Canons of Hippolytus, the Testamentum Domini, and the Apostolical Constitutions; the seventh book of the last-named work is partly based on the Teaching in its extant form.¹

Like the Epistle of Clement, the Shepherd of Hermas is a product of early Roman Christianity. According to another Roman document of the second century, the Muratorian Fragment on the Canon,² its author was a brother of Pius I., and wrote during his episcopate (A.D. 140–155). But the Shepherd refers to Clement as if he were yet alive, and its undeveloped conception of the ministry points to an early date; nor is it easy to account for its acceptance as a quasi-canonical book by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian, if it was produced so late as the middle of the second century. Harnack's suggestion that the work, although of the time of Pius, contains ¹ A careful summary and appreciation of these and other similar documents will be found in Bp. J. Wordsworth's Ministry of Grace, p. 18 ff.

² Published by Muratori in 1740 from an Ambrosian MS. of the eighth century. Another MS. of a portion of the same list has recently been printed by Dom Amelli, Prior of Monte Cassino (Misc. Cass. i.). For the text of Muratori's fragment see Westcott On the Canon, App. C., or Freuschchen, Analecta, p. 129 ff.
earlier material, does not altogether dispose of the difficulty.

The Shepherd is the first Patristic book of an artificial character. In form it is apocalyptic. It opens with a series of visions, in the last of which the Shepherd comes into sight. He proceeds to deliver a number of injunctions, which are followed by parables or similitudes. Thus the work falls into three parts, viz., Visiones (ὁράσεις), Mandata (ἐντολαὶ), and Similitudines (παραβολαὶ). The Shepherd has been compared to the Pilgrim’s Progress, and undoubtly there is a general resemblance between the early Christian allegory and the Puritan; but the latter is vastly superior as a work of art, and it must be added that its purpose and standpoint are different. In Bunyan’s great book the fortunes of the individual soul are the centre of interest; with Hermas, this position is occupied by the Christian Society. The Shepherd is dominated by the conception of the “Holy Church,” already prominent in the oldest form of the Roman Creed.¹ It is the Church which in the first Vision appears to Hermas in the guise of an aged woman created before the world, and for whose sake the cosmos was formed.² As the Apocalypse proceeds, she becomes a mighty tower in course of building, compacted of squared white stones, i.e. of Apostles and Bishops, teachers and deacons, who have been conspicuous for sanctity of life.¹ The individual life, according to Hermas, fulfils its purpose when it is found worthy to be built into the life of the Church. To the individual the Shepherd preaches repentance, and its doctrine of repentance approaches here and there to the later Latin doctrine of penance.² The book as a whole is animated by the spirit of the Roman Church, the passion for order and the reign of law which is already to be noticed in the Epistle of Clement. On the other hand, the theology of Hermas is crude and less developed than that of the other Apostolic Fathers, yet not without interest and importance; in particular, his Christology and his doctrine of the Holy Spirit demand careful study.³ Both in regard to doctrine and to practical Christianity there is an affinity between Hermas and St. James; "the Shepherd (it has been well said) bears the same relation to the Epistle of St. James as the Epistle of Barnabas to that of the Hebrews."⁴

² Vis., 2, § 4.
Teaching of the 'Shepherd'  25

An Exposition of the Lord's Oracles (Διαγών κυριακῶν ἐξήγησις), in five books, was written about A.D. 135⁵ by Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis. Papias was born in the first century (A.D. 60–70,

¹ Visc. 3, § 5.
² E.g. Mand., iv. 1; Sim., vii. 1.
⁴ Westcott, On the Canon, p. 199.
⁵ Lightfoot, Supernatural Religion, p. 150.
Lightfoot), had been a hearer of St. John and a friend of Polycarp, and had made it his business to gather up the still remembered but unrecorded sayings of the first generation.¹ Some of his remarks upon the genesis of the first and second Gospels have been preserved by Eusebius, and form the basis of all recent investigations into the literary history of the Synoptic narrative.² There is no lost Patristic work for the recovery of which students of Christian origins look with more impatience, for whatever may be thought of the writer's intelligence and literary skill, his Exposition would probably solve some of the puzzles of early Christian history. Only second in value to Papias' book would have been the Memoirs (ὑπομνήματα) of Hegesippus, an Eastern (? Syrian) Christian, who found his way to Corinth and Rome in the middle years of the second century, and collected on the spot the traditions of the Churches which he visited. A few fragments are preserved by Eusebius.³

The sub-apostolic age offers a single specimen of the Church homily. A fragment of it (c. 1–12a) was long circulated under the title of the Second Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians, but the recently recovered conclusion (c. 12b–20) leaves no doubt as to its character. It is an exhortation intended to be read after the Scripture lections of

¹ Eus. H.E. iii. 39.
² Eus. l.c.
³ H.E. ii. 23; iii. 11 sq.; iv. 8, 22.
the Eucharistic service.¹ Nothing is known as to the author; the style forbids us to attribute the homily to Clement, and there is not much to be said for Harnack’s conjecture² that it was the work of Soter of Rome (c. A.D. 166). But its authorship is immaterial; the interest of such a document lies almost wholly in its contents. As to the merits of this primitive Christian sermon, most patristic students will assent to Lightfoot’s estimate: “As a literary work [it] is almost worthless; as the earliest example of its kind, however, and as the product of an important age of which we possess only the scantiest remains, it has the highest value. Nor will its intellectual poverty blind us to its true grandeur, as an example of the lofty moral earnestness and the triumphant faith which subdued a reluctant world.”³

2. THE APOLOGISTS.

All the Christian writings which have hitherto passed before us were written for the use of Christians. The first two or three generations met persecution by cheerful suffering or by simple defiance, and in their dealings with the heathen they were content to use opportunities of direct evangelisation when they offered themselves. Meanwhile a class of Christian teachers were growing up, who were in sympathy with the best pagan culture, and conceived the idea of winning the adversary to a juster view of Christianity by literary advances. This movement seems to have begun in the reign of Hadrian, when an Apology, of which Eusebius has preserved but a single sentence, was presented to the Emperor by one Quadratus. ¹ In the same chapter of his history Eusebius mentions an apologist named Aristides, who is said also to have offered an Apology to Hadrian. This work is still extant in Syriac, and part of it in Armenian, whilst the substance of the Greek text has been recently extracted from a late romance, the legend of Barlaam and Josaphat, in which it had been embedded.² The Emperor to whom it was presented, however, seems to have been not Hadrian but Antoninus Pius, and the date perhaps 138 or shortly afterwards.³ The Apology of Aristides is a vigorous and learned attack upon the mythologies of Egypt, Chaldea, and Hellas, followed by a statement of Christian belief which is apparently a primitive creed,⁴ and a glowing description of the Christian manner of life.

² Chronologie, p. 488 ff.
³ Clement, ii. p. 208.

¹ Eus., H.E. iv. 3. On this Quadratus and his date see Harnack, Chronologie, p. 269 f.
² It is printed in the Cambridge Texts and Studies, i. 1.
⁴ This may be seen in Hahn-Harnack, Bibl. d. Symbole, p. 3 f.
Aristides is described in the versions of his book as an Athenian philosopher. Philosophy supplied the Church with a yet more eminent apologist in the person of Justin. Born of Greek parents at Flavia Neapolis (Shechem, Nablus), in Samaria, he drifted westwards, settling first in Ephesus, where, after passing through the hands of the Stoics, Pythagoreans, and Platonists, he was ultimately led by an unknown stranger to find the true philosophy in the Gospel of Christ. From Ephesus Justin proceeded to Rome, and there he taught as a Christian philosopher in the time of Antoninus Pius, and ended his days by martyrdom about the year A.D. 165. Justin’s larger and more important Apology is addressed to Antoninus and his adopted sons, one of whom was M. Aurelius, the philosopher.\(^1\) Basing his appeal on the claim to piety and philosophy implied in the titles of the Imperial family,\(^2\) he demands that the Christian teaching shall be judged impartially upon its merits. He examines and refutes the charges of atheism and immorality brought against the Church, and, like Aristides, exposes the follies of pagan mythology. But the most characteristic and valuable part of his work is its full exposition of Christian belief and practice, in which he lays under large obligations all students of the history of theology, of the canon of

---

\(^1\) The dedication runs: Αὐτοκράτορι... Αὐτωνίῳ Εὐσέβει
.. καὶ Ὀθηροστίῳ πυρὶ φιλοσόφῳ κτλ.

\(^2\) Αρολ. ι. 2, λέγεσθε εὐσέβεις καὶ φιλοσόφου.
the New Testament, and of liturgiology. In this Apology we have for the first time a fairly full account of the ceremonies of Baptism and the Eucharist (cc. 61, 65 f.). There are copious though not exact quotations from "the Apostolic Memoirs which are called Gospels," in which it is difficult not to recognise the Synoptists and St. John. But Justin's great merit is that he is the first Christian writer who attempts a philosophy of Christian thought. For philosophers such as Socrates and Plato he has nothing but praise; they were in fact Christians who lived before Christianity (c. 46). Christianity is the final philosophy, of which the best pagan thought was but a partial anticipation. Justin makes the doctrine of the Logos the key of his position. In his view the divine Logos is not only the Word but the Reason of God. Borrowing from the Stoics the conception of a λόγος σπερματικός,¹ he is able to claim for Christ all that was best in pre-Christian life and speculation, as well as the workings of good in men of every age. To this extent he may be said to have 'Hellenised' Christianity.² Yet he does not permit himself to fritter away the historical facts of the Creed into metaphysics. He identifies the Logos with the historical Christ; like Ignatius, he asserts in the plainest terms the truth of the Virgin Birth, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection and Ascension. Doubtless his Christology\(^1\) and his doctrine of the Spirit\(^2\) are undeveloped, as judged by the standards of a later orthodoxy, and his endeavour to express the mystery of the Eucharist is obscure;\(^3\) but they mark a distinct advance on any earlier attempts to formulate Christian doctrine upon these subjects.

¹ Apol. i. 46; ii. 10, 13.

Apologies have also been left by Tatian, Justin's pupil (λόγος πρὸς Ἑλληνας), Athenagoras, perhaps, like Aristides, an Athenian (προσβεία περὶ Χριστιανῶν), and Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch (πρὸς Ἀὐτόλυκου). Other apologists, known to us now only by reputation or by a few fragments of their works, are Melito, Bishop of Sardis, Apollinaris, Bishop of Hierapolis, and Miltiades, also probably from Asia Minor. The list is sufficient to shew the activity of the Church in this kind of literary enterprise during the second half of the second century. But we must add to it an anonymous fragment, the Letter to Diognetus (c. 1–10), which perhaps appeals to modern readers more strongly than any other early Christian writing outside the New Testament. It is addressed to an inquirer, possibly the philosopher of that name who was tutor to M. Aurelius. Diognetus is first urged to free

---

\(^1\) Cf. Apol. i. 13, 22, 23, 60, 63; ii. 6.
\(^2\) Cf. Apol. i. 6, 13, 33, 60.
\(^3\) Apol. i. 66.
himself from the prepossessions which bar the entrance of new truth, and the writer then proceeds to set before him the Christian faith and life in a passage of remarkable force and beauty. The paradox of Christian conduct is painted in undying words (cc. 5, 6); the love of the Atone-ment and the righteousness of faith are handled with a distinctness unparalleled in early Patristic literature (cc. 7–10). Unhappily the treatise ends abruptly, for the last two chapters (11, 12) clearly belong to another work.\(^1\) The Letter to Diognetus is sometimes included among the Apostolic Fathers, but its contents shew that it is a true “Apology,” probably belonging to the second half of the century.

So far we have mentioned only apologies addressed to the pagan. In the second century, however, the Church was confronted with another formidable opponent. The Synagogue, which even in the Acts appears as an enemy of Christianity, had become its bitterest antagonist. The fall of Jerusalem, the subsequent revival of Rabbinism, the war of Bar-Cochba, the jealousy naturally aroused by the rapid growth of the Church, sufficiently explain the rise of a literature which represents her controversy with the Jew. A succession of Christian writers attempted to meet their Jewish opponents on the common ground of the Old

\(^1\) See below, p. 46 n.
Justin's 'Dialogue'

Testament, the argument usually taking the form of a dialogue between a Christian and a Jew. The earliest effort of the kind seems to have been the Controversy of Jason and Papiscus, which has been ascribed to Ariston of Pella and may belong to the later years of Hadrian. This book is lost, but an excellent specimen of the anti-Judaic literature survives in Justin's Dialogue with Trypho the Jew. Justin meets Trypho in the aystus or colonnade of the gymnasium at Ephesus, and the two proceed to discuss Christianity in the light of the Old Testament. First we have an examination of the Law in its relation to the Gospel (cc. 8–48); then follows the witness of the Prophets to the Messiahship and Godhead of Jesus Christ (cc. 49–118), and the book ends with a pressing appeal to Trypho and his friends to consider the claims of Christianity. The Dialogue is not without movement and life, but its real importance to the modern student lies in the rich materials which it offers for the history of opinion and Scriptural interpretation on both sides. Incidentally also it supplies valuable information upon such matters as the condition of the text of the Old Testament in Justin's time, the estimation in which the LXX. was then held by Jews and Christians respectively, and the relation of our present Gospels to the evangelical documents and traditions which were current in the second century.

1 Possibly the source of the dialogues of Athanasius and Zacchæus and Timothy and Aquila, lately printed by Mr. F. C. Conybeare (Oxford, 1898); see his prolegomena, p. li. ff.

Another type of early Christian literature owes its origin to the tendency to heresy and schism which shewed itself in the Church even during the lifetime of the Apostles. The Gnostic sects were at first far more active in literary composition than the Church, especially in the direction of exegesis, where the Church had as yet done little or nothing. Basilides wrote twenty-four books on the Gospels; Valentinus published letters, homilies, and psalms; his disciple Heracleon was the earliest commentator on the Gospel of St. John; Bardaisan (Bardesanes), the Syrian Gnostic, is said to have composed both in prose and verse. The Ophites seem to have been prolific writers of pseudepigraphical romance; the Pistis Sophia and the Books of Jeû, which

---

1 See the writer's Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, pp. 30, 417 ff., 479 ff.
2 See Professor Sanday's Gospels in the Second Century, c. iv.
3 Clem. Al. strom. iv. 12.
4 Clem. Al. strom. ii. 8; iv. 13; Tert. de carne Christi, 17, 20.
5 The fragments have been collected by Mr. Brooke (Texts and Studies, i. 4).
6 On this interesting person see Dr. Hort's art., D.C.B., i.
7 The Pistis Sophia was edited by Schwartz and Petermann in 1891; the Books of Jeû are to be found in Texte u. Unters., viii.
survive in Coptic, bear witness to the perverse ingenuity of other obscure schools. Marcion sharply contrasted the Law and the Gospel in a work which he called Antitheses;\textsuperscript{1} Julius Cassianus wrote in support of the Encretite position;\textsuperscript{2} the Ebionites possessed a commentary on St. Matthew by Symmachus, the translator of the Old Testament;\textsuperscript{3} even Montanism had its literature. Most of these works have perished, and the same is true of the answers which they called forth from the Catholic side. Miltiades, Apollinaris of Hierapolis, Melito of Sardis, Theophilus of Antioch, Agrippa Castor, Rhodon, and others entered the lists against heresy, though their books are known to us only through brief excerpts preserved by Eusebius and other Catholic writers of a later age.\textsuperscript{4} But two great works against heresy have escaped from the wreck, and it fortunately happens that they are written by representative Churchmen of competent knowledge and judgement.

Ireneus (c. 120–200), a native of Asia, who in early life had sat at the feet of Polycarp, and afterwards became successively Presbyter and Bishop of the Church at Lyons, wrote in his later \textsuperscript{1} On Marcion see Harnack, History of Dogma, E. Tr., i. p. 266 ff.

\textsuperscript{2} Clem. Al. Strom. iii. 13.
\textsuperscript{3} Eus. H.E., vi. 17.
\textsuperscript{4} Most of these Ante-Nicene fragments are collected by Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae (Oxford, 1846–48). years\(^1\) the Refutation and Overthrow of the Knowledge falsely so called, or as Jerome curtly styles it, Adversus omnes haereses. Only fragments of the Greek original have survived, but the work has been preserved as a whole in a practically contemporary Latin version which, happily, is literal to a fault. Of the five books the first two contain a general examination of Gnostic doctrines, especially those of the Valentinian School; in the third and fourth the false gnosis is refuted by an appeal to the Gospels and Epistles, and particularly to the discourses of our Lord; the fifth deals chiefly with questions relating to the doctrine of the Resurrection and the last things.

Irenæus had been prepared for the discussion of the Valentinian gnosis by a study of its literature and by personal intercourse with members of the sect.\(^2\) But his strongest claim to our gratitude rests on other grounds. He is the first constructive theologian on the Catholic side, for Justin scarcely goes beyond speculation, and Ignatius is too much of the mystic to be a representative divine. Planting his footsteps in the footprints of the Evangelists and Apostles, whose writings he quotes profusely, and recognising the binding nature of the traditional faith, Irenæus is yet

\(^1\) The third book was written while Eleutherius was Bishop of Rome (A.D. 177–190). Harnack places the work as a whole between 181 and 189.

\(^2\) Iren., i., praef. 2.
free to embrace fresh views of truth when they are in harmony with these fundamental principles. "While his censure of the so-called Gnostic systems is always unreserved and pitiless, he is unconsciously influenced by the new thoughts which they had brought forward. The Christianity which he proclaims has a comprehensiveness such as no earlier Christian Father known to us could ever have dreamed of."¹ Moreover, he holds a position which is unique among the Fathers of the second century in regard to opportunities of intercourse with Churches representing various lines of primitive tradition. As Lightfoot observes, "his testimony must be regarded as directly representing three Churches at least"²—the Church of Asia Minor, in which he had been brought up, the Church of South Gaul, of which he had long been an officer, and the Church of Rome, which he had visited perhaps more than once. Hence his work is an invaluable repository of personal knowledge, and the student of early Christianity, whatever else he passes by, ought at least to make himself familiar with the third and following books of the Adversus omnès haereses.

Hippolytus of Portus, a pupil of Irenæus († c. 235), belongs on the whole to the third century. But we must mention here the Philosophumena, or Refutation of all the heresies,\(^1\) of which the last seven books were discovered sixty years ago, and which is now generally attributed to this great theologian. The treatment of Christian heresies, which begins with Book V., is more comprehensive than that of Irenæus, and in some respects more interesting. The author quotes largely from original sources, including Gnostic writings; and he carries down the history of heresy to his own time, describing the internal conditions of the Roman Church in the days of Victor, Zephyrinus, and Callistus,\(^2\) with a frankness which has led to much speculation as to the relations in which the author stood to the Roman See. But whatever his ecclesiastical position may have been, this work of Hippolytus forms an important sequel to that of Irenæus, adding largely to our knowledge of Gnostic writings and tenets.

¹ Hort, Ante-Nicene Fathers, i. 71 f.
² Essays on Supernatural Religion, p. 287.

4. A P O C R Y P H A A N D P S E U D E P I G R A P H A.

Lastly, the apocryphal and pseudepigraphic literature of the second century deserves a passing notice.

The literary activity to which St. Luke bears witness in the prologue to his Gospel\(^3\) continued

---

\(^1\) Ed. L. Duncker and F. G. Schneidewin, Göttingen, 1859; P. Cruice, Paris, 1860.

\(^2\) lx. 11 ff.

\(^3\) l. 1, πολλοὶ ἐπεχείρησαν ἀνατάξασθαι διήγησιν κτλ.
after the first generation had passed away, and romance had begun to take the place of personal reminiscences. From the end of the first century Gospels, Acts, Apocalypses, Epistles were freely produced, in some cases by Catholic writers, in others by Gnostic Christians, who used them as vehicles for spreading their several systems. Similarly, Christian hands worked over Jewish pseudepigrapha, or built up fiction on the basis of Old Testament tales. The following list gives the titles of the most prominent of these works, so far as they may claim to be products of the second century:

Apocryphal Gospels.—The Gospel according to the Hebrews, an Aramaic book of Jewish Christian origin; the Gospel according to the Egyptians, apparently composed in Egypt, and Enocratite in its tendency; the Protevangelion, attributed to James, a Gospel of the Infancy, still extant in a later recension; the Gospel of Thomas, and the Gospel of the Infancy, preserved in several forms; the Acts of Pilate, a Gospel of the Passion, which in its earliest form may have existed in the time of Justin; the Gospel of Peter, of which a large fragment, including the history of the Passion and Resurrection, was recovered in 1892—a book of Docetic tendencies, but based on the canonical Gospels.

---

1 See Thilo, Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti; Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha; Hilgenfeld, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem; Preuschen, Antilegomena; and for the Gospel of Peter, the editions published by Robinson and James, or that by the present writer.

APOSTRYPHAL ACTS.—The Acts of Paul and Thecla, composed, according to Tertullian (de bapt. 17), by a presbyter who afterwards confessed the forgery, but apparently resting on a yet older document; the Acts of Peter, John, Andrew, and Thomas, Gnostic compositions attributed to one Leucius Charinus; the Ascents (ἀναβασθαυνοὶ) of James, an Ebionite work, purporting to give an account of addresses delivered by James, the brother of the Lord, on the steps of the Temple at Jerusalem.

APOSTRYPHAL APOCALYPTES.—An Apocalypse of Peter is mentioned in the Muratorian fragment on the Canon as received at Rome together with the Apocalypse of St. John. A considerable portion of this book was published in 1892. Apocalypses ascribed to St. Paul and St. John are also to be seen in Tischendorf's collection.

APOSTRYPHAL EPISTLES.—The Muratorian fragment speaks of two early forgeries of Epistles attributed to St. Paul, an Epistle to the Laodiceans and an Epistle to the Alexandrians. A third Epistle to the Corinthians, an imaginary answer to a letter addressed by the Corinthians to St. Paul, was read in the Syrian Church of the fourth century, and is still preserved in 2 See the edition published by Robinson and James.

---

3 The text is given by Lightfoot, Colossians, p. 358 f.
Armenian and Latin. Eusebius gives a Greek version of a letter addressed by Abgar to Christ, with our Lord’s answer, and states that the Syriac originals came from Edessa. Both the story and the correspondence belong to the first days of East Syrian Christianity. It may be added that some modern scholars regard the Second Epistle of St. Peter as a pseudepigraphic work of the second century.

Old Testament Apocrypha worked over by Christian hands or of Christian origin.—The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Sibylline Oracles, the Fourth Book of Esdras, the Book of the Secrets of Enoch, the Ascension of Isaiah, the Apocalypses of Adam, Elijah, and Zephaniah are samples of Jewish books which appear to have been interpolated or worked over by Christians at an early date; whilst the Rest of the Words of Baruch, the Story of Aseneth, and the Greek Apocalypses of Esdras and Sedrach, are believed to be purely Christian compositions.

But the most remarkable of the pseudepigraphic productions of early Christianity are the Pseudo-Clementine writings, known as the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions. The origin of these books and their relation to one another are among the imperfectly solved enigmas of Christian literary history. But whether they were the work

---

2 H.E. i. 13.
4 See Dr. James’ art. Apocrypha in Enc. Bibl. i.
of the second century or of the third, whether originally Ebionite or Ebionite recensions of a Catholic book, whether they received their present form at Rome or in Syria, few will deny that the Homilies are attractive and instructive reading. The story tells how Clement, while yet a youth at Rome, was drawn to the East by the fame of our Lord’s ministry. Driven by adverse winds to Alexandria, he found Barnabas already preaching in that city. After a while Barnabas leaves for Palestine, and Clement, following him thither, is introduced to St. Peter, and witnesses the Apostle’s conflict with Simon Magus. The work proceeded, at least in its present shape, from a school of Gnostic Ebionites which endeavoured to maintain a strange syncretism of Judaism, Christianity, and a form of gnosis which appears also in the fragments of the Book of Helxai.¹ The contention of Baur and the Tübingen school that the Clementines presuppose a primitive Ebionite Christianity which was swamped by the growth of Paulinism, has been abandoned by sober critics; but they certainly offer an interesting problem in the history of Christian thought.²

¹ Collected by Hilgenfeld in N. T. extra can. recept., p. 53 ff.
CHAPTER III

THE FATHERS OF THE THIRD CENTURY

1. HIPPOLYTUS OF PORTUS.

A solitary figure of unusual interest and mysterious personality stands at the head of the Christian writers of the third century.

In 1551 a headless statue, seated in a chair, was discovered during some excavations in the neighbourhood of Rome. On the back of the chair was engraved a Paschal cycle, and a list of writings which were recognised as those of Hippolytus. The date of the statue has been matter of dispute, but Döllinger and Funk, Lightfoot and Salmon, agree in assigning it to the third century.

Whether HIPPOLYTUS of Portus was the first antipope, as Döllinger thought, or, as Lightfoot supposed, a bishop in partibus ministering to a mixed flock of sailors and foreigners in the port of Rome, may be left an open question. Strange to say, Eusebius and Jerome¹ were more completely in the dark as to the locality of his see than we are to-day. The one fact which admits of no doubt is the prominence of Hippolytus as a Christian scholar and author. The list upon his chair characterises the man more truly than any official title could have done.

¹ Eus., H.E. vi. 20. ἐτέρας πω να οἱ αὐτῆς προσώπως ἐκκλησια. Jerome, de vir. illustr. 61, “cuiusdam ecclesiae episcopus, nomen quippe urbis scire non potui.”

One of his works has been mentioned already in connexion with Irenæus. The Philosophumena was not the only treatise of Hippolytus against heresy; fragments of other controversial works are to be found among his remains,¹ and his Homily against Noetus is complete, and a valuable guide to one phase of monarchianism. But heresy was by no means the only subject which interested Hippolytus. He wrote apologies (ἀποδεικτικὴ πρὸς Ἰουνάνος, πρὸς Ἑλληνας λόγος); he constructed the Paschal cycle which is upon his chair; he compiled chronological tables; he is credited with the authorship of ecclesiastical canons;² that he was a preacher of repute is suggested by the attribution to him of the beautiful homily εἰς τὰ ἅγια θεοφάνεια. A single fragment of his treatise on the Resurrection reveals the loss which we have suffered through the disappearance of the rest; a treatise on Antichrist which survives is a valuable contribution to Christian eschatology. But his chief services to Christian literature were in the department of Biblical exegesis, especially the exegesis of the Old Testament. Hippolytus left commentaries on the Hexaëmeron, on Genesis and Exodus, the Psalms and other poetical books, Isaiah, Daniel, and Zechariah, St. Matthew and the Apocalypse of St. John. A good part of the commentary on Daniel survives; of the rest we have but short excerpts which are preserved in the catenae or in the pages of later writers. So far as his exegetical position can be judged from these scanty remains, he held a middle position between the allegorical and the historical methods, afterwards represented by the schools of Alexandria and Antioch respectively.¹

² In the so-called Canones Hippolyti (Achelis in Texte u. Untersuch. vi. 4).

2. THE ALEXANDRIAN SCHOOL.

Hippolytus stands alone, inheriting nothing from the Roman writers who preceded him, and leaving no traditions behind him in his own Church. His true successor,² as Eusebius and Jerome saw, was Origen. It is to Alexandria and not to Rome that we owe the first establish-moment of a school of theological science and Biblical criticism and interpretation.

¹ Bardenhewer, Patrologie, p. 132.

The Catechetical School of Alexandria began to bear fruit before the end of the second century. It was the natural outcome of an alliance between Christian teaching and the genius loci. Alexandria had long been the home of religious thought and Scriptural exegesis. The Hellenists, culminating in Philo, had pressed its peculiar culture into the service of Judaism; Basilides and Valentinus had used it for the propagation of a false gnosis, and it was the aim of the great teachers of the Catechetical School to employ the same methods in the interpretation of the Christian faith. Their work was not limited to oral instruction. Pantænus left memoirs of his teaching,¹ and if Jerome is to be believed, many of his Biblical commentaries were extant at the end of the fourth century.² Two or three fragments are all that now remain.

It is fortunate for us that a happier fate has attended the writings of his pupil and successor, T. Flavius Clemens, commonly known as Clement of Alexandria, who was master of the Alexandrian School from about 190 to 203. Clement’s three greatest works have reached us in a nearly perfect state, though the text has suffered in transmission.

¹ Eus. H.E. v. 10. Lightfoot suggests that the fragment ad Diogn. 11, 12, may be the work of Pantænus. See above, p. 32.
² Hier. de vir. illustr. 36.
Clement of Alexandria

They form a progressive course of teaching which corresponds, as has been well said, to the three stages through which the μῦστης passed at Eleusis—ἀποκάθαρσις, μύησις, ἐποπτεία—purification, initiation, revelation. In the first, "A Hortatory Word to the Gentiles" (Δόγος προτρεπτικὸς πρὸς Ἑλλήνας), the Eternal Word is presented to the heathen world as drawing all men to Himself in terms of winning persuasiveness. The second, "The Tutor" (παιδαγωγός), addresses itself to the baptized in the earlier part of their new life, and represents the same Divine Word as leading His disciples into the ways of practical godliness. The third, to which the writer has given the quaint title "Clothes-bags" (στρωματεῖς), conducts the more advanced Christian into a maturer knowledge of God and of all life; in it the Word builds up those who have a capacity for higher teaching into a Christian philosophy, making them "gnostics" indeed. A fourth work, under the title of "Sketches" (ὑποτυπώσεις) seems to have completed the course by a continuous commentary on the Jewish and Christian Scriptures; but this has perished, with the exception of a few fragments.

1 Hort, Ante-Nicene Fathers, p. 87: "a στρωματεῖς was a long bag of striped canvas in which bedclothes (στρώματα) were kept rolled up."
2 Eus., H.E. vi. 13; Phot. bibl., cod. 109.
3 Zahn, however, holds that a Latin version of a portion of the Τυπωτυπώσεις survives in the Adumbrationes in epistolæ canonicas which he has printed in Forschungen, iii. p. 79 ff.
Perhaps nothing in the whole range of early patristic literature is more stimulating to the modern reader than this great trilogy of graduated instruction in the Christian life. Its imperfections and limitations are indeed obvious. The style is difficult, and its difficulty is increased by the unsatisfactory state of the printed text. The arrangement often lacks clearness and method; the Stromateis indeed disclaim order and plan, and consist of miscellaneous notes (ὑπομνήματα), possibly those of the writer's lectures in the Catechetical School. Even the materials are often unattractive; the Paedagogus abounds in details which are grotesque and sometimes revolting; the Stromateis are packed with extracts from pagan writers, which appeal to the classical scholar rather than to the theologian. Yet these defects are forgotten in the delight which the reader will find in the general purpose of the work and the many glowing passages which it contains. Clement's conception of Christianity, in its relation to the whole field of human thought, is one which has an especial value for our own times,¹ and promises to be increasingly useful in the present century. Perhaps few of the clergy have leisure to read Clement at length, but there are none who would not profit by dipping into his great work, and extracting for their own use some of the gems of Christian thought which sparkle in his pages.¹

¹ It is impossible not to feel, e.g. how much the earlier essays in Lux Mundi owe to the inspiration of Clement's theology.

The same singular power of anticipating the problems of modern life may be noted in Clement’s beautiful tract on St. Mark x. 17 ff. (τίς ὁ σωζόμενος πλοῦσιος; Quid dives salvetur?²). The Excerpts from Theodotus and the Eastern School of Valentinus, and the Selections from the Prophetical Writings, which are printed at the end of the editions of Clement’s works, were probably preparations for some contemplated book—possibly, as Zahn has suggested, jottings for an eighth book of the Stromateis.

The reputation of Clement has been somewhat obscured by the extraordinary interest which attaches to his successor, Origen. Though he did not escape the jealousy of smaller men, and has even suffered from the animadversions of ecclesiastical authorities, Origen has been from the first singularly happy in the loyalty of his friends. Ambrosius,³ Pamphilus, Eusebius, in various ways helped to secure the circulation of his writings during his own generation and the century that followed his death; Rufinus and ¹ An appreciation of Clement by Professor Chase will be found among the Norwich Lectures on Ecclesiastical History, 1896.

² For this tract, and a treatise on the Biblical text used by Clement, see Mr. P. M. Barnard’s contributions to Texts and Studies (v. 2, 5).
³ Eus. H.E., vi. 18, 23.
Jerome gave them a home in the Latin-speaking West. In quite recent times it has been his good fortune to find a biographer in Bishop Westcott, and more than one careful scholar has devoted time and labour to the editing of his text. But it must be confessed that Origen's merits entitle him fully to the consideration which he has received. No name of equal lustre appears in the records of the Early Church. It may be granted that his genius was somewhat erratic, and his restless intellect prone to force its way into regions where thought can only be conjectural, and conjecture may be hazardous and even harmful. It may be granted also that his style is often cumbrous and difficult, though rather through the vain attempt to give expression to the crowd of thoughts which struggle for utterance than through want of literary skill or ignorance of Greek. Yet with all deductions, Origen remains the most distinguished of the Ante-Nicene Fathers, and one of the most stimulating and suggestive of Christian writers in any age.

Origen's literary activity extended over more than a quarter of a century, and the twenty-one volumes of Lommatzsch's edition of his works contain only the smaller portion of the writings which once were extant under his name. Those which survive are, (1) Biblical, in the departments of exegesis and textual criticism; (2) dogmatic; (3) apologetic.

1 D.C.B., iii., Origenes.

(1) His exegetical works consisted of short notes or scholia (σημειώσεις), known to us chiefly through catenae, or later compilations; homilies addressed to congregations assembled at the Eucharist; and formal commentaries (τόμοι) upon books of the Old and New Testament. The homilies and commentaries covered the greater part of the field of Scripture, and are still represented by copious examples, extant partly in the original Greek, partly in Latin translations due to Rufinus or Jerome. The most important of the commentaries are those on the Gospels, especially that on the Gospel of St. John, of which a large part, including John i. 1–7, 19–29; ii. 12–25; iv. 13–44; viii. 19–24, 37–52; xi. 39–57; xiii. 2–33, survives in Greek. Attention may also be called to the commentary on Romans, and to the fragments on Ephesians incorporated in Cramer’s catena, and worked up into Jerome’s commentary on that epistle.

Origen’s chief critical work, the Hexapla, has perished as a whole, but the fragments have been collected and edited with great skill by Dr. F.

1 There is no evidence that Origen commented on Nehemiah, Esther, St. Mark, the Catholic Epistles, or the Apocalypse.

3 The best edition is by A. E. Brooke (Cambridge, 1896).

4 See Sanday and Headlam, Romans, p. xcix.
Field in his monumental work, Origenis Hexaplorum quae supersunt. The Hexapla has been described by the present writer elsewhere;\(^1\) here it is enough to say that it consisted of the Greek versions of the Old Testament, written in parallel columns by the side of the original Hebrew and a transliteration of the Hebrew into Greek characters; the old Alexandrian version, or Septuagint, which occupied the fifth column, being conformed to the current Hebrew text partly by correction, partly by additions from other Greek versions and a system of conventional marks. In dealing with the criticism of the Old Testament, Origen was heavily handicapped by tradition,\(^2\) and his great work not only failed to accomplish the end which he had in view, but proved to be a fruitful source of fresh error in the Greek text.\(^3\) Nevertheless, even in its present fragmentary condition, the Hexapla is a standing monument of the genius of its author, and of priceless value to the critical student of the Old Testament, for whom it has preserved almost all that remains of the non-Septuagintal Greek versions.

(2) The De Principiis (περὶ ἀρχῶν) belongs to Origen's life at Alexandria—before 231. It is interesting both as the earliest attempt to construct a system of Christian theology on Catholic prin-

---

\(^1\) Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, p. 59 ff.
\(^2\) Cf. his Letter to Africanus (Lommatzsch, xvii. 20 ff.).
\(^3\) See Driver, Notes on the Hebrew text of Samuel, p. xlii ff.
ciples, and as a connected account of the opinions of the writer. Unhappily the book as a whole has reached us only in the Latin version of Rufinus, who admits in his preface that he allowed himself considerable freedom. Still, it may be taken as fairly representative of Origen's general position in reference to the great subjects with which he deals—God, the world, life, and faith. If his conclusions are often remote from those of the later Church, it is not because he refused to bow to authority, but because authority had not yet spoken on these subjects. While holding firmly by the tradition of the Church, Origen regarded himself as free to discuss questions upon which tradition offered no guidance. As a theologian he is at once original and conservative, but his originality is so daring that the conservatism which lies behind it has often been overlooked, and his tentative speculations have been mistaken for formal heresies.

A short treatise on Prayer shews Origen at his best, and an exhortation to martyrdom addressed to two confessors at Cæsarea during the persecution of Maximin reveals the depth of his sympathy with the suffering members of Christ. In these little works the greatest scholar and thinker of the Early Church appears as the practical Christian who understands the faith and patience of the saints.

(3) Towards the end of his life Origen was urged by his friend Ambrosius to answer the ἀληθῆς λόγος of the philosopher Celsus, in which Christianity was systematically attacked and an attempt was made to set up a defence of Paganism. In his eight books against Celsus, Origen meets his antagonist on his own ground, quoting him at length, and answering his objections and arguments one by one. The scope of the work is thus distinct from those of the Apologies of the second century, which were directed against the unreasoning fanaticism of the mob or the arbitrary conduct of the magistrates; in the Contra Celsum philosopher is pitted against philosopher, and the great controversy is fought out upon the basis of an appeal to reason. "It may be said fairly that every essential type of objection to Christianity finds its representation in Celsus' statements, and Origen suggests in reply thoughts, often disguised in strange dresses, which may yet be fruitful."¹

For those who cannot allow themselves the luxury of an extensive study of Origen's writings, antiquity has provided an anthology, the Philocalia, drawn up about A.D. 382 by Basil and Gregory of Nazianzus. This beautiful book, now edited with a scholarly care which leaves nothing to be desired,² contains selections from the De Principiis, the Contra

¹ D.C.B., iv., p. 122 f.
² By Dr. J. Armitage Robinson (Cambridge, 1893).
Celsus, and the commentaries and homilies, arranged in twenty-seven chapters, which collect Origen's views under separate headings. The Philocalia has preserved the original of many noble passages which would otherwise have perished or have survived only in a translation of doubtful honesty. But apart from this merit, it offers a well-arranged and representative body of excerpts from Origen, which enables students of limited opportunities to place themselves in contact with the mind of this great Christian thinker.

One other Alexandrian writer of this century deserves notice here. Dionysius, a pupil of Origen, one of his successors in the headship of the Catechetical School, and Bishop of Alexandria from A.D. 248 to A.D. 265, wrote a number of treatises on practical and controversial subjects, and conducted an extensive correspondence, of which Eusebius preserves lengthy extracts. The epithet ὁ μεγας bestowed on this scholar-bishop by Eusebius appears to have been on the whole well deserved; less distinguished than Origen, he yet possessed the greatness which consists in the rare combination of knowledge with statesmanship, breadth of sympathy, and a strong character. A careful study of his work and theological position would make an attractive contribution to the literature of Patristics.

1 H.E., vi. 40 ff., 44 ff. 2 H.E., vii. praef.
Although Alexandria is pre-eminent in the history of Greek Christian literature during the third century, the Churches of Palestine and Asia Minor also can boast of distinguished names.

Julius Africanus, who is perhaps best known as a correspondent of Origen, occupies an important position in the field of historical research. His five books of χρονογραφίαι, which covered all history from the Creation to the year A.D. 221, were published in Palestine, where he resided at a time when Hippolytus was still working out his system of chronology at Rome. The work has perished, but it was used by Eusebius for his Chronicon, especially in the compilation of the early episcopal lists. ¹ Another book, attributed to Africanus by Eusebius, bore the fanciful name of Κεστοί, i.e. "Embroidered Girdles" — a collection, as it appears, of miscellaneous knowledge. In his correspondence with Origen, Africanus, though a layman, shews a keen interest in biblical questions. His letter on the genuineness of Susanna ² is a model of sober criticism, much in advance of his age; in another letter he endeavours to reconcile the genealogies of the first and third Gospels. ³ On the whole he is an interesting person, and it is matter for regret that we know so little of him.

¹ Lightfoot, Clement, i. 205, 257; Harnack, Chronologie, p. 123.
² Lommatzsch, xvii., p. 7 ff.
³ Eus. H.E., i. 7.
Gregory, Pamphilus, Methodius 57

Gregory the Wonderworker (δ θαυματουργός), Bishop of Neo-Cæsarea (c. 240–272), had met Origen at Cæsarea in 233, and continued under his influence for five years. His labours in Pontus left little time for literary work, but he is favourably known by his Panegyric on Origen, containing (cc. 93–183) a striking account of Origen's method of teaching, his creed (ἐκθέσις πίστεως),1 and a canonical letter to the Bishops of Pontus, a first-hand account of the troubles of the time.

Pamphilus, who had been educated at Alexandria under Pierius, a successor of Origen, spent his life as a presbyter at Cæsarea in Palestine, where he suffered for the faith in 309. Like Gregory, he was a devoted admirer of Origen, whose works formed the nucleus of the celebrated library which he founded at Cæsarea. His only literary work was an Apology for Origen, of which the first book has been preserved in a Latin version by Rufinus.

Methodius, Bishop of Olympus in Lycia, suffered in 311, the last year of the last persecution. He was a profuse writer, but is best known by his only complete extant work, a Platonic dialogue entitled Συμπόσιον τῶν δέκα παρθένων, ἡ περὶ Ἀγνείας. The Virgins discuss the virtues of the unmarried state, and the dialogue ends with a remarkable hymn to the Divine Bridegroom and His Bride, the Church. In other dialogues Methodius impugned the teaching of Origen; the fragments which have survived reveal the spirit of antagonism which the personality of the great Alexandrian had already begun to arouse in minds of an opposite temperament.

1 See Hahn-Harnack, Bibliothek der Symbole, p. 253. The longer κατὰ μέρος πίστις (ib. p. 278) is now attributed to Apollinaris.

Hitherto the literature of the Church, so far as it is known to us, is exclusively Greek. This is true of Western as well as of Eastern writings; even such genuine products of Roman Christianity as the Epistle of Clement, the Shepherd of Hermas, and the Fragment on the Canon, were not originally composed in Latin.\(^1\) Christian literature in the Latin tongue took its rise at Carthage, the Rome beyond the seas which had never been flooded by Orientals, and whose citizens were content to speak the language of their forefathers. Fortunately, the first Christian writer who made an extensive use of Latin for literary purposes\(^2\) was not only a master of the language but a creative genius who knew how to adapt it to Christian thought without sacrificing the just claims of either. Tertullian may be said to have made Christian Latinity; it came from his hands rough-hewn, needing to be shaped and polished by later workers, but destined never to lose the general character which he had impressed upon it. He did more; he laid the foundation of Latin Christianity. Certainly some of the distinctive features of Latin theology as they may be seen in Augustine and Gregory I. already appear, and appear for the first time, in the African father who clothed Christian ideas in a Latin dress.¹

\(^1\) On the use of Greek at Rome and in the West see Caspari, Quellen zur Gesch. d. Taufsymbol, iii. p. 267 f.; or Sanday and Headlam, Romans, p. lix. f.

\(^2\) Minucius Felix was perhaps earlier, but we have only one work by him, and its Latin style is modelled on that of Cicero; see below, p. 69 f.

Q. Septimius Florens Tertullianus, the son of a centurion, born at Carthage in the sixth decade of the second century, and probably a jurist by profession, was baptized and became a presbyter of the Church of Carthage towards the end of the century. His earliest work belongs to the year A.D. 197–8, and his literary activity seems to have lasted for about twenty years. Like other Christian writers of the second century, Tertullian handled the religious controversies which were forced upon the Church by the circumstances of the time. He defended the faith against Pagans and Jews; he wrote against the heretics of his age, the Valentinians, the Marcionites, and the Monarchians, who had now begun to disturb the peace of the Church; and after his conversion to Montanism he turned his bitter pen against the 'psychic' views of the Catholic majority. But he did not limit himself to the work of discomfiting his theological adversaries. It is characteristic of this typical Latin Christian that he directs his attention to the minuter details of practical life. Thus the veil which was worn by unmarried women, and his own adoption of the pallium instead of the customary toga, supplied subjects for pamphlets. By great good fortune most of these incidental writings have been preserved, and they serve to illustrate the manners of the age no less than the eccentric genius of their author.

The extant works of Tertullian may be classified according to subject under the three heads of apologetic, polemical, and practical theology. Or they may be grouped according to the religious standpoint of the author, as Catholic or Montanistic. Though the exact date of Tertullian's passage from Catholicism to Montanism is unknown,¹ internal evidence assigns certain of his writings to the years which followed his break with the Church. In the following list writings which are probably Montanistic are distinguished by the use of italics.

Apologetic Writings.—Apologeticum:² Ad nationes; Ad martyras; De testimonio animae; *Ad Scapulam.*³

¹ It happened between A.D. 202 and A.D. 208.
² A.D. 197-8.
³ C. A.D. 212.
POLEMICAL WRITINGS. — Adversus Judaeos (1-8); De praescriptionibus haereticorum.¹ Adversus Hermogenem; Adversus Marcionem;² Adversus Valentinianos; Scorpiace;³ De carne Christi; De resurrectione carnis; De anima; Adversus Praxeum.⁴

PRACTICAL WRITINGS.—De baptismo; De paenitentia; De oratione; De patientia; De spectaculis; De idololatria; De cultu feminarum; Ad uxorem; De exhortatione castitatis; De monogamia; De virginibus velandis; De pallio;⁵ De corona militis;⁶ De fuga in persecutione;⁷ De ieiunio adversus psychicos; De pudicitia.⁸

Perhaps there is no ancient Christian writer, unless we except Jerome, whose writings are read with such mingled feelings as Tertullian's. His genuine loyalty to Christ is marred by a fierce intolerance which is sometimes wholly alien from the spirit of Christ, and he is wanting in the breadth of view, the spiritual insight, the sweet reasonableness of the great Alexandrians. We are conscious that we have passed from the Greek spirit to the Latin, and the transition is like that which the traveller remarks when he is hurried from a fair and smiling prospect to a rugged country under scowling skies. Yet each type has its advantages, and Tertullian is not a writer who can be neglected without grievous loss. The crispness of his epigrams, the obscurity of his allusions, the very difficulties of his latinity, brace the reader, compelling his close attention. An unusually strong character, a religious genius who is sui generis, stands revealed in every one of Tertullian's writings. But what is more, we can trace in them the beginnings of a great religious system, the Christianity which is still dominant among the Latin races of Europe. When to this we add the acuteness, the learning, the experience in the life of his age, and the intensity of moral earnestness which characterise this great African, it is evident that his claims on the attention of the Christian student are of no ordinary kind.

A limited study of Tertullian should include at least the Apologeticum, the De praescriptionibus, and either the De baptismo, the De oratione, or the De corona militis, as specimens of his power in different fields of literary work. If the reader is able to go further, he will find much attractive matter in the De testimonio animae, De patientia, and Ad martyras, and many strange revelations of the author's fiery nature in Ad nationes, De pallio, De ieiunio, and De pudicitia; whilst the books against Marcion and Praxeas, and the treatises De anima, De paenitentia, De carne Christi, and De resurrectione carnis will be found to have special interest in connexion with questions of doctrine.

Two genuine narratives of martyrdom belong to the Church and age of Tertullian: the Acts of the Scillitan Martyrs, which contains a report of the examination before the Proconsul Saturninus¹ at Carthage of six Christians from Scillium, in the year 180; and the Passion of St. Perpetua, which describes the life in prison and subsequent martyrdom of five catechumens, three men and two women, who suffered at Carthage in 202. The writer of the Passio was evidently a Montanist, and there are other reasons for suspecting that we owe this beautiful little work to Tertullian.² Both pieces will repay study, helping the reader to understand something of the bitterness and the joy of an age of persecution. As Perpetua is commemorated in the English Calendar on March 7, it may be thought desirable in some parishes to read extracts from her Acts when preaching on that day.³

Jerome, in his notice of Tertullian,⁴ tells us that he had once met an old man who in his youth had heard one of Cyprian’s secretaries relate that Cyprian never passed a day without reading some

¹ Cf. Tert. ad Scap., 3.
² See Texts and Studies, i. 2, p. 47 ff.
³ Cf. Proctor and Wordsworth, Sarum Breviary; fasc. iii. col. 205 sqq.
⁴ De vir. illustr. 53.
work of Tertullian, and that in calling for it, his habit was to say, Da magistrum—"Let me have my master." Yet Cyprian's dependence on Tertullian never amounted to a servile imitation. Several of his treatises do indeed cover nearly the same ground, and bear nearly identical titles; if Tertullian wrote De cultu feminarum, De oratione, Ad martyras, De patientia, we have tracts by Cyprian with the titles, De habitu virginum, De oratione dominica, De exhortatione martyrii, De bono patientiae. It has been suggested that Cyprian's purpose was "to give his people the benefit of Tertullian's thoughts, while providing a substitute for writings which, however harmless themselves, would probably lead their readers on to Montanist works of the same author."¹ However this may have been, it is evident that in such treatises Cyprian had before him the corresponding works of Tertullian, and to some extent framed his own upon them. Yet neither in style nor in thought was he the mere pedissequus of his predecessor. How independent a line he could take even with Tertullian full in view has been shewn by Archbishop Benson in a comparison of the De bono patientiae with Tertullian's De patientia;² and his correspondence, which is after all his greatest contribution to Christian literature, has no parallel

---

² Cyprian, p. 487; on the De dominica oratione, cf. ib., p. 276 ff.
Tertullian and Cyprian in Tertullian's works. As to style, Cyprian is as far as possible from following Tertullian;¹ Tertullian is concise to a fault, Cyprian amplifies, with an eye to rhetorical effect: his model is not Tertullian, but the classical and post-classical Latin writers studied in the school of rhetoric where he had received his training as an advocate. But the difference of style is not merely accidental; it answers to a difference of character and mental habits by which the pupil is distinguished from the master. Cyprian, even after his conversion and his entrance on his episcopal office, was the cultured Roman gentleman, of ample means, and calm and equal temperament. "His personal address was conciliatory and dignified, his manners affectionate. Even to the last his friendship was claimed by senator and knight, by the oldest heathen houses, and the highest ranks of the province."² The man is reflected in his writings; if they do not possess the fire and genius which characterise Tertullian, they are free from the eccentricities, the sins against good taste and Christian feeling, by which Tertullian's greatest works are sometimes disfigured.

Thascius Cæcilius Cyprianus was born at Carthage about A.D. 200, and was martyred in 258. His conversion took place in 246, and all his extant works are subsequent to it. They fall into two classes—treatises and letters, which may be arranged in chronological order\(^1\) as follows:—

¹ Cf. Cyprian, p. 531, for an eloquent estimate of the two styles.
² Cyprian, p. 4 f.

Treatises.—Ad Donatum (246); Quod idola dii non sint (246); Ad Quirinum, testimoniorum libri ii. (248); De habitu virginum (248); De catholicæ ecclesiae unitate (251); De lapsis (251); De opera et eleemosynis (252); Ad Demetrianum (252); De mortalitate (252); De oratione dominica (252); De bono patientiae (256); De zelo et labore (256); De exhortatione martyrii (257).

Letters.—Epp. 1, 2, 4 (249); 5–48 (250); 44–53 (251); 55–59, 62 (252); 60, 61, 63–65 (253); 3, 66–68 (254); 69–71 (255); 72–73 (256); 74–81 (258).

Of the Letters, 44–48, 51–59 relate to the Novatianist controversy; 67–74 to the controversy with Stephen on Re-baptism; 5–48 belong to the period of the Decian persecution, and 76–81 to the persecution of Valerian.

As a great bishop, who, while with African independence he knew how to withstand to the face the successors of St. Peter and St. Paul, yet stoutly maintained the privileges of the Episcopate and the idea of Catholic unity, Cyprian has beyond most of the Latin Fathers a strong claim on the reverent attention of the English clergy.

\(^1\) The order followed is that of Archbishop Benson (Cyprian, p. xxii. _f._).
Happily all that is needed for the understanding of his place in the history and literature of the Church has been supplied by the classical work of Archbishop Benson—a rich legacy of learning and wisdom to future generations of English Churchmen. To the latinity of Cyprian the student will find an admirable guide in Mr. E. W. Watson’s Style and Language of St. Cyprian (Studia Biblica, iv. pp. 189–324). Lastly, a text which is on the whole sound and trustworthy has been provided in the Vienna Corpus of the Latin Fathers (vol. iii., ed. W. Hartel, Vienna, 1868).

A number of supposititious writings are to be found in the Appendix to the editions of Cyprian’s works. Some of these are probably contemporary with Cyprian or nearly so, and are important as Christian monuments. The following are the chief:—De spectaculis, De bono pudicitiae, De laude martyrii, Ad Novatianum, De rebaptismate, De aleatoribus, De montibus Sina et Sion, De singularitate clericorum, De Pascha computus, Genesis (a poem). It may be added that the letters of Cyprian include fourteen which are not his, but were written by his correspondents (Epp. 8, 21–24, 30, 31, 36, 42, 49, 50, 75, 77–79). The Life of Cyprian which accompanies his works is ascribed to his deacon, Pontius. Of Cyprian’s examination and martyrdom the contemporary Acta proconsularia supply a detailed account.
Two other African writers of the Ante-Nicene period may conveniently be mentioned here.

Arnobius was a native of Sicca in Numidia, where he taught rhetoric during the reign of Diocletian. After his conversion he wrote an Apology, Adversus nationes, in which he endeavoured to refute the cavils of the expiring paganism of his age, and to turn the attack upon the enemy. The work extends to seven books; but though not without passages which are interesting or even noble, as a whole it is wanting in the distinctively Christian spirit and the Scriptural knowledge which mark Tertullian and Cyprian.

A more weighty apologist of this period is a pupil of Arnobius, L. Caelius Firmianus Lactantius, who had been carried from Africa to Nicomedia by Diocletian to teach rhetoric in the imperial city. In Lactantius the Church gained a classical scholar who used his stores of Greek and Latin learning in the service of his new faith. So excellent is his latinity that the scholars of the Italian renaissance called him the "Christian Cicero." The chief work written after his conversion, the Divinae Institutiones, is at once a treasury of classical quotations and a comprehensive manual of Christian apologetics, as the subject was understood in the ancient Church. How full and systematic the treatment is may be gathered from the titles of the seven books: De falsa religione, De origine erroris, De falsa sapientia, De vera sapientia et religione, De justitia, De vero cultu, De vita beata. The Epitome Divinarum Institutionum presents the same argument in a briefer form, and particular points are handled at length in the De Opificio Dei (on the Divine handiwork in the human body), and the De ira Dei (on Divine punishments). The De mortibus Persecutorum, if the work of Lactantius, presents this author in a less favourable light; it is a terrible record of the last persecution, lacking in the judicial spirit of the true historian. A poem on the Phœnix, attributed to Lactantius, shews what its author could do in the art of writing elegiac verse.

4. Roman Writers.

From Africa we turn to Rome. It has been said that Christian latinity had its beginnings at Carthage. There is one apparent exception. The Octavius of MINUCIUS FELIX is placed by some writers in the reign of M. Aurelius (i.e. before A.D. 180), and by others in that of Alexander Severus (before A.D. 235),¹ but the earlier date is now generally preferred; in any case, it was written before Cyprian's early work, Quod idola dii non sint, in which it is freely used. But the exception is perhaps more apparent than real; for though the Octavius is the work of a Christian and full of the Christian spirit, its latinity is not specifically Christian. The book is modelled on Cicero's philosophical treatises, and is essentially classical in its literary form. Our author dramatises his argument. He takes his reader for a holiday trip to Ostia in company with Octavius and his pagan friend Cæcilius, and during a stroll by the seashore the two are launched into a discussion of Christianity which results in the conversion of Cæcilius. The piece has a singular freshness and beauty, and both as a work of art and as an apology for Christianity compares very favourably with the Greek apologies of the second century. It is accessible in the edition of Dr. H. A. Holden, which is provided with notes and an index latinitatis, and serves as an excellent guide to the student who is beginning a course of Latin patristics.

¹ So, e.g. Dr. Salmon in D.C.B., iii. p. 324.

While a Roman layman of good birth and classical education, like Minucius Felix, might be found even in the second century to defend his faith in Ciceronian Latin, the Roman bishops of the third century wrote little else than letters, and in these they seem to have employed Greek or Latin according to the nationality of their correspondents. Thus Bishop Cornelius addressed Cyprian in Latin, but wrote in Greek to Fabius of Antioch. The letter of Dionysius of Rome to his namesake of Alexandria, and his treatise against the Sabellians who were active in Libya,\(^1\) would also appear to have been in Greek. Their acquaintance with both languages enabled the bishops of the metropolis to address themselves to Eastern and Western churches alike, and thus materially assisted their pretensions to primacy. Yet for strictly literary purposes Latin was probably coming into use in the Roman Church from the days of the African Pope Victor (A.D. 189–199).\(^2\) The one important Roman Christian work which has come down to us from the time which followed the death of Hippolytus is the Latin treatise De Trinitate, which is ascribed by Jerome\(^3\) to Novatian. Novatian’s work, written before he was involved in schism, is not a mere έντομή operis Tertulliani, as Jerome\(^4\) would have us believe, but to some extent a genuine contribution to the great subject, dealing, e.g., more distinctly with the doctrine of the Holy Spirit than its predecessors in this field. But it is not a little remarkable that this is the only book of its kind which the Roman Church produced before Constantine, and that it is due not to a bishop of Rome, but to a presbyter who afterwards became an anti-

1 So it appears from Eus. H.E. vi. 43, ἐπιστολὴν Κυρηνίου Ῥωμαίου ἐπισκόπου πρὸς τὸν τῆς Ἀντιοχείας ἐκκλησίας Φάσιου ... καὶ ἄλλαι πάλιν Ῥωμαίου φωνή συντεταγμέναι κτλ.

---

1 Athan. De Sent. Dionysii.
2 Harnack is disposed to attribute to Victor the pseudo-Cyprianic book, De aleatoribus.
3 De vir. illustr. c. 70.
pope. The early popes, and with a few brilliant exceptions the popes generally, were too much immersed in the business of the see or, as sometimes happened, in the affairs of churches widely remote from their own, to have leisure for literary work even in the domain of theology; their interests were those of the great church officer, the first bishop in Christendom, rather than of the scholar and divine. Hence at Rome the episcopate, which in other churches contributed so largely to learning and letters, was relatively barren of results in this field of Christian activity.

A word may be said in passing of the first of Latin Christian versifiers (for a poet he can hardly be called), Commodianus. Of his nationality nothing is known; his floruit is about A.D. 250. His two extant works, the Instructiones and the Carmen Apologeticum, are among the curiosities of literature. Both are written in indifferent hexameters which set at naught the laws of prosody, substituting accent for quantity;¹ in addition to this, the Instructiones are acrostic throughout. It is possible that these eccentricities are due to a desire on the part of the writer to gain the attention of the class for which he wrote, for it appears to have been his object to place elementary Christian teaching within the reach of the masses who were not touched by apologies which appealed to statesmen and philosophers.

¹ Cf. the Christian Hymn published in the Amherst Papyri, Part i. p. 23 ff.
Summary of Ante-Nicene Period 73

We have now completed a brief examination of the Christian literature of the second and third centuries. It is surely a remarkable record, if we bear in mind that during the whole of this period the Church was engaged in a struggle for existence in which all the resources of the Empire were at times arrayed against her. The early Christian societies were not formed for literary ends, and contained comparatively few men of letters; their first literary efforts arose out of the necessity of establishing communication between remote churches or scattered members. Yet before persecution ceased, the Church had produced a Tertullian and an Origen: she had created a literature, both Latin and Greek, which in greatness of interest, if not in beauty of style, compares favourably with the best pagan productions of the time. Under the circumstances, the Patristic writings of the first three centuries bear a remarkable testimony to the vitality of the religion which drew them forth. Even as literature many of them deserve study, while for the Christian scholar they possess unique interest, as witnesses to the faith and love, the enthusiasm and the triumphant energy of the persecuted Church.
CHAPTER IV

THE POST-NICENE FATHERS (GREEK AND EASTERN)

Though the conversion of the Empire did not create Christian literature, it gave to Christian writers a fuller scope and larger materials. Long before the Edict of Milan the riches of the Gentiles had begun to pour themselves into the treasury of the Church, as the labours of Lactantius, Arnobius, Minucius Felix, Cyprian, Tertullian, the Alexandrian Clement, Athenagoras, Justin, and Aristides abundantly shew. But from the time of Constantine, the Church attracted an increasing proportion of the higher intellects, until in the end all the best literature was professedly Christian. Moreover, the members of the Church, no longer harassed by persecution or by the anxieties of a precarious peace, were now at leisure to follow literary pursuits. Other causes helped to mature Christian letters during the fourth and fifth centuries. It was a time when great principles were at stake, and great leaders were raised up to expound and defend them in dogmatic treatises. Their works, unlike those of many of their predecessors, were carefully preserved and still remain in their integrity. After the fifth century the theological questions debated in the Church turned on minor points which had little living interest for the ablest men, and the religious literature of the day is proportionately poor. Then the darkness of the Middle Ages began to set in, extinguishing independent thought and work, whether secular or ecclesiastical. Thus the golden age of ancient Church literature nearly synchronises with the period of the first four Councils, upon which we are now to enter.

It will be convenient to deal first with the Greek and other Eastern literature, reserving the writings of the Latin West for another chapter.

1. Eusebius of Caesarea.

At the head of the Greek Christian writers of the fourth century must be placed Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea in Palestine, historian, apologist, exegete, critic, theologian, and scholar. Born some forty years before the outbreak of the last persecution, he outlived by two or three years the first Christian emperor, and thus represents in nearly equal measure the traditions of two epochs. One at least of his extant works, the Eclogae Propheticae, was produced while the last persecution was still raging; whilst others, the Life of Constantine, the books against Marcellus, and the Theophania, are later than A.D. 336.
The Ecclesiastical History holds a middle place in the chronology of his works. It was probably given to the world in 324. Its purpose is to offer a comprehensive account of Christian affairs from the beginning to the final victory of Constantine. As a historian, Eusebius has obvious limitations; and his style wearies the reader by a rhetoric at once turgid and obscure. But the Church owes him an enormous debt for his diligence in collecting materials which, if not collected at that particular moment, would probably have perished altogether. It is one of his merits that he allows his great men to tell their own story, and the result is that the work is a treasure-house of reliquiae ante-Nicaenae. He who wishes to study the ancient Church in her genuine remains must read and digest the pages of Eusebius throughout.] To those who are compelled to limit themselves to a portion of his work, or who may wish to consult it in reference to a special period, the following digest of its contents may be serviceable.

Book i. Introductory. Origin of Christianity to the Ascension. ii. Work of the Apostles, to the Jewish war. iii. From Vespasian to Trajan. iv. From Trajan to Marcus Aurelius. v. From Marcus Aurelius to Septimius Severus. vi. From Severus to Decius. vii. From Decius to Diocletian. viii. From the outbreak of the last persecution to the edict of Gallienus. ix. From the edict of Gallienus to the victory of the Milvian Bridge. x. The final triumph of Constantine and of the Church.

Most MSS. and editions of the History insert either between Books viii. and ix., or in the heart of Book viii., an earlier work On the Martyrs of Palestine, in its shorter Greek form.

Another book, the Vita Constantini, written after the Emperor's death, brings the history down to the last years of the author's life.

The Chronicle, which was an early work, survives as a whole only in translations, four of which remain: the Latin of Jerome (part only), two Syriac versions, and an Armenian version. Fragments of the Greek text have been preserved by various writers. The best edition is that of A. Schoene (Berlin, 1866 ff.); a full account of the original work and its versions may be seen in Lightfoot's Clement (i. p. 207 ff.), or in Salmon's article, Chronicle of Eusebius, D.C.B. (ii. p. 348 ff.). It consisted of two parts, a χρονογραφία, or outline of the world's history to the year A.D. 325, and a χρονικὸς κανών, or series of comparative tables of dates.

Eusebius was followed by a succession of Greek Church historians, whose names and work may be conveniently mentioned here. The Christian History of Philip of Side (cent. v.) has disappeared. But large fragments remain of the work of the Arian historian Philostorgius, and we possess in their completeness the histories of the Catholic laymen, Socrates and Sozomen, and of Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrrhus, who carry on the narrative to 419, 423, and 427 respectively. Thus the interval between the First and Third Councils is well covered; the rise of Arianism, in particular, finds an excellent exponent in Socrates, who has preserved the original documents. A later writer, Evagrius, starts with the Third Council, and brings the history down to the end of the sixth century. For fuller particulars and later historians the reader may consult J. G. Dowling, Introduction to the Critical Study of Ecclesiastical History (London, 1838).

Eusebius was an apologist as well as a historian. He answered Porphyry, as Origen had answered Celsus, and refuted Hierocles, who had ventured to set up Apollonius of Tyana as a competitor for the honours which the Church paid to Christ. The former work has perished, but the Contra Hieroclem remains. More important are the Praeparatio Evangelica and Demonstratio Evangelica, in which Eusebius defends the Christian position against pagans and Jews respectively. With the positive argument for Christianity he deals in a third work, the Theophania, which is preserved in a Syriac translation. The three treatises form a corpus of apologetic learning which is unrivalled in antiquity.
Eusebius as Biblical Scholar

The Biblical studies of Eusebius were scarcely less extensive. He wrote commentaries on the Psalms, on Isaiah, on St. Luke, and, as it appears, on other books of Scripture; those on the Psalms and Isaiah have reached us, and are considerable works. But his critical acuteness and scholarly care are seen to greater advantage in his Questions and Answers on the Genealogy and on the Passion and Resurrection, and his Letter to Carpianus, to which is appended the ingenious scheme for comparing the contents of the Gospels, known as the κανόνες Εὐσεβίου.¹ His Onomasticon (περὶ τῶν τοπικῶν ὄνομάτων τῶν ἐν τῇ θελαγραφῇ) is one of a series of topographical works in which his intimate knowledge of Palestine was used for the elucidation of Biblical place-names. Nor was he a stranger to the criticism of the Biblical text. In early life he had shared with Pamphilus the task of publishing a separate edition of Origen’s Hexaplaric Septuagint; and he is often an important witness to the readings of the New Testament MSS. upon which he worked.

In three of his extant works Eusebius enters the field of dogmatic theology. The Eclogae Propheticae is not, as the title seems to indicate, a mere book of excerpts, like Cyprian’s Testi-monia, but a collection of prophecies bearing on the Messianic hope, accompanied by a running commentary of a doctrinal character. Eusebius also wrote two considerable works against the teaching of Marcellus of Ancyra, the Contra Marcellum and the De theologia ecclesiastica, in which he disposes of the Christology of that enigmatical theologian. His own Christology is not beyond suspicion, but it may be that, as Professor Gwatkin thinks, his leniency towards the Arian position is due to the belief that “Sabellianism was a more pressing danger than Arianism.”

¹ On the “Eusebian Canons” see Gregory’s Prolegomena to Tischendorf, i. p. 143 ff.; or Nestle, Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament, E. Tr., p. 56.

2. ATHANASIUS OF ALEXANDRIA, AND DIDYMUS.

Less learned and less versatile than Eusebius, but a man of larger views and stronger principles, was his younger contemporary, Athanasius of Alexandria. Born a few years before the end of the third century, Athanasius lived nearly to the verge of the last quarter of the fourth, and his literary activity extended from adolescence to old age.

It may be useful to print here a list of his genuine works, adding the approximate dates, where they are known.

1 Arianism, p. 102, n. 2.
2 He died 2nd May 373.
3 The dates are adopted from Dr. A. Robertson’s Introduction (Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, iv. p. lxiii. ff.).
Writings of Athanasius 81

APOLOGETIC.—Contra Gentes; De Incarnatione Verbi (318).

The apologetic Contra Gentes, and its more important sequel the De Incarnatione Verbi, appear to have been written before the outbreak of the Arian troubles, when Athanasius was scarcely more than twenty. Yet these books bear no traces of immaturity; both thought and style are felicitous, rising here and there to an eloquence which is extraordinary in so young a man. True to his Alexandrian training, Athanasius builds his argument upon the doctrine of the Logos. But his view of the doctrine is more practical than Clement's, and his exposition of the Incarnation more convincing than Origen's. From the Incarnation he proceeds to the Atonement and the Resurrection, and finally he meets the objections which may be raised against the scheme of Redemption as a whole. The De Incarnatione is one of the most suggestive of the patristic writings, and deserves the close attention of the Church at the present time.

Of the controversial treatises of Athanasius the Orations against the Arians, and the letters to Serapion are perhaps the most important; the former deals with the Godhead of the Son, the latter answers the incipient attack of the Semi-Arians upon the Godhead of the Holy Spirit. Valuable materials for the history of the Arian controversy are stored up in the historical tracts, especially the De decretis, De sententia Dionysii, De synodis, and Ad Afros. The Festal Letters, in a Syriac version which was brought to light in 1842, reveal Athanasius in another character, as the vigilant chief pastor. From year to year throughout his long episcopate he wrote to the bishops of his patriarchate to announce the incidence of Easter, and by occasion of this business to impart counsel or encouragement as circumstances required. The letters deal incidentally with a variety of subjects; e.g. the 39th Letter enumerates the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments. The Life of St. Antony has been regarded by some recent critics\(^1\) as spurious, but the Athanasian authorship of this interesting book is still supported by excellent scholars.\(^2\) Among the undoubtedly spurious books appended to the works of Athanasius mention may be made of the tract On Virginity, and the Synopsis Scripturae sacrae, both of which will repay study.

While Athanasius was yet a lad, another eminent Church writer was born at Alexandria, Didymus ‘the Blind.’ He lost his eyesight at the age of four or five, but an insatiable thirst for knowledge overcame his physical limitations, and Didymus was among the most learned men of his time. Athanasius made him master of the Catechetical School, and in that capacity he lived and worked till the last years of the century; “vivit usque Hodie” (writes Jerome in 392), “et octogesimum tertium aetatis suae iam excessit annum." Some of the writings of this blind scholar survive to bear witness to his knowledge and industry; his De Trinitate and De Spiritu Sancto\(^1\) are valuable contributions to the literature of theology, and surprise us by the intimate acquaintance with Holy Scripture which they display. Didymus was a loyal disciple of Origen, but at the same time a stout opponent of Arian and Macedonian teaching. Altogether he is an interesting person, whose character and work have received less attention than they deserve.

\(^1\) E.g. by Prof. Gwatkin, Arianism, note B.
\(^2\) Cf. e.g. Dom Butler, Lausiac History, p. 226.

3. Cyril of Jerusalem, and Epiphanius.

The life of Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, covers the whole period of the Arian controversy. He was born about 315, and was present at the Council of Constantinople in 381. Yet his interests were those of the pastor rather than of the trained controversialist. He is at his best when instructing his flock in the faith and practice of Christianity. It is in this character that he appears in his chief extant work, the instructions which he delivered to catechumens in the Great Church at Jerusalem during the spring of A.D. 348. The work falls into two main portions—eighteen lectures, preceded by a procatechesis, which were delivered to candidates for baptism (κατηχήσεως φωτιζομένων), and five addressed to the newly baptized (κατηχητικό λόγοι πρὸς τοὺς νεοφατίστους, or κατηχήσεως μυσταγωγικαί). The first series deals with such general topics as repentance, baptism, and faith, and then expounds, article by article, the baptismal creed of the Church of Jerusalem. These second, delivered in Easter week, explains the mysteries and ceremonial of Baptism, Confirmation, and the Eucharist. When Cyril gave these instructions he was not yet a bishop, or much over thirty years of age, so that they must not be taken to represent his final judgement on the controversies of his times. But they are of the greatest value as a record of Church life in the mother city of Christendom about the middle of the fourth century. They throw light upon the catechetical system of the ancient Church, the order which was followed in the celebration of the Sacraments, the reverent estimation in which the Christian mysteries were held, the prevalent beliefs and superstitions of the times. For the liturgical student Cyril is a first-rate authority, carrying on the chain of evidence of which Justin, Irenæus, Tertullian, and Cyprian supply the earlier links.¹

\(^1\) In Jerome's Latin version.
Cyril of Jerusalem

¹ The evidence as to the use of the Church of Jerusalem is carried further in the document known as 'S. Silviae peregrinatio, which belongs to the last years of the fourth century. For the Egyptian use we have now the Prayer-Book of Serapion (Journal of Theological Studies, i. pp. 88, 247), the friend of Athanasius, which must be nearly contemporary with Cyril.
In the works of Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantia (Salamis) in Cyprus, and a contemporary of Cyril, we have a widely different type of literature. This sleuth-hound of heresy was born in Palestine, but his boyhood was partly spent among the monks of Egypt. Returning to his native land at the age of twenty, he founded a monastery there, over which he presided till his consecration in 367. Bishop and monk, it was the dream of his life to defend orthodoxy by detecting and refuting heresy in all its forms. He has left us two great polemical treatises, the Ancoratus (ἀγκυρωτός), in which he endeavours to 'anchor' the Church in safe moorings by setting forth the true faith, and the vast Panarion, a 'medicine chest' of remedies for all forms of erroneous belief.¹ The Panarion deals with eighty heresies, twenty of which are pre-Christian. For the earlier Christian heresies Epiphanius depends on Irenæus and Hippolytus, and it is one of his merits that he has preserved the original Greek of large excerpts from the former. His account of contemporary heresies, however, must be received with caution.

Epiphanius did not limit himself to the harrying of heretics. His learning, though far from exact, was encyclopædic. Thus his tract De mensuris et ponderibus deals with the weights and measures of the Bible, and incidentally gives a detailed account of the Greek versions of the Old Testament; while the De gemmis, if complete, would probably have proved to be a treasury of information on the gems of antiquity. He appears also to have attempted exegesis. But perhaps no Christian writer of the ancient Church is on the whole less satisfactory. Honest and erudite, Epiphanius is yet narrow-minded and untrustworthy; prejudice, temper, and an unhappy inability to recognise the responsibilities of authorship, deduct largely from the value of the services which he has rendered to learning.

¹ Πανάριον εἰς οἷς κυθὼν ιατρικῶν καὶ θεοδοθητικῶν. Oehler, I. i. p. 6.

4. The Cappadocians.

It is a pleasure to turn from the acrid polemics of Epiphanius to the culture and genius of the great Cappadocian fathers—Basil, Bishop of Cæsarea, his brother Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa, and his friend Gregory of Nazianzus, the 'Theologian,' Bishop of Constantinople. Central Asia Minor had already distinguished itself in Christian letters by the possession of such names as Firmilian and Gregory Thaumaturgus. In the fourth century two Cappadocian families produced a trio of saints and scholars, who may almost be said to have formed a local school of theological thought. It was not, however, from Cappadocia alone that they drew their inspiration. Basil began his education at Cæsarea, the Cappadocian capital, but presently proceeded to Constantinople, and from thence to Athens. At Athens he had for a fellow-student Gregory, a son of the bishop of the small Cappadocian town Nazianzus, who had previously studied at Cæsarea in Palestine, and at Alexandria under Didymus. Both Basil and Gregory of Nazianzus were diligent students of Origen, and we owe the *Philocalia*¹ to their admiration for the great Alexandrian; if Gregory of Nyssa did not share the early advantages of his brother and namesake, he was not behind them in his indebtedness to Origen, whose influence is apparent in his writings. Thus the Cappadocian school, if it may be so called, received its chief impulse from the school of Alexandria, though in the case of two of its great teachers Alexandrian tendencies were chastened and supplemented by contact with a wider world and by larger culture.

Of the three Cappadocians, the greatest bishop, if not the greatest orator or thinker, was Basil of Cæsarea. Like Epiphanius, Basil was a strong advocate of monasticism, and a firm adherent of the Nicene faith. But the resemblance went no further. If Basil’s blood was hot, and his nature somewhat imperious, he was also one of the most generous and sympathetic of men. His zeal for orthodoxy did not blind him to what was good in an opponent; and for the sake of peace and charity he was content to waive the use of orthodox terminology when it could be surrendered without a sacrifice of truth. These characteristics, combined with the attractiveness of a strong personality, give a singular charm to his writings. Of his dogmatic works the best known and most useful is the De Spiritu Sancto, which is now accessible in a handy edition. Basil appeals to Scripture and early Christian tradition in support of the Catholic doctrine of the Holy Ghost, and the book is at once well reasoned and edifying in tone and substance. A larger work, the Contra Eunomium, is a lengthy refutation of Anomœan Arianism, in the form of a discussion between Basil and the Anomœan leader Eunomius. But Basil’s interests were not purely or chiefly polemical. The bulk of the four thick volumes which contain his works in Migne’s Patrologia is made up of homilies, ascetic works, and correspondence. Among the homilies may be mentioned a set of Lenten lectures on the Hexaëmeron, an exposition of the Psalms, and addresses on a variety of subjects, doctrinal and practical. The ascetic writings comprise the Moralia (τὰ ἡθικά), rules for the ordering of life in the world, especially the life of the clergy; and two sets of Regulae (ὁποῖ), rules for the monastic state. Of Basil’s letters more than three hundred have survived. They are the outpourings of a rich nature, which under a reserved manner possessed deep feeling, great warmth of affection, and a fund of quiet humour, at times approaching to playfulness. If there are signs also of a deep-seated pensiveness, sometimes suggesting a pessimistic view of life, it must be remembered that we are reading the self-revelations of one who struggled with constant ill-health, and whose days were full of distractions and anxieties from without.

¹ See above, p. 54 f.

Basil’s friend, Gregory of Nazianzus, is the ‘Theologian’ of Greek orthodox Christology, sharing the title with St. John. Yet Gregory wrote no theological treatises: his works consist exclusively of orations, poems, and letters. He has won his right to the title ὁ θεολόγος chiefly by the singular merits of five orations known as the ‘Theological.’¹ They were delivered at Constantinople, probably in the year before the Second General Council (380), and they form at once a tremendous indictment of the Eunomians and Macedonians, then on their trial at the bar of the whole Church, and a magnificent exposition of the Catholic doctrine of the Holy Trinity as it was conceived by the orthodox teachers of the Greek East. There is little that is original in Gregory’s teaching, happy as his exposition of it is; his strength lies in a relatively pure Greek style, a vigorous and yet persuasive oratory, a facile and graceful expression of glowing thoughts. He is a consummate interpreter of Greek theology rather than an independent theologian. And yet he deserves the singular honour which he has received from the Orthodox Church. No one did so much to popularise the Catholic faith of the Holy Trinity; and there is perhaps no single book in Greek patristic literature to which the student who desires to gain an exact and comprehensive view of Greek theology can be more confidently referred. Of his other orations it may be sufficient to mention those on the festivals of the Epiphany and the Pentecost. His panegyrics are splendid specimens of another kind of oratory which has less attraction for Western and modern readers.

¹ These can now be read in Professor Mason’s helpful edition (Camb., 1899).
Gregory of Nazianzus

Gregory was poet as well as orator. We have from his pen thirty-eight dogmatic and forty moral poems, besides ninety-nine on his own life and others addressed to his friends. There is much in these compositions of grace and true culture, and if they do not rise to excellence of a high order, they have at least the merit of breaking ground in a new field, and setting an example of the use of poetry to express the Christian practice of self-introspection and meditation. Gregory is also an excellent letter-writer. His letters to Basil help us to follow the course of one of the most romantic of friendships. The letters to Cledonius on the Apollinarian controversy should be read for their theological interest.

1 Cf. Mason, p. xv. f.: "It is in his lucid expositions of the doctrine of the Trinity that Gregory chiefly excels. . . . In simple and reverent language, without presumption or definition, he illustrates the traditional belief, as championed by Christianity, in a way which became the law for future theologians."

Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa, differs widely from his namesake, both as a writer and as a man. Neither a great orator nor a poet, he is yet in some respects a greater theologian than Gregory the divine. While the Bishop of Constantinople popularised orthodox theology, the Bishop of Nyssa was an original and constructive thinker. A student and not a man of action, Gregory of Nyssa is certainly a less impressive personality than the other two Cappadocians, but he has left a surer mark upon dogmatic theology. He had drunk into the spirit of Origen more deeply than either his brother or his namesake, and what Origen had been to the theology of the third century, Gregory of Nyssa became, after his measure, to the theology of the fourth. Like Origen, he held himself free to speculate where the Church had not delivered judgement. His range of thought is equally wide; with Origen, he enters on such vast problems as the origin of the soul, the nature of evil, the freedom of the will, the relation of matter to spirit, the constitution of the risen body, the restitution of all things. But he is not always at one with Origen in his conclusions: he is a mystic and an idealist, but not a slavish adherent of the Alexandrian mysticism. In his treatment of the great controversies of his time, Gregory is naturally far in advance of Origen, and follows in the steps of Athanasius and Basil. He works out the distinction between ὅσια and ὕποστάσις, and investigates the relations between the ὕποστάσεις in the Life of God. If the doctrine of the Holy Trinity is expressed with greater clearness and exactness in the oratory of the Bishop of Constantinople, a more philosophical statement of the subject is to be found in the writings of the Bishop of Nyssa.

The dogmatic works of Gregory of Nyssa include twelve books against Eunomius, treatises against Apollinaris and Macedonius, a treatise against tritheism addressed to Ablabius, a dialogue on the Soul and the Resurrection, a tract against Fatalism. But if the student is compelled to limit himself to a single book, he will do well to choose the Catechetical Oration, a course of instruction in which Gregory carries the catechumen over the whole field of his theology. The style is rhetorical, overloaded with imagery, and often obscure; but the reader is rewarded by passages full of suggestive thought, and obtains in a small compass a general view of the system which commended itself to a singularly subtle yet devout intellect. Not a few of Gregory's views will strike him as untenable, or even as bordering on heresy; to mention but one example, he will be startled by the approach which Gregory makes to the mediæval doctrine of the manner of our Lord's Presence in the Sacrament of His Body and Blood. But occasional eccentricities will not lead him to overlook the depth and fervour of Gregory's faith in the Incarnation, or the insight which he displays in dealing with the far-reaching results of that central mystery.

Gregory's exegetical works are numerous, but less impressive than his works on doctrine. His homilies and orations lack the eloquence of his namesake of Nazianzus. Gregory of Nyssa's true sphere was that of speculative and systematic theology; and here, among Greek theologians, he is perhaps second only to his great master, Origen.

There can be no doubt that Harnack is right in attributing great importance to the teaching of the Cappadocians as a factor in the making of Greek theology. They "used new forms to make the faith of Athanasius intelligible to contemporary thought, and thus established" the Athanasian doctrine, "though with modifications, on a 1 Orat. Catech., c. 37.

Theology of the Cappadocians secure basis.”¹ But it is easy to exaggerate the modifications; they are of form rather than of substance.² The Cappadocians interpreted the older theology; they did not create a new one.³ The historian who believes in a Divine guidance of the Church will see in the work of these men an instrument which was raised up at a critical moment to give shape and precision to doctrines which had been inherent in Catholic Christianity from the beginning. The mission of Basil, Gregory of Nazianzus, and Gregory of Nyssa, was distinct from that of Athanasius; but the Church owes them under God an almost equal debt of gratitude. They reduced to a working system, and provided with a terminology which appealed to the Greek understanding, a belief which it is the glory of Athanasius to have defended and saved.

5. The School of Antioch.

From the Cappadocian divines of the fourth century we pass to the teachers of the neighbouring Church of Antioch.

Antioch had contributed to the literature of the early Church the Epistles of Ignatius and the Apology of Theophilus. In the third century

¹ History of Dogma, E. Tr., iii. 151.
² See Mr. Bethune Baker’s monograph in Texts and Studies, vii. 1.
³ See the writer’s Apostles’ Creed: its Relation to Primitive Christianity, p. 40 f.
the great Eastern see produced but little, but meanwhile the foundations were being laid there of a Christian school of learning which was eventually to rival that of Alexandria. The earlier Antiochene Christian scholars united a love of Greek classical literature with enthusiasm for the study of the Old and New Testaments. Malchion, a presbyter of the Church, and the successful antagonist of Paul of Samosata, was head of the Greek School at Antioch.¹ Dorotheus, another presbyter, enjoyed a reputation for Greek learning, and could read his Hebrew Bible with facility;² the martyr Lucian, also a presbyter of Antioch, produced an edition of the Greek Old Testament which was circulated throughout Syria and Asia Minor, and became the standard Bible of Constantinople, and it is not improbable that he was also concerned in the revision which formed the basis of the Byzantine text of the New Testament.³ The labours of these men were limited to oral teaching and textual criticism; they have left no literary remains; but they founded a critical school which produced some of the greatest exegetes of the ancient Church. The golden age of the School of Antioch began with Diodorus, Bishop of Tarsus († 394); its greatest names are those

¹ Eus. H.E. vii. 29.
² Ib., c. 32.
³ See Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, p. 81 ff. of John Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople († 407), Theodore, Bishop of Mopsuestia († 429), and Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrrhus († 457). These teachers, while preserving their independence of judgement, and even following different lines of thought and action, are distinguished by certain traditions characteristic of their school. All were diligent students of Holy Scripture; all brought to the study of Scripture a healthy freedom from conventional methods of interpretation, approaching it from the side of grammar and history. Abandoning Origen's endeavour to find mysteries in the plainest statements of the sacred writers, the Antiochene expositors were content to extract the precise meaning of the words; or, if they went further, they limited themselves to the legitimate use of Scripture in determining points of doctrine or of practice. In their Christology also the members of this school were more or less opposed to Alexandrian mysticism. They dreaded above everything the Apollinarian teaching which, in its desire to emphasise the divine dignity of the Lord, detracted from the perfection of His humanity, and they were disposed so to accentuate the distinctness of the natures in Christ as to threaten the unity of His person. This tendency shewed itself strongly in Diodore and Theodore, and became acute in the teaching of Theodore's pupil, Nestorius; but an anti-Apollinarian feeling appears even in Chrysostom, and still more distinctly in Theodoret, who was forced by circumstances into conflict with Cyril, the Alexandrian champion.

Each of the four greater Antiochenes possessed a strong personality, and was no mere recluse or scholar, but a man of action and a preacher as well as a voluminous writer. Diodore, after a course of study at Athens, joined a monastic house near Antioch, and while still a layman banded the young laymen of the Church together in defence of the Nicene faith. After his ordination he was the mainstay of the Catholic party during the dreary years when Valens was bolstering up Arianism in the East. Driven out of Antioch, Diodore gathered his flock on the further bank of the Orontes; shut out of the churches, he preached in the gymnasium; when all places of public resort became unsafe, he assembled the faithful in private houses. As Bishop of Tarsus he manifested the same unflagging zeal. He was present at the Council of Constantinople in 381, and his name appears in the decree of Theodosius as one of the Eastern bishops who were selected to represent orthodoxy in Asia Minor and Syria. In so active a life it might have seemed that little time was left for literary work. Yet Diodore left treatises against most of the heresies of his own age, and commentaries on nearly all the books of the Old and New Testaments. The few fragments which remain exhibit him as a typical Antiochian, clear-sighted, practical, averse to mysticism and allegory, a Catholic as against Arianism, yet well advanced on the road which led to the heresy of Nestorius.

While Diodore was still a presbyter of Antioch, Theodore and John were dividing their time between the lectures of the pagan sophist Libanius and the gaieties of the Syrian capital. Both these young men underwent a spiritual change which brought them under Diodore's influence, and they shared his monastic retreat. When Diodore went to Tarsus (378), Theodore remained for a time at Antioch, becoming a presbyter there about A.D. 383; but soon after his ordination he followed his old leader to Cilicia, and in 393 was made Bishop of the Cilician town Mopsuestia (Μόψευστια), where he laboured till his death in 428-9. Like Diodore, he was at once a diligent pastor and a voluminous writer, and his literary labours lay in the same fields, theological controversy and Biblical exegesis. His controversial writings have perished, with the exception of some important fragments; the longest and most valuable of these belonged to his treatise on the Incarnation, and happily contain clear statements of his remarkable Christology. His expositions have met with a better fate. The commentary on the Minor Prophets has come down to us entire; the commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul are represented by a Latin version which contains all but Romans, 1, 2 Corinthians, and Hebrews;¹ the commentary on St. John has been published in a Syriac version;² of the remaining expositions numerous Greek fragments are preserved in the catenae. We are thus in a position to form a fair judgement of Theodore's merits as an exegete.

It cannot be said that the "Interpreter" (as he was afterwards called by his Nestorian followers) possessed an attractive style. Often he is dreary and barren; he lacks imagination; he repeats his favourite views usque ad nauseam. There are graver faults which might be charged against him: want of insight into the deeper movements of Scriptural thought; a tendency to read his own theology into the words of his author; a lack of spiritual force, an almost entire absence of devotional fervour. His merits are a sound method, and the power of grasping the historical position of an author and drawing forth his real meaning. It is on account of these characteristics that Theodore, of all patristic writers, comes nearest to the modern spirit. Thus in his commentary on the Psalms he labours to assign each psalm to its own age and surroundings; he anticipates the hypothesis that many of the Psalms belong to the times of the Maccabees; he refuses to regard more than a very few of them as Messianic. If the writers of the New Testament cite the Psalms and Prophets as foretelling the Incarnation and the Passion, or the Resurrection and Ascension, Theodore understands them merely to say that the words may aptly be used to illustrate those events. Since the history of Israel was at many points typical of the days of the gospel, it was justifiable to regard the historical allusions of the Old Testament as anticipations of the future. The magnificent hopes, the hyperbolical language, of the Hebrew prophets were destined to find their realisation in Christ. How near all this comes to recent estimates of Old Testament prophecy it is unnecessary to point out.

¹ Edited by the present writer (Camb., 1880–82).
Theodore as Exegete and Theologian 101

Theodore’s Christology forms a part of a comprehensive scheme of doctrine which needs to be considered as a whole. He starts with a theory of man’s relation to the world. Man is the vinculum of the cosmos, uniting in his person the material and the spiritual. Sin was the disruption of the original bond; Christ came to restore it. To do this the Divine Logos united Himself with an individual man whose foreseen merits marked him as worthy of so unique an honour. The union began with the Conception, and it is indissoluble; it is one of will and not of essence, but the moral coherence is so complete that the two natures could in Theodore's view be described as one person. The Man who is thus in perfect union with God restores immortality and sinlessness to the race; man in Christ resumes his place as the bond of creation, and the broken unities are healed. This is only the barest outline of a system which must be studied in detail before judgement can be passed upon it.\(^1\) In fairness to Theodore it must be remembered that his doctrine of the person of Christ is a recoil from the heresies of Arius and Apollinarius, and that he himself repudiates the imputation of dividing the Person. The Church, however, took another view of his position; the champion of Nicene orthodoxy was condemned by later generations; and whatever may be thought of the methods adopted by his adversaries, there can be little doubt that they were right in regarding the teaching of Nestorius as a natural outgrowth of Theodore's view of the union of the two natures in our Lord.

Theodore's early friend, John Chrysostom, experienced a different fate. Persecuted during his life, he acquired after his death a place in the calendars both of East and West; and his writings were so carefully preserved that they now fill thirteen folios in the Benedictine edition.

The story of Chrysostom's life need not be repeated at length. It falls into five periods. Born about 345, he was not baptized before 369 or 370. After his baptism, some ten or eleven years were spent in ascetic retirement. From 381 to 398 he served the Church of Antioch as deacon and presbyter; in 398 he became Bishop of Constantinople; in 404 he was exiled from the city; in 407 he died. His earliest works belong to the second or ascetic period; his homilies and expositions to the presbyterate and episcopate; his letters to the exile.

Of Chrysostom's treatises the most interesting is the De Sacerdotio (Περὶ ἱερωσύνης), which is assigned by Socrates to his diaconate (c. 382), but more probably belongs to his ascetic days. The book is not free from grave faults; we are repelled by the act of duplicity with which the author taxes himself, and by the rhetoric in which he sometimes indulges; yet, as a whole, it is a beautiful and stimulating work, full of counsels and warnings which the clergy of every age may study with advantage.

Of Chrysostom's Homilies the most remarkable for oratorical power are those addressed to the people of Antioch, On the Statues; the whole series is perhaps one of the finest efforts of ecclesi-

---

1 Socrates, H.E., vi. p. 3.
astical oratory in any language. But it is to his expository sermons that the parish priest will turn with the best prospect of obtaining practical help. In his exegetical methods Chrysostom is a true son of the school of Antioch; he sets himself to the task of discovering the grammatical sense of a passage before he undertakes to expound it. He labours to place himself on the platform where the writer stood, to see with his eyes, to interpret his thoughts. But when this has been done, he knows how to bring the thought which has been elicited into touch with the life of his own time and the life of all times. He is in sympathy with human nature; he holds the key which unlocks the affections, and can set in motion the springs of action. He is at once a true exegete and a true orator, a combination found in such perfection perhaps nowhere else. His expositions, however, are of varying merit, and speaking generally, those which belong to his presbyterate at Antioch are superior to those of his episcopate. Among the former we may place his homilies on Genesis, the Psalms, the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. John, the Epistles to the Romans and Corinthians, and the Pastoral Epistles; those on St. Matthew, Romans, and Corinthians are perhaps the best, and they should be much in the hands of the preacher who wishes to understand the art of expository preaching.

1 See Chase, Chrysostom, a Study in the History of Biblical Interpretation (1887).

While Chrysostom lacks the originality of Theodore and his dogmatic interest, on the other hand he is free from Theodore's faults of style and manner and from his questionable Christology. To the student, Theodore is the more attractive and suggestive writer; to the parish priest, who may possibly be repelled by the dryness of Theodore, Chrysostom makes the stronger appeal.

Theodore, the third great writer of the school of Antioch, belonged to a younger generation, and both Theodore and Chrysostom had left Antioch before he grew to man's estate. Born at Antioch about 386, Theodore was sent in 423 to preside over the diocese of Cyrrhus, a wild district between the Euphrates and the spurs of Mount Amanus, and it was there that the best part of his life was spent. The conditions under which he worked were not favourable to literary production, yet his extant works are only less voluminous than Chrysostom's, and in their own way they are not less important. Expositor, apologist, controversialist, historian, letter-writer, Theodore contrived to do excellent work in each of these fields. In originality he is inferior to Theodore, and his eloquence is not to be compared with Chrysostom's; but in knowledge and judgement he perhaps excels both. Of his com-commentaries on St. Paul, indeed, Bishop Lightfoot has said that "he who has read Chrysostom and Theodore of Mopsuestia will find scarcely anything in Theodoret which he has not seen before." Yet Theodoret is at least an admirable compiler, and it may be added that he who has not the leisure to read Chrysostom and Theodore will find in Theodoret what is best in the other two, selected and arranged, as Dr. Lightfoot admits, with "appreciation, terseness of expression, and good sense."

Besides Theodoret's commentaries on St. Paul we have exegetical works from his pen on most of the historical and poetical books of the Old Testament and on the Prophets. Those upon the Octateuch are in the form of question and answer, and deal chiefly with the difficulties of the narrative. Of his dogmatic and apologetic works the most important are the Eranistes, a series of dialogues on the Eutychian controversy which disturbed his later years; and the Art of Treating Greek Distempers (Græarum affectionum curatio, Ἐλληνικῶν θεραπευτικὴ παθημάτων), a treatise on methods of dealing with the moribund but still militant paganism of the fifth century. Theodoret's historical works are two: the Ecclesiastical History, which covers the period from the rise of Arianism to the death of Theodore, and the Religious History (φιλόθεος ιστορία), an account of the almost incredible asceticism and the miracles of hermits and coenobites, gathered from personal reminiscences. Lastly, the Letters, of which there are 181, supply valuable materials not only for the biography of the writer, but for the general Church history of the critical period in which he lived.

1 Galatians, p. 230.
2 See above, p. 78.

A few lesser lights of the Antiochian school may be mentioned here: Polychronius, brother of Theodore, and Bishop of Apamea, an able commentator; Isidore of Pelusium, who, notwithstanding his connexion with Egypt, was a disciple of Chrysostom, and followed Antiochene methods; Cosmas Indicopleustes (cent. vi.), who inherited Theodore's Christology as well as his exegetical principles.\(^1\) Many of Theodore's later followers wrote in Syriac; for these see Assemani, Biblioth. Orient., III. i. p. 37 ff. The Instituta regularia divinae legis of Junilius Africanus is based on the teaching of Theodore (see Kihn, Theodor, p. 215 ff.).

6. Cyril of Alexandria.

From the last of the great Antiochenes we pass naturally to his antagonist, the last of the great Alexandrians. The name of Theodoret suggests that of Cyril of Alexandria, and neither of these two writers can be studied with advantage without some knowledge of the other.

\(^1\) Cf. Kihn, Theodor, p. 18 f.
Cyril has no obvious affinity with any of the earlier Alexandrians. It is not easy to connect him with Clement or Origen or Dionysius, or even with Athanasius and Didymus. Yet there can be no doubt that he gave expression to tendencies which dominated the Alexandrian Church in the fifth century, or that these were the direct result of the mysticism which had been from the first characteristic of its teachers. Bishop of Alexandria for thirty-two years (412–444), Cyril represents the later Alexandrian spirit, as it stands in sharp contrast with that of the Church and School of Antioch. His uncle and predecessor, Theophilus, had deposed John Chrysostom, and Cyril carried on the war against Antioch, which was represented by Nestorius at Constantinople, and after the Third Council by Theodoret. It must be confessed that the Alexandrian champion’s spirit does not recommend his cause, nor is his style of writing such as to atone for his want of good temper. Cyril is harsh, dogmatic, often obscure. Yet as a positive theologian he ranks higher than the Antiochenes; it is to his writings rather than to those of Chrysostom or Theodoret that we turn for precise definitions of the orthodox belief. The student of Church doctrine may not be attracted by Cyril, but he cannot pass him by, and there is a solidity and strength of conviction in Cyril’s works which he is compelled to admire. The “Twelve Anathematisms,” for example, have taken a place in symbolical literature from which they cannot be dislodged. The defence of the Anathematisms, the books against Nestorius, and the fragments of the books against Diodore and Theodore are also indispensible to the student of the Nestorian controversy. And Cyril's services to dogmatic theology are not limited to his refutation of Nestorianism. The Thesaurus, a series of dialogues on the Holy Trinity, the treatise On the Right Faith, addressed to the Emperor Theodosius II. and the ladies of the imperial family, and the treatise On the Incarnation, are theological works of permanent value.

Nor is Cyril less capable as an exegete of the mystical school. His dialogue On worshipping in spirit and in truth asserts the principle of a spiritual interpretation of the Mosaic law; his Glaphyra (γλαφυρά, "niceties") deals with the types of the Pentateuch. We possess commentaries from his pen on Isaiah, the Twelve Prophets, and the Gospel of St. John, and a Syriac version of his commentary on St. Luke; the catenae preserve fragments of his exposition of the Psalms, Proverbs, and Song of Solomon, the prophecies of Jeremiah and Daniel, the Gospel of St. Matthew, the Acts, the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, and Hebrews, and the Catholic Epistles. To the department of apologetics Cyril contributed an answer to the Emperor Julian’s attack upon the Church. Like most of the great theologians of this age, he has left us an important collection of letters, relating chiefly to the negotiations that followed the Council of Ephesus (431); these serve to verify or correct impressions derived from the letters of Theodoret.

There are a few Christian writers of the post-Nicene age who stand quite apart from the controversies of their time, belonging to no particular school of thought, and dealing neither with doctrine nor exegesis. Those who have leisure to pursue the by-paths of patristic literature will find much to interest and reward them in the hymns of the Christian Neoplatonist Synesius, Bishop of Cyrene (c. 409); in the ἀποκριτικὸς πρὸς Ἑλληνας, an answer to pagan cavillings at certain passages in the Gospels, attributed to Macarius, Bishop of Magnesia, a friend of Chrysostom; in the Euthalian apparatus to the Acts and the Epistles of St. Paul; in the fantastic tales of Egyptian monasticism collected by the industry of Palladius (Historia Lausiaca, πρὸς Λαύσιον ἱστορία). Syriac scholars have access to a few other interesting documents, which come from the distant churches of Edessa and Nisibis—the hymns and homilies of Ephraem the Syrian, the Doctrine of Addai, the treatise De fato, attributed to Bardaisan (Bardesanes), and the homilies of Aphrahat (Aphraates).¹

¹ On these see F. C. Burkitt, Early Christianity outside the Roman Empire (Cambridge, 1899).
7. Dionysius the Areopagite.

To the end of the fifth or the beginning of the sixth century must probably be ascribed the remarkable series of writings which has reached us under the pseudonym of Dionysius the Areopagite. They deal with the Heavenly Hierarchy, the Church Hierarchy, the Names of God, and Mystical Theology. Under these titles the Pseudo-Dionysius propounds a vast system of doctrine, Church order, and Christian life, which is impregnated with the later Neoplatonism, while at the same time it breathes the devout spirit of Christian mysticism. The Heavenly Hierarchy consists of the nine orders of Angels, through whose ministry man is prepared for communion with God; on earth their work is continued by the Church through the Priesthood and the Sacraments. God Himself is Absolute Being, the Superessential Essence (ὑπερούσιος οὐσία), beyond all words or thought or naming (ἄλωγλα καὶ ἀνοησία καὶ ἀνωνυμία), from Whom all things are and to Whom they return. Dionysius finds room in his system for the Incarnation and the Trinity, which are stated in fairly orthodox terms, but his Christology is practically monophysite, and his Trinity is rather a process of revelation than the eternal subsistence of Three Persons in the Divine Unity. Whether this remarkable blending of Christianity with Neopla-tonism—or rather, this attempt to Christianise the Neoplatonist philosophy, proceeded from Edessa or Alexandria is uncertain, and its author’s true name will probably always remain a secret. That the attempt was made in the fifth or sixth century is a remarkable fact, and still more remarkable is the very considerable success that attended it. In the West more especially the Hierarchies in a Latin dress from the ninth century onwards attained a circulation and exercised an influence beyond that of any other Greek Patristic book, partly no doubt because they were believed to be the work of the Areopagite, and the Areopagite was subsequently identified with the popular saint, St. Denys of Paris.¹

8. JOHN OF DAMASCUS: PHOTIUS.

Of Greek writers later than the fifth century, only two call for mention here, and we can do little more than point out their claims upon the student’s attention. Not much is known of John of Damascus beyond the fact that his period of literary work fell within the first half of the eighth century. A monk, a presbyter, but before all things a student, he produced a mass of literature, largely consisting of compilations from the Greek Fathers before him, and yet of real importance in so far as it gathered into a systematic form and gave completeness, unity, and direction to the scattered teaching of earlier theologians. His De fide orthodoxa is the greatest theological effort of Eastern scholasticism, and to this day in the orthodox East it is a standard work which holds a position somewhat analogous to that of the Summa in the West. His Sacra Parallela, a collection of passages of Scripture followed by illustrations, Biblical and Patristic, is a mine in which scholars are still glad to dig. His commentary or catena on the Epistles of St. Paul is largely but not exclusively made up of selections from Chrysostom. But if John of Damascus relied chiefly on his predecessors in matters dogmatic and exegetical, he was not incapable of original work, as some of his shorter treatises shew. His hymns and 'canons' also possess considerable merit; the canon for Easter day has not only found a place in the Greek office books, but is sung in thousands of English churches in the fine translation which begins, "The Day of Resurrection, Earth, tell it out abroad."¹

Even the ninth century yielded a Greek Christian writer of conspicuous learning and ability. The Bibliotheca (Μυπ输了βιβλιον, ἡ βιβλιοθήκη) of

¹ Hymns Ancient and Modern, H. 132. For the Greek, see Migne, P.G. xcvi. 840.
Photius, Patriarch of Constantinople, gives a critical estimate of works, pagan or Christian, which he had read, many of which have long disappeared. His συνταγμα κανώνων and νομοκάνων are scarcely less valuable to the student of Greek ecclesiastical law, whilst in his Quaestiones ad Amphilochum, his books against the Manichees, and the fragments of his commentaries, he appears in the light of a theologian of no mean order. A saint or a model of episcopal wisdom and piety he can hardly be called, and it is perhaps only by an undue straining of the term that this ambitious and turbulent, if erudite and vigorous Patriarch can be reckoned among the Fathers of the Catholic Church. But as a critic and an ecclesiastical writer Photius ranks deservedly high.
CHAPTER V

THE POST-NICENE FATHERS (LATIN)

The West produced no great schools of thought like those of Alexandria and Antioch, and no local group of great theologians such as the three Cappadocian Fathers. Its writers were in many cases moulded by the influence of earlier or contemporary Greek theology, and they translated or reproduced in a Latin dress the teaching of Origen or Eusebius, Basil or the Gregories. Yet among the Western Fathers of the fourth and fifth centuries there are commanding personalities which have no superior in the East, and not a few lesser authors of high merit.

1. WESTERN NICENES.

A succession of champions of the Nicene faith was called forth by the efforts of Arianism to capture the orthodox West. The fierce orthodoxy of LUCIFER, Bishop of Calaris (Cagliari), repels modern readers as it repelled the best of his contemporaries, and his writings (De non conveniendo cum haereticis, De regibus apostatis, De Athanasio, De non parcendo in Deum delinquentibus, Moriendum esse pro Dei Filio) are now chiefly valuable as presenting in their Biblical quotations a certain type of the Old Latin version of the Bible. But Hilary of Poictiers and Ambrose of Milan were cast in another mould, and no student of the Fathers can afford to neglect them.

HILARY, 'the Athanasius of the West,' was a contemporary of the great Bishop of Alexandria (c. 300-370), but the circumstances of their early lives were widely different. Brought up in the literary circles of Aquitania, Hilary became an adept both in the Greek and Latin tongues, and his mind was steeped in Neoplatonism before it was turned to the study of the Gospel. In a passage which reminds us of the opening of Justin's Dialogue with Trypho, Hilary describes the steps by which he was led from philosophy to Christ. Dissatisfied with paganism, he turned to Moses and the Prophets, and thence to the prologue of the Fourth Gospel and the Epistles of St. Paul. Thus his first impressions of Christianity were derived from the Scriptures, and his adherence to the Nicene faith was due to an independent study of the Bible, and not merely to the teaching of the Church. After his conversion, Hilary became a diligent student of later Christian writers; his exegesis is moulded upon Origen's, and his Christology follows the lines which had been marked out by Athanasius and were afterwards revived by the Cappadocians. But he is never the mere slave of a traditional system; both in his commentaries and in his dogmatic works he reserves the right of thinking and judging for himself.

1 Kenyon, Textual Criticism, pp. 181, 221.

Hilary's chief exegetical writings are an early commentary on St. Matthew—the first complete commentary on a Gospel produced by the Latin West—and a series of homilies on the Psalms. Both works follow Origen's allegorical method, and yet are by no means a mere reproduction of his expositions; the freshness of a vigorous mind and the vigilance of a true guide of souls are apparent, especially in the homiletical treatment of the Psalms.

But it is as a theologian that Hilary is seen to the greatest advantage. His twelve books On the Trinity\(^1\) not only are the first approach to a comprehensive treatment of the subject in the Latin tongue, but are full of interesting matter and valid argument. The plan is faulty, owing, as it seems, to the work having been published in detached portions; and a certain obscurity of thought and style deters readers who are not prepared to struggle with difficulties. The difficulties of Hilary's great work, however, are not due to an imperfect grasp of his subject, but to its vastness and depth; "even in his more dubious speculations he never cloaks a weak argument in ambiguous language."\(^1\) A fair Latin scholar could scarcely make a more profitable excursion into the field of patristic study than to work through the best passages of Hilary's De Trinitate, while those who feel themselves unequal to the task would do well to approach him through Mr. E. W. Watson's admirable translation in the Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers.

---

\(^1\) Hilary's own title was De fide. He uses trinitas but rarely, and the Third Person of the Holy Trinity comes into view only at intervals. See the Introduction to Hilary in Post-Nicene Fathers, p. xxx.i. f.

Hilary's other controversial work, the De Synodis, is an appeal to the Semiarians, who about 358 were beginning to feel after a return to Catholic unity. The work is partly historical, dealing with recent episcopal gatherings and their pronouncements; but at c. 64 Hilary passes on to the theological aspect of his subject, discussing with great care the terms ὁμοούσιον and ὁμοούσιον, and setting forth the Nicene faith with a freshness and independence of treatment worthy of a great divine. Two addresses to the Emperor Constantine, pleading for a just and tolerant treatment towards Catholics, and an address to the Bishops of Gaul in reference to the Emperor's attitude, which is severely but not perhaps unfairly condemned, complete the list of Hilary's polemical writings.

\(^1\) Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, ix. p. iii.
As a bishop and an ecclesiastical statesman, Ambrose of Milan (340–397) attained an eminence which was denied to Hilary; but as a theologian and a writer, although far more popular, and even regarded as one of the four Doctors of the Latin Church,\(^1\) he is distinctly Hilary’s inferior. He did not commence the study of theology till he became a bishop,\(^2\) nor was he specially fitted either by his training as a jurist or by natural qualifications for handling the delicate questions which were freely discussed in the second half of the fourth century. That he was able to handle them at all is surprising: that he did so with conspicuous success is little short of a marvel. How it was accomplished we know. From the day when Ambrose passed over from the ranks of the unbaptized into the episcopal order, he devoted himself to theological studies so far as his pastoral duties would allow. The result of his reading is to be seen in the literary fruits of the twenty-three years of his episcopate. Every class of theological literature is represented among his genuine writings. His exegetical works include commentaries on the Hexaëmeron and other portions of the historical books of the Old Testament, on certain of the Psalms, and the Gospel of St. Luke. To dogmatic theology he has contributed the treatises De fide ad Gratianum

\(^1\) See p. 6.

\(^2\) De officiis, i. 1: “Docere coepi quod ipse non didici . . . quoniam non vacavi ante discern.”
Augustum, De Spiritu Sancto ad Gratianum Augustum, De Incarnationis Dominicae sacramento, De mysteriis; to Christian ethics his De officiis ministrorum, De virginitate, De paenitentia. Orations, letters, and hymns complete the list; the hymns ascribed to Ambrose by his Benedictine editors, though few, include such well-known treasures as Aeterne rerum conditor, Veni redemptor gentium, Splendor paternae gloriae, Aeterna Christi munera, O lux beata Trinitas.

As an exegete, Ambrose, like Hilary, follows the dominant method of the Alexandrians; as a theologian he depends largely on Basil of Caesarea and other contemporary Greek writers. Yet his writings do not always echo the tone of Greek theology. A Western and a Roman by birth and education, Ambrose, while borrowing largely from Greek sources, unconsciously shifts the standpoint away from that which the Cappadocians occupied.¹ The history of redemption begins, in his judgement, with the Fall: he realises, as few Greek writers have done, the guilt and misery of sin, the freedom of Divine grace, the place of faith in the religious life of the individual. The doctrine of the Church and the priesthood also received an impulse from Ambrose, who possessed a deep sense of the greatness of the episcopal office and the responsibilities of the ministry in general. Again, his writings raise a high standard of Christian morality, partly inspired by the fashionable asceticism of his age, partly borrowed from the ethics of Stoicism impressed upon him in his classical upbringing. Thus in several important particulars, Ambrose, notwithstanding his late admission into the field of theological study and his indebtedness to Greek teachers, holds a position in the history of Western Church life and thought which gives independent value and significance to his writings.

¹ Cf. Harnack, History of Dogma, E. Tr., v. 48; Realeencyklopädie, i. p. 446.
Augustine of Hippo

2. Augustine of Hippo.

But Ambrose has a higher claim to consideration. It was his teaching, under God, which brought Augustine of Hippo into the fold of the Catholic Church. The old legend which makes Ambrose and Augustine by a common inspiration chant the Te Deum together immediately after the baptism of the latter, is a graceful recognition of the spiritual relation in which these two great Latin teachers stood to one another, and the immense debt of gratitude which the Church, especially the Western Church, owes for both.

Augustine was thirty-three years of age at the time of his conversion, but his thoughts had long turned upon subjects akin to Christian theology. Like Hilary, he passed through Neoplatonism on his way to Catholic Christianity. But his early experiences were more varied than those of Hilary; he had penetrated further into the mystery of evil, and knew more of the agonies of a spiritual conflict; his conversion involved a greater break with the past, and a more complete recasting of the inner life. Augustine brought to theology a powerful intellect, trained and sharpened by knowledge both of the world and of books, enriched by a manifold experience, directed by a call from heaven only less distinct than that which had arrested Saul of Tarsus at the gates of Damascus. It must be added that he was of Numidian birth and upbringing, and had inherited the passion and fire of the African nature, together with the religious traditions of the Church of Tertullian and Cyprian. The influence of Ambrose completes the circle of Augustine’s preparation for his life work. “Augustine looked up to Ambrose as Luther did to Stau- pitz,”¹ and owed to him not only his conversion, but his initiation into Alexandrian exegesis and Cappadocian theology. The receptive nature of the great convert absorbed these new elements of thought without being limited by them. In Augustine African theology and Greek theology met, and the result was not a mere syncretism, but a system which, in its arrangement and proportions as well as in many of its details, was a new creation.

¹ Harnack, History of Dogma, E. Tr., v. p. 80.
The best complete edition of Augustine’s works is the Benedictine (Paris, 1679–1700), reprinted in Migne’s Patrologia (xxxii.–xlvii.). The first ten volumes of the Benedictine text contains the genuine works arranged in the following order: i. Works written before Augustine’s ordination, and autobiographical writings; ii. Letters; iii., iv. Expositions; v. Sermons; vi. Writings on Faith and Morals; vii. The De Civitate Dei; viii., ix., x. Polemical writings (1) against various Heresies, (2) against Donatism, (3) against Pelagianism. Out of this mass of literature four works rise like colossal peaks from a mountain range. The immortal Confessions reveal the personal history of Augustine’s earlier life; the De Trinitate sets forth in a reasoned system his mature faith in the Catholic doctrine of God; the De Civitate argues the case of the Church against Paganism; the Fractatus in Evangelium S. Johannis forms the noblest of Latin commentaries on the noblest book of the New Testament. But if these works are his masterpieces, there are few writings of Augustine which can safely be neglected by a student who proposes to traverse the same ground. His work is unequal, but it is rarely or never unworthy of him. His sermons are not oratorical efforts like those of Gregory Nazianzen, or of Chrysostom; but they are full of insight into the mysteries of Scripture and of human life, and the preacher of to-day will often find in them materials which can be adapted, mutatis mutandis, to the wants of a modern congregation. Of Augustine's shorter treatises the De fide et symbolo, De doctrina Christiana, De catechizandis rudibus, and the Enchiridion, may be read with advantage by candidates for Holy Orders. Riper students will profit by a perusal of the Anti-Pelagian treatises collected by Dr. Bright, or of the seven books on Baptism, or one or more of the other Anti-Donatist works. But indeed it is difficult to name a genuine work of St. Augustine which is not worthy of patient study. Doubtless the great Bishop of Hippo had his limitations. He was ignorant of Hebrew; he entertained an almost superstitious reverence for the letter of the Septuagint; in his doctrine of Sin and Grace we are conscious of some narrowness and an unwillingness to recognise facts when they are at variance with his position; in not a few instances he led the way to erroneous views of Scripture, of Church policy, or of the Christian life, which have left their mark on the history of Latin Christianity. Yet since the days of St. Paul the Church has perhaps never known a greater teacher, or one whose influence has been upon the whole so fruitful in good.

Augustine's great contemporary, Jerome—Sophronius Eusebius Hieronymus—belongs to another category. He is one of the few Fathers to whom the title of Saint appears to have been given in recognition of services rendered to the Church rather than for eminent sanctity. He is the great Christian scholar of his age, rather than the profound theologian or the wise guide of souls. A Christian and a Catholic from his birth, Jerome passed through no ordeal of doubt or temptation in his early days; if he experienced a definite conversion, it was a change from a comparatively careless life to one of ascetic strictness. Asceticism entered largely into his conception of religious earnestness. His temper was not always sweet, or his veracity faultless, but his life was certainly one of unceasing labour, and of the fruitfulness of his scholarly leisure there can be no question.

Jerome's training was unique. From the Pannonian school in which he learnt the rudiments of knowledge he proceeded to Rome, where three years (363–6) were spent under the guidance of the grammarian Donatus. The years that followed found him successively in Gaul (366–70), at Aquileia (370–3), travelling in the East or living the life of a hermit in the desert (373–9), and afterwards visiting Antioch and Constantinople (379–82). In 383 he was at Rome again. His reputation as a scholar was even then assured, and Pope Damasus, who had already corresponded with him for some years, admitted him to intimacy and partnership in his literary schemes. After the death of his patron in 384 Jerome quitted Rome, and returned to the East, spending the rest of his life in retirement at Bethlehem, where he died in 420.

Jerome's first literary venture was a commentary on the Prophet Obadiah. It was written while he was still in Gaul, and under the influence of Hilary's writings; in later days he condemned this early attempt, in which the historical sense had been set aside, and the original ignored. It was in the Syrian desert that Jerome first applied himself to the study of Hebrew, and thus laid the foundations of his maturer studies in the Old Testament. At Constantinople he was brought into contact with Gregory of Nazianzus and Gregory of Nyssa, from whom he learnt to admire the genius of Origen, and to form the design of translating Origen's commentaries into Latin. But the true work of his life began in 383, when Damasus entrusted him with the task of revising the Old Latin version of the Gospels, a process which was afterwards extended, though with less thoroughness, to the rest of the New Testament. About the same time, and also at the suggestion of Damasus, Jerome began his work upon the Latin version of the Old Testament. His first experiment was a slight revision of the Old Latin Psalter, in which he used the help of the Septuagint. At Bethlehem this task was resumed, and a more careful revision made by comparing the Latin version with the Hebrew, and other Old Testament books were similarly treated. Lastly, in 391, Jerome set himself to the bolder venture of translating the whole of the Old Testament from the original. The work was not finished before 404, more than twenty years after his first experiment was made upon the Old Latin version of the Gospels.

The Latin Vulgate, as it has come down to us, consists of Jerome's translations from the Hebrew, with the following exceptions: the Psalms are from the "Gallican" Psalter, i.e. his second revision of the Old Latin (c. 388); the non-canonical books of Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, and 1, 2 Maccabees, are also based upon the Old Latin, whilst Tobit and Judith were translated by Jerome from Aramaic copies which had fallen into his hands. The Vulgate N. T., as we have seen, is a version of the Greek, made upon the basis of the Old Latin more or less extensively revised. For a fuller account the student may refer to Bishop Westcott's art. Vulgate in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, iii. (1863), and Dr. H. A. A. Kennedy's art. Latin Versions in Hastings' D.B., iii. (1900); the history of the version after Jerome's time is treated in Berger's great Histoire de la Vulgate pendant les premiers siècles du moyen age (Paris, 1893).
Jerome was also a diligent commentator, and his commentaries possess unusual importance from his acquaintance with Hebrew and Greek, the many-sidedness of his knowledge, and his freedom from the prevalent passion for allegory. He has left expositions on the Psalms, Ecclesiastes, the Prophets, St. Matthew, and four of St. Paul’s Epistles (Galatians, Ephesians, Philemon, Titus). Jerome also translated several of Origen’s collections of homilies—those on Jeremiah, Ezekiel, the Canticles, and St. Luke. His attitude towards Origen is one of admiration for the splendid gifts and scholarship of the man, mixed with abhorrence for some of his principles. The latter feeling predominated towards the end of Jerome’s life; the translations from Origen belong to the early years of his stay at Bethlehem, when he was still so far under Origen’s influence as to work large portions of the homilies of Origen into his own commentaries.

In addition to his commentaries Jerome has left us some other important contributions to Biblical knowledge, such as his Hebraicae quaes-

1 The Commentarioli and Tractatus in Psalmos have been recently edited by Dom Morin in Anecdota Maredsolana (iii. 1, 2).
2 A few homilies on St. Mark are printed by Dom Morin, op. cit. (iii. 2 c. p. 317 sqq.).
3 De vir. illustr., p. 135.
4 As the student may learn by comparing Jerome on Ephesians with the fragments of Origen in Cramer's catesca on the same Epistle; see Journal of Theological Studies for 1902.
tiones in Genesim, his Liber interpretationis Hebraicorum nominum, and his De situ et nominibus locorum Hebraicorum liber—the last-named a translation from Eusebius of Caesarea. The prefaces to his Biblical versions, especially the so-called prologus galeatus which is prefixed to the books of Samuel and Kings, are also interesting and valuable; and some of his letters (e.g. Ep. 53, ad Paulinum) will be found helpful by the student of Scripture.

But Jerome, though at his best in Biblical versions and studies, had other literary interests. He was a keen controversialist, with an unfortunate facility for personal invective, which he knew how to mingle with legitimate argument. His works against Jovinian, Vigilantius, John of Jerusalem, Rufinus, and Helvidius, illustrate his power in polemics. That he might have done excellent work as a biographer and historian appears from his lives of the hermits Paul, Malchus, and Hilarion, his translation of the Chronicon of Eusebius, and his book De viris illustribus, the earliest manual of Patristics. Lastly, his letters, however marred by occasional violence and ill-temper, are a fund of learning, personal and contemporary history, and vigorous latinity. The following is a list of some of the best:—Epp. 14, 22, 39, 45, 46, 52, 57, 60, 69, 70, 71, 77, 107, 108, 117, 118, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 129, 130, 132, 147.
TYRANNIUS RUFINUS, with whom Jerome was involved in controversy, had been in early life his devoted friend. At Aquileia, Rufinus was one of the group of ascetics to which Jerome belonged, and during his residence in Jerusalem he was in frequent communication with Jerome, who was then at Bethlehem. An unfortunate quarrel between the two men began while Rufinus was still in Palestine, and though patched up for a time, it broke out again on the return of Rufinus to Italy in 397, and continued until his death in 410. One of the consequences was that in ecclesiastical circles Rufinus lay long under the suspicion of heresy, notwithstanding his services to Christian literature.¹ These consisted chiefly in translations from the Greek, which introduced to the West and in some cases preserved for posterity some of the masterpieces of Origen, Pamphilus, Eusebius, Basil, Gregory of Nazianzus, and others.² It is to Rufinus we owe our knowledge of the greater part of Origen's De Principiis, and of his homilies on the Old Testament. These translations, moreover, threw open to the Latin Church some of the best treasures of Greek theological thought, and thus exerted a beneficent influence over Western writers and scholars for centuries. As an original author, Rufinus is less remarkable, but his work in this field is not without merit. He has given us a continuation of the Church history of Eusebius to A.D. 395; an apology in which he defends himself not unsuccessfully against the attacks of Jerome; and a commentary on the creed of Aquileia, interesting because it compares the Aquileian and Roman creeds of the fourth century, and an excellent manual of the Church teaching of the period.

¹ Cf. the Decretum Gelasii, sec. 20 (Preuschen, Analecta, p. 152).
² On the Historia Monachorum in Aegypto, see the remarks of Dom Butler, Texts and Studies, vi. 1, p. 10 ff.

4. DAMASUS: INNOCENT: LEO THE GREAT.

Hitherto no great writer has appeared among the bishops of the Roman Church. DAMASUS, indeed, deserves our gratitude for calling forth the genius of Jerome, but his own contributions to Christian literature were mainly hymns and epitaphs. INNOCENT I. has left a small collection of pontifical letters. The silence of the Popes is broken at last by LEO I., rightly called THE GREAT, who was consecrated in 440, and died in 461. Leo composed no great dogmatic treatises such as we owe to Hilary and Augustine; it is perhaps fortunate that no such work has ever proceeded from the chair which now claims infallibility. Yet Leo's writings, if unambitious and relatively scanty, have rendered great and lasting services to the Church. They are of two kinds, sermons and letters: of the former we possess ninety-five, of the latter a hundred and seventy-three. The sermons, preached for the most part on the fasts and festivals of the local Church (the Nativity, the Epiphany, Lent, Holy Week, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, the quattuor tempora), are short, popular, severe and dogmatic in tone, epigrammatic in style, everywhere seasoned by a profound faith in the great Christian verities—the Incarnation, Passion, Resurrection and Ascension, the unity of the two natures in the One Person of Christ. They are thoroughly Western in character, eminently suited to the audience, the words of a Roman to Romans. “We feel that the great Pope’s voice, as it rang through the pillared naves of the patriarchal basilicas, must have been fraught with solemn power for Roman auditors, who might hardly have appreciated the homely confidential simplicity and the versatile sympathetic self-adaptation with which St. Augustine had poured forth his stores of thought and knowledge and feeling and experience into the minds of the Church people of Hippo;”¹ and who, we may add, could still less have profited by the mysticism of Origen, the theoretical refinements of Gregory, or the rhetoric of Chrysostom. But the sermons of Leo, as Dr. Bright has shewn, are capable of being presented in a form attractive to the English reader, and used to give point to the preaching of the English pulpit. They are a model of the conciseness which English congregations desire, as well as of the doctrinal and moral earnestness which they greatly need.

¹ Bright, Select Sermons of St. Leo on the Incarnation (London, Masters, 1886, p. x.).

The letters of Leo are largely concerned with the oversight of the Western Churches, which the spirit of the age was placing more and more in the hands of the Bishop of Rome. But among them there is a large group, beginning with Ep. 20, bearing on the Eutychian controversy and of high importance to the student of dogmatic history. The most important of these dogmatic letters is Ep. 23,¹ the famous "Tome of Leo," in which the Bishop of Rome writes on June 13, A.D. 449, to his brother Flavian, of Constantinople, upon the merits of the question raised by Eutyches. The 'tome' received respectful attention from the bishops assembled at Constantinople in A.D. 450, and was read and approved at the OEcumenical Council of Chalcedon in the following year, not simply as the solemn pronouncement of the great Western Patriarch, but as a statement of the case which accurately represented the Catholic faith. It is true that its spirit is essentially Western, practical and not speculative, dogmatic rather than philosophical,² and that the problem is not solved by it, or even fully met. But notwithstanding these limitations, Leo's letter is a masterpiece which marks him as a theologian of the first rank. It is lucid, strong, convincing; as against Eutyches, it establishes beyond a doubt the coexistence of the two natures in the One Christ; and it is couched in an epigrammatic style which fastens itself upon the memory, and is worthy of a symbolical document.

¹ See also Epp. 59, 124, 139, 165 (the "second tome"); and cf. Bright, op. cit., p. xiii.

The Sacramentary attributed to Leo is probably not, in its present form, the work of this great Pope. But many of its collects, some of which have passed into our Book of Common Prayer, "bear a remarkable resemblance to his teaching, and may well have come from his pen; there is indeed good reason for the opinion that the Collect proper . . . owes its origin to him." ¹

5. Writers of South Gaul.

The South of Gaul in the fifth century produced a group of Latin writers whose affinities are on the whole Eastern rather than Western, and who represent to some extent a revolt against the dogmatism of Ambrose and Augustine. John Cassian (c. 360–435), the most important member of this school, spent his earlier years in the East. He was trained at Bethlehem before Jerome chose it as his retreat; he had travelled in Egypt, and made himself familiar with the coenobites and hermits of the Nitrian oasis and the Thebaid; at Constantinople he had heard Chrysostom. When at length he settled down in the old Greek town of Massilia (Marseilles), it was to found religious houses for men and women, and to commit to writing his experiences of Eastern asceticism. These survive in two great works, the De institutis coenobiorum, and the Collationes, the former describing the life of the Egyptian recluses, and the latter Cassian’s interviews with certain famous abbots. After the outbreak of the Nestorian controversy Cassian wrote, at the desire of Leo, who was then archdeacon of Rome, his one dogmatic work, the De incarnatione Domini contra Nesturium.

While Cassian was engaged in founding monasteries in the neighbourhood of Marseilles, Honoratus, afterwards Bishop of Arles, converted the island of Lerinum (Lerins, off Cannes) into the seat of a monastic community, from which issued a succession of eminent bishops and theologians, such as Eucherius of Lyons, Faustus of Riez, Hilary of Arles, and Vincentius. The literature produced by the school of Lerins is not large: to Faustus we owe a Professio fidei, a letter Ad Lucidum presbyterum, and two books De Gratia Dei, dealing with the Pelagian controversy, besides two interesting sermons on the Creed;¹ to Hilary of Arles a life of Honoratus, and (according to Waterland) the Quicumque;² to Vincentius the famous Commonitorium, which discusses the "notes" by which Catholic truth is to be distinguished from heresy, and to which is due the motto: Quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus.³ But the work achieved by the school of Lerins is not to be measured by the bulk of its extant writings. The school asserted the freedom of the human will, and the existence in human nature, even after the Fall, of the image of God, and thus helped to restore the balance of truth, which was in danger of being upset by the violence of Augustine's attack on Pelagianism. Augustinianism, however, was not without adherents in Gaul at this time, and the efforts of such writers as Prosper of Aquitaine (400–465), Avitus of Vienne (450–523), and Caesarius of Arles (470–542), averted the danger of a serious reaction against the Augustinian doctrine of Grace.

6. Poets and Historians.

Before we leave the Latin writers of the fourth and fifth centuries, some reference must be made to the Christian poets and historians of the West who belong to this period.

¹ Caspari, Anecdota, p. 317 ff.
² Waterland's theory, however, is not now supported even by those who maintain that the Quicumque emanated from Lerins. See Ommannyn, Dissertation, p. 375 ff.; Burn, Introduction, p. 148 f.; Kattenbusch, das Apost. Symbol, ii., p. 748.
³ Commonit. 2; on Vincentius, see Stanton, Place of Authority in Religion, p. 167 ff.

By the end of the fifth century the Latin Church could boast of an abundance of hymns and sacred poems. Two Spaniards, Juvenetus (fl. c. 330) and Prudentius (348–c. 410), led the way, the first with a Gospel History in hexameters, the second with two collections of lyrical poems (Cathemerina and Peristephanon) which were afterwards used in the services of the Spanish Church.\(^1\) Nearly contemporary with these was Ausonius of Aquitaine, a layman who rose to the rank of Consul in 379, and who composed poems of considerable merit (Ephemeris, Epigrammaton liber, Versus Paschales), but exhibiting few traces of his Christian faith;\(^2\) and his pupil Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, the friend of Augustine (353–431), whose Carmina\(^3\) comprise poetical compositions of all kinds, from prayers and paraphrases of Scripture to copies of verses addressed to friends, and encomiums on the saintly Felix, a presbyter of Nola who lived in the third century.

The fifth century produced Sedulius, the author of a Carmen Paschale in five books, and of two shorter hymns;\(^4\) Falconia Proba, whose Centones Vergiliani are an attempt to tell the

\(^{1}\) Cf. the Mozarabic offices, printed in Migne, P. L. 85, 86.

\(^{2}\) On this writer see Dill, Roman Society in the Last Century of the Empire, p. 167 ff.; and Glover, Life and Letters, p. 102 ff.

\(^{3}\) The poems are edited with the letters in the Vienna Corpus (vol. xxviii.).

\(^{4}\) Op. cit. (vol. x.).
story of the Old and New Testament in phrases borrowed from Vergil—a strange affectation which displays more ingenuity than poetic feeling; Sidonius Apollinaris (430-482), a man of letters, who was called late in life to the episcopate—a facile versifier scarcely deserving the name of poet; Claudius Marius Victor, whose Alethia is a paraphrase of the early narratives of Genesis; and Cyprian of Gaul, the author of the Heptateuchus,\(^1\) a similar work covering the first seven books of the Old Testament.

The Church historians of the West during these centuries were fewer and less important than in the Greek East. Most of the Latin historical writers of the period contented themselves with translating and continuing Greek histories (e.g. Rufinus, Cassiodorus), or compiled chronicles extending from the creation of the world to their own times, which are valuable only when they approach the end of their story (e.g. Sulpicius Severus, Paulus Orosius). A few, however, wisely limited themselves to contemporary events, and some of these write with the authority of eyewitnesses. Such are Salvian of Marseilles, who describes life in Gaul during the fifth century (De gubernatione Dei libri viii.); and Victor Vitensis, Liberatus Diaconus, Facundus of Hermiane, and Victor of Tununum, who speak for North Africa. The Gothic history of Cassiodorus survives only in a compendium, but the History of the Franks by Gregory of Tours has happily come down to us. Marius Mercator, a younger contemporary of Augustine, and probably of African origin, is an important authority for the history of the Nestorian and Pelagian controversies, chiefly because of the documents which he translated from the Greek and has thus preserved from destruction; and good service was done by Gennadius of Marseilles, who continued Jerome’s Patristic biographies (De viris illustribus). But no comprehensive history of Western Christianity was attempted during this period; and the deficiencies of the works which we possess must be supplied by referring to the lives and correspondence of the greater ecclesiastics, or from public documents such as papal decrees and synodical acts.

7. Gregory the Great: Bede.

Of later Latin Fathers we can mention only two, both eminent as men of letters, and both deserving of the grateful attention of English Churchmen.

Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome from 590 to 604, the father of Anglo-Saxon Christianity, is best known by his Regula Pastoralis, a book of which our English King Alfred thought so highly that he translated it for the use of the English clergy of his time. Most English priests can now read the original, but the Latin of the sixth and seventh century is not without its difficulties, and those who desire help may be glad to use the excellent edition of the Pastoral Rule by Mr. H. R. Bramley, in which Latin and English face each other at every opening,¹ or Dr. Barmby's more recent translation in the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers. If the solid worth and the knowledge of human nature which are everywhere apparent in this book should tempt the reader to go further, he will find much to interest him in the Moralia, an allegorising exposition of the Book of Job, and still more in the Letters, of which no fewer than 838 have been preserved, and which present a striking picture of the full life of this great Pope. His services to Church music and to liturgical reform must not be forgotten, but the so-called Gregorian Sacramentary in its present form is of a later date.²

Ecclesiastically a smaller man than Gregory, our one English Father, the Northumbrian Bæda, ranks higher as a scholar and man of letters. He is the prototype of the student-priest who has filled so large a place in the roll-call of the English clergy. Bede, like Gregory, is usually known only by a single work, his invaluable

¹ Published by Parker, Oxford. 6s.
Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum, which ought to stand in the bookshelf of every Englishman. Yet the History is but one of many works which came from the prolific pen of the Jarrow scholar. We have commentaries by him on Genesis, Samuel and Kings, Ezra and Nehemiah, Canticles, the Gospels of St. Mark and St. Luke, the Acts, Epistles, and Apocalypse; and though these are professedly compilations from older Fathers, they are not wanting in interesting touches which, from their reference to the life of the eighth century, we know to be due to the hand of Bede himself. Of his scientific works it is unnecessary to speak here; he regarded no branch of learning or knowledge as alien from the studies of the Christian priest. His scholar's life is summed up in words which his successors in the ministry of the English Church might well bear imprinted on their memories: Omnen meditandis Scripturis operam dedi, atque inter observantiam disciplinae regularis et quotidianam cantandi in ecclesia curam, semper aut discere aut docere aut scribere dulce habui.

1 The best edition of the entire History is that of Rev. C. Plummer (Clarendon Press); but the student would do well to read the third and fourth books with the help of the notes and glossary supplied by Professors Mayor and Lumby (Cambridge, 1878). Dr. Bright's Early English Church History should be always within reach.

CHAPTER VI

COURSES AND METHODS OF PATRISTIC STUDY

To many readers even the restricted field of study marked out in the preceding chapters will appear hopelessly wide. They will ask where they are to begin, and how far it is necessary to go; what writers or writings may be omitted without serious loss; which will be found most serviceable for the purposes of the parish priest. If an extended course of study is contemplated, the further question will arise what order the student should follow, and whether any plan can be suggested for increasing the pleasure and profit of his task.

Much will depend upon individual tastes and opportunities. But apart from this, there are points upon which the beginner may desire some practical advice.

There are two points of view from which the Fathers may be approached. The Patristic student may desire to follow the stream of ancient Christian life and thought, tracing the progress of events and the development of the Church's polity and doctrine in the words of the great leaders and writers by whom her history was made. Or he may go to his work with the aim of a specialist, who is interested in an author only so far as his writings illustrate a particular branch of knowledge. But the latter course cannot be taken with any security until some progress has been made in the former. In this, as in every other department of learning, general knowledge ought to precede the study of details. We begin, therefore, with some hints as to Patristic reading in general.

1. In cases where but little time can be given to the study of the Fathers, it is natural to select a few representative writers and writings, and in the first instance to limit the attention to these. The chronological order should be followed, modified by considerations connected with local, literary, or dogmatic affinities. The reader will already have noticed that the great Christian writers of the early centuries, with some notable exceptions, fall into groups which deserve to be studied collectively. Such groups are the Apostolic Fathers and the Greek Apologists in the second century; the Alexandrians and the North African writers in the third; the Cappadocians, the Antiochenes, the Western Nicenes in the fourth; the school of Augustine, and the school of Lerins in the fifth. A few great writers may seem to stand by themselves, such as Irenæus, Athanasius, Jerome, Leo, Pseudo-Dionysium, Gregory the Great; but even these can be worked into an orderly scheme. The student, then, will do well to work along the line of the historical groups to which reference has been made, selecting for his study one or more of the most characteristic writings in each.

If this general purpose is kept in view, a plan of Patristic reading may easily be constructed with the help of the information already given in chapters ii.–v. But further help may be needed to reduce the list of authors and writings by selecting those which are most important to the beginner. When there are several authors under one group, and several extant works under the name of the same author, guidance is clearly necessary; even if an author has left but one work, it may be desirable to point out its most important books, for the Patristic writings are often long and not of uniform merit or value. The following list may serve to supply these wants to some extent, but it is hoped that readers who use it will exercise discretion as to the details.

Suggested Course of Patristic Study.

Writers or books marked by an asterisk are of primary importance.

1. Clement of Rome: Epistle to the Corinthians.
   Ignatius: The Seven Epistles.
Suggested Course of Study

* Polycarp: Epistle to the Philippians.
  Barnabas.
  Hermas: The Shepherd.
  Pseudo-Clement: Homily (Clem. R., 2 Cor.).
  Epistles of the Church of Smyrna and the Church of Lyons and Vienne.

  * Justin Martyr: *The first Apology; Dialogue with Trypho.
  * Epistle to Diognetus.
  Athenagoras: *Legatio pro Christianis; De resurrectione.

  Epiphanius: *Ancoratus.

4. * Tertullian: *Apology; *De corona; *De baptismo; *Adv. Praxeam; *Adv. Marc., iv., v.; *De praes. haer.; *De resurrectione carnis.

  * Minucius Felix: *Octavius.

* Cyprian: *De oratione dom. ; *De catholicae ecclesiae unitate; *select Letters (epp. 2, 3, 7–10, 12–16, 18–27, 30–36, 41–53, 55, 57, 59–61, 63, 64, 66–68, 70–75, 80–81).

  Novatian: *De Trinitate.
  Lactantius: *De opificio Dei; *De ira Dei.

* Origen: *Philocalia; *De oratione; *Contr. Celsum, i.; in S. Ioann., t.ii.; *De princip., i.

   Socrates, Church History, i.–iv.

7. *Athanasius: * De Incarnatione; De decredis Syn. Nic.; De Synodis; Ad Afros; Orations against the Arians, i.–iii.
   *Cyril of Jerusalem: Procatechesis, *Catech., iii.–iv.; Catech. mystag., i.–v.

   *Gregory of Nazianzus: *The five Theological Orations; select Letters (epp. 1, 2, 4–8, 11, 16–19, 40–50, 58–60, 76–78, 115).*
   *Gregory of Nyssa: The Catechetical Oration.

9. Theodore of Mopsuestia: Fragments of the De Incarnatione; Creed; Commentary on Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians.
   *Chrysostom: De Sacerdotio; Commentary on St. Matthew; Commentary on Romans.
   *Cyril of Alexandria: *The twelve Anathematisms; in S. Ioann., c. vi.*
Suggested Course of Study

* Theodoret: * Answer to Cyril's Anathematisms; select Letters.
* Leo the Great: * Letter to Flavian (‘the Tome’); select Sermons (on the Incarnation).
* Chalcedonian Definition.
  John of Damascus: De fide orthodoxa i.
* Ambrose: * De Spiritu Sancto; De fide; De officiis.
* Augustine: * Enchiridion; * De doctrina Christiana; * De fide et symbolo; * The Confessions; De spiritu et litera; De Civitate Dei, iv., v., xi., xii., xix.; De Trinitate, i., ii.; the anti-Pelagian treatises.
* Tyconius: Regulae.
* Rufinus: De symbolo.
  John Cassian: De institutis, i.–iv.
  Benedict of Nursia: Rule.
* Gregory the Great: Pastoral Care.
* Bede: Church History, iii., iv.

When the student has worked through this list, or the more important writings which are marked with an asterisk, he will probably do well to select one particular group and concentrate his attention upon it, adding to it other authors or other writings of the same school or period, until he has mastered its literature. He will then pass to another group, and so on. Thus, he may increase his knowledge of § 1 by reading the other writings printed in Lightfoot-Harmer's Apostolical Fathers; to § 2 he may add the Apologies of Tatian and Theophilus, to § 4 the rest of Clement of Alexandria and a further selection from Origen's writings, and to § 5 the rest of Tertullian. It is unnecessary to add further details, because when this stage has been reached the larger guides to Patristic literature will supply all the help that may be needed. The process can be extended indefinitely, or at least far beyond the leisure of a busy life.

2. Perhaps, however, most of the readers of this little book will feel that their general acquaintance with the subject is sufficient when they have completed the shorter course which is suggested above. If their study has been at all thorough and intelligent, they will certainly have gained a working knowledge of some of the best books of the best of the early Christian authors—a knowledge which will be of service to them in a variety of ways. But to some at least, it may be hoped, this general view of Patristic literature will be preparatory to work of a more special kind. There are few departments of theological research in which the Fathers can fail to render valuable help to those who know how to make them yield up their treasures. The textual critic turns to them for evidence as to the various readings of the Biblical text; the historian of the canon for evidence as to the acceptance of particular books of Scripture during the early centuries; the exegete for the history of interpretation; the student of ecclesiastical history for contemporary documents and other illustrations of the life of the ancient Church; the student of dogmatics for the progress of Christian thought; the student of liturgiology for traces of liturgical forms older than the earliest extant liturgies. Nor is it only to students in the stricter sense that the Fathers can render service; they may be turned to practical account by the working parish priest. The preacher will find in their pages the great models of ancient pulpit oratory; the pastor may look to them for guidance in problems which are common to all ages of the Church.

1 See below, p. 188 ff.

Thus the Patristic writings may be approached with special reference to any one of the chief branches of theological study. Here it must suffice to speak of those which deal with the Bible, the history of the Church, the history of Christian doctrine and ethics, and Christian antiquities.

(a) To begin with the criticism of the Biblical text.
Very few of the Fathers possessed a good working knowledge of Hebrew, or were competent to deal with the Hebrew text of the Old Testament. Only Jerome, and to some extent Origen, offer any serious help here; and Origen is chiefly useful inasmuch as he has preserved the readings of the current Hebrew text as it was exhibited in Greek translations of the second century. But the earlier Greek Fathers, and those of the Latin Fathers who use a pre-Hieronymian Latin version, are important witnesses to the condition of the text of the Septuagint version. Their evidence is collected in the great Oxford edition of the LXX. (Holmes and Parsons, 1798–1827), and will be exhibited in the Cambridge edition which is now in preparation; but the continual growth of knowledge will always give scope for new inquiry in this as in every other field.

In the case of the New Testament the textual evidence which may be obtained from the Fathers is of more direct service, since it is based on the original or on versions made from the original. It has been collected with an approach to completeness by Tischendorf, and has been examined with great acumen, in reference to some of the more important variants, by Westcott and Hort.

1 See D.C.B., ii., art. Hebrew Learning, especially p. 872.
2 See F. Field, Origenis Hexaplorum Fragmenta.
3 On this subject more may be found in the writer's Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek; see especially p. 406 ff.
4 N. T. Graece (ed. octava critica maior).
The British Museum possesses a MS. collection of Patristic citations, made by the late Dean Burgon, which fills sixteen volumes, and this collection was used by the late Prebendary Miller in the first fasciculus of a Textual Commentary upon the Holy Gospels. But more is needed than the mere bringing together of the evidence. How much may be accomplished in this direction by patiently interrogating the facts may be seen from a study of Dr. Hort's Dissertation on John i. 18, or of Dean Burgon's book on the last twelve verses of St. Mark; and there is doubtless ample room for other investigators who are willing to limit themselves to a small area of observation. Useful work might also be done by examining the New Testament text of a particular Father, with the view of determining the character of the MSS. which were used by him. This has been done for Tertullian by Roensch,² for Origen by Griesbach,³ and for Clement of Alexandria (in part) by Mr. P. M. Barnard.⁴ In any such researches it is of the first importance to use the best available text of the Father who is under examination. Migne's Patrologies, though invaluable for ordinary use, are not to be trusted for such delicate work as this; and the student who undertakes it must

---

¹ The commentary on Matt. i.–xiv. was published in 1899 (Bell & Son).
² Das N. T. Tertullians (Leipzig, 1871).
³ Symbola critica (Halle, 1785).
⁴ Texts and Studies, v. 5.
resort to a critical edition such as the Vienna Corpus of the Latin Fathers, or the series of Ante-Nicene Greek Fathers lately begun under the auspices of the Berlin Academy.\(^1\) Great care must also be taken to distinguish between genuine variants and those which are apparent only, being due to loose citation or to other causes which have their origin in the Father himself and not in the text from which he quotes.

A luminous exposition of the Patristic evidence upon the history of the New Testament Canon will be found in Bishop Westcott’s well-known book (ed. 8, 1896), which may be supplemented by Zahn’s Forschungen and Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons.

(b) Patristic exegesis suffers in the case of the Old Testament from the prevalent ignorance of Hebrew to which reference has been made. The expositions of the Greek Fathers are based upon a version, and those of the Latin Fathers (with the partial exception of Jerome) upon the version of a version. Accordingly their interpretation not seldom rests on a false rendering of the original.\footnote{See Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, p. 462 ff.} The situation is not improved by the unrestricted use of the allegorical method which commended itself to the majority of the ancient commentators, both Eastern and Western. Yet these defects, while they must be kept in mind, ought not to deter the clerical student from reading Patristic commentaries on the Old Testament. They abound in useful matter which a discreet reader will know how to disentangle from errors due to a defective version or to an exaggerated desire to spiritualise the simplest matters of fact.

\(^1\) Even here care is needful; the best series of texts may not be uniformly good.

The earlier Greek expositors of Holy Scripture for the most part fall into line with one or other of the two great schools of exegesis, the Alexandrian and the Antiochene. Of the former the great representative is of course Origen, who is followed in the main by the other Alexandrians, Athanasius, Didymus, and Cyril, and by disciples such as Basil and Gregory of Nyssa. The school of Antioch can boast of Diodore of Tarsus, Theodore of Mopsuestia, and his brother Polychronius, Chrysostom, and Theodoret. In the West Hilary, Ambrose, Augustine, and to some extent even Jerome, follow the lead of Origen; but the Westerns, though hampered in some cases by an imperfect acquaintance with Greek, manifest a certain independence, and their practical bent gives solid worth to their expositions, even when the exegesis is at fault. Augustine, in particular, is one of the most helpful of ancient exegetes, through his spiritual insight and experience of life; while Jerome has all the knowledge of the age at his command. The commentaries of Ambrosiaster and the brief notes of Pelagius on the Epistles of St. Paul are valuable in other ways.

The later commentaries (after the fifth century), both Greek and Latin, are more or less of the nature of compilations from earlier writers. In the catenae¹ no effort is made to disguise this fact; the exposition consists of extracts which are but slightly compressed or altered in form, and the margins usually give with more or less precision the names of the authors who are quoted. In many catenae the bulk of the matter is from the homilies of Chrysostom; but a few preserve long fragments of works of Origen, Theodore, and other important writers, not elsewhere accessible. The best of these compilations are useful summaries of Patristic exegesis, which may be read with advantage by the student who wishes to collect the judgements passed by the Greek Fathers upon the interpretation of any particular passage; for this purpose Oecumenius, Theophylact, and Euthymius Zigabenus will be found especially useful. Similar help may be obtained from some of the later Latin commentators who epitomise their predecessors; the best of these are Primasius, Baeda, Rabanus Maurus, and Walafrid Strabo, or whoever was the author of the Glossa ordinaria.

¹ See Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, p. 361 ff.

The following list gives the names of the chief Greek and Latin Fathers who have written extant homilies or commentaries.

OLD TESTAMENT.

1. Pentateuch and Historical Books.

   Origen: homilies, commentaries, or fragments.
   Ephraem: fragments.
   Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, Ambrose, on the Hexaëmeron.
   Theodore: fragments.
   Polychronius: fragments on Genesis.
   Theodoret: questions on the Pentateuch and Histories.
   Cyril of Alexandria: on the Pentateuch (γαλαφυρά).
   Augustine: on Genesis, on the Heptateuch.
   Eucherius: on Genesis.
   Procopius: on Genesis to 2 Chronicles.
   Bede: on the Pentateuch.

---

1 For fuller information on Patristic commentaries, see J. G. Rosenmüller, Historia Interpretationis; R. Simon, Histoire critique; Le Long-Masch, Bibliotheca sacra; and for commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul, the excursus in Lightfoot’s Galatians. Much useful information is also to be found in Dean Farrar’s Bampton Lectures on the History of Interpretation.

Hippolytus: fragments.
Origen: fragments.

Athanasius, Eusebius, Apollinarius, Basil, Didymus, Diodore, Theodore, Theodoret, Hilary, Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome, Prosper, on the Psalms.

Polychronius, Gregory the Great, on Job.
Polychronius, Procopius, on Proverbs.
Gregory of Nyssa, Jerome, on Ecclesiastes.
Gregory of Nyssa, Theodoret, Philo of Carpasa, Ambrose, Gregory the Great, Bernard of Clairvaux, on the Canticles.¹

3. Prophets.

Origen (a fragment), Theodore, Theodoret, Cyril of Alexandria, Jerome, Rufinus, on the Minor Prophets.

Origen, Eusebius, Polychronius, Theodoret, Jerome, Procopius, on the Major Prophets.

NEW TESTAMENT.

1. Gospels.

Ps. Theophilus, Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Augustine (De consensu, Quaestiones evangelicae).

Origen, Chrysostom, Ps. Chrysostom (opus imperfectum), Hilary, Jerome, Chromatius, on St. Matthew.

Victor of Antioch, Bede, on St. Mark.

¹ St. Bernard falls far outside our limits, but as a devotional commentator deserves to be ranked with the best of the Fathers.
Patristic Commentaries

Origen, Chrysostom, Augustine, Theodore (fragments), Cyril of Alexandria, Nonnus (metrical), Rupert of Deutz,¹ on St. John.

Chrysostom, Cassiodorus, on the Acts.
Clement of Alexandria (?), Didymus, Jerome, Euthymius, on the Catholic Epistles.

4. Apocalypse.
Andreas, Arethas, Victorinus, Ps. Augustine, Primasius, Apringius, Cassiodorus.

Besides homilies and commentaries upon Holy Scripture there are certain Patristic writings which serve the purpose of Biblical Introduction, e.g. the ἐξογγώγη of Adrian, the Instituta regularia divinae legis of Junilius, the Liber regularum of Tyconius, the De Institutione divinarum literarum of Cassiodorus, and the sixth book of the Etymologiae of Isidore of Seville. Much interesting matter under the same category may be found in Origen's De principiis, iv., and his letter to Julius Africanus; in Jerome's prefaces to the books of the Bible, and letter to Pammachius; and in the third and fourth books of Augustine's De Doctrina Christiana.

¹ On this late writer see Westcott, St. John, p. xciv.

But lists such as these are far from representing the full importance of the Fathers to the Biblical student. The vast literature which goes by their name is almost exclusively religious, and the Old and New Testaments are, so to speak, the textbooks upon which it is based. Few Patristic books can be opened without meeting references to the Bible which contribute something to the history of interpretation or to the criticism of the text; and in the majority of these writings such references are to be found at almost every opening. Hence the student of exegesis must not content himself with reading the formal expositions of the Fathers; as a matter of fact, not a few Fathers who wrote no expositions or whose expository works have perished, are scarcely less necessary to him than Origen or Chrysostom or Augustine. He should at least consult the Biblical indices which are generally to be found at the end of good editions of the Fathers, before he passes any one of the Fathers by as having nothing germane to his subject.

(c) The Fathers are not less valuable to the student of History, especially of the History of the Church. They are important witnesses to contemporary events and movements, and not least so when their witness is given, as it usually is, incidentally, without the conscious purpose of transmitting the facts to posterity. In particular, we are able to recover from their pages much of the history of the local Churches for which other sources are wanting or insufficient. Thus Clement of Rome, Hermas, Irenæus, and Hippolytus open before us glimpses into the life of the early Christian society at Rome; from Tertullian and Cyprian we can reconstruct to a great extent the history of the Church of Carthage during the third century. Much may be learnt about the Alexandrian Church during the same period from Clement and Dionysius of Alexandria, and about the Asiatic Churches from writers of Asiatic birth or surroundings. Even in the wider field of general Church history it is to the contemporary writer rather than to the professed historian that the historical student will often turn; thus for the fourth and fifth centuries the historical tracts of Athanasius and Hilary, and the letters of Basil, the Gregories, Chrysostom, and Theodoret are sources of information which, if they need to be checked and verified, are yet invaluable to him who would rightly understand the unlovely history of these times.

No formal history has come down to us from the Ante-Nicene Age, and so far as we know, the only attempt to construct one was the Chronogra gphies of Julius Africanus, the contemporary of Origen.¹ Eusebius, the 'Father of Church History,' is able to tell us the story of the last persecution through which he himself had lived,² but his chief merit lies in the antiquarian tastes which have led him to preserve the names of Christian workers and writers otherwise unknown, and to transfer to his pages extracts, often long and precious, of a lost literature. The student of Ante-Nicene times turns to Eusebius again and again for facts and documents, and learns to forgive the pompous dulness of the setting for the sake of the gems which it enshrines.

For the interval between the rise of Arianism and the condemnation of Nestorius there are four authorities who were contemporary with the second half of the period, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Rufinus, the translator and continuator of Eusebius.³ A later writer, Gelasius of Cyzicus, tells the story of the Council of Nicaea; for the struggles of the years 340–360, we have the tracts of Athanasius and Hilary, already mentioned, and the fragments of the

¹ See p. 56.
² Lactantius De morte persecutorum may be compared with him here.
³ On their relative trustworthiness see Gwatkin, Arianism, note A.
Arian Philostorgius. Jerome's book, De viris illustribus, supplies brief biographies of the Fathers up to his own time.\(^1\) Two Latin chroniclers, Sulpicius Severus and Orosius, describe the close of the period with some independent knowledge, the former throwing valuable light on the history of Priscillianism in Spain.\(^2\)

For the age which followed the Council of Ephesus (431), our principal Greek authority is Evagrius; from the West we have nothing in the way of general Church history except the compilation of Cassiodorus. But the West supplies a few special histories of real value: the Breviarium of Liberatus, which traces concisely the course of the Nestorian and Eutychian disputes down to the middle of the sixth century; Victor of Tununum's African history, Gregory of Tours' history of the Franks, the lament of Gildas over the British Church, and Bede's inspiring story of the foundation of the Church of England, and her early struggles and triumphs.

A few biographies or histories dealing with special points may be added to this list. The lives of Cyprian (Pontius), Augustine (Possidius), Martin (Sulpicius Severus), Constantine (Eusebius), Antony (Athanasius), present us with contemporary, or nearly contemporary portraits of great churchmen; while the Historia Lausiaca of Palladius and the Historia Religiosa of Theodoret may be taken, with some deductions, as genuine pictures of monasticism in Egypt and Syria in its palmy days. If space permitted, it would not be difficult to name other interesting books of the same class.

---

\(^1\) His work was continued by Gennadius of Marseilles, Isidore of Seville, and Ildefonsus of Toledo, successively.

\(^2\) Recently edited in Byzantine Texts (London, Methuen, 1898).

(d) The age of the Fathers is coextensive with the centuries during which the Church formulated the chief articles in her system of dogmatic theology. The first six centuries witnessed the creation of dogma in all the great regions of Christian thought—the doctrine of God, the doctrine of Man, the doctrine of the Person of Christ, the doctrine of Grace and of the Church. For the precise terms in which these doctrines were finally expressed the student must look to the creeds and synodical acts of Catholic Christendom. But to arrive at an intelligent appreciation of symbolical documents it is necessary to trace the growth of opinion, and the working of the various forces which went to form it; and this can be done only by a personal study of the Patristic writings. The nicely calculated phrases of a symbol or conciliar definition convey no adequate idea of the vital issues connected with the truth which they guard. Nor will it suffice to study the writers who lived at the time when the particular doctrine was under discussion. Theological dogmas are expressions of the different aspects of a truth which is essentially one, and it is impossible to grasp any of these thoroughly without some knowledge of the complex growths and countergrowths of Christian opinion upon it.

It may assist the student to gain a connected view of the progress of doctrine in the Patristic period, if we offer a brief sketch of the subject as it will come to light in the course of his reading, supposing that he follows the general scheme proposed at the beginning of this chapter.

The first group of writings is distinguished by an absence of definite statements of doctrine, combined with a keen sense of the moral dignity of the Christian calling. The Apostolic Fathers are monotheists who are conscious of no disloyalty to their convictions when they render whole-hearted homage to Christ. In Ignatius, indeed, there are the beginnings of a Christology, called forth by the necessities of the controversy which the Church was then waging with Docetic error; but the terms in which it is expressed shew that the difficulties of the problem have not as yet been fully realised.

In the second group new elements are seen to be at work. The Apologists, men of wider culture than Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp, and who had reached Christianity through Greek philosophy, did not scruple to express their new faith in terms borrowed from the schools. In particular, the philosophical conception of the Logos was taken over into the service of the Church, and used to present the Incarnation to educated pagans in a form which they could assimilate. Simultaneously with this process, attention was called by the controversy with the Jew to the Messianic hope of the Old Testament; while the emergence of the New Testament canon turned the thoughts of Christians to the teaching of St. John and St. Paul. How necessary a definite belief and a fixed standard of Christian teaching had become is obvious as soon as we begin the study of our third group of writers. In Irenæus we see the Church endeavouring to protect herself against the false gnosis which carried to excess the Hellenizing tendency that in writers such as Justin and Athenagoras had been kept within legitimate bounds. Gnosticism was met in the first instance by an appeal (1) to the traditional rule of faith, committed to the Church by apostolic founders, and guarded since the death of the Apostles by an unbroken succession of bishops; and (2) to the New Testament, now definitely accepted as the complement of the older revelation. But upon the basis of this double appeal to authority Irenæus began to build up a structure of Christian dogma, in opposition to Gnostic speculation; both the doctrine of the Person of Christ and the doctrine of Redemption received from his treatment a definite advance. The same tendencies are visible in the North African writers of the fourth group, but under different conditions. Tertullian, like Irenæus, cites the rule of faith and the New Testament against the Valentinians and the Marcionites. But he does this in the spirit of the Roman jurist, and under his hand a Latin terminology of doctrine takes shape which thenceforth dominates Western conceptions of the faith. Moreover, Tertullian finds himself confronted with a danger more pressing than the Gnosticism of the second century—the false insistence on the μοναρχία which came as a reaction against the growing Christology of the Catholic Church. From it he took occasion to shew how the Godhead of the Son could be asserted without sacrificing the unity of the Divine ἀρχή, and thus he prepared the way for a full discussion of the relations between the Persons of the Holy Trinity.

Meanwhile, at Alexandria, a new departure was made by Clement and Origen (fifth group). Here, in accordance with the genius of the place, Christian thought worked less on ecclesiastical or traditional lines than in the interests of science. It was the aim of the Catechetical School of Alexandria to produce Gnostics of the best type, men who could carry the Greek thirst for knowledge into the region of theology without abandoning the essentials of the Catholic faith.
The doctrine of the Logos, conceived in the Greek rather than the Hebrew spirit, was the centre of this Christian gnosis. But it was the centre only; the Alexandrians, more especially Origen, explored the whole circumference of religious knowledge, and with far-reaching results. Origen's speculations were usually offered with a modest reserve which ought to have shielded him from the charge of heresy. The love of truth which he displays is a heritage for all time, and some of his results have received the general approval of the Church, e.g. his doctrine of the Eternal Generation of the Son. On the other hand expressions innocently used by Origen and his successors were afterwards quoted as lending support to Arianism and other errors.

The next two groups—the sixth and the seventh—bring us into full view of the Arian controversy. Arius had neither the spiritual insight nor the breadth of vision necessary to the founder of a theological system. If his views spread rapidly and died hard, it was partly because they rested on a superficial logic which appealed to the popular mind, partly because they appeared to reconcile opposite opinions, conceding the pre-existence of the Lord, while they refused Him the supreme glory of essential Deity. Athanasius, the great antagonist of Arius, is by force of circumstances a polemical rather than a constructive theologian; yet his early works, the Contra Gentes and the De Incarnatione, shew what he might have done in this field. But his deepest interests were ethical and religious rather than speculative or controversial; the secret of his lifelong struggle against Arianism lay in his conviction that the Christ of Arius could not save or 'deify,' or even win the moral allegiance of mankind. The same motive led him to offer immediate opposition when an attack was made upon the Deity of the Holy Spirit. His indignation was roused by the irreverence of those who made it, and their indifference to the teaching of Holy Scripture and to their own salvation. His Christian sense revolted against a Trinity in which creatures were co-ordinated with the Creator.

The deeply religious spirit of Athanasius and his constant appeal to Scripture are characteristic also of the eighth group. But Basil and the two Gregories had been trained in the schools of Athens, and nurtured on the writings of Origen. If Athanasius takes up the rôle of Irenæus, the Cappadocians follow in the steps of the earlier Alexandrians. In their hands the doctrine of the Holy Trinity receives its final Greek expression. Their formula, μία ούσια ἐν τρισὶ ὑποστάσεωι, their interpretation of the ὑποστάσεις as τρόποι ὑπάρξεως, their distinct recognition of one ἀρχή or παράβασις in the Godhead, gave coherence and scientific precision to the truth which the Church had believed from the first but had not hitherto formulated in full. In the writings of Gregory of Nyssa there is a recrudescence of some of Origen's more doubtful speculations, and an anticipation of the later doctrine of the Sacraments which deserves careful study.

The Antiochians, with whom the ninth group begins, occupy a widely different platform. Mystery vanishes in the clear atmosphere of logic and fact in which Theodore of Mopsuestia, the typical theologian of this school, seems to have lived and moved. With the rest of his school, he is absolutely loyal to the Nicene standard, but his chief concern is to maintain against Arius and Apollinarius the completeness and personality of the Lord's Manhood. The centre of dogmatic interest is shifted; it is no longer the Deity of the Incarnate Son which is under consideration, but His humanity; not the relation of the Divine Persons in the Godhead, but the relation of the two Natures in Christ. According to Theodore, the union of the Natures, though indissoluble, is moral only and not essential. In Cyril of Alexandria and Theodoret the issues thus raised are worked out from opposite points of view, whilst the "tome" of Leo and the Chalcedonian Definition formulate the final judgement of the Catholic Church. John of Damascus is removed by nearly three centuries from the Nestorian and Eutychian controversies, but his great corpus of Greek theology forms an admirable, if somewhat dry and scholastic, summary of the movements of Greek Patristic thought.

Our last two groups are Western. Hilary and Ambrose wrote more or less under Greek influences, but in Augustine the West produced at length a great theologian who was free to follow Western traditions, and to advance on the lines of Tertullian and Cyprian. Christology did not possess so absorbing an interest for Augustine as for the Greek theologians, but to the doctrine of the Trinity he has contributed new elements of thought, especially in reference to the relation of the Third Person to the First and the Second. He is the first of the Fathers who clearly asserts the procession of the Spirit ab utroque, and his statement of that doctrine is expressed in language so carefully guarded that it ought to have saved the Church from the misunderstandings that subsequently arose. It is, however, in soteriology that Augustine's genius finds itself most completely at home. The doctrines of Sin and Grace, of Predestination and Redemption, of the Church and the Sacraments, are handled by him with a fulness and grasp which moulded all later discussions of these subjects in the West. After Augustine's death the chief figures in Western dogmatic literature are two great Bishops of Rome—Leo, the Latin interpreter of the Catholic doctrine of the Incarnation, and Gregory, the father of mediæval Christianity. While the spirit of Augustine dominates Gregory, the later writer is already under the shadow of the narrow dogmatism which marks the approach of the Middle Age. Allegorical interpretation runs riot in Gregory's exegesis, and in his teaching the cruder guesses of the fifth century reappear as articles of faith. As a monument of saintly experience the Regula Pastoralis is not excelled by any similar Patristic work, but the last of the Latin Fathers cannot claim a place among the great thinkers who have guided the course of Catholic theology.

This sketch may serve to mark the successive stages in the history of Christian doctrine through which the student will be carried if he follows the suggested course of Patristic reading. Any good manual of the subject will supply full particulars and illustrations, but such helps will be used to the best advantage by one who has surveyed the ground for himself and learnt by personal study to assign to each writer his proper place in the evolution of Christian thought.

When such a general survey has been made, the reader will be prepared to investigate the history of any particular doctrine or phase of belief which he may desire to study. In entering on this minuter examination, it may assist him to have before him a list of the most important Patristic writings which deal with the chief departments of theological study. The following list does not aim at being exhaustive, even in the field which it covers; and it is for the most part limited to complete books upon each subject, taking only occasional notice of passages in which a doctrine is treated incidentally. But such as it is, it may serve to start the inquirer, who as he proceeds will readily discover more for himself.

Doctrine of God.

The Holy Trinity.—Tertullian, Adv. Praxeum; Novatian, De Trinitate; Origen, De principiis i.; Hilary, De Trinitate; Gregory of Nazianzus, the Theological Orations; Gregory of Nyssa, Quod non sint tres Dii; Didymus, De Trinitate; Cyril of Alexandria, De sancta Trinitate dialogus; Augustine, De Trinitate; John of Damascus, De fide orthodoxa, i.

The Incarnation of the Word.—Justin, Apol. i. (passim); Irenæus, iii. iv. (passim); Tertullian, De carne Christi; Origen, De principiis ii. 6, in Joannem, t. i. 28; Athanasius, De Incarnatione; Gregory of Nyssa, Adv. Apollinarium; Theodore of Mopsuestia on Eph. i., Phil. ii., Col. i., De Incarnatione vii. (fragments); Ambrose, De Incarnationis divinae sacramento; Cyril of Alexandria, De Incarnatione Unigeniti, Epp. 1–5, 17, 38, 39; Pro xii. capitibus, De recta fide, De Incarnatione Verbi, Adv. Nestorium, Quod Maria sit Deiparum; Theodoret, Eranistes; John Cassian, De Incarnatione Christi; Leo the Great, Ep. ad Flavianum, and Sermons on the Incarnation; the Definition of the Council of Chalcedon; John of Damascus, De fide orthodoxa, iii.

Doctrine of Man.

The Soul.—Tertullian, De anima; Origen, De principiis, i. prol., ii. 8; Gregory of Nyssa, De anima et resurrectione; Augustine, De immortalitate animae, De quantitate animae, De anima et eius origine.

The Resurrection of the Body.—Ps. Clement, 2 Cor. 9; Ps. Justin, Athenagoras, De resurrectione; Tertullian, De resurrectione carnis; Origen, a fragment; Jerome, ep. 38 (Ad Pammachium); Rufinus, De symbolo; Augustine, De fide et symbolo, De civitate, xxii. 20, Retract., i. 17.

The Fall, Sin and Grace.—Epistle to Diognetus; Athanasius, Contra gentes, 1–10; Augustine, Anti-Pelagian writings; Prosper, De gratia et libero arbitrio; Fulgentius, De remissione peccatorum: Praedestinatus.

Prayer.—Tertullian, De oratione; Cyprian, De oratione dominica; Origen, Περὶ εὐχῆς.

The Church and the Ministry.—Clement of Books on particular Doctrines

Rome, Cor. (passim); Hermas, Pastor (passim); Irenæus, iii. (init.); Tertullian, De praescriptionibus; Cyprian, De unitate; Chrysostom, De sacerdotio; Ambrose, De opificiis; Augustine, Contra Donatistas epistola, Serm. 357–9; Vincentius Lerinensis, Commonitorium; Gregory the Great, Regula pastoralis.

The Sacraments and Sacramental rites.—Teaching of the Apostles, cc. 7–10; Justin, Apol., i. 61–67; Irenæus (passim); Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses (passim); Gregory of Nyssa, Oratio catechetica (passim); Ambrose, De mysteriis.

1. Baptism and Confirmation: Tertullian, De baptismo; Cyprian, Letters (passim); Ps. Cyprian, De rebaptismate; Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, Pacian, De baptismo; Gregory of Nazianzus, In baptismum oratio.

3. Absolution: Tertullian, Ambrose, De paenitentia.

Holy Scripture.—Theophilus, Ad Autolycum, ii. 9, 10, 31; iii. 17; Ps. Justin, Exhortatio, 8; Irenæus (passim); Tertullian, De præscriptionibus, 15–22, 29, 35–38; Origen, De principiis, iv. 8–18; Athanasius, 39th festal letter; Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses, iv., v.; Jerome, ep. 53 (Ad Paulinam); Augustine, De doctrina Christiana (passim).

Further help in this direction will be found in the works of Gieseler, Neander, Klee, Dorner, and Harnack; in Suicer's Thesaurus, Herzog-Plitt's, or (so far as it is available) Herzog-Hauck's Realencyklopädie, and in the Dictionary of Christian Biography and Doctrine. The indices to the Patrologia Latina in Migne's great collection will be found very valuable; unfortunately the Greek Patrology is not furnished with a general index.

It must not be supposed that the Fathers, or even the Greek Fathers, concerned themselves only with the formulation of dogma and the suppression of heresy. Their contributions to Christian ethics are scarcely less important. Formal treatises on ethical subjects will be found among the works of Tertullian, Cyprian, and Augustine: the homilies of all the great preachers of antiquity abound in forcible appeals to the highest standards of Christian morality: the apologists contrast them with Pagan practice; the catechists spare no labour in their efforts to instil them into the minds of those who were under instruction. Thus the Paedagogus of Clement of Alexandria dwells at length on the details of Christian conduct, while the doctrinal side of the Gospel is but slightly handled; and the Catecheses of Cyril of Jerusalem, doctrinal as they are, do not overlook even such subjects as the treatment of the body, and its food and clothing. It is true that from the third century onwards there is a growing tendency to identify the highest ideal of Christian excel-ience with the ascetic life. But the ideal exists notwithstanding, and mutatis mutandis may be transferred to our own times.
Creeds and Liturgies

(e) For the early history of the Creeds, the liturgical forms and customs of the Church, and the work and life of the Christian ministry, the Fathers are our chief first-hand authorities.

The researches of such writers as Swainson, Heurtley, Lumby, and Burn in England, and Caspari, Harnack, Zahn, and Kattenbusch on the Continent, have made it possible to trace the history of symbolical literature with great precision, and students who are content to see the results as they have been collected and exhibited by other workers may find them in Hahn-Harnack's Bibliothek der Symbole (Breslau, 1897), or (less fully) in Mr. A. E. Burn's Introduction to the Creeds (London, 1899). But the interest and profit of a study of the Creeds will be greatly increased by going straight to the sources of the history, and reading with this object in view the pertinent passages in such writers as Aristides, Justin, Ireneæus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Novatian, Origen, Athanasius, Hilary, Socrates, Rufinus, Augustine. Some knowledge of the Fathers is presupposed by the more advanced text-books of Symbolics, such as Hahn and Kattenbusch; while on the other hand a careful perusal of these books will add largely to the student's store of Patristic knowledge.

1 Das Apostolische Symbol, i., ii. (Leipzig, 1894–1900).

Light is also thrown by the Fathers upon the liturgical forms of the early centuries. The references are chiefly incidental, and not always obvious. Thus Clement's letter to Corinth contains a long prayer (cc. 59-61), in which Lightfoot\(^1\) recognised the substance of the Eucharistic prayers offered in the Roman Church; and other liturgical features may be detected in the same epistle (cc. 29, 31, 32, 34). The Teaching of the Apostles provides forms for use at the Agape or the Eucharist. Traces of the Eucharistic forms used by Gnostic Christians in the second century may be found in the apocryphal Acts of John and Thomas. A series of Church manuals belonging to the third and fourth centuries—the Egyptian Church Order, Canons of Hippolytus, Testamentum Domini, the Apostolical Constitutions—illustrates the process by which the use of the local Bishop stiffened into a definite liturgy. From Egypt we have recently received a book of Church prayers in which occurs the name of Serapion, Bishop of Thmuis, the friend of Athanasius. But in fact almost every Patristic writer has something to tell us about the customs of his own age and Church, while a few (e.g. Justin, Tertullian, Cyprian, Cyril of Jerusalem, Chrysostom, Augustine) abound in information of this kind. How much can be gleaned from the passing allusions of the Fathers to liturgical practice may be seen by glancing at such a book as Probst's Liturgie der drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderte (1870), and Liturgie des vierten Jahrhunderts (1893); Duchesne's Origines du culte Chrétien (ed. 2, 1899), and especially Brightman's Liturgyes, Eastern and Western (vol. i. 1896),¹ where the early liturgical forms of Antioch, Palestine, Egypt, and other localities, are to a large extent recovered from contemporary writings.

\(^1\) Clement, i. p. 385 ff.

In the same way it is to the Fathers that we must chiefly look for light upon the early history of Catholic ritual and discipline. It would greatly minister to the peace of the Church if the opinions which are freely expressed upon these subjects were drawn in every case from a personal study of Christian antiquity. Such books as Bingham's Antiquities, Suicer's Thesaurus, Scudamore's Notitia Eucharistica, and the Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, may be consulted with much advantage, but they do not absolve persons who write upon present controversies from going to the documents themselves. In recent discussions confusion has arisen from a habit of quoting the Fathers at second hand, or at all events without a due weighing of the context and the purpose of their words. In archæological matters a mere catena of passages is apt to mislead, unless it is the work of a Patristic expert who can detect the fallacy which often lies in the prima facie interpretation of an author. The Patristic student will find himself at a great advantage as compared with the man who relies upon the correspondence columns of a Church newspaper, or even upon information supplied by manuals of ecclesiastical archæology.

¹ P. 470 ff.

(_f_) If a knowledge of the Fathers may be of value to the clergy in forming an opinion upon disputed points of ritual and Church order, it will help them even more surely on the side of Pastoralia—the practical conduct of the parish priest's life and work. The majority of the Fathers were not only writers and preachers, but diligent and experienced guides of souls. How much may be learnt here from Cyprian we have been taught by Archbishop Benson. No one can read the studies on the lives of Ambrose, Basil, Theodoret, Chrysostom, and others, which we owe to Cardinal Newman and Professor Bright, without being stimulated and helped in his own pastoral life. But a closer acquaintance with these true Fathers in God, through a study of their own writings, will be yet more fruitful in good. It is not only in set treatises such as the De Sacerdotio or the Regula Pastoralis that they help us thus. Their writings as a whole reveal a picture of the pastoral life which is not the less valuable because in outward circumstances and even in spiritual lineaments it differs so widely from any with which we are familiar. To take but a single example, which will appeal to most of the parochial clergy. No clerical duties within the experience of the modern pastor are more exacting than the religious teaching of the young before Confirmation and First Communion, and the higher teaching of adults who are already communicants. It is perhaps not always realised that Patristic reading may be turned to good account here. The resourceful clergyman will learn much from such books as the Paedagogus of Clement of Alexandria, the catechetical lectures of Cyril of Jerusalem, the catechetical oration of Gregory of Nyssa, the Enchiridion, De doctrina, and De catechizandis rudibus of Augustine of Hippo. Apart from a direct use of thoughts borrowed from ancient teachers, he will be enabled to give brightness and colour to many a catechising and Bible-class lesson by a judicious use of those glimpses into the far-off life of the early Church which an independent study of the Fathers will have photographed upon his mind.
CHAPTER VII

HELPS TO PATRISTIC STUDY

1. The first want of the student of any ancient writing is a sound text. In the case of the Greek and Latin Fathers this want cannot always be satisfactorily supplied. There is indeed no lack of printed editions. The work of printing the Fathers began in the fifteenth century. Lactantius appeared as early as 1465, and a Latin version of Origen against Celsus in 1481; works of Cyprian, Hilary, Ambrose, Augustine, and other Latin Fathers, as well as translations of Eusebius, Athanasius, and Chrysostom, saw the light before 1500. In the next century printers such as Robert Stephen, and editors such as Erasmus, were busy with editions of Fathers, both Latin and Greek. The seventeenth century produced in France the great Benedictine folios, and in England Savile’s Chrysostom, Fell and Pearson’s Cyprian, Potter’s Clement of Alexandria, Reading’s Greek Ecclesiastical Historians, Ussher’s Ignatius, and Grabe’s Spicilegium Patrum. Serviceable editions came about the same time from the presses of Belgium, Italy, and Germany. Separate authors were now collected into Patristic 'libraries'; it may suffice to mention those of De la Bigne (1575, 1622), Combeis (1648), D'Achery (1655), Gallandi (1765–88), and the Maxima Bibliotheca Patrum (1677).¹ These earlier collections have been largely superseded by the gigantic undertaking of the Abbé Migne, whose cursus completus contains 388 volumes—222 of Latin Fathers and 166 of Greek, the latter accompanied by a Latin translation. The last volume of Migne's Patrologies was issued as far back as 1866, so that even this immense work does not include the discoveries of the last five and thirty years, which are neither inconsiderable nor unimportant. But for ordinary purposes of study it is sufficient.

Migne's collection is beyond the means of most students;² moreover, a complete copy is not often in the market, part of the stock having been burnt as it lay in sheets on the shelves of the Paris warehouse. But it is to be found in our great libraries, and the reader who is within reach of the British Museum, or of either of the great Universities, will naturally turn to this convenient reprint. Not only does it usually give the best texts which were available at the time of its publication, but it adds to them a store of notes,

¹ For a fuller account see Dowling, Notitia.
² In a catalogue now before the writer a neatly bound copy is offered for sale at £290 (P.L., £120, P.G., £170); an unbound copy costs about £230.
introductions, and dissertations by well-known Patristic scholars. The Latin series is furnished with four volumes of useful indices; there is no index to the Greek Patrology as a whole, but a list of the authors’ names and dates has been published in a convenient form by Dr. J. B. Pearson (Cambridge, 1882).\footnote{A Ταμείων τῆς Πατρολογίας was begun by an Athens publisher in 1883, but so far as the present writer is aware, only the first volume has appeared (A—Βωμός).}

Access to a copy of Migne is almost indispensable to those who are engaged in extended research. But for the study of a particular Father or writing it is sufficient and often better to procure a separate edition. The older editions are sometimes to be picked up for a few shillings, and they are often treasuries of learning; but recent editions, when they can be had, are usually to be preferred for the sake of their more critically edited texts. The following modern editions may be specially mentioned: the Apostolic Fathers by Gobhardt and Harnack, and by Lightfoot and Harmer; the Greek Apologists by Otto, and more recently by various editors in the Texte und Untersuchungen, iv.;\footnote{This series is still incomplete.} Irenæus by Stieren, or with English introduction and notes by Harvey; Origen’s Philologia by Dr. J. Armitage Robinson, and Origen’s commentary on St. John by Mr. Brooke; the Quis dives of Clement by Mr. Barnard, the Octavius of Minucius Felix by Dr. Holden; the Clementine Homilies by Dressel, the De Incarnatione of Athanasius by Dr. A. Robertson, the Five Theological Orations of Gregory of Nazianzus by Professor Mason, the De Spiritu Sancto of Basil by Mr. Johnston, the Rules of Tyconius by Mr. Burkitt, the commentary of Theodore of Mopsuestia on the minor Epistles of St. Paul by the present writer, the Church History of Eusebius and the anti-Pelagian treatises of Augustine by Professor Bright; the Church Histories of Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret by Dr. Hussey. For advanced study recourse should be had to the Vienna Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum, and the Berlin series of Ante-Nicene Greek Fathers; but for the ordinary purposes of Patristic reading the less critical but more fully annotated editions will usually be preferred.

2. The task of translating a Patristic text often presents grave difficulties, even to a classical scholar. Neither grammar nor lexicography accords with the standards to which he has been accustomed, and apart from linguistic novelties, he may find himself embarrassed by obscure references to the LXX., and by the technical terms of Christian theology. For Patristic Greek, Liddell and Scott offer little help; Suicer’s Thesaurus is a very unequal work, and even its fullest articles lack scientific method; the lexicon of E. A. Sophocles, although useful, is far from being exhaustive, especially on the theological side. The precise sense of the theological terms used by the Greek Fathers must be gradually learnt by personal research, assisted by the best histories of dogma. There is reason to hope that the wants of the student of the Latin Fathers may be satisfied, so far as lexicography is concerned, by the new Thesaurus linguae latinae when it is complete. Meanwhile help may be obtained from such books as Roensch’s Itala und Vulgata, and Paucker’s Spicilegium addendorum lexicis latinis, and from the verbal indices which are to be found at the end of most of the best editions. The latinity of some of the greater writers has received separate treatment; mention may be gratefully made of Mr. E. W. Watson’s exhaustive paper on the style and language of Cyprian in Studia Biblica, already referred to, and M. Bonnet’s Le latin de Grégorie de Tours. Any competent scholar who would undertake such a piece of work for a Greek or Latin Father not hitherto examined from this point of view, would render valuable service to Patristic study.

The reader who has not had the advantage of a sound training in Greek and Latin may possibly find the linguistic difficulties insuperable, especially in such harder authors as Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Tertullian, and Hilary of Poictiers.
But he need not on this account despair of gaining a working knowledge of the substance of their writings. There is more than one series of translations of the Fathers into English which can be recommended on the whole. The Oxford Library of the Fathers, the Ante-Nicene Christian Library, and the Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers are the work of many scholars, and vary considerably in merit; but among them there are excellent versions, such as Dr. Robertson's Athanasius, and Mr. Watson's Hilary, which place the reader, as far as any translation can, in touch with the thought and genius of his author. In the Apostolic Fathers, edited by Bishop Harmer from the papers of Bishop Lightfoot, there are trustworthy literal renderings of the earliest Patristic documents; and a series of little books under the title of Early Christian Classics, now in course of publication by S.P.C.K., will bring some of the more important of the older Fathers within the reach of every Englishman.

3. With helps in the way of 'introduction,' the English student is well supplied by Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography and Doctrine. Before a new author is begun, his life and work should be studied in this or some other biographical authority. The best of the biographical articles in D.C.B. deal with the author's place in the history of Christian thought and doctrine, but on this point reference should also be made to the doctrinal articles in the same dictionary, or to such works as Maréchal's Concordantia Patrum, Lumper's Historia Theologico-critica, Bishop Kaye's account of Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria, Hagenbach's History of Doctrine, and Dorner's History of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ. For archaeological points, Smith and Cheetham's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities will generally suffice. There is at present no English dictionary of Christian geography corresponding to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography. Such a work is much wanted, but Wiltsch's Handbook of the Geography and Statistics of the Church (E. Tr., 2 vols., London, 1859), and his Kirchenhistorischer Atlas (Gotha, 1843), together with Gams' Series Episcoporum (R.C.), will carry the student some little way. Fuller and perhaps more accurate information may be obtained by having recourse to books which deal with particular localities, such as Le Quien's Oriens Christianus, Ramsay's Historical Geography of Asia Minor, and Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia, Duchesne's Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, and Morcelli's Africa Christiana, or Tissot's Géographie comparée de province romaine d’Afrique.

1 Slighter, but often very helpful, are the biographies published by S.P.C.K. in the series entitled, The Fathers for English Readers. An abridged edition of D.C.B. may be expected shortly.

4. For the textual and literary history of the Patristic writings, extensive materials will be found in Fabricius-Harles' Bibliotheca Graeca, and in Fabricius' Bibliotheca Latina; the Ante-Nicene period is investigated from this point of view most fully in Harnack's great Geschichte der altchristlichen Litteratur. Of the various manuals of Patristics the best is that of Bardenhewer. Krüger's Early Christian Literature is a useful book on a smaller scale, and much excellent matter will be found in Batiffol's La Littérature Grecque.

There are gaps in this list which suggest that something remains to be done in order to supply the Patristic student with a complete set of tools for his work. If among the readers of this little book there should be some scholar who has leisure and a natural inclination for research in this field, he may render service to this branch of Christian learning by either (1) collating MSS. of imperfectly edited Patristic texts, or (2) constructing vocabularies of late or rare words or of words used in a special sense by Patristic authors, or (3) working out in a scientific way the Patristic evidence on particular points of doctrine, history, or Church order. In Patristics, as in every branch of knowledge or vital energy, "the harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." Labours such as those which have just been suggested are not of the highest kind, and cannot be compared with the spiritual operations of the Church; but in their own place and degree they are necessary and fruitful, and they may be possible for some to whom from various circumstances a more direct part in the work of the Divine Kingdom is denied.

The following pages offer a brief bibliography of the subject, which may be of service to the Patristic student in his earlier studies. It does not pretend to be exhaustive, even as regards important books; but it will serve at least to direct the reader to larger works where he may find the literature catalogued in full.

General Literature of Patristics.

Ancient. — Eusebius, Historia Ecclesiastica [scattered notices and extracts]; Jerome, De viris illustribus [short biographies and literary notices]: continued by Gennadius, Isidore of Seville, and Ildefonsus of Toledo; Photius, Bibliotheca [notices of writers and books he had read].

Editions of the Fathers.

Larger Collections.—The Bibliotheca of De la Bigne (Paris, 1575); the Magna Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, based upon it (Cologne, 1618–22); the Maxima Bibliotheca V.P. (Lyons, 1677); the Bibliotheca V.P. of A. Gallandi (Venice, 1765–81); the Patrologiae Cursus completus of J. P. Migne (Latin Series, Paris, 1844–64; Greek Series, Paris, 1857–66); the Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum (Vienna, 1867 ff.: in progress); SS. Patrum Opuscula Selecta, ad usum praesertim studiosorum theologiae, edited with notes by H. Hurter, S.J. (Innsbruck, 1868 ff.: in progress); Cambridge
Bibliography of Patristics

Editions of Fathers or Groups of Fathers (not included in the above).

Apostolic Fathers. — W. Jacobson (Oxford, ed. i., 18—; ed. iii. 1848); Gebhardt, Harnack, and Zahn (Leipzig, 1876–78: new ed., 1894);
Patristic Study

Greek Apologists. — J. C. Th. Otto (Jena, 1851–81); Gebhardt and Harnack, with the assistance of other editors, in Texte und Untersuchungen, iv. (Leipzig, 1888: in progress).

Teaching of the Apostles. — Ph. Bryennius (Constantinople, 1883); H. D. M. Spence (London, 1885); C. Taylor, with introduction and translation (Cambridge, 1886); A. Harnack (Leipzig, 1886); J. R. Harris (Baltimore, 1887).

Irenaeus. — R. Massuet (Paris, 1712); A. Stieren (Leipzig, 1848–53); W. W. Harvey (Cambridge, 1857).

Tertullian. — N. Rigaltius (Paris, 1620); F. Oehler (Leipzig, 1852–53).

Cyprian. — N. Rigaltius (Paris, 1648); J. Fell (Oxford, 1682); W. Hartel (Vienna, 1868–71, in the Vienna Corpus).
Bibliography of Patristics

Pseudo-Clement.—Homilies and Epitome: A. R. M. Dressel (Göttingen, 1853); P. de Lagarde (Leipzig, 1865); Recognitions, E. G. Gersdorff (Leipzig, 1888).

Apostolical Constitutions.—P. de Lagarde (Leipzig, 1862).

Eusebius.—Church History, F. B. Heinichen (Leipzig, 1827–28); W. Bright (Oxford, 1872); Chronicle, A. Schoene (Berlin, 1866–75); Praeparatio, Demonstratio, Eclogae, Contra Marcellum, T. Gaisford (Oxford, 1842 ff.); Onomasticon, P. de Lagarde (Göttingen, 1870, ed. ii. 1887).

Cyril of Jerusalem.—A. A. Trottée (Paris, 1720); W. C. Reischl and J. Rupp (Munich, 1848–60).

Gregory of Nazianzus.—Theological orations, A. J. Mason (Cambridge, 1899).

Epiphanius.—Panarion, etc., F. Oehler (Berlin, 1859–61).

1 A new edition of the Praeparatio, by Dr. E. H. Gifford, is on the eve of publication.
Cyril of Alexandria.—P. E. Pusey, The Minor Prophets (Oxford, 1868); S. John, etc. (Oxford, 1872); Theodoret, J. L. Schulze (Halle, 1769–74); Romans and 2 Cor. (Oxford, 1852).

Handbooks for the Clergy

EDITED BY

The Rev. Arthur W. Robinson, B.D.
Vicar of Allhallows Barking by the Tower

Price 2s. 6d. each net.

The purpose of the writers of the Volumes in this Series will be to present in a clear and attractive way the responsibilities and opportunities of the Clergy of to-day, and to offer such practical guidance, in regard both to aims and to methods, as experience may have shown to be valuable. It is hoped that the Series, while primarily intended for those who are already face to face with the duties and problems of the ministerial office, may be of interest and assistance also to others who are considering the question of entering into Holy Orders; and, indeed, to all who have the welfare of the Church at heart.

The Personal Life of the Clergy. By the Editor.

Patristic Study. By the Rev. H. B. Swete, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge.

Arrangements have also been made for the following Volumes:

Authority and the Principle of Obedience. By the Very Rev. T. B. Strong, B.D., Dean of Christ Church.

Longmans, Green, and Co.
London, New York, and Bombay.
The Orford Library of Practical Theology

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

Price Five Shillings each.

HOLY BAPTISM.  By the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Principal of the Missionary College, Dorchester. Second Impression.

THE INCARNATION.  By the Rev. H. V. S. Eck, M.A., Rector of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.  By the Right Rev. E. T. Churton, D.D., formerly Bishop of Nassau.

IN PREPARATION.

THE BIBLE.  By the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Principal of the Missionary College, Dorchester.

HOLY ORDERS.  By the Rev. A. R. Whitham, M.A., Principal of Culham College, Abingdon.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONIAL.  By the Rev. Walter Howard Fiske, M.A., of the Community of the Resurrection, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Rochester.

VISITATION OF THE SICK.  By the Rev. E. F. Russell, M.A., of St. Alban's, Holborn.

CHURCH WORK.  By the Rev. Bernard Reynolds, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's.

LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.

LONDON, NEW YORK, AND BOMBAY
A Selection of Works

IN

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE

PUBLISHED BY

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

London: 39 PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.
New York: 91 and 93 FIFTH AVENUE.
Bombay: 32 HORNBY ROAD.

Abbey and Overton.—THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By CHARLES J. ABBEY, M.A., Rector of Checkendon, Reading, and JOHN H. OVERTON, D.D., Canon of Lincoln. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Adams.—SACRED ALLEGORIES. The Shadow of the Cross—The Distant Hills—The Old Man's Home—The King's Messengers. By the Rev. WILLIAM ADAMS, M.A. 16mo. 3s. net.

The four Allegories may be had separately, with Illustrations. 16mo. 1s. each.

Aids to the Inner Life.

Edited by the Venble. W. H. HUTCHINGS, M.A., Archdeacon of Cleveland, Canon of York, Rector of Kirby Misperton, and Rural Dean of Malton. Five Vols. 32mo, cloth limp, 6d. each; or cloth extra, 1s. each.

OF THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. By THOMAS À KEMPIS.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR.

THE DEVOUT LIFE. By ST. FRANCIS DE SALES.

THE HIDDEN LIFE OF THE SOUL.

THE SPIRITUAL COMBAT. By LAURENCE SCUPOLI.

Arbuthnot.—SHAKESPEARE SERMONS. Preached in the Collegiate Church of Stratford-on-Avon on the Sundays following the Poet's Birthday, 1894-1900. Collected by the Rev. GEORGE ARBUTHNOT, M.A., Vicar of Stratford-on-Avon. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
A SELECTION OF WORKS

Bathe.—Works by the Rev. ANTHONY BATHE, M.A.

A LENT WITH JESUS. A Plain Guide for Churchmen. Containing Readings for Lent and Easter Week, and on the Holy Eucharist. 32mo, 1s.; or in paper cover, 6d.

AN ADVENT WITH JESUS. 32mo, 1s., or in paper cover, 6d.

WHAT I SHOULD BELIEVE. A Simple Manual of Self-Instruction for Church People. Small 8vo, limp, 1s.; cloth gilt, 2s.

Bathe and Buckham.—THE CHRISTIAN'S ROAD BOOK.

2 Parts. By the Rev. ANTHONY BATHE and Rev. F. H. BUCKHAM.
Part I. DEVOTIONS. Sewed, 6d.; limp cloth, 1s.; cloth extra, 1s. 6d.
Part II. READINGS. Sewed, 1s.; limp cloth, 2s.; cloth extra, 3s.; or complete in one volume, sewed, 1s. 6d. limp cloth, 2s. 6d.; cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

Benson.—Works by the Rev. R. M. BENSON, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

THE FOLLOWERS OF THE LAMB: a Series of Meditations, especially intended for Persons living under Religious Vows, and for Seasons of Retreat, etc. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE FINAL PASSOVER: A Series of Meditations upon the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ. Small 8vo.

Vol. I.—The REJECTION. 5s.
Vol. II.—The UPPER CHAMBER.
Part I. 5s.
Part II. 5s.

Vol. III.—The Divine EXODUS.
Parts I. and II. 5s. each.

Vol. IV.—The Life Beyond the GRAVE. 5s.

THE MAGNIFICAT; a Series of Meditations upon the Song of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Small 8vo. 2s.

SPIRITUAL READINGS FOR EVERY DAY. 3 vols. Small 8vo.

I. ADVENT. II. CHRISTMAS. III. EPIPHANY.

BENEDICTUS DOMINUS: A Course of Meditations for Every Day of the Year. Vol. I.—Advent to TRINITY. Vol. II.—TRINITY, SAINTS' DAYS, etc. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d. each; or in One Volume, 7s.

BIBLE TEACHINGS: The Discourse at Capernaum.—St. John vi. Small 8vo. 1s.; or with Notes. 3s. 6d.

THE WISDOM OF THE SON OF DAVID: An Exposition of the First Nine Chapters of the Book of Proverbs. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE MANUAL OF INTERCESSORY PRAYER. Royal 32mo; cloth boards, 1s. 3d.; cloth limp, 9d.

THE EVANGELIST LIBRARY CATECHISM. Part I. Small 8vo. 3s.

PAROCHIAL MISSIONS. Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Bigg.—UNITY IN DIVERSITY: Five Addresses delivered in the Cathedral Church of Christ, Oxford, during Lent 1869, with Introduction. By the Rev. Charles Bigg, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Bickersteth.—YESTERDAY, TO-DAY, AND FOR EVER: a Poem in Twelve Books. By Edward Henry Bickersteth, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Exeter. 18mo. 1s. net. With red borders, 16mo. 2s. net.

The Crown 8vo Edition (51.) may still be had.

Blunt.—Works by the Rev. John Henry Blunt, D.D.

THE ANNOTATED BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER: Being an Historical, Ritual, and Theological Commentary on the Devotional System of the Church of England. 4to. 21s.

DICTIONARY OF DOCTRINAL AND HISTORICAL THEOLOGY. By various Writers. Imperial 8vo. 21s.

DICTIONARY OF SECTS, HERESIES, ECCLESIASTICAL PARTIES AND SCHOOLS OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By various Writers. Imperial 8vo. 21s.

A COMPANION TO THE BIBLE: Being a Plain Commentary on Scripture History, to the end of the Apostolic Age. Two Vols. small 8vo. Sold separately. Old Testament, 3s. 6d. New Testament, 3s. 6d.

HOUSEHOLD THEOLOGY: a Handbook of Religious Information respecting the Holy Bible, the Prayer Book, the Church, etc., etc. Paper cover, 16mo. 1s. Also the Larger Edition, 3s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF LOVE. A Course of Lent Lectures. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE SCHOOL OF CALVARY; or, Laws of Christian Life revealed from the Cross. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE LIFE OF JUSTIFICATION. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE LIFE OF TEMPTATION. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE FAITHFUL DEPARTED. Small 8vo. sewed, 6d. 3am. cloth, 1s.
A SELECTION OF WORKS

Book of Private Prayer, The. For use Twice Daily; together with the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion. 18mo. Limp cloth, 2s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

Book of Prayer and Daily Texts for English Churchmen. 32mo. 1s. net.

Boulthbee.—A COMMENTARY ON THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By the Rev. T. P. BOULTBEE. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Brent.—WITH GOD IN THE WORLD. By the Very Rev. CHARLES H. BRENT, Bishop of the Philippine Islands. Fcp. 8vo. 3s.

Bright.—Works by WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., late Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford.

THE AGE OF THE FATHERS. Two Vols. 8vo. [In the Press.

SOME ASPECTS OF PRIMITIVE CHURCH LIFE. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE ROMAN SEE IN THE EARLY CHURCH: And other Studies in Church History. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

WAYMARKS IN CHURCH HISTORY. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

LESSONS FROM THE LIVES OF THREE GREAT FATHERS. St. Athanasius, St. Chrysostom, and St. Augustine. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE INCARNATION AS A MOTIVE POWER. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Bright and Medd.—LIBER PRECUM PUBLICARUM ECCLESIAE ANGLICANÆ. A GULIELMO BRIGHT, S.T.P., et PETRO GOLDSMITH MEDD, A.M., Latine redditus. Small 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Browne.—AN EXPOSITION OF THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES, Historical and Doctrinal. By E. H. BROWNE, D.D., sometime Bishop of Winchester. 8vo. 16s.

Campion and Beamont.—THE PRAYER BOOK INTERLEAVED. With Historical Illustrations and Explanatory Notes arranged parallel to the Text. By W. M. CAMPION, D.D., and W. J. BEAMONT, M.A. Small 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Carter.—Works by, and edited by the Rev. T. T. CARTER, M.A., late Hon. Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

UNDERCURRENTS OF CHURCH LIFE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. Crown 8vo. 5s.

NICHOLAS FERRAR: his Household and his Friends. With Portrait.
Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE SPIRIT OF WATCHFULNESS AND OTHER SERMONS.
Crown 8vo. 5s.

THE TREASURY OF DEVOTION: a Manual of Prayer for General and Daily Use. Compiled by a Priest.
18mo. 2s. 6d.; cloth limp, 2s. Bound with the Book of Common Prayer, 3s. 6d. Red-Line Edition. Cloth extra, gilt top. 18mo.
2s. 6d. net. Large-Type Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE WAY OF LIFE: A Book of Prayers and Instruction for the Young at School, with a Preparation for Confirmation. 18mo. 1s. 6d.

THE PATH OF HOLINESS: a First Book of Prayers, with the Service of the Holy Communion, for the Young. Compiled by a Priest. With Illustrations. 16mo. 1s. 6d.; cloth limp, 1s.

THE GUIDE TO HEAVEN: a Book of Prayers for every Want. (For the Working Classes.) Compiled by a Priest. 18mo. 1s. 6d.; cloth limp, 1s. Large-Type Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.; cloth limp, 1s.

THE STAR OF CHILDHOOD: a First Book of Prayers and Instruction for Children. Compiled by a Priest. With Illustrations. 16mo. 2s. 6d.

SIMPLE LESSONS; or, Words Easy to be Understood. A Manual of Teaching. i. On the Creed. ii. The Ten Commandments. iii. The Sacrament. 18mo. 3s.

MANUAL OF DEVOTION FOR SISTERS OF MERCY. 8 parts in 2 vols. 32mo. 10s. Or separately:—Part I. 1s. 6d. Part II. 1s. Part III. 1s. Part IV. 2s. Part V. 1s. Part VI. 1s. Part VII. Part VIII. 1s. 6d.

SPIRITUAL INSTRUCTIONS. Crown 8vo.

THE HOLY EUCHARIST. 3s. 6d. OUR LORD'S EARLY LIFE. 3s. 6d.
The Divine Dispensations. 3s. 6d. OUR LORD'S ENTRANCE ON HIS
The Life of Grace. 3s. 6d. MINISTRY. 3s. 6d.
The Religious Life. 3s. 6d.

A BOOK OF PRIVATE PRAYER FOR MORNING, MID-DAY, AND
OTHER TIMES. 18mo, limp cloth, 1s.; cloth, red edges, 1s. 3d.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE PRIESTHOOD IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. Crown 8vo. 4s.

THE DOCTRINE OF CONFESSION IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. Crown 8vo. 5s.
A SELECTION OF WORKS

Coles.—Works by the Rev. V. S. S. Coles, M.A., Principal of the Pusey House, Oxford.

LENTEN MEDITATIONS. 18mo. 2s. 6d.
ADVENT MEDITATIONS ON ISAIAH I.-XII.: together with Outlines of Christmas Meditations on St. John i. 1-12. 18mo. 2s.

Company, The, of Heaven: Daily Links with the Household of God. Being Selections in Prose and Verse from various Authors. With Autotype Frontispiece. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

LIBRARY EDITION. Two Vols. 8vo. 21s. STUDENTS’ EDITION. One Vol. Crown 8vo. 6s. POPULAR EDITION. One Vol. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Creighton.—Works by the Right Hon. and Right Rev. Mandell Creighton, D.D., late Lord Bishop of London.

THE CHURCH AND THE NATION: Charges and Addresses. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.

Day-Hours of the Church of England, The. Newly Revised according to the Prayer Book and the Authorised Translation of the Bible. Crown 8vo, sewed, 3s.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE DAY-HOURS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, being the Service for certain Holy Days. Crown 8vo, sewed, 3s.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

Edersheim.—Works by Alfred Edersheim, M.A., D.D., Ph.D.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH. Two Vols. 8vo. 12s. net.

JESUS THE MESSIAH: being an Abridged Edition of ‘The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah.’ Crown 8vo. 6s. net.

A CRITICAL AND GRAMMATICAL COMMENTARY ON ST. PAUL’S EPISTLES. Greek Text, with a Critical and Grammatical Commentary, and a Revised English Translation. 8vo.

GALATIANS. 8s. 6d. PHILIPPIANS, COLOSSIANS, AND EPHESIANS. 8s. 6d. PHILEMON. 10s. 6d.
PASTORAL EPISTLES. 10s. 6d. THESSALONIANS. 7s. 6d.

HISTORICAL LECTURES ON THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST. 8vo. 12s.

English (The) Catholic’s Vade Mecum: a Short Manual of General Devotion. Compiled by a Priest. 32mo. limp, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

Priest’s Edition. 32mo. 1s. 6d.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Epochs of Church History.—Edited by Right Hon. and Right Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., late Lord Bishop of London. Small 8vo. 2s. 6d. each.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN OTHER LANDS. By the Rev. H. W. TUCKER, M.A.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION IN ENGLAND. By the Rev. GEO. G. FERRY, M.A.

THE CHURCH OF THE EARLY FATHERS. By the Rev. ALFRED PLUMMER, D.D.

THE EVANGELICAL REVIVAL IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By the Rev. J. H. OVERTON, D.D.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD. By the Hon. G. C. BRODRICK, D.C.L.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE. By J. BASS MULLINGER, M.A.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the Rev. W. HUNT, M.A.

THE CHURCH AND THE EASTERN EMPIRE. By the Rev. H. F. TOZER, M.A.

THE CHURCH AND THE ROMAN EMPIRE. By the Rev. A. CARE, M.A.

THE CHURCH AND THE PURITANS, 1570-1660. By HENRY OFFLEY WAKEMAN, M.A.

HILDEBRAND AND HIS TIMES. By the Very Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, B.D.

THE POPES AND THE HOHENSTAUFEN. By UGO BALZANI.

THE COUNTER REFORMATION. By ADOLPHUS WILLIAM WARD, Litt.D.

WYCLIFFE AND MOVEMENTS FOR REFORM. By REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A.

THE ARIAN CONTROVERSY. By the Rev. Professor H. M. GWATKIN, M.A.

Eucharistic Manual (The). Consisting of Instructions and Devotions for the Holy Sacrament of the Altar. From various sources. 32mo. cloth gilt, red edges. 1s. Cheap Edition, limp cloth. 9d.

Farrar.—Works by FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D.D., Dean of Canterbury.

TEXTS EXPLAINED; or, Helps to Understand the New Testament. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.

THE BIBLE: Its Meaning and Supremacy. 8vo. 6s. net.

Fosbery.—VOICES OF COMFORT. Edited by the Rev. THOMAS VINCENT FOSBERY, M.A., sometime Vicar of St. Giles's, Reading. Cheap Edition. Small 8vo. 3s. net.

The Larger Edition (1s. 6d.) may still be had.

Fuller.—IN TERRÁ PAX; or, The Primary Sayings of Our Lord during the Great Forty Days in their Relation to the Church. Sermons preached at St. Mark's, Marylebone Road. By MORRIS FULLER, B.D. Crown 8vo. 6s. net.

Gardner.—A CATECHISM OF CHURCH HISTORY, from the Day of Pentecost until the Present Day. By the Rev. C. E. GARDNER, of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, Cowley. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
A SELECTION OF WORKS

THE VICAR AND HIS FRIENDS. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.

OLD TESTAMENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Creation to the Patriarchs.</th>
<th>Rehoboam to Hezekiah. With Illustrations. 5s.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>With a Map and Illustrations. 5s.</td>
<td>Manasseh to Zedekiah. With the Contemporary Prophets. With a Map and Illustrations. 5s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moses to Judges.</td>
<td>Exile to Malachi. With the Contemporary Prophets. With Illustrations. 5s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With a Map and Illustrations. 5s.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samson to Solomon.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With a Map and Illustrations. 5s.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

NEW TESTAMENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>With a Map and Illustrations. 5s.</td>
<td>With Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols. 10s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>St. Peter to Revelation. With 2 vols. 10s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>29 Illustrations. 5s.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Life and Words of Christ.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With Map. 2 vols. 10s.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Life and Words of Christ.

A SHORT LIFE OF CHRIST. With 34 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.; gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

Gold Dust: a Collection of Golden Counsels for the Sanctification of Daily Life. Translated and abridged from the French by E.L.E.E. Edited by Charlotte M. Yonge. Parts I. II. III. Small Pocket Volumes. Cloth, gilt, each 1s. Parts I. and II. in One Volume. 1s. 6d. Parts I., II., and III. in One Volume. 2s. net.

* * * The two first parts in One Volume, large type, 18mo. cloth, gilt. 2s. net.

Parts I. II. and III. are also supplied, bound in white cloth, with red edges, in box, price 2s. 6d. net.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CLAIMS. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

CONFIRMATION. Crown 8vo. 5s. (The Oxford Library of Practical Theology.)

THE VIRGIN MOTHER: Retreat Addresses on the Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary as told in the Gospels. With an appended Essay on the Virgin Birth of our Lord. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

CHRIST'S TEMPTATION AND OURS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

PATRISTIC STUDY. By the Rev. H. B. Swete, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

FOREIGN MISSIONS. By the Right Rev. H. H. Montgomery, D.D., formerly Bishop of Tasmania, Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. [In the press.]

 Other Volumes are in preparation.

Harrison. — PROBLEMS OF CHRISTIANITY AND SCEPTICISM. By the Rev. Alexander J. Harrison, B.D. Incumbent of St. Thomas the Martyr, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

A SELECTION OF WORKS

Holland.—Works by the Rev. Henry Scott Holland, M.A., Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's.

GOD'S CITY AND THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
PLEAS AND CLAIMS FOR CHRIST. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
CREED AND CHARACTER: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
ON BEHALF OF BELIEF. Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
CHRIST OR ECCLESIASTES. Sermons. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
LOGIC AND LIFE, with other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
GOOD FRIDAY. Being Addresses on the Seven Last Words. Small 8vo. 2s.

THE HEAVENLY STAIR; or, A Ladder of the Love of God for Sinners. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
PORTA REGALIS; or, Considerations on Prayer. Crown 8vo. limp cloth, 1s. 6d. net; cloth boards, 2s. net.
CONSIDERATIONS ON THE WISDOM OF GOD. Crown 8vo. 4s.
PARADOXES OF THE LOVE OF GOD, especially as they are seen in the way of the Evangelical Counsels. Crown 8vo. 4s.
ONE BORN OF THE SPIRIT; or, the Unification of our Life in God. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Hutchings.—Works by the Ven. W. H. Hutchings, M.A. Archdeacon of Cleveland, Canon of York, Rector of Kirby Misperton, and Rural Dean of Malton.

SERMON SKETCHES from some of the Sunday Lessons throughout the Church's Year. Vols. I and II. Crown 8vo. 5s. each.

THE LIFE OF PRAYER: a Course of Lectures delivered in All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, during Lent. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE PERSON AND WORK OF THE HOLY GHOST: a Doctrinal and Devotional Treatise. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE CROSS. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE MYSTERY OF THE TEMPTATION. Lent Lectures delivered at St. Mary Magdalene, Paddington. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Hutton.—THE SOUL HERE AND HEREAFTER. By the Rev. R. E. Hutton, Chaplain of St. Margaret's, East Grinstead. Crown 8vo. 6s.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Inheritance of the Saints; or, Thoughts on the Communion of Saints and the Life of the World to come. Collected chiefly from English Writers by L. P. With a Preface by the Rev. HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, M.A. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Jameson.—Works by MRS. JAMESON.

SACRED AND LEGENDARY ART, containing Legends of the Angels and Archangels, the Evangelists, the Apostles. With 19 Etchings and 187 Woodcuts. 2 vols. 8vo. 20s. net.

LEGENDS OF THE MONASTIC ORDERS, as represented in the Fine Arts. With 11 Etchings and 88 Woodcuts. 8vo. 10s. net.

LEGENDS OF THE MADONNA, OR BLESSED VIRGIN MARY. With 27 Etchings and 165 Woodcuts. 8vo. 10s. net.

THE HISTORY OF OUR LORD, as exemplified in Works of Art. Commenced by the late Mrs. JAMESON; continued and completed by LADY EASTLAKE. With 31 Etchings and 281 Woodcuts. 2 Vols. 8vo. 20s. net.

Jennings.—ECCLESIA ANGLICANA. A History of the Church of Christ in England from the Earliest to the Present Times. By the Rev. ARTHUR CHARLES JENNINGS, M.A. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Joy and Strength for the Pilgrim's Day: Selections in Prose and Verse. By the Editor of 'Daily Strength for Daily Needs,' etc. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

Jukes.—Works by ANDREW JUKES.

THE NAMES OF GOD IN HOLY SCRIPTURE: a Revelation of His Nature and Relationships. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE TYPES OF GENESIS. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE SECOND DEATH AND THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Knox Little.—Works by W. J. Knox Little, M.A., Canon

HOLY MATRIMONY. Crown 8vo. 5s. [The Oxford Library of Practical Theology.]

THE PERFECT LIFE: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

CHARACTERISTICS AND MOTIVES OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. Ten Sermons preached in Manchester Cathedral, in Lent and Advent. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE MYSTERY OF THE PASSION OF OUR MOST HOLY REDEEMER. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE. Sermons preached on Various Occasions.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.
Sermons preached for the most part in America. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Law.—A PRACTICAL TREATISE UPON CHRISTIAN
PERFECTION. By William Law, M.A. Edited by L. H. M.
Soulsby. 16mo, red borders, 2s. net.

Lear.—Works by, and Edited by, H. L. Sidney Lear.

FOR DAYS AND YEARS. A book containing a Text, Short Reading, and Hymn for Every Day in the Church's Year. 16mo. 2s. net. Also a Cheap Edition, 32mo, 1s.; or cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.; or with red borders, 2s. net.

FIVE MINUTES. Daily Readings of Poetry. 16mo. 3s. 6d. Also a Cheap Edition, 32mo. 1s.; or cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.

WEARINESS. A Book for the Languid and Lonely. Large Type.
Small 8vo. 5s.

CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHIES. Nine Vols. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

MADAME LOUISE DE FRANCE, Daughter of Louis xv., known also as the Mother Térèse de St. Augustin.

A DOMINICAN ARTIST: a Sketch of the Life of the Rev. Père Besson, of the Order of St. Dominic.

HENRI PERREYVE. By Père Gratry.

ST. FRANCIS DE SALES, Bishop and Prince of Geneva.

THE REVIVAL OF PRIESTLY LIFE
IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY IN FRANCE.

A CHRISTIAN PAINTER OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

BOSSEUET AND HIS CONTEMPORA-RIES.

FÉNELON, ARCHBISHOP OF CAM-BRAI.

HENRI DOMINIQUE LACORDAIRE.
[continued.]
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Lear.—Works by, and Edited by, H. L. Sidney Lear.—continued.

DEVOTIONAL WORKS. Edited by H. L. Sidney Lear. New and Uniform Editions. Nine Vols. 16mo. 2s. net each.

Fénelon’s Spiritual Letters to Men.
Fénelon’s Spiritual Letters to Women.
A Selection from the Spiritual Letters of St. Francis de Sales. Also Cheap Edition, 32mo, 6d. cloth limp; 1s. cloth boards.
The Hidden Life of the Soul.
The Light of the Conscience. Also Cheap Edition, 32mo, 6d. cloth limp; 1s. cloth boards.
Self-Renunciation. From the French.
St. Francis de Sales’ Of the Love of God.
Selections from Pascal’s ‘Thoughts.’

Lepine.—THE MINISTERS OF JESUS CHRIST. By J. Foster Lepine, Vicar of Lamorbey, Kent. Parts I. and II. Crown 8vo. 5s. each.

Liddon.—Works by Henry Parry Liddon, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D.

SERMONS ON SOME WORDS OF ST. PAUL. Crown 8vo. 5s.
SERMONS PREACHED ON SPECIAL OCCASIONS, 1860-1889. Crown 8vo. 5s.

CLERICAL LIFE AND WORK: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 5s.
EXPLANATORY ANALYSIS OF PAUL’S EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS. 8vo. 14s.
EXPLANATORY ANALYSIS OF ST. PAUL’S FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
SERMONS ON OLD TESTAMENT SUBJECTS. Crown 8vo. 5s.
SERMONS ON SOME WORDS OF CHRIST. Crown 8vo. 5s.
The Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.
Being the Bampton Lectures for 1866. Crown 8vo. 5s.

ADVENT IN ST. PAUL’S. Crown 8vo. 5s.
CHRISTMASTIDE IN ST. PAUL’S. Crown 8vo. 5s.

PASSIONTIDE SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 5s.

[continued.]
A SELECTION OF WORKS

THE MAGNIFICAT. Sermons in St. Paul’s. Crown 8vo. 2s. net.

SOME ELEMENTS OF RELIGION. Lent Lectures. Small 8vo. 2s. net. [The Crown 8vo Edition (5s.) may still be had.]

SELECTIONS FROM THE WRITINGS OF. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Luckock.—Works by Herbert Mortimer Luckock, D.D., Dean of Lichfield.

THE SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE FOUR GOSPELS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

AFTER DEATH. An Examination of the Testimony of Primitive Times respecting the State of the Faithful Dead, and their Relationship to the Living. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE BETWEEN DEATH AND JUDGMENT. Being a Sequel to After Death. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

FOOTPRINTS OF THE SON OF MAN, as traced by St. Mark. Being Eighty Portions for Private Study, Family Reading, and Instruction in Church. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

THE DIVINE LITURGY. Being the Order for Holy Communion, Historically, Doctrinally, and Devotionally set forth, in Fifty Portions. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

THE BISHOPS IN THE TOWER. A Record of Stirring Events affecting the Church and Nonconformists from the Restoration to the Revolution. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Lyra Germanica: Hymns for the Sundays and Chief Festivals of the Christian Year. First Series. 16mo, with red borders, as. net.

MacColl.—Works by the Rev. MALCOLM MACCOLL, D.D., Canon Residiary of Ripon.

CHRISTIANITY IN RELATION TO SCIENCE AND MORALs. Crown 8vo. 5s.

LIFE HERE AND HEREAFTEr: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Marriage Addresses and Marriage Hymns. By the BISHOP OF LONDON, the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, the BISHOP OF TRURO, the DEAN OF ROCHESTER, the DEAN OF NORWICH, ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR, CANON DUCKWORTH, CANON NEWBOLT, CANON KNOX LITTLE, CANON RAWNSLEY, the Rev. J. LLEWELLYN DAVIES, D.D., the Rev. W. ALLEN WHITWORTH, etc. Edited by the Rev. O. P. WARDELL-YERBURGH, M.A., Vicar of the Abbey Church of St. Mary, Tewkesbury. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Mason.—Works by A. J. MASON, D.D., Lady Margaret's Reader in Divinity in the University of Cambridge and Canon of Canterbury.

PURGATORY; THE STATE OF THE FAITHFUL DEAD; INVOCATION OF SAINTS. Three Lectures. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

THE RELATION OF CONFIRMATION TO BAPTISM. As taught in Holy Scripture and the Fathers. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Maturin.—Works by the Rev. B. W. MATURIN.

SOME PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICES OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

PRACTICAL STUDIES ON THE PARABLES OF OUR LORD. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Monro.—SACRED ALLEGORIES. By Rev. EDWARD MONRO. Complete Edition in one Volume, with Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

THE EUCHARISTIC SACRIFICE: An Historical and Theological Investigation of the Sacrificial Conception of the Holy Eucharist in the Christian Church. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

JESUS AND THE RESURRECTION: Thirty Addresses for Good Friday and Easter. Crown 8vo. 5s.

HELPS TO MEDITATION: Sketches for Every Day in the Year.
Vol. I. ADVENT TO TRINITY. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
Vol. II. TRINITY TO ADVENT. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

STORIES FROM GENESIS: Sermons for Children. Crown 8vo. 4s.

THE LAWS OF HAPPINESS; or, The Beatitudes as teaching our Duty to God, Self, and our Neighbour. 18mo. 2s.

THE LAWS OF PENITENCE: Addresses on the Words of our Lord from the Cross. 16mo. 1s. 6d.

SERMONS IN MINIATURE FOR EXTENPORE PREACHERS: Sketches for Every Sunday and Holy Day of the Christian Year. Crown 8vo. 6s.

NOTES ON THE SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS, chiefly from Patristic Sources. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE SEVEN LAST WORDS OF OUR MOST HOLY REDEEMER: with Meditations on some Scenes in His Passion. Crown 8vo. 5s.

LEARN OF JESUS CHRIST TO DIE: Addresses on the Words of our Lord from the Cross, taken as teaching the way of Preparation for Death. 16mo. 2s.

Mozley.—Works by J. B. Mozley, D.D., late Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford.

ESSAYS, HISTORICAL AND THEOLOGICAL. Two Vols. 8vo. 24s.

EIGHT LECTURES ON MIRACLES. Being the Bampton Lectures for 1865. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

RULING IDEAS IN EARLY AGES AND THEIR RELATION TO OLD TESTAMENT FAITH. 8vo. 6s.

SERMONS PREACHED BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, and on Various Occasions. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

SERMONS, PAROCHIAL AND OCCASIONAL. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

A REVIEW OF THE BAPTISMAL CONTROVERSY. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

APOSTLES OF THE LORD: being Six Lectures on Pastoral Theology, delivered in the Divinity School, Cambridge, Lent Term, 1901. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

RELIGION. Crown 8vo. 5s. (The Oxford Library of Practical Theology.)

THE DIAL OF PRAYER: being Devotions for Every Hour. Small 8vo. 2s.

WORDS OF EXHORTATION. Sermons Preached at St. Paul’s and elsewhere. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.

PENITENCE AND PEACE: being Addresses on the 51st and 23rd Psalms. Crown 8vo. 2s. net.

PRIESTLY IDEALS; being a Course of Practical Lectures delivered in St. Paul’s Cathedral to ‘Our Society’ and other Clergy, in Lent, 1898. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL OF EXPERIENCE; or, the Witness of Human Life to the truth of Revelation. Being the Boyle Lectures for 1895. Crown 8vo. 5s.

COUNSEL OF FAITH AND PRACTICE: being Sermons preached on various occasions. Crown 8vo. 5s.

SPECULUM SACERDOTUM; or, the Divine Model of the Priestly Life. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE MAN OF GOD. Small 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Newman.—Works by JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, B.D., sometime Vicar of St. Mary’s, Oxford.

PAROCHIAL AND PLAIN SERMONS. Eight Vols. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

SELECTION, ADAPTED TO THE SEASONS OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL YEAR, from the ‘Parochial and Plain Sermons.’ Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

FIFTEEN SERMONS PREACHED BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SERMONS BEARING UPON SUBJECTS OF THE DAY. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

LECTURES ON THE DOCTRINE OF JUSTIFICATION. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

* * A Complete List of Cardinal Newman’s Works can be had on Application.
Osborne.—Works by Edward Osborne, Mission Priest of the

THE CHILDREN'S SAVIOUR. Instructions to Children on the Life of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Illustrated. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE SAVIOUR KING. Instructions to Children on Old Testament
Types and Illustrations of the Life of Christ. Illustrated. 16mo. 2s. net.

THE CHILDREN'S FAITH. Instructions to Children on the Apostles'
Creed. Illustrated. 16mo. 2s. net.

Ottley.—ASPECTS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT: being the Bampton Lectures for 1897. By Robert Lawrence Ottley, M.A., Vicar of Winterbourne Bassett, Wilts; sometime Principal of the Pusey House. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Oxford (The) Library of Practical Theology.—Edited by the Rev. W. C. E. Newbolt, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's, and the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Principal of the Missionary College, Dorchester. Crown 8vo. 5s. each.

RELIGION. By the Rev. W. C. E. Newbolt, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. [Ready.

HOLY BAPTISM. By the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Principal of the Missionary College, Dorchester. [Ready.

CONFIRMATION. By the Right Rev. A. C. A. Hall, D.D., Bishop of Vermont. [Ready.

THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By the Rev. Leighton Pullan, M.A., Fellow of St. John Baptist's Oxford. [Ready.

HOLY MATRIMONY. By the Rev. W. J. Knox Little, M.A., Canon of Worcester. [Ready.

THE INCARNATION. By the Rev. H. V. S. Eck, M.A., St.
Andrew's, Bethnal Green. [Ready.

FOREIGN MISSIONS. By the Right Rev. E. T. Churton, D.D., formerly Bishop of Nassau. [Ready.

PRAYER. By the Rev. Arthur John Worlledge, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of Truro. [In the press.

SUNDAY. By the Rev. W. B. Trevelyan, M.A., Vicar of St.
Matthew's, Westminster. [In preparation.

THE BIBLE. By the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Joint Editor of the Series. [In preparation.

THE CREEDS. By the Rev. A. G. Mortimer, D.D., Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia. [In preparation.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM THE CHRISTIAN'S MANUAL.
By the Rev. W. C. E. Newbolt, M.A., Joint Editor of the Series.
[In preparation.

[continued.
Oxford (The) Library of Practical Theology.—continued.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONIAL. By the Rev. Walter Howard Frere, M.A., of the Community of the Resurrection, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Rochester. [In preparation.

HOLY ORDERS. By the Rev. A. R. Whitham, M.A., Principal of Culham College, Abingdon. [In preparation.

VISITATION OF THE SICK. By the Rev. E. F. Russell, M.A., St. Alban’s, Holborn. [In preparation.

CHURCH WORK. By the Rev. Bernard Reynolds, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul’s. [In preparation.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS. By the Rev. Charles Bodington, Canon and Treasurer of Lichfield. [In preparation.

Paget.—Works by Francis Paget, D.D., Lord Bishop of Oxford

THE SPIRIT OF DISCIPLINE: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 4s. net.

FACULTIES AND DIFFICULTIES FOR BELIEF AND DISBELIEF. Crown 8vo. 4s. net.

THE HALLOWING OF WORK. Addresses given at Eton, January 16-18, 1888. Small 8vo. 2s.

THE REDEMPTION OF WAR: Sermons. Crown 8vo. 2s. net.

Passmore.—Works by the Rev. T. H. Passmore, M.A.

THE THINGS BEYOND THE TOMB IN A CATHOLIC LIGHT. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

LEISURABLE STUDIES. Crown 8vo. 4s. net. [Ready.

Contents.—The ‘Religious Woman’—Preachments—Silly Ritual—The Tyranny of the Word—The Lectern—The Functions of Ceremonial—Homo Creator—Concerning the Pun—Proverbs.

Pocket Manual of Prayers for the Hours, Etc. With the Collects from the Prayer Book. Royal 32mo. 1s.

The Book of Genesis. 4s. 6d. The Minor Prophets. 4s. 6d.

The Psalms. 5s. The Holy Gospels. 4s. 6d.

Isaiah. 4s. 6d. Acts to Revelation. 6s.
Preparatio; or, Notes of Preparation for Holy Communion, founded on the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for Every Sunday in the Year. With Preface by the Rev. George Congreve, S.S. J.E. Crown 8vo. 6s. net.

Pullan.—Works by the Rev. Leighton Pullan, M.A., Fellow of St. John Baptist's College.

Lectures on Religion. Crown 8vo. 6s.

The History of the Book of Common Prayer. Crown 8vo. 5s. (The Oxford Library of Practical Theology.)

Pusey.—Works by the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D.

Pusey.—The Story of the Life of Dr. Pusey. By the Author of 'Charles Lowder.' With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

Randolph.—Works by B. W. Randolph, D.D., Principal of the Theological College and Hon. Canon of Ely.

The Example of the Passion: being Addresses given in St. Paul's Cathedral at the Mid-Day Service on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in Holy Week, and at the Three Hours' Service on Good Friday, 1897. Small 8vo. 2s. net.

Meditations on the Old Testament for Every Day in the Year. Crown 8vo. 6s.

The Threshold of the Sanctuary: being Short Chapters on the Inner Preparation for the Priesthood. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
IN THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Rede.—THE COMMUNION OF SAINTS: A Lost Link in the Chain of the Church's Creed. By WYLLYS REDE, D.D., Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, and Canon of the Cathedral, Atalanta, Georgia. With a Preface by LORD HALIFAX. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

RIVINGTON'S DEVOTIONAL SERIES.

16mo, Red Borders and gilt edges. Each 2s. net.

BICKERSTETH'S YESTERDAY, TODAY, AND FOR EVER. Gilt edges.
Chilcot's Treatise on Evil Thoughts. Red edges.
The Christian Year. Gilt edges.
Herbert's Poems and Proverbs. Gilt edges.
Kempis' (A) Of the Imitation of Christ. Gilt edges.
Lear's (H. L. Sidney) For Days and Years. Gilt edges.
Lyra Apostolica. Poems by J. W. Bowden, R. H. Froude, J. Keble, J. H. Newman, R. I. Wilberforce, and I. Williams;
Francis de Sales' (St.) The Devout Life. Gilt edges.

* These two in one Volume. 5s.

18mo, without Red Borders. Each 1s. net.

Bickersteth's Yesterday, Today, and For Ever.
The Christian Year.
Kempis' (A). Of the Imitation of Christ.
Herbert's Poems and Proverbs.

Scudamore's Steps to the Altar.
Wilson's The Lord's Supper.

* Taylor's (Jeremy) Holy Living.

* Holy Dying.

* These two in one Volume. 2s. 6d.

Robbins.—AN ESSAY TOWARD FAITH. By Wilford L.
Robbins, D.D., Dean of the Cathedral of All Saints', Albany, U.S.
Small 8vo. 3s. net.

Robinson.—STUDIES IN THE CHARACTER OF CHRIST.
By the Rev. C. H. Robinson, M.A., Canon Missioner of Ripon; Reader in Hausa in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
A SELECTION OF WORKS

Romans.—THOUGHTS ON THE COLLECTS FOR THE TRINITY SEASON. By Ethel Romans, Author of 'The Life and Letters of George John Romans.' With a Preface by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London. 18mo. 2s. 6d. ; gilt edges. 3s. 6d.

Sanday.—Works by W. Sanday, D.D., LL.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

The Conception of Priesthood in the Early Church and in the Church of England: Four Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Inspiration: Eight Lectures on the Early History and Origin of the Doctrine of Biblical Inspiration. Being the Bampton Lectures for 1893. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Sanders.—Fénélon: His Friends and His Enemies, 1651-1715. By E. K. Sanders. With Portrait. 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

On toned paper, with red rubrics, 2s.: The same, with Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, 2s. 6d.; 18mo, cloth, 1s. net; Demy 18mo, cloth, large type, 1s. 3d.; 16mo, with red borders, 2s. net; Imperial 32mo, limp cloth, 6d.

The Church and the Bible. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The Claims of Jesus Christ: Lent Lectures. Crown 8vo. 3s.

Songs, The, of Degrees; or, Gradual Psalms. Interleaved with Notes from Neale and Littledale's Commentary on the Psalms. By A. B. B. Crown 8vo. 1s. net.

Stone.—Works by the Rev. Darwell Stone, M.A., Principal of Dorchester Missionary College.

Christ and Human Life: Lectures delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral in January 1901; together with a Sermon on 'The Fatherhood of God.' Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

Outlines of Christian Dogma. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Holy Baptism. Crown 8vo. 5s. (The Oxford Library of Practical Theology.)
Strange.—INSTRUCTIONS ON THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE: Being an attempt to make this book more intelligible to the ordinary reader and so to encourage the study of it. By Rev. Cresswell Strange, M.A., Vicar of Edgbaston, and Honorary Canon of Worcester. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Strong.—CHRISTIAN ETHICS: being the Bampton Lectures for 1895. By Thomas B. Strong, B.D., Dean of Christ Church, Oxford. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Tee.—THE SANCTUARY OF SUFFERING. By Eleanor Tee, Author of 'This Everyday Life,' etc. With a Preface by the Rev. J. P. F. Davidson, M.A., late Vicar of St. Matthias', Earl's Court. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Williams.—Works by the Rev. Isaac Williams, B.D.

A DEVOTIONAL COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPEL NARRATIVE. Eight Vols. Crown 8vo. 5s. each.

Thoughts on the Study of the Holy Gospels.

A Harmony of the Four Evangelists.

Our Lord's Nativity.

Our Lord's Ministry (Second Year).

Our Lord's Ministry (Third Year).

The Holy Week.

Our Lord's Passion.

Our Lord's Resurrection.

Female Characters of Holy Scripture. A Series of Sermons. Crown 8vo. 5s.

The Characters of the Old Testament. Crown 8vo. 5s.

The Apocalypse. With Notes and Reflections. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Sermons on the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays and Holy Days. Two Vols. Crown 8vo. 5s. each.

Plain Sermons on Catechism. Two Vols. Cr. 8vo. 5s. each.

Wilson.—THOUGHTS ON CONFIRMATION. By Rev. R. J. Wilson, D.D., late Warden of Keble College. 16mo. 1s. 6d.

Wigman.—Works by A. Theodore Wigman, D.D., D.C.L., Canon of Grahamstown, and Vice-Provost of St. Mary's Collegiate Church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

The Doctrine of Confirmation. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Constitutional Authority of Bishops in the Catholic Church. Crown 8vo. 6s.
Wordsworth.—Works by CHRISTOPHER WORDSWORTH, D.D., sometime Bishop of Lincoln.

THE HOLY BIBLE (the Old Testament). With Notes, Introductions, and Index. Imperial 8vo.
DANIEL, MINOR PROPHETS, and Index. 15s.
Also supplied in 13 Parts. Sold separately.

THE NEW TESTAMENT, in the Original Greek. With Notes, Introductions, and Indices. Imperial 8vo.
EPISTLES, APOCALYPSE, and Indices. 37s.
Also supplied in 4 Parts. Sold separately.

Vol. I. TO THE COUNCIL OF NICEA, A.D. 325. 8s. 6d. Vol. II.
FROM THE COUNCIL OF NICEA TO THAT OF CONSTANTINOPLE.
6s. Vol. III. CONTINUATION. 6s. Vol. IV. CONCLUSION, TO THE COUNCIL OF CHALCEDON, A.D. 451. 6s.

THEOPHILUS ANGLICANUS: a Manual of Instruction on the Church and the Anglican Branch of it. 12mo. 2s. 6d.

ELEMENTS OF INSTRUCTION ON THE CHURCH. 16mo.
1s. cloth. 6d. sewed.

THE HOLY YEAR: Original Hymns. 16mo. 2s. 6d. and 1s. Limp, 6d.
" " With Music. Edited by W. H. MONK. Square 8vo. 4s. 6d.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE OF THE SOUL AFTER DEATH. 32mo. 1s.

Wordsworth.—Works by JOHN WORDSWORTH, D.D., Lord
Bishop of Salisbury.

THE MINISTRY OF GRACE: Studies in Early Church History, with reference to Present Problems. 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

THE HOLY COMMUNION: Four Visitation Addresses. 18mo.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE ONE RELIGION: Truth, Holiness, and Peace desired by the Nations, and revealed by Jesus Christ. Eight Lectures delivered before the University of Oxford in 1881. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

UNIVERSITY SERMONS ON GOSPEL SUBJECTS. Sm. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

PRAYERS FOR USE IN COLLEGE. 16mo. 1s.

10.000/1/03

Printed by T. and A. Constable, (late) Printers to Her Majesty at the Edinburgh University Press.